Os peixes, costumeiramente preparados assados, salgados ou secados, muitas vezes eram comidos com pão. É provável que os peixes usados por Jesus na alimentação milagrosa de 5.000 homens e mais tarde de 4.000 homens, além de mulheres e crianças, haviam sido secados e salgados. (Mt 14:17-21; 15:34-38) Jesus, após a sua ressurreição, comeu peixe assado para provar aos seus apóstolos que não viam um espírito, e em outra ocasião ele preparou um desjejum de pão, e peixes na brasa. — Lu 24:36-43; Jo 21:9-12.

Peixes de Israel. Há uma abundância de peixes nas águas do interior da Palestina, com exceção do Mar Morto. Entre as variedades encontradas ali estão a brema, a carpa, a perca e os incomuns peixes que são incubados na boca, tais como Chromis simonis. O macho de Chromis simonis recolhe os cerca de 200 ovos na boca, e os peixinhos continuam ali por várias semanas depois da eclosão.

Certas espécies de peixes vivem até mesmo nos mananciais salinos perto do Mar Morto, mas morrem logo quando colocados na água do próprio mar. O motivo disso tem sido atribuído à presença de uma grande porcentagem de cloreto de magnésio no Mar Morto. A rápida corrente do Jordão, especialmente na cheia, arrasta muitos peixes para dentro do Mar Morto, onde os peixes atordoados se tornam alimento de aves de rapina ou onde os peixes mortos são lançados na margem e consumidos por aves necrófagas. Em nítido contraste com isso, o profeta Ezequiel, na visão, viu sair do templo de Jeová um rio que curou as águas do Mar Morto, originando uma próspera indústria de pesca. — Ez 47:1, 8-10.

Puros e Impuros. Embora a sabedoria do Rei Salomão abrangesse o campo da história natural, inclusive o conhecimento a respeito de peixes (1Rs 4:33), não se menciona nas Escrituras nem uma única vez uma espécie específica de peixe. No entanto, a Lei fazia distinção entre animais marinhos puros e impuros. Apenas animais aquáticos de barbatanas e escamas eram cerimonialmente puros como alimento; isto excluía criaturas tais como bagres, enguias, lampreias, arraias, tubarões e crustáceos, muitos dos quais se alimentam de despejos e matérias em decomposição e frequentemente estão contaminados por bactérias que causam febre tifoide e paratifoide. (Le 11:9-12) Os pescadores israelitas, portanto, tinham de separar os peixes excelentes dos impróprios como alimento, um ponto salientado na ilustração da rede de arrasto, apresentada por Jesus. — Mt 13:47, 48.

O Peixe Que Engoliu Jonas. Apesar de o próprio Filho de Deus ter atestado a veracidade do relato sobre Jonas ser engolido por um "enorme peixe", este incidente é frequentemente citado com o objetivo de desacreditar a fidedignidade do registro bíblico. (Mt 12:40) Naturalmente, deve ser lembrado que a Bíblia só diz que "Jeová providenciou um grande peixe para engolir Jonas", sem mencionar o tipo de peixe. (Jon 1:17) Decididamente há criaturas marinhas capazes de engolir um homem, entre elas o tubarão-branco e o cachalote. — Veja Mammals of the World (Mamíferos do Mundo), de Walker, revisado por R. Nowak e J. Paradiso, 1983, Vol. II, p. 901; Australian Zoological Handbook (Manual de Zoologia da Austrália), Os Peixes da Austrália, de G. P. Whitley, Sydney, 1940, Parte 1 — Os Tubarões, p. 125.

Uso Figurado. Nas Escrituras, homens são às vezes comparados a peixes. O congregante comparou homens a peixes do ponto de vista de serem "enlaçados num tempo calamitoso" iguais a peixes numa rede. (Ec 9:12) Jesus Cristo constituiu seus seguidores em pescadores de homens, e comparou os justos a peixes excelentes e os iníquos a peixes imprestáveis que são lançados fora. — Mr 1:17; Mt 13:47-50; veja CAÇA E PESCA.

PELAÍAS [Jah Agiu Maravilhosamente].

1. Levita que ajudou Esdras em ler e explicar a Lei aos israelitas reunidos na praça pública de Jerusalém. Ele provavelmente é o mesmo levita (a menos que se refira ao representante duma família de levitas com este nome) que atestou o pacto de fidelidade apresentado pouco depois. — Ne 8:1, 5-8; 9:38; 10:1, 9, 10.

2. Um da última geração de descendentes de Davi mencionados nas Escrituras Hebraicas. — 1Cr 3:1, 5, 10, 24.

PELALIAS [Jah Arbitra]. Sacerdote cujo descendente Adaías estava entre os que serviam no santuário depois do retorno do exílio babilônico. — Ne 11:10, 12.

PELATIAS [Jeová Proveu Escape (Fuga)].

1. Um de quatro maiorais simeonitas que conduziram 500 homens contra o monte Seir e golpearam os remanescentes dos amalequitas, provavelmente durante o reinado de Ezequias. — 1Cr 4:41-43.

2. Filho de Benaia; príncipe de Israel observado em visão por Ezequiel. Pelatias junto com Jaazanias 'maquinaram o que é prejudicial e deram mau conselho' contra Jerusalém. Ezequiel foi inspirado a profetizar contra o povo de Israel, após o que Pelatias faleceu. — Ez 11:1-13.

3. Descendente distante de Davi e neto de Zorobabel. (1Cr 3:19-21) Possivelmente trata-se do N.º 4.

4. Cabeça familiar representado nas assinaturas do pacto prometendo não tomar esposas estrangeiras. — Ne 9:38; 10:1, 14, 22; veja o N.º 3.

PELE. Revestimento externo do corpo humano ou animal. A pele é classificada como órgão do corpo, e deveras desempenha muitas funções para o bem-estar do corpo, inclusive proteção, regulagem da temperatura do corpo e a eliminação de certos resíduos.

A Bíblia menciona doenças da pele (Le 13:1-46; 21:20; De 28:27) e certas deteriorações causadas na pele por doenças e inanição. — Jó 7:5; 30:30; La 4:8; 5:10.

Segundo a Lei, a pele de animais usados para certas ofertas pelo pecado tinha de ser queimada fora do acampamento de Israel, ou fora dos portões de Jerusalém. (Êx 29:14; Le 4:11, 12; 8:17; 9:11; 16:27; He 13:11) O sacerdote recebia a pele do animal apresentado por um israelita como oferta queimada. — Le 7:8.

Jeová providenciou vestes de pele para Adão e Eva, a fim de cobrirem sua nudez depois de terem pecado. (Gên 3:21) Peles não curtidas eram usadas como veste por alguns, notavelmente alguns dos profetas (2Rs 1:8), inclusive alguns falsos profetas. (Za 13:4) Peles de animais serviam também para sandálias (Ez 16:3, 10); para fazer sacolas (1Sa 17:40) e odres para água, leite e vinho (Gên 21:14; Jos 9:13; Jz 4:19; Mt 9:17); para membrana de tambores; e possivelmente como base ressonante do né·vel ou "instrumento de cordas". (Is 5:12) Usaram-se peles como cobertura para o tabernáculo. — Êx 25:2, 5; 26:14; 35:7, 23; 36:19.

Peles de ovelhas, cabras ou bezerros também eram empregadas como material de escrita. — Veja PERGAMINHO.

Uso Figurado. Satanás disse a Jeová a respeito de Jó: "Pele por pele, e tudo o que o homem tem dará pela sua alma." (Jó 2:4) O Diabo questionou assim a integridade do homem, alegando que Jó amaldiçoaria Deus, se seu próprio bem-estar físico fosse prejudicado.

O próprio Jó disse: "Eu escapo com a pele dos meus dentes." (Jó 19:20) Outras versões do texto acima foram propostas por tradutores, mas estas exigiriam reajustes no texto hebraico. Não parece haver necessidade de se esforçar a explicar a declaração de Jó à luz de descobrimentos feitos por cientistas em tempos recentes com a ajuda de microscópios. Parece que Jó simplesmente dizia que havia escapado com nada ou quase nada. Ele havia escapado com a pele dos dentes, isto é, com a "pele" daquilo que pelo visto não tem pele.

PELE DE FOCA. Não há certeza do tipo específico de pele a que se refere tá·hhash; esta palavra hebraica é usada para descrever a cobertura externa do tabernáculo, bem como o envoltório da mobília e dos utensílios do santuário para transporte. Tá·hhash ou tehha·shím (plural) usualmente aparece ao lado de 'ohr ou 'oh·róhth (pele, peles). (Êx 25:5; 26:14; 35:7, 23; 36:19; 39:34; Núm 4:6-14, 25; Ez 16:10) Os tradutores da Septuaginta grega parecem ter entendido que a palavra hebraica não denotava um animal, mas a cor azul. (Veja Núm 4:14, n.) Todavia, a opinião quase que unânime dos comentadores judeus é que tá·hhash se refere a um animal. Esta opinião foi também endossada pelo lexicógrafo do hebraico Gesenius, o qual considerou a versão da Septuaginta como simples conjectura, uma tradução sem apoio da etimologia, nem de línguas aparentadas. Ele entendia que tá·hhash se referia ou à foca ou ao texugo, baseando suas conclusões no contexto, na autoridade dos talmudistas, na comparação da palavra hebraica com palavras similares em outras línguas, e na etimologia hebraica.

Tradutores da Bíblia verteram 'ohr ('oh·róhth) tá·hhash (tehha·shím) como "peles de texugo(s)" (Al; PIB; Tr), "peles de golfinho(s) [ou: "de delfim"]" (BV; CBC; IBB; LEB), "peles de focas" (AS; NM), "peles de animais marinhos" (ALA; VB), "couro fino" (BJ; BMD; MC), "peles finas" (BLH), "peles tinta de roxo" (So), e "couro tahash" (NM, Êx 25:5, n, mas no texto propriamente dito é "peles de focas"). A tradução "peles de texugo(s)" em geral não é favorecida pelos peritos, visto que se acha improvável que os israelitas tivessem conseguido suficientes peles de texugo, quer no Egito, quer no ermo, para cobrir o tabernáculo. Há também peritos que não acham correto nem "peles de texugo(s)", nem "peles de focas" nem "peles de golfinho(s) [ou: "de delfim"]", visto que texugos, focas, golfinhos ou delfins, dugongues e outras criaturas similares evidentemente eram impuros como ali-mento. (Le 11:12, 27) Por isso, acham difícil de conceber que a pele de um animal "impuro" tivesse sido usada para algo tão sagrado como a construção do tabernáculo e como cobertura de proteção para a mobília e os utensílios do santuário. Os que adotam tal conceito sugerem que tá·hhash talvez denote a pele dum animal limpo, possivelmente de um tipo de antílope, de ovelha ou de cabra.

Aproveitável, Embora a Foca Fosse Classificada Como Impura. Serem as focas evidentemente impuras como alimento não necessariamente impedia que se usasse sua pele como cobertura para o tabernáculo. Por exemplo, embora o leão e a águia fossem 'impuros' (Le 11:13, 27), os querubins celestiais observados por Ezequiel em visão foram representados com quatro faces, inclusive a de leão e a de águia. (Ez 1:5, 10; 10:14) Também, os carrocins de cobre que Salomão fez para uso no templo eram adornados com representações de leões, e isto, sem dúvida, segundo os planos dados a Davi por inspiração divina. (1Rs 7:27-29; 1Cr 28:11-19) Os israelitas usavam animais "impuros", tais como jumentos, como cavalgaduras, predizendo-se até mesmo que o Messias entraria em Jerusalém montado num jumento. (Za 9:9; Mt 21:4, 5) Embora João, o Batizador, tivesse uma comissão muito sagrada, a de ir "de antemão na frente de Jeová para aprontar os seus caminhos", ele usava vestes feitas dos pelos de um animal "impuro". (Lu 1:76; Mt 3:4; Le 11:4) Tudo isso tende a indicar que a distinção entre o puro e o impuro simplesmente se referia à alimentação, embora às vezes fosse também usada com referência a sacrifícios, e não exigisse que os israelitas considerassem animais "impuros" em geral com abominação. (Le 11:46, 47) Também estes, iguais aos animais "puros", foram criados por Deus e, portanto, em si mesmos eram bons, não repugnantes. — Gên 1:21, 25.

Como os Israelitas os Podiam Obter. Se a palavra tá·hhash, da Bíblia, deveras indicar um tipo de foca, então talvez surja a pergunta de como era possível que os israelitas obtivessem peles de foca. Embora as focas, em geral, sejam associadas com regiões árticas e antárticas, algumas focas preferem um clima mais quente. Atualmente, algumas focas-monges ainda habitam parte do mar Mediterrâneo, bem como outras águas quentes. No decorrer dos séculos, o homem tem reduzido em muito o número de focas, e, nos tempos bíblicos, esses animais talvez fossem abundantes no Mediterrâneo e no Mar Vermelho. Ainda em 1832, a edição em inglês do Dicionário da Bíblia Sagrada, de Calmet (p. 139), observou: "Encontram-se focas em muitas das ilhotas do Mar Vermelho, em volta da península do Sinai." — Veja também The Tabernacle's Typical Teaching (O Ensino Típico do Tabernáculo), de A. J. Pollock, Londres, p. 47.

Os antigos egípcios empenhavam-se em comércio no Mar Vermelho, e, naturalmente, recebiam mercadorias de muitas das regiões mediterrâneas. Portanto, os egípcios tinham acesso a peles de foca. Assim, quando os israelitas saíram do Egito, podem ter levado consigo as peles de foca que já possuíam, junto com outras obtidas quando os egípcios lhes entregaram uma abundância de coisas valiosas. — Êx 12:35, 36.

PELEGUE [Divisão]. Filho de Éber e pai de Reú, da linhagem de Sem a Abraão, e, portanto, primitivo antepassado de Jesus. Pelegue viveu 239 anos (2269-2030 AEC) e fundou uma das 70 famílias pós-diluvianas. — Gên 11:16-19; 1Cr 1:24-27; Lu 3:35.

Pelegue foi chamado assim porque "nos seus dias foi dividida a terra". (Gên 10:25; 1Cr 1:19) O texto destas passagens não diz que esta notável divisão tenha ocorrido por ocasião do nascimento de Pelegue cem anos depois do Dilúvio, mas simplesmente "nos seus dias". Se o nome lhe foi dado ao nascer, então provavelmente era profético da dispersão ocorrida por causa da confusão das línguas na Torre de Babel. — Gên 11:1-9; veja o nome de Noé (que provavelmente significa "Descanso; Consolo"), que também mostrou ser profético, Gên 5:29.

PELETE, I [Prover Escape (Fuga)].

1. Filho de Jadai, alistado na divisão calebita da genealogia de Judá. — 1Cr 2:47.

2. Um dos poderosos benjamitas ambidestros que se juntaram a Davi em Ziclague; filho de Asmavete. — 1Cr 12:1-3.

PELETE, II.

1. Rubenita cujo filho Om se juntou a Datã, Abirão e Corá na rebelião deles. — Núm 16:1.

2. Descendente de Judá através de Jerameel. — 1Cr 2:33.

PELETITAS. Lutadores leais a favor do Rei Davi; são sempre mencionados junto com os queretitas. Quando Davi fugiu de Jerusalém por causa da rebelião de Absalão (apoiada por uma grande parte do exército), os peletitas acompanharam Davi atravessando o Cédron. (2Sa 15:18, 23) Ajudaram também a sufocar a rebelião de Seba (2Sa 20:7) e mais tarde apoiaram a escolha feita por Davi, de ter Salomão como seu sucessor, em vez de tomar o lado de Adonias, assim como Joabe fez. (1Rs 1:38, 44) Os queretitas e os peletitas não faziam parte do exército regular, mas eram uma divisão separada a serviço do Rei Davi, porque Joabe é chamado de chefe do exército, mas Benaia, em separado, estava sobre os queretitas e os peletitas. (2Sa 8:18; 20:23; 1Cr 18:17) Visto que os peletitas não foram mencionados nem antes, nem depois do reinado de Davi, pode-se concluir que eram seus servos pessoais, em vez de um grupo permanente que servisse num cargo real. — Compare 2Sa 8:18 e 23:22, 23.

A falta de qualquer identificação positiva dos peletitas tem dado margem a numerosas sugestões, entre as quais há duas escolas principais de pensamento: (1) A grande similaridade no hebraico entre os dois nomes, peletitas e filisteus (פלתי [peletita] com apenas uma letra adicional dando פלשתי [filisteu]) constitui a base para se dizer que eles eram da mesma procedência, ou talvez que os peletitas eram um ramo dos filisteus. Alguns objetam a esta sugestão, de que os filisteus constituíam a guarda pessoal de Davi, mas esta possibilidade não deve ser totalmente desconsiderada. (2) Por outro lado, os nomes queretitas e peletitas talvez fossem termos que indicavam deveres ou categorias de serviço realizados pela guarda pessoal de Davi, os queretitas servindo de executores, e os peletitas, de batedores. Tal divisão de batedores é mencionada durante os reinados de Saul e de reis posteriores. (1Sa 22:17; 2Rs 11:4; 2Cr 30:6) No entanto, este segundo ponto de vista é menos aceito do que o primeiro.

PELICANO [hebr.: qa·'áth]. Os tradutores da Septuaginta grega e da Vulgata latina identificavam a palavra hebraica qa·'áth com o "pelicano". Este é alistado na Lei mosaica entre as aves designadas como 'impuras'. — Le 11:13, 18; De 14:11, 12, 17.

O pelicano é uma das maiores aves voadoras, atingindo um comprimento de mais de 1,5 m, com uma envergadura majestosa das asas de 2,5 m, ou mais. O bico amarelado é comprido e curvo, e a grande bolsa elástica abaixo dele quase não é notada quando vazia. Bamboleante em terra, os pelicanos são voadores fortes, graciosos, e são conhecidos como tendo ninhos até 100 km distantes dos seus lugares de pesca. São excelentes pescadores, e seus pés palmados habilitam-nos a manobrar rapidamente na água.

Quando o pelicano está saciado de alimento, frequentemente voa para um lugar solitário onde assume uma postura melancólica, com a cabeça abaixada nos ombros, ficando tão imóvel, que à distância poderia ser confundido com uma pedra branca. A ave assume esta postura durante horas por vez, o que se ajusta à inatividade melancólica mencionada pelo salmista quando este ilustra a plangência de seu pesar ao escrever: "Pareço-me deveras ao pelicano do ermo." (Sal 102:6) O "ermo", aqui, não necessariamente se refere a um deserto, mas simplesmente a uma área longe de habitações humanas, talvez a um pântano. Durante certas épocas, os pântanos na parte N do vale do Jordão ainda são o lar de pelicanos. Três variedades de pelicanos são encontrados em Israel. O mais comum é o pelicano-branco oriental (Pelecanus onocrotalus); o pelicano-dálmata (Pelecanus crispus) e o pelicano-cinzento (Pelecanus rufescens) são menos vistos.

O pelicano mostra uma nítida preferência por lugares desolados, onde não é perturbado pelo homem. Aninha ali e cria seus filhotes, e volta para lá após a pesca. Esta ave, por gostar de lugares solitários e desolados, é usada na Bíblia como símbolo de total desolação. Para simbolizar a vindoura desolação de Edom, Isaías predisse que o pelicano tomaria posse daquela terra. (Is 34:11) Sofonias profetizou que os pelicanos morariam entre os capitéis de Nínive, indicando a total ruína e a ausência de gente. — Sof 2:13, 14.

PELO. Veja CABELO.

PELONITA. Termo usado referente a Helez e Aijá, dois dos principais guerreiros de Davi. (1Cr 11:26, 27, 36; 27:10) Helez é chamado de "o paltita" no registro paralelo em 2 Samuel 23:26, e alguns lexicógrafos acham que esta é a forma preferível de classificá-lo. O nome Aijá (1Cr 11:36) não ocorre, pelo menos nesta forma, na lista correspondente em 2 Samuel 23:24-39.

PELOURINHO. Instrumento para prender o pescoço e os braços; usado para punir transgressores por expô-los à zombaria pública. Em Jeremias 29:26, "pelourinho" traduz a palavra hebraica tsi·nóq.

O falso profeta Semaías, de lá do exílio em Babilônia, escreveu aos sacerdotes em Jerusalém, instando com eles para que repreendessem Jeremias e o pusessem ao pelourinho.

PENA. Implemento para escrever com tinta ou com um líquido similar. Quando os antigos escreviam em argila, cera ou metal macio, usavam um estilo (veja ESTILO), mas escreviam também em pergaminho ou papiro com pena e tinta. (3Jo 13; 2Jo 12) A palavra grega traduzida "pena" (ká·la·mos) refere-se a um caule (cálamo) ou a um caniço, e pode literalmente ser traduzida "caniço de escrita". Entre os antigos egípcios, a pena de caniço era fabricada com uma cabeça chata em forma de cinzel, talhada ou fendida para servir de pincel. Os caniços talvez tenham sido secados e endurecidos por serem deixados vários meses sob montes de estrume, assim como tem sido a prática em anos recentes. Os gregos e os romanos usavam penas de caniço pontudas e fendidas assim como se fazia posteriormente com as penas de ave e mesmo em tempos recentes com a ponta da caneta-tinteiro.

PENA, TER. Sentimento terno para com outros em sofrimento ou necessidade, ou para com tudo o que possa ter sido tratado de maneira dura. O substantivo no plural, ra·hhamím, denota "pena", "misericórdias" ou "emoções íntimas". (Gên 43:14, 30; 1Cr 21:13; Sal 40:11; veja MISERICÓRDIA.) Em grego, o verbo splag·khní·zo·mai significa "ser tomado de pena ou compaixão", "ter ou sentir pena". Este termo deriva do substantivo splág·khna, que significa literalmente "intestinos". (At 1:18) Visto que fortes emoções podem afetar a região abdominal do corpo, o substantivo grego splág·khna é frequentemente usado para denotar "ternas afeições", ou "ternas compaixões". — Veja AFEIÇÃO.

Jeová Deus deu o exemplo em ter pena dos aflitos, e ele pode induzir homens a mostrar este sentimento amoroso. É por isso que o Rei Salomão podia apropriadamente orar pedindo que Jeová fizesse dos israelitas objeto de dó ou misericórdia diante dos seus captores se se tornassem cativos deles por motivo de infidelidade. (1Rs 8:50) Sobre a resposta a esta solicitação feita em oração, o salmista inspirado escreveu: "Concedia-lhes ser objetos de misericórdia perante todos os que os mantinham cativos." (Sal 106:46) Assim, com o tempo, Jeová restabeleceu um restante arrependido na terra deles. (Je 33:26; Esd 1:1-4) E em harmonia com a vontade de Jeová, o Rei Artaxerxes concedeu a Neemias permissão para reconstruir a cidade de Jerusalém. — Ne 1:11–2:6.

Jesus Cristo refletiu perfeitamente a personalidade de seu Pai em demonstrar ter pena. 'Tinha pena' das multidões, mesmo quando interrompiam sua privacidade, "porque andavam esfoladas e empurradas dum lado para outro como ovelhas sem pastor". (Mt 9:36; Mr 6:34) Observar pessoas que estavam de luto, ou que tinham lepra ou que estavam cegas, deixava Jesus penalizado, de modo que lhes dava alívio milagroso. (Mt 14:14; 20:30-34; Mr 1:40, 41; Lu 7:12, 13) E foi por ter pena das pessoas que já estavam com ele por três dias sem comer que o Filho de Deus forneceu-lhes milagrosamente alimento. — Mt 15:32-38; Mr 8:2-9.

Os discípulos de Jesus Cristo podem imitar o exemplo dele e de seu Pai por reagir prontamente e de bom grado em dar ajuda aos aflitos, e em acolher todos os que sinceramente se arrependem de pecados e retornam de todo o coração a Jeová. (Mt 18:21-35; Lu 10:30-37; 15:11-32) Podem assim ter certeza da contínua misericórdia do Todo-Poderoso para com eles. — Mt 5:7.

PENDURAR. Sob a lei dada por Jeová a Israel, certos criminosos podiam ser pendurados numa estaca após serem mortos, como 'amaldiçoados por Deus', expostos em público como exemplo de aviso. O morto pendurado assim devia ser tirado dali e enterrado antes do cair da noite; deixá-lo na estaca toda a noite aviltaria o solo dado por Deus aos israelitas. (De 21:22, 23) Israel seguia esta regra mesmo que o executado não fosse israelita. — Jos 8:29; 10:26, 27.

Os dois filhos e cinco netos de Saul, que Davi entregou aos gibeonitas para serem executados não foram sepultados antes do anoitecer. Foram deixados expostos desde o início da sega da cevada (março-abril) até a chegada das chuvas, evidentemente depois de terminada a época da sega. O motivo de se permitir aos gibeonitas seguir neste caso um proceder diferente parece ter sido por o Rei Saul ter cometido um pecado nacional, matando alguns dos gibeonitas, e violando assim o pacto feito com eles por Josué, séculos antes. (Jos 9:15) Deus fizera aquela terra sofrer uma fome de três anos como evidência da sua ira. Portanto, os cadáveres dos pendurados foram deixados expostos até que Jeová indicou que sua ira já ficara apaziguada no fim do período de estio, causando um aguaceiro. Davi mandou então que os ossos dos homens fossem enterrados, após o que "Deus se deixou suplicar a favor da terra". — 2Sa 21:1-14.

A narrativa do livro de Ester relata que diversas pessoas foram penduradas. A mesma palavra hebraica (ta·láh, que significa "pendurar") é usada em cada caso. Declara-se especificamente que os dez filhos de Hamã foram mortos por judeus, e depois pendurados no dia seguinte. (Est 9:7-10, 13, 14) Os outros que foram pendurados evidentemente foram tratados do mesmo modo, expondo-se seus cadáveres alto perante o público, porque seus crimes eram delitos contra o rei. (Est 2:21-23; 7:9, 10) A mesma palavra hebraica é usada referente a ser pendurado o chefe dos padeiros de Faraó. — Gên 40:22; 41:13.

As nações ao redor de Israel, em geral, eram mais cruéis do que os israelitas nos seus métodos de punir e de vituperar os executados. Quando os exércitos de Babilônia capturaram Jerusalém, infligiram cruéis punições aos nobres, pendurando alguns dos príncipes "só pela sua mão". — La 5:12.

Jesus Cristo foi pendurado vivo, pregado numa estaca, à ordem do governo romano na Palestina. (Jo 20:25, 27) O apóstolo Paulo explica que o modo de Jesus morrer era extremamente importante para os judeus, porque "Cristo nos livrou da maldição da Lei por meio duma compra, por se tornar maldição em nosso lugar, porque está escrito:

'Maldito é todo aquele pendurado num madeiro.' " — Gál 3:13; veja PREGAR EM ESTACA.

Em dois casos de suicídio registrados na Bíblia, recorreu-se ao estrangulamento por enforcamento. Aitofel, traiçoeiro conselheiro de Davi, estrangulou-se ("enforcou-se", LXX). (2Sa 17:23) A ação de Aitofel foi profética daquela de um dos apóstolos de Jesus, Judas Iscariotes, que se mostrou traidor. (Sal 41:9; Jo 13:18) Também Judas enforcou-se. (Mt 27:5) Parece que a corda, ou talvez o galho da árvore em que Judas se enforcou, rompeu-se ou quebrou-se, e ele, "jogando-se de cabeça para baixo, rebentou ruidosamente pelo meio e se derramaram todos os seus intestinos". — At 1:18.

PENHOR. Objeto de propriedade pessoal, tal como um anel ou uma vestimenta, entregue pelo devedor ao credor como garantia do futuro pagamento do empréstimo. Os regulamentos da Lei mosaica a respeito de penhores protegiam os interesses dos empobrecidos e indefesos membros da nação. Esses regulamentos mostravam que Deus reconhecia as dificuldades dos pobres e das viúvas. Os dois verbos hebraicos hha·vál e 'a·vát, e seus substantivos aparentados, relacionam-se com o penhor.

Quando um pobre entregava seu manto em penhor, ou como garantia dum empréstimo, o credor não devia guardá-lo durante a noite. (Êx 22:26, 27; De 24:12, 13) Era provável que o pobre usasse seu manto como cobertura à noite; se fosse privado dele, poderia passar frio. Quem não acatasse esta lei seria marcado como ganancioso e impiedoso. (Jó 22:6; 24:9) Todavia, durante a apostasia de Israel, alguns não somente se apoderavam das vestes dos pobres como penhor, mas as usavam nas suas festas idólatras. — Am 2:8.

Não restituir "a coisa tomada em penhor" foi alistado em Ezequiel 18:10-13 ao lado de roubo e de derramamento de sangue como coisas que juntas provavam que alguém era pecador impenitente, merecedor da morte. Por outro lado, o iníquo que abandonasse seus pecados, entre outras coisas, por restituir "a própria coisa penhorada", 'positivamente continuaria vivendo'. (Ez 33:14-16) Era também proibido tomar em penhor um moinho manual ou sua mó superior, porque o pão costumava ser assado diariamente, e tomar os implementos necessários para moer o cereal significaria apoderar-se duma "alma", ou vida. — De 24:6.

Especialmente as viúvas eram protegidas, visto que muitas vezes não tinham ninguém para defendê-las ou ajudá-las. A Lei proibia totalmente tomar como penhor a roupa duma viúva. — De 24:17; veja Jó 24:3.

Tampouco se podia entrar na casa de um homem para tirar dele um penhor. O devedor tinha de levar o penhor para fora ao credor. (De 24:10, 11) Assim se mantinha a inviolabilidade do lar do homem, e ele podia manter o amor-próprio, o que dificilmente se daria se o seu credor se sentisse à vontade para entrar na casa dele sem ser convidado. Deste modo, além de compaixão e generosidade (De 15:8), as leis a respeito de penhores incentivavam o respeito pela pessoa e pelos direitos dos outros.

Uso Ilustrativo. Deuteronômio 15:6 especificava como sinal da bênção de Deus que os judeus teriam meios suficientes para 'emprestar sob caução a muitas nações'.

Quando alguém 'desprezava a palavra' por não restituir o empréstimo, ele perdia aquilo que tinha dado em penhor; do mesmo modo, a pessoa sofreria perda se deixasse de obedecer aos mandamentos de Deus. — Pr 13:13.

Nas Escrituras Hebraicas dá-se repetidas vezes o conselho de não se prestar fiança por um estranho, prometendo pagar a dívida da pessoa se ela deixasse de fazer isso. (Pr 11:15; 22:26, 27; veja FIANÇA.) Assim, Provérbios 20:16 fala de se 'tomar a veste' de quem presta fiança por um estranho. Isto está em contraste direto com a consideração compassiva a ser demonstrada para com o pobre que se vê obrigado a se tornar devedor por causa do seu próprio infortúnio. Quem presta fiança por um estranho não é apenas desafortunado, mas é estúpido; o provérbio evidentemente diz que se deixe que 'ele sofra as consequências'. A última parte do versículo fala de 'tomar um penhor' "no caso duma mulher estrangeira". O homem que entrasse num relacionamento com tal mulher poderia ficar empobrecido (veja Pr 5:3, 8-10), de modo que talvez tivesse de penhorar seus bens remanescentes como fiança para as suas dívidas. O provérbio parece dizer que não merece que se tenha dó dele, visto que agiu contrário a todos os bons conselhos ao ter tratos com a "mulher estrangeira".

PENIEL. Lugar perto do vau do Jaboque, onde Jacó se engalfinhou com um anjo; chamou assim o lugar de Peniel, porque ali 'tinha visto a Deus face a face'. (Gên 32:22-31) O mesmo que Penuel. — Veja PENUEL.

PENINA [Coral]. Esposa de Elcana. Penina deu à luz muitos filhos, em contraste com Ana, a outra esposa de Elcana. Não obstante, Penina era menos amada do que Ana, e por isso zombava da esterilidade de Ana, especialmente por ocasião das visitas anuais da família ao tabernáculo. — 1Sa 1:1-8.

PENTATEUCO. Esta forma aportuguesada da palavra grega (que significa "cinco rolos" ou "volume quíntuplo") refere-se aos primeiros cinco livros da Bíblia: Gênesis, Êxodo, Levítico, Números e Deuteronômio.

Conteúdo. O Pentateuco é um segmento muito importante da Palavra escrita de Deus, fornecendo uma base sólida em que se firma grande parte do que segue. Seu primeiro livro, Gênesis, fornece-nos o relato inspirado da criação e também acompanha a história do homem desde o Éden, através de grande parte da era patriarcal, até a morte de José (desde "no princípio" até 1657 AEC). O segundo livro, Êxodo, começa com a morte de José e fala sobre o nascimento de Moisés durante a época de escravidão, sobre a libertação do povo de Deus da servidão egípcia e sobre a inauguração do pacto da Lei em Sinai; inclui pormenores da construção da estrutura central de adoração, a saber, o tabernáculo, no ermo (eventos históricos desde 1657 até 1512 AEC). Levítico, o terceiro livro, que abrange apenas o período de cerca de um mês (1512 AEC), fornece inestimáveis informações sobre o sacerdócio levítico, sua ordenação e seus deveres, bem como sobre leis e regulamentos que governavam o apoio obrigatório dado pela congregação à adoração de Jeová. O quarto livro, Números, conforme seu nome dá a entender, fala sobre os censos feitos, perto do começo e no fim da peregrinação pelo ermo. Fornece-nos também muitos pormenores sobre a peregrinação de 40 anos (até 1473 AEC) e inclui muitas leis englobadas na estrutura do pacto nacional. O último livro, Deuteronômio, abrange cerca de dois meses (1473 AEC); explica partes do pacto da Lei e fornece muitos regulamentos necessários para a nova geração de israelitas em posição nas planícies de Moabe, pronta para invadir e ocupar a Terra da Promessa. Os últimos capítulos falam da designação de Josué como líder e da morte de Moisés.

Escritor. Não há nem um único texto que diga que Moisés escreveu o inteiro Pentateuco, mas espalhadas em toda a matéria há declarações explícitas que servem à mesma finalidade. (Êx 17:14; 24:4; 34:27; Núm 33:2; De 31:9, 19, 22, 24-26) Há também muitas seções em que as palavras são atribuídas diretamente a Moisés, começando com a sua primeira conversa registrada (Êx 2:13, 14), até a sua bênção final dada ao povo (De 33:1-29), e incluindo alguns dos seus prolongados discursos (De 1:1; 5:1; 27:1; 29:2; 31:3) e notáveis cânticos. (Êx 15:1-19; De 31:30–32:43) Os versículos iniciais de 20 dos 27 capítulos de Levítico nos dizem que o que segue são as palavras faladas por Jeová a Moisés, para que este, por sua vez, informasse o povo. O mesmo se dá em mais de 50 casos no livro de Números. Portanto, com exceção dos versículos finais de Deuteronômio, a evidência interna do próprio Pentateuco mostra que Moisés foi o escritor.

Muitas outras passagens na Bíblia atestam que o Pentateuco procedia das mãos de Moisés. (Jos 1:7; Jz 3:4; 2Rs 18:6; Mal 4:4) Homens tais como Davi (1Rs 2:1-3), Daniel (9:11), Esdras (6:18), Neemias (8:1), Jesus (Mr 12:26; Lu 16:29; Jo 7:19), Lucas (24:27) e João (1:17) referem-se a esta obra como a de Moisés. De forma mais pertinente, Jesus reconheceu que Moisés foi o escritor (Mr 10:3-5; Jo 5:46, 47), assim como também reconheceram os saduceus. — Mr 12:18, 19.

PENTECOSTES. Nome usado nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs para indicar a Festividade da Colheita (Êx 23:16) ou Festividade das Semanas (Êx 34:22), também chamada de "dia dos primeiros frutos maduros". (Núm 28:26) As instruções a respeito desta festividade se encontram em Levítico 23:15-21; Números 28:26-31; Deuteronômio 16:9-12. Devia ser celebrada no 50.º dia (Pentecostes significa "Quinquagésimo [Dia]") contado a partir do 16 de nisã, dia em que se oferecia o molho de cevada. (Le 23:15, 16) No calendário judaico, cai em 6 de sivã. Ocorria depois da colheita da cevada e no começo da colheita do trigo, que amadurecia depois da cevada. — Êx 9:31, 32.

Não se permitia aos israelitas iniciar a colheita antes de apresentar as primícias da cevada a Jeová no dia 16 de nisã. Portanto, as instruções de Deuteronômio 16:9, 10 são: "Principiarás a contar sete semanas desde que primeiro se mete a foice nos cereais em pé. Então tens de celebrar a festividade das semanas para Jeová, teu Deus." Exigia-se que todo varão comparecesse, e declara-se também com relação a esta festividade: "Tens de alegrar-te perante Jeová, teu Deus, tu e teu filho, e tua filha, e teu escravo, e tua escrava, e o levita que está dentro dos teus portões, e o residente forasteiro, e o menino órfão de pai, e a viúva, que estão no teu meio, no lugar que Jeová, teu Deus, escolher para ali fazer residir seu nome." (De 16:11) A Páscoa era uma observância íntima da família. A Festividade da Colheita, ou Pentecostes, requeria uma generosidade mais aberta e hospitaleira, parecendo-se neste respeito à Festividade das Barracas.

As primícias da colheita do trigo deviam ser tratadas de modo diferente das da cevada. Dois décimos de um efa de flor de farinha de trigo (4,4 l), levedados, deviam ser cozidos como dois pães. Deviam ser "dos vossos lugares de morada", o que significava que deviam ser pães iguais aos feitos para consumo diário da família e não expressamente para fins sagrados. (Le 23:17) Isto era acompanhado por ofertas queimadas e uma oferta pelo pecado, e, como oferta de participação em comum, dois cordeiros. O sacerdote movia os pães e os cordeiros perante Jeová por colocar as mãos sob os pães e os pedaços dos cordeiros, movendo-os para lá e para cá, indicando que eram apresentados perante Jeová. Depois de se oferecerem os pães e os cordeiros, estes se tornavam do sacerdote, para consumi-los como oferta de participação em comum. — Le 23:18-20.

Há uma ligeira diferença na descrição das outras ofertas (as além da oferta de participação em comum) no relato em Números 28:27-30. Em vez de sete cordeiros, um novilho, dois carneiros e um cabritinho, como em Levítico 23:18, 19, requeria sete cordeiros, dois novilhos, um carneiro e um cabritinho. Comentadores judeus dizem que a passagem em Levítico refere-se ao sacrifício que acompanhava os pães movidos, e aquele em Números, o devidamente ordenado sacrifício da festividade, de modo que se ofereciam ambas as ofertas. Em apoio disso, Josefo, descrevendo os sacrifícios no dia de Pentecostes, primeiro menciona os dois cordeiros da oferta de participação em comum, daí junta as ofertas remanescentes, enumerando três bezerros, dois carneiros (evidentemente um erro do copista em vez de escrever três), 14 cordeiros e dois cabritinhos. (Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], III, 253 [x, 6]) O dia era um santo congresso, um dia sabático. — Le 23:21; Núm 28:26.

A Festividade de Pentecostes ocorria no fim da colheita de cevada e era uma ocasião alegre, conforme indicado pela oferta de participação em comum apresentada pela congregação e dada ao sacerdote. Esta oferta indicava também uma associação pacífica com Jeová. Ao mesmo tempo, a oferta pelo pecado lembrava aos israelitas os pecados deles e era um pedido de perdão e de purificação, feito a Deus. A aumentada oferta queimada servia de expressão prática de gratidão pela Sua generosidade, bem como símbolo de cumprirem de todo o coração sua relação pactuada com Deus.

Não só era especialmente apropriado que os israelitas expressassem neste dia agradecimentos a Jeová, mas também não deviam esquecer-se de seus irmãos pobres. Depois de dar as instruções a respeito da festividade, Jeová ordenou: "E quando ceifardes a colheita da vossa terra, não deves acabar completamente o canto do teu campo quando estás ceifando e não deves apanhar a respiga da tua colheita. Deves deixá-los para o atribulado e para o residente forasteiro. Eu sou Jeová, vosso Deus." (Le 23:22) Os pobres teriam assim verdadeiro incentivo de agradecer ao Senhor e de usufruir a festividade junto com todos os outros. Havia também muitas ofertas pessoais de primícias da colheita durante esta festividade.

De acordo com fontes rabínicas, após o exílio, os participantes na festividade costumavam subir a Jerusalém no dia antes do seu começo e preparar ali todo o necessário para a sua observância. À noitinha, o toque de trombetas anunciava a aproximação do dia festivo. (Núm 10:10) Limpava-se o altar da oferta queimada, e abriam-se os portões do templo, logo depois da meia-noite, para os sacerdotes, e para que o povo, que trazia ao pátio os sacrifícios da oferta queimada e da oferta de agradecimentos, pudesse deixar os sacerdotes examiná-los. Alfred Edersheim comenta: "Antes do sacrifício da manhã, todas as ofertas queimadas e pacíficas, que o povo se propunha trazer à festividade, tinham de ser examinadas pelo sacerdócio oficiante. Em vista do seu grande número, deve ter sido uma ocasião atarefada, até que o anúncio de que a luz da aurora se estendia a Hébron acabava com todos esses preparativos, por se dar o sinal para o regular sacrifício matinal." — The Temple (O Templo), 1874, p. 228.

Depois de se oferecer o regular e diário sacrifício matinal, traziam-se os sacrifícios festivos descritos em Números 28:26-30. Daí se faziam a oferta pertinente a Pentecostes — os pães movidos, com seus sacrifícios acompanhantes. (Le 23:18-20) Depois de se moverem os pães, um deles era tomado pelo sumo sacerdote e o segundo era repartido entre todos os sacerdotes oficiantes.

Significado Simbólico da Festividade. Foi no dia de Pentecostes que Jesus Cristo derramou o espírito santo sobre o grupo de cerca de 120 discípulos no quarto de andar superior em Jerusalém, no ano 33 EC. (At 1:13-15) Jesus foi ressuscitado no dia 16 de nisã, o dia de o sumo sacerdote ofertar o molho de cevada. Em sentido figurado, Ele não tinha fermento, que representa o pecado. (He 7:26) Em Pentecostes, como o grande Sumo Sacerdote, podia apresentar ao seu Pai, Jeová, filhos espirituais adicionais, os seguidores das pisadas de Jesus, tomados dentre a humanidade pecadora e que aceitaram o sacrifício dele. Ter Deus aprovado o sacrifício humano do próprio Jesus e a apresentação, por Jesus, dos discípulos dele (embora nascidos em pecado) para serem filhos espirituais de Deus, foi manifestada pelo derramamento do espírito de Deus sobre eles. Haver dois pães do recém amadurecido cereal, apresentados a Jeová em Pentecostes, indica que mais de uma pessoa estaria envolvida no cumprimento. Pode também indicar que aqueles que se tornam seguidores de Jesus Cristo, gerados pelo espírito, seriam tomados de dois grupos na terra: primeiro dentre os judeus naturais, circuncisos, e depois dentre todas as outras nações do mundo, os gentios. — Veja Ef 2:13-18.

Os judeus tradicionalmente sustentam que o Pentecostes corresponde ao tempo em que se deu a Lei em Sinai, quando Israel se tornou um povo distinto. Foi no começo do terceiro mês (sivã) que os israelitas se reuniram em Sinai e receberam a Lei. (Êx 19:1) Assim como Moisés, qual mediador, foi usado para introduzir Israel no pacto da Lei, assim Jesus Cristo, qual Mediador do Israel espiritual, introduzia então esta nova nação no novo pacto. O apóstolo Paulo usa estes dois eventos como comparação, dizendo que os cristãos são ajuntados numa assembleia bem maior, a "um Monte Sião e a uma cidade do Deus vivente, a Jerusalém celestial", sob arranjos de um novo pacto. — He 12:18-24; compare isso com Re 14:1-5.

Jesus anunciara o novo pacto aos seus discípulos na noite da sua última Páscoa, e, pouco antes da sua ascensão, mandara que esperassem em Jerusalém pelo prometido espírito santo. Daí, conforme explicou o apóstolo Pedro, "visto que ele foi enaltecido à direita de Deus e recebeu do Pai o prometido espírito santo, derramou isto que vedes e ouvis". (Lu 22:20; At 2:33) A presença do espírito de Deus se manifestou em que uns 120 discípulos falavam milagrosamente em diferentes línguas. Deste modo, as multidões de judeus e de prosélitos, de todas as partes do Império Romano, podiam ouvir com entendimento "as coisas magníficas de Deus". (At 2:7-11) Pela primeira vez nesta ocasião, por intermédio de Pedro, pregou-se o batismo em nome do Pai, do Filho e do espírito santo, conforme Jesus ordenara em Mateus 28:19. (At 2:21, 36, 38, 39) Tendo Jesus subido aos céus com o valor do seu sacrifício, ele pôde introduzir seus seguidores no novo pacto. — He 9:15-26.

Portanto, estes seguidores, junto com os 3.000 acrescentados naquele dia (At 2:41), e outros mais tarde, não eram as primeiríssimas primícias para Deus, porque estas eram o próprio Jesus Cristo, ressuscitado em 16 de nisã de 33 EC (1Co 15:23), quando se moviam os molhos de cevada. Antes, eles eram como as primícias do trigo, uma segunda safra, "certas primícias" para Deus. (Tg 1:18) Tornaram-se assim a nova nação de Deus, "raça escolhida, sacerdócio real, nação santa, povo para propriedade especial". — 1Pe 2:9.

PENUEL [Face de Deus].

1. "Pai de Gedor", na tribo de Judá. (1Cr 4:1, 4) Visto que Gedor aparece como nome duma cidade em Judá, Penuel talvez fosse seu fundador ou o antepassado de seus habitantes.

2. Cabeça de família na tribo de Benjamim, que morava em Jerusalém; filho de Sasaque. — 1Cr 8:1, 25, 28.

3. Cidade ao S do Jaboque. Na época dos juízes, Gideão pediu aos homens de Penuel alimentos para que suas forças pudessem continuar na perseguição dos reis de Midiã, mas os penuelitas se negaram, motivo pelo qual Gideão, mais tarde, destruiu a torre deles e matou todos os seus homens. (Jz 8:4-9, 17) Não se menciona mais nada de Penuel até que o Rei Jeroboão I a "construiu" de novo, ou pelo menos a fortificou. — 1Rs 12:25.

Penuel é geralmente identificado com Tulul edh-Dhahab esh-Sherqiyeh, a uns 6 km ao L de Sucote e perto do Jaboque, uns 14 km mais ou menos ao NE da sua confluência com o Jordão. Há indícios de que era bem fortificada e estrategicamente posicionada para controlar a entrada do desfiladeiro do Jaboque para o oeste, descendo até o Jordão. — Veja PENIEL.

PEOR. No relato sobre os empenhos do Rei Balaque de conseguir que o profeta Balaão amaldiçoasse Israel, diz-se que o terceiro ponto elevado ao qual Balaão foi levado era o "cume de Peor, que olha para Jesimom". (Núm 23:28) Dali, Balaão podia ver as tendas de Israel espalhadas nas planícies de Moabe mais abaixo. — Núm 22:1; 24:2.

Alguns acham que Peor seja a forma abreviada de Bete-Peor. (De 4:46) No entanto, este último lugar é evidentemente uma cidade, incluída como tal no território designado a Rubem. (Jos 13:15, 16, 20) Por isso, outros acham que Peor era um cume, ou pico, e sugerem que a cidade de Bete-Peor talvez fosse chamada assim por estar situada nas encostas deste cume. Tanto Peor como Bete-Peor parecem estar ligados com a adoração pagã de "Baal de Peor" (Núm 25:1-3, 18; 31:16; Jos 22:17), e é possível que o alto de Peor fosse o centro de tal adoração imoral. — Veja BAAL N.º 4; BAAL DE PEOR.

Balaão foi primeiro levado a Bamote-Baal, depois "ao cume do Pisga" e finalmente "ao cume de Peor". (Núm 22:41; 23:14, 28) A direção do movimento é de S a N, e parece indicar que Peor ficava ao N do Pisga e do monte Nebo. Baseado no testemunho de Eusébio e de Jerônimo, do terceiro e do quarto século EC, sugere-se que o cume de Peor tenha sido um dos picos que beiram o uádi Husban. — Veja BETE-PEOR.

PEPINO [hebr.: qish·shu·'áh]. Entre os alimentos pelos quais os queixosos israelitas e a multidão mista expressaram grandes almejos estavam o pepino, bem como a melancia, o alho-porro, a cebola e o alho. (Núm 11:5) Alguns peritos, encarando o pepino como comum demais para provocar tal almejo, sugerem como provável identificação o melão (Cucumis melo). Todavia, a evidência de línguas cognatas, bem como a de primitivas traduções, indica o pepino.

O pepineiro é uma trepadeira comprida, rastejante, que produz flores amareladas ou esbranquiçadas. O fruto do pepineiro comum (Cucumis sativus) tem casca lisa, cor verde a verde-azulada, e polpa branco-esverdeada, com muitas sementes. As margens bem-regadas do Nilo e as terras umedecidas por orvalho na Palestina, junto com o calor do sol, fornecem condições ideais de crescimento a esta planta muito cultivada naqueles países.

Era costume erigir barracas ou cabanas em hortas e vinhedos como abrigo para o vigia que protegia os produtos do campo contra ladrões e animais predadores. Se o rancho era do tipo usado mais recentemente, então tinha uma estrutura frágil de quatro paus fincados no chão, com travessas ligando-os. Usavam-se galhos para formar o teto e os lados, estando estes às vezes interligados com um trançado de varas ou de raminhos finos, ao passo que as juntas principais da estrutura eram amarradas com vimes usados como cordas. Finda a época da cultura, esses ranchos ficavam abandonados, e com o começo dos ventos e da chuva outonais, podiam vergar e até mesmo cair. Deste modo, Sião, no meio da desolação, é vividamente retratada “sobrando como uma barraca no vinhedo, como um rancho de vigia no pepinal”. — Is 1:8.

Colocavam-se também nos campos cultivados colunas, estacas ou outros dispositivos para espantar animais, e foi com tal mudo e inanimado “espantalho do pepinal” que o profeta Jeremias comparou as imagens feitas pelas nações idólatras. — Je 10:5.

PERAZIM, MONTE [Rupturas]. Monte que parece ser chamado em outros lugares de Baal-Perazim. — Is 28:21; veja BAAL-PERAZIM.

PERDÃO. Ato de perdoar a um ofensor; cessar de ter ressentimento dele por sua ofensa e renunciar a todas as reivindicações de compensação. O verbo hebraico sa·láhh (perdoar) é usado apenas com respeito a Deus perdoar a um pecador. O termo grego a·fí·e·mi significa literalmente “deixar ir”. — Veja PERDOAR.

Segundo a lei de Deus dada à nação de Israel, para que alguém que pecou contra Deus ou contra seu próximo tivesse seus pecados perdoados, ele primeiro tinha de retificar o erro, conforme a Lei prescrevia, e então, na maioria dos casos, apresentar uma oferta de sangue a Jeová. (Le 5:5–6:7) Daí o princípio declarado por Paulo: “Sim, quase todas as coisas são purificadas com sangue, segundo a Lei, e a menos que se derrame sangue, não há perdão.” (He 9:22) Na realidade, porém, o sangue dos sacrifícios de animais não podia tirar pecados e dar à pessoa uma consciência perfeitamente limpa. (He 10:1-4; 9:9, 13, 14) Em contraste, o predito novo pacto tornou possível o verdadeiro perdão, baseado no sacrifício resgatador de Jesus Cristo. (Je 31:33, 34; Mt 26:28; 1Co 11:25; Ef 1:7) Jesus, mesmo enquanto na Terra, por curar um paralítico, demonstrou que tinha autoridade para perdoar pecados. — Mt 9:2-7.

Jeová perdoa “amplamente”, conforme indicado pelas ilustrações de Jesus a respeito do filho pródigo e do rei que perdoou a um escravo uma dívida de 10.000 talentos (60.000.000 de denários ou c. US$ 40.000.000), ao passo que aquele escravo não estava disposto a perdoar a outro escravo uma dívida de apenas cem denários (c. US$ 70). (Is 55:7; Lu 15:11-32; Mt 18:23-35) Não obstante, o perdão de Jeová não é induzido por sentimentalismo, porque ele não deixa de punir atos maus. (Sal 99:8) Josué advertiu os israelitas de que Jeová não perdoaria a apostasia deles. — Jos 24:19, 20; compare isso com Is 2:6-9.

Deus estipulou a maneira de se buscar e receber seu perdão. A pessoa tem de admitir seu pecado, reconhecer que este é uma ofensa contra Deus, confessá-lo incondicionalmente, ter um profundo pesar de ter feito o mal e ter a determinação de se desviar de tal proceder ou prática. (Sal 32:5; 51:4; 1Jo 1:8, 9; 2Co 7:8-11) Tem de fazer o que pode para retificar o mal ou o dano causado. (Mt 5:23, 24) Daí tem de orar a Deus, pedindo perdão à base do sacrifício resgatador de Cristo. — Ef 1:7; veja ARREPENDIMENTO.

Além disso, perdoar aos outros ofensas pessoais, não importa quantas vezes ocorram, é um requisito cristão. (Lu 17:3, 4; Ef 4:32; Col 3:13) Deus não perdoa aos que se negam a perdoar os outros. (Mt 6:14, 15) No entanto, mesmo quando uma grave transgressão resulta na expulsão do “iníquo” da congregação cristã, esta pessoa pode, no tempo devido, receber perdão, se provar que está deveras arrependida. Nesta ocasião, todos na congregação podem confirmar seu amor por ela. (1Co 5:13; 2Co 2:6-11) No entanto, não se requer dos cristãos perdoar aqueles que praticam pecados premeditada e deliberadamente, sem arrependimento. Esses tornam-se inimigos de Deus. — He 10:26-31; Sal 139:21, 22.

É correto orar a favor de outros pedindo o perdão de Deus, mesmo por uma congregação inteira. Moisés fez isso a respeito da nação de Israel, confessando o pecado nacional dela e pedindo perdão, e ele foi ouvido favoravelmente por Jeová. (Núm 14:19, 20) Também Salomão, na dedicação do templo, orou para que Jeová perdoasse ao seu povo quando este pecasse e então recuasse do proceder errado. (1Rs 8:30, 33-40, 46-52) Esdras atuou de forma representativa ao confessar publicamente os pecados dos judeus repatriados. Sua oração de coração e sua exortação teve como resultado que o povo agiu para obter o perdão de Jeová. (Esd 9:13–10:4, 10-19, 44) Tiago incentivou o espiritualmente doente a chamar os anciãos da congregação para orarem por ele, e "se ele tiver cometido pecados, ser-lhe-á isso perdoado". (Tg 5:14-16) No entanto, "há um pecado que incorre em morte", o pecado contra o espírito santo, a prática deliberada de pecado, para o qual não há perdão. O cristão não deve orar a favor dos que pecam assim. — 1Jo 5:16; Mt 12:31; He 10:26, 27; veja ESPÍRITO; PECADO.

PERDIZ [hebr.: qo·ré']. Ave galiforme, de corpo robusto, menor do que o faisão, capaz de correr e esquivar-se com grande rapidez, raras vezes recorrendo ao voo e cansando-se depressa quando o faz. Duas espécies de perdizes encontradas na Palestina são a perdiz da areia (Ammoperdix heyi) e a perdiz das rochas (Alectoris graeca). A perdiz da areia é encontrada em desertos e em encostas rochosas, ao passo que a perdiz das rochas é encontrada principalmente em região colinosa coberta de esparsa vegetação.

O nome hebraico desta ave significa "chamador". Embora a perdiz tenha um canto ressoante, alguns acham que seu nome hebraico intenciona imitar o som rangente de "crrr-ic" produzido pela ave quando sai voando espantada.

A perdiz tem uma carne delicada, e desde a antiguidade era caçada como alimento, os caçadores costumando atirar paus para abater a ave quando voa espantada. Visto que a perdiz procura escapar correndo, ocultando-se atrás de rochas e de outros obstáculos, e procura esconderijos em fendas de rochas ou em lugares similares para se ocultar, Davi, mudando de esconderijo em esconderijo no seu empenho de esquivar-se da implacável perseguição do Rei Saul, comparou-se aptamente a uma "perdiz sobre os montes". — 1Sa 26:20; compare isso com La 3:52.

O texto em Jeremias 17:11, comparando o homem que injustamente acumula riquezas à "perdiz que tem ajuntado [ou, possivelmente: chocado] o que não botou", tem sido assunto de muita discussão. Ao passo que certos escritores antigos descreveram a perdiz como retirando ovos dos ninhos de outras perdizes e incubando-os, os atuais naturalistas declaram que nenhuma das aves classificadas como perdizes faz isso. Todavia, o Lexicon in Veteris Testamenti Libros (Léxico dos Livros do Velho Testamento) menciona o zoólogo judeu Israel Aharoni (1882-1946), escritor de obras sobre a vida animal na Palestina, como tendo encontrado "2 posturas de 11 ovos cada uma, de 2 fêmeas diferentes [de perdizes] no mesmo ninho". (De L. Koehler e W. Baumgartner, Leiden, 1958, p. 851) Neste respeito, a Encyclopaedia Judaica (1973, Vol. 13; col. 156) declara: "Às vezes, duas fêmeas botam ovos no mesmo ninho, caso em que uma sai vencedora e expulsa a outra; todavia, seu corpo pequeno não consegue manter aquecido um número tão grande de ovos, de modo que por fim os embriões morrem. Foi a isto que o provérbio [em Jeremias 17:11] se referiu quando fala de alguém que rouba do outro as posses dele sem por fim derivar disso algum benefício."

Jeremias 17:11 reza na versão Almeida (revista e corrigida): "Como a perdiz que ajunta ovos que não choca, assim é aquele que ajunta riquezas, mas não retamente; no meio de seus dias as deixará, e no seu fim se fará um insensato." Em apoio desta interpretação alternativa, John Sawyer argumenta que "o ponto é a proverbial vulnerabilidade do ninho da perdiz, que fica exposto a predadores saqueadores de muitas espécies, comparada com a vulnerabilidade do tolo que deposita sua confiança no lucro vil". Ele prossegue, dizendo que a eficácia do provérbio em Jeremias 17:11 "não depende da traição da perdiz que choca, mas da sua vulnerabilidade, comparada com o falso senso de segurança do insensato que pensa que pode safar-se com sua ganância criminosa . . . desapercebido dos perigos a que está exposto e indefeso quando o desastre sobrevém". — Vetus Testamentum (Antigo Testamento), Leiden, 1978, pp. 324, 328, 329.

PERDOAR. A palavra hebraica na·sá', às vezes traduzida "perdoar", é também usada nas Escrituras no sentido de "colocar em", "levantar", "carregar" (Gên 45:19; Êx 6:8; 2Rs 2:16), "tomar" (Gên 27:3), "tirar" (Números 16:15). O sentido básico da palavra, porém, é "transportar, carregar, levar". (Gên 47:30; 1Rs 2:26; Ez 44:12, 13) Ainda se alude a isso nos casos em que na·sá' é apropriadamente traduzida "perdoar". As Escrituras falam do bode para Azazel como levando embora o pecado, e foi predito que o Messias carregaria o erro do povo. (Le 16:8, 10, 22; Is 53:12) Por ele carregar ou levar o erro de outros, torna-se-lhes possível o perdão. — Veja AZAZEL.

Ao passo que a palavra na·sá' pode indicar o perdão concedido por Deus ou por humanos (Gên 18:24, 26; 50:17), usa-se sa·láhh exclusivamente para o perdão da parte de Deus, ato pelo qual o pecador é restabelecido no favor divino em resposta à sua sincera oração pelo perdão ou à oração intercessória de outro. — Núm 14:19, 20; 1Rs 8:30.

Quando a palavra hebraica na·sá' tem o sentido de perdão, a Septuaginta grega às vezes usa a palavra a·fi·e·mi. No seu sentido básico, a·fi·e·mi denota "deixar ir". Este termo pode indicar "perdoar", "perdão". Em Romanos 4:7, o apóstolo Paulo cita o Salmo 32:1 (31:1, LXX), onde se faz referência a Jeová perdoar uma "revolta", e ele usa uma forma da palavra a·fi·e·mi, assim como a Septuaginta grega a usa para a palavra hebraica na·sá'. O termo aparece em outros lugares das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs e é aplicado ao perdão de pecados por Deus e pelo homem, inclusive ao cancelamento de dívidas. — Mt 6:12, 14, 15; 18:32, 35.

Jeová destaca-se como Deus que concede perdão aos que procuram tal perdão. Mas ele não isenta da punição aqueles que deliberadamente se colocam em oposição a ele e aos seus modos justos. — Êx 34:6, 7; veja PERDÃO.

PERES, I.

1. Filho de Maquir e de Maacá, da tribo de Manassés. — 1Cr 7:14, 16.

2. Daniel usou esta palavra aramaica ao interpretar a escrita na parede: "MENE, MENE, TEQUEL e PARSIM." (Da 5:25, 28) O Dr. Judah Slotki salienta que a escrita a mão significa "um mané, um mané, um siclo e meio siclos". (Soncino Books of the Bible [Livros da Bíblia, de Soncino], obra editada por A. Cohen, Londres, 1951; veja também Peake's Commentary on the Bible [Comentário sobre a Bíblia, de Peake], editado por M. Black e H. H. Rowley, Londres, 1964, p. 596.) Visto que "Peres" é o singular de "Parsim", significa "meio siclo".

Na interpretação de "Peres" pelo profeta, ele usou mais duas palavras aramaicas, grafadas com as mesmas três consoantes, mas vocalizadas de forma diferente. "PERES [Perés]: teu reino foi dividido [peri·sáth] e dado aos medos e aos persas [u-Fa·rás]." De modo que a explicação inspirada incluía um duplo trocadilho com a palavra "Peres" e com a raiz que significa "dividir". Os eventos subsequentes daquela noite provaram a exatidão da interpretação. — Veja PARSIM.

PERES, II [Ruptura; Ruptura Perineal]. Um dos gêmeos de Judá por meio da sua nora Tamar. Durante o parto, Zerá, irmão de Peres, começou a emergir primeiro, mas se recolheu, e Peres saiu primeiro, produzindo uma ruptura perineal em Tamar. (Gên 38:24-30) Peres reteve a primazia sobre o seu irmão e sempre é alistado antes dele, e sua casa tornou-se a mais famosa das duas. (Ru 4:12) Peres e seus próprios dois filhos, Esrom e Hamul, estão alistados entre os da linhagem de Jacó que foram ao Egito, os três tornando-se chefes de família de Judá. (Gên 46:8, 12) Fora disso, não se registram informações pessoais sobre ele.

As referências a Peres são primariamente genealógicas, a maior parte das genealogias de Judá procedendo através de Peres. (1Cr 2:4, 5, 9-55; 4:1-20) As famílias de Peres e de seus dois filhos constituíam uma substancial parte da tribo de Judá por ocasião do segundo registro no ermo. (Núm 26:20-22) Alguns dos descendentes de Peres estavam na primeira turma da milícia mensal de Davi. (1Cr 27:3) Muitos dos filhos de Peres retornaram do exílio babilônico, e 468 deles moravam em Jerusalém. (1Cr 9:3, 4; Ne 11:4, 6) Uma linha genealógica direta de Peres passava por Boaz até Davi, e finalmente até Jesus, o Messias. — Ru 4:18-22; 1Cr 2:4-15; Mt 1:3; Lu 3:33.

PERES-UZÁ [que significa "Ruptura Contra Uzá"]. Nome dado à eira de Nacom (Quidom), depois de Jeová ter golpeado Uzá por manejar a Arca de modo irreverente, quando se fez a tentativa de levá-la de Quiriate-Jearim para a Cidade de Davi. (2Sa 6:4-10; 1Cr 13:6-11) Desconhece-se a localização exata de Peres-Uzá.

PERFEIÇÃO. A noção de perfeição é expressa por termos hebraicos derivados de verbos tais como ka·lál (aperfeiçoar [veja Ez 27:4]), sha·lám (ter acabado [veja Is 60:20]) e ta·mám (completar-se, chegar à perfeição [veja Sal 102:27; Is 18:5]). Nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, as palavras té·lei·os (adjetivo), te·lei·ó·tes (substantivo) e te·lei·ó·o (verbo) são usadas de forma similar, transmitindo a ideia de tornar completo ou de plena medida (Lu 8:14; 2Co 12:9; Tg 1:4), de estar plenamente desenvolvido, adulto ou maduro (1Co 14:20; He 5:14), de ter alcançado o fim, propósito ou objetivo apropriado ou determinado (Jo 19:28; Fil 3:12).

Importância dum Conceito Correto. Para se obter o entendimento correto da Bíblia é preciso evitar o erro comum de pensar que tudo o que é chamado "perfeito" é assim em sentido absoluto, quer dizer, num grau infinito, sem limites. A perfeição neste sentido absoluto é distintiva apenas do Criador, Jeová Deus. Foi por isso que Jesus podia dizer a respeito de seu Pai: "Ninguém é bom, exceto um só, Deus." (Mr 10:18) Jeová é incomparável na sua excelência, digno de todo o louvor, supremo em sublimes qualidades e poderes, de modo que "só o seu nome é inalcançavelmente elevado". (Sal 148:1-13; Jó 36:3, 4, 26; 37:16, 23, 24; Sal 145:2-10, 21) Moisés exaltou a perfeição de Deus, dizendo: "Pois declararei o nome de Jeová. Atribuí deveras grandeza ao nosso Deus! A Rocha, perfeita é a sua atuação, pois todos os seus caminhos são justiça. Deus de fidelidade e sem injustiça; justo e reto é ele." (De 32:3, 4) Todos os caminhos, palavras e leis de Deus são perfeitos, refinados, livres de falhas ou defeitos. (Sal 18:30; 19:7; Tg 1:17, 25) Nunca há nenhuma justa causa para objeção, crítica ou queixa a respeito Dele ou de Suas atividades; antes, Ele sempre merece louvor. — Jó 36:22-24.

Outras perfeições são relativas. A perfeição de qualquer outra pessoa ou coisa, portanto, é relativa, não absoluta. (Veja Sal 119:96.) Quer dizer que algo é "perfeito" de acordo, ou em relação com, o objetivo ou finalidade para que foi destinado pelo seu projetista ou produtor, ou com o uso que lhe dá aquele que o recebe ou emprega. O próprio sentido de perfeição exige que haja alguém que decida quando se atingiu a qualidade "completa", quais são as normas de excelência, que requisitos devem ser satisfeitos e que pormenores são essenciais. No fim, Deus, o Criador, é o derradeiro Árbitro da perfeição, Aquele que estabelece normas, segundo os seus próprios propósitos e interesses justos. — Ro 12:2; veja JEOVÁ (Deus de normas de moral).

A título de ilustração, o planeta Terra é uma das criações de Deus, e no fim de seis 'dias' criativos de trabalho relacionados com ela, Deus pronunciou o resultado "muito bom". (Gên 1:31) Satisfazia Suas normas supremas de excelência, e assim era perfeita. No entanto, depois ele deu ao homem a tarefa de 'sujeitá-la', evidentemente no sentido de cultivar a terra e de tornar todo o planeta, e não apenas o Éden, um jardim de Deus. — Gên 1:28; 2:8.

A tenda, ou tabernáculo, construída no ermo às ordens de Deus e segundo as Suas especificações, serviu de tipo ou modelo profético em pequena escala duma "tenda maior e mais perfeita", cujo Santíssimo é a residência celestial de Jeová, na qual Cristo Jesus entrou como Sumo Sacerdote. (He 9:11-14, 23, 24) A tenda terrestre era perfeita no sentido de que satisfazia os requisitos de Deus, que servia seu objetivo pretendido. Todavia, quando se completou o objetivo de Deus para com ela, não foi mais usada e deixou de existir. A perfeição daquilo que representava era dum tipo muito mais elevado.

A cidade de Jerusalém, com seu morro de Sião, era chamada de "perfeição da lindeza". (La 2:15; Sal 50:2) Isto não significa que cada pormenor do aspecto físico da cidade era soberbamente lindo, mas, antes, relaciona-se com seu uso por Deus, sendo que a beleza da cidade resultava do esplendor que ele lhe havia conferido por torná-la a capital dos Seus reis ungidos e o lugar do Seu templo. (Ez 16:14) A abastada cidade comercial de Tiro é retratada como navio, cujos construtores, os que trabalhavam a favor dos interesses materiais da cidade, haviam 'aperfeiçoado a sua lindeza', enchendo-a de produtos luxuosos de muitas terras. — Ez 27:3-25.

Assim, em cada caso, é preciso tomar em consideração o contexto para determinar o sentido ou a relação em que se usa o termo perfeição.

Perfeição da Lei Mosaica. A Lei dada a Israel por meio de Moisés incluía entre as suas provisões o estabelecimento dum sacerdócio e a oferta de diversos sacrifícios de animais. Embora procedesse de Deus, e por isso era perfeita, nem a Lei, nem seu sacerdócio, nem os sacrifícios conferiam perfeição aos que estavam sob a Lei, conforme mostra o apóstolo inspirado. (He 7:11, 19; 10:1) Em vez de trazer libertação do pecado e da morte, na realidade tornava o pecado mais evidente. (Ro 3:20; 7:7-13) Não obstante, todas estas provisões divinas serviam à finalidade que Deus lhes atribuiu; a Lei atuava como "tutor" para conduzir os homens a Cristo, constituindo uma perfeita "sombra das boas coisas vindouras". (Gál 3:19-25; He 10:1) Portanto, quando Paulo fala da "incapacidade da parte da Lei, enquanto ela estava fraca por intermédio da carne" (Ro 8:3), ele evidentemente se refere à incapacidade do sumo sacerdote judeu, carnal (designado pela Lei para estar encarregado dos arranjos de sacrifícios, e que entrava no Dia da Expiação no Santíssimo com sangue sacrificial), de "salvar completamente" aqueles a quem servia, conforme explica Hebreus 7:11, 18-28. Embora a oferta de sacrifícios por meio do sacerdócio arônico mantivesse o povo numa posição correta perante Deus, não o aliviava completa ou perfeitamente da consciência do pecado. O apóstolo refere-se a isso, dizendo que os sacrifícios de expiação não podiam "aperfeiçoar os que se aproximam", isto é, quanto à sua consciência. (He 10:1-4; compare isso com He 9:9.) O sumo sacerdote não podia prover o preço de resgate necessário para verdadeiramente remir do pecado. Somente o duradouro serviço sacerdotal e o sacrifício eficaz de Cristo podem realizar isso. — He 9:14; 10:12-22.

A Lei era "santa", 'boa' e "excelente" (Ro 7:12, 16), e quem pudesse cumprir plenamente esta Lei perfeita mostraria ser homem perfeito, merecedor da vida. (Le 18:5; Ro 10:5; Gál 3:12) Pelo mesmíssimo motivo, a Lei trazia a condenação, em vez de a vida, não porque a Lei não fosse boa, mas por causa da natureza imperfeita, pecaminosa, dos que estavam debaixo dela. (Ro 7:13-16; Gál 3:10-12, 19-22) A Lei perfeita tornava especialmente evidentes a imperfeição e a pecaminosidade deles. (Ro 3:19, 20; Gál 3:19, 22) Neste respeito, a Lei serviu também para identificar Jesus como o Messias, porque somente ele pôde guardar a Lei em todos os sentidos, mostrando ser homem perfeito. — Jo 8:46; 2Co 5:21; He 7:26.

A Perfeição da Bíblia. As Escrituras Sagradas constituem uma mensagem perfeita da parte de Deus, refinada, pura e verdadeira. (Sal 12:6; 119:140, 160; Pr 30:5; Jo 17:17) Embora nos milhares de anos de produção de cópias dela evidentemente se introduzissem algumas variantes nos escritos originais, essas variantes são admitidamente bem pequenas, de modo que, mesmo que nossas atuais cópias e traduções não sejam absolutamente sem falhas, a mensagem divina que transmitem certamente o é.

Há quem talvez ache a Bíblia um livro mais difícil de ler do que muitos outros, exigindo maior empenho e concentração; talvez encontre muitas partes que não entende. Alguns críticos talvez insistam que, para ser perfeita, a Bíblia devia estar livre até mesmo de diferenças superficiais, ou daquilo que, segundo as normas deles, parece ser incoerente. Nada disso, porém, detrai da perfeição das Escrituras Sagradas. Porque a verdadeira medida da perfeição da Bíblia é que ela se harmoniza com as normas de excelência fixadas por Jeová Deus, que ela cumpre a finalidade ou propósito que ele, como seu verdadeiro Autor, lhe atribuiu, e que está ela livre de falsidade, sendo a publicada Palavra do Deus da verdade. O apóstolo Paulo salienta a perfeição dos "escritos sagrados" por dizer: "Toda a Escritura é inspirada por Deus e proveitosa para ensinar, para repreender, para endireitar as coisas, para disciplinar em justiça, a fim de que o homem de Deus seja plenamente competente, completamente equipado para toda boa obra." (2Ti 3:15-17) Aquilo que as Escrituras Hebraicas fizeram para a nação de Israel quando ela as observou, o que as Escrituras completas fizeram para a congregação cristã no primeiro século e o que a Bíblia pode fazer para as pessoas na atualidade, é prova convincente das suas qualidades como instrumento ideal de Deus para cumprir seu objetivo. — Veja 1Co 1:18.

Todo o teor das Escrituras, inclusive os ensinos do Filho de Deus, é no sentido de que obter entendimento dos propósitos de Deus, fazer a vontade Dele e alcançar a salvação para a vida dependem primariamente do coração da pessoa. (1Sa 16:7; 1Cr 28:9; Pr 4:23; 21:2; Mt 15:8; Lu 8:5-15; Ro 10:10) A Bíblia é única na sua capacidade de "discernir os pensamentos e as intenções do coração", revelando o que a pessoa realmente é. (He 4:12, 13) As Escrituras tornam claro que Deus não fez com que o conhecimento sobre ele fosse algo que se pudesse adquirir sem esforço. (Veja Pr 2:1-14; 8:32-36; Is 55:6-11; Mt 7:7, 8.) Torna-se também evidente que Deus fez com que seus propósitos fossem revelados aos humildes e ocultos dos soberbos, porque 'fazer assim veio a ser o modo aprovado por ele'. (Mt 11:25-27; 13:10-15; 1Co 2:6-16; Tg 4:6) Portanto, que pessoas cujo coração não responde à mensagem da Bíblia achem nas Escrituras coisas que, na sua opinião, justificam que elas rejeitem a sua mensagem, sua repreensão e sua disciplina, não mostra nenhuma imperfeição por parte da Bíblia. Antes, ilustra os pontos bíblicos que acabamos de apresentar e assim demonstra a perfeição da Bíblia no conceito do seu Autor, cujo conceito é o único decisivo. (Is 29:13, 14; Jo 9:39; At 28:23-27; Ro 1:28) As coisas que se relacionam com a Palavra de Deus e os Seus modos de agir, que os sábios segundo o mundo consideram 'tolos' e 'fracos', o tempo e as provas atestam ser de sabedoria e força superiores comparados com as teorias, filosofias e raciocínios dos detratores humanos. — 1Co 1:22-25; 1Pe 1:24, 25.

A fé continua a ser um requisito essencial para se entender e apreciar a perfeita Palavra de Deus. Alguém talvez ache que a Bíblia deveria conter certos pormenores e explicações, revelando por que, em casos específicos, Deus deu aprovação ou desaprovação, ou por que ele adotou determinado proceder; talvez ache também que outros pormenores encontrados na Bíblia são supérfluos. No entanto, ele deveria dar-se conta de que, se a Bíblia se ajustasse a normas ou critérios humanos, tais como os dele mesmo, isto não provaria que ela é divinamente perfeita. Jeová, expondo a falsidade de tal atitude, declara a superioridade dos seus pensamentos e modos de agir sobre os dos humanos, e assegura que a Sua palavra "terá êxito certo" no cumprimento do Seu propósito. (Is 55:8-11; Sal 119:89) Este é o sentido de perfeição, conforme mostram as definições na parte inicial deste artigo.

Perfeição e Livre-Arbítrio. A informação precedente ajuda a entender como criaturas perfeitas de Deus podiam tornar-se desobedientes. Encarar isso como algo incompatível com a perfeição é desconsiderar o significado do termo, adotando em seu lugar um conceito pessoal, contrário aos fatos. Às criaturas inteligentes de Deus concede-se livre-arbítrio, o privilégio e a responsabilidade de fazerem suas próprias decisões quanto ao proceder que querem adotar. (De 30:19, 20; Jos 24:15) É evidente que era assim com o primeiro casal humano, para que a sua devoção a Deus pudesse ser submetida a uma prova. (Gên 2:15-17; 3:2, 3) Jeová, como seu Criador, sabia o que queria deles, e as Escrituras tornam claro que ele não queria uma obediência automática, virtualmente mecânica, mas adoração e serviço originados por corações e mentes motivados por um amor genuíno. (Veja De 30:15, 16; 1Cr 28:9; 29:17; Jo 4:23, 24.) Se Adão e Eva não tivessem tido a faculdade de escolha neste assunto, não teriam satisfeito os requisitos de Deus; não teriam sido completos, perfeitos, segundo as normas Dele.

Deve ser lembrado que a perfeição relacionada com os humanos é uma perfeição relativa, limitada à esfera humana. Embora Adão fosse criado perfeito, ele não podia ultrapassar os limites fixados pelo seu Criador; não podia comer terra, cascalho ou madeira sem sofrer maus efeitos; se tentasse respirar água em vez de ar, ele se afogaria. De modo similar, se permitisse que sua mente e seu coração se alimentassem de ideias erradas, isto resultaria em ele ter desejos errados, e finalmente causaria o pecado e a morte. — Tg 1:14, 15; compare isso com Gên 1:29; Mt 4:4.

Torna-se prontamente evidente que a vontade e a escolha individuais da criatura são fatores determinantes. Se insistíssemos em que um homem perfeito não poderia adotar um proceder errado em questões de moral, não deveríamos também logicamente argumentar que uma criatura imperfeita não poderia adotar o proceder certo em tais questões de moral? No entanto, algumas criaturas imperfeitas adotam o proceder certo em questões de moral que envolvem a obediência a Deus, preferindo até mesmo sofrer perseguição, em vez de desviar-se de tal proceder; ao mesmo tempo, outros se empenham deliberadamente em fazer o que sabem ser errado. De modo que nem todas as ações erradas podem ser desculpadas com a imperfeição humana. A vontade e a escolha da pessoa são fatores decisivos. Do mesmo modo, não seria apenas a perfeição humana que garantiria uma ação correta da parte do primeiro homem, mas, antes, o exercício de seu livre-arbítrio e de sua escolha motivados pelo amor a seu Deus e pelo que é direito. — Pr 4:23.

O primeiro pecador e o rei de Tiro. O pecado e a imperfeição humanos, naturalmente, foram precedidos pelo pecado e pela imperfeição no domínio espiritual, conforme revelam as palavras de Jesus em João 8:44 e o relato no capítulo 3 de Gênesis. A endecha registrada em Ezequiel 28:12-19, embora dirigida ao humano "rei de Tiro", evidentemente equipara-se ao proceder adotado por aquele filho espiritual de Deus que pecou primeiro. O orgulho do "rei de Tiro", ao constituir-se em 'deus', ser ele chamado de "querubim", e a referência a "Éden, jardim de Deus", certamente correspondem às informações bíblicas sobre Satanás, o Diabo, que se enfunou de orgulho, é ligado à serpente no Éden e é chamado de "o deus deste sistema de coisas". — 1Ti 3:6; Gên 3:1-5, 14, 15; Re 12:9; 2Co 4:4.

O anônimo rei de Tiro, morando na cidade que afirmava ser "perfeita em lindeza", era ele mesmo "cheio de sabedoria e perfeito [adjetivo aparentado com o hebr. ka·lál] em beleza", e "sem defeito [hebr.: ta·mím]" nos seus caminhos, desde a sua criação até que se achou nele injustiça. (Ez 27:3; 28:12, 15) A primeira ou direta aplicação da endecha em Ezequiel talvez seja à linhagem de governantes tírios, em vez de a um rei específico. (Veja a profecia dirigida contra o anônimo "rei de Babilônia" em Is 14:4-20.) Neste caso, talvez se refira a um anterior proceder de amizade e de cooperação adotado pela governança tíria durante os reinados dos reis Davi e Salomão, quando Tiro até mesmo contribuiu para a construção do templo de Jeová no monte Moriá. De início, portanto, não se achava falta na atitude tíria, oficial, para com Israel, o povo de Jeová. (1Rs 5:1-18; 9:10, 11, 14; 2Cr 2:3-16) Reis posteriores, porém, afastaram-se deste proceder "sem defeito", e Tiro foi condenada pelos profetas de Deus, Joel e Amós, bem como por Ezequiel. (Jl 3:4-8; Am 1:9, 10) Além da evidente similaridade entre o proceder do "rei de Tiro" e o do principal Adversário de Deus, a profecia ilustra de novo como as expressões "perfeição" e "sem defeito" podem ser usadas em sentidos limitados.

Como podiam servos imperfeitos de Deus ser classificados como "sem defeito"?

O justo Noé mostrou ser "sem defeito entre os seus contemporâneos". (Gên 6:9) Jó era "inculpe e reto". (Jó 1:8) Expressões similares são feitas a respeito de outros servos de Deus. Visto que todos eles eram descendentes do pecador Adão, e, portanto, pecadores, é evidente que esses homens eram "sem defeito" e 'inculpes' no sentido de estarem plenamente à altura dos requisitos de Deus para eles, requisitos que levavam em conta a imperfeição e incapacidade deles. (Veja Miq 6:8.) Assim como o oleiro não esperaria poder produzir com barro comum um vaso da mesma qualidade de um produzido com argila especialmente refinada, assim os requisitos de Jeová levam em conta as fraquezas dos humanos imperfeitos. (Sal 103:10-14; Is 64:8) Embora cometessem equívocos e erros, por causa da sua imperfeição carnal, esses homens fiéis, não obstante, manifestavam um "pleno [hebr.: sha·lém] coração" para com Jeová. (1Rs 11:4; 15:14; 2Rs 20:3; 2Cr 16:9) Assim, dentro dos limites que conseguiam alcançar, sua devoção era plena, saudável, e satisfazia os requisitos divinos no seu caso. Visto que Deus, o Juiz, se agradava da adoração deles, nenhuma criatura humana ou espiritual podia de direito achar falta no serviço que prestavam a Ele. — Compare isso com Lu 1:6; He 11:4-16; Ro 14:4; veja JEOVÁ (Por que ele pode lidar com humanos imperfeitos).

As Escrituras Gregas Cristãs reconhecem a inerente imperfeição da humanidade descendente de Adão. Tiago 3:2 mostra que a pessoa seria "homem perfeito, capaz de refrear . . . todo o seu corpo", se conseguisse frear a língua e não tropeçar em palavras; mas, nisto "todos nós tropeçamos muitas vezes". (Veja Tg 3:8.) Não obstante, certas perfeições relativas são especificadas como alcançáveis por humanos pecaminosos. Jesus disse aos seus seguidores: "Tendes de ser perfeitos, assim como o vosso Pai celestial é perfeito." (Mt 5:48) Ele se referia ali à questão do amor e da generosidade. Mostrou que apenas 'amar os que o amam' era um amor incompleto, defeituoso; por isso, seus seguidores deviam aperfeiçoar seu amor ou levá-lo à plena medida por amarem também seus inimigos, seguindo assim o exemplo de Deus. (Mt 5:43-47) De modo similar, mostrou-se ao jovem que interrogou Jesus sobre o modo de ganhar a vida eterna que à adoração dele, que já incluía a obediência aos mandamentos da Lei, ainda faltavam pontos vitais. Se ele 'quisesse ser perfeito', tinha de harmonizar plenamente sua adoração (veja Lu 8:14; Is 18:5) por cumprir todos estes aspectos. — Mt 19:21; compare isso com Ro 12:2.

O apóstolo João mostra que o amor de Deus é aperfeiçoado nos cristãos que permanecem em união com Ele, observando a palavra de seu Filho e amando-se uns aos outros. (1Jo 2:5; 4:11-18) Tal perfeito amor lança fora o temor, e concede "franqueza no falar". O contexto aqui mostra que João fala da "franqueza no falar para com Deus", como em oração. (1Jo 3:19-22; compare isso com He 4:16; 10:19-22.) Aquele em quem o amor de Deus atinge plena expressão pode chegar-se ao seu Pai celestial com confiança, sem se sentir condenado no coração como se fosse hipócrita ou desaprovado. Sabe que está observando os mandamentos de Deus e que faz o que agrada ao seu Pai, e, portanto, sente-se à vontade nas suas expressões e petições a Jeová. Não se sente como que restringido por Deus quanto ao que tem o privilégio de dizer ou de pedir. (Veja Núm 12:10-15; Jó 40:1-5; La 3:40-44; 1Pe 3:7.) Não é inibido por um temor mórbido; não chega ao "dia de julgamento" cônscio de uma 'mancha negra' contra si, ou desejoso de ocultar certas coisas. (Veja He 10:27, 31.) Assim como uma criança não tem medo de pedir alguma coisa a pais amorosos, assim o cristão, em quem o amor se desenvolveu plenamente, tem certeza de que "não importa o que peçamos segundo a sua vontade, ele nos ouve. Ainda mais, se soubermos que ele nos ouve com respeito àquilo que pedimos, sabemos que havemos de ter as coisas pedidas, visto que as pedimos a ele". — 1Jo 5:14, 15.

Assim, este "perfeito amor" não lança fora toda espécie de temor. Não elimina o temor reverente e filial que se tem de Deus, originado pelo profundo respeito pela posição, pelo poder e pela justiça Dele. (Sal 111:9, 10; He 11:7) Tampouco acaba com o temor normal que faz que a pessoa, sempre que possível, evite o perigo ou proteja sua vida, nem com o medo causado por um susto. — Veja 1Sa 21:10-15; 2Co 11:32, 33; Jó 37:1-5; Hab 3:16, 18.

Alcança-se também plena união por meio do "perfeito vínculo" do amor, que faz que os verdadeiros cristãos sejam "aperfeiçoados em um". (Col 3:14; Jo 17:23) É óbvio que a perfeição desta união também é relativa e não significa que sejam eliminadas todas as diferenças de personalidade, tais como habilidade, hábitos e consciência individuais. No entanto, quando alcançada, sua plenitude deveras resulta em ação, crença e ensino unificados. — Ro 15:5, 6; 1Co 1:10; Ef 4:3; Fil 1:27.

A Perfeição de Cristo Jesus. Jesus nasceu como humano perfeito — santo e sem pecado. (Lu 1:30-35; He 7:26) Sua perfeição física, naturalmente, não era infinita, mas limitada à esfera humana; ele tinha limitações humanas; ficava cansado, sedento e faminto; era mortal. (Mr 4:36-39; Jo 4:6, 7; Mt 4:2; Mr 15:37, 44, 45) O propósito de Jeová Deus era usar seu Filho como seu Sumo Sacerdote a favor da humanidade. Embora fosse homem perfeito, Jesus teve de ser 'aperfeiçoado' (gr.: te·lei·ó·o) para esta posição, satisfazendo completamente os requisitos estabelecidos por seu Pai, e levado ao objetivo ou alvo determinado. Esses requisitos exigiam que ele se tornasse "igual aos seus 'irmãos' em todos os sentidos", suportando sofrimentos, aprendendo a obediência sob prova, assim como fariam seus "irmãos" ou seguidores das suas pisadas. Assim se podia "compadecer das nossas fraquezas, [como] alguém que foi provado em todos os sentidos como nós mesmos, porém, sem pecado". (He 2:10-18; 4:15, 16; 5:7-10) Além disso, depois da sua morte como sacrifício perfeito e da sua ressurreição, ele tinha de receber uma vida espiritual, imortal, nos céus, sendo assim "aperfeiçoado para sempre" para o seu cargo sacerdotal.

(He 7:15–8:4; 9:11-14, 24) De modo similar, todos os que servirão com Cristo, quais subsacerdotes, serão 'aperfeiçoados', isto é, levados ao objetivo celestial que procuram alcançar e para o qual são chamados. — Fil 3:8-14; He 12:22, 23; Re 20:6.

O "Aperfeiçoador da nossa fé". Jesus é chamado de "Agente Principal [Líder Principal] e Aperfeiçoador da nossa fé". (He 12:2) É verdade que, muito antes da vinda de Jesus Cristo, a fé de Abraão foi 'aperfeiçoada' pelas suas obras de fé e de obediência, de modo que obteve a aprovação de Deus e se tornou parte num pacto juramentado com Deus. (Tg 2:21-23; Gên 22:15-18) Mas a fé de todos esses homens de fé que viveram antes do ministério terrestre de Jesus era incompleta, ou imperfeita, no sentido de que não entendiam as profecias ainda não cumpridas então a respeito dele como a Semente e o Messias de Deus. (1Pe 1:10-12) Estas profecias passaram a cumprir-se pelo seu nascimento, seu ministério, sua morte e sua ressurreição para a vida celestial, e a fé a respeito de Cristo obteve uma base reforçada, completada com fatos históricos. De modo que a fé, neste sentido aperfeiçoada, "chegou" por meio de Cristo Jesus (Gál 3:24, 25), o qual assim mostrou ser o "líder" (AT), "pioneiro" (Mo) ou Agente Principal da nossa fé. Ele continuou a ser o Aperfeiçoador da fé dos seus seguidores desde a sua posição celestial, derramando sobre eles espírito santo, em Pentecostes, e por conceder revelações que progressivamente completaram e desenvolveram a fé deles. — At 2:32, 33; He 2:4; Re 1:1, 2; 22:16; Ro 10:17.

'Não Aperfeiçoados à Parte de Nós.' Depois de recapitular a atuação de homens fiéis do período pré-cristão, de Abel em diante, o apóstolo diz que nenhum destes obteve "o cumprimento da promessa, visto que Deus previu algo melhor para nós, a fim de que eles não fossem aperfeiçoados à parte de nós". (He 11:39, 40) O "nós", aqui, claramente se refere a cristãos ungidos (He 1:2; 2:1-4), "participantes da chamada celestial" (He 3:1), para os quais Cristo "inaugurou . . . [um] caminho novo e vivente" de entrada no lugar santo da presença celestial de Deus. (He 10:19, 20) A chamada celestial inclui serviço como sacerdotes celestiais de Deus e de Cristo durante o Reinado Milenar de Cristo. Concede-se-lhes também "poder para julgar". (Re 20:4-6) Portanto, é lógico que a vida e os privilégios celestiais que os chamados recebem é o "algo melhor" previsto por Deus para tais cristãos ungidos. (He 11:40) No entanto, a revelação deles, ao passarem a agir desde o céu, com Cristo, para destruir o sistema iníquo, é para abrir o caminho para causar a libertação da escravização à corrupção daqueles da criação que procuram a "liberdade gloriosa dos filhos de Deus". (Ro 8:19-22) Hebreus 11:35 mostra que os homens fiéis dos tempos pré-cristãos mantiveram integridade sob sofrimento, "a fim de que pudessem alcançar uma ressurreição melhor", evidentemente, uma melhor do que a dos "mortos" mencionados no início do versículo, os ressuscitados apenas para morrerem de novo. (Veja 1Rs 17:17-23; 2Rs 4:17-20, 32-37.) Para estes homens fiéis dos tempos pré-cristãos, portanto, serem "aperfeiçoados" deve referir-se à sua ressurreição, ou restauração à vida, e serem depois 'libertos da escravização à corrupção' pelos serviços do sacerdócio de Cristo Jesus e de seus subsacerdotes durante o Governo Milenar.

A Volta da Humanidade à Perfeição na Terra. De acordo com a oração: "Realize-se a tua vontade, como no céu, assim também na terra", este planeta sentirá a plena força e o efeito da execução dos propósitos de Deus. (Mt 6:10) O sistema iníquo, sob o controle de Satanás, será destruído. Todas as falhas e defeitos serão removidos dos sobreviventes que continuarem a demonstrar obedientemente a fé, para que aquilo que sobrar satisfaça as normas de excelência, inteireza e solidez de Deus. Que isto incluirá a perfeição das condições terrestres e das criaturas humanas é evidente em Revelação (Apocalipse) 5:9, 10. Ali se declara que pessoas 'compradas para Deus' (veja Re 14:1, 3) tornam-se "um reino e sacerdotes para o nosso Deus, e hão de reinar sobre a terra". Sob o pacto da Lei, os sacerdotes não só tinham o dever de representar as pessoas perante Deus nas ofertas de sacrifícios, mas estavam também incumbidos de proteger a saúde física da nação, oficiando na purificação dos aviltados e julgando quando a cura se efetuou em casos de lepra. (Le 13-15) Além disso, o sacerdócio tinha a responsabilidade de ajudar no soerguimento e saúde mental e espiritual do povo. (De 17:8-13; Mal 2:7) Visto que a Lei era "uma sombra das boas coisas vindouras", é de esperar que o sacerdócio celestial, sob Cristo Jesus, funcionando durante o seu Reinado Milenar (Re 20:4-6), realize uma obra similar. — He 10:1.

Que se removerão da humanidade redimida as lágrimas, o pranto, o clamor, a dor e a morte é garantido pelo quadro profético de Revelação 21:1-5. Através de Adão, introduziram-se na raça humana o pecado, o consequente sofrimento e morte (Ro 5:12), e estes certamente estarão entre as "coisas anteriores" que hão de passar. A morte é o salário do pecado, e, "como último inimigo, a morte há de ser reduzida a nada" pelo Reinado de Cristo. (Ro 6:23; 1Co 15:25, 26, 56) Para a humanidade obediente, isto significa o retorno ao estado perfeito usufruído pelo homem no começo da história humana no Éden. Os humanos poderão assim usufruir não somente a perfeição de fé e amor, mas também a perfeição no que diz respeito a estar sem pecado; estarão plena e imaculadamente à altura das normas justas de Deus para os humanos. A profecia de Revelação 21:1-5 também se relaciona com o Reinado Milenar de Cristo, visto que a "Nova Jerusalém", cuja 'descida do céu' é relacionada com a eliminação das aflições da humanidade, é mostrada ser a "noiva" de Cristo, ou sua glorificada congregação, portanto, aqueles que constituem o sacerdócio real do Governo Milenar de Cristo. — Re 21:9, 10; Ef 5:25-32; 1Pe 2:9; Re 20:4-6.

A perfeição da humanidade será relativa, limitada à esfera humana. Todavia, ela certamente permitirá que os que a obtêm possam usufruir a vida terrestre no mais pleno grau possível. "Alegria até a fartura está com a . . . face [de Jeová]", e estar 'a tenda dele com a humanidade' mostra que isso se refere à humanidade obediente, aos para quem Jeová volta a sua face com aprovação. (Sal 16:11; Re 21:3; compare isso com Sal 15:1-3; 27:4, 5; 61:4; Is 66:23.) Perfeição, porém, não significa o fim da variedade, conforme alguns frequentemente presumem. O reino animal, produto da 'atuação perfeita' de Jeová (Gên 1:20-24; De 32:4), contém uma enorme variedade. A perfeição do planeta Terra tampouco é incompatível com variedade, mudança ou contraste; ela admite o simples e o complexo, o modesto e o extravagante, o azedo e o doce, o áspero e o liso, as pradarias e as florestas, os montes e os vales. Abrange o estimulante frescor do começo da primavera, o calor do verão com o céu azul, a beleza das cores do outono, a beleza pura da neve recém-caída. (Gên 8:22) Os humanos perfeitos, portanto, não serão estereótipos de idênticas personalidades, talentos e capacidades. Conforme mostraram as definições iniciais, este não é o sentido obrigatório do que é perfeição.

PERFUME. Veja UNGUENTO E PERFUMES.

PERGAMINHO. Peles de ovelha, de cabra ou de bezerro preparadas para uso como material de escrita. Entre povos antigos, usava-se por muito tempo o couro como material de escrita; o Rolo do Mar Morto de Isaías, copiado perto do fim do segundo século AEC, é de couro. O papiro do Egito passou a ser mais usado como material de escrita, mas, segundo Plínio, quando o governante do Egito proibiu a exportação dele, por volta de 190 AEC, foi inventado em Pérgamo o pergaminho de couro. (A palavra portuguesa "pergaminho" vem da lat. pergamena.) Talvez significasse apenas a popularização dum método já existente de tratar peles de modo que se pudesse escrever em ambos os lados. Os rolos de pergaminho eram muito mais duráveis do que os mais baratos rolos de papiro.

Em 2 Timóteo 4:13, o apóstolo Paulo pediu que Timóteo trouxesse "os rolos, especialmente os pergaminhos". (NM, ALA) Ele não indicou o conteúdo destes itens pedidos, mas é bem possível que pediu partes das Escrituras Hebraicas, para que pudesse estudá-las enquanto encarcerado em Roma. A frase "especialmente os pergaminhos" talvez indique que pediu tanto rolos de papiro como rolos de pergaminho.

Entre os primitivos romanos, costumavam usar-se tabuinhas de madeira revestidas de cera para a escrita de assuntos de natureza temporária. Com o tempo, usavam-se para isso tiras de couro ou pergaminho. A palavra latina membranae (peles) era aplicada a tais cadernos de pergaminho. No texto já citado, Paulo usou o equivalente grego da palavra ao pedir "os rolos, especialmente os pergaminhos [mem·brá·nas]". Por isso, alguns comentadores têm sugerido que ele pediu rolos das Escrituras Hebraicas, além de algum tipo de notas ou cartas. Assim, Moffat o traduz "meus livros, e especialmente meus papéis", e The New English Bible (A Nova Bíblia Inglesa) reza "os livros, acima de tudo meus cadernos de notas". No entanto, não se pode determinar se "os pergaminhos" eram em forma de cadernos ou de papéis, ou se eram rolos de pergaminho (La; Kx).

Velino. Os pergaminhos normalmente eram feitos de pele de ovelha, cabra ou bezerro. No terceiro e no quarto século EC, surgiu uma distinção entre a qualidade mais ordinária e a mais fina do material, a mais ordinária continuando a ser chamada de pergaminho, ao passo que a mais fina era chamada de velino. O velino era feito de peles delicadas de bezerro (vitelo) ou de cabritinho, ou então de bezerros e cordeiros natimortos. Era preparado por se primeiro raspar o pelo das peles lavadas, que então eram esticadas numa armação, novamente lavadas e raspadas para remover irregularidades, borrifados com giz e esfregados com pedra-pomes. Isto produzia um material de escrita fino, liso e quase branco, que passou a ser amplamente usado para livros importantes, até a invenção da impressão, para a qual o papel era melhor e mais barato. Importantes manuscritos bíblicos, tais como o Sinaítico e o Vaticano N.º 1209, do quarto século, bem como o manuscrito Alexandrino, do quinto século, são de velino.

PÉRGAMO [Citadela; Acrópole]. Cidade da Mísia na parte NO da Turquia asiática (Ásia Menor) e lugar de uma das sete congregações às quais o apóstolo João dirigiu cartas, conforme registrado em Revelação (Apocalipse). (Re 1:11; 2:12-17) A cidade ficava a cerca de 80 km ao N de Esmirna (a atual Izmir) e a uns 25 km da costa do mar Egeu. Perto do lugar da antiga Pérgamo fica a atual Bergama. Pérgamo era originalmente uma fortaleza num isolado morro íngreme, entre dois rios. Com o tempo, a cidade estendeu-se ao vale abaixo, e o morro tornou-se a acrópole.

História. Não há certeza sobre a origem do povo de Pérgamo, mas alguma evidência indica a Acaia, na Grécia. Já em 420 AEC, a cidade cunhava moedas, e, no século seguinte, Xenofonte fez menção da cidade. Após a morte de Alexandre, o Grande, ela tornou-se parte do território de Lisímaco. Filétero, tenente de Lisímaco, tornou-se governante da cidade e do território circunvizinho, iniciando o reinado dos Atálidas, sob os quais Pérgamo se tornou uma cidade rica e importante. O Rei Átalo I (241-197 AEC) tomou o lado dos romanos contra os macedônios. Seu sucessor Êumenes II reuniu uma enorme biblioteca que rivalizava com a famosa biblioteca de Alexandria. Foi supostamente nesta época que se inventou a escrita em pergaminho (pergamena charta) na cidade. Também, por volta deste período, o reino de Pérgamo controlava a maior parte da Ásia Menor ocidental. Em 133 AEC, Átalo III, no leito de morte, legou Pérgamo a Roma, tornando-se a cidade então a capital da província romana da Ásia. (Veja ÁSIA.) Mesmo quando deixou de ser capital, Pérgamo continuou a ter grande importância como centro administrativo oficial.

A Religião de Pérgamo. A religião pagã tinha grande destaque em Pérgamo. Parece que magos (astrólogos) caldeus fugiram de Babilônia para Pérgamo, estabelecendo ali sua agremiação central. Êumenes II construiu um enorme altar de mármore para o deus Zeus, para celebrar a derrota que infligiu aos gauleses. Descobriram-se os restos do altar e estes mostram que era decorado com um enorme relevo, retratando deuses combatendo gigantes. (FOTO, Vol. 2, p. 945) Os doentes de todas as partes da Ásia afluíam a Pérgamo por causa do seu templo de Asclépio, deus da cura e da medicina.

Um aspecto religioso especialmente digno de nota em Pérgamo era sua adoração dos governantes políticos. A cidade construiu um magnífico templo para a adoração de César Augusto. De modo que foi a primeira cidade a ter um templo dedicado ao culto imperial. Nos dias dos imperadores Trajano e Severo, construíram-se ali mais dois templos assim, sendo que a Encyclopædia Britannica chama Pérgamo de "principal centro do culto imperial no início do império". (1959, Vol. 17, p. 507) Essa adoração do imperador romano, sem dúvida, serviu para unir politicamente todos os diversos países do império sob um deus comum; cada um podia adorar seus deuses locais ou nacionais, mas todos tinham também de adorar o imperador.

"Onde Está o Trono de Satanás." Na carta do apóstolo João à congregação em Pérgamo, ele mencionou que a cidade se encontrava "onde Satanás está morando" e que os cristãos moravam assim "onde está o trono de Satanás". (Re 2:13) "Esta frase tem sido aplicada ao conjunto de cultos pagãos, . . . mas a alusão principal é provavelmente à adoração do imperador. Foi ali que a adoração do imperador divino fora feita a pedra de toque da lealdade cívica sob Domiciano." (New Bible Dictionary [Novo Dicionário da Bíblia], editado por J. Douglas, 1985, p. 912) Visto que no mesmo versículo do "trono de Satanás" se menciona o martírio de Ântipas, é possível que este tenha sido morto por se negar a adorar César.

Um fator adicional relativo à identificação de "onde está o trono de Satanás" talvez fosse a destacada adoração de Zeus, ou Júpiter, principal deus entre todos os deuses e deusas pagãos. A lenda dizia que, de cima do morro em que se construiu Pérgamo, certos deuses presenciaram o nascimento de Zeus, e que o imenso altar mais tarde situado na acrópole é considerado uma das maravilhas da era. Os adoradores de Zeus podiam venerar outros deuses, mas deviam encará-los como subordinados a este. No entanto, os cristãos em Pérgamo foram elogiados por se manterem firmes na sua devoção exclusiva ao verdadeiro Deus, Jeová, e por não negarem a fé, embora morassem 'onde estava o trono de Satanás'.

"Ensino de Balaão." Todavia, havia na congregação uma influência solapadora daqueles que 'se apegavam ao ensino de Balaão'. (Re 2:14) Esta expressão faz lembrar o profeta mesopotâmio Balaão, o qual, depois das tentativas frustradas de amaldiçoar Israel, sugeriu que se usassem mulheres pagãs para atrair homens israelitas à adoração lasciva de deuses falsos. Em consequência da resultante imoralidade sexual e da idolatria morreram 24.000 israelitas. (Núm 25:1-18; 1Co 10:8; veja BALAÃO.) Evidentemente, alguns da congregação de Pérgamo, aqueles que 'se apegavam ao ensino de Balaão', toleravam a fornicação. — Ju 4, 11; 2Pe 2:14, 15.

Alguns da congregação também tinham sido influenciados pelo ensino "da seita de Nicolau", e foram exortados a se arrepender. — Re 2:15, 16.

PERGE. Cidade de destaque na província romana da Panfília. Acredita-se que as ruínas da antiga Perge se encontrem perto da atual aldeia de Murtana, a uns 13 km da costa S da Ásia Menor e a uns 8 km ao O do rio Cestrus (Aksu). Segundo o geógrafo grego Estrabão, parece que este rio antigamente era navegável em direção ao N até Perge. (Geography [Geografia], 14, IV, 2) No entanto, parece que Atália, na costa da Panfília e próxima de Perge, serviu de porto para Perge, e, com o tempo, até mesmo suplantou Perge em importância. — Veja At 14:24-26.

Foi a esta cidade que o apóstolo Paulo e seus companheiros chegaram logo no início da sua primeira viagem missionária. (At 13:13) Perto do fim dela, 'falaram a palavra em Perge', mas não se sabe se alguém da população aceitou o cristianismo. — At 14:24, 25.

PERIDA [Separado]. Antepassado duma família de servos de Salomão, dos quais alguns retornaram a Jerusalém junto com Zorobabel. (Ne 7:6, 7, 57) O nome é grafado Peruda em Esdras 2:55.

PERIZEUS. Uma das tribos que habitavam a terra de Canaã antes de ela ser ocupada pelos israelitas. (Gên 13:3-7; 34:30; Êx 3:8, 17) Não são mencionados na lista das 70 famílias após o Dilúvio, a qual menciona "as famílias dos cananeus". (Gên 10:15-18) Desconhece-se sua linhagem ancestral.

Os perizeus eram uma das tribos cuja terra Deus prometeu à semente de Abraão. (Gên 15:18-21; Ne 9:7, 8) Por ocasião da conquista da Terra da Promessa pelos israelitas, perizeus moravam na região montanhosa de Canaã. (Jos 11:3) Quando a tribo de Judá se mudou para o seu território designado, derrotou os perizeus e os cananeus em Bezeque, aparentemente situada ao O de Jerusalém. (Jz 1:4, 5; Jos 24:11) Depois da repartição da terra de Canaã pelos israelitas, alguns perizeus continuaram no território de Efraim e de Manassés. — Jos 17:15-18.

Os perizeus eram uma das sete nações populosas e fortes que Jeová repetidas vezes mandou Israel exterminar ao entrar na Terra da Promessa. Não se devia fazer nenhum pacto nem aliança matrimonial com eles, nem se lhes devia conceder favor. (Êx 23:23, 24; 33:2; 34:11-13; De 7:1-3; Jos 3:10) No entanto, os israelitas não os exterminaram, e, conforme predito, os perizeus tornaram-se um laço para Israel. — De 7:4; 20:17, 18; Jz 3:5, 6.

No tempo de Salomão, alguns dos perizeus remanescentes foram recrutados para trabalhos forçados. (1Rs 9:20, 21; 2Cr 8:7, 8) Esdras verificou que os judeus que haviam retornado do exílio babilônico haviam feito alianças matrimoniais com eles. Todavia, a conselho dele, despediram essas esposas estrangeiras. (Esd 9:1, 2; 10:11, 12, 44) Os perizeus não são mencionados na história bíblica posterior.

PERNA(S). O termo hebraico traduzido "perna" refere-se aos inteiros membros inferiores do homem ou do animal, usados para sustentar o corpo e para andar. Relacionado com a investidura do sacerdócio, a perna direita do "carneiro de investidura" constituía parte da "oferta movida". (Le 8:22, 25-27) Em certos sacrifícios, a perna direita, traseira, evidentemente a parte superior, seleta, também era dada como porção sagrada ao sacerdote oficiante. (Le 7:32-34; 10:12, 14, 15) A perna dianteira, a "espádua" (literalmente: "braço"), também é mencionada como porção destinada aos sacerdotes, em Números 6:19 e Deuteronômio 18:3.

Insetos com "pernas de salto" (hebr.: kera·ʽá·yim) eram as únicas criaturas pululantes aladas designadas pela Lei como puras para alimento. (Le 11:21) Em outros textos, o mesmo termo hebraico traduzido "pernas" refere-se à parte inferior das pernas dos animais. — Veja mais abaixo.

Jeová disse profeticamente a Babilônia: "Despe tua ampla saia. Descobre tua perna. Cruza os rios." (Is 47:1, 2) Em vez de ser uma rainha mimada que é servida, ela figuradamente tinha de descobrir as pernas até o quadril para atravessar descalça, como cativa, os rios através dos quais seus conquistadores a arrastariam.

As pernas eram também usadas em sentido figurado para representar potência ou ligeireza e poder humanos. Lemos no Salmo 147:10: "Não é na potência do cavalo que [Jeová] se agrada, nem tem prazer nas pernas do homem." Em Provérbios 26:7 mencionam-se pernas claudicantes como símbolo de inutilidade ou incapacidade.

Parece ter sido costume romano dar o golpe de misericórdia aos criminosos condenados à morte na estaca por quebrar-lhes as pernas, a fim de abreviar seu sofrimento. A pedido dos judeus, os soldados quebraram as pernas dos homens pregados em estacas ao lado de Jesus Cristo, mas, verificando que Jesus já estava morto, não lhe quebraram as pernas. Portanto, cumpriu-se a profecia do Salmo 34:20. — Jo 19:31-36; compare isso com Êx 12:46; Núm 9:12.

Como já mencionado, a outra palavra hebraica traduzida "pernas" refere-se à parte entre o joelho e o tornozelo. Em cada ocorrência desta palavra na Bíblia ela se refere a esta região dos membros inferiores dum animal, usualmente com respeito a animais preparados para sacrifícios. (Le 1:9, 13; 4:11, 12; 8:21; 9:14) Em Amós 3:12, o profeta de Jeová usa a figura dum pastor arrancando da boca do leão duas pernas (evidentemente para se exonerar da responsabilidade da perda dum animal da sua manada). O profeta retrata com isso vividamente a destruição que sobreviria a Samaria, em especial aos líderes dela. Poucos escapariam da voracidade leonina dos inimigos de Samaria.

PÉROLA. Gema globular, lisa, relativamente dura e geralmente branca, de leve brilho iridescente, desde a antiguidade usada como adorno. (1Ti 2:9; Re 17:4; 18:11, 12, 15, 16; 21:2, 21) É uma massa endurecida de carbonato de cálcio que se forma dentro de ostras e de certos outros moluscos. Quando uma partícula estranha (tal como um grão de areia ou um pequeno parasito) penetra na região entre a concha e o manto do molusco, estimula a secreção pela criatura duma substância calcária chamada nácar, que endurece tornando-se uma camada nacarada em torno da matéria intrusa, irritante. Formam-se camadas sucessivas desta substância como invólucro em torno da partícula estranha que serve de núcleo. Se o núcleo permanece afastado da concha, por causa das contrações do manto que a reveste por dentro, forma-se em alguns anos uma linda pérola.

Pérolas de qualidade própria para joias são tiradas da ostra perlífera do mar, nativa da maioria das quentes águas tropicais, e notavelmente das na vizinhança de Barein, no golfo Pérsico, e do Mar Vermelho.

Uso Ilustrativo. Às vezes, a Bíblia alude à preciosidade das pérolas de modo ilustrativo. Com respeito ao valor inigualável da verdadeira sabedoria, Jó disse: "Uma bolsa cheia de sabedoria vale mais do que uma de pérolas." (Jó 28:18) No Sermão do Monte, Jesus Cristo aconselhou: "Não deis aos cães o que é santo, nem lanceis as vossas pérolas diante dos porcos, para que nunca as pisem debaixo dos seus pés, e, voltando-se, vos dilacerem." (Mt 7:6) Evidentemente, Jesus queria dizer que, se alguém mostrar que é como um cão ou como um porco, sem ter apreço pelas coisas espirituais, não se deve fazer mais esforço para transmitir-lhe ideias e ensinos espirituais. Tais pessoas corruptas só pisariam nas valiosas coisas espirituais, e ultrajariam ou feririam todo aquele que se esforçasse a transmiti-las a elas. Jesus também ilustrou a preciosidade do Reino dos céus por falar de "uma pérola" de valor tão grande, que um comerciante viajante em busca de pérolas "vendeu prontamente toda as coisas que tinha e a comprou". (Mt 13:45, 46) Jesus mostrou assim que aquele que apreciasse o verdadeiro valor de se ganhar o Reino dos céus estaria disposto a abandonar tudo a fim de alcançá-lo. — Veja Mt 11:12; Lu 13:23-25; Fil 3:8-11.

PERSEGUIÇÃO. Hostilização ou dano deliberadamente infligido a pessoas por motivo de condição social, origem racial, ou fé e crenças religiosas, tendo por objetivo, neste último caso, eliminar tais crenças e impedir sua divulgação entre novos conversos. O verbo hebraico ra·dháf e o grego di·ó·ko, que significam "perseguir", também podem ser vertidos "ir no encalço de; empenhar-se por; correr atrás de". — Êx 15:9; De 1:44; Ro 14:19; Lu 17:23.

A perseguição assume diversas formas. Pode limitar-se a ultrajes verbais, zombarias e injúrias (2Cr 36:16; At 19:9), ou pode incluir pressões econômicas (Re 13:16, 17), dano físico (Mt 27:29, 30; At 5:40), encarceramento (Lu 21:12; At 16:22-24), ódio e até mesmo morte. (Mt 24:9; At 12:2) Pode ser promovida por autoridades religiosas (Mr 3:6; At 24:1, 27), ou pode ser movida por pessoas desinformadas (Gên 21:8, 9; Gál 4:29) e ignorantes (1Ti 1:13), ou por turbas desarrazoadas e fanáticas. (Lu 4:28, 29; At 14:19; 17:5) Frequentemente, porém, tais pessoas são apenas agentes de instigadores mais poderosos e sinistros — invisíveis forças espirituais, iníquas. — Ef 6:11, 12.

Na profecia original de Gênesis 3:14, 15, Jeová Deus predisse inimizade entre "a serpente" e "a mulher", e entre os seus respectivos 'descendentes [literalmente: sementes]'. A Bíblia, como um todo, dá testemunho do cumprimento desta profecia. Jesus identificou claramente a serpente como Satanás, o Diabo, e, ao mesmo tempo, disse aos que o perseguiam que eles eram 'de seu pai, o Diabo', portanto, da sua 'semente'. (Jo 8:37-59) O livro de Revelação (Apocalipse) mostra que essa perseguição continuaria até o tempo de Cristo assumir o poder para reinar e mesmo por algum tempo depois, pois, quando Satanás e seus anjos seriam lançados para a terra, o dragão 'perseguiria a mulher, travando guerra com os remanescentes da sua semente, que obedecem a Deus e dão testemunho de Jesus'. (Re 12:7-17) Um destacado agente usado em toda a história por Satanás é a "fera", figura simbólica explicada no artigo ANIMAIS SIMBÓLICOS (Re 13:1, 7); outro é "Babilônia, a Grande", considerada no artigo que tem este cabeçalho. (Re 17:5, 6) A inimizade satânica para com aqueles que procuram fazer a vontade de Deus em justiça e seu uso dos agentes acima mencionados podem ser detectados em todos os períodos bíblicos, conforme mostra a história que segue.

História. Segundo Jesus, a perseguição religiosa tem uma história que remonta ao tempo de Caim, filho de Adão. (Gên 4:3-8; Mt 23:34, 35) Caim matou seu irmão Abel por ser induzido pelo "iníquo", Satanás, o Diabo. (1Jo 3:12) A questão envolvida na morte de Abel girava em torno da adoração fiel de Jeová. (He 11:4) Jó, homem de Deus cujo nome significa "Objeto de Hostilidade", com o tempo tornou-se alvo de perseguição iníqua instigada por Satanás. A esposa de Jó e três amigos dele foram apenas instrumentos usados por este arqui-inimigo de Deus e do homem, quer o soubessem, quer não. — Jó 1:8–2:9; 19:22, 28.

De tempos em tempos, governantes de Judá e de Israel infligiram muito sofrimento aos representantes especiais de Deus. Por exemplo, o Rei Saul fez de Davi ('homem agradável ao coração de Deus'; At 13:22) o alvo principal de seu ódio. (1Sa 20:31-33; 23:15, 26; Sal 142:6) Durante o governo de Acabe e de Jezabel, muitos profetas de Jeová se viram obrigados a se esconder como fugitivos ou foram mortos. (1Rs 18:13, 14; 19:10) O Rei Manassés derramou sangue inocente "em quantidade muito grande". (2Rs 21:16) O Rei Jeoiaquim matou Urijá, "homem que profetizava em nome de Jeová". (Je 26:20-23) Jeremias sofreu muita perseguição às mãos de oficiais do governo. (Je 15:15; 17:18; 20:11; 37:15, 16; 38:4-6) Por causa da infidelidade do seu povo Israel, Jeová permitiu que outras nações às vezes o perseguissem, mesmo a ponto de levá-lo ao exílio. — De 30:7; La 1:3.

Houve outros casos em que se movia uma perseguição violenta, legalizada por decreto governamental, aos que mantinham sua integridade a Jeová, como quando os três hebreus foram lançados na fornalha ardente e quando Daniel foi lançado aos leões. (Da 3:13-20; 6:4-17) Durante o reinado do rei persa Assuero, irromperam ataques e perseguição contra os judeus em geral, especialmente contra Mordecai, sob a instigação do iníquo Hamã, o agagita. — Est 3:1-12; 5:14.

Outras fontes de perseguição podem ser anteriores companheiros (1Pe 4:4), ou amigos e vizinhos da própria cidade da pessoa. (Je 1:1; 11:21) Jesus disse que parentes consanguíneos bem chegados, membros da família imediata, às vezes se tornariam ferrenhos perseguidores dos que creem nele. — Mt 10:21, 35, 36.

Os principais instigadores humanos da perseguição religiosa, porém, têm sido os promotores da religião falsa. Foi assim no caso de Jeremias. (Je 26:11) Foi também o que se passou com o apóstolo Paulo. (At 13:6-8; 19:23-29) No caso de Jesus, lemos que "os principais sacerdotes e os fariseus ajuntaram o Sinédrio e . . . Caifás, que era sumo sacerdote naquele ano, disse-lhes: 'Vós . . . não deduzis logicamente que é para o vosso proveito que um só homem morra a favor do povo e não que toda a nação seja destruída.' . . . Portanto, daquele dia em diante deliberaram mat[ar Jesus]." (Jo 11:47-53) Antes de Jesus finalmente morrer na estaca de tortura, ele sofreu outras formas de severa perseguição às mãos de homens ímpios — apoiadores dos líderes religiosos, decididos a acabar com ele. — Mt 26:67; 27:1, 2, 26-31, 38-44.

Perseguição de Cristãos. A perseguição movida a servos fiéis de Jeová não acabou com a morte de Jesus. Este grande Profeta predissera isso quando, três dias antes de ser pregado numa estaca, declarou à Jerusalém infiel: "Eu vos estou enviando profetas, e sábios, e instrutores públicos. A alguns deles matareis e pregareis em estacas, e a outros deles açoitareis nas vossas sinagogas e perseguireis de cidade em cidade; para que venha sobre vós todo o sangue justo derramado na terra, desde o sangue do justo Abel até o sangue de Zacarias, filho de Baraquias, a quem assassinastes entre o santuário e o altar." — Mt 23:34, 35.

Jesus também avisara repetidas vezes seus discípulos em particular, dizendo: "Vós sereis pessoas odiadas por todos, por causa do meu nome . . . Quando vos perseguirem numa cidade, fugi para outra." "O escravo não é maior do que o seu amo. Se me perseguiram a mim, perseguirão também a vós." "Os homens vos expulsarão da sinagoga. De fato, vem a hora em que todo aquele que vos matar imaginará que tem prestado um serviço sagrado a Deus." — Mt 10:22, 23; Jo 15:20; 16:2.

Logo depois do Pentecostes de 33 EC, houve prisões, ameaças e espancamentos. (At 4:1-3, 21; 5:17, 18) Daí, Estêvão foi preso e apedrejado até morrer, mas não antes de dar testemunho contra os seus perseguidores, dizendo: "A qual dos profetas foi que os vossos antepassados não perseguiram? Sim, mataram os que faziam anúncio antecipado a respeito da vinda do Justo, cujos traidores e assassinos vós vos tornastes agora." (At 7:52-60; veja também He 11:36, 37.) O assassinato de Estêvão foi seguido por uma grande onda de perseguição, em parte encabeçada por Saulo de Tarso, a qual teve por resultado que a congregação de Jerusalém foi espalhada por toda a parte, mas ampliando assim a atividade da pregação das boas novas. (At 8:1-4; 9:1, 2) Mais tarde, Herodes Agripa I mandou matar à espada Tiago, irmão de João, e provavelmente teria feito o mesmo com Pedro, se o anjo de Jeová não o tivesse milagrosamente liberto na calada da noite. — At 12:1-11.

Saulo, o perseguidor, com a sua conversão ao cristianismo, tornou-se Paulo, o perseguido, conforme ele diz, pela benignidade imerecida de Jeová. Isto ocorreu quando finalmente chegou a reconhecer que estava lutando contra o próprio Senhor. (At 9:4, 5; 22:4, 7, 8; 26:11, 14, 15; 1Co 15:9; Gál 1:13, 23; Fil 3:6) O relato do seu ministério e das suas viagens depois disso conta como Paulo, por sua vez, sofreu muita perseguição às mãos dos inimigos do cristianismo. — At 13:50; 2Co 6:3-5; 11:23-25; Gál 5:11; 2Ti 3:10, 11.

A perseguição movida aos cristãos pelas autoridades do Império Romano, a partir dos dias de Nero, é fato da história secular. (Veja CRISTÃO.) As acusações variavam, mas o objetivo sempre parecia ser o mesmo, a saber, a supressão do cristianismo.

Atitude Correta para com a Perseguição. Quando se guarda os mandamentos de Deus como cristão, é impossível escapar de perseguição, pois "todos os que desejarem viver com devoção piedosa em associação com Cristo Jesus também serão perseguidos". (2Ti 3:12) No entanto, os verdadeiros cristãos podem suportar todo tipo de perseguição iníqua e ainda manter uma atitude feliz, livre de malignidade e de ódio aos perseguidores. Isto se dá porque entendem as questões envolvidas — a fonte da perseguição e por que é permitida. Em vez de ficarem intrigados e preocupados com o que se passa com eles, alegram-se de ter parte com Cristo na prova de lealdade sob perseguição. — 1Pe 4:12-14.

Todavia, o cristão precisa ter certeza de que realmente sofre por uma causa justa. O relato e o modelo bíblicos não permitem a intromissão na política, a trama de conspirações, nem qualquer tipo de atividade criminosa como base para se ser perseguido. Salientando isso de modo especial, o apóstolo exorta: "Mantende a vossa conduta excelente entre as nações, para que, naquilo em que falam de vós como de malfeitores, eles, em resultado das vossas obras excelentes, das quais são testemunhas oculares, glorifiquem a Deus no dia da sua inspeção." (1Pe 2:11, 12) Ele reforçou isso com o conselho sobre a sujeição a autoridades governamentais, a donos de escravos, ao marido, citando o exemplo de Cristo Jesus como o modelo a ser seguido. (1Pe 2:13-25; 3:1-6) O cristão pode sentir-se feliz quando sofre pela causa da justiça (1Pe 3:13, 14), mas nunca deve sofrer "como assassino, ou como ladrão, ou como malfeitor, ou como intrometido nos assuntos dos outros". — 1Pe 4:15, 16.

Os cristãos apreciam também o prêmio reservado para os que perseveram. A respeito deste prêmio, Jesus declarou: "Felizes os que têm sido perseguidos por causa da justiça, porque a eles pertence o reino dos céus." (Mt 5:10) O conhecimento sobre a esperança da ressurreição, junto com o conhecimento sobre Aquele que é a Fonte desta provisão os fortalece. Dá-lhes força para serem leais a Deus, mesmo quando ameaçados de morte às mãos de perseguidores violentos. Em resultado da sua fé no que foi realizado pela morte de Jesus, eles foram emancipados do temor de tal morte violenta. (He 2:14, 15) A atitude mental do cristão é importante, se há de manter a fidelidade sob a pressão da oposição. "Mantende em vós esta atitude mental que houve também em Cristo Jesus, o qual . . . tornou-se obediente até à morte, sim, morte numa estaca de tortura." (Fil 2:5-8) "Pela alegria que se lhe apresentou, [Jesus] aturou uma estaca de tortura, desprezando a vergonha." — He 12:2; veja também 2Co 12:10; 2Te 1:4; 1Pe 2:21-23.

A atitude do cristão para com os próprios perseguidores também é um fator importante. Amar os inimigos e abençoar os que se lhe opõem habilita a pessoa a perseverar. (Mt 5:44; Ro 12:14; 1Co 4:12, 13) O cristão sabe também o seguinte: quem abandonar casa e parentes pela causa do Reino do céu tem a promessa de receber cem vezes mais, mas também "com perseguições". (Mr 10:29, 30) É verdade que nem todos os que ouvem as boas novas do Reino perseverarão no calor da perseguição, e alguns talvez até procurem esquivar-se das questões para evitar dificuldades. (Mt 13:21; Gál 6:12) Mas, é melhor confiar na força de Jeová, orar assim como Davi orou para ser liberto dos perseguidores e saber que Ele não deixará seus servos cambaleando. Poder-se-á então dizer junto com o apóstolo: "Estamos sendo completamente vitoriosos, por intermédio daquele que nos amou." — Sal 7:1; 2Co 4:9, 10; Ro 8:35-37.

PERSEVERANÇA. O verbo grego hy·po·mé·no, que literalmente significa "permanecer ou ficar embaixo", é traduzido 'permanecer' em Lucas 2:43 e Atos 17:14. Passou a ter também o sentido de "manter-se firme; perseverar; permanecer constante", e assim é traduzido 'perseverar'. (Mt 24:13) O substantivo hy·po·mo·né usualmente denota "perseverança" corajosa, constante ou paciente, que não perde a esperança em face de obstáculos, perseguições, provações ou tentações.

Por Que É Necessária. Entre as coisas que os cristãos talvez tenham de enfrentar estão a indiferença por parte de outros, vitupério, difamação, intensa hostilidade, ódio dos membros da família imediata, maus-tratos, encarceramento e até a morte. (Mt 5:10-12; 10:16-22; 24:9, 10, 39; Mr 13:9, 12, 13; Re 13:10) Isto exige perseverança. Sem esta qualidade essencial, simplesmente não se consegue obter a vida eterna. (Ro 2:7; He 10:36; Re 14:12) Isto se dá porque o importante é o final, não quão bem a pessoa talvez se tenha iniciado no rumo do discipulado cristão. Conforme Jesus Cristo o expressou: "Quem tiver perseverado até o fim é o que será salvo." (Mt 24:13) "Pela perseverança da vossa parte adquirireis as vossas almas." — Lu 21:19.

Aqueles que prontamente aceitam "a palavra de Deus", mas apenas superficialmente, não têm perseverança. Logo desistem diante da tribulação ou perseguição, perdendo a aprovação e bênção de Deus. Mas aqueles que desenvolvem profundo apreço pela "palavra de Deus" perseveram com constância. Eles "dão fruto com perseverança", prosseguindo fielmente em proclamar a mensagem de Deus, apesar de dificuldades, sofrimentos e desânimo. — Lu 8:11, 13, 15.

Como É Mantida. Observar o excelente exemplo dado pelos servos de Deus — os profetas pré-cristãos, Jó, os apóstolos Paulo e João, e muitos outros — e notar o resultado do seu proceder fiel, pode ser de grande estímulo para se manter a perseverança quando se padece sofrimentos. (2Co 6:3-10; 12:12; 2Te 1:4; 2Ti 3:10-12; Tg 5:10, 11; Re 1:9) Deve-se manter especialmente em destaque a imaculada perseverança de Jesus Cristo. — He 12:2, 3; 1Pe 2:19-24.

Também é importante nunca perder de vista a esperança cristã, a vida eterna num estado sem pecado. Nem mesmo a morte às mãos de perseguidores pode anular esta esperança. (Ro 5:4, 5; 1Te 1:3; Re 2:10) Os sofrimentos da época presente ficam insignificantes em comparação com o cumprimento desta grandiosa esperança. (Ro 8:18-25) Com a visão da eternidade, qualquer sofrimento, embora na ocasião intenso, é 'momentâneo e leve'. (2Co 4:16-18) Lembrar-se da natureza temporária das provações e apegar-se à esperança cristã pode impedir que se entregue ao desespero e se torne infiel a Jeová Deus.

A perseverança cristã não depende da força que se tem. É o Altíssimo, por meio do seu espírito e do consolo das Escrituras, que sustém e fortalece seus servos. Ele "provê perseverança" aos que confiam plenamente nele, e os cristãos, assim, oram corretamente por sua ajuda, inclusive pela sabedoria necessária para enfrentar determinada provação. (Ro 15:4, 5; Tg 1:5) Jeová nunca permitirá que alguém seja submetido a uma provação que lhe é impossível aguentar. Quando se recorre a Ele em busca de ajuda, não perdendo a fé, mas confiando plenamente em Jeová, o Todo-Poderoso provê a saída, para que se possa perseverar. — 1Co 10:13; 2Co 4:9.

Não há limite da força a que os cristãos podem recorrer quando padecem sofrimentos. A oração do apóstolo Paulo a favor dos colossenses foi no sentido de que fossem 'fortalecidos com todo o poder, ao alcance do glorioso poderio de Deus, de modo a perseverarem plenamente e serem longânimes com alegria'. (Col 1:11) Um exemplo deste "glorioso poderio" em operação é a ressurreição de Jesus Cristo dentre os mortos e sua exaltação à mão direita do Pai. — Ef 1:19-21.

Jeová Deus e seu Filho querem que todos sejam bem-sucedidos. Isto se evidencia no encorajamento a respeito da perseverança dado por Jesus Cristo aos membros das congregações cristãs em Éfeso, Esmirna, Pérgamo, Tiatira, Sardes, Filadélfia e Laodiceia. — Re 2:1-3, 8-10, 12, 13, 18, 19; 3:4, 5, 7, 10, 11, 14, 19-21.

Conceito Correto sobre Provações. Sabendo que o futuro eterno da pessoa depende da perseverança, e que ela pode confiar em receber ajuda de cima, os cristãos não devem temer provações e tribulações, ressentindo-se delas ou entregando-se a queixas, ter pena de si mesmos ou ficar amargurados. O apóstolo Paulo admoestou: "Exultemos enquanto em tribulações, visto que sabemos que tribulação produz perseverança." (Ro 5:3) Provações suportadas com paciência e firmeza, com a ajuda divina, revelam que o cristão tem a necessária qualidade da perseverança — algo que não se sabia realmente e por experiência antes de começar a tribulação.

Deve-se permitir que a perseverança "tenha a sua obra completa" por se deixar a provação seguir seu pleno curso, sem qualquer tentativa de usar meios antibíblicos para acabar com ela depressa. Assim, a fé será provada e refinada, e se revelará seu poder sustentador. Talvez se exponham pontos de fraqueza, dando ao cristão condições de ver defeitos e fazer as necessárias melhoras. O efeito modelador das provações suportadas fielmente pode tornar a pessoa mais paciente, solidária, compassiva, bondosa e amorosa ao lidar com seus semelhantes. Assim, por permitir que a perseverança "tenha a sua obra completa", 'não faltará à pessoa nada' do que Deus procura nos seus servos aprovados. — Tg 1:2-4.

PÉRSIA, PERSAS. Terra e povo regularmente mencionados em associação com os medos, tanto na Bíblia como na história secular. Os medos e os persas evidentemente eram povos aparentados das antigas tribos arianas (indo-iranianas), e isto tornaria os persas descendentes de Jafé, talvez através de Madai, ancestral comum dos medos. (Gên 10:2) Numa inscrição, Dario, o Grande, chama a si mesmo de "persa, filho dum persa, ariano, de ascendência ariana". — History of the Persian Empire (História do Império Persa), de A. Olmstead, 1948, p. 123.

Inscrições assírias referentes ao tempo de Salmaneser III (evidentemente contemporâneo de Jeú, de Israel), mencionam uma invasão da Média e de se receber tributo de reis de "Parsua", uma região, pelo visto, situada ao O do lago Urmia e na fronteira da Assíria. Muitos peritos acham que "Parsua" seja o nome então aplicado à terra dos persas, embora outros a associem com os partos. De qualquer modo, em inscrições posteriores, os persas são situados bem mais ao S, estabelecidos em "Parsa", ao SE de Elão, no que agora é a província de Fars, no atual Irã. Anxã, distrito ou cidade na fronteira de Elão, e outrora parte do seu domínio, estava também ocupado pelos persas.

De modo que, nos primórdios da sua história, os persas parecem ter ocupado apenas a parte sudoeste do extenso planalto iraniano, fazendo fronteira com o Elão e com a Média no NO, com a Pártia no N, com a Carmânia no L, e com o golfo Pérsico no S e no SO. Com exceção do litoral quente e úmido do golfo Pérsico, aquela terra consistia principalmente na parte meridional da escarpada cordilheira Zagros, interrompida por vales extensos e bastante férteis, com encostas bem arborizadas. O clima nos vales é temperado, mas nas regiões mais altas do planalto, as terras áridas e ventosas são castigadas por um frio intenso nos meses do inverno. Os persas, iguais aos medos, parecem ter-se ocupado muito na pecuária, bem como na necessária agricultura, e o rei persa Dario, o Grande, orgulhosamente descreveu sua terra natal como "bela e rica em cavalos e em homens". — Encyclopædia Britannica (Enciclopédia Britânica), 1959, Vol. 17, p. 603.

Os persas, que originalmente levavam uma vida um tanto austera, muitas vezes nômade, manifestavam grande amor ao luxo e a ambientes luxuosos durante o período do império. (Veja Est 1:3-7; também a roupa dada a Mordecai, 8:15.) Esculturas em Persépolis representam os persas trajados de vestes amplas, que chegavam até os tornozelos, de cintura cingida e com sapatos com cadarços. Os medos, em contraste, são retratados usando uma túnica de mangas compridas, que ia até os joelhos. (FOTO, Vol. 2, p. 328) Parece que tanto os persas como os medos usavam calça; soldados persas são mostrados usando calça e túnica com mangas sobre a armadura de cota de malha de aço. Eram cavaleiros peritos, e a cavalaria desempenhava um papel importante na sua estratégia de guerra.

O idioma persa é classificado na família indo-europeia e evidencia ser aparentado com o sânscrito indiano. Em certa época da sua história, os persas começaram a fazer uso da escrita cuneiforme, todavia, com um número bem reduzido de sinais, em comparação com as centenas de sinais usados na escrita cuneiforme babilônica e assíria. Ao passo que, do governo do Império Persa, se encontraram algumas inscrições no antigo persa, com traduções em acadiano e numa língua geralmente denominada de "elamita" ou "susiana", documentos oficiais usados na administração dos territórios imperiais foram registrados primariamente em aramaico, como língua internacional. — Esd 4:7.

Desenvolvimento do Império Medo-Persa. (MAPA, Vol. 2, p. 327) Os persas, iguais aos medos, parecem ter sido governados por diversas famílias nobres. Uma destas famílias produziu a dinastia aquemênida de reis, linhagem real da qual descendeu o fundador do Império Persa, Ciro, o Grande. Ciro, que segundo Heródoto e Xenofonte teve pai persa e mãe média, uniu os persas sob a sua liderança. (Heródoto, I, 107, 108; Ciropedia; ambos de Clássicos Jackson, Vol. XXIII, e Vol. I, Livro I, p. 7.) Até então, os medos haviam dominado os persas, mas Ciro obteve uma rápida vitória sobre o rei medo Astíages e capturou Ecbátana, a capital dele Touros com cabeça humana, perto da entrada da cidade de Persépolis.

(550 AEC). (Veja Da 8:3, 20.) O Império Medo passou assim a ficar sob o controle dos persas.

Embora os medos continuassem a ser subservientes aos persas durante o restante da dinastia aquemênida, não pode haver dúvida sobre a natureza dupla do império resultante. Neste respeito, diz o livro History of the Persian Empire (p. 37): "O estreito relacionamento entre os persas e os medos nunca foi esquecido. A saqueada Ecbátana continuou a ser uma residência real favorita. Os medos recebiam honras iguais aos persas; ocupavam altos cargos e eram escolhidos para chefiar exércitos persas. Os estrangeiros habitualmente mencionavam juntos os medos e os persas; quando usavam um termo só, este era 'o medo'."

Debaixo de Ciro, o Império Medo-Persa expandiu-se mais para o O, chegando ao mar Egeu em resultado da vitória persa sobre o Rei Creso, da Lídia, e a subjugação de certas cidades litorâneas gregas. Sua maior conquista, porém, ocorreu em 539 AEC, quando Ciro, à testa duma força conjunta de medos, persas e elamitas, tomou a poderosa Babilônia, em cumprimento de profecias bíblicas. (Is 21:2, 9; 44:26–45:7; Da 5:28) Com a queda de Babilônia, terminou um longo período de supremacia semítica, então suplantada pela primeira potência mundial dominante de ascendência ariana (jafética). Isto colocou também a terra de Judá (bem como a Síria e a Fenícia) dentro do domínio medo-persa. Por decreto de Ciro, em 537 AEC, os judeus exilados tiveram permissão para retornar à sua pátria, que ficara desolada por exatamente 70 anos. — 2Cr 36:20-23; veja CIRO.

Capitais persas. Em harmonia com a natureza dupla do império, o medo chamado Dario tornou-se governante do derrotado reino caldeu, embora provavelmente não de forma independente da suserania de Ciro. (Da 5:31; 9:1; veja DARIO N.º 1.) Babilônia continuou como cidade real do Império Medo-Persa, bem como centro religioso e comercial. Todavia, os tórridos verões, em geral, parecem ter sido mais quentes do que os imperadores persas queriam suportar, de modo que Babilônia raras vezes lhes serviu para mais do que apenas como residência de inverno. Existe evidência arqueológica de que, depois da conquista de Babilônia, Ciro logo voltou a Ecbátana (a atual Hamadã), situada a mais de 1.900 m acima do nível do mar, ao sopé do monte Alvand, onde o inverno de fortes nevadas e frio cortante é contrabalançado pelo verão agradável. Foi em Ecbátana que se encontrou o memorando de Ciro a respeito da reconstrução do templo de Jerusalém, alguns anos depois de ter sido emitido. (Esd 6:2-5) A anterior capital persa fora Pasárgada, a uns 650 km ao SE de Ecbátana, mas aproximadamente na mesma altitude. Perto de Pasárgada, os imperadores persas Dario, Xerxes e Artaxerxes Longímano construíram mais tarde a cidade real de Persépolis, dotando-a com uma vasta rede de túneis subterrâneos, evidentemente para supri-la de água fresca. Outra capital era Susa (Susã), situada perto do rio Choaspes (Carque), no antigo Elão, ocupando uma estratégica localização central entre Babilônia, Ecbátana e Persépolis. Dario, o Grande, construiu ali um magnífico palácio, que geralmente servia de residência de inverno, pois, como se dava com Babilônia, o calor do verão em Susa era extremo. No entanto, com o passar do tempo, Susa tornou-se cada vez mais o verdadeiro centro administrativo do império. — Veja ECBÁTANA; SUSÃ.

Religião e Lei. Os governantes persas, embora capazes de tanta crueldade quanto os reis semitas da Assíria e de Babilônia, pelo menos inicialmente parecem ter-se empenhado em mostrar certo grau de justeza e de legalidade nos seus tratos com os povos conquistados. Sua religião parece ter contido alguns conceitos de ética. Depois do seu principal deus Auramazda (Ahura Mazda), uma deidade principal era Mitra, que ficou conhecido não só como deus da guerra, mas também como o deus de contratos, cujos olhos e ouvidos estavam sempre atentos para detectar qualquer violador de acordos. (Veja DEUSES E DEUSAS.) Heródoto, historiador grego (I, 136, 138), escreveu a respeito dos persas: "Eles começam a instruir [os meninos] aos cinco anos de idade, e daí até os vinte só lhes ensinam três coisas que consideram as mais importantes: montar a cavalo, atirar com o arco e dizer a verdade. . . . Nada lhes parece mais vergonhoso do que a mentira." Embora a história dos governantes persas mostre que não estavam acima de fingimento e intriga, ainda assim a aderência básica a algum credo tribal de 'manter a palavra' talvez seja refletida na sua insistência na inviolabilidade da "lei dos medos e dos persas". (Da 6:8, 15; Est 1:19; 8:8) Assim, quando foi encontrado o decreto de Ciro, uns 18 anos depois da data da sua emissão, o Rei Dario reconheceu a legalidade da posição dos judeus com respeito à construção do templo e deu ordens para que se lhes desse plena cooperação. — Esd 6:1-12.

Uma considerável capacidade administrativa se evidencia na organização imperial persa. Além do conselho privativo, ou da junta de conselheiros, do próprio rei, composto de "sete príncipes da Pérsia e da Média" (Est 1:14; Esd 7:14), havia sátrapas designados para as principais regiões, ou países, tais como a Média, o Elão, a Pártia, Babilônia, a Assíria, a Arábia, a Armênia, a Capadócia, a Lídia, a Jônia, e, com a expansão do império, o Egito, a Etiópia e a Líbia. Concedia-se a esses sátrapas certa medida de autonomia no governo da satrapia, inclusive a administração de assuntos judiciais e financeiros dentro do seu território. (Veja SÁTRAPA.) Dentro da satrapia, parece ter havido governadores subordinados sobre distritos jurisdicionais (ascendendo a 127 nos dias do Rei Assuero), e dentro dos distritos jurisdicionais havia príncipes do respectivo povo que compunha a população do distrito. (Esd 8:36; Est 3:12; 8:9) Provavelmente, para superar a desvantagem de a capital imperial se encontrar de certo modo num canto do extenso domínio, foi desenvolvido um sistema de comunicação rápida por meio dum serviço real de correios, usando mensageiros em cavalos de posta, ligando assim o trono com todos os distritos jurisdicionais. (Est 8:10, 14) Mantinham-se estradas reais; uma ia de Susã até Sardes, na Ásia Menor.

Desde a Morte de Ciro Até a Morte de Dario. O reinado de Ciro, o Grande, terminou em 530 AEC, quando este faleceu durante uma campanha militar. Seu filho Cambises o sucedeu no trono e teve êxito em conquistar o Egito. Embora na Bíblia não seja chamado de Cambises, ele evidentemente é o "Assuero" a quem os opositores da construção do templo mandaram acusações falsas contra os judeus, conforme declarado em Esdras 4:6.

As circunstâncias que cercam o fim do governo de Cambises são confusas. Um relato, apresentado por Dario, o Grande, na sua Inscrição de Behistun, e narrado por Heródoto e por outros, com algumas variantes, diz que Cambises mandou secretamente matar seu irmão Bardiia (chamado Esmérdis por Heródoto). Daí, durante a ausência de Cambises no Egito, um mago chamado Gaumata (também chamado Esmérdis por Heródoto), fazendo-se passar por Bardiia (Esmérdis), usurpou o trono e conseguiu ser reconhecido como rei. Enquanto retornava do Egito, Cambises faleceu, e o usurpador consolidou-se assim no trono. (Heródoto, III, 61-67) A outra versão, preferida por alguns historiadores, é que Bardiia não fora morto e que ele, não algum impostor, usurpou o trono durante a ausência de Cambises.

Seja qual for o caso, o reinado de Cambises terminou em 522 AEC, e o governo que se seguiu durou sete meses, acabando também em 522 AEC com o assassinato do usurpador (quer Bardiia quer Gaumata, o falso Esmérdis). Todavia, durante este breve governo, parece que uma segunda acusação contra os judeus foi enviada ao trono persa, sendo o rei então chamado na Bíblia de "Artaxerxes" (talvez nome ou título régio), e esta vez as acusações foram bem-sucedidas em produzir uma proibição real do prosseguimento da construção do templo. (Esd 4:7-23) A obra do templo ficou então parada "até o segundo ano do reinado de Dario, rei da Pérsia". — Esd 4:24.

Dario I (chamado Dario Histaspes ou Dario, o Grande) evidentemente arquitetou ou instigou o assassinato daquele que ocupava o trono persa e tomou o trono para si mesmo. Durante o seu governo, a construção do templo em Jerusalém recomeçou com aprovação real, e o templo foi completado durante o seu sexto ano de governo (no começo de 515 AEC). (Esd 6:1-15) O reinado de Dario foi de expansão imperial. Ele estendeu o domínio persa para o L até a Índia, e para o O até a Trácia e a Macedônia.

Pelo menos até esta época, os governantes persas haviam cumprido os simbolismos proféticos de Daniel 7:5 e 8:4, nos quais, sob os símbolos dum urso e também dum carneiro, o Império Medo-Persa é representado como tomando territórios em três direções principais: ao N, ao O e ao S. No entanto, numa campanha contra a Grécia, as forças de Dario sofreram uma derrota em Maratona, em 490 AEC. Dario faleceu em 486 AEC. — Veja DARIO N.º 2.

Os Reinados de Xerxes e de Artaxerxes. Xerxes, filho de Dario, evidentemente é o rei chamado Assuero no livro de Ester. Suas ações também se enquadram na descrição do quarto rei persa, que 'incitaria tudo contra o reino da Grécia'. (Da 11:2) No empenho de retaliar a derrota persa em Maratona, Xerxes lançou forças maciças contra o território continental da Grécia, em 480 AEC. Depois duma dispendiosa vitória nas Termópilas e da destruição de Atenas, suas forças sofreram uma derrota em Salamina e mais tarde em Plateia, o que fez Xerxes retornar à Pérsia.

O reinado de Xerxes caracterizou-se por certas reformas administrativas e pelo término de grande parte das construções iniciadas por seu pai em Persépolis. (Veja Est 10:1, 2.) As histórias gregas sobre o fim do reinado de Xerxes giram em torno de dificuldades maritais, desordens no harém e uma suposta dominação de Xerxes por certos cortesãos. Estes relatos talvez reflitam, embora de modo bem confuso e distorcido, alguns dos fatos básicos do livro de Ester, inclusive a deposição da Rainha Vasti e sua substituição por Ester, bem como a acessão de Mordecai a uma posição de grande autoridade no domínio. (Est 2:17; 10:3) Segundo relatos seculares, Xerxes foi assassinado por um dos seus cortesãos.

Artaxerxes Longímano, sucessor de Xerxes, notabilizou-se por sua autorização do retorno de Esdras a Jerusalém com uma grande contribuição para a manutenção do templo ali. Isto aconteceu no sétimo ano de Artaxerxes (468 AEC). (Esd 7:1-26; 8:24-36) Durante o 20.º ano de Artaxerxes (455 AEC), Neemias recebeu permissão de ir a Jerusalém para reconstruir a cidade. (Ne 1:3; 2:1, 5-8) Neemias mais tarde retornou por algum tempo à corte de Artaxerxes, no 32.º ano deste rei (443 AEC). — Ne 13:6.

Em escritos históricos, há algum desacordo com respeito aos reinados de Xerxes e de Artaxerxes. Obras de referência colocam o ano de acessão de Artaxerxes em 465 AEC. Certos documentos dão ao seu pai, Xerxes, um reinado que continuou até o 21.º ano. O governo de Xerxes costuma ser contado a partir de 486 AEC, quando faleceu Dario, seu pai. O primeiro ano do seu próprio reinado é considerado como tendo começado em 485 AEC, e seu 21.º ano e o ano de acessão de Artaxerxes frequentemente são mencionados como tendo sido 465 AEC. Quanto a Artaxerxes, os peritos usualmente dizem que seu último ano de governo começou em 424 AEC. Alguns documentos apresentam este ano como o ano 41 do reinado de Artaxerxes. Se isto fosse correto, significaria que seu ano de acessão foi 465 AEC e que seu primeiro ano de reinado começou em 464 AEC.

No entanto, há forte evidência para se calcular o último ano de Xerxes e o ano de acessão de Artaxerxes como 475 AEC. Esta evidência é tripla: de fontes gregas, de fontes persas e de fontes babilônicas.

Evidência de fontes gregas. Um evento na história grega pode ajudar-nos a determinar quando

Artaxerxes começou a governar. Temístocles, estadista e herói militar grego, caiu no desfavor dos seus patrícios e fugiu para a Pérsia em busca de segurança. Segundo o historiador grego Tucídides (I, CXXXVII, 3), que obteve fama pela sua exatidão, naquele tempo Temístocles "enviou uma carta ao Rei Artaxerxes, filho de Xerxes, que há pouco ascendera ao trono". Plutarch's Lives (Vidas de Plutarco; Temístocles, XXVII, 1) fornece a informação de que "Tucídides e Caronte, de Lâmpsaco, relatam que Xerxes já morrera, e que foi seu filho Artaxerxes com quem Temístocles teve sua entrevista". Caronte era súdito persa que viveu durante a mudança de governo de Xerxes para Artaxerxes. À base do testemunho de Tucídides e de Caronte de Lâmpsaco, podemos ver que, quando Temístocles chegou à Pérsia, Artaxerxes há pouco começara a governar.

Podemos fixar o tempo em que Artaxerxes começou a governar por calcular para trás desde o tempo em que Temístocles faleceu. Nem todas as obras de referência dão a mesma data para a sua morte. No entanto, o historiador Diodoro da Sicília (Diodorus of Sicily, XI, 54, 1; XI, 58, 3) menciona a morte dele num relato das coisas que aconteceram "quando Praxiergus era arconte em Atenas". Praxiergus era arconte de Atenas em 471/470 AEC. (Greek and Roman Chronology [Cronologia Grega e Romana], de Alan E. Samuel, Munique, 1972, p. 206) Segundo Tucídides, a chegada de Temístocles à Pérsia foi seguida por um ano de estudo de língua em preparação para uma audiência com Artaxerxes. Depois, o rei concedeu-lhe com muitas honras fixar-se na Pérsia. Se Temístocles morreu em 471/470 AEC, sua fixação na Pérsia não deve ter ocorrido depois de 472 AEC, e sua chegada, um ano antes, em 473 AEC. Naquela época, Artaxerxes "há pouco ascendera ao trono".

Acerca do tempo do falecimento de Xerxes e da acessão de Artaxerxes ao trono, M. de Koutorga escreveu: "Vimos que, segundo a cronologia de Tucídides, Xerxes morreu perto do fim do ano 475 AEC, e que, segundo o mesmo historiador, Temístocles chegou à Ásia Menor pouco depois de Artaxerxes Longímano ascender ao trono." — Mémoires présentés par divers savants à l'Académie des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres de l'Institut Impérial de France (Memórias apresentadas por diversos eruditos à Academia de Inscrições e Belas-Letras do Instituto Imperial da França), primeira série, Vol. VI, segunda parte, Paris 1864, p. 147.

Em apoio adicional disso, E. Levesque observou o seguinte: "Portanto, é necessário, segundo a Alexandrian Chronicle, situar a morte de Xerxes em 475 AEC, depois de onze anos de reinado. O historiador Justino, III, 1, confirma esta crônica e as asserções de Tucídides. Segundo ele, por ocasião do assassinato de Xerxes, Artaxerxes, seu filho, era apenas criança, puer [menino], o que é verdade se Xerxes faleceu em 475. Artaxerxes tinha então 16 anos, ao passo que em 465 ele teria vinte e seis anos, o que não justificaria mais a expressão de Justino. Segundo esta cronologia, visto que Artaxerxes começou a reinar em 475, o 20.º ano do seu reinado mostra ser 455 e não 445, como se diz com bastante frequência." — Revue apologétique (Revista apologética), Paris, Vol. 68, 1939, p. 94.

Se Dario morreu em 486 AEC e Xerxes faleceu em 475 AEC, como se pode explicar que alguns documentos antigos atribuam a Xerxes um reinado de 21 anos? É bem conhecido que um rei e seu filho talvez governassem juntos num reinado duplo, ou numa corregência. Se este foi o caso com Dario e Xerxes, os historiadores poderiam contar os anos do reinado de Xerxes quer a partir do começo duma corregência com seu pai, quer a partir da morte de seu pai. Se Xerxes governou 10 anos junto com seu pai e 11 anos sozinho, algumas fontes poderiam atribuir a ele 21 anos de governo, ao passo que outras talvez lhe concedessem 11 anos.

Há sólida evidência da corregência de Xerxes com seu pai Dario. O historiador grego Heródoto (VII, 3) diz: "Dario achou-as [as razões do pedido do reinado por Xerxes] justas e nomeou-o seu sucessor. Acho, porém, que Xerxes teria reinado de qualquer maneira." Isto indica que Xerxes foi feito rei durante o reinado do seu pai Dario.

Evidência de fontes persas. A corregência de Xerxes com Dario pode ser vista especialmente em baixos-relevos persas descobertos. Em Persépolis encontraram-se diversos baixos-relevos que representam Xerxes em pé atrás do trono de seu pai, trajado de roupa idêntica à do pai e com a cabeça no mesmo nível. Isto é incomum, visto que costumeiramente a cabeça do rei ficaria num nível mais elevado do que todas as outras. Em A New Inscription of Xerxes From Persepolis (Uma Nova Inscrição de Xerxes, de Persépolis; de Ernst E. Herzfeld, 1932) nota-se que tanto inscrições como edifícios encontrados em Persépolis dão a entender uma corregência de Xerxes com seu pai Dario. Herzfeld escreveu na página 8 da sua obra: "O teor peculiar das inscrições de Xerxes em Persépolis, a maioria das quais não faz distinção entre a sua própria atividade e a de seu pai, bem como a relação igualmente peculiar dos seus edifícios, impossíveis de alocar quer a Dario, quer a Xerxes individualmente, têm sempre dado a entender um tipo de corregência de Xerxes. Além disso, duas esculturas em Persépolis ilustram esta relação." Com respeito a uma destas esculturas, Herzfeld salientou: "Dario é representado usando todos os atributos régios, entronizado numa elevada plataforma-leito, sustentada por representantes das várias nações do seu império. Atrás dele, no relevo, quer dizer, realmente à sua direita, está de pé Xerxes com os mesmos atributos régios, com a mão esquerda pousada no alto encosto do trono. Este é um gesto que claramente indica mais do que mera sucessão; significa corregência."

Quanto à data dos relevos que retratam Dario e Xerxes deste modo, Ann Farkas declara, em Achaemenid Sculpture (Escultura Aquemênida; Istambul, 1974, p. 53), que "os relevos talvez tenham sido instalados na Tesouraria em certa ocasião durante a construção do primeiro anexo, 494/493–492/491 AEC; este certamente teria sido o tempo mais conveniente para transportar essas enormes peças de pedra. Mas, qualquer que tenha sido a data em que foram levadas para a Tesouraria, as esculturas talvez tenham sido feitas nos anos 490".

Evidência de fontes babilônicas. Evidência de que Xerxes começou uma corregência com seu pai durante os anos 490 AEC foi encontrada em Babilônia. Escavações feitas ali descobriram um palácio de Xerxes completado em 496 AEC. Neste respeito, A. T. Olmstead escreveu em History of the Persian Empire (p. 215): "Por volta de 23 de outubro de 498, ficamos sabendo que a casa do filho do rei [isto é, do filho de Dario, Xerxes] estava sendo construída em Babilônia; sem dúvida, esta é o palácio de Dario na parte central que já descrevemos. Dois anos mais tarde [em 496 AEC], num documento comercial da vizinha Borsipa, temos uma referência ao 'novo palácio' já terminado."

Duas incomuns tabuinhas de argila talvez forneçam testemunho adicional da corregência de Xerxes com Dario. Uma é um texto comercial sobre a contratação dum prédio no ano de acessão de Xerxes. A tabuinha tem a data do primeiro mês do ano, nisã. (A Catalogue of the Late Babylonian Tablets in the Bodleian Library, Oxford (Catálogo das Tabuinhas Babilônicas Posteriores na Biblioteca Bodleiana, Oxford; de R. Campbell Thompson, Londres, 1927, p. 13, tabuinha chamada A. 124.) Outra tabuinha leva a data do "mês de ab(?), ano de acessão de Xerxes". O que é notável é que esta última tabuinha não atribui a Xerxes o título de "rei de Babilônia, rei de terras", costumeiro naquela época. — Neubabylonische Rechts- und Verwaltungsurkunden übersetzt und erläutert (Documentos Jurídicos e Administrativos traduzidos e esclarecidos), de M. San Nicolò e A. Ungnad, Leipzig, 1934, Vol. I, parte 4, p. 544, tabuinha N.º 634, chamada VAT 4397.

Estas duas tabuinhas são intrigantes. Ordinariamente, o ano de acessão dum rei começa após a morte do seu predecessor. No entanto, há evidência de que o predecessor de Xerxes (Dario) viveu até o sétimo mês do seu último ano, ao passo que estes dois documentos do ano de acessão de Xerxes levam datas anteriores ao sétimo mês (uma menciona o primeiro mês, a outra, o quinto). Portanto, estes documentos não se referem a um período de acessão de Xerxes após a morte de seu pai, mas indicam um ano de acessão durante a sua corregência com Dario. Se este ano de acessão foi 496 AEC, quando o palácio para Xerxes, em Babilônia, já fora completado, seu primeiro ano como corregente começaria no próximo nisã, em 495 AEC, e seu 21.º e último ano começaria em 475 AEC. Neste caso, o reinado de Xerxes incluiu 10 anos de governo junto com Dario (de 496 a 486 AEC) e 11 anos de reinado sozinho (de 486 a 475 AEC).

Por outro lado, os historiadores são unânimes em dizer que o primeiro ano de reinado de Dario II começou na primavera (setentrional) de 423 AEC. Uma tabuinha babilônica indica que Dario II, no seu ano de acessão, já ocupava o trono desde o 4.º dia do 11.º mês, isto é, 13 de fevereiro de 423 AEC. (Babylonian Chronology, 626 B.C.–A.D. 75 [Cronologia Babilônica, 626 A.C.–A.D. 75]; de R. Parker e W. H. Dubberstein, 1971, p. 18) Todavia, duas tabuinhas mostram que Artaxerxes continuou a governar depois do 4.º dia do 11.º mês do seu 41.º ano. Uma leva a data do 17.º dia do 11.º mês do seu 41.º ano. (P. 18) A outra leva a data do 12.º mês do seu 41.º ano. (Old Testament and Semitic Studies [Estudos do Velho Testamento e Semíticos], editado por Harper, Brown e Moore, 1908, Vol. 1, p. 304; tabuinha N.º 12, chamada CBM 5505.) Portanto, Artaxerxes não foi sucedido no seu 41.º ano de reinado, mas governou durante todo este ano. Isto indica que Artaxerxes deve ter governado por mais de 41 anos e que seu primeiro ano de reinado, portanto, não deve ser contado como começando em 464 AEC.

Evidência de que Artaxerxes Longímano governou além do seu 41.º ano é encontrada num documento comercial de Borsipa, com data do 50.º ano de Artaxerxes. (Catalogue of the Babylonian Tablets in the British Museum [Catálogo das Tabuinhas Babilônicas no Museu Britânico], Vol. VII: Tabuinhas de Sipar 2, de E. Leichty e A. K. Grayson, 1987, p. 153; tabuinha chamada B. M. 65494) Uma das tabuinhas que ligam o fim do reinado de Artaxerxes ao começo do reinado de Dario II tem a seguinte data: "51.º ano, ano de acessão, 12.º mês, dia 20, Dario, rei de terras." (The Babylonian Expedition of the University of Pennsylvania, Series A: Cuneiform Texts [A Expedição Babilônica da Universidade de Pensilvânia, Série A: Textos Cuneiformes], Vol. VIII, Parte I, de Albert T. Clay, 1908; pp. 34, 83, e Chapa 57, Tabuinha N.º 127, chamada CBM 12803) Visto que o primeiro ano de reinado de Dario II foi 423 AEC, isto significa que o 51.º ano de Artaxerxes foi 424 AEC e seu primeiro ano de reinado foi 474 AEC.

Portanto, os testemunhos de fontes gregas, persas e babilônicas concordam que o ano de acessão de Artaxerxes foi 475 AEC e que seu primeiro ano de reinado foi 474 AEC. Isto situa o 20.º ano de Artaxerxes, em que começaram as 70 semanas de Daniel 9:24, em 455 AEC. Se à base de Daniel 9:25 contarmos 69 semanas de anos (483 anos) a partir de 455 AEC, chegamos ao significativo ano da chegada do Messias, o Líder.

A contagem de 455 AEC até 1 EC perfaz 455 anos inteiros. Acrescentando os remanescentes 28 anos (para perfazer 483 anos) nos leva a 29 EC, o ano exato em que Jesus de Nazaré foi batizado em água, foi ungido com espírito santo e começou o seu ministério público como o Messias, ou Cristo. — Lu 3:1, 2, 21, 22.

Até a Queda e a Divisão do Império. Sobre os sucessores de Artaxerxes Longímano no trono da Pérsia, Diodoro da Sicília nos dá a seguinte informação: "Na Ásia, o Rei Xerxes morreu depois de um reinado de um ano, ou, conforme alguns registram, dois meses; e seu irmão Sogdiano lhe sucedeu no trono e governou por sete meses. Ele foi morto por Dario, que reinou por dezenove anos." (Diodorus of Sicily, XII, 71, 1) O nome original deste Dario (conhecido como Dario II) era Oco, mas ele adotou o nome Dario ao se tornar rei. Ele parece ser o "Dario" mencionado em Neemias 12:22.

Depois de Dario II veio Artaxerxes II (chamado Mnemon), em cujo reinado o Egito se revoltou e as relações com a Grécia deterioraram. Seu reinado (de 404 a 359 AEC) foi seguido pelo do seu filho Artaxerxes III (também chamado Oco), a quem se atribuem uns 21 anos de governo (358-338 AEC) e de quem se diz que foi o mais sanguinário de todos os governantes persas. Sua maior façanha foi a reconquista do Egito. A história secular atribui então um governo de dois anos a Arses e um governo de cinco anos a Dario III (Codomano), em cujo reinado Filipe da Macedônia foi assassinado (336 AEC) e foi sucedido pelo seu filho Alexandre. Em 334 AEC, Alexandre começou seu ataque contra o Império Persa, derrotando as forças persas primeiro em Granico, no canto NO da Ásia Menor, e novamente em Isso, no canto oposto da Ásia Menor (333 AEC). Por fim, depois de os gregos terem conquistado a Fenícia e o Egito, foi esmagada a última resistência dos persas em Gaugamela, em 331 AEC, e o Império Persa chegou ao fim.

Após a morte de Alexandre e a subsequente divisão do império, Seleuco Nicátor obteve controle sobre a maior parte dos territórios asiáticos, tendo a Pérsia como parte central. A dinastia selêucida de reis, assim iniciada, continuou até 64 AEC. Seleuco Nicátor parece ser aquele com quem começa a manifestar-se a figura profética do "rei do norte" da profecia de Daniel, oposto à linhagem ptolemaica de reis no Egito, que inicialmente parece preencher o papel do simbólico "rei do sul". — Da 11:4-6.

Os reis selêucidas ficaram restritos à parte ocidental do seu domínio por causa das incursões dos partos, que conquistaram o território da Pérsia propriamente dita durante o terceiro e o segundo séculos AEC. Eles foram derrotados pelos sassânidas no terceiro século EC, e o governo sassânida continuou até a conquista árabe no sétimo século.

A profecia de Ezequiel (27:10) inclui persas entre os homens de guerra que serviram na força militar da rica Tiro, e que contribuíram para o esplendor dela. A Pérsia está também alistada entre as nações que constituem parte das hordas dirigidas pelo simbólico "Gogue da terra de Magogue" contra o povo pactuado de Jeová. — Ez 38:2, 4, 5, 8, 9.

PÉRSIDE [Mulher Persa]. Cristã amada, de Roma, que Paulo cumprimenta e elogia pelas suas muitas obras cristãs. — Ro 16:12.

PERSPICÁCIA. A perspicácia, essencialmente, é a capacidade de fazer um exame sagaz duma situação. Agir com perspicácia é agir com prudência, bom critério. Segundo a obra Old Testament Word Studies (Estudos de Palavras do Velho Testamento), de Wilson, o verbo hebraico sa·khál significa "examinar; ser prudente, circunspeto; agir prudentemente, ser inteligente". (1978, p. 461) De modo que sa·khál é traduzido 'ter perspicácia' (Sal 14:2), 'agir com discrição' (Pr 10:19), 'agir com circunspeção' (1Sa 18:5), 'ter bom êxito' (Pr 17:8), 'fazer mostrar perspicácia' (Pr 16:23). O substantivo sé·khel é traduzido "perspicácia" (Sal 111:10) e "discrição". — 1Sa 25:3.

A perspicácia está intimamente relacionada com o entendimento, mas há uma ligeira distinção entre os dois termos. Diz o Theological Wordbook of the Old Testament (Manual Teológico de Termos do Antigo Testamento): "Ao passo que bin [entendimento] indica 'distinguir entre', [sa·khál] relaciona-se com um conhecimento inteligente das razões. Há o processo de ponderar um complexo arranjo de pensamentos que resulta em aplicar e usar sabiamente o bom juízo prático. Outro resultado final é a ênfase em ser bem-sucedido." — Editado por R. L. Harris, 1980, Vol. 2, p. 877; veja ENTENDIMENTO.

Nas Escrituras Gregas, o verbo sy·ni·e·mi é traduzido 'ter perspicácia' em Romanos 3:11, onde o apóstolo Paulo cita o Salmo 14:2. Sy·ni·e·mi é também traduzido 'entender' (Mt 13:13-15; At 28:26), 'compreender' (Mt 16:12) e 'perceber' (Ef 5:17).

Jeová Deus confere aos seus servos perspicácia por dar-lhes conselhos e recomendações, a fim de que possam dirigir os seus passos e controlar suas ações. (Sal 32:8; compare isso com Da 9:22.) Fornece essa orientação sábia por meio da sua Palavra. No entanto, para se obter perspicácia é preciso mais do que apenas ler a Bíblia. É preciso dar-lhe valor a fim de ser motivado para fazer tudo o que Deus manda. (Jos 1:7, 8; 1Rs 2:3) Também se precisa da ajuda do espírito de Deus. (Ne 9:20; compare isso com 1Cr 28:12, 19.) Uma vez obtida a perspicácia, ela precisa ser protegida. É possível perdê-la por se desviar dos caminhos de Deus. — Sal 36:1-3; Pr 21:16.

A perspicácia pode ser demonstrada de diversas maneiras, resultando em bênçãos tanto para aquele que a tem como para outros. O salmista declara feliz aquele que "tiver consideração [perspicácia] para com o de condição humilde". (Sal 41:1) A esposa "discreta" (que mostra ter perspicácia) é descrita como bênção da parte de Jeová. (Pr 19:14) A perspicácia, perceber mais do que o óbvio, habilita a pessoa a guardar a língua (Pr 10:19; 16:23) e a saber quando ficar calada. (Am 5:13) Ajuda também a evitar a ira e a passar por alto a transgressão. (Pr 19:11) Quem tem perspicácia aceita correção. (Sal 2:10) Segundo Provérbios 21:11, quando o sábio se torna perspicaz — isto é, quando considera com cuidado as informações disponíveis e em resultado disso obtém uma visão mais clara do assunto — ele "obtém conhecimento", quer dizer, sabe o que fazer a respeito do assunto, que conclusões tirar e que conselho dar.

PERUDA [duma raiz que significa "separar"]. Antepassado duma família de servos de Salomão; também chamado Perida. — Esd 2:55; Ne 7:57.

PESCA. Veja CAÇA E PESCA.

PESCOÇO. A parte de um humano ou de um animal que conecta a cabeça com o resto do corpo. Os termos hebraicos para pescoço (nuca) evidentemente frisam sua estrutura esqueletal que pode ser quebrada (Êx 13:13; 1Sa 4:18), ou a parte posterior do pescoço (cerviz). (Gên 49:8; Jos 10:24) Na Bíblia o termo "pescoço" é muitas vezes usado em sentido figurado.

Em hebraico, dizia-se que quem fugisse derrotado literalmente virava sua "nuca" para o inimigo (veja Jos 7:8), isto é, as costas do pescoço. Por conseguinte, 'pôr a mão na nuca', ou cerviz, dos inimigos significava conquistá-los ou subjugá-los. (Gên 49:8; 2Sa 22:41; Sal 18:40) Com significado similar, em monumentos do Egito e da Assíria, há figuras de monarcas em cenas de batalha pisando nos pescoços de seus inimigos. Similarmente, Josué ordenou aos comandantes de seu exército: "Vinde para a frente. Ponde os vossos pés sobre a nuca destes reis." — Jos 10:24.

Um jugo sobre o pescoço indicava servidão, submissão, ou escravidão. (Gên 27:40; Je 30:8; At 15:10) As frequentes expressões "dura cerviz" e 'endurecer a cerviz' simbolizam um espírito rebelde e obstinado. Alertando-nos, as Escrituras dizem que o "homem repetidas vezes repreendido, mas que endurece a cerviz, será repentinamente quebrado, e isto sem cura". — Pr 29:1; De 9:6, 13; 31:27; 2Rs 17:14; Sal 75:5; Is 48:4.

Garganta. A palavra hebraica para "garganta" evidentemente se refere à parte dianteira do pescoço, onde se encontram os órgãos da fala e da deglutição. (Sal 149:6; Je 2:25) A importância da disciplina e da autoridade parental (e, por inferência, o elevado valor dos mandamentos e das leis de Deus) é acentuada pela admoestação de 'atá-las à garganta', onde se usavam lindos e preciosos ornamentos. (Pr 1:8, 9; 3:1-3; 6:20, 21) Andar com a garganta esticada pode indicar altivez. (Is 3:16) A respeito de homens iníquos dados à mentira e derramamento de sangue, diz a Bíblia: "Não há nada fidedigno na sua boca; . . . sua garganta é uma sepultura aberta." — Sal 5:9; Ro 3:13.

PESOS E MEDIDAS. A evidência arqueológica, a própria Bíblia e outros escritos antigos fornecem a base para atribuir valores aproximados aos vários pesos e medidas usados pelos hebreus.

Medidas Lineares. As medidas lineares empregadas pelos hebreus se derivavam, evidentemente, do corpo humano. Visto que a proporção, em comprimento ou em largura, de uma parte do corpo em relação a outra pode ser determinada, é possível verificar a relação existente entre uma medida linear e outra; e, à base da evidência arqueológica que indica um côvado de cerca de 44,5 cm, é possível atribuir valores modernos aproximados às medidas lineares mencionadas na Bíblia. (Veja CÔVADO.) A tabela que segue apresenta tanto a relação entre as medidas lineares hebraicas como seus equivalentes modernos aproximados.

Medidas Lineares

		Equivalente Moderno
1 largura de um dedo	= ¼ da largura da mão	1,85 cm
1 largura da mão	= 4 larguras de um dedo	7,4 cm
1 palmo	= 3 larguras da mão	22,2 cm
1 côvado	= 2 palmos	44,5 cm
1 côvado longo*	= 7 larguras da mão	51,8 cm
1 côvado curto		38 cm
1 cana	= 6 côvados	2,67 m
1 cana longa	= 6 côvados longos	3,11 m

*Possivelmente o mesmo que o côvado "anterior" de 2Cr 3:3.

Existe alguma incerteza quanto à medida designada pelo termo hebraico gó·medh, que aparece unicamente em Juízes 3:16, a respeito do comprimento da espada de Eúde. Em numerosas traduções, esta palavra é traduzida por “côvado”. (ALA, BJ, CBC, IBB, MC, NM, PIB) Alguns estudiosos creem que gó·medh refere-se a um côvado curto, que corresponde mais ou menos à distância do cotovelo aos nós dos dedos dum punho fechado. Isto seria cerca de 38 cm (15 polegadas). — NE.

Outras medidas lineares mencionadas nas Escrituras são a braça (1,8 m); o stá·dion ou estádio (185 m); e a milha, ou “mil passos”, provavelmente a milha romana (1.479,5 m). A palavra “jornada” é muitas vezes usada em relação a uma determinada distância percorrida. (Gên 31:23; Êx 3:18; Núm 10:33; 33:8) A jornada de um dia talvez fosse de uns 32 km, ou mais, ao passo que a jornada de um sábado parece ter sido de aproximadamente 1 km. — Mt 24:20; At 1:12; veja BRAÇA; ESTÁDIO; JORNADA; MILHA.

Medidas de Capacidade. À base de fragmentos de vasos que trazem o designativo “bato”, em caracteres do hebraico antigo, calcula-se que a capacidade de um bato seja de uns 22 litros. Nas tabelas que seguem, as medidas para secos e para líquidos são calculadas em relação ao bato. A relação de uma medida para com outra, quando não declarada na Bíblia, é tirada de outros escritos antigos. — Veja BATO; CABO; CORO; GÔMOR; HIM; LOGUE; ÔMER; SEÁ.

Medidas para Secos

		Equivalente Moderno
1 cabo	= 4 logues	1,22 l
1 gômor	= 1 4/5 cabo	2,2 l
1 seá	= 3 1/3 gômores	7,33 l
1 efa	= 3 seás	22 l
1 ômer	= 10 efas	220 l

Medidas para Líquidos

		Equivalente Moderno
1 logue	= 1/4 de cabo	0,31 l
1 cabo	= 4 logues	1,22 l
1 him	= 3 cabos	3,67 l
1 bato	= 6 hins	22 l
1 coro	= 10 batos	220 l

Outras medidas para secos e líquidos. A palavra hebraica ‛is·sa·róhn, que significa “décima parte”, não raro indica a décima parte de um efa. (Êx 29:40; Le 14:10; 23:13, 17; Núm 15:4) Segundo o Targum de Jonatã, as “seis medidas de cevada” (literalmente: seis de cevada) mencionadas em Rute 3:15, são seis seás. À base da autoridade da Míxena e da Vulgata, entende-se que o termo hebraico lé·thekh designa meio ômer. (Os 3:2; Al, ALA, NM; Bava Mezia 6:5, nota e apêndice II, D, traduzido por H. Danby) Alguns igualam ao bato hebraico os termos gregos me·tre·tés (que aparece no plural em João 2:6, e é traduzido “medidas de líquidos”) e bá·tos (no plural em Lucas 16:6). O termo grego khoí·nix (traduzido por “litro”), como em geral se pensa, é ligeiramente superior a um litro convencional. — Re 6:5, 6.

Pesos. A evidência arqueológica sugere que um siclo pesava cerca de 11,4 g. Usando isto como base, a tabela que segue esboça a relação entre os pesos hebraicos e seus aproximados equivalentes modernos.

Pesos

		Equivalente Moderno
1 gera	= 1/20 de siclo	0,57 g
1 beca (meio siclo)	= 10 geras	5,7 g
1 siclo	= 2 becas	11,4 g
1 mina (mané)	= 50 siclos	570 g
1 talento	= 60 minas	34,2 kg

A palavra grega lí·tra é geralmente igualada à libra romana (327 g). A mina das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs é avaliada em 100 dracmas. (Veja DRACMA.) Isto significaria que a mina grega pesava 340 g, e o talento grego, 20,4 kg. — Veja DINHEIRO; MINA; SICLO; TALENTO.

Conjunto de pesos hebraicos, com inscrições.

Área. Os hebreus designavam o tamanho dum terreno pela quantidade de semente necessária para semeá-lo (Le 27:16; 1Rs 18:32) ou pelo que uma junta de touros pudesse lavrar num dia. — 1Sa 14:14 n.

PESTILÊNCIA. Qualquer doença infecciosa de rápido alastramento, capaz de atingir proporções epidêmicas e provocar a morte. A palavra hebraica para pestilência (dé·ver) vem duma raiz que significa "destruir". (2Cr 22:10) Em muitos textos, a pestilência relaciona-se com a execução do julgamento divino, tanto no que diz respeito ao povo que leva o nome de Deus como aos que se opõem a eles. — Êx 9:15; Núm 14:12; Ez 38:2, 14-16, 22, 23; Am 4:10; veja PRAGA.

Provocada Pelo Abandono da Lei de Deus. A nação de Israel foi alertada de que a recusa de guardar o pacto de Deus feito com ela resultaria em Deus 'enviar a pestilência para o seu meio'. (Le 26:14-16, 23-25; De 28:15, 21, 22) Por todas as Escrituras, a saúde, em sentido físico ou espiritual, é associada com a bênção de Deus (De 7:12, 15; Sal 103:1-3; Pr 3:1, 2, 7, 8; 4:21, 22; Re 21:1-4), ao passo que a doença é associada com o pecado e a imperfeição. (Êx 15:26; De 28:58-61; Is 53:4, 5; Mt 9:2-6, 12; Jo 5:14) Assim, embora seja verdade que, em certos casos, Jeová Deus direta e instantaneamente causou alguma aflição a pessoas, como a lepra de Miriã, de Uzias e de Geazi (Núm 12:10; 2Cr 26:16-21; 2Rs 5:25-27), parece que, em muitos casos, as doenças e a pestilência eram o resultado natural e inexorável do proceder pecaminoso seguido por pessoas ou nações. Elas simplesmente colheram o que haviam semeado; seus corpos físicos sofreram os efeitos de seus modos de agir errados. (Gál 6:7, 8) A respeito dos que se voltaram para a obscena imoralidade sexual, o apóstolo diz que Deus "entregou-os à impureza, para que os seus corpos fossem desonrados entre si . . . recebendo em si mesmos a plena recompensa, que se devia ao seu erro". — Ro 1:24-27.

Israel foi atingido. Assim, o aviso dado por Deus a Israel na realidade os alertou a respeito dos muitos males que um proceder desobediente à Sua vontade inevitavelmente lhes causaria. A Lei que Deus lhes dera servia como prevenção e proteção contra a doença, graças a seus elevados padrões de moral e de higiene (veja DOENÇAS E TRATAMENTO [Exatidão dos Conceitos Bíblicos]), como também em virtude de seu efeito sadio sobre seu estado mental e emocional. (Sal 19:7-11; 119:102, 103, 111, 112, 165) O que Levítico 26:14-16 descreve não é uma infração ocasional daquela Lei, mas sim o total abandono e rejeição de seus padrões, o que com certeza deixaria a nação vulnerável a todo tipo de doença e de contágio. A história, tanto passada como presente, confirma a veracidade disso.

A nação de Israel mergulhou em crassa apostasia, e a profecia de Ezequiel mostra o povo falando de si mesmo como que "apodrecendo", em virtude de suas revoltas e pecados. (Ez 33:10, 11; compare isso com 24:23.) Conforme predito, a nação sofreu pela 'espada, fome e pestilência', que atingiu um clímax na época da invasão dos babilônios. (Je 32:24) A frequente associação de pestilência com a espada e a fome (Je 21:9; 27:13; Ez 7:15) harmoniza-se com os fatos conhecidos. A pestilência, em geral, acompanha ou segue na esteira da guerra, e sua acompanhante escassez de alimentos. Quando uma força inimiga invade um país, as atividades agrícolas são prejudicadas, as colheitas muitas vezes sendo confiscadas ou queimadas. As cidades sitiadas ficam privadas dos recursos externos, e a fome se propaga entre a população, forçada a viver em meio a condições apinhadas e insalubres. Sob tais circunstâncias, a resistência às doenças diminui, e abre-se o caminho para o mortífero ataque da pestilência.

Na "Terminação do Sistema de Coisas". Jesus, ao profetizar a destruição de Jerusalém e a "terminação do sistema de coisas", mostrou que a pestilência seria uma característica notável do período que antecede a "grande tribulação". (Mt 24:3, 21; Lu 21:10, 11) Escrito após a destruição de Jerusalém (que foi acompanhada de grave fome e doença), Revelação (Apocalipse) 6:1-8 apontava para uma futura época de espada, de fome e de "praga mortífera". Estas coisas se seguiriam ao aparecimento do cavaleiro coroado montado num cavalo branco, e que saiu para vencer, figura exatamente paralela à de Revelação 19:11-16, que se aplica claramente ao reinante Cristo Jesus.

Proteção de Jeová. O Rei Salomão pediu em oração que, quando ameaçado de pestilência, o povo de Jeová pudesse orar a Ele em busca de alívio, estendendo as mãos em direção ao templo e ser ouvido favoravelmente. (1Rs 8:37-40; 2Cr 6:28-31) A capacidade de Jeová de proteger seu servo fiel também contra o dano espiritual, incluindo a moral e espiritual "pestilência que anda nas trevas" acha-se consoladoramente expresso no Salmo 91.

PETAÍAS [Jah Abriu [a Madre]].

1. Casa paterna selecionada para a 19.ª das 24 divisões sacerdotais que serviam em rodízio, organizadas por Davi. — 1Cr 24:5-7, 16.

2. Um dos levitas que foram incentivados por Esdras a despedir suas esposas estrangeiras. (Esd 10:23, 44) Possivelmente o mesmo que o N.º 3.

3. Um dos levitas que participaram na proposta do "arranjo fidedigno" para os que haviam retornado do exílio, por meio do qual recapitularam a história dos tratos de Deus com a nação deles, confessaram seus pecados e concordaram em renovar a adoração verdadeira. (Ne 9:5-38) Possivelmente o mesmo que o N.º 2.

4. Mediador pós-exílico entre os exilados que haviam retornado e o rei persa; filho de Mesezabel e descendente de Zerá, da tribo de Judá. — Ne 11:24.

PETOR. Lugar onde morava Balaão, o profeta que tentou amaldiçoar Israel. Petor ficava "junto ao Rio", aparentemente o Eufrates, em "Arã-Naaraim" (texto massorético) ou "Mesopotâmia" (LXX). (Núm 22:5; 23:7; De 23:4 n) É geralmente identificado com a "Pitru" de inscrições assírias. Pitru ficava junto ao rio Sajur, tributário ocidental do Eufrates ao S de Carquemis. Contudo, somente se a região chamada de "Arã-Naaraim" ou "Mesopotâmia" se estendia a essa área a O do Eufrates é que se poderia dizer que essa localização junto ao Sajur se ajustaria à descrição bíblica.

PETUEL. Pai do profeta Joel. — Jl 1:1.

PEULETAI [duma raiz que significa "salário"]. O oitavo filho de Obede-Edom, alistado como porteiro. — 1Cr 26:1, 4, 5, 15.

PI-BESETE [do egípcio, significando "Casa da [deusa] Bastet"]. Cidade mencionada junto com Om (Heliópolis), em Ezequiel 30:17, numa profecia dirigida contra o Egito. A tradução do texto na Septuaginta identifica Pi-Besete com Bubástis, antiga cidade da região do Delta, cujos restos se acham em Tell Basta, uns 70 km a NNE do Cairo, próximo da moderna cidade de Zagazig. O nome da antiga cidade, conforme consta em inscrições egípcias, revela nítida similaridade com o hebraico Pi-Besete.

Pi-Besete, ou Bubástis, era a sede da adoração da deusa Bastet ou Bast, deusa felina não raro representada com cabeça de gata. A presença dum grande local de sepultamento de gatos próximo da cidade testifica o destaque que se dava ali à adoração dela. Uma festa anual era realizada em honra de Bastet, atraindo milhares de adeptos de todas as partes do país.

Ao passo que Pi-Besete era a capital do 18.º nomo (distrito) do Baixo Egito, ela atingiu seu apogeu político com a linhagem de governantes líbios sobre o Egito iniciada pelo Faraó Sisaque, contemporâneo de Salomão e de Reoboão. (1Rs 11:40; 14:25, 26) Pi-Besete era uma cidade real de Sisaque. A profecia de Ezequiel relaciona-se com a conquista do Egito pelos babilônios, quando então Pi-Besete seria subjugada. Os persas mais tarde destruíram a cidade, e hoje só restam ruínas na antiga localização.

PICHE. Forma líquida e pegajosa de betume, uma mistura de hidrocarbonetos escuros similar ao que é geralmente chamado de alcatrão. (Veja BETUME.) É traduzido da palavra hebraica zé·feth.

O piche mineral é altamente inflamável e, a menos que seja mantido bem suprido de ar, produz grande quantidade de fumaça quando queima. Encher as torrentes de Edom com piche e fazer com que o país se tornasse "piche ardente" com fumaça ascendendo por tempo indefinido seria um quadro apropriado de destruição devastadora. (Is 34:9, 10) Essa descrição também ajuda a identificar a substância, pois Edom ficava perto do Mar Morto, e mesmo hoje em dia o betume às vezes aparece nas suas praias, vindo evidentemente de jazidas agora cobertas pelo mar.

Segundo Êxodo 2:3, a arca de papiro em que Moisés foi escondido era revestida de "betume e piche". O comentarista judeu Rashi sugeriu que isso significava betume por dentro e piche por fora. Ou poderia significar uma mistura de duas diferentes consistências da mesma substância básica. Por exemplo, em The Land and the Book (A Terra e o Livro), W. M. Thomson sugere que Êxodo 2:3 "revela o processo pelo qual eles preparavam o betume. O mineral, conforme encontrado neste país, derrete-se prontamente; mas daí, quando frio, é quebradiço como vidro. Precisa ser misturado com alcatrão quando se estiver derretendo, formando assim uma cera dura e vítrea, perfeitamente impermeável." (Revisado por J. Grande, 1910, p. 200) A Septuaginta grega usa o termo único a·sfal·tó·pis·sa, uma mistura de asfalto e piche. Em certas partes do Oriente Médio, o piche mineral tem sido usado até mesmo em tempos recentes como revestimento de certos tipos de embarcações.

PÍFARO. Instrumento de sopro tubular. — Gên 4:21.

Não se pode identificar com certeza o instrumento musical chamado em hebraico de 'u·gháv, pois a Bíblia não o descreve; contudo, as modernas traduções da Bíblia em geral traduzem essa palavra hebraica por "pífaro" ou "flauta". (Jó 21:12; 30:31; Sal 150:4; ALA, BV, IBB, NM, PIB) O pífaro é, pois, o primeiro instrumento de sopro (provavelmente de madeira) mencionado nas Escrituras. Jubal, da sétima geração a partir de Adão, é identificado como "o fundador [literalmente: pai] de todos os que manejam . . . o pífaro [ou, flauta]". (Gên 4:21 n) Isto talvez indique o estabelecimento de uma profissão, quer de artífices que fabricavam os instrumentos, quer dos que os tocavam.

Embora o 'u·gháv nunca fosse alistado como um dos instrumentos do templo, alguns peritos creem que este nome tornou-se um termo genérico, designando qualquer tipo de instrumento de sopro de madeira. Originalmente, porém, pode ter sido um instrumento específico, talvez a flauta ou, possivelmente, uma série de pífaros de múltiplos sons, todos fechados numa extremidade e soprados através das extremidades abertas. O instrumento da orquestra de Nabucodonosor especificado pela palavra aramaica mash·roh·qí ("pífaro", Da 3:5, 7, 10, 15; Al, ALA, NM) talvez corresponda ao hebraico 'u·gháv.

PI-HAIROTE. Último local de acampamento dos israelitas antes de cruzarem o Mar Vermelho. (Núm 33:7, 8) Depois de terem acampado em "Etão, na extremidade do ermo" (Êx 13:20), Moisés recebeu instruções de Jeová Deus para 'voltar e acampar diante de Pi-Hairote, entre Migdol e o mar, à vista de Baal-Zefom'. (Êx 14:1, 2) Se os sítios de Migdol e de Baal-Zefom fossem conhecidos hoje, não seria difícil identificar Pi-Hairote. Mas isto não acontece, e as tentativas de ligar seus nomes, bem como o de Pi-Hairote, a certas localidades ao longo da fronteira leste do Egito, têm sido variadas e um tanto inconclusivas. Por isso, certos diferentes aspectos geográficos contidos no próprio relato parecem apresentar uma base mais sólida para se ter uma ideia de onde se localizava Pi-Hairote.

Pi-Hairote ficava perto do Mar Vermelho, em algum ponto em que a única via de escape diante das forças egípcias que avançavam seria através do próprio mar. O mar, naquele ponto, deve ter tido profundidade suficiente para que as águas fossem "partidas", a fim de formar uma passagem pelo "meio do mar", as águas formando uma "muralha" em ambos os lados. (Êx 14:16, 21, 22) Nenhum local ao N do golfo de Suez poderia satisfazer adequadamente tais requisitos. É verdade que muitos peritos modernos defendem a teoria de uma travessia na baixa região dos lagos Amargos, que começa a uns 25 km ao N de Suez. Este conceito, porém, vem acompanhado de uma negação da natureza miraculosa da travessia (sustentando que a travessia foi apenas por um charco ou pântano) ou pela ideia de que a extremidade norte do Mar Vermelho antigamente ia até a região dos lagos Amargos e que as águas ali eram muito mais profundas naquele tempo, embora a evidência arqueológica indique ter havido bem pouca mudança no nível das águas desde os tempos antigos.

Por esta razão, o local sugerido por peritos mais antigos (do século 19) ainda parece ser o que melhor se ajusta às exigências da história bíblica. Pi-Hairote é evidentemente um local na estreita planície que corre ao longo do sopé sudeste de Jebel 'Ataqah, a cerca de 20 km a SO de Suez. Tem-se sugerido que a travessia se deu a partir do promontório chamado Ras 'Ataqah, e que conduziu através do leito do mar até a vizinhança do oásis 'Ayun Musa', na margem oposta. O leito do mar nesta região declina de forma bem gradual em ambos os lados devido a bancos de areia que se estendem por 3 km de ambos os lados. A profundidade máxima da água perto do meio dessa trajetória é de cerca de 15 m. A distância duma margem à outra é de uns 10 km, permitindo amplo espaço para que os possivelmente três milhões de israelitas atravessassem o leito do mar, ao mesmo tempo em que as forças militares de Faraó também percorressem aquela passagem miraculosamente provida, no esforço de alcançar a hoste israelita. — Veja ÊXODO (Rota do Êxodo).

Este conceito coincide, em geral, com a tradição transmitida por Josefo, historiador judeu do primeiro século EC, de que os israelitas, antes de atravessarem o mar, estavam 'encurralados entre penhascos inacessíveis e o mar'. (Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], II, 324 [xv, 3]) Uma 'volta' da nação israelita de Etão para o local acima descrito também se harmoniza bem com a previsão de Jeová, de que Faraó diria a respeito deles: "Estão vagueando em confusão pelo país. O ermo os encerrou." (Êx 14:3) Isto dificilmente se daria em localidades ao N de Suez. A localização de Pi-Hairote na vizinhança de Jebel 'Ataqah permitiria, igualmente, que as forças de Faraó avançassem rapidamente contra os israelitas em fuga, através de uma rota regularmente percorrida desde Mênfis (a provável capital do Egito naquele tempo) até a península do Sinai. — Êx 14:4-9.

Embora satisfaça os requisitos geográficos, tal localização de Pi-Hairote deve ser encarada como apenas conjectural, dependente de possível confirmação futura.

PILATOS. Governador romano da Judeia durante o ministério terrestre de Jesus. (Lu 3:1) Depois de Arquelau, filho de Herodes, o Grande, ter sido removido como etnarca (ou governador) da Judeia, o imperador nomeava governadores provinciais para administrarem a província, sendo Pilatos, evidentemente, o quinto deles. Tibério nomeou-o em 26 EC, e seu governo durou dez anos.

Pouco se sabe sobre a história pessoal de Pôncio Pilatos. O único período de sua vida que recebeu breve menção histórica foi o de seu governo sobre a Judeia. A única inscrição conhecida que estampa seu nome foi encontrada em 1961, em Cesareia. Refere-se também ao "Tiberieum", um edifício que Pilatos dedicou em homenagem a Tibério.

Como representante do imperador, o governador exercia pleno controle sobre a província. Podia impor a sentença de morte e, de acordo com os que endossam o conceito de que o Sinédrio podia pronunciar a sentença de morte, a ratificação do governador tinha de ser obtida por aquela corte judaica, a fim de que essa sentença fosse válida. (Veja Mt 26:65, 66; Jo 18:31.) Visto que a residência oficial do governador romano era em Cesareia (veja At 23:23, 24), o corpo principal das tropas romanas ficava estacionado ali, havendo uma força menor aquartelada em Jerusalém. Costumeiramente, porém, o governador residia em Jerusalém durante as épocas das festividades (como a Páscoa) e trazia com ele reforços militares. A esposa de Pilatos estava com ele na Judeia (Mt 27:19), o que era possível em virtude de uma mudança anteriormente feita na diretriz governamental romana a respeito de governadores que ocupavam postos perigosos.

O governo de Pilatos não foi pacífico. Segundo o historiador judeu Josefo, Pilatos começou mal o seu relacionamento com seus súditos judeus. Ele mandou que soldados romanos, portando estandartes que estampavam a imagem do imperador, entrassem à noite em Jerusalém. Esta medida provocou grande ressentimento; uma delegação de judeus foi a Cesareia protestar contra a presença de estandartes e exigir a sua retirada. Depois de cinco dias de discussão, Pilatos tentou amedrontar os peticionários com ameaças de execução, por parte de seus soldados, mas a firme recusa dos judeus em ceder levou Pilatos a anuir ao pedido deles. — Jewish Antiquities (Antiguidades Judaicas), XVIII, 55-59 (iii, 1).

Filo, escritor judeu do primeiro século EC, de Alexandria, Egito, fala de uma medida um tanto similar de Pilatos e que gerou protestos, desta vez a respeito de escudos de ouro em que constavam os nomes de Pilatos e de Tibério, escudos estes que Pilatos colocou nos alojamentos dele em Jerusalém. Um recurso dos judeus foi enviado ao imperador em Roma, e Pilatos recebeu ordens de remover os escudos para Cesareia. — The Embassy to Gaius (A Embaixada a Gaio), XXXVIII, 299-305.

Josefo alista ainda outro distúrbio. Para construir um aqueduto para trazer água a Jerusalém duma distância de uns 40 km, Pilatos usou dinheiro do tesouro do templo em Jerusalém. Grandes multidões protestaram contra este ato, quando Pilatos visitou a cidade. Pilatos mandou soldados disfarçados infiltrarem-se na multidão e, em dado sinal, atacarem as pessoas, resultando em feridos e alguns mortos entre os judeus. (Jewish Antiquities, XVIII, 60-62 [iii, 2]; The Jewish War [A Guerra Judaica], II, 175-177 [ix, 4]) Pelo visto, o projeto foi levado a termo. Este último conflito é muitas vezes sugerido como a ocasião em que Pilatos 'misturou o sangue dos galileus com seus sacrifícios', conforme registrado em Lucas 13:1. Essa expressão parece indicar que esses galileus foram mortos bem na área do templo. Não há meios de se determinar se este incidente se relaciona com o descrito por Josefo, ou se se trata de uma outra ocasião. Contudo, uma vez que os galileus eram súditos de Herodes Ântipas, o governante distrital da Galileia, tal matança pode ter sido pelo menos um fator contribuinte para a inimizade que existia entre Pilatos e Herodes até a ocasião do julgamento de Jesus. — Lu 23:6-12.

O Julgamento de Jesus. Em 14 de nisã de 33 EC, ao amanhecer o dia, Jesus foi levado a Pilatos pelos líderes judeus. Uma vez que eles não se dispunham a entrar nas dependências do governante gentio, Pilatos saiu ao encontro deles e indagou qual era a acusação contra Jesus. As acusações eram que Jesus era subversivo, que defendia o não pagamento de impostos e que dizia ser rei, rivalizando assim com César. Quando se lhes ordenou que levassem Jesus e o julgassem eles próprios, seus acusadores responderam que não lhes era lícito executar alguém. Daí Pilatos levou Jesus para dentro do palácio e interrogou-o sobre as acusações. (ILUSTRAÇÃO, Vol. 2, p. 741) Voltando aos acusadores, Pilatos anunciou não ter encontrado nenhuma falta no acusado. As acusações prosseguiram, e, ao saber que Jesus era da Galileia, Pilatos enviou-o a Herodes Ântipas. Herodes, aborrecido com a recusa de Jesus de realizar algum sinal, sujeitou-o a maus-tratos e a zombaria, e mandou-o de volta a Pilatos.

Os líderes judeus e o povo foram novamente convocados, e Pilatos renovou seus empenhos de evitar sentenciar à morte um homem inocente, perguntando à multidão se desejavam que Jesus fosse libertado, de acordo com o costume de livrar um prisioneiro em cada festividade da Páscoa. A multidão, porém, incitada pelos seus líderes religiosos, clamou pela libertação de Barrabás, um ladrão, assassino e sedicioso. Pilatos fez repetidas tentativas de libertar o acusado, o que apenas resultou no aumento dos clamores para que Jesus fosse pregado na estaca. Temendo um motim e procurando aplacar a multidão, Pilatos cedeu aos desejos desta, lavando as mãos com água como se as lavasse da culpa de sangue. Pouco antes, a esposa de Pilatos o tinha avisado do sonho perturbador que ela tivera, a respeito 'desse homem justo'. — Mt 27:19.

Pilatos mandou então que Jesus fosse chicoteado, e os soldados colocaram uma coroa de espinhos sobre a cabeça dele, vestindo-o com vestes régias. Mais uma vez Pilatos se apresentou à multidão, reafirmou não encontrar nenhuma culpa em Jesus, e fez com que este se apresentasse perante eles com os mantos e a coroa de espinhos. Diante do brado de Pilatos: "Eis o homem!", os líderes do povo renovaram sua exigência de que Jesus fosse pregado na estaca, revelando então, pela primeira vez, sua acusação de blasfêmia. Dizerem eles que Jesus se fazia de filho de Deus aumentou as apreensões de Pilatos, e ele levou Jesus para dentro a fim de interrogá-lo mais. Os empenhos finais de libertá-lo provocaram o aviso, por parte dos opositores judeus, de que Pilatos se tornava vulnerável à acusação de opor-se a César. Ao ouvir esta ameaça, Pilatos, trazendo Jesus para fora, sentou-se em sua cadeira de juiz. O brado de Pilatos: "Eis o vosso rei!", apenas reavivou o clamor de que Jesus fosse pregado na estaca, e provocou a declaração: "Não temos rei senão César." Daí Pilatos entregou-lhes Jesus para ser pregado na estaca. — Mt 27:1-31; Mr 15:1-15; Lu 23:1-25; Jo 18:28-40; 19:1-16.

Escritores judeus, tais como Filo, retratam Pilatos como homem inflexível e arrogante. (The Embassy to Gaius, XXXVIII, 301) No entanto, é possível que as ações dos próprios judeus fossem grandemente responsáveis pelas fortes medidas tomadas pelo governador contra eles. Seja como for, os Evangelhos fornecem certa medida exata do perfil de tal homem. Sua maneira de enfocar os assuntos era típica dum governante romano, com sua linguagem sucinta e direta. Exteriorizando a atitude céptica dum cínico, como ao dizer: "Que é verdade?", Pilatos, não obstante, mostrou temor, provavelmente do tipo supersticioso, ao ouvir dizer que estava lidando com alguém que dizia ser filho de Deus. Embora obviamente não fosse do tipo aquiescente, ele demonstrava a falta de integridade dum político. Preocupava-se primariamente com a sua posição, com o que diriam seus superiores se ouvissem falar de distúrbios adicionais em sua província, receando parecer leniente demais para com os acusados de sedição. Pilatos reconheceu a inocência de Jesus e a inveja que motivava seus acusadores. Todavia, cedeu aos desejos da multidão e entregou-lhes uma vítima inocente para que fosse morta, em vez de arriscar-se a prejudicar a sua carreira política.

Como parte das "autoridades superiores", Pilatos exercia o poder por tolerância divina. (Ro 13:1) Ele era responsável por sua decisão, responsabilidade esta que nenhuma água poderia lavar. O sonho de sua esposa evidentemente foi de origem divina, como também o terremoto, a escuridão incomum e o rasgo da cortina que ocorreram naquele dia. (Mt 27:19, 45, 51-54; Lu 23:44, 45) O sonho dela devia ter alertado Pilatos de que não se tratava de um julgamento comum, de um réu comum. Todavia, como Jesus disse, aquele que o entregou a Pilatos 'era mais culpado de pecado'. (Jo 19:10, 11) Judas, que originalmente traiu Jesus, fora chamado de "o filho da destruição". (Jo 17:12) Aqueles fariseus que eram culpados de cumplicidade na trama contra a vida de Jesus foram classificados de 'objetos para a Geena'. (Mt 23:15, 33; compare isso com Jo 8:37-44.) E em especial o sumo sacerdote, que chefiava o Sinédrio, era responsável perante Deus por entregar o Filho de Deus a este governante gentio, para ser sentenciado à morte. (Mt 26:63-66) A culpa de Pilatos não se igualava à deles; todavia, seu ato foi extremamente repreensível.

O desagrado de Pilatos com os promotores de tal crime evidentemente se refletiu no letreiro que ele mandou colocar acima de Jesus na estaca, identificando-o como "Rei dos Judeus", bem como em sua lacônica recusa de alterá-lo, dizendo: "O que escrevi, escrevi." (Jo 19:19-22) Quando José de Arimateia solicitou o cadáver, Pilatos, depois de primeiro demonstrar a meticulosidade dum oficial romano por assegurar-se de que Jesus estava mesmo morto, concedeu tal pedido. (Mr 15:43-45) A preocupação dos principais sacerdotes e fariseus diante da possibilidade de roubo do corpo resultou na concisa resposta de Pilatos: "Tendes uma guarda. Ide fazê-lo tão seguro como sabeis." — Mt 27:62-65.

Remoção e Morte. Josefo relata que Pilatos foi posteriormente removido do cargo em resultado de queixas apresentadas pelos samaritanos ao superior imediato de Pilatos, o governador da Síria, Vitélio. A queixa foi de que Pilatos matara vários samaritanos, que haviam sido iludidos por um impostor a se reunirem no monte Gerizim, na esperança de descobrirem tesouros sagrados, supostamente escondidos ali por Moisés. Vitélio ordenou que Pilatos fosse a Roma, para apresentar-se perante Tibério, e colocou Marcelo em seu lugar. Tibério morreu em 37 EC, enquanto Pilatos se dirigia a Roma. (Jewish Antiquities, XVIII, 85-87 [iv, 1]; XVIII, 88, 89 [iv, 2]) A história não fornece dados confiáveis a respeito dos resultados finais do seu julgamento. O historiador Eusébio, de fins do terceiro e início do quarto século, diz que Pilatos viu-se obrigado a suicidar-se durante o reinado de Caio (Calígula), sucessor de Tibério. — The Ecclesiastical History (A História Eclesiástica), II, VII, 1.

PILDAS. Sexto mencionado dos oito filhos do irmão de Abraão, Naor, com sua esposa Milca. — Gên 22:21-23; 11:29.

PILHA [Mó]. Cabeça familiar de Israel, ou representante de uma família desse nome, que atestou o pós-exílico "arranjo fidedigno". — Ne 9:38; 10:1, 14, 24.

PILTAI [forma abreviada de Pelatias, que significa "Jeová Proveu Escape (Fuga)"]. Cabeça pós-exílico da sacerdotal casa paterna de Moadias, nos dias do sucessor de Jesua, Joiaquim. — Ne 12:12, 17.

PIM. O preço que os filisteus cobravam dos israelitas para afiar implementos diversos, de metal. (1Sa 13:20, 21) O pim, pelo visto, era um peso. Vários pesos de pedra encontrados em escavações na Palestina estampam as consoantes de "pim" em caracteres do hebraico antigo; estes variam entre 7,18 e 8,13 g. Nesta base, o pim equivaleria aproximadamente a dois terços dum siclo.

PINGENTE. Veja ARRECADA.

PINHO (PINHEIRO). Veja ÁRVORE OLEAGINOSA (OLEASTRO).

PINOM. Um dos xeques de Esaú (Edom). (Gên 36:40-43; 1Cr 1:51, 52) Alguns pensam que esses nomes são listagens de lugares ou povoados, e não de pessoas, ou que os nomes vieram a aplicar-se às regiões ou cidades específicas governadas pelos xeques. — Veja TIMNA N.º 3.

PIRÃO [Zebra]. Rei amorreu de Jarmute, na época em que Israel entrou na Terra Prometida. Pirão juntou-se a quatro outros reis amorreus numa conspiração contra os gibeonitas, que haviam feito paz com Josué. Na batalha que se seguiu, Pirão e os outros reis se refugiaram numa caverna em Maquedá, cuja entrada os israelitas fecharam até que a luta terminasse. Pirão e os outros foram então mortos, pendurados em madeiros até à noitinha, e sepultados na mesma caverna. — Jos 10:1-27.

PIRATOM, PIRATONITA [De (Pertencente a) Piratom]. Piratom era uma pequena cidade de Efraim "no monte do amalequita". Evidentemente, o habitante de Piratom era conhecido como "piratonita", como no caso de Hilel e, mais tarde, Benaia, um dos poderosos de Davi. O filho de Hilel, o juiz Abdom, foi sepultado ali. (Jz 12:13, 15; 2Sa 23:8, 30; 1Cr 11:31; 27:14) Far'ata, a uns 10 km ao O da sugerida localização de Siquém, tem sido sugerido como uma possível identificação.

PIRRO [Cor de Fogo; Vermelho Cor de Fogo]. Bereano cujo filho Sópater acompanhou Paulo na Macedônia em parte de sua terceira viagem missionária. — At 20:3, 4.

PISGA. Lugar elevado na seção norte da cordilheira de Abarim, imediatamente ao E do Mar Morto. A localização exata é desconhecida. As referências bíblicas não conflitam com a sua sugerida identificação com Ras es-Siyaghah, um promontório situado a uns 16 km ao E de onde o Jordão deságua no Mar Morto. Ras es-Siyaghah fica um pouco ao NO de Jebel en-Neba, o cume tradicionalmente conhecido como monte Nebo (Har Nevo).

Os aspectos físicos dessas duas elevações harmonizam-se com a sua breve descrição na Bíblia. Ras es-Siyaghah tem uma altitude de uns 100 m a menos do que a de Jebel en-Neba, estando separada desta última por uma pequena depressão ou lombada. Embora ligeiramente menos elevado do que o pico vizinho, Ras es-Siyaghah fica mais perto de Jericó, e permite ter-se uma vista desobstruída do Mar Morto, uns 1.000 m abaixo, bem como uma esplêndida vista do vale do Jordão, da cordilheira central onde se localizam Hébron, Belém e Jerusalém, e do monte Hermom, a mais de 160 km para o N.

A primeira menção desse lugar é com relação aos locais de acampamento ao longo da trajetória de Israel para a Terra Prometida. (Núm 21:20) Está localizado na parte sul do território capturado na vitória contra os amorreus, depois que seu rei, Síon, recusou-se a deixar os israelitas passarem pelo país. (De 4:46, 49; Jos 12:1-3) Mais tarde, Balaque, o rei de Moabe, levou Balaão "ao campo de Zofim, ao cume do Pisga", numa vã tentativa de fazer que se amaldiçoasse os israelitas. — Núm 23:14.

Pisga, contudo, é melhor lembrada em relação com a extensa visão que Moisés teve da Terra Prometida, pouco antes de sua morte. (De 3:27; 34:1-3) Pisga era designada como parte do território tribal de Rubem. — De 3:16, 17; Jos 13:15, 20.

Todas as vezes que o nome Pisga aparece na Bíblia, ele é qualificado pelas expressões "cume" ou "encostas" do Pisga. Por isso, é muitas vezes chamado de monte Pisga, embora não nas Escrituras.

PISÍDIA. Região interiorana do sul da Ásia Menor. Era uma região montanhosa, englobando a parte ocidental da cadeia dos montes Tauro, situada ao N da Panfília e ao S da Frígia Gálata, tendo a Cária e a Lícia a O, e a Licaônia a E. Crê-se que essa região tenha tido uns 190 km de E a O, e uns 80 km de largura. Tinha muitas altas cordilheiras cortadas por vales e rios montanhosos; havia florestas e pastos.

O povo da Pisídia era selvagem e guerreiro, formando bandos tribais de assaltantes. Estes montanheses eram difíceis de ser controlados, e só lentamente foram influenciados pela cultura helênica ou romana. Os romanos atribuíram ao Rei Amintas, da Galácia, a tarefa de subjugá-los, mas ele morreu antes de conseguir fazer isso. A Pisídia tornou-se parte da província romana da Galácia em 25 AEC e, em 6 AEC, as colônias dessa área foram ocupadas por tropas para controlar o povo. Tais colônias eram dirigidas de Antioquia, uma cidade perto da fronteira entre a Pisídia e a Frígia. (Veja ANTIOQUIA N.º 2.) Em 74 EC, a parte sul da Pisídia junto com a Panfília e a Lícia passaram a formar uma província romana. A região norte continuou sendo parte da província da Galácia até que, nos tempos pós-apostólicos, ela foi incluída numa nova província de nome Pisídia.

O apóstolo Paulo passou pela Pisídia em sua primeira viagem missionária, viajando da costeira Panfília, pelas montanhas, até a Antioquia, da Pisídia. (At 13:13, 14) Também passou pela Pisídia na viagem de volta. (At 14:21, 24) Os bandidos e os turbulentos rios montanhosos dessa região bem que poderiam constituir a base para Paulo dizer que enfrentara "perigos de rios, . . . perigos de salteadores de estradas". — 2Co 11:26.

PISOM. Veja PÍSON.

PÍSON [possivelmente: Mais Espalhado]. Um dos quatro rios que se ramificavam do 'rio que saía do Éden', e, depois, circundava a inteira terra de Havilá, terra que se diz ser fonte de ouro, de bdélio e de pedra de ônix. (Gên 2:10-12) A identificação do rio Píson é conjectural, sendo que as sugestões variam de certos rios na parte oriental da Turquia até o rio Ganges, da Índia.

No artigo ÉDEN N.º 1, mencionamos a hipótese de o Dilúvio global ter apagado a evidência que possibilitasse a identificação positiva dos rios Píson e Giom hoje. Isto, naturalmente, não elimina a possibilidade de que estes rios ainda existiam e eram conhecidos nos dias de Moisés, quando o livro de Gênesis foi escrito. A sua referência à "terra de Havilá" provavelmente não deve ser entendida como significando que havia uma região com esse nome antes do Dilúvio, como também no caso de sua referência à "terra de Cus". (Gên 2:13) Em vez disso, as referências de Moisés a essas terras evidentemente se aplicam a lugares assim chamados em períodos pós-diluvianos e apontavam referências geográficas bem conhecidas em seus dias. Além de quaisquer mudanças que o Dilúvio causara, a capacidade dos terremotos de mudar o curso dos rios ou de eliminar partes deles também merece consideração. Isto poderia ter acontecido em tempos pós-diluvianos; a Turquia oriental, a provável localização do Éden, fica num cinturão de terremotos. — Veja HAVILÁ N.º 1.

PISPA. Um preeminente aserita; filho de Jeter. — 1Cr 7:38, 40.

PISTACHE. Veja PISTÁCIA, NOZ DE.

PISTÁCIA, NOZ DE [hebr.: bot·náh]. O fruto da Pistacia vera. Esta árvore decídua viceja em áreas secas e raramente chega a atingir mais de 9 m. As nozes medem de 1,5 a 2 cm de comprimento e crescem em grandes cachos. A casca fina, porém dura, de coloração clara, das nozes maduras da pistácia, é recoberta de um folhelho um tanto enrugado. Cada noz contém uma amêndoa verde-amarelada, coberta de fina pele avermelhada. A amêndoa tem um sabor brando, adocicado, e é comumente comida crua ou frita. Às vezes as amêndoas são esmagadas para a extração do óleo, e amêndoas moídas são usadas em confeitos.

As nozes da pistácia figuravam entre "os produtos mais excelentes do país" de Canaã, que foram levados pelos filhos de Jacó como presente para aquele que era governante no Egito. (Gên 43:11) Mesmo em tempos modernos, grandes quantidades de nozes de pistácia são exportadas de partes do Oriente Médio.

A cidade de Betonim, situada a E do Jordão, no território de Gade, parece ter derivado seu nome das nozes de pistácia. — Jos 13:24, 26.

PITOM, I [do egípcio, significando "Casa [Templo] de Atum"]. Uma das duas cidades-armazéns construídas no Egito pelos israelitas escravizados, a outra sendo Ramsés. (Êx 1:11) Ainda não se fez nenhuma identificação definitiva do lugar. Os arqueólogos aparentemente têm sido influenciados em suas conclusões pelo conceito popular de que o faraó da opressão israelita era Ramsés II, conceito este que não é solidamente fundado. — Veja RAMSÉS, RAMESSÉS.

PITOM, II. Descendente do Rei Saul por meio de Jonatã e Meribe-Baal (Mefibosete). — 1Cr 8:33-35; 9:39-41.

PLANALTO. O termo hebraico mi·shóhr, traduzido por "planalto", deriva-se duma raiz que significa "ser reto, direito". Esta palavra hebraica pode referir-se a "planície" em contraste com terreno montanhoso ou colinoso (1Rs 20:23, 25; Is 40:4; 42:16; Za 4:7) e pode significar "retidão" (Sal 27:11; 45:6; 67:4; 143:10; Is 11:4), ou designar uma situação livre de obstáculos. (Sal 26:12) Às vezes, mi·shóhr aplica-se ao planalto situado ao E do Mar

Morto, entre Hésbon, no N, e o vale da torrente do Árnon, no S. — De 3:10; Jos 13:9, 15-17; 20:8.

PLANÍCIE. Terra relativamente plana, em contraste com regiões colinosas ou montanhosas. As Escrituras Hebraicas são bem explícitas em seu uso de diferentes palavras para identificar ou descrever vários tipos de terreno.

O termo hebraico, 'ara·váh, é usado tanto como nome de uma região específica como palavra descritiva de determinado tipo de terreno. (Veja ARABÁ.) Quando empregado sem o artigo definido, 'ara·váh indica uma planície desértica ou estepe, como as de Moabe e de Jericó. (Núm 22:1; 35:1; Jos 5:10; 13:32; Je 52:8) Embora talvez houvesse rios que supriam alguma água para a região, 'ara·váh em geral destaca que a planície é árida. Assim, seria bem uma inversão das coisas tornar-se a planície fértil e bem regada de Sarom uma planície desértica (Is 33:9), ou virem torrentes de água à planície desértica. — Is 35:1, 6; 51:3.

A palavra biq·'áh indicava uma planície ampla, delimitada por montes. Vem dum verbo que significa "fender" e pode ser corretamente traduzido por "vale plano". Até mesmo hoje, o amplo vale plano entre as cordilheiras do Antilíbano e as montanhas do Líbano é conhecido como Beqa'. (Jos 11:17) Não raro, nas Escrituras, biq·'áh ou "vale plano" é colocado em contraste com montanhas ou colinas (De 8:7; 11:11; Sal 104:8; Is 41:18), ou terrenos escarpados ou acidentados. (Is 40:4) A palavra aramaica aparentada, que aparece em Daniel 3:1, é muitas vezes traduzida apenas por "planície", referindo-se ao local em que Nabucodonosor ergueu a imagem de ouro.

Uma longa planície baixa ou vale era designado pelo termo hebraico 'é·meq. A palavra significa "uma longa e ampla extensão de terra entre cadeias paralelas de colinas, de menor extensão que o termo precedente [biq·'áh], . . . ['é·meq] contendo a ideia de pouca elevação e de largura, em vez de um relevo cheio de precipícios ou de confinamento". (Cyclopœdia [Ciclopédia] de M'Clintock e Strong, Vol. X, p. 703) A palavra hebraica é aplicada a muitas localidades diferentes, tais como a "baixada de Acor", e "a baixada de Aijalom", e a "baixada de Refaim". — Jos 7:24; 10:12; 1Cr 11:15.

PLANTA VENENOSA. Embora alguns sugiram uma equivalência entre a palavra hebraica ro'sh (ou rohsh) e a cicuta, a colocíntida ou a papoula, não é possível fazer uma identificação precisa desta planta. O termo hebraico às vezes se refere a (1) uma planta amarga e venenosa (La 3:5, 19), (2) ao veneno ou "peçonha" (De 32:33; Jó 20:16), e, (3) quando usado com relação à água, a água venenosa (Je 8:14; 9:15; 23:15). Ele aparece, em sentido ilustrativo, com referência à perversão da justiça (Os 10:4; Am 6:12) e aos que apostatam. — De 29:18; compare isso com At 8:23; He 12:15.

A respeito do Messias, foi predito que lhe seria ministrada, como alimento, uma "planta venenosa". (Sal 69:21) Isto ocorreu quando se ofereceu a Jesus Cristo, antes de ser pregado na estaca, vinho misturado com fel, mas, ao prová-lo, Jesus recusou tal bebida estupefaciente que, provavelmente, visava minorar seus sofrimentos. Ao registrar o cumprimento dessa profecia, Mateus (27:34) usou a palavra grega kho·lé (fel), o mesmo termo encontrado na Septuaginta grega no Salmo 69:21. No entanto, o relato do Evangelho de Marcos menciona a mirra (Mr 15:23), e isto tem suscitado o conceito de que, neste caso, a "planta venenosa" ou "fel" fosse a "mirra". Outra possibilidade é que a bebida drogada talvez contivesse tanto fel como mirra.

PLÁTANO [hebr.: 'er·móhn]. Árvore de aparência majestosa, que chega a atingir uns 20 m de altura, com ramos bem espalhados e largas folhas verde-escuras, semelhante às da videira, que produz uma ótima sombra. A circunferência do seu tronco não raro chega a 3 ou 4 m. O plátano (Platanus orientalis) anualmente se descasca, perdendo a camada externa em tiras ou seções, e expondo logo abaixo a casca interna, lisa e esbranquiçada.

O nome desta árvore, em hebraico, provém possivelmente do verbo 'a·ráh, que significa "expor". (Sof 2:14; Is 22:6) Gênesis 30:37, 38 diz que Jacó colocou varas desta árvore, junto com as de outras, diante dos rebanhos de Labão, em Harã, na Síria. As varas haviam sido descascadas, "expondo", ou revelando, "lugares brancos".

Sem realmente ser um rival à altura, essa árvore era digna de ser comparada ao majestoso cedro-do-líbano, que Ezequiel usou como figura de Faraó e toda a sua massa de gente. — Ez 31:8.

Podem-se encontrar plátanos ao longo de rios e de córregos por toda a Síria, e na região da antiga Assíria, bem como em menor grau na Palestina e no Líbano.

PÓ. Diminutas partículas de matéria, suficientemente leves para serem erguidas e transportadas com facilidade pelas correntes aéreas. Fortes ventos sobre regiões desérticas secas, comuns nas terras bíblicas, não raro produzem violentas tempestades de pó, tidas por alguns como mais apavorantes do que as tempestades marítimas. Erupções vulcânicas, incêndios e atividades agrícolas são algumas das causas comuns de pó mineral. A matéria vegetal produz pó em forma de pólen, humos, fibras de plantas e partículas de sementes. Também os animais indiretamente produzem pó, resultante de esterco seco, pelos finos e bactérias. A palavra bíblica mais comum para pó é 'a·fár, que também pode significar "terra seca" e "reboco". — Gên 26:15; Le 14:41, 42.

Embora alguns talvez encarem o pó como incômodo, trata-se duma provisão do Criador, essencial para a existência e o bem-estar da humanidade. É um importante fator na condensação de umidade em forma de chuva, nevoeiro ou neblina, vitais para o crescimento das plantas. Ademais, sem a capacidade do pó atmosférico de dispersar a luz, os olhos das criaturas terrenas ficariam expostos ao insuportável brilho dos raios diretos do sol, e o conhecido fenômeno dos penumbrosos e belamente coloridos pores do sol deixaria de acontecer.

O Criador empregou "pó do solo" quando formou o primeiro homem (Gên 2:7; 1Co 15:47, 48), e, quando Adão foi sentenciado por ter desobedecido à lei de Deus, Jeová decretou: "Ao pó voltarás." (Gên 3:19) Deus também pronunciou uma maldição de grande significado profético ao dizer à serpente no Éden: "Sobre o teu ventre andarás e pó é o que comerás [ou, morderás] todos os dias da tua vida." — Gên 3:14.

Fragilidade, Mortalidade e Condição Humilde. Em vista de o homem ter decaído da perfeição, o pó, às vezes, é usado como símbolo da fragilidade humana. Deus é misericordioso com os que o temem, 'lembrando-se de que somos pó'. (Sal 103:13, 14; Gên 18:27) É também simbólico da mortalidade dos humanos, pois, na morte, "retornam ao seu pó". (Sal 104:29; Ec 3:19, 20; 12:1, 7) Visto que o homem, ao morrer, retorna ao pó, o túmulo às vezes é, em sentido figurado, chamado de "pó". (Sal 22:29; 30:9) O pó do solo pode denotar uma condição humilde. Jeová é "Quem levanta do pó o de condição humilde". — 1Sa 2:8; Sal 113:7.

Representa Numerosidade. Nas Escrituras, a numerosidade de pessoas, ou a incapacidade de os humanos dizerem de quantos eles se compõem, é indicada por compará-los a partículas de pó. Assim, Deus prometeu a Abrão (Abraão): "Vou fazer o teu descendente semelhante às partículas de pó da terra." (Gên 13:14, 16) Jeová fez também uma promessa similar a Jacó. (Gên 28:10, 13, 14) A respeito dos israelitas durante a sua jornada no ermo, Balaão perguntou: "Quem computou as partículas de pó de Jacó, e quem contou a quarta parte de Israel?" (Núm 23:10) Jeová aumentara grandemente a prole de Abraão por meio de Isaque e Jacó. Faz-se menção da grande quantidade de codornizes que Jeová forneceu a seu povo pactuado no ermo com a declaração de que ele "passou a fazer chover sobre eles sustento qual pó, sim, criaturas voadoras aladas quais os grãos de areia dos mares". — Sal 78:27; Êx 16:11-18; Núm 11:31, 32.

Uso no Julgamento de Deus Contra as Nações. Devido à relativa insignificância das nações do ponto de vista de Deus, ele as considera como "a camada fina de pó na balança". (Is 40:15) O atemorizante poder de Jeová se manifestou durante os Seus golpes contra uma de tais nações, o Egito. Quando o terceiro golpe estava para começar, segundo a ordem de Deus a Moisés, "Arão estendeu sua mão com o seu bastão e golpeou o pó da terra, e houve borrachudos em homem e animal". Quando isto aconteceu em todo o Egito, os sacerdotes-magos, incapazes de repetir esse milagre, tiveram de admitir: "É o dedo de Deus!" — Êxodo 8:16-19.

Também aos israelitas se disse que, se deixassem de obedecer aos mandamentos de Deus, poderiam esperar várias maldições, uma destas sendo a seca, pois fora dito: "Jeová dará poeira e pó como chuva da tua terra. Descerá sobre ti desde os céus até que tenhas sido aniquilado." — De 28:15, 24.

Símbolo de Lamentação e Degradação. Para simbolizar seu lamento pesaroso por causa da destruição de Jerusalém pelos babilônios em 607 AEC, os anciãos da cidade são representados como que sentados no chão em silêncio, tendo 'posto pó sobre a sua cabeça'. (La 2:10) Muitos anos antes, por meio de Isaías, Jeová profeticamente convocou Babilônia a descer de seu trono, dizendo: "Desce e senta-te no pó, ó virgem filha de Babilônia. Senta-te no chão, onde não há trono, ó filha dos caldeus." (Is 47:1) Babilônia foi reduzida a esta condição rebaixada em 539 AEC, quando foi conquistada pelos medos e persas. E, por causa da destruição da simbólica Babilônia, a Grande, os capitães de navio, os viajantes, os marujos e todos os que vivem do mar são representados como que lançando pó sobre suas cabeças e lamentando a devastação dela. — Re 18:17-19.

Outros Usos. O pó, biblicamente, relaciona-se também com o arrependimento. Quando Jó fez uma retratação por ter falado sem entendimento ao arguir seu caso perante Deus, ele disse: "Deveras me arrependo em pó e cinzas." — Jó 42:1, 3, 6.

Fazer os inimigos 'lamber o pó' significa derrotá-los, subjugando-os por completo. (Sal 72:9; Miq 7:16, 17) Lançar pó ao ar ou lançá-lo sobre uma pessoa eram meios de registrar que havia contra ela uma forte desaprovação. É costumeiro, em partes da Ásia, exigir que se faça justiça contra um criminoso por lançar poeira sobre ele. Enraivecida sem razão por certas palavras de Paulo, uma multidão em Jerusalém demonstrou sua animosidade contra ele por 'atirarem poeira no ar'. Por meio de sua demonstração emotiva e de suas palavras, deixaram claro perante o comandante militar que desaprovavam Paulo. (At 22:22-24) Similarmente, Simei manifestou que desaprovava a realeza de Davi por 'manter o passo com ele para invocar o mal; e atirava pedras ao manter o passo com ele e jogava muito pó'. — 2Sa 16:5-13.

Jesus Cristo ordenou a seus discípulos que, se alguém não os recebesse ou não ouvisse as palavras deles, deviam sacudir ou remover o pó dos seus pés ao saírem daquela casa ou daquela cidade. Tal costume servia de "testemunho contra eles", dando a entender que os seguidores de Jesus partiam pacificamente e deixavam aquela casa ou cidade entregue às consequências que lhe adviriam da parte de Deus. — Mt 10:11-15; Lu 9:5; 10:10-12; At 13:50, 51.

POBRE. Desprovido de bens materiais ou das necessidades da vida; às vezes, inferior em qualidade; também, deplorável por causa de deficiência espiritual.

O problema da pobreza é bem antigo. No decorrer dos séculos, os necessitados, em geral, têm ultrapassado em número os que dispõem de muito. Ao aceitar certo ato de generosidade, Jesus reconheceu a dura realidade de que a pobreza continuaria a persistir entre os humanos que vivem em imperfeição, dizendo a seus discípulos: "Porque vós sempre tendes convosco os pobres, e quando quiserdes, podeis sempre fazer-lhes bem, mas a mim nem sempre tendes." (Mr 14:7) A Bíblia apresenta um conceito equilibrado desse problema, expressando compaixão para com os que sofrem sob condições opressivas, ao passo que também reprova os que, efetivamente, 'comem a sua própria carne', por causa da indolência. (Ec 4:1, 5; Pr 6:6-11) Sublinha a prosperidade espiritual acima da prosperidade material (1Ti 6:17-19); por isso, o apóstolo escreveu: "Pois não trouxemos nada ao mundo, nem podemos levar nada embora. Assim, tendo sustento e com que nos cobrir, estaremos contentes com estas coisas." (1Ti 6:7, 8) As Escrituras, porém, não apresentam a pobreza material como virtude em si, e alertam contra a tentação de roubar que a extrema pobreza pode trazer. — Pr 6:30, 31; 30:8, 9; contraste isso com Ef 4:28.

Os Pobres em Israel. Não era do propósito de Jeová que algum israelita fosse pobre. Deu-se à nação uma herança de terra. (Núm 34:2-12) Todas as famílias israelitas, excetuando-se os levitas, que recebiam um décimo dos produtos da terra por seus serviços no santuário, compartilhavam dessa herança, e, por conseguinte, tinham meios de sustentar-se. (Núm 18:20, 21) As propriedades de terra eram garantidas. As leis de herança asseguravam que a terra continuaria a pertencer à família ou à tribo a que pertencia. (Núm 27:7-11; 36:6-9; De 21:15-17; veja HERANÇA.) Ela não podia ser vendida de forma definitiva. (Le 25:23) No ano do jubileu, todas as terras hereditárias que haviam sido vendidas eram devolvidas aos proprietários de direito. (Le 25:13) Assim, mesmo que um homem esbanjasse seus bens, a sua posteridade não perderia para sempre a sua herança.

A aderência fiel à lei de Deus teria impedido grandemente a existência de pobreza entre os israelitas. (De 15:4, 5) Contudo, se fossem desobedientes, eles não teriam a bênção de Jeová, e isto levaria ao empobrecimento, em virtude de calamidades tais como invasões de exércitos inimigos e severas secas. (De 28:22-25; compare isso com Jz 6:1-6; 1Rs 17:1; 18:17, 18; Tg 5:17, 18.) Podia acontecer de indivíduos, por serem preguiçosos (Pr 6:10, 11; 10:4; 19:15; 20:13; 24:30-34), beberrões, glutões (Pr 23:21) ou amantes dos prazeres (Pr 21:17), trazerem a pobreza sobre si mesmos e suas famílias. Poderiam, também, surgir circunstâncias imprevistas que mergulhariam as pessoas na pobreza. A morte podia deixar órfãos e viúvas. Acidentes e doenças podiam impedir uma pessoa, de forma temporária ou permanente, de realizar o trabalho necessário. Por estes motivos, Jeová podia dizer a Israel: "Nunca deixará de haver pobre no meio do país." — De 15:11.

A Lei, contudo, contribuía muito para tornar mais fácil para os pobres enfrentar a sua situação. Durante a colheita, eles tinham o direito de respigar nos campos, nos pomares e nos vinhedos, e, assim, não eram obrigados a mendigar o pão ou recorrer ao roubo. (Le 19:9, 10; 23:22; De 24:19-21) Um israelita necessitado podia pedir dinheiro emprestado sem ter de pagar juros, e devia-se-lhe mostrar um espírito de generosidade. (Êx 22:25; Le 25:35-37; De 15:7-10; veja DÍVIDA, DEVEDOR.) Para aumentar seus recursos financeiros, ele podia vender suas terras ou vender-se como escravo, em base temporária. (Le 25:25-28, 39-54) Para não criar dificuldades para os pobres, a Lei lhes permitia apresentar ofertas de menor valor, no santuário. — Le 12:8; 14:21, 22; 27:8.

A lei de Deus prescrevia igual justiça tanto para os ricos como para os pobres, não favorecendo nem um nem outro por causa de sua posição. (Êx 23:3, 6; Le 19:15) Mas, quando a nação de Israel resvalava para a infidelidade, os pobres sofriam muita opressão. — Is 10:1, 2; Je 2:34.

No Primeiro Século EC. Parece que prevalecia considerável pobreza entre os judeus no primeiro século EC. O domínio estrangeiro desde o tempo do exílio babilônico tinha sem dúvida interferido na aplicação da Lei mosaica, que protegia as possessões hereditárias. (Compare isso com Ne 9:36, 37.) Os líderes religiosos, em especial os fariseus, preocupavam-se mais com a tradição do que com instilar genuíno amor ao próximo e a devida consideração para com os pais idosos e necessitados. (Mt 15:5, 6; 23:23; compare isso com Lu 10:29-32.) Os fariseus amantes do dinheiro pouco se interessavam pelos pobres. — Lu 16:14.

Cristo Jesus, porém, 'sentia compaixão das multidões, porque andavam sendo esfoladas e empurradas dum lado para o outro como ovelhas sem pastor'. (Mt 9:36) Tão marcante era o contraste entre sua declaração de boas novas aos pobres e oprimidos e a atitude dos líderes religiosos do judaísmo que isto constituía uma das provas de que Jesus era deveras o Messias. (Mt 11:5; Lu 4:18; 7:22) Aos receptivos abriu-se também o glorioso privilégio de herdarem o Reino celestial. — Mt 5:3; Lu 6:20.

Estando numa relação pactuada com Deus, os judeus tinham a obrigação de ajudar os israelitas necessitados. (Pr 14:21; 28:27; Is 58:6, 7; Ez 18:7-9) Reconhecendo isto, Zaqueu, ao aceitar Jesus como Messias, exclamou: "Eis que a metade dos meus bens, Senhor, dou aos pobres." (Lu 19:8) Pela mesma razão, Cristo Jesus pôde dizer: "Quando ofereceres uma festa, convida os pobres, os aleijados, os coxos, os cegos; e serás feliz, porque eles não têm nada com que te pagar de volta." (Lu 14:13, 14) Noutra ocasião, ele incentivou um rico governante jovem: "Vende todas as coisas que tens e distribui aos pobres, e terás um tesouro nos céus; e vem ser meu seguidor." (Lu 18:22) Não estar este homem disposto a despojar-se de seus bens para ajudar outros mostrava que ele não tinha verdadeiro interesse nos oprimidos, e, assim, não tinha as qualidades exigidas para ser um discípulo de Jesus. — Lu 18:23.

O encorajamento de Jesus para ajudar os pobres harmonizava-se com o que ele mesmo fizera. Como Filho de Deus nos céus, ele dispusera de tudo. Mas, "embora fosse rico, tornou-se pobre". Como homem pobre, na Terra, Jesus pôde redimir a raça humana, tornando disponível a maior das riquezas, isto é, a perspectiva de seus seguidores tornarem-se filhos de Deus. (2Co 8:9) Adicionalmente, outras grandes riquezas espirituais se tornaram disponíveis para eles. — Compare isso com 2Co 6:10; Re 2:9; 3:17, 18.

Além disso, enquanto estava na Terra, Jesus pessoalmente se interessou pelos materialmente pobres. Ele e seus apóstolos tinham um fundo comum do qual ajudavam os israelitas carentes. (Mt 26:9-11; Mr 14:5-7; Jo 12:5-8; 13:29) A mesma preocupação amorosa pelos pobres foi evidenciada pelos cristãos em anos posteriores, ao suprirem ajuda material a seus irmãos pobres. (Ro 15:26; Gál 2:10) Mas, alguns se esqueceram disso, tornando necessário que o discípulo Tiago os repreendesse por mostrarem favoritismo aos ricos e desprezarem os pobres. — Tg 2:2-9.

Naturalmente, apenas os merecedores recebiam ajuda material. De forma alguma se incentivava a preguiça. Como o apóstolo Paulo escreveu aos tessalonicenses: "Se alguém não quiser trabalhar, tampouco coma." — 2Te 3:10; veja DÁDIVAS DE MISERICÓRDIA; MENDIGO, MENDIGAR.

POÇO. A palavra hebraica be'ér, traduzida "poço", geralmente designa uma cova ou buraco cavado no solo para extrair um suprimento natural de água. O termo be'ér aparece em nomes de lugares tais como Beer-Laai-Roi (Gên 16:14), Berseba (Gên 21:14), Beer (Núm 21:16-18) e Beer-Elim (Is 15:8). Esta palavra significa "poço" (Gên 14:10), e, nos Salmos 55:23 e 69:15 parece indicar a sepultura. É usada metaforicamente para referir-se a uma esposa ou mulher amada. (Pr 5:15; Cân 4:15) E Provérbios 23:27, onde a mulher estrangeira é assemelhada a um poço estreito, pode fazer alusão a que obter água de tal poço amiúde envolve dificuldades, pois os jarros de barro se quebram facilmente nas laterais do poço. — Veja FONTE, MANANCIAL.

Nas terras que passam por uma longa estação seca, especialmente as regiões desérticas, desde tempos remotos os poços têm tido grande importância. Parece que, nos tempos antigos, a utilização não autorizada de poços era encarada como violação dos direitos de propriedade. (Núm 20:17, 19; 21:22) A escassez de água e o trabalho envolvido em cavar poços os tornavam bens valiosos. Não raro a posse de poços dava origem a violentas disputas e contendas. Por este motivo, o patriarca Abraão, em certa ocasião, estabeleceu formalmente seu direito de propriedade sobre um poço em Berseba. (Gên 21:25-31; 26:20, 21) Depois de sua morte, porém, os filisteus desconsideraram os direitos do filho e herdeiro dele, Isaque, e taparam os próprios poços que os servos de Abraão haviam escavado. — Gên 26:15, 18.

Em muitos casos os poços eram cercados de muretas, e mantidos cobertos por grande pedra, sem dúvida para impedir a penetração de sujeira, e evitar que animais e pessoas caíssem neles. (Gên 29:2, 3; Êx 2:15, 16) Perto de alguns poços havia bebedouros ou calhas para dar água aos animais domésticos. (Gên 24:20; Êx 2:16-19) Por todas as colinas da Palestina, cavavam-se poços na pedra calcária, e não raro se escavavam na rocha degraus que conduziam até a água. Em alguns poços, depois de descer, a pessoa simplesmente tirava água mergulhando nela um recipiente. No entanto, de fontes bem profundas a água era comumente retirada com um balde de couro (Núm 24:7) ou um jarro de barro (Gên 24:16), suspenso por uma corda. — Veja FONTE DE JACÓ.

PODADEIRA. Veja IMPLEMENTOS AGRÍCOLAS.

PODÃO. Esta é a tradução da palavra hebraica ma·ʽatsádh, que denota uma ferramenta usada para talhar madeira e até mesmo ferro. (Je 10:3; Is 44:12) A raiz de onde este termo hebraico se supõe seja tirado tem sido relacionada com palavras em línguas aparentadas que significam "ceifar", "decepar". Assim, Koehler e Baumgartner definem ma·ʽatsádh como "podão". (Lexicon in Veteris Testamenti Libros [Léxico dos Livros do Velho Testamento], Leiden, 1958, p. 550) O moderno podão consiste em um cabo e uma lâmina com ponta em forma de gancho. Contudo, outros entendem que ma·ʽatsádh designe um tipo de machado, visto que este é seu significado no hebraico posterior, e sugerem que pode referir-se a uma enxó.

PODER, OBRAS PODEROSAS. O poder é a capacidade de realizar ações, a aptidão de realizar coisas, de trabalhar; também, autoridade ou influência em resultado de dotações ou cargo. A palavra hebraica kó·ahh é traduzida "poder"; gevu·ráh, "potência"; e ʽoz, "força". O grego dý·na·mis é traduzido tanto por "poder" como por "obras poderosas", conforme o contexto torna apropriado.

No fim do sexto "dia" criativo, Deus começou "[a repousar] de toda a sua obra que . . . criara com o objetivo de a fazer". (Gên 2:2, 3) Ele repousou dessas obras criativas, mas seu poder desde então não ficou dormente nem permaneceu inerte. Mais de 4.000 anos depois de terminada a criação terrestre, seu Filho declarou: "Meu Pai tem estado trabalhando até agora e eu estou trabalhando." (Jo 5:17) Jeová tem estado ativo não apenas com relação ao domínio espiritual; o registro bíblico vibra com Suas expressões de poder e Seus atos poderosos para com a humanidade. Embora ele às vezes 'ficasse quieto exercendo autodomínio', sempre que seu tempo devido para agir chegou ele tomou ação vigorosa com "plena potência". — Is 42:13, 14, compare isso com Sal 80:2; Is 63:15.

"Trabalho" indica atividade que visa um objetivo. Os atos de Jeová não são expressões isoladas, não relacionadas ou aleatórias de energia, mas são atos coordenados e objetivos, que visam um fim definido. Embora seu poder sustente o universo e as criaturas vivas que nele há (Sal 136:25; 148:2-6; Mt 5:45), Jeová não é como uma impessoal usina de força; seus atos demonstram que Ele é um Deus pessoal e objetivo. É também um Deus histórico, uma vez que interferiu de forma perceptível nos assuntos humanos em datas definidas da história, em lugares específicos, e com respeito a determinadas pessoas ou povos. Como "Deus vivente e verdadeiro" (1Te 1:9; Jos 3:10; Je 10:10), ele se tem mostrado cônscio de tudo o que acontece no universo, reagindo ao que ocorre, bem como tomando a iniciativa de promover o seu propósito.

Em todos os casos, as suas variadas expressões de poder têm sido em harmonia com a sua justiça (Sal 98:1, 2; 111:2, 3, 7; Is 5:16); todas elas resultam em esclarecimento para suas criaturas. Mostram, por um lado, que temer a ele "é próprio", pois ele é um Deus "que exige devoção exclusiva" e "um fogo consumidor" contra os que praticam a iniquidade, fazendo com que seja 'coisa terrível cair nas mãos do Deus vivente'. (Je 10:6, 7; Êx 20:5; He 10:26-31; 12:28, 29) Não é alguém de quem se deva zombar. — Êx 8:29.

Por outro lado, seu uso do poder manifesta-se ainda mais maravilhosamente na recompensa que dá a pessoas retas de coração que sinceramente o buscam, fortalecendo-as para executar tarefas designadas e serviços necessários (Sal 84:5-7; Is 40:29-31), bem como para perseverar sob tensão (Sal 46:1; Is 25:4), para fazer-lhes provisões e ampará-las (Sal 145:14-16), proteger, salvar e libertá-las em épocas de perigo e agressão. (Sal 20:6, 7) "Seus olhos percorrem toda a terra, para mostrar a sua força a favor daqueles cujo coração é pleno para com ele." (2Cr 16:9) Os que vêm a conhecê-lo verificam que Seu nome é "uma torre forte" na qual se podem refugiar. (Pr 18:10; Sal 91:1-8) Conhecer seus atos poderosos dá garantia de que ele ouve as orações dos servos que nele confiam, e que pode responder, se necessário, com "coisas atemorizantes em justiça". (Sal 65:2, 5) Em sentido figurado, ele está "perto", podendo, assim, atender com rapidez. — Sal 145:18, 19; Ju 24, 25.

O Poder Manifesto na Criação. Os humanos veem evidência de poder em toda a criação física, nos vastos e incontáveis corpos estelares (veja Jó 38:31-33), bem como em tudo o que existe na terra. Fala-se do próprio solo como tendo poder (Gên 4:12), produzindo alimentos que dão força (1Sa 28:22), e vê-se poder em todas as coisas vivas — plantas, animais e o homem. Nos tempos modernos, o tremendo poder em potencial até mesmo nos minúsculos elementos atômicos que formam toda a matéria também se tornou bem conhecido. Os cientistas, às vezes, chamam a matéria de energia organizada.

Por todas as Escrituras, o poder e a "energia dinâmica" de Deus, como Fazedor do céu e da terra, são repetidas vezes salientados. (Is 40:25, 26; Je 10:12; 32:17) O próprio termo para "Deus" em hebraico ('El) provavelmente tem como significado de raiz "poderoso" ou "potente". (Veja o uso desse termo em Gên 31:29, na expressão "no poder ['el] de minha mão".)

Necessidade de Demonstrações Especiais de Poder. O primeiro homem sabia que Jeová Deus era seu Criador, seu único Genitor e Dador de Vida. Deus deu ao homem certa medida de poder, intelectual e físico, e deu-lhe um trabalho a realizar. (Gên 1:26-28; 2:15) Tal exercício do poder tem de harmonizar-se com a vontade do Criador do homem e, assim, ser governado por outras qualidades divinamente concedidas, como sabedoria, justiça e amor.

A rebelião no Éden apresentou um desafio à soberania de Deus. Sendo primariamente uma questão moral, não obstante, levou Deus a exercer seu poder de maneiras especiais. (Veja JEOVÁ [A questão suprema é de moral].) A rebelião foi instigada por um filho espiritual de Deus que, assim, tornou-se opositor ou oponente (hebr.: sa·tán) de Deus. Jeová reagiu à situação, julgando os rebeldes. Ter Deus expulsado o casal humano do Éden e posicionado criaturas espirituais leais a ele à entrada do jardim era uma demonstração de poder divino. (Gên 3:4, 5, 19, 22-24) A palavra de Jeová mostrou ser, não impotente, nem fraca ou vacilante, mas plena de poder, de cumprimento irresistível. (Compare isso com Je 23:29.) Como Deus Soberano, ele mostrou-se disposto e capaz de apoiar a sua palavra com o pleno peso de sua autoridade.

Firmando seu propósito, Jeová sistematicamente tem trabalhado no intuito de realizá-lo. (Gên 3:15; Ef 1:8-11) No seu devido tempo ele acabaria com toda a rebelião terrena, fazendo com que o espírito rebelde original e seus aliados fossem esmagados assim como se esmaga a cabeça duma serpente. (Veja Ro 16:20.) Embora permitisse que seu Adversário espiritual continuasse a existir por algum tempo e tentasse provar ser bem-sucedido o seu desafio, Jeová não abdicaria de sua posição soberana. Exercendo autoridade legítima, ele recompensaria ou puniria quando e como achasse apropriado, julgando os homens segundo as suas ações. (Êx 34:6, 7; Je 32:17-19) Adicionalmente, ele usaria seu poder para confirmar as credenciais daqueles a quem designaria como representantes seus na terra. Por revelar o Seu poder, ele colocaria o selo de autenticidade nas mensagens que eles transmitissem.

Isto tem sido uma benignidade divina. Desse modo Jeová tem dado aos homens provas de que ele, e ninguém mais, é o Deus verdadeiro; tem-se provado merecedor de receber o temor, o respeito, a confiança, o louvor e o amor de suas criaturas inteligentes. (Sal 31:24; 86:16, 17; Is 41:10-13) No decorrer dos séculos, Jeová repetidas vezes assegurou seus servos de que seu poder não desvanecera, que sua "mão" não havia 'encurtado' e que seu "ouvido" não se tornara pesado demais para ouvir. (Núm 11:23; Is 40:28; 50:2; 59:1) O que é mais importante, essas expressões de poder têm magnificado o próprio nome de Jeová. Seu uso do poder o enaltece, não o rebaixa, não macula a sua reputação; ao contrário, por meio dele ele faz para si mesmo "um belo nome". — Jó 36:22, 23; 37:23, 24; Is 63:12-14.

Antes e Durante o Dilúvio Global. No período antediluviano, os homens tiveram ampla evidência do poder de Deus. Sabiam que o caminho de volta ao Éden era intransponível, bloqueado por poderosas criaturas espirituais. Deus mostrou que acompanhava os acontecimentos, aprovou o sacrifício de Abel, expressou julgamento contra seu irmão assassino Caim, não obstante, avisou os homens contra executarem Caim. — Gên 3:24; 4:2-15.

Uns 1.400 anos depois, a terra ficou cheia de iniquidade e violência. (Gên 6:1-5, 11, 12) Deus expressou seu desagrado por essa situação. Depois de soar aviso por meio de seu servo Noé, ele demonstrou enfaticamente por meio de um Dilúvio global que não permitiria que homens iníquos arruinassem a terra. Ele não usou seu poder para forçá-los a adorá-lo, mas, por meio da obra de Noé qual "pregador da justiça", deu-lhes a oportunidade de mudar. Ao mesmo tempo, mostrou sua habilidade de libertar os justos de circunstâncias ruins. (2Pe 2:4, 5, 9) Assim como seu julgamento contra os iníquos foi executado subitamente e a destruição deles por ele não 'cochilou', mas os exterminou num período de 40 dias, ele agiria de maneiras similares no futuro. — 2Pe 2:3; Gên 7:17-23; Mt 24:37-39.

Desafio de Deuses Falsos na Era Pós-Diluviana. Tanto as Escrituras como os antigos registros seculares falam do desvio da adoração do Deus verdadeiro por parte dos homens, no período pós-diluviano. Há forte evidência de que Ninrode, que "apresentou-se como poderoso caçador em oposição a Jeová", desempenhou um papel importante nisso; e há evidência que aponta para Babel (Babilônia) como o principal local em que a adoração falsa se desenvolveu. (Gên 10:8-12; 11:1-4, 9; veja BABEL; BABILÔNIA N.º 1; DEUSES E DEUSAS.) O projeto da torre proposto em Babel era uma demonstração do poder e habilidade humanos, independente de Deus, não autorizado por ele. Traria prestígio e fama a seus construtores, não a Deus. E, como Deus se apercebia, isto seria apenas o começo. Poderia levar a uma série de ambiciosos projetos de poder, que arrastaria os homens para um proceder cada vez mais distante do Deus verdadeiro, em desafio a ele e a seu propósito para com o planeta e a raça humana. Mais uma vez, Deus interveio, lançando o projeto em confusão por agir sobre a faculdade humana da fala, levando as pessoas a se dispersarem por todo o globo. — Gên 11:5-9.

"Deuses da natureza" em contraste com o Deus verdadeiro. Antigos documentos de Babilônia e de pontos de migração da humanidade mostram que a adoração de "deuses da natureza" (tais como o babilônio deus-sol, Xamaxe, e o deus cananeu da fertilidade, Baal) tornou-se muito destacada naqueles tempos primitivos. Na mente dos homens, os "deuses da natureza" se relacionavam com periódicas ou cíclicas manifestações de poder, tais como a diária emissão dos raios do sol, os efeitos sazonais de solstícios e equinócios (produzindo verão e inverno, primavera e outono), os ventos e tempestades, a chuva e seu efeito sobre a fertilidade da terra na sementeira e na colheita, e similares evidências de poder. Essas forças são impessoais. De modo que os homens tinham de preencher os vazios, suprindo personalidade para seus deuses por meio de sua própria imaginação. As personalidades que evocaram para seus deuses geralmente eram volúveis; não tinham nenhum objetivo definido, eram moralmente degradadas e indignas de receber adoração e culto.

Todavia, os visíveis céus e terra fornecem clara prova da existência de uma Fonte superior de poder que produziu todas essas forças num arranjo inter-relacionado e coordenado, que fornece inegável evidência de haver objetivo inteligente. É a esta Fonte que se dirige a ovação: "Digno és, Jeová, sim, nosso Deus, de receber a glória, e a honra, e o poder, porque criaste todas as coisas e porque elas existiram e foram criadas por tua vontade." (Re 4:11) Jeová não é um Deus governado por ciclos celestiais ou terrestres, nem limitado a estes. Tampouco as suas expressões de poder são extravagantes, excêntricas ou incoerentes. Em todos os casos, elas revelam algo sobre a sua personalidade, suas normas, seu propósito. O Theological Dictionary of the New Testament (Dicionário Teológico do Novo Testamento), editado por G. Kittel, ao discorrer sobre o conceito de Deus contido nas Escrituras Hebraicas, observa que "o aspecto importante e predominante não é a força ou o poder, mas o objetivo que esse poder tem de executar e, por conseguinte, servir. Este é em toda a parte o aspecto decisivo". — Traduzido (para o inglês) e editado por G. Bromiley, 1971, Vol. II, p. 291.

A adoração que os israelitas prestavam a tais "deuses da natureza" era apostasia, a supressão da verdade em favor de uma mentira, um proceder desarrazoado de adorar a criação em vez de Aquele que a criou; é isto o que o apóstolo diz em Romanos 1:18-25. Embora invisível, Jeová Deus tornara as suas qualidades manifestas entre os homens, pois, como Paulo diz, estas são "claramente vistas desde a criação do mundo em diante, porque são percebidas por meio das coisas feitas, mesmo seu sempiterno poder e Divindade, de modo que eles são inescusáveis".

Deus exerce controle distintivo sobre as forças naturais. Seria de esperar razoavelmente que, para provar que é o Deus verdadeiro, Jeová demonstrasse seu controle sobre as forças criadas, fazendo-o dum modo que seu nome fosse claramente relacionado com isso. (Sal 135:5, 6) Uma vez que o sol, a lua, os planetas e as estrelas seguem sua trajetória regular, uma vez que as condições atmosféricas terrestres (que produzem o vento, a chuva e outros efeitos) obedecem às leis que as regem, e uma vez que os gafanhotos formam bandos e as aves migram, estas e muitas outras funções normais não bastariam para santificar o nome de Deus em face da oposição e da adoração falsa.

Todavia, Jeová Deus podia fazer com que a criação e os elementos naturais dessem testemunho de sua Divindade por utilizá-los para cumprir objetivos específicos, além de suas funções normais, não raro numa ocasião especificamente determinada. Mesmo quando eventos tais como uma seca, uma tempestade ou uma condição climática similar não fossem ímpares em si mesmos, a sua ocorrência em cumprimento de profecias de Jeová os tornava distintos. (Compare isso com 1Rs 17:1; 18:1, 2, 41-45.) Mas, na maioria dos casos, tais eventos eram extraordinários em si mesmos, quer devido à sua magnitude ou intensidade (Êx 9:24), quer por ocorrerem dum modo incomum, sem precedentes, ou numa ocasião anormal. — Êx 34:10; 1Sa 12:16-18.

Similarmente, o nascimento de uma criança era algo comum. Mas, o nascimento dum filho de uma mulher que tinha sido estéril por toda a sua vida, e que já tinha passado da idade de ter filhos (como no caso de Sara) era extraordinário. (Gên 18:10, 11; 21:1, 2) Deu evidência da intervenção de Deus. A morte, também, era uma ocorrência comum. Mas, quando a morte ocorria numa época predita, ou duma forma previamente anunciada, com um fator causativo desconhecido, isto era algo extraordinário, indicando ação divina. (1Sa 2:34; 2Rs 7:1, 2, 20; Je 28:16, 17) Todas estas coisas provavam que Jeová é o Deus verdadeiro, e que os "deuses da natureza" 'de nada valem'. — Sal 96:5.

Jeová Mostra Ser Deus para Abraão. Abraão e seus favorecidos descendentes, Isaque e Jacó, vieram a conhecer a Deus como o Todo-Poderoso. (Êx 6:3) Como "escudo", ele protegia a eles e a suas famílias contra os poderosos da terra. (Gên 12:14-20; 14:13-20; 15:1; 20:1-18; 26:26-29; Sal 105:7-15) O nascimento de Isaque a pais idosos mostrou que nada é 'extraordinário demais para Jeová'. (Gên 18:14; 21:1-3) Deus deu prosperidade a seus servos; cuidou deles em épocas de fome. (Gên 12:10; 13:1, 2; 26:1-6, 12, 16; 31:4-13) Como "Juiz de toda a terra", Jeová executou sentença contra as infames cidades de Sodoma e Gomorra, ao passo que preservou a vida do fiel Ló e de suas filhas, fazendo isso em consideração a Abraão, seu amigo. (Gên 18:25; 19:27-29; Tg 2:23) Com boa razão esses homens tinham forte fé não apenas que

Deus é vivo, mas também que é o poderoso "recompensador dos que seriamente o buscam". (He 11:6) Abraão, quando solicitado a sacrificar seu filho amado, tinha sólida base para confiar na capacidade de Deus de até mesmo ressuscitar Isaque. — He 11:17-19; Gên 17:7, 8.

Mostra Ser Deus para Israel. Para a nação de Israel, lá no Egito, Jeová prometeu: "Deveras mostrarei ser Deus para vós; e sabereis certamente que eu sou Jeová, vosso Deus." (Êx 6:6, 7) Faraó confiou no poder dos deuses e das deusas do Egito para neutralizar os feitos de Jeová. Deus propositadamente permitiu que Faraó continuasse por algum tempo seu proceder desafiador. A prorrogação das coisas era para que Jeová 'mostrasse seu poder e fizesse com que seu nome fosse declarado em toda a terra'. (Êx 9:13-16; 7:3-5) Isso permitiu que se multiplicassem os "sinais" e os "milagres" de Deus (Sal 105:27), as dez pragas que demonstraram o controle do Criador sobre as águas, a luz do sol, os insetos, os animais e os corpos humanos. — Êx 7-12.

Por meio disso, Jeová mostrou ser diferente dos "deuses da natureza". Essas pragas, incluindo escuridão, tempestade, saraiva, enxames de gafanhotos e eventos similares, foram preditas e aconteceram exatamente como indicadas. Não eram meras coincidências ou ocorrências ao acaso. Avisos antecipados tornaram possível que aqueles que os acatassem escapassem de certas pragas. (Êx 9:18-21; 12:1-13) Deus podia ser seletivo quanto ao efeito das pragas, fazendo com que algumas delas poupassem uma área específica, desse modo identificando quem eram Seus servos aprovados. (Êx 8:22, 23; 9:3-7, 26) Ele podia iniciar ou parar as pragas quando bem entendesse. (Êx 8:8-11; 9:29) Embora os sacerdotes-magos de Faraó pelo que parece puderam duplicar as primeiras duas pragas (talvez até mesmo tentando creditá-las a suas deidades egípcias), as artes secretas deles logo lhes falharam, e eles foram obrigados a reconhecer "o dedo de Deus" na execução da terceira praga. (Êx 7:22; 8:6, 7, 16-19) Não conseguiram reverter as pragas e eles mesmos foram atingidos. — Êx 9:11.

Jeová 'mostrou ser Deus para Israel' e estar 'perto deles' por reivindicá-los com "braço estendido e com grandes julgamentos". (Êx 6:6, 7; De 4:7) Depois da destruição das hostes de Faraó no Mar Vermelho, o povo de Israel "começou a temer a Jeová e a ter fé em Jeová e em Moisés, seu servo". — Êx 14:31.

A instituição do pacto da Lei. Antes de instituir o pacto da Lei com Israel, Jeová realizou milagres, suprindo água e comida para os milhões que então se achavam na região desértica do Sinai e dando vitória sobre os agressores. (Êx 15:22-25; 16:11-15; 17:5-16) No local previamente designado, o monte Sinai, Jeová fez uma atemorizante demonstração de seu controle sobre as forças terrestres criadas. (Êx 19:16-19; compare isso com He 12:18-21.) A nação tinha todos os motivos para reconhecer a Fonte divina do pacto e aceitar seus termos com profundo respeito. (De 4:32-36, 39) A maneira notável de Jeová usar Moisés também forneceu uma base real para que o povo aceitasse com convicção o Pentateuco, a parte inicial das Sagradas Escrituras escritas pela mão de Moisés, como inspirado por Deus. (Veja De 34:10-12; Jos 1:7, 8.) Quando a autoridade do sacerdócio arônico foi questionada, Jeová fez uma confirmação visível adicional. — Núm caps. 16, 17.

A conquista de Canaã. A conquista de sete nações de Canaã, "mais populosas e mais fortes" do que Israel (De 7:1, 2), foi um testemunho adicional em favor da Divindade de Jeová. (Jos 23:3, 8-11) A Sua fama pavimentou o caminho (Êx 9:16; Je 32:20, 21), e 'o pavor e o temor' de Israel como povo de Jeová enfraqueceu os seus opositores. (De 11:25; Êx 15:14-17) Os que se opunham, portanto, eram ainda mais repreensíveis, pois tinham evidência de que esse era o povo do Deus verdadeiro; lutar contra esse povo seria lutar contra Deus. Alguns cananeus sabiamente reconheceram a superioridade de Jeová sobre seus deuses-ídolos, como outros o fizeram antes, e procuraram Seu favor. — Jos 2:1, 9-13.

O sol e a lua param. Ao agir em favor dos sitiados gibeonitas, cananeus que depositaram fé nele, Jeová prolongou a matança que Israel executava nas forças sitiantes fazendo com que o sol e a lua estacionassem nas suas posições em relação ao ponto de vista daqueles que estavam no cenário de batalha, adiando o pôr do sol pelo período de quase um dia. (Jos 10:1-14) Ao passo que isso poderia significar uma parada na rotação da terra, poderia ter sido realizado de outra maneira, como por meio duma refração dos raios da luz solar e lunar para produzir o mesmo efeito. Qualquer que tenha sido o método empregado, isso mais uma vez demonstrou que "Jeová fez tudo o que se agradou em fazer nos céus e na terra, nos mares e em todas as águas de profundeza". (Sal 135:6) Como o apóstolo Paulo mais tarde escreveu: "Cada casa, naturalmente, é construída por alguém, mas quem construiu todas as coisas é Deus." (He 3:4) Jeová faz o que lhe apraz com aquilo que ele mesmo construiu, utilizando-o como lhe convém, assim como faz o homem que constrói uma casa. — Veja 2Rs 20:8-11.

Durante os quatro séculos seguintes, por todo o período dos juízes, Jeová continuou a apoiar os israelitas quando eles eram leais a Ele e a retirar seu apoio quando recorriam a outros deuses. — Jz 6:11-22, 36-40; 4:14-16; 5:31; 14:3, 4, 6, 19; 15:14; 16:15-21, 23-30.

Sob a monarquia israelita. Durante os 510 anos da monarquia israelita, o "braço" poderoso e a "mão" protetora de Jeová muitas vezes imobilizaram poderosos agressores, confundiram e desbarataram as suas forças, e os fizeram fugir de volta para suas terras de origem. Essas nações adoravam não somente "deuses da natureza" mas também deuses (e deusas) da guerra. Às vezes, o próprio chefe da nação era encarado como deus. Visto que eles insistiam em guerrear contra seu povo, Jeová mais uma vez mostrou ser "pessoa varonil de guerra", 'Rei glorioso, poderoso em batalha'. (Êx 15:3; Sal 24:7-10; Is 59:17-19) De fato, ele enfrentou-os em todo tipo de terreno, empregou estratégia de guerra que ludibriou os arrogantes generais inimigos, e derrotou guerreiros de muitas nações, bem como seus equipamentos de guerra especiais. (2Sa 5:22-25; 10:18; 1Rs 20:23-30; 2Cr 14:9-12) Jeová podia fazer com que os planos secretos de batalha dos inimigos fossem do conhecimento de seu povo com tanta exatidão como se tivessem sido instalados instrumentos eletrônicos de escuta nos seus palácios. (2Rs 6:8-12) Às vezes, ele fortalecia seu povo para que este mesmo batalhasse; noutras, ele obteve vitórias sem que seu povo aplicasse um único golpe. (2Rs 7:6, 7; 2Cr 20:15, 17, 22, 24, 29) Com tudo isso, Jeová envergonhou os deuses da guerra das nações, expondo-os como fracassos, fraudes. — Is 41:21-24; Je 10:10-15; 43:10-13.

No exílio e na restauração. Embora Jeová permitisse que a nação fosse ao exílio, o reino setentrional sendo conquistado pela Assíria e o reino de Judá desolado por Babilônia, ele manteve viva a linhagem davídica, em cumprimento de seu pacto com Davi para um reino eterno. (Sal 89:3, 4, 35-37) Durante o período do exílio, ele também manteve viva a fé de seu povo, usando Daniel e outros de maneiras maravilhosas, realizando atos miraculosos que fizeram com que até mesmo governantes mundiais se humilhassem para reconhecer o Seu poder. (Da 3:19-29; 4:34-37; 6:16-23) Com a queda da poderosa Babilônia, Jeová de novo demonstrou sua Divindade ímpar, expôs a irrealidade dos deuses pagãos, e envergonhou-os. Seu povo era testemunha disso. (Is 41:21-29; 43:10-15; 46:1, 2, 5-7) Ele manobrou os reis da Pérsia em favor de Israel, efetuando o livramento de seu povo e seu retorno à sua terra de origem, habilitando-os a reconstruir o templo e, mais tarde, a cidade de Jerusalém. (Esd 1:1-4; 7:6, 27, 28; Ne 1:11; 2:1-8) Esdras corretamente sentiu-se envergonhado de pedir ao rei persa proteção militar para o seu grupo, embora transportassem uma carga que evidentemente valia mais de US$ 43.000.000. Jeová protegeu-os na sua jornada a Jerusalém em resposta às orações deles. — Esd 8:21-27.

No intervalo entre o encerramento da parte das Escrituras Hebraicas da Bíblia e o nascimento do Filho de Deus na terra, o poder de Deus deve ter estado ativo a fim de garantir a preservação da nação de Israel, sua capital Jerusalém, a vizinha cidade de Belém, o templo com o seu sacerdócio e outros aspectos do sistema judaico. Isto porque tudo isso tinha de estar lá para o cumprimento de profecias em Cristo Jesus e sua atividade. A história relata tentativas de substituir o sistema judaico completamente por meio de processos de helenização, isto é, por convertê-lo ao modo grego de adoração. Mas isso por fim fracassou. — Veja GRÉCIA, GREGOS (Efeito da Helenização sobre os Judeus).

"Cristo É o Poder de Deus." Desde o nascimento miraculoso de Jesus, o poder de Deus foi demonstrado para com Jesus, e por meio dele, como nunca antes. Como o salmista, ele se tornou 'para muitos como que um milagre'. (Sal 71:7) Jesus e seus discípulos, como no caso de Isaías e seus filhos, eram como "sinais e como milagres em Israel, da parte de Jeová dos exércitos", pressagiando o futuro e revelando o propósito de Deus. (Is 8:18; He 2:13; compare isso com Lu 2:10-14.) Em Jesus, os poderosos atos de Deus executados durante milhares de anos chegavam então ao seu cumprimento, à concretização. Legitimamente, o apóstolo podia referir-se a Jesus como "o poder de Deus e a sabedoria de Deus". — 1Co 1:24.

Jesus mostrou ser o Messias há muito aguardado, o Ungido de Jeová, que, conforme predito, manifestaria o 'espírito de potência'. (Is 11:1-5) Como tal, seria de esperar que Jesus dispusesse de um poderoso testemunho para apoiar tal realidade. (Miq 5:2-5; compare isso com Jo 7:31.) Já pelo nascimento de seu Filho de uma virgem judia, Deus tinha começado a dar testemunho em favor de Seu Filho. (Lu 1:35-37) Este nascimento não era simplesmente uma demonstração espetacular de poder divino, mas satisfazia objetivos bem definidos. Fornecia um humano perfeito, um 'segundo Adão', que poderia santificar o nome de seu Pai, apagar o vitupério que o primeiro filho humano trouxera àquele nome, provando assim ser falso o desafio de Satanás; ademais, o perfeito Jesus forneceria uma base legal para resgatar a humanidade obediente das garras dos Reis Pecado e Morte. (1Co 15:45-47; He 2:14, 15; Ro 5:18-21; veja RESGATE.) E este descendente perfeito de Davi seria o herdeiro dum Reino eterno. — Lu 1:31-33.

A unção de Jesus pelo espírito de Deus foi acompanhada pelo poder divino. (At 10:38) Moisés era "poderoso nas suas palavras e ações". Como 'o pro-feta maior do que Moisés', Jesus tinha credenciais que eram proporcionalmente maiores. (De 34:10-12; At 7:22; Lu 24:19; Jo 6:14) De direito, ele 'ensinava com autoridade'. (Mt 7:28, 29) Assim, da mesma maneira que Deus fornecera motivos para se ter fé em Moisés, em Josué e em outros, ele agora fornecia sólida base para se ter fé em seu Filho. (Mt 11:2-6; Jo 6:29) Jesus não assumia nenhum crédito para si, reconhecendo constantemente a Deus como Fonte de suas obras poderosas. (Jo 5:19, 26; 7:28, 29; 9:3, 4; 14:10) As pessoas honestas reconheciam "o poder majestoso de Deus", manifestado por intermédio dele. — Lu 9:43; 19:37; Jo 3:2; 9:28-33; compare isso com Lu 1:68; 7:16.

O que pressagiavam os milagres de Jesus?

Aquilo que Jesus fez provou que Deus se interessa pela humanidade, evidência do que Deus, com o tempo, faria em favor de todos os que amam a justiça. As obras poderosas de Jesus se relacionavam mormente com os problemas da humanidade, sendo que o primeiro e o mais fundamental deles é o do pecado, com todos os seus efeitos prejudiciais. A doença e a morte são concomitantes com o pecado, e a capacidade de Jesus de curar doenças de todos os tipos (Mt 8:14, 15; Lu 6:19; 17:11-14; 8:43-48), e de até mesmo ressuscitar os mortos (Mt 9:23-25; Lu 7:14, 15; Jo 11:39-44), forneceu prova de que Jesus era o meio designado por Deus para livrar a humanidade do pecado e de sua pena. (Veja Mr 2:5-12.) Jesus, muito superior ao maná que Israel comia no ermo, era o "verdadeiro pão do céu", "o pão da vida". (Jo 6:31-35, 48-51) Ele trouxe, não água literal duma rocha, mas "água viva", a "água da vida". — Jo 7:37, 38; Re 22:17; compare isso com Jo 4:13, 14.

As suas obras poderosas eram também portentos de outras bênçãos que viriam por meio de seu governo régio. Ao passo que Eliseu alimentara 100 homens com apenas 20 pães e algum cereal, Jesus alimentou milhares com muito menos. (2Rs 4:42-44; Mt 14:19-21; 15:32-38) Moisés e Eliseu tinham tornado doce certa água amarga ou envenenada. Jesus converteu água comum em vinho excelente, para contribuir para o prazer descontraído duma festa de casamento. (Êx 15:22-25; 2Rs 2:21, 22; Jo 2:1-11) O seu governo, portanto, certamente traria o alívio da fome para todos os seus súditos, realizando agradável 'banquete para todos os povos'. (Is 25:6) Sua capacidade de tornar muito produtivo o trabalho dos homens, como naquele caso em que seus discípulos se empenhavam na pesca, assegurava que, sob a bênção de seu Reino, os homens não ficariam reduzidos a mal conseguir ganhar seu sustento, num simples nível de subsistência. — Lu 5:4-9; compare isso com Jo 21:3-7.

Mais importante é que tais coisas estavam todas relacionadas com assuntos espirituais. Assim como Jesus trouxe visão, fala e saúde espirituais aos espiritualmente cegos, mudos e enfermos, ele também trouxe, e garantiu, o usufruto de alimento e bebida espirituais em abundância, e assegurou a produtividade do ministério de seus discípulos. (Veja Lu 5:10, 11; Jo 6:35, 36.) Ter ele satisfeito miraculosamente as carências físicas das pessoas, em certas ocasiões, era primariamente para fortalecer a fé. Tais coisas jamais eram um fim em si mesmas. (Veja Jo 6:25-27.) O Reino e a justiça de Deus, e não o alimento e a bebida, deviam ser buscados em primeiro lugar. (Mt 6:31-33) Jesus deu o exemplo nisso, por recusar-se a transformar pedras em pão para ele próprio. — Mt 4:1-3.

Libertação espiritual. A nação de Israel conhecera poderosos guerreiros, mas o poder de Deus, mediante seu Filho, visava inimigos maiores do que simples militaristas humanos. Jesus era o Libertador (Lu 1:69-74), fornecendo o caminho para a liberdade com relação à principal fonte de opressão, Satanás e seus demônios. (He 2:14, 15) Jesus não só libertou pessoalmente a muitos da obsessão demoníaca (Lu 4:33-36), mas, por meio de suas poderosas palavras de verdade, abriu amplamente as portas da liberdade para aqueles que desejavam despojar-se das cargas e da escravidão opressivas que a religião falsa lhes impusera. (Mt 23:4; Lu 4:18; Jo 8:31, 32) Por seu próprio proceder fiel, íntegro, ele venceu, não apenas uma cidade ou um império, mas "o mundo". — Jo 14:30; 16:33.

A importância relativa dos atos miraculosos. Embora desse principalmente ênfase às verdades que proclamava, Jesus não obstante mostrava a importância relativa de suas obras poderosas, trazendo-as regularmente à atenção quais autenticadoras de sua comissão e de sua mensagem. A importância delas residia, particularmente, em que cumpriam as profecias. (Jo 5:36-39, 46, 47; 10:24-27, 31-38; 14:11; 20:27-29) Os que presenciavam tais obras assumiam especial responsabilidade. (Mt 11:20-24; Jo 15:24) Assim como Pedro disse mais tarde a multidões em Pentecostes, Jesus era "homem publicamente mostrado a vós por Deus, por intermédio de poderosas obras, e portentos, e sinais, que Deus fez por intermédio dele no vosso meio, conforme vós mesmos sabeis". (At 2:22) Estas evidências de poder divino mostravam que o Reino de Deus os tinha "alcançado". — Mt 12:28, 31, 32.

Pela utilização significativa de seu Filho, por parte de Deus, foram "desvendados os raciocínios de muitos corações". (Lu 2:34, 35) Eles viam 'o braço de Jeová' ser manifestado, mas muitos, a maioria, preferiam discernir algum outro significado nos eventos que contemplavam, ou permitir que interesses egoístas os impedissem de agir em harmonia com o "sinal" visto. (Jo 12:37-43; 11:45-48) Muitos desejavam obter benefícios pessoais do poder de Deus, mas não estavam sinceramente famintos da verdade e da justiça. Seus corações não se sentiam movidos pela compaixão e pela bondade que motivavam tantas das obras poderosas de Jesus (compare Lu 1:78; Mt 9:35, 36; 15:32-37; 20:34; Mr 1:40, 41; Lu 7:11-15 com Lu 14:1-6; Mr 3:1-6), compaixão esta que refletia a de seu Pai. — Mr 5:18, 19.

Emprego responsável do poder. O emprego do poder, por parte de Jesus, era sempre responsável, jamais sendo feito por simples exibição. A maldição lançada sobre a figueira infrutífera evidentemente tinha significado simbólico. (Mr 11:12-14; compare isso com Mt 7:19, 20; 21:42, 43; Lu 13:6-9.) Jesus recusou empenhar-se em inútil teatralismo, conforme sugerido por Satanás. Quando Jesus andou sobre a água, foi porque ele se dirigia para alguma parte, sem haver nenhum transporte disponível naquela hora tardia, algo bem diferente de saltar do parapeito do templo, como suicida em potencial. (Mt 4:5-7; Mr 6:45-50) A curiosidade erroneamente motivada de Herodes não foi satisfeita, uma vez que Jesus se recusou a fazer qualquer exibição perante ele. (Lu 23:8) Jesus anteriormente se recusara a causar um "sinal do céu", a pedido dos fariseus e dos saduceus, evidentemente porque estes procuravam tal, não para fortalecer a sua fé no cumprimento da Palavra de Deus, mas para eliminar a necessidade de tal fé. Sua motivação era ruim. — Mt 16:1-4; compare isso com 15:1-6; e 22:23, 29.

Similarmente, a falta de fé em Nazaré impediu Jesus de realizar muitas obras poderosas ali, certamente, não porque sua fonte de poder fosse insuficiente, mas porque as circunstâncias não o justificavam, não o permitiam. O poder divino não devia ser desperdiçado com cépticos irreceptivos. (Mr 6:1-6; compare isso com Mt 10:14; Lu 16:29-31.) Que a fé de outros não era um essencial absoluto para que Jesus realizasse atos miraculosos pode ser depreendido de ele ter curado a orelha decepada do escravo do sumo sacerdote, escravo que fazia parte da multidão que veio prender Jesus. — Lu 22:50, 51.

A ressurreição de Jesus Cristo para a vida espiritual foi a maior demonstração já feita do poder de Deus. Sem ela, a fé cristã seria "vã", os seguidores de Jesus seriam "os mais lastimáveis de todos os homens". (1Co 15:12-19) Foi o ato mais persistentemente narrado pelos discípulos de Jesus, e isoladamente o maior fator no fortalecimento da fé. A distância não impedia o exercício de poder por parte de Jesus quando na terra (Mt 8:5-13; Jo 4:46-53), e então, de sua posição celestial, Jesus ungiu seus seguidores com o espírito de Deus, em Pentecostes, habilitando-os a realizar obras poderosas na sua ausência. Desta forma, autenticou o testemunho deles a respeito de sua ressurreição (At 4:33; He 2:3, 4), e também deu provas de que estes eram o povo aprovado de Deus, a Sua congregação. — At 2:1-4, 14-36, 43; 3:11-18.

A morte de seu Filho como humano não tinha encurtado a mão de Jeová, conforme testificaram os muitos milagres, sinais e portentos realizados pelos apóstolos e por outros. (At 4:29, 30; 6:8; 14:3; 19:11, 12) As obras poderosas que eles realizaram eram semelhantes às de seu Amo, curando os coxos (At 3:1-9; 14:8-10) e os doentes (At 5:12-16; 28:7-9), levantando os mortos (At 9:36-41; 20:9-11), expulsando demônios (At 8:6, 7; 16:16-18), fazendo isto sem procurar benefícios ou honra pessoais para si mesmos. (At 3:12; 8:9-24; 13:15-17) Por meio deles, Deus expressou julgamentos contra transgressores, assim como Ele fizera por meio dos anteriores profetas, promovendo o devido respeito por Si mesmo e por seus representantes. (At 5:1-11; 13:8-12) Novas habilidades lhes foram concedidas, tais como a habilidade de falar em línguas estrangeiras e de interpretá-las. Isto, também, acontecia para um "objetivo proveitoso", pois logo deveriam ampliar a obra de pregação além dos limites de Israel, falando das obras maravilhosas de Jeová entre as nações. — 1Co 12:4-11; Sal 96:3, 7.

Jeová Deus realizou ainda outras coisas poderosas, abrindo 'portas' de oportunidade para pregarem em certos territórios, protegendo-os contra os que quisessem impedir a sua obra ministerial, dirigindo a atividade deles, fazendo isso de maneiras em geral não percebidas pelo público. — At 5:17-20; 8:26-29, 39, 40; 9:1-8; 10:19-22, 44-48; 12:6-11; 13:2; 16:6-10, 25-33; 18:9, 10; 1Co 16:8, 9.

Havia sido predito que capacidades miraculosas concedidas pelo espírito aos apóstolos, e transmitidas por eles a outros, perdurariam apenas durante a 'infância' da congregação cristã, depois do que terminariam. (1Co 13:8-11; veja DONS DADOS POR DEUS [Dons do Espírito].) A Cyclopædia (Ciclopédia) de M'Clintock e Strong (Vol. VI, p. 320) diz que é "uma declaração incontestada que durante os primeiros cem anos após a morte dos apóstolos, ouvimos pouco ou nada a respeito da operação de milagres pelos primitivos cristãos". Não obstante, Jesus e seus apóstolos alertaram a respeito de futuras obras poderosas enganosas que seriam realizadas por apóstatas e também por uma fera simbólica, todos inimigos de Deus. — Mt 7:21-23; 24:23-25; 2Te 2:9, 10; Re 13:11-13; veja ANIMAIS SIMBÓLICOS.

As expressões do poder de Deus alcançam um ponto alto no estabelecimento de seu Reino por meio de Cristo Jesus e nos atos de julgamento que resultam deste acontecimento.

POLEGAR. Dedo na mão humana que pode ser movimentado em posição justaposta a seus outros dedos. Os humanos podem agarrar coisas e realizar muitas operações delicadas que seriam impossíveis caso não tivessem polegares oponíveis. Antigamente, um cativo às vezes era tornado incapaz para o serviço militar por se lhe deceparem os polegares das mãos e dos pés. — Jz 1:6, 7.

A palavra hebraica bó·hen é usada para designar tanto o polegar da mão como o do pé; a que parte bó·hen se refere num determinado texto é indicado pelas expressões acompanhantes 'da mão' e 'do pé'. Sempre que o polegar da mão é mencionado nas Escrituras, o dedo grande do pé é citado no mesmo texto. — Êx 29:20; Le 14:14, 17, 25, 28.

Durante a investidura de Arão e de seus filhos como sacerdotes, abateu-se um carneiro, e Moisés colocou parte do sangue deste sobre o lóbulo da orelha direita, o polegar da mão direita e o dedo grande do pé direito de Arão. Daí, fez o mesmo a cada um dos filhos de Arão. (Le 8:23, 24) O sangue sobre o polegar direito da mão representava figurativamente que eles deviam executar seus deveres sacerdotais com o melhor de suas habilidades.

POMBA, ESTERCO DE. O relato sobre o sítio de Samaria, executado pelo rei sírio, Ben-Hadade, diz que a fome resultante tornou-se tão severa que "a cabeça dum jumento chegou a valer oitenta moedas de prata e um quarto da medida de um cabo de esterco de pombas valeu cinco moedas de prata". (2Rs 6:24, 25) O custo duma cabeça de jumento era de uns US$ 176 (na hipótese de as "moedas de prata" serem siclos) e o "quarto da medida de um cabo [0,3 l] de esterco de pombas" valia cerca de US$ 11. Isto indica que, devido à escassez de alimentos, algo como uma cabeça ossuda e pouco carnuda dum jumento tornou-se um dispendioso item alimentar (embora o jumento fosse um animal impuro segundo a Lei mosaica), e que até mesmo o esterco de pomba era bem caro. A referência a esterco de pomba tem gerado muita discussão sobre se o termo é literal e sobre o uso que dele fazia o comprador.

Tem-se apresentado argumentos de que o termo "esterco de pomba" talvez se aplicasse a certa planta. Contudo, não há evidência de que as plantas às quais os que defendem esse conceito se referem foram alguma vez conhecidas pelo nome de esterco de pomba ou que tais plantas estivessem ao alcance do povo encurralado em Samaria pelo sítio.

Os que admitem um significado literal dessa expressão estão, por sua vez, divididos quanto ao uso dessa substância. Alguns destacam que esterco de pomba há muito tem sido usado como fertilizante pelo povo no Oriente Médio no cultivo de melões, mas parece razoável que pessoas à beira da morte por inanição estariam mais preocupadas com alimento para consumo imediato do que com uma colheita que não estaria disponível por talvez alguns meses.

Muitos preferem o conceito de que o esterco de pomba era realmente usado como alimento, destacando que o tema diz respeito a uma fome e aos terríveis extremos aos quais os humanos são levados pelas dores da fome. Embora fosse propositadamente extrema e cruel, a fim de criar um temor enfraquecedor, a ameaça do oficial de Senaqueribe, Rabsaqué, de que um sítio levado a efeito pela Assíria faria com que o povo de Jerusalém 'comesse seu próprio excremento e bebesse sua própria urina', talvez tivesse alguma base em fatos. (2Rs 18:27) Ainda que a ideia de usar esterco literal para consumo humano seja extremamente repulsiva, isto em si mesmo não é base para rejeitar este conceito. O fato de que a fome era tão grande em Samaria que as mulheres chegaram a cozinhar e comer seus próprios filhos indica que haviam chegado ao ponto de consumir qualquer coisa disponível. (2Rs 6:26-29) Embora alguns afirmem que o esterco teria pouco valor como nutriente, esse fator em si mesmo não eliminaria a possibilidade de ser comprado como alimento, pois pessoas morrendo de inanição não raro ficam irracionais, comendo qualquer coisa para mitigar as dores da fome.

Talvez uma hipótese ainda mais provável é a de certos rabinos que afirmam que o esterco era usado como combustível. Existe algum paralelo bíblico nisso, uma vez que o profeta Ezequiel foi instruído a representar as condições de sítio igualmente horrendas que se abateriam sobre Jerusalém por cozinhar seu alimento usando excremento como combustível. (Ez 4:12-17) Esterco de gado, seco, conhecido por diversos nomes, serve como combustível comum em muitas partes da Terra até hoje. Se este conceito for correto, então o relato talvez esteja simplesmente declarando o custo do alimento (neste caso a cabeça dum jumento) e o custo do combustível para cozinhá-lo. Os versículos seguintes indicam que as pessoas até então não comiam carne crua.

POMBO(A) [hebr.: yoh·náh; goh·zál; gr.: peri·sterá]. A pomba é uma das primeiras duas aves especificamente mencionadas na Bíblia, sendo que Noé despachou uma pomba três vezes depois do Dilúvio para determinar como estava o escoamento das águas. (Gên 8:8-12) Supõe-se que o nome hebraico yoh·náh se derive da palavra 'a·náh, que significa "prantear", e, evidentemente, é uma imitação do arrulho lamuriento da pomba. (Is 38:14; 59:11, 12; Ez 7:16; Na 2:7) — Veja ROLA.

Variedades e Descrição. As variedades mais comuns de pombas encontradas em Israel são a pomba-das-rochas (Columba livia), a pomba-torcaz (Columba palumbus; também chamada de pomba-madeira) e a pomba-brava (Columba oenas). As pombas-torcazes são especialmente encontradas nas florestas de Gileade e do Carmelo. A pomba-brava fixa-se mormente em volta de Jericó, e na parte E do Jordão, ao passo que a pomba-das-rochas prolifera nas terras costeiras, ao longo das gargantas do vale do Jordão e nos altiplanos a O. As pombas têm, caracteristicamente, um corpo rechonchudo, de peito largo, um pescoço gracioso, uma pequena cabeça arredondada, com um bico um tanto delgado, e patas curtas. As penas são bastante compactas, dando à ave uma aparência um tanto luzidia. As pombas não raro são de coloração cinza-azulada, ao passo que algumas têm um brilho iridescente em partes de sua plumagem, fazendo com que esta assuma um aspecto metálico na dourada luz solar. Talvez seja a isso que alude o Salmo 68:13, ainda que, na opinião de alguns, a referência feita ali às "asas duma pomba, revestidas de prata, e suas plumas, de ouro amarelo-esverdeado", se refira a alguma peça de arte ricamente talhada, tomada como despojo.

A pomba tem aspecto e disposição amenos e brandos, o que lhe granjeia o título de 'ovelha do mundo das aves'. Assim, o nome Jonas (Yoh·náh) era, e ainda é, um nome comum para meninos judeus. (Jon 1:1) Tais aves são notáveis por sua devoção a seus parceiros e por sua afeição e, no cortejo, elas encostam as cabeças e unem os bicos, de forma um tanto parecida ao beijo de namorados. "Minha pomba" era, pois, uma expressão apropriada de carinho empregada pelo namorado pastor da jovem sulamita. (Cân 5:2) Os olhos da jovem foram comparados aos olhos meigos duma pomba (Cân 1:15; 4:1), ao passo que ela comparou os olhos do pastor a pombas cinza-azuladas que se banhavam em piscinas de leite, evidentemente representando, por meio desta linda analogia, a íris mais escura, cercada pelo branco reluzente do olho. (Cân 5:12) As pombas se deleitam em banhar-se, preferindo aninhar-se perto duma fonte de água.

Sendo uma ave tímida, que treme quando é assustada (Os 11:11), a pomba, em seu estado selvagem, não raro se aninha nos vales (Ez 7:16), ao passo que a pomba-das-rochas faz seu ninho nas saliências e nas cavidades dos penhascos e das gargantas rochosas. (Cân 2:14; Je 48:28) Quando domesticadas, elas retornam voando aos pombais preparados para elas, as partes inferiores brancas das asas de um grande bando de pombas tendo a aparência duma nuvem que se move. (Is 60:8) Vários pombais já foram escavados em Israel, alguns de considerável tamanho.

A pomba tem asas fortes, pode voar a longas distâncias em busca de alimento, e é suficientemente rápida para despistar a maioria de seus inimigos. (Sal 55:6-8) Todavia, as pombas confiam facilmente nos humanos e não são difíceis de serem apanhadas numa armadilha ou com uma rede. De modo que o apóstata Efraim, depositando tolamente sua confiança, primeiro no Egito, e, daí, na Assíria, foi comparado a uma "pomba simplória", prestes a cair numa rede. (Os 7:11, 12) Jesus, ao alertar seus discípulos a respeito de opositores lupinos, aconselhou-os a serem, não apenas "inocentes como as pombas", mas também "cautelosos como as serpentes". — Mt 10:16.

Por ocasião do batismo de Jesus e sua subsequente unção com espírito santo de Deus, fez-se com que esse espírito santo aparecesse "em forma corpórea, semelhante a uma pomba", sendo que a sua descida visível sobre Jesus talvez tivesse sido similar ao pouso adejante da pomba, quando esta se aproxima de seu poleiro. (Lu 3:22; Mt 3:16; Mr 1:10; Jo 1:32-34) Era um símbolo apropriado, em vista da característica inocência da pomba. — Mt 10:16.

As pombas eram usadas para fins sacrificiais, conforme se vê do fato de que eram vendidas por aqueles que realizavam atividades comerciais no templo de Jerusalém, embora o termo "pombas [gr.: pe·ris·te·rás]" talvez indique aqui as "rolas" ou "pombos" mencionados na Lei mosaica. — Mr 11:15; Jo 2:14-16.

Via de regra, as traduções bíblicas traduzem o hebraico yoh·náh como "pombo" nos textos que envolvem sacrifícios, em que "rolas" (hebr.: to·rím) são também mencionadas com frequência. A expressão "pombo(s) novo(s)" (NM, KJ, RS) em hebraico é literalmente "filhote(s) de (ou, do) pombo". Além de rolas, pombos eram aceitáveis para uso sacrificial em ofertas queimadas (Le 1:14); um par podia ser trazido pelos pobres demais para apresentar uma cordeira ou uma cabritinha pela oferta de culpa (Le 5:5-7); um pombo (ou então uma rola) como oferta pelo pecado devia acompanhar a oferta de um carneirinho nos rituais de purificação da mulher após o parto, a menos que lhe faltasse condições de apresentar o cordeiro, caso em que "dois pombos novos" seriam aceitáveis (Le 12:6-8) (como se deu no caso da purificação de Maria após o nascimento de Jesus; Lu 2:22-24); e um casal, quer de pombos, quer de rolas, devia ser incluído nas ofertas de purificação de uma pessoa que se tivesse recuperado de um fluxo (Le 15:13, 14, 28, 29).

Eram também aceitáveis na purificação dos nazireus, no caso de aviltamento. — Núm 6:10.

Ao passo que muitas famílias entre os judeus, sem dúvida, tinham seus próprios pombos, a expressão "ora, se não tiver os meios para duas rolas ou dois pombos novos", evidentemente indica que em muitos casos eram comprados para fins sacrificiais. — Le 5:11.

Entende-se que o termo hebraico goh·zál, usado no relato da oferta feita por Abraão quando "Jeová concluiu um pacto com Abrão", se refere a um "pombinho". (Gên 15:9, 18) Isto se deve à constante associação do pombo com a rola nos sacrifícios prescritos na Lei dada a Israel mais tarde. A mesma palavra hebraica é traduzida por "filhote", em Deuteronômio 32:11. Um pombo sem dúvida fazia parte do sacrifício apresentado por Noé em época anterior, visto que tal sacrifício incluía 'algumas de todas as criaturas voadoras limpas'. — Gên 8:20.

A provisão da Lei de tornar opcional o uso, quer de pombinhos, quer de rolas, era um arranjo vantajoso para os judeus, considerando que durante os meses de inverno a maioria das rolas migrava da terra de Israel, ao passo que os pombos não migratórios estavam disponíveis o ano inteiro.

O pombo é forte, voador veloz, capaz de atingir velocidades superiores a 80 km/h. Seu instinto de retornar à casa faz com que desde tempos remotos seja usado para levar mensagens. Diferente de navegadores humanos que precisam usar cronômetros e sextantes para determinar a sua posição, os pombos-correio sabem quase que instantaneamente — à base de sua sensibilidade ao campo magnético da Terra e pela posição do Sol — em que direção voar, mesmo se forem libertados em território estranho a centenas de quilômetros de seu ponto de origem. Eles levam automaticamente em conta a trajetória do sol no céu, de modo que seu ângulo de voo não erra.

Tão comuns quanto galinhas em muitas partes da Terra, os pombos diferem das aves domésticas não apenas na sua habilidade de voar, mas também na sua estrutura e em serem monógamos. Diferente do galo, o fiel pombo ajuda a fêmea na construção do ninho e na incubação dos ovos. Os pombos diferem de todas as outras aves na sua forma distintiva de alimentar os filhotes com o "leite de pomba", um líquido leitoso produzido no papo das aves. Os filhotes de pombos, chamados de borrachos, são comumente usados como alimento em muitos países.

PONTO. [Mar]. Distrito do N da Ásia Menor, ao longo do mar Euxino (Mar Negro). Nos tempos pré-cristãos, este nome, evidentemente, era aplicado àquela parte do norte da Ásia Menor às margens do Ponto Euxino, como tal mar às vezes era chamado. O Ponto ia desde o curso inferior do rio Hális, ao O (perto da Bitínia), em direção ao leste, ao longo da costa, até o limite SE do mar. Ao longo da fértil linha costeira, o clima é quente no verão e moderado no inverno. O interior forma o canto NE do platô central, interrompido por muitos vales fluviais, onde se cultivavam cereais. As encostas dos montes eram cobertas de florestas, e produziam madeira para a fabricação de navios. Ao longo da costa, sentia-se a influência das colônias gregas, mas o povo do interior tinha vínculos íntimos com a Armênia, ao E.

Depois de ter estado sob influência persa por algum tempo, o reino separado do Ponto foi estabelecido no quarto século AEC. Houve uma sucessão de reis chamados de Mitridates, e desenvolveram-se fortes ligações com Roma. Contudo, Mitridates VI Eupátor desafiou o poder romano e expandiu grandemente seu reino. Depois duma série de guerras, os romanos sob Pompeu derrotaram-no por volta de 66 AEC. Grande parte do Ponto foi então unida à Bitínia, ao O, numa província combinada chamada de Bitínia e Ponto. Mas a parte oriental foi acrescentada à província da Galácia (Ponto Gálata). Mais tarde, parte dessa região oriental foi dada a Polêmon (c. 36 AEC), para formar parte do Reino de Polêmon. (MAPA, Vol. 1, p. 231) De modo que, no primeiro século EC, o termo "Ponto" se referia, quer à inteira área geográfica ao longo da costa, quer àquela parte que se encontrava na combinada província de Bitínia e Ponto, ou até mesmo à seção oriental que se tornara parte da Galácia e do Reino de Polêmon.

Filo, escritor judeu do primeiro século, disse que os judeus se haviam espalhado a toda parte do Ponto. Judeus do Ponto estavam presentes em Jerusalém, no Pentecostes de 33 EC. (At 2:9) É possível que alguns desses judeus do Ponto que ouviram o discurso de Pedro se tenham tornado cristãos e retornado a seu território de origem. Cerca de 30 anos depois, Pedro dirigiu sua primeira carta canônica (c. 62-64 EC) aos "residentes temporários espalhados por Ponto", e outras partes da Ásia Menor. (1Pe 1:1) Uma vez que ele mencionou "anciãos" que deviam pastorear o rebanho, é provável que existissem congregações cristãs no Ponto. (1Pe 5:1, 2) O judeu de nome Áquila, que era natural do Ponto, viajou para Roma, e daí para Corinto, onde conheceu o apóstolo Paulo. — At 18:1, 2.

POQUERETE-HAZEBAIM. Cabeça de uma família cujos descendentes estavam entre "os filhos dos servos de Salomão" que retornaram do exílio sob a liderança de Zorobabel. — Esd 2:1, 2, 55, 57; Ne 7:59.

PORATA. Um dos dez filhos de Hamã. — Est 9:8, 10.

PORCO [gr.: khoi·ros; hys (porca); hebr.: hha·zír (porco; varrão)]. Designativo geral para o porco comum (Sus domestica); mamífero de tamanho médio, de casco partido e pernas curtas, com corpo atarracado e pele grossa, geralmente recoberto de pelos grossos. O focinho do porco é rombudo, e seu pescoço e sua cauda são curtos. Não sendo ruminante, os termos da Lei mosaica decretavam que o porco era inaceitável como alimento ou como sacrifício. — Le 11:7; De 14:8.

Embora a proibição de Jeová de comer carne de porco não se baseasse, necessariamente, em motivos de saúde, havia, e ainda há, riscos ligados à utilização desta carne como alimento. Visto que os porcos não discriminam nada em seus hábitos alimentares, chegando até mesmo a comer carniça e resíduos orgânicos, tendem a ser infestados por vários parasitos, inclusive os responsáveis por doenças como a triquinose e a ascaridíase.

Parece que os israelitas, em geral, consideravam os porcos como especialmente repulsivos. De modo que o cúmulo em questão de adoração repugnante é descrito pelas palavras: "Quem oferece um presente — sangue de porco!" (Is 66:3) Para os israelitas, poucas coisas podiam ser mais inapropriadas do que um porco com uma argola de ouro no focinho. E é a isto que Provérbios 11:22 compara a mulher exteriormente bela, mas que não é sensata.

Embora os israelitas apóstatas comessem carne de porco (Is 65:4; 66:17), os livros apócrifos de Primeiro dos Macabeus (1:65, So) e Segundo dos Macabeus (6:18, 19; 7:1, 2, So) mostram que, durante a dominação estrangeira da Palestina pelo rei sírio Antíoco IV Epifânio e sua cruel campanha para eliminar a adoração de Jeová, havia muitos judeus que se recusavam a comer carne de porco, preferindo morrer por violar o decreto do rei a violar a lei de Deus.

Ao passo que algumas outras nações não comiam carne de porco, para os gregos era uma iguaria. Assim, provavelmente em resultado da influência helenística, na época do ministério terrestre de Jesus Cristo havia, pelo visto, um bom número de porcos na Palestina, particularmente na região de Decápolis. No país dos gadarenos havia, pelo menos, uma vara de uns 2.000 porcos. Quando Jesus permitiu que os demônios que ele expulsara entrassem nesta grande vara, todos os animais, sem exceção, lançaram-se num precipício e afogaram-se no mar. — Mt 8:28-32; Mr 5:11-13.

Os Demônios Expulsos Que Entraram nos Porcos. Não se pode atribuir a Jesus nenhuma falha por ter deixado que os demônios entrassem nos porcos, especialmente visto que certos fatores não declarados podiam muito bem estar envolvidos, tais como serem judeus os donos dos porcos, sendo assim culpados de desrespeito à Lei. Não se exigia, naturalmente, que Jesus exercesse presciência quanto ao que os demônios fariam, uma vez entrassem nos animais impuros. E os demônios talvez quisessem apossar-se dos porcos a fim de derivar disso algum prazer sadístico desnatural. Também, poder-se-ia razoavelmente arguir que um homem vale mais do que uma vara de porcos. (Mt 12:12) Ademais, todos os animais na realidade pertencem a Jeová, em razão de sua qualidade de Criador, de modo que Jesus, como representante de Deus, tinha todo o direito de permitir que os demônios se apoderassem da vara de porcos. (Sal 50:10; Jo 7:29) Entrarem os demônios nos porcos demonstrava vigorosamente que tinham deveras sido expulsos dos homens, tornando além disso bem evidente aos observadores o dano que advinha às criaturas carnais que se tornavam possessas de demônios. Demonstrava para tais observadores humanos tanto o poder de Jesus sobre os demônios como o poder demoníaco sobre criaturas carnais. Tudo isto pode ter-se enquadrado no propósito de Jesus e talvez explique por que Jesus permitiu que os espíritos impuros entrassem nos porcos.

Uso Ilustrativo. A incapacidade dos porcos de reconhecer o valor de pérolas foi utilizada por Jesus ao ilustrar a insensatez de partilhar coisas espirituais com quem não tem apreço algum por ideias e ensinos espirituais. (Mt 7:6) E na ilustração do filho pródigo, feita por Jesus, a degradação a que um rapaz mergulhara foi acentuada por este ter de empregar-se como porqueiro, uma ocupação muitíssimo desprezível para um judeu, e por ele dispor-se até mesmo a desejar comer a ração desses animais. — Lu 15:15, 16.

O apóstolo Pedro comparou os cristãos que revertem a seu anterior proceder na vida a uma porca que retorna ao lamaçal, depois de ter sido lavada. (2Pe 2:22) Contudo, é evidente que, conforme relacionada com o porco, esta ilustração não visava ser aplicada além da aparência superficial das coisas. Na realidade, o porco, sob condições naturais, não é mais sujo do que os demais animais, embora se chafurde no lamaçal, de tempos a tempos, a fim de resfriar-se do calor do verão e remover parasitos externos de seu couro.

PORCO-ESPINHO [hebr.: qip·pódh]. Grande roedor que se caracteriza por seus espinhos protetores. Há muita discussão em torno do significado exato da palavra hebraica qip·pódh, diversificadamente traduzida por "abetouro" (KJ, Da) "ouriço" (ALA, VB), "corvo", "coruja" (BLH), "abetarda"

(NE), "ouriço-cacheiro" (AT, Le), "porco-espinho" (AS, NM). (Is 14:23; 34:11; Sof 2:14) À luz da etimologia hebraica, G. R. Driver rejeita a tradução "abetouro" e sugere que o hebraico qip·pódh pode aplicar-se tanto ao porco-espinho como a uma ave. Mas ele recomenda "hubara" como provável tradução de qip·pódh nos textos acima. (Palestine Exploration Quarterly [Revista Trimestral sobre a Exploração da Palestina], Londres, 1955, p. 137) Koehler e Baumgartner preferem "ouriço-cacheiro" em Isaías 14:23; 34:11, mas, "coruja-do-nabal" em Sofonias 2:14. (Lexicon in Veteris Testamenti Libros [Léxico dos Livros do Velho Testamento], Leiden, 1958, p. 845) Que uma única palavra hebraica pode aplicar-se a dois tipos inteiramente diferentes de animais é ilustrado pelo termo tin·shé·meth, que denota tanto uma criatura voadora, "o cisne", como uma criatura pululante, "o camaleão". — Le 11:18, 30.

Contudo, apesar dessa incerteza, há boa base para se traduzir coerentemente qip·pódh, quer por "porco-espinho", quer por "ouriço-cacheiro", em vez de "abetouro", "coruja" ou "corvo". Tanto os léxicos mais antigos como os modernos geralmente alistam o "ouriço-cacheiro" ou "porco-espinho" como definindo qip·pódh em todos os casos. Estas traduções têm o apoio da Septuaginta grega e da Vulgata latina, bem como da etimologia do hebraico e das línguas aparentadas, como o aramaico, o árabe e o etíope.

À base das inferências, tiradas de Isaías 14:23 e Sofonias 2:14, a respeito da desolação de Babilônia e de Nínive, alguns objetam que o porco-espinho (ou o ouriço-cacheiro) não poderia ser o animal tencionado, visto que tal criatura não frequenta banhados de juncos, nem pode cantar ou subir até o topo de colunas. No entanto, segundo Isaías 14:23, não seriam os banhados de juncos, e sim a cidade de Babilônia que se tornaria o domínio dos porcos-espinhos. Certo explorador das ruínas de Babilônia relatou ter encontrado "quantidades de espinhos de porcos-espinhos". Similarmente, a referência a uma voz "cantando na janela" na desolada Nínive pode aplicar-se a qualquer ave que talvez se empoleirasse numa janela deserta, ou até mesmo ao som do vento, e não precisa aplicar-se necessariamente ao porco-espinho. (Sof 2:14) Quanto a 'passar o porco-espinho a noite entre os seus capitéis [a parte superior das colunas]', é preciso lembrar que o quadro representado é o de uma cidade em ruínas. Assim sendo, certamente é possível que as colunas sejam aqui consideradas como estando caídas ao solo.

PÓRFIRO. Espécie de pedra geralmente vermelho-escura, púrpura ou às vezes verde, que contém cristais de feldspato. Junto com o mármore e a pérola, foi usada para pavimentar o palácio persa em Susã, nos dias do Rei Assuero. — Est 1:6.

PORTA, PORTÃO. A Bíblia menciona vários tipos de portões: (1) o portão de acampamentos (Êx 32:26, 27), (2) o portão de cidades (Je 37:13), (3) o portão do pátio do tabernáculo (Êx 38:18), (4) "os portões do Castelo que pertence à casa" (Ne 2:8), (5) os portões do templo (At 3:10) e (6) o portão duma casa (At 12:13, 14).

Construção. As cidades em geral tinham o mínimo de portões possível; algumas cidades tinham um único portão, uma vez que estes eram os pontos vulneráveis de suas fortificações. Quando havia muros internos e externos, havia, naturalmente, portões em cada muro. Os portões primitivos eram em forma de L, para dificultar a entrada do inimigo. Mais tarde, com a introdução dos carros (c. século 18 AEC), os portões da cidade tinham uma entrada em linha reta e direta. Em algumas ruínas escavadas, o portão da cidade se compõe duma entrada, flanqueada por torres quadradas que dão para um vestíbulo de uns 15 a 20 m de comprimento. A passagem através do vestíbulo era ladeada por até seis pilastras, o que estreitava a passagem em três lugares. Em certos casos, talvez houvesse dois ou três conjuntos de portas para estes portões de profundidade. Pequenos aposentos dentro dos muros do vestíbulo eram utilizados como alojamento para a guarda. No templo visionário de Ezequiel, os portões dispunham de saletas para a guarda. (Ez 40:6, 7, 10, 20, 21, 28, 29, 32-36) Alguns portões tinham um teto sobre o vestíbulo, e alguns tinham vários pavimentos, conforme se evidencia pelas escadas encontradas no lado de dentro deles. — Compare isso com 2Sa 18:24, 33.

Escavaram-se antigas cidades-fortalezas que apresentavam pequenas portas ou portões laterais. Estas ficavam, às vezes, no fundo dum antemuro, e permitiam o fácil acesso dos habitantes da cidade durante os tempos de paz. Em épocas de sítio, aparentemente, elas eram usadas como portões de incursão, através das quais os defensores podiam lançar-se ao ataque contra os sitiantes e, ao mesmo tempo, receber o fogo de cobertura de seus companheiros postados sobre os muros.

As portas dos portões duma cidade eram geralmente de madeira recoberta com placas de metal; doutro modo, o inimigo poderia atear fogo nelas. Algumas talvez fossem de ferro, como se dava nos dias dos apóstolos. (At 12:10) Os portões da cidade de Babilônia, segundo se diz, tinham portas de cobre e barras de ferro. (Is 45:2; compare isso com Sal 107:2, 16.) Alguns portões evidentemente tinham trancas de madeira. (Na 3:13) Nos dias de Salomão, na região de Argobe, em Basã, havia "sessenta cidades grandes com muralha e tranca de cobre". (1Rs 4:13) Encontraram-se certas pequenas cidades da Síria que tinham portas maciças de pedra, feita de um bloco único de uns 3 m de altura, que girava em pivôs em cima e embaixo. A proeza de Sansão, de pegar as portas do portão de Gaza, junto com suas duas ombreiras e sua tranca, e levá-las para o cume do "monte que está defronte de Hébron" não foi, em vista de tais fatores, um feito insignificante. Naturalmente, isso foi feito por meio do poder energizante do espírito de Jeová. — Jz 16:3.

Função. Os "portões" duma cidade podiam referir-se à própria cidade, visto que grande parte dos procedimentos oficiais ocorriam nos portões e as transações eram registradas ali (De 16:11 n; 14; Ru 4:10; Sal 87:2; 122:2); e na capital, os procedimentos não raro eram realizados no portão da área do palácio. (Est 3:2, 3; 5:9, 13; 6:10, 12) A desolação dos portões, ou entradas, duma cidade significava também o fim da glória. (Is 3:26; 14:31; Je 14:2; La 1:4) Os portões eram os pontos em que os sitiantes mais se empenhavam em abrir uma brecha. Uma vez tendo-os controlado, teriam acesso à cidade. De modo que 'tomar posse dos portões' da cidade significava conquistar a cidade. (Gên 22:17; 24:60) Quando se abriu uma brecha na muralha de Jerusalém, os príncipes do rei babilônio passaram a subjugar adicionalmente a cidade a partir duma posição junto a um dos portões da cidade. — Je 39:2, 3.

Os portões eram centros de assembleias públicas e da vida pública. Perto dos portões geralmente havia locais amplos, tais como a praça pública situada diante do Portão das Águas, em Jerusalém. (Ne 8:1) Os portões eram os centros de notícias da cidade, não só por causa da chegada de viajantes e de mercadores, mas também porque quase todos os trabalhadores, em especial os que trabalhavam nos campos, entravam e saíam diariamente pelo portão. Assim, o portão era o local onde se podia encontrar pessoas. (Ru 4:1; 2Sa 15:2) Os mercados localizavam-se ali, sendo que alguns dos portões de Jerusalém eram chamados segundo o nome das mercadorias que ali se vendiam (por exemplo, o Portão do Peixe). — Ne 3:3.

Nos portões da cidade, os anciãos da cidade realizavam julgamentos. (De 16:18; 21:18-20; 22:15; 25:7) Até mesmo reis ocasionalmente concediam audiências ou realizavam julgamentos ali. (2Sa 19:8; 1Rs 22:10; Je 38:7) Visto que os juízes, os homens de destaque da cidade, os mercadores, os homens de negócios e bom número de outras pessoas geralmente se achavam no portão, os profetas não raro se dirigiam a esse local para fazer proclamações. As mensagens que transmitissem ali se espalhariam muito mais rapidamente. (1Rs 22:10; Je 17:19) Também se faziam ali outros importantes pronunciamentos e proclamações oficiais. (2Cr 32:6-8) Foi na praça pública diante do Portão das Águas que Esdras leu a Lei. (Ne 8:1-3) A sabedoria é retratada como que gritando junto às entradas dos portões, para que todos na cidade se conscientizassem de seus conselhos. (Pr 1:20, 21; 8:1-3) Visto que o portão era um centro de notícias, as boas ou más obras dos habitantes da cidade ficavam conhecidas ali. — Pr 31:31.

Parece ter sido prática pagã oferecer sacrifícios nos portões da cidade. (At 14:13) Esta prática má desenvolvera-se em Judá, mas foi corrigida pelo Rei Josias. — 2Rs 23:8.

Aqueles que os juízes julgavam ser dignos de morte eram levados para fora dos portões da cidade a fim de serem executados. (1Rs 21:10-13; At 7:58) As carcaças dos animais sacrificiais, oferecidos para expiar os pecados no Dia da Expiação, eram levadas para fora da cidade e ali queimadas. (Le 16:27, 28) De modo que Jesus Cristo, a oferta pelo pecado que faz expiação pela humanidade, foi morto fora do portão de Jerusalém. — He 13:11, 12.

Por causa dos usos importantes que se faziam dos portões da cidade, era uma elevada honra sentar-se com os anciãos do país nos portões. (Jó 29:7; Pr 31:23) Tal posição não cabia a um tolo. (Pr 24:7) Quando Davi estava sendo perseguido, ele considerou algo sério que os que se sentavam nos portões se preocupassem com ele, especialmente duma maneira desfavorável. (Sal 69:12) 'Esmigalhar o atribulado no portão' referia-se à corrupção judicial, visto que ali se cuidavam de assuntos legais. (Jó 5:4; Pr 22:22; Am 5:12) 'Odiar o repreendedor no portão' significava odiar o juiz que corrigisse ou condenasse alguém. (Am 5:10) Os que 'punham engodo para aquele que repreende no portão' eram aqueles que, por meio de subornos ou outras pressões, tentavam levar os juízes a perverterem o julgamento ou que procuravam enlaçar o profeta que talvez se postasse no portão a fim de reprová-los. — Is 29:19-21.

Portões do Acampamento no Ermo. Os 'portões' do acampamento de Israel eram as vias de acesso. Sem dúvida eram bem guardados. O tabernáculo ficava no centro do acampamento, com os levitas acampados bem perto dele; e as 12 tribos, três de cada lado, ficavam a uma distância maior. Esta disposição propiciava ampla proteção para o acampamento. — Êx 32:26, 27; Núm 3; veja PORTEIRO.

Portões de Jerusalém. Ao considerar os portões de Jerusalém, é bom lembrar-se de que, desde o tempo de sua captura por Davi, a cidade se desenvolveu e expandiu, de modo que foram construídos vários muros ou trechos adicionais destes. Consideraremos aqui principalmente os portões mencionados no livro de Neemias, que nos dá a descrição ou listagem mais completa. Os portões citados no registro de Neemias são portões que estavam na muralha construída antes do oitavo século AEC e na muralha que cercava o "segundo bairro". (2Rs 22:14; 2Cr 34:22; Sof 1:10) O "segundo bairro" era uma parte norte da cidade, limitada ao O e em parte do N pela muralha de Ezequias (2Cr 32:5), e unia-se à muralha de Manassés, que continuava no NE e no L. (2Cr 33:14) Isto se achava ao N da cidade e do muro antigos, mas, pelo visto, não se estendia tão ao O como a muralha anterior.

A muralha de Neemias. No seu relato a respeito da reconstrução da muralha da cidade (Ne 3), Neemias começa no Portão das Ovelhas e segue no sentido contrário ao relógio. Seguiremos esse proceder na nossa lista mais adiante, inserindo os portões não mencionados no relato da reconstrução, mas citados nominalmente na descrição do cortejo de inauguração (Ne 12), junto com portões mencionados em outros textos, alguns dos quais sendo meramente nomes diferentes para os mesmos do registro de Neemias.

O Portão das Ovelhas. O Portão das Ovelhas foi reconstruído por Eliasibe, o sumo sacerdote, e por sacerdotes associados. (Ne 3:1, 32; 12:39) Este fato indica que ficava próximo da área do templo. A sua localização era, provavelmente, na muralha do segundo bairro, a parte construída por Manassés (veja "O Portão do Peixe", abaixo) no canto NE da cidade, ou próximo dali. Este portão pode ter sido assim chamado por se trazerem através dele ovelhas e cabritos para sacrifícios, ou, talvez, devido a um mercado que se localizasse nas imediações. O "portão das ovelhas" mencionado em João 5:2 é, provavelmente, esse Portão das Ovelhas, ou um portão posterior que correspondia a ele, pois ficava na mesma vizinhança, perto do reservatório de Betsata.

O Portão do Peixe. Ezequias aparentemente construiu uma parte da muralha que cercava o segundo bairro, até o Portão do Peixe. (2Cr 32:5; 33:14) Nos relatos de reconstrução e de cortejo, de Neemias, o Portão do Peixe é situado ao O do Portão das Ovelhas, talvez perto da extremidade N do vale de Tiropeom. (Ne 3:3; 12:39) É mencionado em relação ao segundo bairro, em Sofonias 1:10. Este nome talvez seja devido a estar o portão próximo do mercado de peixes, onde os tírios vendiam peixes. — Ne 13:16.

O Portão da Cidade Antiga. O portão da Cidade Antiga ficava do lado NO da cidade, entre o Portão do Peixe e o Portão de Efraim. (Ne 3:6; 12:39) Em hebraico, esse portão é simplesmente chamado de "Portão da Antiga", a palavra "cidade" sendo suprida por alguns tradutores. Sugere-se que o nome se derivava do fato de ter sido a entrada principal, ao N, para a cidade antiga. Pode ter estado situado na junção da Muralha Larga (que formava o limite N da cidade antiga) e do canto S da muralha O do segundo bairro. Alguns pensam que esse portão é idêntico ao "Primeiro Portão", mencionado por Zacarias. Ele aparentemente se refere aos limites E-O da cidade ao dizer "desde [1] o Portão de Benjamim até o lugar do [2] Primeiro Portão, até [3] o Portão da Esquina" e aos limites N-S ao dizer "desde a Torre de Hananel até os tanques de lagar do rei". (Za 14:10) Outros relacionariam o Portão da Cidade Antiga com o "Portão do Meio", mencionado em Jeremias 39:3. Alguns chamam este Portão da Cidade Antiga de "Portão Mishneh" e localizam-no na muralha O do segundo bairro.

O Portão de Efraim. O Portão de Efraim ficava na Muralha Larga, 400 côvados (178 m) ao L do Portão da Esquina. (2Rs 14:13; 2Cr 25:23) Era uma saída para o N, em direção ao território de Efraim. Tem sido também identificado por alguns pesquisadores com o Portão do Meio (Je 39:3), e por outros com o Primeiro Portão. (Za 14:10) Julga-se ser (ou corresponder a) Genate, ou Portão do Jardim, mencionado pelo historiador judeu Josefo. (The Jewish War [A Guerra Judaica], V, 146 [iv, 2]) Havia uma praça pública perto do Portão de Efraim, na qual o povo armou barracas para celebrar a Festividade das Barracas, nos dias de Neemias. (Ne 8:16) Este portão não é mencionado no texto de reconstrução de Neemias, evidentemente porque não necessitava de grandes reparos.

O Portão da Esquina. Este portão, evidentemente, estava situado no ângulo NO da muralha da cidade, ao O do Portão de Efraim. (2Rs 14:13; 2Cr 25:23) Ficava no lado L do vale de Hinom, aparentemente na muralha O da cidade antiga, no ponto em que se unia à Muralha Larga. Uzias construiu uma torre junto a este portão; não se declara se era ou não a Torre dos Fornos. (2Cr 26:9) Tanto Jeremias como Zacarias parecem referir-se ao Portão da Esquina como estando localizado nos limites ocidentais da cidade. — Je 31:38; Za 14:10.

Não se menciona nenhum outro portão na muralha O, desde o Portão da Esquina até o Portão do Vale, na muralha SO, isto sem dúvida devido à encosta íngreme do vale de Hinom, que tornava impraticável a existência de outro portão. O Portão da Esquina não aparece nos relatos de Neemias; também aqui a razão pode ter sido que não necessitava de grandes reparos. O relato, no entanto, fala do reparo da Torre dos Fornos, que parece ter sido parte, ou ficava perto, do Portão da Esquina. — Ne 3:11.

O Portão do Vale. Na parte SO da muralha da cidade, o Portão do Vale dava para o vale de Hinom. A "porta dos Essênios" mencionada por Josefo poderia estar localizada ali ou nas proximidades. (The Jewish War, V, 145 [iv, 2]) Uzias, em seu programa de fortificar a cidade, construiu uma torre junto a este portão. (2Cr 26:9) Foi do Portão do Vale que Neemias partiu em sua inspeção da muralha danificada, cavalgando para o leste através do vale de Hinom, e daí subindo o vale do Cédron e por fim reentrando na cidade pelo mesmo portão. (Ne 2:13-15) Embora não mencionado como tal, o Portão do Vale parece ter sido o ponto inicial do cortejo de inauguração, sendo que um grupo marchou em sentido anti-horário ao redor das muralhas passando pelo Portão dos Montes de Cinzas e o outro em sentido horário pelo Portão da Esquina e a Torre dos Fornos. — Ne 12:31-40.

O Portão dos Montes de Cinzas. Este portão é também conhecido como Portão dos Cacos, sendo usualmente chamado de Portão do Esterco. (Ne 2:13; 12:31) A descrição de Neemias parece situá-lo a 1.000 côvados (445 m) ao L do Portão do Vale. (Ne 3:13, 14) Ficava no canto SE da muralha da cidade, e dava para o vale de Hinom, perto do ponto em que este se unia ao vale de Tiropeom. (Je 19:2) Era por este portão que os idólatras que queimavam seus filhos no fogo a Baal chegavam a Tofete, no vale de Hinom. (Je 19:1-6) Foi também o portão através do qual Jeremias conduziu alguns dos anciãos e sacerdotes de Israel e proclamou a calamidade para Jerusalém, quebrando uma botija de barro a fim de ilustrar como Deus despedaçaria o povo por servirem a outros deuses. — Je 19:1-3, 10, 11.

O nome "Portão dos Cacos" pode ter-lhe sido dado porque fragmentos de cerâmica eram lançados perto dali como refugo, ou porque fragmentos de cerâmica eram triturados ali, sendo o seu pó utilizado para fabricar cimento para revestir cisternas (como tem sido feito em tempos mais recentes, perto de um reservatório no canto SO da cidade). Também, é possível que houvesse uma cerâmica perto desse portão, pois havia argila ali perto, no vale de Hinom, bem como suprimento de água na embocadura do vale de Tiropeom, e na fonte chamada En-Rogel. (Compare isso com Je 18:2; 19:1, 2.) A localização do "campo do oleiro" (Mt 27:7, 8) tem sido, desde o quarto século EC, tradicionalmente considerada como sendo no lado S do vale de Hinom.

O Portão da Fonte. Este portão era assim chamado porque dava acesso a uma fonte ou manancial nas imediações, talvez En-Rogel, que ficava abaixo da junção do vale do Cédron com o vale de Hinom. Esse portão provavelmente ficava na ponta S da colina ao L da cidade (isto é, no extremo S da "Cidade de Davi"). (Ne 2:14; 3:15; 12:37) O Portão da Fonte permitia saída e acesso convenientes a En-Rogel para os que moravam na Cidade de Davi, ao passo que o Portão dos Montes de Cinzas, não muito distante a SO, também levava em direção a En-Rogel e, provavelmente, constituía uma saída melhor para os moradores do vale de Tiropeom, e da colina SO da cidade.

O Portão das Águas. O nome deste portão talvez se deva a que ficava próximo, ou pelo menos dava acesso, à Fonte de Giom, a cerca de meio caminho do lado L da cidade. Este portão ficava próximo de Ofel, não muito longe da área do templo. (Ne 3:26) O Portão das Águas foi o local de onde um dos grupos do cortejo de inauguração partiu da muralha, passando dali para o templo, onde se juntou ao outro grupo, pelo visto não passando por aquela parte da muralha da cidade situada ao L do templo. (Ne 12:37-40) Havia uma praça pública diante desse portão, em que todo o povo se juntou para ouvir Esdras ler a Lei, e onde eles, depois disso, construíram barracas para celebrar a Festividade das Barracas. — Ne 8:1-3, 16.

O Portão dos Cavalos. A obra de reparos feita no trecho acima do Portão dos Cavalos foi realizada pelos sacerdotes, o que implica que sua localização era próxima do templo. (Ne 3:28) Alguns sustentam que o Portão dos Cavalos era um que fornecia uma via de comunicação entre duas partes do local do templo-palácio. Eles chegam a esta conclusão à base do relato da execução de Atalia, que diz que, ao ser levada do templo pelos soldados, 'chegou à entrada do portão dos cavalos, da casa do rei'. (2Cr 23:15; 2Rs 11:16) No entanto, esta era provavelmente uma entrada apenas para as dependências do palácio real, e não o Portão dos Cavalos através do qual os cavalos entravam e saíam da cidade propriamente dita. Neemias definitivamente inclui o Portão dos Cavalos em sua descrição da reconstrução, indicando tratar-se de um portão na muralha da cidade. Provavelmente se localizava a SE da área do templo. (Ne 3:28; Je 31:40) O Portão dos Cavalos é omitido no relato do cortejo de inauguração, evidentemente porque as duas partes do cortejo se dispersaram no Portão das Águas e no Portão da Guarda, respectivamente, e não passaram sobre a seção da muralha ao L do templo, onde ficavam o Portão dos Cavalos e o Portão de Inspeção. — Ne 12:37-40.

O Portão de Inspeção. Alguns chamam o Portão de Inspeção (hebr.: ham·mif·qádh) de Porta da Revista. (Ne 3:31, PIB; RS; Ro) Em Ezequiel 43:21, mif·qádh (a mesma palavra hebraica sem o artigo ha) é traduzida por "lugar designado". Alguns acham que era o mesmo que o Portão da Guarda. Ter sido ele mencionado por Neemias no seu relato sobre a reconstrução aparentemente apoia a ideia de que era um portão na muralha L da cidade, defronte da área do templo e ao N do Portão dos Cavalos. (Ne 3:27-31) A declaração de Neemias de que havia uma esquina na muralha para além do Portão de Inspeção colocaria esse portão na muralha L, ao S de onde a muralha virava (provavelmente na direção noroeste).

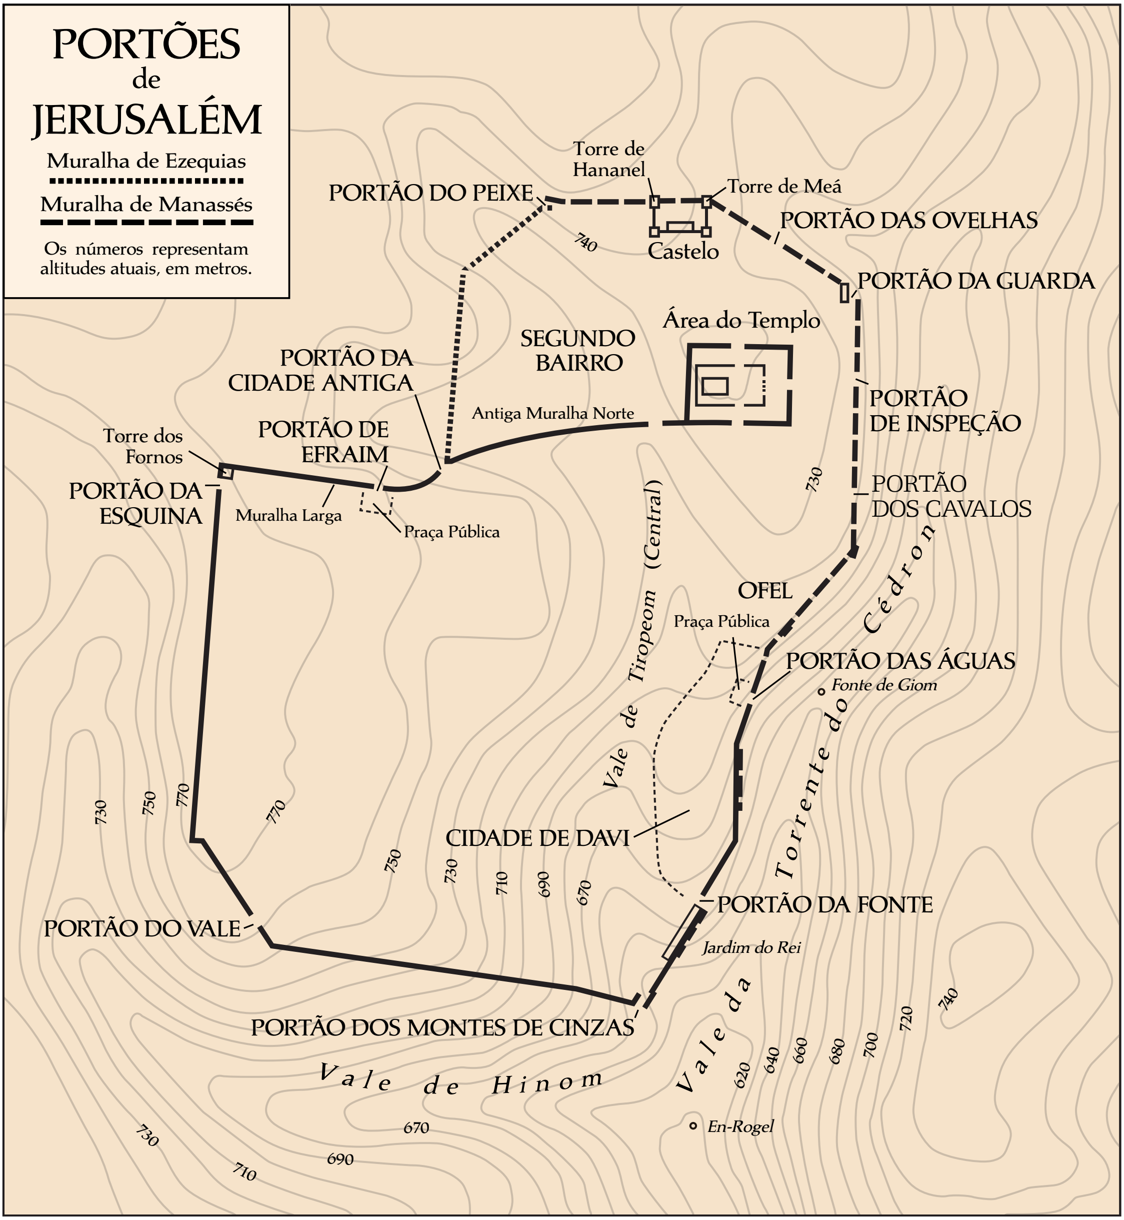
O relato nos diz que as obras de reparo foram executadas "defronte do Portão de Inspeção". Alguns acham que isso se refere a uma obra de reparo na muralha da cidade defronte de um portão do templo com esse nome. Este não parece ser o conceito correto, pois a mesma expressão é usada em relação ao Portão das Águas, que reconhecidamente era um portão na muralha da cidade. (Ne 3:26, 31) O Portão de Inspeção não é mencionado no relato do cortejo evidentemente porque os que participaram nele não percorreram a muralha ao L do templo.

O Portão da Guarda. A partir deste portão (chamado de "porta da prisão", Al) parte do cortejo de inauguração deixou a muralha e rumou para o templo. — Ne 12:39, 40.



O Portão do Meio. Quando os babilônios abriram uma brecha na muralha de Jerusalém, seus oficiais militares sentaram-se no Portão do Meio. (Je 39:3) Mui provavelmente este era o mesmo que o Portão da Cidade Antiga, uma vez que este portão, localizado na convergência da Muralha Larga, a muralha N da cidade antiga, com a muralha O do segundo bairro, era uma posição central ou dominante. Contudo, as opiniões diferem, e alguns acham que seja o Portão de Efraim ou o Portão do Peixe.

O Portão de Benjamim. Alguns identificam o Portão de Benjamim com o Portão das Ovelhas. Esta localização se ajustaria às circunstâncias ligadas à tentativa de Jeremias de sair da cidade para o território de Benjamim, evidentemente em direção a Anatote, a NE de Jerusalém. (Je 37:11-13) Zedequias estava sentado junto ao Portão de Benjamim quando Ebede-Meleque aproximou-se dele com um apelo em favor de Jeremias. (Je 38:7, 8) É razoável supor que o rei estivesse próximo do local de preocupação máxima, durante o sítio realizado pelos babilônios. O Portão das Ovelhas, ao N da cidade, seria o mais gravemente ameaçado pelos agressores babilônios. Contudo, alguns creem que o Portão de Benjamim era o Portão de Inspeção.

Outros portões mencionados. Quando o Rei Zedequias fugiu dos babilônios, ele saiu "pelo caminho do portão entre a muralha dupla que há junto ao jardim do rei". (Je 52:7, 8; 39:4) Há grande incerteza a respeito da identidade da "muralha dupla". No entanto, à base do conhecimento atual, tanto o Portão dos Montes de Cinzas como o Portão da Fonte poderiam ajustar-se às circunstâncias descritas nas Escrituras, ambos situando-se próximo do jardim do rei. — 2Rs 25:4, 5.

Em 2 Reis 23:8, faz-se referência aos "altos dos portões que havia à entrada do portão de Josué, o principal da cidade, o qual estava à esquerda ao se entrar no portão da cidade". Aqui, o "portão de Josué" não é o nome de um portão da cidade mas é evidentemente um portão dentro das muralhas da cidade que dava para a residência do governador, que ficava à esquerda, quando a pessoa entrava pelo portão da cidade.

Portões do Templo. Portão do Leste. O relato de Neemias sobre a reconstrução nos diz que o guarda do Portão do Leste participou na obra de reparos. (Ne 3:29) Assim, o Portão do Leste não é designado como portão da muralha de Jerusalém, como alguns pensavam. O Portão do Leste talvez estivesse mais ou menos alinhado com o Portão de Inspeção, na muralha da cidade. Este portão é, evidentemente, aquele mencionado em 1 Crônicas 9:18 como o "portão do rei, ao leste", sendo o portão por onde o rei entrava ou saía do templo.

Portão do Fundamento. Um portão do templo, cuja localização é incerta. — 2Rs 11:6; 2Cr 23:5.

"O portão superior da casa de Jeová." Talvez fosse um portão de acesso ao pátio interno, possivelmente o "portão novo de Jeová", onde Jeremias foi julgado; também, onde Baruque, secretário de Jeremias, leu o rolo diante do povo. (Je 26:10; 36:10) Jeremias talvez o tenha chamado de "portão novo" porque não tinha sido construído numa época tão antiga quanto os demais; possivelmente era o "portão superior da casa de Jeová", construído pelo Rei Jotão. — 2Rs 15:32, 35; 2Cr 27:3.

"Portão Superior de Benjamim, na casa de Jeová." Provavelmente um portão que dava para o pátio interno, do lado N do templo. — Je 20:2; compare isso com Ez 8:3; 9:2.

Portão Belo. Um portão do templo reconstruído por Herodes, o Grande, sendo o local em que Pedro curou um homem que era coxo desde a madre de sua mãe. (At 3:1-10) Existe uma tradição que identifica este portão com a existente Porta Dourada na muralha da cidade, mas pode ser que o Portão Belo fosse um portão interno na área do templo, correspondendo, possivelmente, ao antigo "Portão do Leste". Alguns dizem que talvez fosse um dos portões ao L do próprio prédio do templo, que dava para o Pátio das Mulheres, portão descrito por Josefo como tendo 50 côvados (22 m) de altura e tendo portas de bronze coríntio.

Outros portões mencionados são o "portão atrás dos batedores" e o "portão dos batedores". Estes são portões do templo, sendo incerta a localização deles. — 2Rs 11:6, 19.

A Míxena judaica (Middot 1:3), falando a respeito do templo reconstruído pelo Rei Herodes, o Grande, menciona apenas cinco portões do monte do Templo, isto é, na muralha que circunda o inteiro conjunto da área do templo. Estes eram: Os dois Portões de Hulda, ao S, o Portão Kipono, ao O, o Portão Tadi (Todi), ao N, e o Portão Oriental, em que estava retratado o Palácio de Susã. Josefo, por sua vez, refere-se a quatro portões ao O. (Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], XV, 410 [xi, 5]) Estes quatro portões têm sido agora identificados pela investigação arqueológica. Do S ao N, eles são: o portão que leva por sobre o Arco de Robinson a degraus que conduzem ao vale de Tiropeom; o Portão Barclay, ao nível da rua; o portão que leva por sobre o Arco de Wilson, que apoiava uma ponte sobre o vale Tiropeom; e o Portão Warren, também ao nível da rua. O Portão Kipono pode ser identificado quer com o Portão Barclay, quer com o portão sobre o Arco de Wilson.

A Míxena diz também que havia sete portões que davam para o pátio que cercava a área imediata do templo. — Middot 1:4; veja TEMPLO.

Usos Figurados. Os "portões da justiça" e "o portão de Jeová", pelos quais entram os justos, são mencionados no Salmo 118:19, 20. — Compare isso com Mt 7:13, 14.

Quando alguém morria, falava-se dessa pessoa como que tendo entrado pelos "portões da morte". (Sal 9:13; 107:18) Ela ia para a sepultura comum da humanidade, e, assim, entrava pelos portões do Seol-Hades. (Is 38:10; Mt 16:18) Visto que Jesus Cristo tem as chaves da morte e do Hades (Re 1:18), os da sua congregação têm a garantia de que a morte e o Hades não os reterão para sempre em escravidão. O apóstolo Paulo mostrou que todos os dessa congregação morrem, indo para a morte e o Hades, assim como Cristo também foi, mas a quem Deus livrou das ânsias da morte, e não o deixou no Hades. (At 2:24, 31) Por causa da ressurreição, a morte e o Hades não obtêm a vitória final sobre a congregação de Cristo. — 1Co 15:29, 36-38, 54-57.

Visto que o povo de Deus ao ser conduzido de volta a Sião restabeleceria a adoração pura ali, seus portões seriam chamados de Louvor. Os portões de Sião ficariam sempre abertos, a fim de trazer os recursos das nações, sem temor de serem subjugados pelo inimigo. — Is 60:11, 18.

Ezequiel recebeu uma visão de uma cidade que seria chamada de "O Próprio Jeová Está Ali", tendo 12 portões chamados segundo os nomes das 12 tribos de Israel. (Ez 48:30-35) Ele relata também uma visão detalhada de um templo com seus vários portões. — Ez 40-44.

A cidade santa, a "Nova Jerusalém", é representada como tendo 12 portões de pérola, com um anjo posicionado em cada portão, evidentemente como guarda. Tais portões acham-se continuamente abertos, pois não existe noite para ocasionar o seu fechamento. A glória e a honra das nações são trazidas através dos portões da cidade. Embora estejam abertos, não conseguem entrar por eles os que praticam coisas iníquas, impuras ou repugnantes. Apenas os que mantêm a pureza como vencedores ou conquistadores, os que se tornam reis e sacerdotes junto com Cristo, conseguem entrar passando pelos assistentes angélicos. (Re 21:2, 12, 21-27; 22:14, 15; 2:7; 20:4, 6) Os povos das nações da terra que andam na luz da cidade são abençoados.

PORTA(L). A "entrada" (hebr.: pé·thahh; Gên 19:11) de um aposento, uma casa ou outro prédio, que consiste em: (1) a "parte superior do portal" (hebr.: mash·qóhf; Êx 12:7), isto é, o dintel, uma verga horizontal de madeira ou de pedra que atravessa o vão da porta na parte superior e sustenta o peso da estrutura acima da porta; (2) as duas "ombreiras" verticais (hebr.: mezu·zóth; Êx 12:7 n), uma em cada lado do marco, sobre o qual repousa o dintel; (3) a própria porta (hebr.: dé·leth; gr.: thý·ra); (4) o "limiar" (hebr.: saf [Jz 19:27]), que fica abaixo da porta.

O dintel e as ombreiras das entradas das casas israelitas no Egito foram obedientemente espargidos com o sangue da vítima pascoal como sinal para que o anjo de Deus passasse por alto tais casas e não destruísse o primogênito. (Êx 12:7, 22, 23) Segundo a Lei, se um escravo (ou escrava) desejasse permanecer para sempre a serviço de seu amo, este encostava o(a) escravo(a) na porta ou na ombreira e furava-lhe a orelha com uma sovela. (Êx 21:5, 6; De 15:16, 17) A palavra hebraica para ombreira (mezu·záh) veio a ser aplicada a um pequeno recipiente chamado de mezuzá. Ele é pregado na ombreira da porta pelos judeus ortodoxos e contém um pergaminho em que constam as palavras de Deuteronômio 6:4-9; 11:13-21. — Veja MEZUZÁ.

A porta era geralmente de madeira, e muitas delas giravam sobre gonzos ajustados nos encaixes do dintel e do limiar. (Pr 26:14) Os gonzos da porta não raro eram de madeira, mas os egípcios às vezes afixavam nas extremidades inferior e superior da porta dobradiças de metal com saliências que se ajustavam a encaixes, de modo que tais portas giravam sobre gonzos. Os encaixes para os batentes das portas do templo construído por Salomão eram de ouro. — 1Rs 7:48, 50.

As portas das casas comuns eram pequenas e não eram ornamentadas. Mas na entrada do templo de Salomão havia duas portas de folha dupla, de madeira de junípero, e duas portas de madeira de oleastro que davam para o Santíssimo, todas elas esculpidas com figuras de querubins, palmeiras e flores, recobertas de ouro. (1Rs 6:31-35) Em outras partes usavam-se também grandes portas com seções ou folhas dobráveis. Por exemplo, Jeová cuidou de que as "portas duplas" de cobre, de Babilônia, ficassem abertas para o Rei Ciro. — Is 45:1, 2.

Para o limiar geralmente se usava madeira ou pedra. Contudo, os limiares da "casa de Jeová" construída por Salomão eram recobertos de ouro. — 2Cr 3:1, 7.

As portas das casas ou os portões eram às vezes trancados com barras ou traves de madeira ou de ferro (Is 45:2; De 3:5; 2Cr 8:5; 14:7), geralmente afixadas dum modo que permitia penetrarem em encaixes nos pilares de portão ou nos batentes de porta. Os portões de cidade, em certos casos, tinham tanto barras como ferrolhos. (Ne 3:3; 7:3) O ferrolho talvez fosse uma haste ou cabo que podia ser introduzido num encaixe no limiar dentro do portão. Alguns portões de cidade tinham fechos ou trancas (De 33:25), como também os tinham as portas de casas. — 2Sa 13:17, 18; Lu 11:7; veja FECHADURA; PORTA, PORTÃO.

Usavam-se até certo ponto aldravas de metal, mas a Bíblia não diz especificamente que os hebreus as usavam. Para despertar os ocupantes duma casa, a pessoa batia na porta da casa ou no portão. — Cân 5:2; At 12:13.

Uso Figurado. Jesus Cristo encorajou a persistência, dizendo: "Persisti em bater, e abrir-se-vos-á." (Mt 7:7) Em Revelação (Apocalipse) 3:20, Cristo diz que ele 'está em pé à porta e está batendo', com companheirismo e benefícios espirituais assegurados para quem abrir a porta e o receber.

Se a jovem sulamita fosse instável no amor e na virtude, como uma porta que gira nos seus gonzos, seus irmãos determinariam 'bloqueá-la com uma tábua de cedro', cerrando assim a "porta" com tranca e evitando que se abrisse a algum elemento pernicioso. — Cân 8:8, 9.

O leviatã, com sua queixada dupla, é representado como tendo "portas" na face. (Jó 41:1, 13, 14) O congregante observou que, no caso do homem idoso, 'as portas que dão à rua estão fechadas', talvez para mostrar que as duas 'portas' da boca não mais se abrem muito, ou sequer se abrem, para exprimir o que existe na 'casa', o corpo. — Ec 12:1, 4.

Jesus Cristo recomendou esforço vigoroso para se ganhar a salvação, para "entrar pela porta estreita". (Lu 13:23, 24; Fil 3:13, 14; compare isso com Mt 7:13, 14.) Noutra ocasião Jesus comparou a si mesmo com a porta dum aprisco figurado, sendo ele o correto tipo de pastor que conduz seu "pequeno rebanho" para a entrada numa relação com Jeová à base do novo pacto selado com o sangue do próprio Jesus. (Lu 12:32; Jo 10:7-11) Comparar-se Jesus a tal porta harmoniza-se com o fato de que, através dele, em virtude de seu sacrifício de resgate, pessoas comparáveis a ovelhas podem achegar-se a Deus, ser salvas e ganhar a vida. — Jo 14:6.

Jeová era responsável por abrir às nações "a porta da fé". (At 14:27) Paulo permaneceu em Éfeso por algum tempo porque abrira-se para ele ali 'uma porta larga para a atividade' de declarar as boas novas. — 1Co 16:8, 9; At 19:1-20; compare isso com 2Co 2:12, 13; Col 4:3, 4.

Em visão, João viu "uma porta aberta no céu" que lhe possibilitou ver coisas futuras e como que entrar na presença de Jeová. — Re 4:1-3.

PORTA-LUME. Porta-lumes eram usados de vários modos com relação ao serviço no santuário. Havia porta-lumes de ouro que, pelo que parece, serviam como receptáculos para os pedaços de pavio queimados, que eram removidos das lâmpadas do candelabro de ouro. (Êx 25:38; 37:23; Núm 4:9) Os porta-lumes de cobre do altar da oferta queimada evidentemente serviam como cinzeiros ou utensílios para a remoção de brasas do fogo. (Êx 27:3; 38:3) Adicionalmente, usavam-se porta-lumes para queimar incenso. (Le 10:1) Todas as manhãs e entre as duas noitinhas, o sumo sacerdote fazia com que incenso perfumado fumegasse sobre o altar de ouro do incenso. — Êx 30:7, 8.

Os porta-lumes, bem como os outros utensílios usados com o candelabro e com o altar de ofertas queimadas, tinham de ser cobertos quando os israelitas levantavam acampamento e o tabernáculo era transportado para outra localidade durante suas jornadas. — Núm 4:9, 14.

Salomão fez porta-lumes de ouro e de prata para o templo, cujo plano arquitetônico foi dado a Davi por inspiração. Possivelmente o estilo destes era mais ornamentado do que aqueles usados no tabernáculo no ermo. (1Rs 7:48-50; 1Cr 28:11-19; 2Cr 4:19-22) Faz-se menção de porta-lumes de ouro e de prata genuínos como tendo sido tirados do templo na época do exílio babilônico. — 2Rs 25:15; Je 52:19.

Em Hebreus 9:4 faz-se alusão a um objeto que, junto com a Arca do Pacto, dizia respeito ao Santíssimo, ou tinha relação com ele. Em grego é chamado de thy·mi·a·té·ri·on. Esta palavra refere-se a algo relacionado com a queima de incenso. Era o altar de incenso? Algumas traduções apresentam o assunto como se fosse, e o uso dessa palavra por Filo e Josefo com referência ao altar de incenso é citada em apoio. (ALA, BMD, NTP, VB) Naturalmente, é bem conhecido que o altar de incenso realmente não se encontrava no Santíssimo. (Êx 30:1, 6) Mas ficava imediatamente do lado de fora da cortina, ou "do lado do compartimento mais recôndito", como diz 1 Reis 6:22. (Compare isso com Êx 40:3-5.) Por outro lado, thy·mi·a·té·ri·on pode corretamente ser traduzido por "incensário" e, de fato, no Dia da Expiação, o sumo sacerdote levava um incensário para dentro do Santíssimo. (Le 16:12, 13) Na Septuaginta grega, a palavra thy·mi·a·té·ri·on é sempre usada com relação ao incensário (2Cr 26:19; Ez 8:11, LXX), embora seja usada uma palavra diferente em Levítico 16:12 ao descrever eventos do Dia da Expiação. A Míxena judaica, porém, indica que no Dia da Expiação passou-se a usar um incensário especial de ouro. (Yoma 4:4; 5:1; 7:4) Assim, com boa razão, alguns tradutores preferem traduzir thy·mi·a·té·ri·on por "incensário". — NM, Al, CC, Dy, Yg, Da.

Maus Usos. Nadabe e Abiú, filhos de Arão, usaram seus porta-lumes para oferecer fogo ilegítimo perante Jeová e em resultado disso perderam a vida. (Le 10:1, 2) Similarmente, os 250 homens rebeldes encabeçados por Corá foram consumidos por fogo quando apresentaram seus porta-lumes de cobre diante de Jeová. (Núm 16:16-19, 35, 39) O Rei Uzias foi atacado de lepra ao usar ilegalmente um incensário. (2Cr 26:18, 19) Os 70 homens ido-sos de Israel que foram vistos na visão de Ezequiel usavam incensários para oferecer incenso a ídolos. — Ez 8:10, 11; veja INCENSO.

PORTÃO. Veja PORTA, PORTÃO.

PORTÃO DO LESTE. Veja PORTA, PORTÃO.

PORTEIRO. Nos tempos antigos, os porteiros serviam em vários locais, tais como nos portões das cidades, nos portões do templo, até mesmo em portões ou portas de casas. Os porteiros da cidade eram incumbidos de se certificar de que os portões fossem fechados à noite, e atuavam como vigias no portão. Outros vigias talvez fossem colocados como sentinelas no topo do portão ou numa torre, de onde podiam ter ampla visão e anunciar os que se aproximavam da cidade. Eles cooperavam com o porteiro. (2Sa 18:24, 26) Tratava-se dum cargo de grande responsabilidade, uma vez que a segurança da cidade dependia grandemente do porteiro e ele era um instrumento de comunicação entre os de fora da cidade e os de dentro. (2Rs 7:10, 11) Os porteiros do Rei Assuero, dois dos quais planejaram assassiná-lo, eram também chamados de oficiais da corte. — Est 2:21-23; 6:2.

No Templo. O Rei Davi, pouco antes de sua morte, organizou cabalmente os levitas e os trabalhadores do templo, incluindo os porteiros, dos quais havia 4.000. Eles serviam nas suas divisões por sete dias de cada vez. Eram responsáveis de guardar a casa de Jeová, e de certificar-se de que as portas fossem abertas e fechadas na hora certa. (1Cr 9:23-27; 23:1-6) Além do dever de guarda, alguns cuidavam das contribuições trazidas pelas pessoas para uso no templo. (2Rs 12:9; 22:4) Numa época posterior, quando Jeoiada, o sumo sacerdote, ungiu Jeoás como rei, foram designados guardas especiais nos portões do templo para proteger o jovem Jeoás da usurpadora Rainha Atalia. (2Rs 11:4-8) Quando o Rei Josias destruiu a adoração idólatra, os porteiros ajudaram a remover do templo os utensílios que haviam sido utilizados na adoração de Baal. Estes foram então queimados fora da cidade. — 2Rs 23:4.

Quando Jesus Cristo estava na terra, sacerdotes e levitas eram designados como porteiros e vigias no templo reconstruído por Herodes. Exigia-se destes que se mantivessem alertas, pois o superintendente ou oficial do monte do Templo fazia suas rondas, aparecendo em horas não anunciadas, e era necessário que o vigia permanecesse constantemente alerta em seu posto, para não ser apanhado desprevenido. Havia outro oficial encarregado de lançar sortes para os serviços no templo. Quando ele chegava e batia na porta, era necessário que o guarda estivesse alerta para abri-la a ele. Também ele poderia apanhar o guarda dormindo. Sobre esse assunto de vigilância, a Míxena (Middot 1:2) diz: "O oficial do monte do Templo costumava aproximar-se de todo vigia com tochas acesas à sua frente, e, se algum vigia não se postasse e lhe dissesse: 'Ó oficial do monte do Templo, a paz esteja contigo!', e ficasse evidente que estava dormindo, o oficial o bateria com seu bastão, e tinha o direito de queimar as suas vestes." — Traduzido (para o inglês) por H. Danby; veja também Re 16:15.

Esses porteiros e guardas eram colocados em seus postos para proteger o templo contra roubos e impedir a entrada de pessoas impuras e de intrusos, a quem não competia estar ali.

Nos Lares. Nos dias dos apóstolos, algumas casas empregavam porteiros. Na casa de Maria, a mãe de João Marcos, uma serva de nome Rode atendeu Pedro à porta quando ele voltou da prisão depois de ter sido libertado por um anjo. (At 12:12-14) A moça que trabalhava como porteira na casa do sumo sacerdote perguntou a Pedro se ele era um dos discípulos de Cristo. — Jo 18:17.

Pastores. Os pastores nos tempos bíblicos costumavam manter seus rebanhos de ovelhas num redil, ou aprisco, durante a noite. Estes redis consistiam numa mureta de pedra com uma porta. Os rebanhos de um único homem, ou, às vezes, de vários deles, eram mantidos no redil durante a noite, havendo um porteiro para vigiá-los e protegê-los. Jesus aparentemente usou este costume para fins ilustrativos, quando mencionou um porteiro, ao falar de si mesmo não só como o pastor das ovelhas de Deus mas também como a porta pela qual as ovelhas podiam entrar. — Jo 10:1-9.

Cristãos. Jesus frisou a necessidade de os cristãos se manterem alertas e vigilantes a respeito de sua vinda como executor de Jeová. Ele assemelhou o cristão ao porteiro ao qual seu senhor ordenou que se mantivesse alerta e aguardasse a sua volta duma viagem ao exterior. — Mr 13:33-37; veja GUARDA; PORTA, PORTÃO.

PORTENTO. Algo que pressagia situações ou eventos futuros; também, uma maravilha.

A palavra hebraica moh·féth em geral transmite a ideia dum "milagre", como no caso dos milagres realizados por meio de Moisés e Arão, no Egito. Não obstante, em certos casos, o termo é definitivamente usado no sentido dum "portento", como a respeito do profeta ou sonhador que oferece um sinal ou portento (a ser cumprido no futuro), para apoiar sua profecia. — De 13:1-3.

O portento (moh·féth) poderia ser um ato miraculoso que manifestasse poder divino, como no caso em que Deus fendeu o altar de Jeroboão, como portento da execução ainda futura e maior de Seu julgamento adverso a respeito desse altar e dos que serviam nele. (1Rs 13:1-5; compare isso com o cumprimento, uns 300 anos depois, em 2Rs 23:16-20.) Ou, poderia ser apenas uma ação incomum realizada por alguém, como quando Isaías andou nu e descalço como portento das condições que sobreviriam ao Egito e à Etiópia, às mãos do rei da Assíria (Is 20:3-6), ou quando Ezequiel abriu um buraco na parede (provavelmente na de sua residência) e levou através deste sua bagagem como portento do exílio com que Judá se confrontava. — Ez 12:5-11; compare isso com 24:18-27.

Sendo que um portento é um sinal que aponta para coisas ou circunstâncias futuras, um escritor talvez empregue a palavra moh·féth (portento, ou milagre), ao passo que outro talvez use 'ohth (sinal) para referir-se à mesma coisa. (Compare 2Cr 32:24 com 2Rs 20:8, 9.) Um "sinal" pode servir como guia ou indício para o presente, bem como para o futuro, ao passo que "portento" relaciona-se primariamente com o futuro. Classificar algo de "sinal" frisa que isso tem significado, seja para o presente, seja para o futuro. Ser chamado de "portento" frisa seu significado relacionado com o futuro.

Assim, ao referir-se a Joel 2:30, que predisse "portentos [plural do hebraico moh·fét] nos céus e na terra", o apóstolo Pedro falou de "portentos [plural de té·ras, em grego] em cima no céu e sinais [plural de se·mei·on] em baixo na terra". (At 2:14, 19) Nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, té·ras é coerentemente usado em combinação com se·mei·on ("sinal"), ambos os termos sendo usados no plural. — At 7:36; 14:3; 15:12; 2Cr 12:12.

Basicamente, té·ras refere-se a qualquer ato ou coisa que suscite admiração, sendo assim bem traduzida por "prodígios" em alguns casos. (Mt 24:24; Jo 4:48) Quando o futuro se acha mais claramente envolvido, "portento" é mais apropriado. As "poderosas obras, e portentos, e sinais, que Deus fez por intermédio dele", serviam como credenciais de que Jesus era o "Enviado" de Deus. (At 2:22) As miraculosas curas e ressurreições realizadas por Jesus não só provocavam admiração mas eram também portentos do que faria em escala maior no futuro. (Jo 6:54; compare isso com Jo 1:50, 51; 5:20, 28.) Alguns atos eram portentos de sua atividade futura como Sumo Sacerdote de Deus, perdoando pecados e atuando como Juiz. (Mt 9:2-8; Jo 5:1-24) Outros serviam qual evidência da autoridade e do poder futuros de Jesus de atuar contra Satanás e seus demônios, lançando-os no abismo. (Mt 12:22-29; Lu 8:27-33; compare isso com Re 20:1-3.) Todos estes atos apontavam para o Governo Messiânico de Jesus qual Rei Ungido do Reino de Deus.

Similarmente, os discípulos de Jesus, como testemunhas de seus ensinos e de sua ressurreição, eram apoiados por Deus com "sinais, e também com portentos e várias obras poderosas". (He 2:3, 4; At 2:43; 5:12) Estes evidenciavam os modos de Deus lidar com a recém-formada congregação cristã, e eram portentos de Sua utilização futura dessa congregação para cumprir Sua vontade e Seu propósito. — Veja Jo 14:12.

Assim como surgiram falsos profetas em Israel, a predita apostasia na congregação cristã igualmente produziria um "homem que é contra a lei", cuja presença seria evidenciada pela "operação de Satanás, com toda obra poderosa, e sinais e portentos mentirosos". (2Te 2:3-12) Assim, a evidência juntada em apoio do movimento apóstata não seria fraca nem insignificante, mas manifestaria o poderio de Satanás. Contudo, os portentos seriam mentirosos, quer obviamente fraudulentos, quer enganosos quanto às conclusões a que levariam. Parecendo manifestar a benevolência e a bênção de Deus, na verdade desviariam as pessoas da fonte e da vereda da vida. — Compare isso com 2Co 11:3, 12-15; veja MILAGRES; PODER, OBRAS PODEROSAS; SINAL, I.

PÓRTICO. Nas Escrituras Hebraicas, a palavra para pórtico, 'eh·lám (ou 'u·lám), não é usada com relação a uma parte arquitetônica de casas ou moradias particulares. É difícil determinar se as casas dos israelitas tinham pórtico de algum tipo. Os restos arqueológicos de algumas casas em Megido, porém, indicam que elas foram construídas ao redor dum pátio, e que "um aposento do térreo servia como vestíbulo de entrada". (The Biblical Archaeologist [O Arqueólogo Bíblico], maio de 1968, pp. 46, 48) Nas Escrituras, 'eh·lám é aplicada a dois dos prédios públicos que Salomão construiu, à parte frontal do templo de Salomão, e a certas partes dos portais e do templo que foi mostrado em visão a Ezequiel.

Pórtico das Colunas. Um dos prédios oficiais que Salomão construiu na área do templo, algum tempo depois de ter concluído o templo, foi o Pórtico das Colunas. (1Rs 7:1, 6) Visto que se faz menção do Pórtico das Colunas entre os comentários sobre a Casa da Floresta do Líbano e os comentários sobre o Pórtico do Trono, é bem possível que o Pórtico das Colunas se localizasse ao S do templo e entre os outros dois prédios oficiais. Assim, uma pessoa que viesse do S talvez atravessasse ou ladeasse a Casa da Floresta do Líbano e daí entrasse no Pórtico das Colunas, caminhando através dele até o Pórtico do Trono.

O prédio tinha 50 côvados (22,3 m) de comprimento por 30 côvados (13,4 m) de largura. O seu próprio nome sugere que era constituído de fileiras de impressionantes colunas. Primeiro Reis 7:6 menciona ainda outro pórtico em frente, com colunas e um alpendre. Isto talvez signifique que a pessoa chegava primeiro a um pórtico que tinha um alpendre sustentado por colunas. Daí, este pórtico se unia diretamente com o Pórtico das Colunas propriamente dito. Caso as dimensões fornecidas se apliquem apenas ao Pórtico das Colunas, então o tamanho da parte do alpendre não é suprido.

Este prédio talvez servisse de majestosa via de acesso ao Pórtico do Trono e como lugar em que o rei cumpria os atos de rotina do reino e recebia certos visitantes.

Pórtico do Trono. Outro prédio que Salomão construiu depois de o templo ter sido concluído foi o Pórtico do Trono. (1Rs 7:1, 7) O "pórtico do julgamento" mencionado no texto parece ser sinônimo do "Pórtico do Trono". Assim, o "Pórtico do Trono" evidentemente era o local em que Salomão colocou seu majestoso trono de marfim e de ouro, onde fazia julgamentos. — 1Rs 10:18-20.

A inteira descrição deste edifício é a seguinte: "Fez o pórtico do julgamento; e forraram-no de cedro, desde o soalho até o vigamento." (1Rs 7:7) O texto massorético realmente diz: "de piso a piso", levando alguns a crer que havia cedro desde o piso deste edifício até o piso do Pórtico das Colunas, mencionado no versículo precedente. Não obstante, a Pesito siríaca reza "do piso ao teto", e a Vulgata latina diz "do piso ao alto". Assim, certos tradutores creem que o cedro era algum tipo de apainelamento magnífico que ia do piso do Pórtico até seu vigamento ou o teto. (ALA, BJ, CBC, NM, PIB, VB) Embora faltem outros pormenores arquitetônicos, isto sugere um edifício sem colunas abertas num dos lados, ou nas laterais, como talvez tenha sido no caso da Casa da Floresta do Líbano e do Pórtico das Colunas.

Visto que o Pórtico do Trono está alistado logo após o Pórtico das Colunas, é possível que este último edifício servisse qual majestosa entrada para o Pórtico do Trono. Quem viesse do S talvez tivesse de passar através do Pórtico das Colunas a fim de entrar no pórtico do julgamento.

O Templo de Salomão. Ao passo que as partes fundamentais do templo eram o Santo e o Santíssimo, em frente ao Santo (na direção L) havia um pórtico maciço que servia como via de acesso ao templo. O pórtico tinha 20 côvados (8,9 m) de frente (acompanhando a largura do templo) e 10 côvados (4,5 m) de fundo. (1Rs 6:3) Tinha 120 côvados (53,4 m) de altura. Segundo Crônicas 3:4 fornece a altura do pórtico no contexto de outras medidas da casa, medidas comumente aceitas e que se harmonizam com as de Primeiro Reis. (Compare 2Cr 3:3, 4 com 1Rs 6:2, 3, 17, 20.) Assim, o pórtico teria a aparência de uma torre alta, evidentemente retangular, que se estendia bem acima da parte restante do edifício do templo. À sua frente erguiam-se duas colunas maciças de cobre, chamadas Jaquim e Boaz. (1Rs 7:15-22; 2Cr 3:15-17) O pórtico também tinha portas (o Rei Acaz as fechou, mas seu filho, Ezequias, posteriormente as abriu e consertou). (2Cr 28:24; 29:3, 7) Especialmente pela manhã, quando o sol nascente no L brilhava diretamente sobre ele, o majestoso pórtico do templo deve ter sido uma vista mui impressionante.

A Visão Que Ezequiel Teve de um Templo. Bom número de pórticos é mencionado na visão que Ezequiel teve de um templo-santuário. O próprio edifício do templo tinha um pórtico frontal (na direção L), como tinha o templo de Salomão. No entanto, este pórtico media 20 côvados (10,4 m) de comprimento e 11 côvados (5,70 m) de largura; sua altura não é declarada. (Estas medidas baseiam-se no côvado longo, de cerca de 51,8 cm; veja Ez 40:5 n.) Este pórtico tinha colunas frontais, bem como colunas laterais, e havia um alpendre de madeira, provavelmente perto do topo. (Ez 40:48, 49; 41:25, 26) Cada um dos três suntuosos portões exteriores (que davam acesso do L, do S e do N) incorporava um pórtico com janelas de armações que se estreitavam. Aparentemente, a pessoa que subia pelas escadas até o portão passava por três saletas da guarda de cada lado, e então, por atravessar um patamar ou limiar, chegava ao pórtico, antes de entrar no pátio externo. (Ez 40:6-17) Cada um dos três portões internos tinha também um pórtico, talvez logo que a pessoa subisse as escadas e entrasse pelo portão. O pórtico do portão com acesso do N continha quatro mesas para ali serem abatidos os animais da oferta queimada. — Ez 40:35-42.

POSSESSÃO DEMONÍACA. O aprisionador controle e influência sobre uma pessoa por parte dum invisível espírito iníquo. Nos tempos bíblicos, os endemoninhados eram afligidos de várias maneiras: alguns ficavam mudos, outros cegos, outros agiam como lunáticos e outros possuíam força sobre-humana. Todos eram horrivelmente maltratados por estes tiranos invisíveis. (Mt 9:32; 12:22; 17:15; Mr 5:3-5; Lu 8:29; 9:42; 11:14; At 19:16) Suas vítimas incluíam homens, mulheres e crianças. (Mt 15:22; Mr 5:2) A agonia às vezes era maior quando muitos demônios se apoderavam da mesma pessoa ao mesmo tempo. (Lu 8:2, 30) Quando o demônio era expulso, a pessoa recobrava seu estado mental normal e sadio. Há uma diferença entre a possessão demoníaca e a doença física comum, pois Jesus curou ambos os tipos de distúrbios. — Mt 8:16; 17:18; Mr 1:32, 34.

Alguns dos maiores milagres de Jesus relacionavam-se com a libertação de pessoas possessas do cativeiro aos demônios. Estes eram impotentes diante dele. Mas, nem todos se alegravam com a sua obra de expulsar demônios. Os fariseus acusaram-no de estar mancomunado com o governante dos demônios, Belzebu, quando, na verdade, como Jesus indicou, eles mesmos eram a descendência do Diabo. (Mt 9:34; 12:24; Mr 3:22; Lu 11:15; Jo 7:20; 8:44, 48-52) Jesus sabia qual era a fonte do poder que lhe dava domínio sobre os demônios, e admitiu abertamente que se tratava do espírito de Jeová. (Mt 12:28; Lu 8:39; 11:20) Os próprios demônios reconheciam a identidade de Jesus e dirigiam-se a ele como o "Filho de Deus", "o Santo de Deus" e "Jesus, Filho do Deus Altíssimo". (Mt 8:29; Mr 1:24; 3:11; 5:7; Lu 4:34, 41; At 19:15; Tg 2:19) No entanto, em nenhum momento Jesus permitiu que testemunhassem em seu favor. (Mr 3:12) Por outro lado, certo homem que fora libertado do poder dos demônios foi incentivado a declarar a seus parentes 'todas as coisas que Jeová fizera por ele'. — Mr 5:18-20.

Jesus deu também a seus 12 apóstolos autoridade sobre os demônios e, mais tarde, aos 70 que ele enviou, de modo que, em nome de Jesus, estes também puderam curar os possessos de demônios. (Mt 10:8; Mr 3:15; 6:13; Lu 9:1; 10:17) Até mesmo certa pessoa que não era associado íntimo de Jesus ou de seus apóstolos conseguiu exorcismar um demônio à base do nome de Jesus. (Mr 9:38-40; Lu 9:49, 50) Depois da morte de Jesus, os apóstolos continuaram a ter este poder. Paulo expulsou um "demônio de adivinhação" duma jovem escrava, para grande ira de seus donos amantes do dinheiro. (At 16:16-19) Mas, quando certos impostores, os sete filhos do sacerdote Ceva, tentaram expulsar um demônio em nome de 'Jesus, a quem Paulo pregava', o homem possesso de demônio agarrou os sete e espancou-os duramente, deixando-os nus. — At 19:13-16.

Não raro, a conduta bravia e incontrolável de pessoas mentalmente desequilibradas deve-se à possessão por parte desses lacaios invisíveis de Satanás. Vez por outra relata-se que médiuns espíritas expulsam estes demônios; isto faz lembrar o que Jesus disse: "Muitos me dirão naquele dia: 'Senhor, Senhor, não . . . expulsamos demônios em teu nome . . .?' Contudo, eu lhes confessarei então: Nunca vos conheci!" (Mt 7:22, 23) Imperiosos motivos, portanto, para acatarmos o conselho: "Sede vigilantes", e: "Revesti-vos da armadura completa de Deus, para que vos possais manter firmes contra as maquinações do Diabo" e seus demônios. — 1Pe 5:8; Ef 6:11.

POSTE SAGRADO. A palavra hebraica 'asheráh (pl.: 'ashe·rím), segundo se pensa, refere-se a (1) um poste sagrado que representa a Axerá, uma deusa cananeia da fertilidade (Jz 6:25, 26) e (2) à própria deusa Axerá. (2Rs 13:6, n) Contudo, nem sempre é possível determinar se certo texto deve ser entendido como se referindo ao objeto idólatra ou à deusa. Bom número de traduções modernas da Bíblia, porém, traduzem a palavra da língua original por "poste(s) sagrado(s)", mas transliteram-na quando a referência parece ser à deusa. (AT, BJ) Outros não se preocupam em fazer uma distinção, mas simplesmente transliteram a palavra hebraica (VB) ou traduzem-na coerentemente por "poste(s) sagrado(s)" (NM). Nas traduções mais antigas da Bíblia, a palavra hebraica em geral é traduzida por "arvoredo(s)". (KJ, Le) Mas esta tradução é inapropriada em textos tais como Juízes 3:7 e 2 Reis 23:6 (KJ), que falam de servir "arvoredos" e trazer o "arvoredo" para fora do templo em Jerusalém.

Os Postes Sagrados. Os postes sagrados, pelo visto, eram eretos e feitos de madeira, ou pelo menos continham madeira, visto que se ordenou aos israelitas que os cortassem e queimassem. (Êx 34:13; De 12:3) Podem ter sido simples postes não esculpidos, talvez até mesmo árvores em alguns casos, pois o povo de Deus foi instruído: "Não deves plantar para ti nenhuma sorte de árvore como poste sagrado." — De 16:21.

Tanto Israel como Judá desconsideraram a ordem expressa de Deus, de não erguer colunas sagradas e postes sagrados; eles os colocavam sobre "todo morro elevado e debaixo de cada árvore frondosa", ao lado dos altares usados para sacrifícios. Tem-se sugerido que os postes representavam o princípio feminino, ao passo que as colunas representavam o princípio masculino. Estes itens de idolatria, provavelmente símbolos fálicos, estavam associados com orgias sexuais crassamente imorais, conforme se vê da indicação de que já no reinado de Roboão havia no país homens que se prostituíam. (1Rs 14:22-24; 2Rs 17:10) Só raramente surgiam reis, como Ezequias (e Josias), que 'removeram os altos e despedaçaram as colunas sagradas, e deceparam o poste sagrado'. — 2Rs 18:4; 2Cr 34:7.

Axerá. Os textos de Ras Xamra identificam esta deusa como esposa do deus El, o "Criador de Criaturas", e referem-se a ela como "Senhora Axerá do Mar" e "Progenitora dos Deuses", o que a torna também mãe de Baal. Contudo, parece ter havido considerável coincidência de papéis entre as três deusas de destaque no baalismo (Anate, Axerá e Astorete), como pode ser observado de fontes extrabíblicas, bem como do registro bíblico. Ao passo que Astorete parece ter figurado qual esposa de Baal, Axerá talvez fosse também assim considerada.

Deve-se notar que, durante o período dos juízes, os israelitas apóstatas "serviam aos Baalins e aos postes sagrados [Axerás]". (Jz 3:7 n; compare isso com 2:13.) A menção destas deidades no plural talvez indique que cada localidade tinha seu Baal e sua Axerá. (Jz 6:25) Jezabel, a esposa sidônia de Acabe, rei de Israel, recebia em sua mesa 450 profetas de Baal e 400 profetas do poste sagrado ou Axerá. — 1Rs 18:19.

A adoração degradada de Axerá veio a ser praticada no próprio templo de Jeová. O Rei Manassés chegou a colocar ali uma imagem esculpida do poste sagrado, evidentemente uma representação da deusa Axerá. (2Rs 21:7) Manassés foi disciplinado por ser levado cativo para Babilônia, e, ao voltar a Jerusalém, mostrou que se beneficiou da disciplina e purificou a casa de Jeová dos itens de idolatria. Contudo, seu filho, Amom, deu prosseguimento à degradante adoração de Baal e de Axerá, junto com a acompanhante prostituição cerimonial. (2Cr 33:11-13, 15, 21-23) Isto tornou necessário que o justo Rei Josias, que sucedeu a Amom no trono, demolisse "as casas dos homens que se prostituíam no serviço dum templo, que havia na casa de Jeová, onde as mulheres teciam sacrários de tenda para o poste sagrado". — 2Rs 23:4-7.

POSTURAS. Veja ATITUDES, POSTURAS E GESTOS.

POTIFAR [do egípcio, forma abreviada de Potífera]. Oficial da corte egípcia e chefe da guarda pessoal de Faraó. Era o amo de José por certo tempo, e, pelo visto, um homem abastado. (Gên 37:36; 39:4) Potifar comprou José de mercadores viajantes midianitas, e, observando quão bom servo José era, com o tempo colocou-o como encarregado de toda a sua casa e seu campo, reduto este que Jeová abençoou por causa de José. — Gên 37:36; 39:1-6.

A esposa de Potifar não lhe era tão fiel quanto José, servo dele. Ela repetidas vezes tentou seduzir José, e, certo dia, quando não havia outros homens por perto, ela o agarrou, mas José ainda assim não cedeu e fugiu correndo. Quando Potifar chegou a casa, ele deu ouvidos apenas à enxurrada de falsas acusações de sua esposa frustrada. Potifar iradamente mandou lançar José na prisão. — Gên 39:7-20.

Esta prisão aparentemente estava ligada à casa de Potifar, ou, pelo menos, ficava sob sua jurisdição, como "chefe da guarda pessoal". Assim, o registro menciona o copeiro-mor e o padeiro-mor de Faraó serem lançados nesta mesma cadeia, a "cadeia da casa do chefe da guarda pessoal", a "cadeia da casa do . . . amo [de José]". (Gên 39:1; 40:1-7) No entanto, parece improvável que Potifar deva ser identificado com o "oficial principal da casa da prisão" que "entregou à mão de José todos os prisioneiros que havia na casa da prisão". (Gên 39:21-23) Este oficial era provavelmente um subordinado de Potifar.

O título "oficial da corte", de Potifar, traduz a palavra hebraica sa·rís, "eunuco", que, num uso mais amplo, significava camarista de corte, cortesão, ou funcionário de confiança do trono. O 'oficial da corte [sa·rís] que comandava os homens de guerra' quando Jerusalém caiu, em 607 AEC, era sem dúvida uma alta autoridade governamental, não uma pessoa castrada, sem masculinidade. (2Rs 25:19) Da mesma forma, Potifar era militar, chefe do corpo da guarda, bem como um homem casado, fatos que indicam que ele não era eunuco no sentido mais comum.

POTÍFERA [do egípcio, significando "Aquele a Quem Rá Deu"]. Sogro de José, cuja filha, Asenate, deu à luz Manassés e Efraim. (Gên 41:45, 50; 46:20) Potífera era o sacerdote, provavelmente do deus-sol Rá, e oficiava em Om, centro egípcio da adoração do sol. No Museu do Cairo há uma estela, ou coluna funerária, adquirida em 1935, que tem gravado nela o nome "Putiphar". — Annales du service des antiquités de l'Égypte (Anais do serviço de antiguidades do Egito), Cairo, 1939, Vol. XXXIX, pp. 273-276.

POUPA [hebr.: du·khi·fáth]. Mais ou menos do tamanho de um pombo delgado, a poupa (Upupa epops) é uma ave de coloração um tanto cor-de-canela, marcada de forma distinta por alternadas faixas brancas e pretas ao longo das asas e das costas. Seu aspecto mais notável é o penacho, sendo que cada pena é branca perto da ponta, com extremidade preta, indo o penacho desde a base do bico curvo, longo e delgado, até a parte posterior da cabeça. Embora seja revestida de vistosa e admirável plumagem, a poupa é notavelmente imunda no ninho e em seus hábitos. Sua dieta de insetos é obtida por enfiar o bico aguçado não só no solo, mas também em montes de esterco e em outras sujeiras. O ninho exala um odor desagradável, produzido pela secreção das glândulas oleosas da ave, e é também malcheiroso, porque esta ave não limpa seu ninho dos excrementos. Assim, embora não seja uma ave de rapina, nem comedora de carniça, a poupa achava-se entre as aves alistadas na Lei mosaica como impuras para alimento. — Le 11:13, 19; De 14:12, 18.

Presente em todo o sul da Ásia e na África e em partes da Europa, a poupa migra para a Palestina por volta de primeiro de março e ali permanece até a aproximação do inverno, quando então se dirige para o sul, rumo ao Egito, e a outras partes do norte da África.

A identificação dessa ave com "o abibe" (the lapwing), como na King James Version (Versão Rei Jaime) (Le 11:19; De 14:18), não mais ocorre em traduções modernas. Os tradutores da Septuaginta grega e da Vulgata latina entendiam que fosse "a poupa" (é·pops, LXX; upupa, Vg), e os nomes siríaco e árabe para a poupa (siríaco: qaqufa; árabe: hudhudu) também confirmam esta identificação.

Alguns acreditam que o nome hebraico para a poupa (du·khi·fáth) destina-se a representar a peculiar voz dessa ave, algo parecida com a de uma pomba, como claramente é o caso no nome dessa ave nas outras línguas mencionadas. Outros preferem derivar o nome do verbo hebraico que significa "pilar" (veja Núm 11:8), por observarem o hábito da poupa de perfurar o solo em busca de alimento.

POVO DA TERRA. Esta expressão (hebr.: 'am ha·'á·rets e suas formas no plural) ocorre 75 vezes no texto hebraico. Nos dias de Jesus era usada por líderes religiosos como termo de desprezo, mas, originalmente, não era assim.

O léxico hebraico e aramaico de Koehler e Baumgartner explica que essa expressão hebraica significa "cidadãos de posse de plenos direitos". (Lexicon in Veteris Testamenti Libros [Léxico dos Livros do Velho Testamento], Leiden, 1958, p. 711) O The Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible (O Dicionário Bíblico do Intérprete) diz que esse termo, "no sentido estrito, inclui apenas os cidadãos responsáveis do sexo masculino, os homens casados que vivem em sua própria terra e que têm plenos direitos e deveres, incluindo o dever de servir no exército e de participar em procedimentos judiciais e . . . em festividades". (Editado por G. A. Buttrick, 1962, Vol. 1, p. 106) (Compare isso com Le 20:2-5; 2Rs 15:5; 16:15; Ez 45:16, 22; 46:3, 9.) Portanto, originalmente, tratava-se de uma expressão de respeito. Não se aplicava apenas a uma classe humilde, ou à categoria dos menos afortunados.

Ao regatear os direitos de propriedade da caverna de Macpela, Abraão teve tratos com os hititas, o "povo daquela terra". (Gên 23:7, 13, PIB) Nestes versículos, tanto An American Translation (Uma Tradução Americana) como a Tradução do Novo Mundo traduzem o termo hebraico 'am ha·'á·rets por "nativos". Faraó, ao falar a Moisés e a Arão, referiu-se aos israelitas que moravam em Gósen como "o povo do país". (Êx 5:5) Essa expressão foi usada no singular para incluir todo o povo de Canaã (Núm 14:9), e com o plural de 'am ('am·méh, "povos") para descrevê-los como formando tribos separadas de pessoas dentro do país. (Ne 9:24, 30) É usada de modo similar para referir-se aos súditos dentro do Império Persa nos dias da Rainha Ester. (Est 8:17) Senaqueribe usou a forma plural plena ('am·méh ha·'ara·tsóhth, "povos das terras") referindo-se aos muitos povos ou nações conquistados pelas forças assírias. — 2Cr 32:13.

Dentro da nação de Israel, a expressão 'am ha·'á·rets não raro distinguia os cidadãos em geral das autoridades governamentais ou sacerdotais. (2Rs 11:14, 18-20; Je 1:18; 34:19; 37:2; 44:21; Ez 7:27; Da 9:6; Za 7:5) Contudo, é evidente que não incluía meramente a classe trabalhadora pobre, mas também pessoas abastadas, visto que Ezequiel, depois de censurar as injustiças cometidas por profetas, sacerdotes e príncipes gananciosos, faz uma denúncia contra os do "povo da terra" que "executaram um plano de defraudação e arrebataram em roubo, e maltrataram o atribulado e o pobre, e defraudaram o residente forasteiro sem qualquer justiça". (Ez 22:25-29) Para pagar as pesadas taxas impostas pelo Faraó Neco, o Rei Jeoiaquim "exigiu do povo da terra prata e ouro" por meio de impostos. Assim, os 'am ha·'á·rets que golpearam os conspiradores contra o Rei Amom e constituíram a Josias como rei e, mais tarde, a Jeoacaz, não eram elementos da chamada ralé. (2Rs 23:30, 35; 21:24) Quando Nabucodonosor conquistou Judá, havia 60 homens do "povo da terra" junto com os altos funcionários da corte que foram levados a Ribla e executados, sendo que esses 60 sem dúvida estavam entre os cidadãos mais preeminentes ou destacados. (2Rs 25:19-21) Naturalmente, a expressão 'am ha·'á·rets englobava também os cidadãos pobres e humildes, e o rei de Babilônia designou vários destes para permanecer em Judá, como fizera antes, em Jerusalém. — 2Rs 24:14; 25:12; Je 40:7; 52:15, 16.

Em tempos pós-exílicos Esdras e Neemias condenaram o proceder errado dos exilados que haviam regressado, de se misturarem com o(s) "povo(s) da(s) terra(s)", de se casarem com suas mulheres, de permitirem-lhes negociar dentro da cidade aos sábados e de aprenderem as práticas detestáveis deles. (Esd 9:11; 10:2, 11; Ne 10:28, 31) A expressão ali se refere aos circunvizinhos povos não israelitas, especificados em Esdras 9:1, 2, e a razão para que se mantivessem afastados deles não se devia a alguma posição social ou econômica baixa da parte deles, mas sim à lei de Deus que exigia pureza de adoração. — Ne 10:28-30.

Como Termo de Desprezo. Com o tempo, porém, os líderes religiosos de Judá passaram a usar esse termo para designar as pessoas, judias ou não judias, que eram indoutas na Lei e, mais particularmente, as que desconheciam ou deixavam de observar em detalhes o grande conjunto de tradições rabínicas que então se desenvolvera. (Mt 15:1, 2) O termo expressa a atitude de desprezo exemplificada na declaração dos fariseus em João 7:49: "Esta multidão, que não sabe a Lei, são pessoas amaldiçoadas." O rabino Joshua disse que um 'am ha·'á·rets é: "Todo aquele que não usa tefillin [filactérios]." Outras declarações rabínicas a respeito de tais não observadores das tradições judaicas são: "Mesmo que alguém tenha aprendido a Escritura e a Míxena, se ele não tem ministrado aos discípulos do sábio, ele é um 'am ha-arez." (Babylonian Talmud [Talmude Babilônico], Berakhot 47*b*, traduzido [para o inglês] por M. Simon) "Tampouco é pia uma pessoa ignorante ['am ha·'á·rets]". (Babylonian Talmud, Avot 2:5, traduzido por J. Israelstam) "Os iletrados não serão ressuscitados." (Babylonian Talmud, Ketubbot 111*b*, traduzido por I. Slotki) (Compare isso com Mt 9:11; Lu 15:2; 18:11.) Jesus, porém, disse que ele 'veio chamar pecadores', e mostrou afeição pelas pessoas que eram "empurradas dum lado para outro como ovelhas sem pastor". — Mt 9:13, 36.

Assim, o sentido de 'am ha·'á·rets mudou de termo geral de respeito para o de opróbrio religioso, um tanto semelhante ao termo latino paganus, do qual se deriva a palavra portuguesa "pagão". Pagão originalmente significava simplesmente um morador duma comunidade rural, mas, visto que estes camponeses não raro eram os últimos a serem convertidos, veio a ser usado pelos moradores de cidades para referir-se a todos os que não adotavam as suas professas crenças cristãs.

PRAGA. As palavras hebraicas traduzidas por "praga" ou "flagelo" têm os sentidos literais de "toque", "pancada", "golpe", "derrota" e "morte". Jeová Deus ministrou golpes como punição pelo murmúrio rebelde (Núm 16:41-50), pela recusa de aquiescer à Sua vontade (Za 14:12, 15, 18), pelo uso profano de algo sagrado (1Sa 5:1–6:4), por tocar em seus ungidos (Gên 12:17; Sal 105:15), e pela infidelidade ou por violações de sua lei (Le 26:21; Núm 14:36, 37; 31:16; De 28:59-61; 1Cr 21:17, 22; 2Cr 21:12-15). Tais golpes podiam ser administrados por meios angélicos ou humanos. (2Sa 24:17; Je 19:1-8; 25:8, 9; 49:17; 50:13, 14) Orações de intercessão, feitas pelos servos de Jeová, ou orações sinceras dos arrependidos eram necessárias para a remoção das pragas enviadas por Deus. — Gên 20:17, 18; 1Rs 8:37, 38; 2Cr 6:28, 29.

Uma praga podia vir também como resultado natural do pecado da pessoa. (Pr 6:32, 33) Podia ser uma doença, como a "praga da lepra" (Le 13:2), ou uma adversidade resultante do tempo e das circunstâncias. — Sal 38:11; 73:5, 14.

As pragas que Jeová trouxe sobre o Egito nos dias de Moisés eram manifestações de Seu grande poder e fizeram com que Seu nome fosse declarado entre as nações. (Êx 9:14, 16) Por sucessivas gerações, outros povos comentavam os seus efeitos. (Jos 2:9-11; 9:9; 1Sa 4:8; 6:6) Além disso, tais pragas também provaram que os deuses do Egito eram impotentes. — Êx 12:12; Núm 33:4; veja DEUSES E DEUSAS (As Dez Pragas); MOISÉS (Perante o Faraó do Egito).

As pragas (gr.: ple·gaí, literalmente: "golpes ou pancadas") mencionadas no livro de Revelação (Apocalipse) são evidentemente expressões da ira de Deus e indicam simbolicamente o resultado ou o efeito de suas decisões judiciais. — Re 9:18, 20; 11:6; 15:1, 6, 8; 16:9, 21; 18:4, 8; 21:9; 22:18.

PRAGANA (PALHIÇO). A fina camada protetora ou folhelho que reveste o grão de cereais, como a cevada e o trigo. Embora as referências bíblicas à pragana sejam figuradas, elas refletem as práticas de debulha que eram comuns nos tempos antigos. Após a colheita, esta membrana não comestível que revestia o valioso grão era inútil, e, por isso, era símbolo apropriado de algo leve, imprestável e indesejável, algo a ser separado do que é bom, e a ser eliminado.

Primeiro, a debulha fazia com que o grão se soltasse da palha. Daí, pelo joeiramento, o palhiço era carregado pelo vento, como se fosse pó. (Veja JOEIRAR.) Isto bem ilustra como Jeová Deus tanto remove os apóstatas de entre Seu povo como se livra de pessoas iníquas e de nações opositoras. (Jó 21:18; Sal 1:4; 35:5; Is 17:13; 29:5; 41:15; Os 13:3) O Reino de Deus esmagará seus inimigos em partículas tão diminutas que serão facilmente levadas embora como a pragana. — Da 2:35.

A imprestável pragana era amiúde ajuntada e queimada, para impedir que fosse trazida de volta pelo vento e contaminasse as pilhas de cereal. Similarmente, João, o Batizador, predisse a vindoura destruição ardente dos falsos religiosos — o Debulhador, Jesus Cristo, juntará o trigo, "mas a palha ele queimará em fogo inextinguível". — Mt 3:7-12; Lu 3:17; veja DEBULHA; PALHA.

PRANTO. O pranto entre os povos orientais era costumeiramente acompanhado de grande exteriorização de pesar, e isto se reflete nos relatos bíblicos dos períodos de pranto. Um livro inteiro da Bíblia, Lamentações, é uma expressão de pranto pela sorte de Jerusalém.

Os Motivos de Pranto. As pessoas pranteavam para expressar o arrependimento (Ne 9:1, 2; Jon 3:5-9), ou devido à iminência de calamidade (Est 4:3; Je 6:26; Am 5:16, 17), ou devido a uma condição desastrosa já prevalecente (Jl 1:5-14). A causa mais comum de pranto, sem dúvida, era a morte. A morte de um membro da família dava início a um período de pranto (Gên 23:2; 27:41; 37:33-35), ao passo que a morte do pai ou da mãe ou de um filho único é destacada como ocasião do mais profundo pesar. (Sal 35:14; Am 8:10; Za 12:10) A morte dum líder nacional ocasionava períodos de pranto que duravam de 7 a 30 dias. (Núm 20:29; De 34:8; 1Sa 31:8, 12, 13) Os egípcios continuaram a verter lágrimas pela morte de Jacó, pai de José, por 70 dias, com um período adicional de 7 dias de ritos de lamentação em Canaã. — Gên 50:3-11.

Formas de Expressar o Pesar. O pranto era expresso de forma vocal e pelo choro, bem como por se desfigurar a aparência física e pelo jejum, ou de outra maneira abster-se de práticas costumeiras. O choro talvez fosse acompanhado de lamento ou clamor alto e amargurado (2Sa 1:11, 12; Est 4:1), batia-se no peito (Is 32:11, 12; Na 2:7; Lu 8:52), as roupas não raro eram rasgadas (Jz 11:35; 2Rs 22:11, 19), talvez se lançasse pó e cinzas sobre a cabeça, e se usasse serapilheira (2Sa 13:19; 2Rs 6:30; Jó 2:11, 12), se removessem as sandálias, e se cobrisse a cabeça ou a face (2Sa 15:30; 19:4), os cabelos talvez sendo arrancados ou cortados, e a barba rapada (Jó 1:20; Esd 9:3; Je 41:5), ao passo que algumas pessoas, seguindo costumes pagãos, faziam cortes no corpo (Je 16:6; 47:5). Além de jejuar, a pessoa talvez se abstivesse de esfregar-se com azeite, ou de lavar suas vestes (2Sa 14:2; 19:24; Da 10:2, 3), às vezes se sentando no chão ou no meio de cinzas. — 2Sa 13:31; Jó 2:8; Is 3:26.

Endechas suplicantes eram às vezes compostas como cânticos de pranto. (2Sa 1:17-27; 3:33, 34; 2Cr 35:25) Um tipo específico de cântico era o shig·ga·yóhn, termo hebraico que ocorre no cabeçalho do Salmo 7; um termo aparentado aparece em Habacuque 3:1. Trata-se duma composição do tipo endecha e, pelo visto, indica um cântico altamente emotivo, com rápidas mudanças de ritmo. Notar-se-á que, em ambas as referências (Sal 7; Hab 3:2-19), estão presentes os elementos de perigo, de fortes rompantes de apelo ou emoção, e o subsequente regozijo em Jeová.

Ocasionalmente, utilizavam-se pranteadores profissionais nos enterros, e os músicos tocavam melodias lamuriosas (Je 9:17, 18; Mt 9:23); isto era imitado pelas crianças que brincavam nas praças de mercados na época do ministério terrestre de Jesus. (Mt 11:16, 17) O pífaro ou flauta era o instrumento preferido para lamentação. — Je 48:36; Mt 9:23; veja Jewish War (Guerra Judaica), de Josefo, III, 437 (ix, 5).

Depois dum enterro, as mulheres costumavam visitar o túmulo, para chorar e prantear. (Jo 11:31) Parece que, em alguma ocasião durante o período de pranto, servia-se uma refeição fúnebre, e, em alguns casos, isto aparentemente se transformou em banquete especial. — Os 9:4; Je 16:5, 7.

Proibições Que Envolviam o Pranto. Vez por outra o povo de Deus foi instruído, coletiva ou individualmente, a não prantear a morte de certos elementos, tais como transgressores condenados. (Le 10:1, 2, 6) Ordenou-se ao profeta Ezequiel que não adotasse nenhum dos sinais de pranto por sua esposa falecida, servindo assim como portento para os israelitas, que estavam com ele em Babilônia, de que ficariam tão aturdidos que não pranteariam a execução divina do julgamento que viria sobre Jerusalém por causa da infidelidade desta. (Ez 24:15-24) Jeremias recebeu instruções um tanto similares. — Je 16:5-13.

Sob a Lei mosaica foram proibidas certas práticas de lamentação, incluindo o infligir-se cortes na carne, ou provocar a 'calvície das testas' (Le 19:28; De 14:1), e o uso errôneo de dízimos pelos mortos. (De 26:12-14) Os sacerdotes podiam prantear abertamente a perda de certos membros da família, mas o sumo sacerdote estava restringido de fazê-lo. — Le 21:1-6, 10-12.

Tempo para Prantear. Eclesiastes 3:1, 4 diz que há "tempo para chorar e tempo para rir; tempo para lamentar e tempo para saltitar". Em vista da condição morredoura de toda a humanidade, menciona-se que o coração dos sábios está na "casa de luto" em vez de na casa de banquete. (Ec 7:2, 4; compare isso com Pr 14:13.) Assim, a pessoa sábia aproveita-se da oportunidade de expressar condolências e dar consolo, em vez de desprezar tal ocasião em favor da busca de prazeres. Isto a ajuda a ter em mente a sua própria condição mortal e a manter seu coração numa atitude correta para com seu Criador.

As Escrituras delineiam motivos válidos para o pranto. Não somente a morte de entes queridos

(Gên 42:38; 44:31), mas também práticas detestáveis e que desonram a Deus, perpetradas pela religião falsa, são causas de suspiros e gemidos (Ez 9:4; compare isso com 1Co 5:2), e é correto que a pessoa expresse pesar pelos seus próprios erros. (Sal 38:4, 6-10) Jeová insta os que se afastaram dele: "Retornai a mim de todo o vosso coração, e com jejum, e com choro, e com lamento. E rasgai os vossos corações e não as vossas vestes." (Jl 2:12, 13; compare isso com Tg 4:8, 9.) Também em outras partes, dá-se ênfase, não a expressões exteriores de pesar ou de pranto, mas às comoções íntimas e à dor de coração, que caracterizam a tristeza genuína. — Sal 31:9, 10; Pr 14:10; 15:13; Mr 14:72; Jo 16:6.

Até mesmo Jeová fala de si mesmo como estando "magoado no coração". (Gên 6:6; compare isso com Is 63:9.) O espírito santo de Deus pode também ser 'contristado'. (Ef 4:30) Visto que tal espírito opera nos servos de Deus em prol da produção de frutos da justiça (Gál 5:22-24), os que não apreciam essa provisão divina, que resistem à sua operação e que agem contrário às suas orientações estão, na verdade, 'contristando-o'. — Veja Is 63:10; 1Te 5:19.

Um Conceito Equilibrado do Pranto. Na época do ministério terrestre de Jesus, ainda era comum as pessoas prantearem, com muita exteriorização e acompanhantes barulho e confusão. (Mr 5:38, 39) Embora Jesus 'gemesse no íntimo', e chorasse em várias ocasiões (Jo 11:33-35, 38; Lu 19:41; Mr 14:33, 34; He 5:7), não há registro de ele ter recorrido àquelas expressões mais ostentosas, já mencionadas. (Veja Lu 23:27, 28.) Seus discípulos também expressavam pesar e pranto. (Mt 9:15; Jo 16:20-22; At 8:2; 9:39; 20:37, 38; Fil 2:27) Paulo expressou "grande pesar e incessante dor no [seu] coração" por causa de seus parentes descrentes. (Ro 9:2, 3) Ele receou ter de prantear pelos da congregação de Corinto que haviam pecado e ainda não se haviam arrependido (2Co 12:21), e mencionou "com choro" aqueles que se haviam desviado para andar "como inimigos da estaca de tortura do Cristo". (Fil 3:17-19) Sua preocupação profunda e de coração pela congregação cristã (2Co 2:1-4) habilitava-o a instruir outros sobre a necessidade de demonstrar empatia e comiseração, 'chorando com os que choram'. — Ro 12:15.

No entanto, em vista do debilitante efeito do pranto e do pesar (Sal 6:6, 7; Lu 22:45; At 21:13; 2Co 2:6, 7), a tristeza cristã sempre é apresentada como moderada, equilibrada, sendo até mesmo eclipsada pela esperança e pela alegria fortalecedora. (Mt 5:4; 1Co 7:29, 30; 2Co 6:10; compare isso com Ne 8:9-12.) Até mesmo em seus dias, o Rei Davi manifestava a respeito do pranto um ponto de vista equilibrado, sensato e baseado em princípios, de modo que, quando o filho concebido através de sua relação adúltera com Bate-Seba estava doente, Davi jejuou e prostrou-se em terra, recorrendo ao Deus verdadeiro em favor de seu filho. Mas, ao saber da morte da criança, Davi levantou-se, lavou-se, untou-se com óleo, mudou de roupa e orou a Jeová, e então solicitou alimento e passou a comer. Ao explicar suas ações a seus ajudantes atônitos, ele declarou: "Agora que ele morreu, por que jejuar? Posso novamente trazê-lo de volta? Eu vou a ele, mas ele é que não retornará a mim." (2Sa 12:16, 19-23) No entanto, mais tarde ele precisou da ajuda de Joabe, que lhe falou de maneira franca, para recompor-se de seu estado de profundo pesar por causa da morte de seu filho, Absalão. — 2Sa 18:33; 19:1-8.

Embora 'toda a criação persista em gemer', os sofrimentos do cristão são mínimos em comparação com a gloriosa esperança à frente (Ro 8:18-22; 1Pe 1:3-7), e a promessa de ressurreição o habilita a não ficar 'pesaroso como os demais que não têm esperança'. — 1Te 4:13, 14.

O pranto e o jejum sem a obediência à palavra de Jeová não trazem benefício algum. (Za 7:2-7) No entanto, "a tristeza de modo piedoso produz arrependimento para a salvação". Tal tristeza resulta de a pessoa discernir o erro como sendo um pecado contra Deus. Isto a move a buscar o perdão de Deus e a dar meia-volta do seu proceder errado. "Mas, a tristeza do mundo produz a morte." Neste caso, embora a pessoa talvez se entristeça por seu erro ter sido exposto, e porque isto lhe significou alguma perda, ela não nutre o desejo de obter o perdão de Deus. (2Co 7:10, 11) Por exemplo, as lágrimas vertidas de modo egoísta por Esaú, na esperança de recuperar a sua primogenitura perdida, não produziram efeito algum em Isaque, nem em Deus. — He 12:16, 17.

Uso Figurado e Profético. Em sentido figurado, até mesmo a terra é representada como pranteando, em virtude das devastações causadas por exércitos invasores ou por uma praga. (Je 4:27, 28; Jl 1:10-12; contraste isso com Sal 96:11-13.) Em sua desolação, a terra produziria ervas daninhas e ficaria com um aspecto negligenciado e descuidado, como o de uma pessoa que não zelasse pelo seu rosto, seus cabelos ou sua roupa, enquanto pranteasse. Similarmente, a terra devastada por uma praga sobre suas plantações apresenta uma vista lúgubre.

O "sinal do Filho do homem", e a revelação de Cristo, são o motivo para que todas as tribos da terra 'se batam em lamento', ou "de pesar". (Mt 24:30; Re 1:7) Está predito que à simbólica "Babilônia, a Grande", sobrevirão pragas — morte, pranto e fome — "num só dia", fazendo com que aqueles que se beneficiaram dela chorem e pranteiem. (Re 18:2, 7-11, 17-19) Em contraste, a Nova Jerusalém traz condições sobre a terra em que as lágrimas, a morte, o pranto, o clamor e a dor terão passado para sempre. — Re 21:2-4.

PRATA. Valioso elemento metálico branco, que pode receber intenso polimento. Uma vez que raramente se encontra a prata em estado natural, o minério de prata tem de ser derretido e depurado a fim de separar a prata da ganga, da escória e da escumosa matéria estranha, além de liberá-la de outros metais, como o chumbo. (Sal 12:6; Pr 27:21; Ez 22:20-22; Mal 3:3) Às vezes, o termo hebraico para prata (ké·sef) é traduzido por "dinheiro" e o termo grego para prata (ar·gý·ri·on) é traduzido por "dinheiro de prata" ou "moedas de prata". — Gên 17:12 n; Mt 25:18; 26:15; veja DINHEIRO.

A prata refinada tinha dois usos principais. (1) Era usada como medida de riqueza e um meio de troca. Abraão, usando este meio de troca, comprou um terreno para sepultura da família. (Gên 13:2; 23:15-18) Os pagamentos eram feitos por peso, visto que a cunhagem de moedas só passou a ser feita séculos mais tarde. (2) Objetos de adorno e de ornamentação eram modelados deste metal, desde os dias dos patriarcas. (Gên 24:53; 44:2; Êx 11:2; 12:35) Usou-se a prata na fabricação das duas trombetas de Israel (Núm 10:2), na construção do tabernáculo (Êx 26:19, 21, 25, 32; 27:10, 11, 17), e no templo de Salomão (1Cr 28:15-17). Foi também utilizada na fabricação de ídolos. — Êx 20:23; Os 13:2; Hab 2:19; At 19:24.

Todas as nações no passado prezavam altamente a prata. (2Sa 8:10, 11; 2Cr 9:14) Sob o governo de Salomão, não só a prata, mas também o ouro, tornaram-se tão abundantes em Jerusalém que a prata era tida como de "nenhuma importância", "igual às pedras". (1Rs 10:21, 27; 2Cr 9:20; compare isso com Da 2:32.) A cada três anos navios traziam carregamentos de prata de Társis (aparentemente a Espanha, ainda hoje uma produtora de prata). — 1Rs 10:22; 2Cr 9:21; Je 10:9; Ez 27:12.

Em contraste com o valor transitório da prata, e devendo ser ainda mais prezados, acham-se a sabedoria, a disciplina e o entendimento provenientes de Jeová. (Pr 3:13, 14; 8:10, 19; 16:16) Também, as Escrituras utilizam a prata em diversos sentidos simbólicos. — Ec 12:6; Is 60:17; Da 2:32; 1Co 3:12.

PREÇO DE NOIVA. Veja CASAMENTO.

PRECURSOR. Alguém que vai à frente para preparar a vinda de outrem. Isto poderia incluir as operações de reconhecimento e a espionagem, a desobstrução do caminho, a proclamação e o aviso da chegada de outrem, ou o mostrar o caminho para outros seguirem. Em geral, embora não sempre, o precursor é menos importante do que a pessoa que o segue.

Era costumeiro no Oriente que corredores fossem à frente do carro real para preparar e anunciar a chegada do rei e ajudá-lo no que fosse preciso. (1Sa 8:11) Absalão e Adonias, em imitação de tal dignidade régia, e para acrescentar prestígio e aparente sanção às suas respectivas rebeliões, colocaram 50 batedores adiante de seus carros pessoais. — 2Sa 15:1; 1Rs 1:5; veja CORREDORES (BATEDORES).

João, o Batizador, foi em realidade o precursor de Cristo, em cumprimento de Isaías 40:3 e Malaquias 3:1 e 4:5, 6: "Alguém está clamando no ermo: 'Desobstruí o caminho de Jeová! Fazei reta a estrada principal.'" "Envio o meu mensageiro e ele terá de desobstruir o caminho diante de mim." Por conseguinte, a proclamação antecipada feita por João moveu o povo a aguardar e a esperar Jesus, para que, por sua vez, pudessem escutá-lo, honrá-lo e segui-lo. (Mt 3:1-12; 11:7, 10, 14; Mr 9:11-13; Lu 1:13-17, 76; Jo 1:35-37) De modo similar, enviaram-se mensageiros à frente de Jesus, e estes se dirigiram a uma aldeia de samaritanos, "a fim de fazerem os preparativos para ele". — Lu 9:52.

O próprio Jesus, porém, é a pessoa mencionada no único trecho das Escrituras que usa a palavra "precursor". (He 6:19, 20) Ele não era precursor no sentido de ser inferior aos que vinham após ele. Antes, ele foi o primeiro a entrar na glória celestial, abrindo e preparando o caminho para a congregação celestial dos seguidores de suas pisadas. (Jo 14:2, 3) Por isso, eles têm intrepidez de se aproximar de Deus através do caminho inaugurado por seu Precursor. — He 10:19-22.

PREFEITO. Funcionário de categoria inferior à de um sátrapa, no governo babilônio. Este título é usado em Daniel 2:48, em relação com os "sábios de Babilônia". Parece que estes "sábios" eram classificados segundo as suas funções oficiais. Daniel foi designado prefeito principal sobre todos os "sábios de Babilônia". — Da 3:2, 3, 27.

Sob a regência do Rei Dario, o Medo, os oficiais reais chegaram à presença de Dario "em conjunto", indicando que estava envolvido um bom número deles, e disseram que todos os oficiais, inclusive os prefeitos, recomendavam que se fizesse uma lei que limitasse as petições apenas ao rei, durante 30 dias. Daniel continuou a fazer petições a Jeová, e Jeová o libertou; os próprios conspiradores sofreram a morte na cova dos leões. — Da 6:6, 7, 24.

PREGADOR, PREGAÇÃO. O conceito bíblico sobre "pregação" é melhor determinado por meio dum exame do sentido dos termos hebraicos e gregos originais. O termo grego ke·rýs·so, geralmente traduzido por "pregar", basicamente significa 'fazer proclamação como arauto, ser um arauto, oficiar como arauto, proclamar (como conquistador)'. O substantivo aparentado é ké·ryx e significa 'arauto, mensageiro público, enviado, pregoeiro (que fazia proclamação e mantinha a ordem nas assembleias, etc.)'. Outro substantivo aparentado é ké·ryg·ma, que significa 'aquilo que é bradado por um arauto, proclamação, anúncio (de vitória nos jogos), mandado, intimação'. (A Greek-English Lexicon [Léxico Grego-Inglês], de H. Liddell e R. Scott, revisado por H. Jones, Oxford, 1968, p. 949) De modo que ke·rýs·so não transmite a ideia de se proferir um sermão para um grupo restrito de discípulos, mas sim a de uma proclamação aberta e pública. Isto é ilustrado pelo uso dessa palavra para descrever o "forte anjo [a] proclamar [ke·rýs·son·ta] com voz alta: 'Quem é digno de abrir o rolo e de soltar os seus selos?' " — Re 5:2; veja também Mt 10:27.

A palavra eu·ag·ge·lí·zo·mai significa "declarar boas novas". (Mt 11:5) Palavras aparentadas são: di·ag·gél·lo, "divulgar; notificar; declarar" (Lu 9:60; At 21:26; Ro 9:17) e ka·tag·gél·lo, "publicar; falar a respeito; proclamar; propalar". (At 13:5; Ro 1:8; 1Co 11:26; Col 1:28) A principal diferença entre ke·rýs·so e eu·ag·ge·lí·zo·mai é que a primeira destaca a maneira de se fazer a proclamação, isto é, que se trata de pronunciamento público, autorizado, e a última destaca o conteúdo dela, ou seja, declarar ou trazer o eu·ag·gé·li·on, o evangelho ou boas novas.

Ke·rýs·so corresponde até certo ponto ao hebraico ba·sár, que significa "portar novas; anunciar; agir como portador de novas". (1Sa 4:17; 2Sa 1:20; 1Cr 16:23) Ba·sár, contudo, não implica uma função oficial do mesmo calibre.

A Pregação nas Escrituras Hebraicas. Noé é a primeira pessoa a ser chamada de "pregador" (2Pe 2:5), ainda que o profetizar feito anteriormente por Enoque possa ter-se divulgado por meio de pregação. (Ju 14, 15) Pregar Noé a justiça, antes do Dilúvio, evidentemente incluía uma chamada ao arrependimento e um aviso da vindoura destruição, como se vê da referência de Jesus ao fato de que as pessoas não "fizeram caso". (Mt 24:38, 39) Por conseguinte, a proclamação pública de Noé, divinamente autorizada, não era primariamente um anúncio de boas novas.

Após o Dilúvio, muitos homens, como Abraão, serviram como profetas, proferindo revelações divinas. (Sal 105:9, 13-15) No entanto, antes do estabelecimento de Israel na Terra Prometida, parece não ter havido nenhuma pregação regular ou vocacional de modo público. Os primitivos patriarcas não tinham ordens de agir como arautos. Durante o período de operação do reino, em Israel, os profetas realmente atuaram como porta-vozes públicos, proclamando os decretos, os julgamentos e as convocações de Deus em locais públicos. (Is 58:1; Je 26:2) A proclamação de Jonas a Nínive ajusta-se bem à ideia transmitida por ké·ryg·ma, e ela é assim descrita. (Veja Jon 3:1-4; Mt 12:41.) O ministério dos profetas, porém, era em geral muito mais amplo do que o de um arauto ou pregador, e, em alguns casos, eles utilizaram outros para agir como porta-vozes seus. (2Rs 5:10; 9:1-3; Je 36:4-6) Algumas de suas mensagens e visões foram apresentadas por escrito, em vez de oralmente (Je 29:1, 30, 31; 30:1, 2; Da caps. 7-12); muitas foram proferidas em audiência privada, e os profetas empregavam também atos simbólicos para transmitir ideias. — Veja PROFECIA; PROFETA.

Foram proclamadas admoestações, avisos e julgamentos, e também boas novas — sobre vitórias, libertações e bênçãos — bem como louvores a Jeová Deus. (1Cr 16:23; Is 41:27; 52:7; nestes textos usa-se o termo hebraico ba·sár.) Às vezes, mulheres bradavam ou cantavam as novas de batalhas vencidas ou de um vindouro livramento. — Sal 68:11; Is 40:9; compare isso com 1Sa 18:6, 7.

As Escrituras Hebraicas também apontavam para a obra de pregação que seria feita por Cristo Jesus e a congregação cristã. Jesus citou Is 61:1, 2 como predizendo a sua comissão divina e a sua autorização para pregar. (Lu 4:16-21) Em cumprimento do Salmo 40:9 (os versículos precedentes sendo aplicados pelo apóstolo Paulo a Jesus em He 10:5-10), Jesus 'anunciou as boas novas [forma de ba·sár] de justiça na grande congregação'. O apóstolo Paulo citou Isaías 52:7 (a respeito de o mensageiro portar as novas da libertação de Sião de sua condição cativa) e relacionou-o com a obra de pregação pública dos cristãos. — Ro 10:11-15.

Nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs. Embora fosse primariamente ativo nas regiões desérticas, João, o Batizador, fez a obra dum pregador ou mensageiro público, anunciando a chegada do Messias e do Reino de Deus aos judeus que vieram ao seu encontro, concitando-os ao arrependimento. (Mt 3:1-3, 11, 12; Mr 1:1-4; Lu 3:7-9) Ao mesmo tempo, João atuou como profeta, instrutor (tinha discípulos) e evangelizador. (Lu 1:76, 77; 3:18; 11:1; Jo 1:35) Ele era "representante de Deus" e testemunha Sua. — Jo 1:6, 7.

Jesus não permaneceu na região desértica de Judá depois de seu jejum de 40 dias ali, nem se isolou como que numa vida monástica. Ele reconheceu que a sua comissão divina exigia uma obra de pregação, e realizou-a publicamente, em cidades e em aldeias, na área do templo, em sinagogas, em feiras e em ruas, bem como na zona rural. (Mr 1:39; 6:56; Lu 8:1; 13:26; Jo 18:20) Como João, Jesus fez mais do que pregar. Seu ensino recebe ainda maior ênfase do que a sua pregação. Ensinar (di·dá·sko) difere de pregar no sentido de que quem ensina faz mais do que proclamar algo; ele instrui, explica, mostra as coisas por meio de argumentos e oferece provas. De modo que a obra dos discípulos de Jesus, tanto antes como depois de Sua morte, devia ser uma combinação de pregar e de ensinar. — Mt 4:23; 11:1; 28:18-20.

O tema da pregação de Jesus era: "Arrependei-vos, pois o reino dos céus se tem aproximado." (Mt 4:17) Como um arauto oficial, ele alertava seus ouvintes para a atividade de seu Deus Soberano, para uma época de oportunidade e de decisão. (Mr 1:14, 15) Como fora predito por Isaías, Jesus não só trouxe boas novas e consolo para os mansos, para os quebrantados de coração e para os que pranteavam, e proclamação de liberdade aos cativos, mas declarou também "o dia de vingança da parte de nosso Deus". (Is 61:2) Ele anunciou intrepidamente os propósitos, os decretos, as designações e os julgamentos de Deus perante os governantes e o povo.

Depois da Morte de Jesus. Depois da morte de Jesus, e notadamente a partir do Pentecostes de 33 EC, os seus discípulos deram prosseguimento à pregação, primeiro entre os judeus, e, por fim, a todas as nações. Ungidos pelo espírito santo, reconheceram ser arautos autorizados e, repetidas vezes, informaram disso seus ouvintes (At 2:14-18; 10:40-42; 13:47; 14:3; compare isso com Ro 10:15), assim como Jesus acentuara ter sido 'enviado por Deus' (Lu 9:48; Jo 5:36, 37; 6:38; 8:18, 26, 42), que lhe dera "um mandamento quanto a que dizer e que falar". (Jo 12:49) Por conseguinte, quando se lhes ordenou que cessassem de pregar, a resposta dos discípulos foi: "Se é justo, à vista de Deus, escutar antes a vós do que a Deus, julgai-o vós mesmos. Mas, quanto a nós, não podemos parar de falar das coisas que vimos e ouvimos." "Temos de obedecer a Deus como governante antes que aos homens." (At 4:19, 20; 5:29, 32, 42) Esta atividade de pregação era parte essencial de sua adoração, um meio de louvarem a Deus, um requisito para obterem a salvação. (Ro 10:9, 10; 1Co 9:16; He 13:15; compare isso com Lu 12:8.) Como tal, deviam participar nela todos os discípulos, homens e mulheres, até a "terminação do sistema de coisas". — Mt 28:18-20; Lu 24:46-49; At 2:17; compare isso com At 18:26; 21:9; Ro 16:3.

Esses primitivos pregadores cristãos não eram homens de elevada instrução segundo os padrões do mundo. O Sinédrio percebeu que os apóstolos Pedro e João eram "homens indoutos e comuns". (At 4:13) Do próprio Jesus, "os judeus ficaram admirados, dizendo: 'Como é que este homem tem conhecimento de letras, sendo que não estudou nas escolas?'" (Jo 7:15) Historiadores seculares registraram comentários do mesmo teor. "Celso, o primeiro a escrever contra o cristianismo, transforma em zombaria o fato de que trabalhadores braçais, sapateiros, lavradores, os mais desinformados e cômicos dos homens, sejam zelosos pregadores do Evangelho." (The History of the Christian Religion and Church, During the Three First Centuries [A História da Religião e da Igreja Cristãs, nos Três Primeiros Séculos], de Augustus Neander; traduzido do alemão para o inglês por Henry John Rose, 1848, p. 41) Paulo explicou isto da seguinte maneira: "Pois observais a vossa chamada da parte dele, irmãos, que não foram chamados muitos sábios em sentido carnal, nem muitos poderosos, nem muitos de nobre estirpe; mas Deus escolheu as coisas tolas do mundo, para envergonhar os sábios." — 1Co 1:26, 27.

No entanto, embora não tivessem obtido um elevado grau de instrução nas escolas seculares, os primitivos pregadores cristãos não eram pessoas despreparadas. Jesus treinou extensivamente os 12 apóstolos, antes de enviá-los a pregar. (Mt 10) Tal treinamento não se resumia a dar instruções, mas era um treinamento prático. — Lu 8:1.

O tema da pregação cristã continuou sendo "o reino de Deus". (At 20:25; 28:31) Contudo, a proclamação que eles faziam abrangia aspectos adicionais, em comparação com a que fora feita antes da morte de Cristo. O "segredo sagrado" do propósito de Deus tinha sido revelado por meio de Cristo; sua morte sacrificial se tornara um fator vital da verdadeira fé (1Co 15:12-14); a posição enaltecida de Jesus qual Rei e Juiz designado por Deus tem de ser conhecida e reconhecida por todos os que desejam ganhar o favor divino e a vida, e eles têm de ser submissos a esta. (2Co 4:5) Assim, muitas vezes se diz que os discípulos 'pregavam o Cristo Jesus'. (At 8:5; 9:20; 19:13; 1Co 1:23) Um exame da pregação deles torna claro que 'pregarem o Cristo' não visava isolá-Lo na mente de seus ouvintes, como se ele fosse um tanto independente ou separado do arranjo do Reino e do propósito geral de Deus. Antes, proclamavam o que Jeová Deus fizera em favor de seu Filho e mediante este, como os propósitos de Deus estavam sendo e ain-da seriam cumpridos em Jesus. (2Co 1:19-21) Assim, fazia-se toda essa pregação para o louvor e a glória do próprio Deus "por intermédio de Jesus Cristo". — Ro 16:25-27.

Eles não faziam a pregação simplesmente como um dever, e servirem como arautos não consistia meramente em proferir uma mensagem de modo formal. Tal serviço emanava da fé de coração e se fazia com o desejo de honrar a Deus e a amorosa esperança de levar salvação a outros. (Ro 10:9-14; 1Co 9:27; 2Co 4:13) Por conseguinte, os pregadores se dispunham a ser tratados como tolos pelos sábios segundo o mundo, ou a ser perseguidos como hereges pelos judeus. (1Co 1:21-24; Gál 5:11) Por isso, também, a pregação deles era conjugada com arrazoamento e persuasão, para ajudar os ouvintes a crer e a exercer fé. (At 17:2; 28:23; 1Co 15:11) Paulo refere-se a si mesmo como tendo sido designado 'pregador, apóstolo e instrutor'. (2Ti 1:11) Tais cristãos não eram arautos assalariados, mas sim adoradores dedicados, que davam de si, de seu tempo e de seu vigor à atividade de pregação. — 1Te 2:9.

Visto que todos os que se tornavam discípulos também se tornavam pregadores da Palavra, as boas novas se disseminaram celeremente, e, por volta da época em que Paulo escreveu sua carta aos colossenses (c. 60-61 EC, ou uns 27 anos após a morte de Cristo), ele podia referir-se às boas novas "que foram pregadas em toda a criação debaixo do céu". (Col 1:23) Assim sendo, a profecia de Cristo sobre a 'pregação das boas novas em todas as nações' teve um certo cumprimento antes da destruição de Jerusalém e de seu templo, em 70 EC. (Mt 24:14; Mr 13:10; MAPA, Vol. 2, p. 744) As próprias palavras de Jesus, bem como o livro de Revelação (Apocalipse), escrito após tal destruição, apontam para um cumprimento maior dessa profecia na época em que Cristo começasse a exercer o governo do Reino, e preliminar à destruição de todos os adversários desse Reino, uma ocasião lógica para se efetuar uma grande obra de proclamação. — Re 12:7-12, 17; 14:6, 7; 19:5, 6; 22:17.

Que resultados de seus empenhos devem esperar os pregadores cristãos? A experiência de Paulo foi que "alguns começaram a acreditar nas coisas ditas; outros não queriam acreditar". (At 28:24) A verdadeira pregação cristã, com base na Palavra de Deus, exige algum tipo de reação. Ela é vigorosa, dinâmica e, acima de tudo, apresenta uma questão a respeito da qual as pessoas têm de tomar uma posição. Algumas se tornam opositoras ativas da mensagem do Reino. (At 13:50; 18:5, 6) Outras escutam por algum tempo, mas, por fim, viram as costas, por vários motivos. (Jo 6:65, 66) Ainda outras aceitam as boas novas e agem concordemente. — At 17:11; Lu 8:15.

"De Casa em Casa." Jesus levou a mensagem do Reino diretamente às pessoas, ensinando-as publicamente e em suas casas. (Mt 5:1; 9:10, 28, 35) Ao enviar seus primeiros discípulos a pregar, ele os instruiu: "Em qualquer cidade ou aldeia em que entrardes, procurai nela quem é merecedor." (Mt 10:7, 11-14) É razoável que tal 'procura' incluiria ir às casas das pessoas, onde os 'merecedores' acatariam a mensagem e os discípulos encontrariam um lugar de pernoite. — Lu 9:1-6.

Numa ocasião posterior, Jesus "indicou outros setenta e os enviou, aos dois, na sua frente, a cada cidade e lugar aonde ele mesmo estava para ir". Estes não deveriam pregar apenas em lugares públicos, mas deveriam também contatar pessoas em suas casas. Jesus os instruiu: "Onde quer que entrardes numa casa, dizei primeiro: 'Haja paz nesta casa.'" — Lu 10:1-7.

Nos dias que se seguiram ao Pentecostes de 33 EC, os discípulos de Jesus continuaram a levar as boas novas diretamente às casas das pessoas. Embora se lhes ordenasse 'parar de falar', o registro inspirado diz que "cada dia, no templo e de casa em casa, continuavam sem cessar a ensinar e a declarar as boas novas a respeito do Cristo, Jesus". (At 5:40-42; compare isso com ALA, Dy, IBB.) A expressão "de casa em casa" traduz o grego kat' oí·kon, literalmente: "segundo [a] casa"; o sentido da preposição grega ka·tá é distributivo ("de casa em casa") e não meramente adverbial ("em casa"). (Veja NM, n.) Este método de alcançar as pessoas — ir diretamente às suas casas — deu notáveis resultados. "O número dos discípulos multiplicava-se grandemente em Jerusalém." — At 6:7; compare isso com 4:16, 17 e 5:28.

O apóstolo Paulo disse aos anciãos em Éfeso: "Desde o primeiro dia em que pisei no distrito da Ásia . . . não me refreei de vos falar coisa alguma que fosse proveitosa, nem de vos ensinar publicamente e de casa em casa. Mas, eu dei cabalmente testemunho, tanto a judeus como a gregos, do arrependimento para com Deus e da fé em nosso Senhor Jesus." (At 20:18-21; compare isso com VB, IBB, ALA, AS, RS, Mo, NIV.) Paulo referia-se aqui a seus empenhos de pregar a esses homens enquanto ainda eram descrentes, pessoas que precisavam saber a respeito do "arrependimento para com Deus e da fé em nosso Senhor Jesus". Assim, desde o início de seu serviço missionário na Ásia, Paulo procurou "de casa em casa" pessoas de inclinação espiritual. Quando as encontrava, ele sem dúvida retornava a suas casas para lhes ensinar mais, e, quando se tornavam crentes, para fortalecê-las na fé. O Dr. A. T. Robertson, em seu livro Word Pictures in the New Testament (Quadros Verbais no Novo Testamento), comenta o seguinte sobre Atos 20:20: "Pelas (segundo as) casas. É digno de nota que este maior de todos os pregadores pregou de casa em casa e não fez de suas visitas meras visitas sociais." — 1930, Vol. III, pp. 349, 350.

A Pregação Dentro da Congregação. A maior parte das atividades de pregação registradas nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs se relaciona com a proclamação feita fora da congregação. Contudo, a exortação de Paulo a Timóteo: "Prega a palavra, ocupa-te nisso urgentemente, em época favorável, em época dificultosa", inclui pregar dentro da congregação, como faz o superintendente comum. (2Ti 4:2) A carta de Paulo a Timóteo é uma carta pastoral, isto é, foi dirigida a alguém que realizava uma obra pastoral entre os cristãos, e fornece conselhos sobre tal ministério de superintendência. Antes dessa exortação de 'pregar a palavra', Paulo avisara Timóteo a respeito da apostasia que começava a manifestar-se e que atingiria graves proporções. (2Ti 2:16-19; 3:1-7) Corroborando a exortação a Timóteo de apegar-se 'à palavra' e não se desviar dela em sua pregação, Paulo mostra o porquê da urgência, dizendo: "Pois haverá um período de tempo em que não suportarão o ensino salutar", 'mas, antes, procurarão instrutores para lhes ensinar segundo os seus próprios desejos, e, assim', "desviarão os seus ouvidos da verdade", referindo-se, portanto, não a pessoas de fora, mas às de dentro da congregação. (2Ti 4:3, 4) Timóteo, por conseguinte, não devia perder seu equilíbrio espiritual, mas devia ser constante em destemidamente declarar a Palavra de Deus (não filosofias humanas ou especulações inúteis) aos irmãos, muito embora isto pudesse trazer-lhe dificuldades e sofrimentos da parte dos que dentre as congregações tivessem inclinações erradas. (Compare isso com 1Ti 6:3-5, 20, 21; 2Ti 1:6-8, 13; 2:1-3, 14, 15, 23-26; 3:14-17; 4:5.) Por assim agir, Timóteo serviria de dissuasão para a apostasia, e estaria livre da responsabilidade de culpa de sangue, assim como Paulo se isentara. — At 20:25-32.

Com que objetivo pregou Jesus "aos espíritos em prisão"?

Em 1 Pedro 3:19, 20, depois de descrever a ressurreição de Jesus para a vida espiritual, diz o apóstolo: "Neste estado, também, ele foi e pregou aos espíritos em prisão, os quais outrora tinham sido desobedientes, quando a paciência de Deus esperava nos dias de Noé, enquanto se construía a arca." Comentando este texto, o Vine's Expository Dictionary of Old and New Testament Words (Dicionário Expositivo de Palavras do Velho e do Novo Testamento, de Vine), diz: "Em I Ped. 3:19, a provável referência é, não a boas novas (não havendo evidência real de que Noé as tenha pregado, nem havendo evidência de que os espíritos das pessoas antediluvianas estejam realmente 'em prisão'), mas ao ato de Cristo, depois de Sua ressurreição, de proclamar Sua vitória aos decaídos espíritos angélicos." (1981, Vol. 3, p. 201) Como já mencionado, ke·rý·so refere-se a uma proclamação, que tanto pode ser de algo bom, como também de algo mau, como quando Jonas proclamou a vindoura destruição de Nínive. Os únicos espíritos aprisionados a que as Escrituras se referem são aqueles anjos, dos dias de Noé, que foram 'entregues a covas de profunda escuridão' (2Pe 2:4, 5), e que foram 'reservados com laços sempiternos, em profunda escuridão, para o julgamento do grande dia'. (Ju 6) Por conseguinte, a pregação que o ressuscitado Jesus fez a tais anjos injustos só poderia ter sido uma pregação de julgamento. Pode-se mencionar que o livro de Revelação, transmitido em visão a João por Cristo Jesus perto do fim do primeiro século EC, contém muito a respeito de Satanás, o Diabo, e seus demônios, bem como da destruição definitiva deles; por conseguinte, uma pregação de julgamento. (Re 12-20) Ter Pedro empregado o tempo passado ("pregou") indica que tal pregação fora feita antes da escrita de sua primeira carta.

PREGAR EM ESTACA. Pregar uma vítima, quer morta, quer viva, numa estaca, ou poste. A execução de Jesus Cristo é o caso mais conhecido. (Lu 24:20; Jo 19:14-16; At 2:23, 36) As nações nos tempos antigos empregavam vários métodos para executar pessoas em estacas.

Os assírios, famosos por suas selvagens operações bélicas, empalavam os cativos por espetar seus corpos nus em estacas pontiagudas que lhes atravessavam o abdômen, chegando até a cavidade torácica das vítimas. Encontraram-se vários relevos em monumentos, um destes representando o ataque e a conquista assíria de Laquis, nos quais se mostra este método de execução na estaca. — 2Rs 19:8; FOTO, Vol. 1, p. 958.

Os persas também utilizavam a execução na estaca como forma de punição. Alguns dizem que os persas costumavam primeiro decapitar ou esfolar aqueles a quem penduravam na estaca. Dario, o Grande, proibiu que se interferisse na reconstrução do templo de Jerusalém, e qualquer violador desse decreto deveria ser pendurado num madeiro arrancado da própria casa do violador. (Esd 6:11) Durante o reinado de Assuero (Xerxes I), filho de Dario, dois dos porteiros do palácio foram pendurados ou pregados numa estaca, sendo este o castigo usualmente aplicado pelos persas aos traidores. (Est 2:21-23) Hamã e seus dez filhos também foram pendurados numa estaca. (Est 5:14; 6:4; 7:9, 10; 9:10, 13, 14, 25) Heródoto (III, 125, 159; IV, 43) também cita outros exemplos de execuções em estaca realizadas pelos persas.

Na lei judaica, os culpados de crimes hediondos, tais como blasfêmia ou idolatria, deviam primeiro ser mortos por apedrejamento, ou algum outro método, e, em seguida, seus cadáveres eram expostos em estacas ou árvores, como exemplos de aviso para outros. (De 21:22, 23; Jos 8:29; 10:26; 2Sa 21:6, 9) É possível que também os egípcios primeiro matassem seus criminosos, antes de colocá-los em estacas, como indicam as palavras proféticas de José ao chefe dos padeiros de Faraó: 'Faraó te levantará a cabeça de cima de ti e certamente te pendurará num madeiro.' — Gên 40:19, 22; 41:13.

Os gregos e os romanos, segundo se diz, adotaram dos fenícios a prática de pregar ou fixar em estaca, e foi somente nos dias de Constantino que essa prática foi abolida do império. Mui raramente um cidadão romano era pregado na estaca, pois essa punição em geral só era aplicada a escravos e a criminosos da pior espécie. Tanto os judeus como os romanos encaravam o ser pregado na estaca como símbolo de humilhação e de vergonha, reservado para os amaldiçoados. — De 21:23; Gál 3:13; Fil 2:8.

No primeiro século, se é que os judeus tinham o direito de executar uma pessoa na estaca por motivos religiosos (algo sobre o que pairam dúvidas), é bastante certo que eles não podiam fazê-lo no caso de crimes civis; apenas uma autoridade romana, como Pôncio Pilatos, tinha essa autoridade. (Jo 18:31; 19:10) Todavia, os judeus, e em especial seus principais sacerdotes e governantes, levavam a responsabilidade primária por pregarem a Cristo na estaca. — Mr 15:1-15; At 2:36; 4:10; 5:30; 1Co 2:8.

Os romanos às vezes amarravam a vítima numa estaca, onde talvez permanecesse viva por vários dias, até que a sua resistência física fosse minada pela tortura da dor, da sede, da fome e da exposição ao sol. Como se deu com Jesus, era costumeiro entre os romanos pregar as mãos (e, provavelmente, também os pés) do acusado numa estaca. (Jo 20:25, 27; Lu 24:39; Sal 22:16 n; Col 2:14) Visto que os pulsos sempre foram reconhecidos pelos anatomistas como parte das mãos, alguns profissionais da medicina acreditam que os cravos foram afixados entre os pequenos ossos dos pulsos para impedir que a carne fosse rasgada, como poderia ocorrer se fossem afixados nas palmas das mãos. (Veja The Journal of the American Medical Association, de 21 de março de 1986, p. 1460.) Isto se ajustaria ao uso da palavra "mão" na Bíblia, que inclui o punho, em textos como Gênesis 24:47, onde se fala de pulseiras sendo usadas nas "mãos", e Juízes 15:14, onde se menciona grilhões nas "mãos" de Sansão.

O registro não diz se os malfeitores executados nas estacas ao lado de Jesus foram pregados ou simplesmente amarrados nelas. Se foram apenas amarrados, isto poderia explicar por que, quando se verificou que Jesus já estava morto, eles ainda estavam vivos e foi necessário quebrar-lhes as pernas. (Jo 19:32, 33) Logo após a fratura das pernas seguiu-se a morte por sufocamento, pois, como alguns supõem, isto os impediria de erguer o corpo para aliviar a tensão dos músculos torácicos. Naturalmente, não se trata de uma conclusão definitiva sobre por que os malfeitores viveram mais tempo do que Jesus, pois eles não haviam passado pela tortura mental e física que fora infligida a Jesus. Ele passara uma noite inteira de provações às mãos de seus inimigos, além de ter sido espancado pelos soldados romanos, talvez ao ponto de não poder carregar a sua própria estaca de tortura, como era costumeiro. — Mr 14:32–15:21; Lu 22:39–23:26.

O que revela o grego original sobre o formato do instrumento no qual Jesus foi morto?

A maioria das traduções da Bíblia dizem que Cristo foi "crucificado", em vez de "pregado na estaca". Isto se deve à crença comum de que o instrumento de tortura no qual ele foi pendurado era uma "cruz" composta de duas barras de madeira, em vez de um único poste ou estaca. A tradição, e não as Escrituras, diz também que o homem condenado carregava apenas a barra horizontal da cruz, chamada de patibulum ou antenna, em vez de ambas as partes. Deste modo alguns tentam contornar o problema de se ter peso demais para um só homem arrastar ou carregar até o Gólgota.

Todavia, o que disseram os próprios escritores da Bíblia a respeito desses assuntos? Eles usaram o substantivo grego stau·rós 27 vezes, e os verbos stau·ró·o 46 vezes, syn·stau·ró·o (o prefixo syn significa "com") 5 vezes, e a·na·stau·ró·o (a·ná significa "novamente") uma vez. Empregaram também

5 vezes o termo grego xý·lon, que significa “madeiro”, para se referir ao instrumento de tortura no qual Jesus foi pregado.

Stau·rós, tanto no grego clássico como no coiné, não transmite a ideia de “cruz” feita de duas barras de madeira. Significa apenas uma estaca reta, um pau, uma trave ou um poste reto, como do tipo que poderia ser usado para cerca, estacada ou paliçada. Diz O Novo Dicionário da Bíblia, de Douglas, de 1966, sob “Cruz”, página 379: “O vocábulo grego para ‘cruz’ (stauros, verbo stauroo . . .) significa primariamente um poste reto ou uma trave, e, secundariamente, um poste usado como instrumento de castigo e execução.”

Terem Lucas, Pedro e Paulo também usado xý·lon como sinônimo de stau·rós dá evidência adicional de que Jesus foi pregado numa estaca reta, sem barra transversal, pois é isto o que xý·lon significa neste sentido especial. (At 5:30; 10:39; 13:29; Gál 3:13; 1Pe 2:24) Xý·lon ocorre também na Septuaginta grega em Esdras 6:11, onde se fala duma barra ou madeiro único em que devia ser pendurado o violador da lei.

A Tradução do Novo Mundo, por conseguinte, transmite com fidelidade ao leitor esta ideia básica do texto grego, por traduzir stau·rós como “estaca de tortura”, e o verbo stau·ró·o por “pregar na estaca”, ou poste. Assim, não há confusão de stau·rós com as tradicionais cruzes eclesiásticas. (Veja ESTACA DE TORTURA.) A questão de um único homem, como Simão, de Cirene, levar uma estaca de tortura, como dizem as Escrituras, é perfeitamente razoável, pois, se ela era de 15 cm de diâmetro e 3,5 m de comprimento, provavelmente pesaria pouco mais de 45 kg. — Mr 15:21.

Observe o que W. E. Vine diz sobre este assunto: “STAUROS (σταυρός) denota primariamente um poste ou uma estaca vertical. Em tais pregavam-se malfeitores para serem executados. Tanto o substantivo como o verbo stauroo, prender a uma estaca ou pau, originalmente devem ser diferenciados da forma eclesiástica de uma cruz de duas traves.” Este perito em grego, Vine, menciona então a origem caldaica da cruz de duas peças de madeira e como a cristandade a adotou dos pagãos, no terceiro século EC, como símbolo de Cristo ser pregado na estaca. — Vine’s Expository Dictionary of Old and New Testament Words (Dicionário Expositivo de Palavras do Velho e do Novo Testamento, de Vine), 1981, Vol. 1, p. 256.

É significativo o seguinte comentário no livro The Cross in Ritual, Architecture, and Art (A Cruz no Ritual, na Arquitetura e na Arte): “É estranho, porém, inquestionavelmente um fato, que em eras muito anteriores ao nascimento de Cristo, e desde então em terras não tocadas pelo ensino da Igreja, a Cruz tenha sido usada como símbolo sagrado. . . . O grego Baco, o tírio Tamuz, o caldeu Bel e o nórdico Odin, para seus devotos eram simbolizados por uma figura cruciforme.” — De G. S. Tyack, Londres, 1900, p. 1.

O livro The Non-Christian Cross (A Cruz Não Cristã), de J. D. Parsons (Londres, 1896), acrescenta: “Não existe uma única sentença, em quaisquer dos numerosos escritos que compõem o Novo Testamento, que, no grego original, forneça até mesmo evidência indireta no sentido de que o stauros usado no caso de Jesus não fosse um stauros comum; muito menos no sentido de que consistia, não de uma única peça de madeira, mas de duas peças pregadas juntas na forma de cruz. . . . Não é pouco desencaminhador da parte de nossos instrutores traduzir a palavra stauros por ‘cruz’ ao verter os documentos gregos da Igreja para a nossa língua nativa, e apoiar essa sua ação por colocar ‘cruz’ em nossos léxicos como o significado de stauros sem explicar bem que isso de forma alguma era o sentido primário da palavra nos dias dos Apóstolos, que não se tornou seu significado primário senão muito tempo depois, e assim se tornou, então, se é que se tornou, apenas porque, apesar da falta de evidência corroborativa, foi por uma razão ou outra presumido que o stauros específico no qual Jesus foi executado tinha tal formato específico.” — Pp. 23, 24; veja também The Companion Bible (A Bíblia Companheira), 1974, Apêndice N.º 162.

Uso Figurado. As Escrituras não só dão testemunho cabal a respeito de o Senhor Jesus Cristo ter sido fisicamente pregado na estaca (1Co 1:13, 23; 2:2; 2Co 13:4; Re 11:8), mas também falam de pregar na estaca em sentido figurado, metafórico, como em Gálatas 2:20. Os cristãos ‘mataram’ a sua velha personalidade por meio da fé no Cristo pregado na estaca. (Ro 6:6; Col 3:5, 9, 10) “Além disso, os que pertencem a Cristo Jesus pregaram na estaca a carne com as suas paixões e desejos”, escreve Paulo, acrescentando que, mediante Cristo, “o mundo tem sido para mim pregado numa estaca, e eu para o mundo”. — Gál 5:24; 6:14.

Os apóstatas, com efeito, ‘de novo pregam para si mesmos o filho de Deus numa estaca e o expõem ao opróbrio público’, fazendo isso por meio de sua rebelião, semelhante à de Judas, contra o arranjo de salvação providenciado por Deus. — He 6:4-6.

PREGO. Os pregos antigos eram um tanto similares aos modernos de tamanho maior, embora alguns tipos tivessem haste esquadrada e se afilassem mais até a ponta do que os que são usa-dos atualmente. Pelo visto, os pregos mais antigos eram de bronze, embora pregos maiores de épocas posteriores fossem de ferro. Davi preparou "ferro em grande quantidade para pregos, para as portas dos portões" do prospectivo templo. (1Cr 22:3) Descobriram-se pregos ornamentais que eram feitos de bronze, revestidos por folha de ouro, e diz-se que remontam a cerca de 1300-1200 AEC. A respeito dos pregos utilizados na construção do templo de Salomão, diz-se: "O peso dos pregos era de cinquenta siclos [0,6 kg] de ouro." — 2Cr 3:8, 9.

Em 1968, num túmulo escavado logo a NE de Jerusalém, encontraram-se os restos mortais de um judeu que fora executado no primeiro século, numa estaca de tortura. Segundo mostraram estudos posteriores, um prego de ferro de 11,5 cm de comprimento ainda lhe varava o osso do calcanhar direito. Este prego talvez seja similar aos pregos usados pelos soldados romanos para pregar Jesus Cristo na estaca. Tomé só creu que Cristo fora ressuscitado depois de ver o "sinal dos pregos" na carne de Jesus. — Jo 20:24-29.

Uso Figurado. A morte de Jesus na estaca de tortura pôs termo ao pacto da Lei mosaica. Referindo-se a este cancelamento, Paulo indicou que Deus tirara a Lei do caminho 'por pregá-la na estaca de tortura'. (Col 2:13, 14) Salomão assemelhou "os que se entregam a fazer coleções de sentenças" a "pregos bem fixos", possivelmente porque eles, e suas boas palavras da parte de Jeová, exercem um efeito estabilizador e apoiador sobre o ouvinte. — Ec 12:11.

PREGUIÇA. Falta de inclinação ou aversão ao esforço ou trabalho; ociosidade; indolência; mândria; inércia. O verbo hebraico 'a·tsál significa "ser indolente". (Jz 18:9) O adjetivo aparentado com este verbo é traduzido por "preguiçoso". (Pr 6:6) A palavra grega o·kne·rós significa "indolente, mandrião". (Mt 25:26; Ro 12:11, Int) Outro termo, nothrós, significa "indolente, obtuso". — He 5:11; 6:12.

Jeová e seu Filho, na qualidade de os dois maiores Trabalhadores, odeiam a preguiça. Jesus disse: "Meu Pai tem estado trabalhando até agora e eu estou trabalhando." (Jo 5:17) Por toda a Palavra de Deus o preguiçoso é advertido e a preguiça é condenada.

O Modo de Pensar do Preguiçoso. O livro de Provérbios dá uma descrição do preguiçoso. Primeiro de tudo, ele ergue barreiras mentais para justificar-se por não empreender um projeto. "O caminho do preguiçoso é como uma sebe de sarça." (Pr 15:19) Ele encara sua tarefa como uma vereda cheia de sarças, muito difícil de percorrer. Daí, apresenta ridículas desculpas para sua indolência, afirmando: "Há um leão lá fora! Serei assassinado no meio das praças públicas!", como se a tarefa a ser executada fosse acompanhada de um perigo que, na realidade, não existe. (Pr 22:13) A preguiça não raro anda de mãos dadas com a covardia, uma temerosa hesitação. (Mt 25:26 n; 2Ti 1:7) Ainda que seja aconselhado e incitado por outros, o preguiçoso revolve-se na cama como uma "porta gira nos seus gonzos", como alguém que não consegue levantar-se. É preguiçoso demais até mesmo para alimentar-se. Ele "encobriu a sua mão no tacho de banquete; não a pode nem trazer de volta à sua própria boca". (Pr 26:14, 15; 19:24) Mas, ele engana a si mesmo, a ponto de imaginar, no seu próprio coração, que está certo.

Uma pessoa assim se entrega a um raciocínio ilusório e imaginário. Talvez pense que o trabalho lhe prejudicará a saúde, ou que está cansada demais. Talvez ache que 'o mundo lhe deve a sua subsistência'. Ou, deixa as tarefas para "amanhã". (Pr 20:4) Qualquer coisinha que faça leva-a a pensar que cumpriu a sua parte, tanto quanto os demais. Ao passo que todos os homens diligentes poderiam dar uma resposta sensata a qualquer desses argumentos, ela é 'mais sábia aos seus próprios olhos', achando que eles é que são os tolos, por se esforçarem e tentarem incentivá-la a fazer o mesmo. — Pr 26:13-16.

O preguiçoso não é aquele que tem "autossuficiência" ou que se contenta com 'sustento e com o que se cobrir'. (1Ti 6:6-8) Em vez disso, o preguiçoso anela coisas, usualmente muito mais do que alimento e roupa. "O preguiçoso mostra-se almejante, mas a sua alma não tem nada." (Pr 13:4) Ele não tem consideração nem respeito para com o próximo, mas dispõe-se a deixar que outro trabalhe em seu lugar, até mesmo a permitir que outra pessoa lhe forneça as coisas que ele deseja. — Pr 20:4.

A Retribuição da Preguiça. Mesmo que o indivíduo preguiçoso imagine que mais tarde venha a atarefar-se, a retribuição por sua preguiça lhe sobrevém repentinamente, sendo então tarde demais, pois, se lhe diz: "Mais um pouco de sono, mais um pouco de cochilo, mais um pouco de cruzar as mãos ao estar deitado, e certamente chegará a tua pobreza como um bandoleiro e a tua carência como um homem armado." — Pr 6:9-11.

Seja em sentido literal, seja figurado, a descrição da situação do preguiçoso é correta: "Passei pelo campo do preguiçoso e pelo vinhedo do homem falto de coração. E eis que todo ele produzia ervas daninhas. Urtigas cobriam-lhe a própria superfície, e seu próprio muro de pedra tinha sido derrubado." "Pela grande preguiça arria o vigamento, e pelo abaixamento das mãos a casa tem goteiras." — Pr 24:30, 31; Ec 10:18.

Quem contrata um preguiçoso, ou a quem este representa, tenderá a ficar desapontado e aborrecido, e sofrerá perdas, pois, "como o vinagre para os dentes e como a fumaça para os olhos, assim é o preguiçoso para os que o enviam". — Pr 10:26.

A preguiça do indolente por fim lhe trará resultados funestos, pois "o próprio anelo do preguiçoso o entregará à morte". Seu anelo é de coisas que ele não merece, ou que são erradas. Talvez fique arruinado ao tentar obtê-las. De qualquer modo, seu anelo aliado à preguiça o afasta de Deus, a Fonte da vida. — Pr 21:25.

O cristão que é preguiçoso não está cultivando os frutos do espírito, que animam e estimulam a pessoa (At 18:25), mas, em realidade, mete-se em dificuldades. Ele procura satisfazer os desejos da carne. Em pouco tempo talvez passe a 'andar desordeiramente', 'não trabalhando nada, mas intrometendo-se no que não lhe diz respeito'. — 2Te 3:11.

Como É Encarada na Congregação Cristã. Na primitiva congregação cristã, estabeleceu-se um arranjo de fornecer ajuda material aos necessitados, em especial às viúvas. Parece que algumas das viúvas mais jovens expressavam-se desejosas de usar a sua liberdade, quais viúvas, para empenhar-se zelosamente no ministério cristão. (Compare isso com 1Co 7:34.) Evidentemente, a algumas delas se deu ajuda material. Contudo, em vez de empregarem de maneira correta a maior liberdade e o tempo adicional que assim passaram a ter, elas se tornaram ociosas, desocupadas, começando a vadiar. Tornaram-se tagarelas e intrometidas nos assuntos alheios, falando de coisas que não deviam. Por isso, o apóstolo Paulo instruiu o superintendente Timóteo a não colocar tais pessoas na lista de ajuda, mas deixar que se casassem e usassem suas energias e habilidades para criar filhos e cuidar de uma casa. — 1Ti 5:9-16.

Na questão da ajuda material na congregação cristã, a regra bíblica é: "Se alguém não quiser trabalhar, tampouco coma." (2Te 3:10) O chefe de família tem de prover para a sua família, e a esposa não deve comer "o pão da preguiça". — Pr 31:27; 1Ti 5:8.

Evite a Preguiça no Estudo e no Ministério. Dão-se conselhos contra a preguiça no estudo e na aquisição de um entendimento mais profundo dos propósitos de Deus, bem como na participação no ministério cristão. O apóstolo Paulo reprovou alguns cristãos hebreus não progressivos, dizendo: "Ficastes obtusos [indolentes] no vosso ouvir. Pois, deveras, embora devêsseis ser instrutores, em vista do tempo, precisais novamente que alguém vos ensine desde o princípio as coisas elementares das proclamações sagradas de Deus e vos tornastes tais que precisais de leite, não de alimento sólido." (He 5:11, 12) Ele também admoesta: "Não sejais indolentes [ociosos] nos vossos quefazeres. Sede fervorosos de espírito." — Ro 12:11.

PREPARAÇÃO. Nome aplicado ao dia que antecedia o sábado semanal, durante o qual os judeus se preparavam para o sábado.

Quando Jeová começou a prover o maná no ermo, ele orientou que uma porção dupla fosse colhida no sexto dia, uma vez que as pessoas não deviam recolher o maná no sábado, ou sétimo dia. Assim, em preparação para o sábado semanal, os judeus recolhiam e assavam, ou cozinhavam, a porção extra de maná. (Êx 16:5, 22-27) Com o tempo, o "dia antes do sábado" veio a ser denominado de "Preparação", como explicou Marcos. (Mr 15:42) (De forma um tanto similar, em alemão, Samstag [sábado] é também chamado de Sonnabend [literalmente: "noitinha do Sol"] ou "noitinha antes de domingo [Sonntag]".) O dia judaico da Preparação terminava ao pôr do sol do que é hoje chamado de sexta-feira, hora em que começava o sábado, pois o dia judaico ia de uma noitinha à outra.

Na Preparação, as pessoas preparavam refeições para o dia seguinte, o sábado, e concluíam qualquer outra tarefa urgente que não pudesse esperar até ter passado o sábado. (Êx 20:10) A Lei estipulava que o corpo de um homem executado e pendurado numa estaca 'não devia ficar toda a noite no madeiro'. (De 21:22, 23; compare isso com Jos 8:29; 10:26, 27.) Visto que Jesus e os que foram executados na estaca junto com ele se achavam nas estacas na tarde da Preparação, era importante para os judeus que a morte deles fosse apressada, se necessário, de modo a poderem ser sepultados antes do pôr do sol. Isto se dava especialmente porque o dia que logo se iniciaria, no ocaso, era um sábado regular (o sétimo dia da semana) e também um sábado por ser o dia 15 de nisã (Le 23:5-7), sendo assim um "grande" sábado. (Jo 19:31, 42; Mr 15:42, 43; Lu 23:54) Josefo citou um decreto de César Augusto que dizia que os judeus "não estavam obrigados [a comparecer num tribunal] no sábado nem no dia da preparação para ele [véspera do sábado], depois da nona hora", indicando que eles começavam a preparar-se para o sábado na nona hora de sexta-feira. — Jewish Antiquities (Antiguidades Judaicas), XVI, 163 (vi, 2).

A respeito da manhã do julgamento de Jesus e de seu comparecimento perante Pilatos, que se deu no período matutino de 14 de nisã (a Páscoa tendo iniciado na noitinha anterior), João 19:14 diz: "Ora, era a preparação da páscoa." (NM, Al, KJ) Alguns comentaristas entendem que isto significa "preparação para a páscoa", e certas traduções assim traduzem este versículo. (BF, CBC, JRV) Isto, porém, sugere que a Páscoa ainda não tinha sido celebrada, ao passo que os relatos evangélicos mostram explicitamente que Jesus e os apóstolos já a haviam celebrado na noite anterior. (Lu 22:15; Mt 26:18-20; Mr 14:14-17) Cristo cumpriu de modo perfeito os regulamentos da Lei, incluindo o requisito de se celebrar a Páscoa em 14 de nisã. (Êx 12:6; Le 23:5; veja PÁSCOA.) O dia do julgamento e da morte de Jesus podia ser encarado como a "preparação da páscoa" no sentido de que era a preparação da Festividade dos Pães Não Fermentados, de sete dias, que começava no dia seguinte. Por causa de sua proximidade no calendário, a própria festividade inteira não raro era abrangida no termo "Páscoa". E o dia depois de 14 de nisã era sempre um sábado; adicionalmente, em 33 EC, o dia 15 de nisã caiu no sábado regular, fazendo com que aquele dia fosse um sábado "grande", ou duplo.

PREPOSTO. O particípio hebraico traduzido por "preposto" (nits·tsáv) tem o sentido básico de alguém "posto sobre", 'colocado em posição' ou "posto", por meio de nomeação, a cumprir um dever. (1Sa 22:9; Êx 7:15; Ru 2:5) Durante o reinado de Salomão (1037-998 AEC), 12 prepostos foram nomeados a altos cargos administrativos. Cada qual era responsável de prover alimentos e outros suprimentos para a família real durante um mês por ano, em sistema de rodízio. — 1Rs 4:7.

Em vez de se estabelecer um imposto geral para sustentar o governo, tomavam-se gêneros alimentícios dentre os produtos da terra. Os prepostos, portanto, eram os supervisores da produção, da colheita, da estocagem e da entrega das cotas mensais, que atingiam uma tonelagem considerável. (1Rs 4:22, 23) Tais prepostos talvez servissem também como administradores civis em seus territórios designados, além de sua tarefa de supervisionar o fornecimento de suprimentos qual preposto.

Havia equidade neste sistema, pois, pelo visto, os distritos foram determinados levando-se devidamente em conta a população e a produtividade da terra, em vez de segundo as fronteiras tribais fixas. Nove dos distritos administrativos eram localizados ao O do Jordão; os outros três, ao L. Visto que a listagem dos distritos não está em ordem de localização, talvez sejam alistados segundo a ordem do mês em que cada preposto fornecia seus suprimentos.

O nome pessoal de apenas sete prepostos são fornecidos no texto massorético; os outros cinco são alistados apenas como "filho de" fulano. (1Rs 4:8-19) Algumas traduções (MC; So; AS; AT; 3Rs, Dy; Ro; RS) simplesmente colocam o prefixo "Ben" (que significa "filho de") na frente do nome do pai, como "Ben-Hur", "Ben-Decar", "Ben-Hesed", Ben Abinadab", "Ben Gaber". Para que tudo funcionasse suavemente, sem haver escassez, os 12 prepostos foram colocados sob a supervisão de um dos principais príncipes de Salomão, "Azarias, filho de Natã". — 1Rs 4:5.

Os "prepostos principescos" serviam também como capatazes e supervisores da força operária empenhada nas construções realizadas durante o reinado de Salomão. Parece que os dois relatos sobre esses prepostos, em Primeiro Reis e em Segundo Crônicas, diferem apenas no método de classificação, sendo que o primeiro alista 3.300, mais 550, que soma 3.850 (1Rs 5:16; 9:23), e o segundo fornece 3.600, mais 250, que também totaliza 3.850. (2Cr 2:18; 8:10) Os peritos (Ewald, Keil, Michaelis) opinam que Crônicas diferencia os 3.600 prepostos não israelitas dos 250 prepostos israelitas, ao passo que em Reis a distinção dos prepostos é entre os 3.300 capatazes subordinados e os 550 supervisores principais, esta última cifra incluindo 300 não israelitas.

Durante o reinado de Jeosafá, rei de Judá (936-c. 911 AEC), "um preposto era rei" em Edom, que, na época, estava sob controle judaico. (1Rs 22:47) Isto indica que um administrador substituto fora nomeado ou recebera consentimento para agir em lugar do rei. — Veja DELEGADOS GOVERNANTES.

PRESCIÊNCIA, PREDETERMINAÇÃO. A presciência significa conhecimento de algo antes que aconteça ou exista. Na Bíblia, relaciona-se primariamente, embora não de forma exclusiva, com Jeová Deus, o Criador, e seus propósitos. Predeterminação significa a ordenação, decretação ou determinação de algo de antemão; ou a qualidade ou a condição de ser predeterminado.

Palavras do Idioma Original. As palavras geralmente traduzidas por 'conhecer de antemão', "presciência" e "predeterminar" são encontradas nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, embora as mesmas ideias básicas sejam expressas nas Escrituras Hebraicas.

"Presciência" traduz o termo grego pró·gno·sis (de pro, antes, e gnó·sis, conhecimento). (At 2:23; 1Pe 1:2) O verbo aparentado, pro·gi·nó·sko, é empregado em dois casos com respeito a humanos: na declaração de Paulo de que certos judeus 'já o conheciam' (conheciam-no de antemão), e na referência de Pedro ao "conhecimento adiantado" que possuíam aqueles a quem ele dirigia sua segunda carta. (At 26:4, 5; 2Pe 3:17) Neste último caso, torna-se óbvio que tal presciência não era infinita; isto é, não significava que esses cristãos conheciam todos os pormenores relativos ao tempo, ao local e às circunstâncias dos futuros eventos e condições que Pedro havia considerado. Mas, eles tinham um esboço geral do que deviam esperar, obtido em resultado da inspiração que Deus concedeu a Pedro e a outros que contribuíram para a Bíblia.

"Predeterminar" traduz o vocábulo grego pro·o·rí·zo (de pro, antes, e ho·rí·zo, marcar ou fixar os limites). (A palavra portuguesa "horizonte" translitera a palavra grega ho·rí·zon, que significa "demarcar" ou "limitar".) Ilustrando o sentido do verbo grego ho·rí·zo, há a declaração de Jesus Cristo de que, como o "Filho do homem", ele 'ia embora, segundo o que foi especificado [ho·ri·smé·non]'. Paulo disse que Deus "decretou [demarcou, ho·rí·sas] os tempos designados e os limites fixos da morada dos homens". (Lu 22:22; At 17:26) O mesmo verbo é empregado com respeito à determinação humana, como no caso em que os discípulos "resolveram [hó·ri·san]" enviar um socorro a seus irmãos necessitados. (At 11:29) No entanto, as referências específicas à *pre*determinação nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs aplicam-se apenas a Deus.

Fatores a Reconhecer. Para se entender o assunto da presciência e da predeterminação, conforme relacionado com Deus, é preciso reconhecer certos fatores.

Primeiro, a habilidade de Deus de saber de antemão e de predeterminar é claramente expressa na Bíblia. O próprio Jeová apresenta como prova de sua Divindade esta habilidade de saber de antemão e de predeterminar eventos de salvação e de libertação, bem como atos de julgamento e de punição, e, daí, fazer com que tais eventos se concretizem. Seu povo escolhido é testemunha destes fatos. (Is 44:6-9; 48:3-8) Tal presciência e predeterminação divinas formam a base de toda profecia verdadeira. (Is 42:9; Je 50:45; Am 3:7, 8) Deus desafia as nações que se opõem ao seu povo a fornecer provas da alegada divindade de seus poderosos e de seus deuses ídolos, convocando-os a fazê-lo por predizerem atos similares de salvação ou de julgamento, e depois fazer com que se cumpram. A impotência deles nesse respeito demonstra que seus ídolos são 'mero vento e irrealidade'. — Is 41:1-10, 21-29; 43:9-15; 45:20, 21.

Um segundo fator a ser considerado é o livre-arbítrio usufruído pelas criaturas inteligentes de Deus. As Escrituras mostram que Deus estende a tais criaturas o privilégio e a responsabilidade de livre escolha, de exercerem o livre-arbítrio (De 30:19, 20; Jos 24:15), tornando-as assim responsáveis por seus atos. (Gên 2:16, 17; 3:11-19; Ro 14:10-12; He 4:13) Portanto, não são meros autômatos ou robôs. O homem não teria sido realmente criado à "imagem de Deus" se não tivesse livre-arbítrio. (Gên 1:26, 27; veja LIBERDADE.) Logicamente, não devia haver nenhum conflito entre a presciência (bem como a predeterminação) de Deus e o livre-arbítrio de suas criaturas inteligentes.

Um terceiro fator que precisa ser tomado em consideração, e que às vezes é despercebido, é o relativo aos padrões e às qualidades morais de Deus, incluindo a justiça, a honestidade, a imparcialidade, o amor, a misericórdia e a bondade. Portanto, qualquer entendimento do emprego, por parte de Deus, dos poderes de presciência e de predeterminação precisa harmonizar-se não só com alguns desses fatores, mas com todos eles. Evidentemente, seja o que for que Deus saiba de antemão, isso inevitavelmente tem de ocorrer, de modo que Deus é capaz de chamar "as coisas que não são como se fossem". — Ro 4:17.

Sabe Deus de antemão tudo o que as pessoas farão?

Surge então a pergunta: É o seu exercício da presciência infinito, sem limites? Prevê e sabe ele, de antemão, todas as ações futuras de todas as suas criaturas, espirituais e humanas? E predetermina ele tais ações, ou até mesmo predestina qual será o destino final de todas as suas criaturas, fazendo isso até mesmo antes de elas terem vindo a existir?

Ou é Deus seletivo e criterioso ao exercer a presciência, de modo que, seja o que for que Ele resolva prever e saber de antemão, ele o faz, mas aquilo que ele resolve não prever nem saber de antemão, ele não o faz? E, em vez de preceder à existência de suas criaturas, será que a determinação do destino eterno delas, por parte de Deus, aguarda o julgamento Dele do proceder de vida delas e a atitude comprovada delas sob teste? As respostas a essas perguntas têm necessariamente que proceder das próprias Escrituras e das informações que estas fornecem sobre as ações e os tratos de Deus com suas criaturas, inclusive o que foi revelado por intermédio do seu Filho, Cristo Jesus. — 1Co 2:16.

Conceito predestinacionista. O conceito de que o exercício da presciência, por parte de Deus, é infinito e de que ele deveras predetermina o proceder e o destino de todas as pessoas é conhecido como predestinacionismo. Seus proponentes arrazoam que a divindade e a perfeição de Deus exigem que Ele seja onisciente (que saiba de tudo), não apenas com respeito ao passado e ao presente, mas também com respeito ao futuro. Segundo este conceito, não ter ele presciência de todos os assuntos, em seus mínimos detalhes, evidenciaria imperfeição. Exemplos tais como o caso dos dois filhos gêmeos de Isaque, Esaú e Jacó, são apresentados como evidência de que Deus predetermina as criaturas antes do nascimento delas (Ro 9:10-13); e textos tais como Efésios 1:4, 5 são citados como evidência de que Deus sabia de antemão e predeterminou o futuro de todas as suas criaturas, antes mesmo do início da criação.

Para ser correto, este conceito teria, naturalmente, de harmonizar-se com todos os fatores já mencionados, inclusive com a apresentação bíblica das qualidades, das normas e dos propósitos de Deus, bem como com seus modos justos ao lidar com suas criaturas. (Re 15:3, 4) Podemos então considerar apropriadamente as implicações de tal conceito predestinacionista.

Este conceito significaria que, antes de criar os anjos e o homem terreno, Deus exerceu seus poderes de presciência, previu e soube de antemão tudo o que resultaria de tal criação, inclusive a rebelião de um de seus filhos espirituais, a subsequente rebelião do primeiro casal humano no Éden (Gên 3:1-6; Jo 8:44), e todas as consequências funestas de tal rebelião até o presente e mais além. Isto significaria necessariamente que toda a iniquidade registrada pela História (o crime e a imoralidade, a opressão e o resultante sofrimento, as mentiras e a hipocrisia, a adoração falsa e a idolatria) já existia, antes do início da criação, apenas na mente de Deus, na forma de sua presciência quanto ao futuro, em todos os mínimos detalhes.

Se o Criador da humanidade tivesse realmente exercido Seu poder para saber de antemão tudo o que a História presenciou desde a criação do homem, então o pleno peso de toda a iniquidade que disso resultou foi deliberadamente acionado por Deus, quando ele proferiu as palavras: “Façamos o homem.” (Gên 1:26) Estes fatos põem em dúvida a razoabilidade e a coerência do conceito predestinacionista; especialmente em vista de que o discípulo Tiago mostra que a desordem e outras coisas vis não se originam da presença celestial de Deus, mas são de origem “terrena, animalesca, demoníaca”. — Tg 3:14-18.

Exercício infinito da presciência? O argumento de que não saber Deus de antemão todos os eventos e circunstâncias futuras, em todos os pormenores, evidenciaria imperfeição de Sua parte é, na realidade, um conceito arbitrário sobre perfeição. A perfeição, corretamente definida, não exige tal extensão absoluta, toda abrangente, uma vez que a perfeição de algo depende realmente de se enquadrar por completo nos padrões de excelência fixados por aquele que está habilitado a julgar os seus méritos. (Veja PERFEIÇÃO.) Em última análise, a vontade e o bel-prazer do próprio Deus, não opiniões ou conceitos humanos, são os fatores decisivos quanto a se algo é ou não perfeito. — De 32:4; 2Sa 22:31; Is 46:10.

Para ilustrar isso, a onipotência de Deus é inegavelmente perfeita e infinita em capacidade. (1Cr 29:11, 12; Jó 36:22; 37:23) Todavia, sua perfeição em força não demanda que ele use seu poder ao máximo da capacidade de sua onipotência em todo e qualquer caso. É evidente que ele não fez isso; se o tivesse feito, não só certas cidades e nações antigas teriam sido destruídas, mas a terra e tudo nela há muito já teriam sido obliterados por execuções do julgamento de Deus, acompanhadas de poderosas expressões de desaprovação e fúria, assim como no Dilúvio e em outras ocasiões. (Gên 6:5-8; 19:23-25, 29; compare isso com Êx 9:13-16; Je 30:23, 24.) Portanto, o exercício por parte de Deus de seu poder não é o simples desencadear de poder sem limites, mas é governado constantemente por seu propósito, e, quando merecido, moderado por sua misericórdia. — Ne 9:31; Sal 78:38, 39; Je 30:11; La 3:22; Ez 20:17.

De modo similar, se em certos sentidos Deus resolver exercer sua infinita habilidade de presciência de forma seletiva e no grau que lhe agrade, então seguramente nenhum homem ou anjo pode, de direito, dizer: “Que estás fazendo?” (Jó 9:12; Is 45:9; Da 4:35) Portanto, não se trata duma questão de habilidade, do que Deus possa prever, saber de antemão e predeterminar, pois “a Deus todas as coisas são possíveis”. (Mt 19:26) A questão é o que Deus julga apropriado prever, saber de antemão e predeterminar, pois “fez tudo o que se agradou em fazer”. — Sal 115:3.

O exercício seletivo da presciência. A alternativa ao predestinacionismo, o exercício seletivo ou criterioso dos poderes de presciência de Deus, teria de harmonizar-se com as normas justas do próprio Deus e ser coerente com o que ele revela sobre si mesmo em Sua Palavra. Em contraste com a teoria do predestinacionismo, diversos textos apontam para um exame, por parte de Deus, de dada situação então existente e para uma decisão feita à base de tal exame.

Assim, em Gênesis 11:5-8 Deus é descrito como voltando sua atenção em direção à terra, examinando a situação em Babel, e, naquele tempo, determinando a ação a ser tomada para interromper o projeto injusto em andamento ali. Depois que a iniquidade se desenvolveu em Sodoma e Gomorra, Jeová informou Abraão de sua decisão de investigar (por meio de seus anjos) para "ver se de fato agem segundo o clamor sobre isso, que tem chegado a mim, e se não for assim, ficarei sabendo disso". (Gên 18:20-22; 19:1) Deus falou de 'familiarizar-se com Abraão', e, quando Abraão foi ao ponto de tentar sacrificar Isaque, Jeová disse: "Pois agora sei deveras que temes a Deus, visto que não me negaste o teu filho, teu único." — Gên 18:19; 22:11, 12; compare isso com Ne 9:7, 8; Gál 4:9.

A presciência seletiva significa que Deus podia preferir não conhecer previamente, de forma indiscriminada, todas as ações futuras de suas criaturas. Isto significa que, em vez de toda a história a partir da criação ser apenas uma simples reprise do que já tinha sido previsto e predeterminado, Deus podia, com toda a sinceridade, colocar diante do primeiro casal humano a perspectiva de vida eterna numa terra livre de iniquidade. As instruções que Ele deu ao seu primeiro filho humano e à sua primeira filha humana para agirem como Seus agentes perfeitos e sem pecado ao encherem a terra com seus descendentes e a transformarem num paraíso, bem como ao exercerem controle sobre a criação animal, podiam ser assim expressas como a concessão de um privilégio realmente amoroso e como seu desejo genuíno para com eles — não apenas de dar-lhes uma comissão que, da parte deles, já estivesse fadada ao fracasso. Promover Deus uma prova, por meio da "árvore do conhecimento do que é bom e do que é mau", e ter Ele criado a "árvore da vida" no jardim do Éden também não seriam atos sem sentido ou cínicos, transformados nisso por Ele ter presciência de que o casal humano pecaria e jamais poderia comer da "árvore da vida". — Gên 1:28; 2:7-9, 15-17; 3:22-24.

Reconhece-se que seria tanto hipócrita como cruel oferecer algo muitíssimo desejável a outra pessoa em condições que se sabe, de antemão, serem inatingíveis. A Palavra de Deus apresenta a perspectiva de vida eterna como alvo para todos, um alvo que é possível alcançar. Depois de exortar seus ouvintes a 'persistir em pedir e buscar' coisas boas junto a Deus, Jesus salientou que um pai não dá uma pedra ou uma serpente ao filho que pede pão ou peixe. Revelando o conceito de seu Pai no que tange a frustrar as esperanças legítimas duma pessoa, Jesus disse a seguir: "Portanto, se vós, embora iníquos, sabeis dar boas dádivas a vossos filhos, quanto mais o vosso Pai, que está nos céus, dará boas coisas aos que lhe pedirem!" — Mt 7:7-11.

Assim, os convites e as oportunidades que Deus coloca diante de todos os homens, de receberem benefícios e bênçãos eternas, foram feitos de boa-fé. (Mt 21:22; Tg 1:5, 6) Ele pode, com toda a sinceridade, instar com os homens a 'recuar da transgressão e continuar a viver', como fez com o povo de Israel. (Ez 18:23, 30-32; compare isso com Je 29:11, 12.) Logicamente, Ele não poderia fazer isso se já soubesse de antemão que tais pessoas estavam individualmente fadadas a morrer em iniquidade. (Veja At 17:30, 31; 1Ti 2:3, 4.) Como disse Jeová a Israel: "Nem disse eu à descendência de Jacó: 'Procurai-me simplesmente para nada.' Eu sou Jeová, falando o que é justo, contando o que é reto. . . . Virai-vos para mim e sede salvos, todos vós nos confins da terra." — Is 45:19-22.

De modo similar, o apóstolo Pedro escreve: "Jeová não é vagaroso com respeito à sua promessa [a respeito do vindouro dia de prestação de contas], conforme alguns consideram a vagarosidade, mas ele é paciente convosco, porque não deseja que alguém seja destruído, mas deseja que todos alcancem o arrependimento." (2Pe 3:9) Caso Deus já soubesse de antemão e predeterminasse, milênios antes, precisamente que pessoas receberiam a salvação eterna e que pessoas receberiam a destruição eterna, bem que se poderia perguntar quão significativa seria tal 'paciência' de Deus, e quão genuíno seria o Seu desejo de que 'todos alcançassem o arrependimento'. O inspirado apóstolo João escreveu que "Deus é amor", e o apóstolo Paulo declara que o amor "espera todas as coisas". (1Jo 4:8; 1Co 13:4, 7) Em harmonia com esta notável qualidade divina, Deus tem de mostrar uma atitude genuinamente aberta e bondosa para com todas as pessoas, desejoso de que elas obtenham a salvação, até que elas se provem indignas, além de esperança. (Veja 2Pe 3:9; He 6:4-12.) Assim, o apóstolo Paulo fala da "qualidade benévola de Deus [que] está tentando levar-te ao arrependimento". — Ro 2:4-6.

Por último, se por meio da presciência de Deus a oportunidade de receber os benefícios do sacrifício resgatador de Cristo Jesus já estivesse irrevogavelmente fechada para alguns, talvez para milhões de pessoas mesmo antes de nascerem, de modo que tais jamais conseguiriam provar-se dignas de tais benefícios, não se poderia dizer veraz-mente que o resgate foi colocado à disposição de todos os homens. (2Co 5:14, 15; 1Ti 2:5, 6; He 2:9) A imparcialidade de Deus não é, evidentemente, uma simples figura de linguagem. "Em cada nação, o homem que . . . teme [a Deus] e que faz a justiça lhe é aceitável." (At 10:34, 35; De 10:17; Ro 2:11) Tal opção se acha real e genuinamente aberta a todos os homens para 'buscarem a Deus, se tatearem por ele e realmente o acharem, embora, de fato, não esteja longe de cada um de nós'. (At 17:26, 27) Portanto, não existe nenhuma vã esperança ou promessa oca expressa na exortação divina contida no fim do livro de Revelação (Apocalipse), que convida: "Quem ouve diga: 'Vem!' E quem tem sede venha; quem quiser tome de graça a água da vida." — Re 22:17.

As Coisas Conhecidas de Antemão e Predeterminadas. Em todo o registro bíblico, o exercício da presciência e da predeterminação, por parte de Deus, é vinculado de forma coerente com seus próprios propósitos e vontade. "Propor-se" significa colocar algo diante de si como alvo ou objetivo a ser alcançado. (A palavra grega pró·the·sis, traduzida "propósito", significa literalmente "colocar ou estabelecer [algo] antes".) Uma vez que os propósitos de Deus infalivelmente se cumprem, ele pode saber de antemão os resultados, o cumprimento final de seus propósitos, e pode predeterminá-los, assim como os passos que Ele talvez julgue apropriado tomar para realizá-los. (Is 14:24-27) Assim, Jeová é mencionado como 'formando' ou 'dando forma a' (do hebraico ya·tsár, aparentado com a palavra para "oleiro" [Je 18:4]) seu propósito concernente a eventos ou ações futuros. (2Rs 19:25; Is 46:11; compare isso com Is 45:9-13, 18.) Como o Grande Oleiro, Deus "opera todas as coisas segundo o modo aconselhado por sua vontade", em harmonia com seu propósito (Ef 1:11), e "faz que todas as suas obras cooperem" para o bem daqueles que o amam. (Ro 8:28) Portanto, é especificamente com relação aos Seus próprios propósitos predeterminados que Deus "desde o princípio conta o final e desde outrora as coisas que não se fizeram". — Is 46:9-13.

Quando Deus criou o primeiro casal humano, este era perfeito, e Deus podia contemplar o resultado de toda a sua obra criativa e declará-la 'muito boa'. (Gên 1:26, 31; De 32:4) Em vez de preocupar-se, de forma desconfiada, com quais seriam as ações futuras do casal humano, o registro diz que Ele "passou a repousar". (Gên 2:2) Podia fazê-lo visto que, em virtude de sua onipotência e sua sabedoria suprema, nenhuma ação, circunstância ou contingência futura poderia, de alguma forma, apresentar um obstáculo intransponível ou um problema irremediável para bloquear a realização de seu propósito soberano. (2Cr 20:6; Is 14:27; Da 4:35) Portanto, não existe base bíblica para o argumento do predestinacionismo, de que refrear-se Deus de exercer seus poderes de presciência, desta forma, colocaria em perigo os propósitos de Deus, tornando-os "sempre passíveis de serem rompidos por falta de previsão, e [que] ele tenha de continuamente submeter seu sistema a correções, quando este deixa de funcionar, por causa da contingência das ações dos agentes morais". Este exercício seletivo de previsão tampouco daria a suas criaturas o poder de "romper as medidas [de Deus], fazer com que mude continuamente de ideia, sujeitá-lo a vexame, e colocá-lo em confusão", como afirmam os predestinacionistas. (Cyclopædia [Ciclopédia] de M'Clintock e Strong, 1894, Vol. VIII, p. 556) Se até mesmo os servos terrestres de Deus não têm real necessidade de ficar "ansiosos quanto ao dia seguinte", segue-se que o Criador deles, para quem poderosas nações são como "uma gota dum balde", não sentia nem sente tal ansiedade. — Mt 6:34; Is 40:15.

Com relação a classes de pessoas. Apresentam-se também casos em que Deus deveras sabia de antemão o proceder que certos grupos, nações ou a maioria da humanidade tomariam, e, assim, predisse a trajetória básica das futuras ações deles e predeterminou qual a ação correspondente que Ele tomaria com respeito a eles. Entretanto, tal presciência ou predeterminação não priva as pessoas de tais grupos ou divisões coletivas da humanidade de exercerem o livre-arbítrio quanto ao proceder específico que seguirão. Pode-se ver isso nos seguintes exemplos:

Antes do Dilúvio dos dias de Noé, Jeová anunciou seu propósito de realizar este ato destrutivo, que resultaria na morte de humanos, bem como de animais. Todavia, o relato bíblico mostra que tal decisão divina foi tomada depois de surgirem as condições que exigiam tal medida, inclusive a violência e outras maldades. Além disso, Deus, que é capaz de 'conhecer o coração dos filhos da humanidade', fez um exame e constatou que "toda inclinação dos pensamentos do . . . coração [da humanidade] era só má, todo o tempo". (2Cr 6:30; Gên 6:5) Contudo, pessoas individuais, como Noé e sua família, obtiveram o favor de Deus e escaparam da destruição. — Gên 6:7, 8; 7:1.

De modo similar, embora Deus desse à nação de Israel a oportunidade de se tornar um "reino de sacerdotes e uma nação santa" por guardar Seu pacto, cerca de 40 anos depois, quando a nação estava na fronteira da Terra da Promessa, Jeová predisse que os israelitas violariam o Seu pacto, e que, como nação, seriam abandonados por Ele. No entanto, esta presciência não deixava de ter uma base prévia, uma vez que a insubordinação e a rebelião nacionais já se tinham manifestado. Por isso Deus disse: "Bem sei a sua inclinação que hoje estão desenvolvendo antes de eu os introduzir na terra que lhes jurei." (Êx 19:6; De 31:16-18, 21; Sal 81:10-13) Os resultados a que então levaria essa inclinação manifesta, no sentido de crescente iniquidade, podiam ser conhecidos de antemão por Deus sem que isso o tornasse responsável por tais condições, assim como saber alguém de antemão que certa estrutura, erguida com materiais de qualidade inferior e com displicente mão de obra, se deteriorará não o torna responsável por essa deterioração. A regra divina dita que 'o que se semeia é o que se colherá'. (Gál 6:7-9; compare isso com Os 10:12, 13.) Certos profetas deram avisos proféticos de expressões de julgamento predeterminadas por Deus, todos os quais baseavam-se em condições e em atitudes de coração já existentes. (Sal 7:8, 9; Pr 11:19; Je 11:20) Também neste caso, porém, as pessoas podiam acatar, como de fato algumas acataram, o conselho, a repreensão e os avisos de Deus, de modo que mereceram Seu favor. — Je 21:8, 9; Ez 33:1-20.

O Filho de Deus, que também podia ler o coração dos homens (Mt 9:4; Mr 2:8; Jo 2:24, 25), foi divinamente dotado de poderes de presciência e predisse condições, eventos e expressões de julgamento divino futuros. Predisse o julgamento da Geena para os escribas e os fariseus como classe (Mt 23:15, 33), mas não disse com isso que todo fariseu ou escriba estava condenado à destruição, como mostra o caso do apóstolo Paulo. (At 26:4, 5) Jesus predisse calamidades para a impenitente Jerusalém e outras cidades, mas não indicou que seu Pai tivesse predeterminado que todas as pessoas dessas cidades haviam de assim sofrer. (Mt 11:20-23; Lu 19:41-44; 21:20, 21) Ele também sabia de antemão a que levaria a inclinação e a atitude de coração da humanidade, e predisse as condições que se desenvolveriam entre os da humanidade por ocasião da "terminação do sistema de coisas", bem como o desenrolar dos propósitos do próprio Deus. (Mt 24:3, 7-14, 21, 22) Os apóstolos de Jesus igualmente declararam profecias que manifestavam a presciência de Deus quanto a certas classes, tais como a do "anticristo" (1Jo 2:18, 19; 2Jo 7), e também o fim para o qual tais classes estão predeterminadas. — 2Te 2:3-12; 2Pe 2:1-3; Ju 4.

Com relação a pessoas. Além da presciência relativa a classes, determinadas pessoas acham-se especificamente envolvidas em previsões divinas. Estas incluem Esaú e Jacó (já mencionados), o Faraó do Êxodo, Sansão, Salomão, Josias, Jeremias, Ciro, João, o Batizador, Judas Iscariotes e o próprio Filho de Deus, Jesus.

Nos casos de Sansão, Jeremias e João, o Batizador, Jeová exerceu a presciência antes do nascimento deles. No entanto, esta presciência não especificava qual seria o destino final deles. Antes, à base de tal presciência, Jeová predeterminou que Sansão vivesse segundo o voto de nazireu e desse início à libertação de Israel da mão dos filisteus, que Jeremias servisse como profeta, e que João, o Batizador, fizesse uma obra preparatória como precursor do Messias. (Jz 13:3-5; Je 1:5; Lu 1:13-17) Ao passo que eram altamente favorecidos com tais privilégios, isto não lhes garantia a salvação eterna, nem mesmo que eles permaneceriam fiéis até a morte (embora todos os três tenham permanecido fiéis). Assim, Jeová predisse que um dos muitos filhos de Davi seria chamado Salomão, e predeterminou que Salomão seria usado para construir o templo. (2Sa 7:12, 13; 1Rs 6:12; 1Cr 22:6-19) Entretanto, embora Salomão fosse assim favorecido, tendo até mesmo o privilégio de escrever certos livros das Escrituras Sagradas, ele incorreu em apostasia em seus anos posteriores. — 1Rs 11:4, 9-11.

Semelhantemente com Esaú e Jacó, a presciência de Deus não fixou o destino eterno deles, mas, antes, determinou ou predeterminou qual dos grupos nacionais, que descenderiam dos dois filhos, obteria uma posição dominante sobre o outro. (Gên 25:23-26) Esta dominação prevista também indicava a obtenção do direito de primogenitura por parte de Jacó, direito que vinha acompanhado do privilégio de fazer parte da linhagem da qual viria o "descendente [lit.: semente]" de Abraão. (Gên 27:29; 28:13, 14) Dessa forma, Jeová Deus tornou claro que Sua escolha de pessoas para determinados fins não está presa aos costumes ou aos procedimentos usuais que se ajustam às expectativas dos homens. Tampouco são os privilégios, divinamente designados, concedidos unicamente à base de obras, o que poderia levar a pessoa a pensar que 'adquiriu o direito' a esses privilégios e que estes 'lhe são devidos'. O apóstolo Paulo sublinhou este ponto ao mostrar por que Deus, pela benignidade imerecida, podia conceder às nações gentias privilégios que certa vez pareciam reservados para Israel. — Ro 9:1-6, 10-13, 30-32.

A citação de Paulo sobre o 'amor de Jeová por Jacó [Israel] e seu ódio por Esaú [Edom]', provém de Malaquias 1:2, 3, escrito muito depois da época de Jacó e Esaú. Assim, a Bíblia não diz necessariamente que Jeová tinha tal opinião sobre os gêmeos antes do nascimento deles. É um fato cientificamente comprovado que grande parte da disposição geral e do temperamento duma criança é determinada por ocasião da concepção, devido a fatores genéticos contribuídos pelo pai e pela mãe. É evidente que Deus pode ver tais fatores; Davi menciona Jeová como vendo "até mesmo meu embrião". (Sal 139:14-16; veja também Ec 11:5.) Não se pode dizer até que ponto tal perspicácia divina afetou a predeterminação de Jeová com relação aos dois meninos, mas, de qualquer modo, a escolha que fez de Jacó, em lugar de Esaú, não condenou, em si, Esaú ou seus descendentes, os edomitas, à destruição. Até mesmo pessoas dentre os cananeus amaldiçoados obtiveram o privilégio de associar-se com o povo pactuado de Deus, e receberam bênçãos. (Gên 9:25-27; Jos 9:27; veja CANAÃ, CANANEU N.º 2.) Todavia, a "mudança de pensamento" que Esaú almejou seriamente alcançar com lágrimas foi apenas uma tentativa malsucedida de alterar a decisão de Isaque, seu pai, de que a bênção especial de primogênito permanecesse inteiramente com Jacó. Assim, isto não indicava nenhum arrependimento perante Deus por parte de Esaú quanto à atitude materialista dele. — Gên 27:32-34; He 12:16, 17.

A profecia de Jeová a respeito de Josias exigia que algum descendente de Davi fosse assim chamado, e predizia as medidas que ele tomaria contra a adoração falsa na cidade de Betel. (1Rs 13:1, 2) Mais de três séculos depois, um rei com este nome cumpriu a profecia. (2Rs 22:1; 23:15, 16) Por outro lado, ele falhou em acatar "as palavras de Neco provenientes da boca de Deus", e isto o levou a ser morto. (2Cr 35:20-24) Assim, embora Josias fosse predito por Deus e predeterminado para executar uma tarefa específica, ele ainda tinha livre-arbítrio, podendo escolher acatar ou desconsiderar recomendações.

De modo similar, Jeová predisse, com cerca de dois séculos de antecedência, que usaria um conquistador chamado Ciro para libertar os judeus de Babilônia. (Is 44:26-28; 45:1-6) Mas, a Bíblia não declara que o persa a quem por fim tal nome foi dado, em cumprimento da profecia divina, tornou-se um genuíno adorador de Jeová, e a história secular mostra que ele continuou adorando deuses falsos.

Estes casos de presciência antes do nascimento duma pessoa não colidem assim com as qualidades reveladas e os padrões anunciados de Deus. Tampouco há qualquer indício de que Deus coagisse as pessoas a agir contrário à própria vontade delas. Nos casos de Faraó, de Judas Iscariotes e do próprio Filho de Deus, não existe evidência alguma de que a presciência de Jeová tivesse sido exercida antes de a pessoa vir a existir. Estes casos específicos ilustram certos princípios referentes à presciência e à predeterminação de Deus.

Um de tais princípios é que Deus testa as pessoas por provocar ou permitir certas situações ou acontecimentos, ou por fazer com que tais pessoas ouçam suas mensagens inspiradas, resultando em elas se verem forçadas a exercer seu livre-arbítrio para tomar uma decisão e assim revelar uma atitude definida de coração, discernida por Jeová. (Pr 15:11; 1Pe 1:6, 7; He 4:12, 13) De acordo com a maneira como as pessoas reagem, Deus também pode moldá-las no proceder que escolheram de livre e espontânea vontade. (1Cr 28:9; Sal 33:13-15; 139:1-4, 23, 24) Assim, "o coração do homem terreno" primeiro se inclina em certa direção antes de Jeová dirigir os passos dessa pessoa. (Pr 16:9; Sal 51:10) Sob prova, a condição de coração da pessoa pode ficar fixa, quer endurecida na injustiça e na rebelião, quer firmada em inquebrantável devoção a Jeová Deus e a fazer a Sua vontade. (Jó 2:3-10; Je 18:11, 12; Ro 2:4-11; He 3:7-10, 12-15) Tendo chegado a esse ponto por livre escolha, o resultado final do proceder da pessoa pode ser então conhecido de antemão e predito sem qualquer injustiça e sem violar o livre-arbítrio do homem. — Veja Jó 34:10-12.

O caso do fiel Abraão, já considerado, ilustra esses princípios. Um caso contrastante é o do insensível Faraó, do Êxodo. Jeová sabia de antemão que Faraó se recusaria a permitir que os israelitas saíssem, "exceto por mão forte" (Êx 3:19, 20), e predeterminou a praga que resultou na morte dos primogênitos. (Êx 4:22, 23) A consideração feita pelo apóstolo Paulo sobre os modos de Deus lidar com Faraó é com frequência entendida incorretamente como significando que Deus endurece de modo arbitrário o coração de algumas pessoas, segundo Seu propósito predeterminado, sem considerar a inclinação anterior, ou a atitude de coração, da pessoa. (Ro 9:14-18) Igualmente, de acordo com muitas traduções, Deus avisou Moisés de que 'endureceria o coração de Faraó'. (Êx 4:21; compare isso com Êx 9:12; 10:1, 27.) Não obstante, algumas traduções vertem o relato hebraico de modo que reze que Jeová "permitiu que o coração [de Faraó] se tornasse ousado" (Ro); "deixou o coração de Faraó ficar obstinado". (NM) Em apoio a tal versão, o apêndice da tradução de Rotherham mostra que, em hebraico, a ocasião ou a permissão de um evento é muitas vezes apresentada como se fosse a causa do evento, e que "até mesmo ordens positivas devem ocasionalmente ser aceitas como não significando nada mais do que uma permissão". Assim, em Êxodo 1:17, o texto hebraico original diz literalmente que as parteiras "fizeram os meninos viver", ao passo que na realidade elas permitiram que eles vivessem por refrearem-se de matá-los. Depois de citar os hebraístas M. M. Kalisch, H. F. W. Gesenius e B. Davies em apoio, Rotherham declara que o sentido hebraico dos textos que envolvem Faraó é de que "Deus permitiu que Faraó endurecesse seu próprio coração — poupou-o — deu-lhe a oportunidade, a ocasião, de desenvolver a iniquidade que existia nele. Só isso". — The Emphasised Bible (A Bíblia Enfatizada), apêndice, p. 919; compare isso com Is 10:5-7.

Este entendimento é corroborado pelo fato de que o registro mostra definitivamente que o próprio Faraó "endureceu o seu coração". (Êx 8:15, 32, IBB; "fez o seu coração insensível", NM) Ele exerceu assim sua própria vontade e seguiu sua própria inclinação obstinada, tendo Jeová previsto e predito com exatidão os resultados de tal inclinação. As repetidas oportunidades que Jeová fornecera a Faraó obrigaram-no a tomar decisões, e, ao assim fazer, ele endureceu sua atitude. (Veja Ec 8:11, 12.) Como mostra o apóstolo Paulo, por citar Êx 9:16, Jeová permitiu que o assunto se desenvolvesse dessa forma até a plena extensão das dez pragas, a fim de manifestar o Seu próprio poder e fazer com que Seu nome fosse conhecido em toda a terra. — Ro 9:17, 18.

Predestinou Deus a Judas para trair Jesus, a fim de cumprir profecias?

O proceder traiçoeiro de Judas Iscariotes cumpriu profecias divinas e demonstrou a presciência de Jeová, bem como a de seu Filho. (Sal 41:9; 55:12, 13; 109:8; At 1:16-20) Todavia, não se pode dizer que Deus predeterminou ou predestinou o próprio Judas a seguir tal proceder. As profecias prediziam que algum associado íntimo de Jesus seria seu traidor, mas não especificavam quem dentre os que partilhavam de tal associação seria este. Além disso, seria contrário aos princípios bíblicos Deus predeterminar as ações de Judas. A norma divina declarada pelo apóstolo é: "Nunca ponhas as mãos apressadamente sobre nenhum homem; tampouco sejas partícipe dos pecados de outros; mantém-te casto." (1Ti 5:22; compare isso com 3:6.) Jesus, evidenciando preocupação no sentido de que a escolha dos 12 apóstolos fosse feita de maneira sábia e correta, passou a noite orando ao seu Pai antes de tornar conhecida sua decisão. (Lu 6:12-16) Se Judas já estivesse divinamente predeterminado para ser traidor, isto resultaria em incoerência na direção e na orientação de Deus, e, segundo a regra, o tornaria partícipe dos pecados que ele cometeu.

Assim, parece evidente que, quando Judas foi escolhido qual apóstolo, seu coração não apresentava nenhuma evidência definida de uma atitude traiçoeira. Ele permitiu que uma 'raiz venenosa brotasse' e o aviltasse, resultando em seu desvio e em ele aceitar, não a orientação de Deus, mas a direção do Diabo para um proceder de roubo e de traição. (He 12:14, 15; Jo 13:2; At 1:24, 25; Tg 1:14, 15; veja JUDAS N.º 4.) Quando tal desvio já atingira certo ponto, o próprio Jesus podia ler o coração de Judas e predizer a traição dele. — Jo 13:10, 11.

É verdade que no relato de João 6:64, na ocasião em que alguns discípulos tropeçaram devido a certos ensinos de Jesus, lemos que "Jesus sabia desde o princípio ["desde o começo", BMD] quem eram os que não criam e quem era o que o havia de trair". Ao passo que a palavra "princípio" (gr.: ar·khé) é empregada em 2 Pedro 3:4 para referir-se ao início da criação, pode referir-se também a outras épocas. (Lu 1:2; Jo 15:27) Por exemplo, quando o apóstolo Pedro falou de o espírito santo cair sobre os gentios "assim como tinha caído também sobre nós, no princípio", ele obviamente não se referia ao princípio de seu discipulado ou apostolado, mas, a um ponto importante de seu ministério, o dia de Pentecostes, de 33 EC, o "princípio" do derramamento do espírito santo para determinado propósito. (At 11:15; 2:1-4) Portanto, é interessante notar o seguinte comentário sobre João 6:64 no Commentary on the Holy Scriptures (Comentário sobre as Escrituras Sagradas), de Lange (p. 227): "Princípio . . . não significa, metafisicamente, desde o princípio de todas as coisas, . . . nem desde o princípio de Sua familiarização [a de Jesus] com cada um, . . . nem desde o princípio de Seu ajuntamento dos discípulos em torno de Si, ou desde o princípio do Seu ministério messiânico, . . . mas desde os primeiros germes secretos da descrença [que causou o tropeço de alguns discípulos]. Assim também Ele conhecia Seu traidor desde o princípio." — Traduzido para o inglês e editado por P. Schaff, 1976; veja 1Jo 3:8, 11, 12.

Predeterminação do Messias. Jeová Deus sabia de antemão e predisse os sofrimentos do Messias, a morte que ele teria, e sua subsequente ressurreição. (At 2:22, 23, 30, 31; 3:18; 1Pe 1:10, 11) A realização de coisas determinadas pelo exercício por parte de Deus de tal presciência dependia em parte do exercício do poder pelo próprio Deus, e em parte das ações de homens. (At 4:27, 28) Tais homens, porém, voluntariamente deixaram-se vencer pelo Adversário de Deus, Satanás, o Diabo. (Jo 8:42-44; At 7:51-54) Portanto, assim como os cristãos nos dias de Paulo 'não desconheciam os desígnios' de Satanás, Deus previu os desejos e os métodos iníquos que o Diabo tramaria contra Jesus Cristo, o Ungido de Deus. (2Co 2:11) Obviamente, o poder de Deus podia também impedir ou até mesmo bloquear quaisquer ataques ou atentados contra o Messias que não se harmonizassem com a maneira ou o tempo profetizados. — Veja Mt 16:21; Lu 4:28-30; 9:51; Jo 7:1, 6-8; 8:59.

A declaração do apóstolo Pedro de que Cristo, como o Cordeiro sacrificial de Deus, era "conhecido de antemão, antes da fundação [forma do grego ka·ta·bo·lé] do mundo [kó·smou]", é interpretada pelos defensores da predestinação como significando que Deus exerceu tal presciência antes da criação da humanidade. (1Pe 1:19, 20) A palavra grega ka·ta·bo·lé, traduzida "fundação", significa literalmente "lançamento para baixo" e pode referir-se à 'concepção dum descendente [lit.: semente]', como em Hebreus 11:11. Embora houvesse a "fundação" dum mundo da humanidade quando Deus criou o primeiro casal humano, como é demonstrado em Hebreus 4:3, 4, depois disso esse casal perdeu a posição como filhos de Deus. (Gên 3:22-24; Ro 5:12) Todavia, pela benignidade imerecida de Deus, foi-lhe permitido conceber semente e produzir descendentes, um dos quais é especificamente indicado na Bíblia como tendo obtido o favor de Deus e se colocado em posição de ser redimido e salvo, a saber, Abel. (Gên 4:1, 2; He 11:4) É digno de nota que, em Lucas 11:49-51, Jesus se refere ao "sangue de todos os profetas, derramado desde a fundação do mundo", e tece um paralelo a isto com as palavras "desde o sangue de Abel até o sangue de Zacarias". Assim, Jesus vincula Abel com a "fundação do mundo".

O Messias, ou Cristo, havia de ser a Semente prometida através da qual todas as pessoas justas, de todas as famílias da terra, seriam abençoadas. (Gál 3:8, 14) A primeira menção de tal "descendente [lit.: semente]" surgiu depois de a rebelião no Éden já se ter iniciado, mas antes do nascimento de Abel. (Gên 3:15) Isto se deu uns 4.000 anos antes da revelação do "segredo sagrado" por meio da clara identificação de tal 'semente' messiânica. Assim, deveras, 'por tempos de longa duração isso foi guardado em silêncio'. — Ro 16:25-27; Ef 1:8-10; 3:4-11.

No seu devido tempo, Jeová Deus designou seu próprio Filho primogênito para cumprir o profetizado papel de 'semente' e tornar-se o Messias. Não há nada que indique que esse Filho fora "predestinado" para tal papel antes mesmo de ser criado, ou antes de irromper a rebelião no Éden. Do mesmo modo, a posterior escolha dele, por parte de Deus, como o encarregado de cumprir as profecias não foi feita sem base prévia. O período de íntima associação entre Deus e seu Filho, antes de o Filho ser enviado à terra, sem dúvida resultou em Jeová 'conhecer' seu Filho a um grau que Ele podia estar seguro de que o Filho cumpriria fielmente as promessas e quadros proféticos. — Compare isso com Ro 15:5; Fil 2:5-8; Mt 11:27; Jo 10:14, 15; veja JESUS CRISTO (Testado e Aperfeiçoado).

Predeterminação dos 'chamados e escolhidos'. Restam aqueles textos que tratam dos cristãos "chamados" ou "escolhidos". (Ju 1; Mt 24:24) Eles são descritos como "escolhidos segundo a presciência de Deus" (1Pe 1:1, 2), 'escolhidos antes da fundação do mundo', 'predeterminados para adoção como filhos de Deus' (Ef 1:3-5, 11), 'selecionados desde o princípio para a salvação e chamados para este mesmo destino' (2Te 2:13, 14). O entendimento destes textos depende de se eles se referem à predeterminação de indivíduos específicos, ou se descrevem a predeterminação de uma classe de pessoas, a saber, a congregação cristã, o "um só corpo" (1Co 10:17) daqueles que serão co-herdeiros com Cristo Jesus em seu Reino celestial. — Ef 1:22, 23; 2:19-22; He 3:1, 5, 6.

Se estas palavras se aplicam a indivíduos específicos como predeterminados para a salvação eterna, então segue-se que tais indivíduos jamais se poderiam revelar infiéis ou falhar em relação à sua chamada, pois a presciência de Deus para com eles não se poderia revelar inexata, e a predeterminação deles para certo destino jamais poderia ser frustrada ou impedida. Todavia, os mesmos apóstolos que foram inspirados a escrever as palavras precedentes mostraram que alguns, que foram "comprados" e "santificados" pelo sangue do sacrifício resgatador de Cristo, e que "provaram a dádiva celestial gratuita" e "se tornaram participantes de espírito santo . . . e [dos] poderes do vindouro sistema de coisas", se desviariam a um ponto além de arrependimento e trariam destruição sobre si mesmos. (2Pe 2:1, 2, 20-22; He 6:4-6; 10:26-29) Os apóstolos se uniram em instar com aqueles aos quais escreveram: "Fazei tanto mais o vosso máximo para vos assegurar da vossa chamada e escolha; pois, se persistirdes em fazer estas coisas, de nenhum modo falhareis jamais"; também: "Persisti em produzir a vossa própria salvação com temor e tremor." (2Pe 1:10, 11; Fil 2:12-16) Paulo, que foi "chamado para ser apóstolo de Jesus Cristo" (1Co 1:1), obviamente não se considerava individualmente predestinado para a salvação eterna, uma vez que fala de seus esforços estrênuos de alcançar "o alvo do prêmio da chamada para cima, da parte de Deus" (Fil 3:8-15), e de sua preocupação para que ele mesmo não 'viesse a ser de algum modo reprovado'. — 1Co 9:27.

De modo similar, "a coroa da vida" oferecida a tais é concedida desde que sejam fiéis, sob prova, até a morte. (Re 2:10, 23; Tg 1:12) Podem perder a coroa de reinado com o Filho de Deus. (Re 3:11) O apóstolo Paulo expressou confiança de que "a coroa de justiça" lhe estava "reservada", mas só fez isso quando tinha certeza de que estava chegando ao fim de sua carreira, tendo-a "corrido até o fim". — 2Ti 4:6-8.

Por outro lado, se encararmos os textos previamente citados como se aplicando a uma classe, à congregação cristã ou "nação santa" dos chamados, como um todo (1Pe 2:9), significariam que Deus soube de antemão e predeterminou que seria produzida tal classe (mas não as pessoas específicas que a comporiam). Também, estes textos significariam que Ele prescreveu ou predeterminou o 'padrão' no qual teriam de enquadrar-se todos os que, no devido tempo, seriam chamados para ser membros dela, tudo isto de acordo com o Seu propósito. (Ro 8:28-30; Ef 1:3-12; 2Ti 1:9, 10) Ele também predeterminou as obras que se esperaria que tais pessoas realizassem, e que seriam provadas devido aos sofrimentos que o mundo lhes causaria. — Ef 2:10; 1Te 3:3, 4.

Fatalismo e Predestinacionismo. Os povos pagãos da antiguidade, inclusive os gregos e os romanos, não raro achavam que o destino da pessoa, especialmente a duração da vida dela, era determinado de antemão pelos deuses para todas as pessoas. A mitologia grega representava o controle do destino do homem por três deusas: Cloto (fiandeira), que fiava o fio da vida; Láquesis (distribuidora de sortes), que determinava a duração da vida; e Átropos (inflexível), que cortava a vida quando expirava o tempo. Encontrava-se uma tríade similar entre as deidades romanas.

Segundo o historiador judeu Josefo (primeiro século EC), os fariseus esforçavam-se a harmonizar a ideia do destino com sua crença em Deus e com o livre-arbítrio concedido ao homem. (The Jewish War [A Guerra Judaica], II, 162, 163 [viii, 14]; Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], XVIII, 13, 14 [i, 3]) The New Schaff-Herzog Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge (A Nova Enciclopédia de Conhecimento Religioso de Schaff-Herzog) diz: "Antes de Agostinho [do quarto e quinto séculos EC] não houve nenhum sério desenvolvimento duma teoria de predestinação no cristianismo." Antes de Agostinho, anteriores "Pais da Igreja", como eram chamados, tais como Justino, Orígenes e Irineu "nada sabem sobre a predestinação incondicional; eles ensinam o livre-arbítrio". (Encyclopædia of Religion and Ethics (Enciclopédia de Religião e Ética), de Hastings, 1919, Vol. X, p. 231) Ao refutarem o gnosticismo, são descritos como regularmente expressando sua crença no livre-arbítrio do homem como "a característica distintiva da personalidade humana, a base da responsabilidade moral, um dom divino por meio do qual o homem pudesse escolher aquilo que agradava a Deus", e como falando da "autonomia do homem e [d]o conselho de Deus, que não constrange". — The New Schaff-Herzog Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge, editada por S. Jackson, 1957, Vol. IX, pp. 192, 193.

PRESENÇA. A palavra grega da qual se traduz "presença" é pa·rou·sí·a, formada de pa·rá (ao lado de) e ou·sí·a (o ser ou o estar; derivada de ei·mí, que significa "ser" ou "estar"). Assim, pa·rou·sí·a significa literalmente "o estar ao lado de", isto é, uma "presença". Ela é empregada 24 vezes nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, frequentemente com respeito à presença de Cristo relacionada com seu Reino messiânico. — Mt 24:3; veja o apêndice da NM, pp. 1516, 1517.

Muitas traduções variam no modo de verter esta palavra. Embora traduzam pa·rou·sí·a como "presença" em alguns textos, vertem-na mais frequentemente como "vinda". Isto tem constituído a base para a expressão "segunda vinda", ou "segundo advento" (adventus ["advento" ou "vinda"] sendo a tradução de pa·rou·sí·a empregada pela Vulgata latina em Mt 24:3), com respeito a Cristo Jesus. Embora a presença de Jesus subentenda necessariamente a sua chegada ao local em que está presente, a tradução de pa·rou·sí·a por "vinda" dá toda a ênfase à chegada, obscurecendo a subsequente presença que segue à chegada. Os lexicógrafos, embora concordem que pa·rou·sí·a possa ser traduzida tanto por "chegada" como por "presença", em geral reconhecem que a presença da pessoa é a ideia principal transmitida pela palavra.

Vine's Expository Dictionary of Old and New Testament Words (Dicionário Expositivo de Palavras do Velho e do Novo Testamento, de Vine; 1981, Vol. 1, pp. 208, 209) declara: "PAROUSIA . . . denota tanto uma chegada como a consequente presença junto a. Por exemplo, numa carta de papiro [escrita em grego], uma senhora fala da necessidade de sua parousia em certo lugar, a fim de cuidar de assuntos relacionados com sua propriedade ali. . . . Quando usada para referir-se à volta de Cristo, no Arrebatamento da Igreja, significa não apenas a Sua vinda momentânea para buscar Seus santos, mas a Sua presença com eles, desde aquele momento até a Sua revelação e manifestação ao mundo." O Greek-English Lexicon (Léxico Grego-Inglês) de Liddell e Scott (revisado por H. Jones, Oxford, 1968, p. 1343) mostra que pa·rou·sí·a é às vezes empregada na literatura secular grega para referir-se à "visita dum personagem real ou oficial".

Os escritos seculares gregos, naturalmente, são de ajuda para se determinar o sentido deste termo grego. No entanto, ainda mais eficaz é ver como a própria Bíblia usa essa palavra. Em Filipenses 2:12, por exemplo, Paulo menciona os cristãos filipenses como obedecendo "não somente durante a minha presença [pa·rou·si·ai], mas agora muito mais prontamente durante a minha ausência [a·pou·si·ai]". Da mesma forma, em 2 Coríntios 10:10, 11, depois de se referir àqueles que diziam que "as suas cartas são ponderosas e vigorosas, mas a sua presença [pa·rou·sí·a] em pessoa é fraca e a sua palavra, desprezível", Paulo acrescenta: "Que tal homem tome em conta o seguinte: que aquilo que somos em nossa palavra por cartas, quando ausentes [a·pón·tes], seremos também em ação, quando presentes [pa·rón·tes]". (Veja também Fil 1:24-27.) Assim, o contraste em pauta é entre a presença e a ausência, e não entre a chegada (ou vinda) e a partida.

Em vista disso, a Emphasized Bible (Bíblia Enfatizada), de J. B. Rotherham, declara em seu apêndice (p. 271): "Nesta edição, a palavra parousia é uniformemente traduzida 'presença' ('vinda', como representando esta palavra, sendo rejeitada). . . . O sentido de 'presença' é tão claramente [indicado] pelo contraste com 'ausência' . . . que surge naturalmente a pergunta, — Por que não traduzi-la sempre assim?"

Que a pa·rou·sí·a de Jesus não é simplesmente uma vinda momentânea, seguida duma rápida partida, mas, em vez disso, é uma presença que abrange certo período de tempo, é também indicado pelas palavras dele, registradas em Mateus 24:37-39 e em Lucas 17:26-30. Aqui, os "dias de Noé" são comparados à "presença do Filho do homem" (os "dias do Filho do homem", no relato de Lucas). Jesus, portanto, não limita a comparação apenas à vinda do Dilúvio como clímax final nos dias de Noé, embora mostre que sua própria "presença", ou seus "dias", terão um clímax similar. Uma vez que os "dias de Noé" na verdade abrangeram um período de anos, há base para se crer que a predita "presença [ou "dias"] do Filho do homem" abrange, igualmente, um período considerável de anos, culminando na destruição daqueles que não aproveitam a oportunidade que lhes é oferecida de buscarem a libertação.

Natureza da "Parousia" de Cristo. Uma pa·rou·sí·a ou presença pode, naturalmente, ser visível, e, em seis das ocorrências dessa palavra, a referência é à presença visível e humana de homens tais como Estéfanas, Fortunato, Acaico, Tito e Paulo. (1Co 16:17; 2Co 7:6, 7; 10:10; Fil 1:26; 2:12) Que uma pa·rou·sí·a pode também ser invisível é indicado pelo uso que Paulo fez da forma verbal aparentada (pá·rei·mi) ao falar de estar "presente em espírito", embora ausente em corpo. (1Co 5:3) Assim, também, o historiador judeu Josefo, escrevendo em grego, refere-se à pa·rou·sí·a de Deus no monte Sinai, sua presença invisível sendo evidenciada por trovões e relâmpagos. — Jewish Antiquities (Antiguidades Judaicas), III, 80 (v, 2).

Que uma presença invisível está em harmonia com a Bíblia é também corroborado pelo que Jeová Deus disse a Moisés sobre a Arca do Pacto no Santíssimo do tabernáculo: "E ali me hei de apresentar a ti e falar contigo de cima da tampa." (Êx 25:22) A presença de Deus não se dava de forma visível, uma vez que as Escrituras são claras ao indicar que "nenhum homem jamais viu a Deus" — nem Moisés, nem o sumo sacerdote que entrava no Santíssimo. (Jo 1:18; Êx 33:20) Quando o Rei Salomão inaugurou o templo em Jerusalém, a nuvem da "glória de Jeová" encheu a casa. Salomão referiu-se a Jeová como 'residindo no templo'. Não obstante, o próprio Salomão declarou: "Porém, morará Deus verdadeiramente na terra? Eis que os próprios céus, sim, o céu dos céus, não te podem conter; quanto menos, então, esta casa que construí!" Entretanto, os olhos de Deus estariam continuamente abertos em direção àquela casa, e as orações feitas ali seriam ouvidas por ele 'no lugar em que ele mora, nos céus'. — 1Rs 8:10-13, 27-30; compare isso com At 7:45-50.

Estes relatos ilustram o poder de Deus de 'estar presente' na Terra em sentido espiritual (portanto, invisível), enquanto Ele ainda permanece no céu. A presença dele podia, em alguns casos, dar-se através dum representante angélico que agisse e falasse em nome de Deus, chegando a dizer: "Eu sou o Deus de teu pai", como fez o anjo no espinheiro ardente e que falou a Moisés. (Êx 3:2-8; compare isso com Êx 23:20; 32:34.) Do mesmo modo, Jeová disse a Moisés que estava 'chegando' a ele no monte Sinai e 'desceria' ali (Êx 19:9, 11, 18, 20), contudo os escritos apostólicos indicam que foi realmente por meio de seus anjos que Deus esteve presente ali e entregou Seu pacto a Moisés. — Gál 3:19; He 2:2; veja FACE.

Visto que se concedeu ao ressuscitado filho de Jeová, Jesus Cristo, "toda a autoridade no céu e na terra", e ele é "a representação exata do . . . próprio ser [de Deus]", segue-se que ele também devia poder estar invisivelmente presente de maneira similar. (Mt 28:18; He 1:2, 3) Neste respeito, podemos notar que, mesmo quando na Terra, Jesus Cristo conseguia curar pessoas à distância, como se estivesse pessoalmente presente no local. — Mt 8:5-13; Jo 4:46-53.

É também evidente que Jeová Deus colocou anjos sob as ordens de seu glorificado Filho. (1Pe 3:22) Textos relacionados com a presença de Jesus descrevem-no regularmente como 'acompanhado' de hostes angélicas, ou como 'enviando' anjos. (Mt 13:37-41, 47-49; 16:27; 24:31; Mr 8:38; 2Te 1:7) Contudo, isto não significa que a sua predita presença no poder e na glória do Reino consista unicamente na utilização de mensageiros ou delegados angélicos em missões terrestres, pois isto já estava sendo feito lá no primeiro século EC, com relação aos apóstolos e outros. (At 5:19; 8:26; 10:3, 7, 22; 12:7-11, 23; 27:23) As parábolas de Jesus e outros textos mostram que sua presença é semelhante à de um amo que volta à sua casa, e à de um homem que obtém o reinado e volta para assumir o controle de seu domínio, e que a presença de Jesus significa uma inspeção e um julgamento pessoais, seguidos da expressão ativa ou da execução desse julgamento, e da entrega da recompensa aos aprovados. (Mt 24:43-51; 25:14-45; Lu 19:11-27; compare isso com Mt 19:28, 29.) Uma vez que o reinado de Jesus inclui a Terra toda, sua presença é global (veja Mt 24:23-27, 30), e as palavras inspiradas de Paulo, em 1 Coríntios 15:24-28, bem como as referências feitas ao reinado de Cristo, em Revelação (Apocalipse) (5:8-10; 7:17; 19:11-16; 20:1-6; 21:1-4, 9, 10, 22-27), subentendem que a presença de Cristo é a ocasião para ele dirigir sua plena atenção à Terra inteira e sua população, pondo em ação a plena força de seu poder régio, de modo a realizar a vontade de seu Pai para com a Terra e seus habitantes. — Veja Mt 6:9, 10.

Alguns, à base de textos que falam de Jesus ser visto 'vindo nas nuvens, com grande poder e glória' (Mr 13:26; Re 1:7), concluem que a presença dele tem de ser visível. Todavia, conforme mostrado sob NUVEM (Uso Ilustrativo), o emprego de nuvens com relação a outras manifestações divinas sugere invisibilidade, em vez de visibilidade. Assim, também, 'ver' pode referir-se à visão figurativa, à percepção mental e de coração. (Is 44:18; Je 5:21; Ez 12:2, 3; Mt 13:13-16; Ef 1:17, 18) Negar isto implicaria em negar que o oposto da visão, a saber, a cegueira, pudesse ser empregada em sentido figurativo ou espiritual, em vez de literal. Todavia, Jesus usou claramente tanto a visão como a cegueira em tal sentido figurativo ou espiritual. (Jo 9:39-41; Re 3:14-18; compare isso também com 2Co 4:4; 2Pe 1:9.) Jó, com quem Jeová falou "de dentro do vendaval" (provavelmente acompanhado de nuvens), disse depois: "Em rumores ouvi a teu respeito, mas agora é o meu próprio olho que te vê." (Jó 38:1; 42:5) Isto, também, deve ter acontecido pela percepção mental e de coração, em vez de pelo olho literal, em vista do claro ensino bíblico de que "nenhum homem jamais viu a Deus". — Jo 1:18; 5:37; 6:46; 1Jo 4:12.

Encontramos evidência contrária à presença de Jesus ser visível (no sentido de Jesus aparecer em forma física, que poderia ser vista por olhos humanos) na declaração do próprio Jesus de que por meio de sua morte ele sacrificaria sua carne em favor da vida do mundo (Jo 6:51), e na declaração do apóstolo Paulo de que o ressuscitado Jesus "mora em luz inacessível, a quem nenhum dos homens tem visto nem pode ver". (1Ti 6:14-16) Por conseguinte, Jesus podia dizer a seus discípulos: "Mais um pouco, e o mundo não me observará mais." É verdade que seus discípulos o observariam, não só porque Jesus lhes apareceria depois de sua ressurreição, mas também porque, no devido tempo, eles seriam ressuscitados para juntar-se a ele nos céus e 'observar a glória que seu Pai lhe dera'. (Jo 14:19; 17:24) Mas o mundo em geral não o contemplaria porque após sua ressurreição à vida como criatura espiritual (1Pe 3:18), Jesus restringiu suas aparições a seus discípulos. Sua ascensão ao céu também foi vista somente por eles, e não pelo mundo, e os anjos presentes garantiram aos discípulos que a volta de Jesus seria "da mesma maneira" (gr.: tró·pos, não mor·fé, "forma"), assim sendo, sem demonstração pública, discernida apenas por seus fiéis seguidores. — At 1:1-11.

A má condição de coração conjugada com expectativas errôneas a respeito da presença de Cristo sem dúvida contribui para a atitude dos ridicularizadores. Foi predito que "nos últimos dias" eles zombariam, dizendo: "Onde está essa prometida presença dele? Ora, desde o dia em que os nossos antepassados adormeceram na morte, todas as coisas estão continuando exatamente como desde o princípio da criação." — 2Pe 3:2-4; compare isso com 1:16.

É claro que os homens estarão cônscios do que ocorrerá durante a "revelação" (gr.: a·po·ká·ly·psis) de Jesus Cristo, "com os seus anjos poderosos, em fogo chamejante, ao trazer vingança sobre os que não conhecem a Deus e os que não obedecem às boas novas acerca de nosso Senhor Jesus". (2Te 1:7-9) Isto, porém, ainda dá margem a uma presença invisível, que passa despercebida a todos, exceto aos fiéis, antes de tal revelação. Podemos lembrar-nos de que Jesus, ao tecer um paralelo entre sua presença e os "dias de Noé", declara que no tempo de Noé as pessoas "não fizeram caso" até que lhes sobreveio a destruição aquosa, e "assim será a presença do Filho do homem". — Mt 24:37-39.

Eventos que marcam a sua presença. Jesus prometeu estar com seus seguidores quando estes se reunissem (Mt 18:20), e também lhes assegurou de que estaria 'com eles' em sua obra de fazer discípulos, "todos os dias, até à terminação do sistema de coisas". (Mt 28:19, 20) A pa·rou·si·a de Mateus 24:3 e de outros textos relacionados, naturalmente, tem de significar algo mais do que isso. Relaciona-se claramente com uma presença especial, uma que envolveria e afetaria todos os habitantes da Terra e que estaria inseparavelmente vinculada à expressão de plena autoridade, por parte de Jesus, como Rei ungido por Deus.

Entre os eventos que marcam a presença de Jesus no poder do Reino acham-se os seguintes: a ressurreição dos seus seguidores que morreram, sendo estes co-herdeiros com ele no Reino celestial (1Co 15:23; Ro 8:17); o ajuntamento, feito por ele, e a união com ele próprio de outros seguidores que vivem por ocasião de sua presença (Mt 24:31; 2Te 2:1); seu ato de 'reduzir a nada' o apóstata "homem que é contra a lei", isto sendo realizado "pela manifestação [e·pi·fa·nei·ai] de sua presença [i.e., a de Jesus]" (2Te 2:3-8; veja HOMEM QUE É CONTRA A LEI); a destruição de todos os que não aproveitam a oportunidade de libertação (Mt 24:37-39); e, necessariamente, a introdução do seu Reinado Milenar (Re 20:1-6). Veja também o artigo TRANSFIGURAÇÃO para obter informações sobre a maneira em que os observadores dessa visão de Cristo na glória do Reino foram habilitados a familiarizar outros com "o poder e a presença de nosso Senhor Jesus Cristo". — 2Pe 1:16-18.

Condições que acompanham a sua presença. O livro de Revelação apresenta, em expressões simbólicas, muitas informações pertinentes à presença de Cristo e à sua manifestação e revelação. O quadro simbólico do cavaleiro coroado, montado no cavalo branco, retratado em Revelação 6:1, 2, corresponde ao do cavaleiro de Revelação 19:11-16, que é o "Rei dos reis e Senhor dos senhores", Cristo Jesus. Revelação, capítulo 6, mostra que, quando Cristo sai cavalgando como Rei vencedor, ele não efetua imediatamente a remoção da iniquidade existente na Terra, mas, antes, seu cavalgar é acompanhado de guerra que tira 'a paz da terra', bem como de escassez de alimentos, e de praga mortífera. (Re 6:3-8) Isto, por sua vez, forma um paralelo com aspectos encontrados na profecia de Cristo em Mateus 24, Marcos 13 e Lucas 21. Portanto, parece que a profecia de Jesus, encontrada nos relatos dos Evangelhos, que envolve claramente a destruição de Jerusalém e seu templo (que ocorreu em 70 EC), também tem uma aplicação ao tempo da presença de Cristo, fornecendo assim um "sinal" que permite determinar quando Jesus estaria presente e governando desde o céu como Rei messiânico. — Mt 24:3, 32, 33; Lu 21:29-31.

Outras referências à presença de Cristo em geral oferecem incentivo à fidelidade e à perseverança até aquele tempo, e durante este. — 1Te 2:19; 3:12, 13; 5:23; Tg 5:7, 8; 1Jo 2:28.

A Presença do Dia de Jeová. Em sua segunda carta, Pedro exorta seus irmãos a estarem "aguardando e tendo bem em mente a presença do dia de Jeová", demonstrando isso pelo modo como vivem. (2Pe 3:11, 12) Precisam cuidar de manter o dia de julgamento de Jeová constantemente em mente, dando-se conta de que é muito iminente. Naquele "dia de Jeová", os "céus" governamentais deste mundo iníquo serão destruídos como que por fogo, e os "elementos" que fazem parte do mundo não conseguirão manter sua coesão, mas derreter-se-ão devido ao intenso calor. O atual sistema sob o controle de Satanás chegará ao seu fim.

Visto que Jeová Deus atua por meio de seu Filho e Rei designado, Cristo Jesus (Jo 3:35; compare isso com 1Co 15:23, 24), segue-se que existe uma relação entre esta prometida "presença" de Jeová e a "presença" de Cristo Jesus. Logicamente, aqueles que zombam diante da proclamação de uma, zombarão diante da proclamação da outra. De novo, a atitude das pessoas antes do Dilúvio é usada como exemplo correspondente. — 2Pe 3:5-7; compare isso com Mt 24:37-39.

A Presença Daquele Que É Contra a Lei. Em 2 Tessalonicenses 2:9-12, o apóstolo descreve a "presença daquele que é contra a lei" como sendo "segundo a operação de Satanás, com toda obra poderosa, e sinais e portentos mentirosos, e com todo engano injusto". Isto ilustra também o ponto de que pa·rou·si·a significa mais do que uma vinda ou chegada momentânea, pois a realização de todas essas obras, sinais e portentos, e deste engano, exige um período de tempo de certa duração.

PRESSÁGIO. Qualquer coisa considerada como fornecendo algum indício do futuro; uma situação ou uma ocorrência considerada como pressagiando o bem ou o mal. (Gên 30:27; Núm 24:1) A Lei de Deus, dada a Israel, proibia especificamente a busca de presságios como forma de adivinhação. (Le 19:26; De 18:10) Mas apóstatas, como o Rei Manassés, de Judá, deveras buscavam presságios. (2Rs 17:17; 21:6) Visto que tal prática é condenada nas Escrituras, evidentemente o comentário do fiel José sobre a utilização de seu cálice de prata para ler presságios fazia simplesmente parte dum estratagema. (Gên 44:5, 15) Por fazer esse comentário, José apresentava-se, não como alguém que tinha fé em Jeová, mas como o administrador duma terra em que prevalecia a adoração falsa. Assim, não forneceu nenhum indício de ter algo em comum com seus irmãos, e manteve oculta deles sua verdadeira identidade. — Veja ADIVINHAÇÃO.

PRESUNÇÃO. Arrogar-se mais do que o seu direito ou aquilo que é próprio permitiria, ou sem autorização; ousadia impertinente de conduta ou de pensamento; tomar liberdades indevidas; empreender algo em atrevido desafio. Esta palavra está relacionada com a soberba, a arrogância, o orgulho e a petulância. Seus antônimos são a mansidão e a modéstia.

O Orgulho e a Ira Resultam em Presunção. A palavra hebraica za·dhóhn, traduzida "presunção", deriva do verbo zidh, que significa "ferver, acalorar-se". (Gên 25:29; Êx 21:14) O calor da ira ou do orgulho pode levar alguém a agir precipitadamente, a tornar-se injustificadamente ousado e a ultrapassar os seus direitos. O provérbio diz: "Fanfarrão presunçoso, pretensioso, é o nome daquele que age numa fúria de presunção." (Pr 21:24) Em Deuteronômio 1:43, usa-se a forma verbal para descrever a ação tomada pelo povo de Israel ao desobedecer à ordem de Deus e correr à frente, sem autorização. Moisés lhes disse: "De modo que vos falei e vós não escutastes, mas começastes a comportar-vos rebeldemente contra a ordem de Jeová e a ficar todo exaltados, e tentastes subir ao monte." Outra palavra hebraica, 'a·fál, é empregada no relato sobre o mesmo incidente em Números 14:40-44: "Moisés . . . disse: '. . . Não subais, porque Jeová não está no vosso meio . . .' No entanto, subiram presunçosamente ao cume do monte", onde sofreram derrota às mãos dos habitantes. Estavam 'inchados' de falsa confiança. — Veja Hab 2:4.

A ordem dada por Deus a Israel também indica que a ira pode resultar em destrutiva presunção e em crassa violação da lei de Deus: "Caso um homem se exalte [forma de zidh] com o seu próximo a ponto de matá-lo com ardileza, deves tomá-lo mesmo que esteja junto ao meu altar, para que morra." — Êx 21:14.

A Ser Evitada com Cuidado. O Rei Davi, a quem Deus concedeu muitos favores e grande autoridade, compreendia que, mesmo assim, poderia ser culpado de presunção. Ele orou: "Enganos — quem pode discernir? Declara-me inocente de pecados escondidos. Refreia também teu servo de atos presunçosos; não deixes que me dominem. Neste caso serei completo e terei permanecido inocente de muita transgressão." (Sal 19:12, 13) Portanto, é grande o perigo, e temos de evitá-la com cuidado. Um ato presunçoso é um pecado muito mais grave do que um erro. Quer a pessoa esteja numa posição elevada, quer numa baixa, tomar liberdades é algo detestável à vista de Deus. Uzias, embora fosse um rei poderoso que havia provado as bênçãos de Deus, foi acometido de lepra por presunçosamente assumir deveres sacerdotais. (2Cr 26:16-21) A presunção induziu o Rei Saul a rebelar-se contra Jeová. Não estando disposto a esperar a chegada de Samuel, Saul resolveu ele mesmo oferecer sacrifícios. (1Sa 13:8-14) Também usou seu próprio critério ao poupar o rei amalequita, Agague, e o melhor dos despojos, quando a ordem de Jeová era devotar os amalequitas à destruição. Devido ao seu proceder presunçoso, Saul foi rejeitado qual rei. — 1Sa 15:8, 9, 11, 18, 19.

Notável exemplo de presunção da parte de um israelita que não fazia parte da realeza é o de Uzá. A Arca do Pacto estava sendo transportada para Jerusalém numa carroça puxada por touros, contrário ao proceder delineado por Deus. Quando o gado quase causou um transtorno, Uzá estendeu a mão e segurou a arca, para endireitá-la. Por essa irreverente presunção, Jeová o golpeou e ele morreu. — 2Sa 6:6, 7.

A pessoa que não está segura de que ação deve tomar num assunto, ou não está certa se está dentro de sua alçada, deve sem dúvida consultar primeiro outros que tenham conhecimento e discernimento. As Escrituras aconselham: "Pela presunção só se causa rixa, mas há sabedoria com os que se consultam mutuamente." (Pr 13:10) A presunção leva a resultados desastrosos; a modéstia salva a pessoa. O sábio diz: "Chegou a presunção? Então chegará a desonra; mas a sabedoria está com os modestos." — Pr 11:2.

Desrespeito Pela Soberania de Deus. Quando uma pessoa age presunçosamente para com Deus, ela revela desrespeito pela soberania e pela Divindade de Jeová. Os que afirmam ser servos dele e o representam mal são os mais repreensíveis. Sobre os falsos profetas, Jeová disse: "O profeta que presumir de falar em meu nome alguma palavra que não lhe mandei falar . . . tal profeta terá de morrer. . . . Quando o profeta falar em nome de Jeová e a palavra não suceder nem se cumprir, . . . o profeta proferiu-a presunçosamente." — De 18:20-22.

Também, mostra-se desrespeito para com Jeová ao desrespeitar Seus servos designados, o que pode ser causado pela presunção. Em Israel, casos difíceis eram levados ao 'lugar que Jeová escolheu' (que, a partir dos dias de Davi, era Jerusalém). Qualquer um que desrespeitasse o julgamento proferido devia ser morto, pois, ao colocar-se contra os representantes de Deus, ele agia em desafio a Deus. A lei rezava: "Deves proceder de acordo com a lei que te indicarão e segundo a decisão judicial que te disserem. . . . E o homem que se comportar presunçosamente, não escutando o sacerdote que ali está de pé para ministrar a Jeová, teu Deus, ou o juiz, tal homem tem de morrer; e tens de eliminar o mal de Israel. E todo o povo ouvirá e ficará com medo, e não mais agirão presunçosamente." (De 17:8-13; compare isso com Núm 15:30.) O apóstolo Pedro menciona alguns que mostram grande desrespeito a Deus e a seus servos ungidos, descrevendo-os como "atrevidos [do grego tol·me·tés, "presunçosos", KJ], obstinados, não tremem diante dos gloriosos, mas falam de modo ultrajante". Tais homens, afirma Pedro, "sofrerão a destruição até mesmo no seu próprio proceder de destruição". — 2Pe 2:10, 12.

Tirar partido de vínculos carnais pode ser um laço. João, o Batizador, discerniu o modo de pensar dos judeus quando estes se dirigiram a ele. Ele os avisou: "Não presumais dizer a vós mesmos: 'Temos por pai a Abraão.' Pois eu vos digo que Deus é capaz de suscitar destas pedras filhos a Abraão." (Mt 3:9) A palavra grega aqui traduzida 'presumir' é dó·xe·te, de do·ké·o, que basicamente significa "pensar; formar uma opinião (certa ou errada)".

A Presunção Acabará. A antiga cidade de Babilônia era um protótipo da presunção contra Deus, razão pela qual era alvo da inimizade eterna de Deus. O profeta Jeremias disse a ela: "'Eis que sou contra ti, ó Presunção', é a pronunciação do Soberano Senhor. . . . a Presunção há de tropeçar e cair." (Je 50:29, 31, 32) A simbólica Babilônia, a Grande, tem-se revelado a mais presunçosa e amarga inimiga de Deus que há na terra; embriaga os habitantes da terra "com o vinho da fornicação dela" e é responsável pelo "sangue dos profetas, e dos santos, e de todos os que foram mortos na terra". Por causa disso, ela sofrerá destruição eterna. (Re 17:2, 5; 18:7, 8, 20, 24) Isto está em harmonia com a promessa de Jeová de pôr fim a toda a presunção babilônica: "Farei realmente cessar o orgulho dos presunçosos e rebaixarei a altivez dos tiranos." — Is 13:11.

PRIMÍCIAS. Os primeiríssimos frutos da estação; os primeiros resultados ou produtos de algo. A palavra hebraica re'shith (duma raiz que significa "cabeça") é empregada no sentido de primeira parte, ponto de partida, ou "princípio" (De 11:12; Gên 1:1; 10:10); o "melhor" (Êx 23:19, n); e "primícias" (Le 2:12). "Os primeiros frutos maduros" é a tradução da palavra hebraica bik·ku·rím, que é empregada especialmente com referência a cereais e frutas. (Na 3:12) O termo grego para primícias (a·par·khé) provém duma raiz cujo significado básico é "primazia".

Jeová exigia da nação de Israel que lhe fossem oferecidas as primícias, quer do gênero humano, quer dos animais, quer dos frutos do solo. (Êx 22:29, 30; 23:19; Pr 3:9) Devotar as primícias a Jeová seria evidência do apreço dos israelitas pela bênção de Jeová, e pela sua terra e pelas colheitas desta. Seria expressão de gratidão ao Dador de "toda boa dádiva". — De 8:6-10; Tg 1:17.

Jeová ordenou à nação que lhe oferecesse de forma representativa as primícias, em especial por ocasião da Festividade dos Pães Não Fermentados. Daí, em 16 de nisã, o sumo sacerdote movia, perante Jeová, no santuário, algumas primícias da colheita de cereal, um molho de cevada, que era a primeira safra do ano segundo o calendário sagrado. (Le 23:5-12) Também, em Pentecostes, no 50.º dia depois de o molho de cevada ter sido movido, as primícias da colheita de trigo, em forma de dois pães fermentados feitos de flor de farinha, eram apresentadas como oferta movida. — Le 23:15-17; veja FESTIVIDADE.

Além destas ofertas de cereais feitas pelo sumo sacerdote a favor da nação, exigia-se que os israelitas trouxessem as primícias de todos os seus produtos, como ofertas. Todo primogênito masculino, dos homens e dos animais, era santificado para Jeová, sendo oferecido ou então redimido. (Veja PRIMOGÊNITO, PRIMEIRO NASCIDO.) As primícias da massa de farinha deveriam ser oferecidas em forma de bolos de formato anular. (Núm 15:20, 21) Os frutos do solo também eram colocados em cestos e levados pelos israelitas para o santuário (De 26:1, 2), onde eles então recitavam certas palavras registradas em Deuteronômio 26:3-10. As palavras eram, em realidade, um esboço da história daquela nação, desde a entrada no Egito até sua libertação e a entrada na Terra da Promessa.

Diz-se que surgiu o costume de cada localidade enviar um representante com as primícias contribuídas pelos habitantes do respectivo distrito, a fim de não ser preciso que todos enfrentassem as inconveniências de ter de subir a Jerusalém toda vez que as primícias ficavam maduras. A Lei não fixava a quantidade destas primícias a serem oferecidas; isto, pelo que parece, era deixado a critério da generosidade e do espírito de apreço do dador. Todavia, deviam ser oferecidas as porções mais seletas, o melhor das primícias. — Núm 18:12; Êx 23:19; 34:26.

No caso de uma árvore recém-plantada, nos três primeiros anos ela era considerada impura, como se fosse incircuncisa. No quarto ano, todos os seus frutos se tornavam santos para Jeová. Daí, no quinto ano, o dono podia colher os frutos dela para ele próprio. — Le 19:23-25.

As contribuições das primícias para Jeová, por parte das 12 tribos não levíticas de Israel, eram usadas pelos sacerdotes e levitas, uma vez que não receberam nenhuma herança na terra. (Núm 18:8-13) O oferecimento fiel das primícias resultava em prazer para Jeová e em bênção para todas as partes envolvidas. (Ez 44:30) Deixar de trazê-las era considerado por Deus como roubar-lhe aquilo que de direito lhe pertencia, e resultava em seu desagrado. (Mal 3:8) Na história de Israel, houve épocas em que esse costume foi negligenciado, sendo restaurado em certos períodos por governantes zelosos da adoração verdadeira. Na obra de reforma do Rei Ezequias, ele realizou uma prolongada celebração da Festividade dos Pães Não Fermentados, e, nesta ocasião, Ezequias instruiu o povo a cumprir seu dever com respeito à contribuição das primícias e dos dízimos. O povo reagiu alegremente por trazer em grandes quantidades as primícias do cereal, do vinho novo, do azeite, do mel e de todos os produtos do campo, desde o terceiro mês até o sétimo. (2Cr 30:21, 23; 31:4-7) Depois que o povo retornou de Babilônia, Neemias liderou-o em fazer o juramento de andar na lei de Jeová, incluindo o dever de trazer-lhe as primícias de toda sorte. — Ne 10:29, 34-37; veja OFERTAS.

Uso Figurado e Simbólico. Jesus Cristo foi gerado em sentido espiritual por ocasião de seu batismo, e foi ressuscitado para a vida espiritual em 16 de nisã de 33 EC, o dia do ano em que as primícias da primeira colheita de cereal eram apresentadas perante Jeová, no santuário. Portanto, ele é chamado de primícias, sendo realmente as primeiras primícias para Deus. (1Co 15:20, 23; 1Pe 3:18) Os seguidores fiéis de Jesus Cristo, seus irmãos espirituais, são também um tipo de primícias para Deus, mas não as primícias primárias, sendo similares à segunda colheita de cereal, o trigo, que era apresentado a Jeová no dia de Pentecostes. Totalizam 144.000 e são chamados de os "comprados dentre a humanidade como primícias para Deus e para o Cordeiro" e de "certas primícias das suas criaturas". — Re 14:1-4; Tg 1:18.

O apóstolo Paulo fala também dos do fiel restante judeu que se tornaram os primeiros cristãos como "primícias". (Ro 11:16) O cristão Epêneto é chamado de "uma das primícias da Ásia para Cristo" (Ro 16:5), e a família de Estéfanas de "as primícias da Acaia". — 1Co 16:15.

Visto que os cristãos ungidos são gerados pelo espírito como filhos de Deus, tendo a esperança de ressurreição à imortalidade nos céus, diz-se que durante sua vida na Terra eles 'têm as primícias, a saber, o espírito . . . ao passo que esperam seriamente a adoção como filhos, serem livrados de seus corpos por meio de resgate'. (Ro 8:23, 24) Paulo afirma que ele e concristãos com esperança de vida no espírito dispõem do "penhor daquilo que há de vir, isto é, o espírito", que ele também diz ser "penhor antecipado da nossa herança". — 2Co 5:5; Ef 1:13, 14.

PRIMO(A). Filho(a) do tio ou da tia de alguém. A única ocorrência da palavra grega a·ne·psi·ós (primo) se dá em Colossenses 4:10, onde Paulo chama Marcos de "primo de Barnabé". O termo grego significa basicamente "primo em primeiro grau", mas, em sentido mais amplo, qualquer primo. A·ne·psi·ós também ocorre na Septuaginta em Números 36:11 (no plural), mas a expressão hebraica no texto massorético é traduzida literalmente "filhos dos irmãos de seu pai".

Em Lucas 1:36, a versão Almeida (edição revista e corrigida) chama Elisabete (Isabel) de prima (syg·ge·nís) de Maria. Esta palavra grega é considerada uma forma peculiar da palavra syg·ge·nés, traduzida "parente" nas versões modernas. (Lu 2:44; 21:16; At 10:24; BJ, BLH, NM, NTI) Syg·ge·nés ocorre cinco vezes na Septuaginta, novamente com o significado de "parentes" em geral em vez de o moderno e restrito termo "primo(a)". — Le 18:14; 20:20; 25:45; 2Sa 3:39; Ez 22:6; LXX.

Embora não se encontre nenhuma palavra para primo(a) nas Escrituras Hebraicas, este parentesco é indicado ali por expressões tais como "filhos [do] . . . tio de Arão", "o filho de seu tio". (Le 10:4; 25:49) Relatam-se casamentos entre primos: Jacó e Raquel, e as filhas de Zelofeade. (Gên 28:2; 29:10-12; Núm 36:11) Tais casamentos entre primos não foram incluídos nas proibições mosaicas contra o incesto. (Le 18:8-16) Hoje em dia, as leis civis variam nessa questão; alguns estados e nações permitem o casamento entre primos, outros o proíbem.

PRIMOGÊNITO, PRIMEIRO NASCIDO. O primogênito é, primariamente, o filho varão mais velho dum pai (em vez de o primogênito da mãe), o princípio da faculdade procriativa do pai (De 21:17); também, o primeiro macho nascido dos animais, às vezes chamado de "primogênito" (ou "primeiro nascido"). — Gên 4:4.

Desde os tempos mais primitivos, o filho primogênito ocupava uma posição honrada na família e era aquele que sucedia à chefia da casa. Ele herda-va uma porção dupla da propriedade do pai. (De 21:17) José assentou Rubem durante uma refeição segundo seu direito qual primogênito. (Gên 43:33) Mas a Bíblia nem sempre honra o primogênito por alistar os filhos segundo a ordem de nascimento. O primeiro lugar é muitas vezes concedido ao mais proeminente ou fiel dos filhos, em vez de ao primogênito. — Gên 6:10; 1Cr 1:28; compare isso com Gên 11:26, 32; 12:4; veja HERANÇA; PRIMOGENITURA, DIREITO DE.

O primogênito veio a ter considerável destaque na época em que Jeová livrou o Seu povo da escravidão no Egito. Entre os egípcios, os primogênitos eram consagrados ao deus-sol, Amom-Rá, o suposto preservador de todos os primogênitos. A décima praga que Jeová trouxe sobre os egípcios serviu para desacreditar este deus, e mostrou a incapacidade dele de proteger os primogênitos. Por obedecerem às instruções de Deus, sobre matar um cordeiro e espargir o sangue deste nas ombreiras e na parte superior do portal de suas casas, os israelitas não perderam na morte os seus primogênitos, ao passo que foram mortos todos os primogênitos dos egípcios, tanto dentre os homens como dentre os animais. (Êx 12:21-23, 28, 29) Evidentemente, na maioria dos casos se refere ao primogênito varão de cada casa, e não ao cabeça da casa, muito embora ele pudesse ser primogênito. O próprio Faraó provavelmente era primogênito, e, no entanto, a vida dele não foi tirada. Entretanto, pode ter acontecido que nem toda casa egípcia possuísse um primogênito varão literal (o casal não tendo filhos, ou já tendo morrido o primogênito varão), e, em vista da declaração de Êxodo 12:30, "não havia casa em que não houvesse um morto", tal destruição pode ter incluído a pessoa principal da casa que ocupava a posição de primogênito.

Uma vez que os primogênitos varões dentre os israelitas eram aqueles que, na linha de sucessão, tornar-se-iam os cabeças das várias casas, eles representavam a nação inteira. Jeová, com efeito, referiu-se à nação inteira como sendo seu "primogênito", sendo sua nação primogênita por causa do pacto abraâmico. (Êx 4:22) Por ter preservado a vida deles, Jeová ordenou que 'todo primogênito macho que abrisse cada madre, entre os filhos de Israel, entre homens e animais' fosse santificado a ele. (Êx 13:2) Assim, os filhos primogênitos varões eram devotados a Deus.

Mais tarde, Jeová tomou os levitas varões, evidentemente além dos 300 primogênitos levitas (compare Núm 3:21, 22, 27, 28, 33, 34 com 3:39), em lugar dos filhos varões primogênitos de Israel, daqueles que tinham um mês ou mais de idade. Um preço de resgate de cinco siclos (US$ 11) tinha de ser pago a Arão e seus filhos para cada um dos 273 varões que excederam o número de levitas. Também, Jeová tomou os animais domésticos dos levitas em lugar dos animais domésticos primogênitos das demais tribos. (Núm 3:40-48) Desse tempo em diante, o filho primogênito varão devia ser apresentado a Jeová no tabernáculo, ou no templo, após o período de impureza da mãe, e devia ser redimido mediante o pagamento do valor estipulado para aqueles que tinham de um mês até cinco anos de idade, "cinco siclos de prata segundo o siclo do lugar santo". — Le 12:1-3; 27:6; Núm 18:15, 16.

Os primogênitos machos dos animais puros, tais como o touro, o cordeiro ou o cabrito, não deviam ser redimidos. Esse touro não devia ser posto para trabalhar, nem o cordeiro devia ser tosquiado. Antes, deviam ser apresentados a Jeová no tabernáculo, ou no templo, como sacrifício, no oitavo dia depois de seu nascimento. (Êx 22:30; Núm 18:17; De 15:19, 20) Se, contudo, o animal apresentasse grave defeito, não devia ser sacrificado a Jeová, mas devia ser comido no lugar onde a pessoa morava. — De 15:21-23.

O primogênito dum jumento, animal impuro, não podia ser apresentado como sacrifício, e, portanto, devia ser redimido ou recomprado, por ser substituído por uma ovelha. De outra forma, sua nuca devia ser quebrada, uma vez que pertencia a Jeová, e não devia ser usado pelo homem. (Êx 13:12, 13; 34:19, 20) Todavia, Levítico 27:27 reza: "Se for dentre os animais impuros e ele tiver de remi-lo segundo o valor calculado, então terá de dar-lhe em adição um quinto dele. Mas, se não for resgatado, então terá de ser vendido segundo o valor calculado." Alguns comentaristas consideram este texto uma modificação do regulamento a respeito da redenção dum jumento. Pelo visto, porém, Levítico 27:27 trata dum assunto diferente. Em vez de referir-se a um animal impuro, tal como um jumento, as palavras "se for dentre os animais impuros" podem indicar um animal que era impuro no sentido de não ser apropriado para sacrifício, por ser defeituoso.

Por que se refere Jeová a "Davi, meu servo", como primogênito, se Davi não era filho primogênito?

No Salmo 89, Jeová se refere a "Davi, meu servo", e faz um retrospecto do pacto para o reino feito com ele. No meio disso encontra-se a declaração: "Eu mesmo o colocarei como primogênito, o mais excelso dos reis da terra." (Sal 89:20, 27) Davi não era filho primogênito. (1Cr 2:13-15) Assim, parece que Jeová se referia profeticamente àquele prefigurado por Davi, o celestial Filho "primogênito" do próprio Deus, a quem Ele confere um reinado mais enaltecido do que o de qualquer governante humano. — Veja Ez 34:24, onde o Messias é mencionado como "meu servo Davi".

Jesus Cristo é apresentado como "o primogênito de toda a criação", bem como "o primogênito dentre os mortos" — não só o mais destacado em relação aos que foram criados ou ressuscitados, mas realmente o primeiro a ser criado e o primeiro a ser ressuscitado dentre os mortos para a vida infindável. (Col 1:15, 18; Re 1:5; 3:14) Na terra, ele era o primogênito de Maria, e foi apresentado no templo em harmonia com a lei de Jeová. (Lu 2:7, 22, 23) O apóstolo Paulo menciona os seguidores de Jesus Cristo que foram alistados nos céus como a "congregação dos primogênitos", os primeiros a serem aceitos por Deus como filhos à base de sua fé no sacrifício de Jesus, e os primeiros seguidores de Cristo a serem ressuscitados sem terem de morrer novamente. — He 12:23.

Em Jó 18:13, a expressão "primogênito da morte" é empregada para indicar a mais mortífera das doenças.

PRIMOGENITURA, DIREITO DE. O direito que por natureza pertencia ao primogênito varão do pai. Tanto o termo hebraico como o grego para "primogenitura" (bekho·ráh; pro·to·tó·ki·a) provêm de radicais que contêm a ideia básica de "primogênito".

Sob o sistema patriarcal, com a morte do pai, o filho varão mais velho tornava-se cabeça da família, tendo autoridade sobre os demais, enquanto permanecessem na mesma casa. Ele era responsável por cuidar dos membros da casa de seu pai. Também ocupava a posição do pai em representar a família perante Jeová. O primogênito geralmente recebia a bênção especial do pai. (Gên 27:4, 36; 48:9, 17, 18) Ademais, tinha direito a duas partes do patrimônio do pai; isto é, ele recebia o dobro do que cada um de seus irmãos recebia. Sob a Lei mosaica, o homem que tivesse mais de uma esposa não podia retirar a primogenitura do filho varão mais velho para dá-la ao filho varão da esposa especialmente amada. — De 21:15-17.

Nos tempos patriarcais, o pai podia transferir a primogenitura para outro filho por certas razões, como se deu no caso de Rubem, que perdeu seu direito de primogênito por se envolver em fornicação com a concubina de seu pai. (1Cr 5:1, 2) O primogênito podia vender sua primogenitura a um de seus irmãos, como fez Esaú, que desprezou a primogenitura e a vendeu a seu irmão, Jacó, em troca duma única refeição. (Gên 25:30-34; 27:36; He 12:16) Não existe nenhum registro de que Jacó reivindicasse sua primogenitura comprada para obter uma porção dupla dos bens de Isaque (que eram bens móveis ou pessoais, visto que Isaque não possuía nenhuma terra, exceto o campo de Macpela, em que havia uma caverna que servia de sepulcro). Jacó estava interessado em legar coisas espirituais à sua família, isto é, a promessa dada a Abraão com referência à semente. — Gên 28:3, 4, 12-15.

Com respeito aos reis de Israel, a primogenitura pelo visto trazia consigo o direito à sucessão ao trono. (2Cr 21:1-3) Todavia, Jeová, como verdadeiro Rei de Israel e seu Deus, colocava de lado tal direito quando isso convinha aos seus propósitos, como no caso de Salomão. — 1Cr 28:5.

Jesus Cristo, como "o primogênito de toda a criação", sempre fiel ao seu Pai, Jeová Deus, possui a primogenitura, por meio da qual foi designado "herdeiro de todas as coisas". — Col 1:15; He 1:2; veja HERANÇA.

PRISÃO. Lugar de confinamento para alguém que aguarda o julgamento ou para alguém que foi julgado culpado de violar a lei. Diversas expressões das línguas originais que se referem a uma prisão, ou cadeia, têm os seguintes significados: "casa da rotundidade" (Gên 39:20; veja n), "casa da cisterna" (Êx 12:29, n), "casa de detenção" (Gên 42:19; 1Rs 22:27), "casa de custódia" (Je 52:11), "casa dos prisioneiros ou dos presos" (Jz 16:21; Ec 4:14), "casa dos troncos" (2Cr 16:10), 'lugar de grilhões' (Mt 11:2), 'lugar de guarda' (Mt 14:10), e 'lugar de custódia ou de observação' (At 5:18).

Entre vários povos antigos, incluindo os egípcios, os filisteus, os assírios, os babilônios e os persas, a prisão era uma forma de punição legal. (Gên 39:20; Jz 16:25; 2Rs 17:4; Esd 7:26; Je 52:31-33) Os prisioneiros talvez fossem acorrentados e obrigados a executar trabalhos forçados, tais como moer. (Jz 16:21; 2Rs 17:4; Sal 105:17, 18; Je 52:11) No Egito, um prisioneiro de confiança (tal como José) podia ser encarregado de outros detentos e designado a servir aos que detinham posições de destaque antes do confinamento. — Gên 39:21–40:4.

As prisões remontam pelo menos ao século 18 AEC, pois foi então que José foi erroneamente confinado à cadeia que estava ligada à "casa do chefe da guarda pessoal". (Gên 39:20; 40:3; 41:10) Esta cadeia egípcia, pelo visto, tinha uma masmorra ou buraco no formato duma cisterna, onde alguns prisioneiros eram mantidos. — Gên 40:15; 41:14; compare isso com Is 24:22.

Sob a Lei mosaica não havia prisões como forma de punição. Uma vez que a justiça devia ser executada prontamente (Jos 7:20, 22-25), somente nos casos que exigiam esclarecimento divino é que lemos no Pentateuco sobre pessoas ficarem sob custódia. (Le 24:12; Núm 15:34) Com o tempo, contudo, os israelitas passaram a usar locais de encarceramento. O profeta Jeremias, por exemplo, ficou detido na "casa dos grilhões, na casa de Jeonatã". Este lugar de confinamento tinha "compartimentos abobadados", talvez masmorras. As condições ali eram tão ruins que Jeremias temia por sua vida. (Je 37:15-20) Posteriormente, ele foi transferido para o "Pátio da Guarda", onde recebia uma ração diária de pão, podia receber visitantes e pôde realizar transações comerciais. — Je 32:2, 8, 12; 37:21; veja também 1Rs 22:27; 2Cr 16:10; He 11:36.

No primeiro século EC, segundo o costume romano, os carcereiros ou guardas eram considerados pessoalmente responsáveis pelos prisioneiros. (At 12:19) Assim, o carcereiro em Filipos, crendo que seus prisioneiros haviam escapado, estava prestes a suicidar-se. (At 16:27) Por medida de segurança, muitas vezes se posicionavam guardas nas portas das prisões, e os prisioneiros podiam ter os pés presos em troncos ou as mãos acorrentadas aos que os guardavam. (At 5:23; 12:6-10; 16:22-24) Permitia-se a alguns presos receber visitas. — Mt 25:36; At 23:35; 24:23, 27; 28:16-31; veja CADEIAS (LAÇOS, VÍNCULO); CARCEREIRO.

Conforme predito por Cristo Jesus, muitos de seus seguidores sofreram encarceramento. (Lu 21:12; At 26:10; Ro 16:7; Col 4:10; He 10:34; 13:3) O apóstolo João, exilado na ilha de Patmos, escreveu que a prisão continuaria sendo uma forma de perseguição contra os cristãos. — Re 2:10.

Uso Figurado. Em sentido figurado, "prisão" pode referir-se a uma terra de exílio (como foi Babilônia), ou a uma condição de cativeiro ou confinamento espiritual. (Is 42:6, 7; 48:20; 49:5, 8, 9; 61:1; Mt 12:15-21; Lu 4:17-21; 2Co 6:1, 2) Embora as criaturas espirituais que foram desobedientes nos dias de Noé não possuam corpos físicos que possam ser contidos por restrições materiais, elas têm sido limitadas em suas atividades, e acham-se numa condição de densa escuridão com referência a Jeová Deus, como se estivessem numa prisão. (1Pe 3:19; Ju 6; veja TÁRTARO.) Também, o abismo em que Satanás será encerrado por mil anos é uma "prisão", um lugar de restrição ou confinamento semelhante à morte. — Re 20:1-3, 7.

PRISCA [Velha]; PRISCILA [Velhinha]. A forma mais curta desse nome é encontrada nos escritos de Paulo, e a forma mais longa nos de Lucas. Tal variação era comum nos nomes romanos.

Priscila era a esposa de Áquila, com o qual ela sempre é mencionada. Os dois mostraram excelentes obras cristãs e hospitalidade, não só para com pessoas, mas também para com a congregação, por realizarem as reuniões cristãs em sua casa, tanto em Roma como em Éfeso.

Devido ao decreto do Imperador Cláudio, Áquila e sua esposa deixaram Roma e foram para Corinto, por volta de 50 EC. Não muito depois da chegada deles, Paulo se juntou a eles na fabricação de tendas. (At 18:2, 3) Eles viajaram com Paulo até Éfeso, permanecendo ali por algum tempo, e contribuíram para 'expor mais corretamente o caminho de Deus' ao eloquente Apolo. (At 18:18, 19, 24-28; 1Co 16:19) Retornando a Roma por certo tempo (Ro 16:3-5), mais tarde viajaram de volta a Éfeso. (2Ti 4:19; 1Ti 1:3) Seu contato pessoal com Paulo se estendeu de cerca de 50 EC até a morte de Paulo, uns 15 anos depois, e durante tal associação eles "arriscaram os seus próprios pescoços" pela alma do apóstolo. — Ro 16:3, 4; veja ÁQUILA.

PROCÁVIA [hebr.: sha·fán]. Esta palavra hebraica é também traduzida "hírace" (JB n) e "coelho" (Al). O procávia se assemelha um tanto a um coelho grande, mas possui orelhas curtas e arredondadas, patas curtas, e praticamente não tem cauda. Seus pés são dotados de almofadas flexíveis. O procávia habita regiões rochosas, onde encontra buracos e fendas para os quais pode retirar-se ao mínimo sinal de perigo. Embora seja muito tímida por natureza, esta criatura pode infligir ferozes mordidas com seus incisivos quando encurralada num buraco. O animal é vegetariano. A variedade mencionada na Bíblia é evidentemente a conhecida por Procavia syriaca.

Alguns têm contestado sua classificação nas Escrituras como criatura que rumina, mas que não tem casco partido. (Le 11:5; De 14:7) Entretanto, o zoólogo Hubert Hendrichs, ao observar procávias no Jardim Zoológico de Hellabrunn, perto de Munique, Alemanha, notou que essas criaturas apresentavam movimentos de mastigação e de deglutição peculiares. Constatou que os procávias realmente ruminam de 25 a 50 minutos por dia, geralmente à noite. O jornal alemão Stuttgarter Zeitung, de 12 de março de 1966, comentou a descoberta: "Embora este fato fosse desconhecido da zoologia consagrada, não é novo. No capítulo onze de Levítico . . . poderá encontrá-lo."

Tem-se afirmado também que os dedos dotados de cascos do procávia são duplamente partidos.

Todavia, dificilmente se poderia dizer que as patas dianteiras do procávia, cada uma possuindo quatro dedos, que terminam em extremidades semelhantes a cascos, e que as patas traseiras, cada uma terminando em três dedos e um número correspondente de diminutos cascos ou unhas, assemelham-se à pata de um 'animal de casco partido', tal como a vaca.

As Escrituras mencionam a sabedoria instintiva desta criaturinha. Embora não seja "potente", o procávia compensa esta aparente condição indefesa por habitar em lugares rochosos inacessíveis. — Sal 104:18; Pr 30:26.

PROCISSÃO (CORTEJO) TRIUNFAL. Procissão formal em celebração da vitória sobre um inimigo. A palavra grega thri·am·beú·o, que significa "conduzir em procissão triunfal", só ocorre duas vezes nas Escrituras, cada vez num contexto ilustrativo um tanto diferente. — 2Co 2:14; Col 2:15.

Procissões Triunfais Entre as Nações. O Egito, a Assíria e outras nações comemoravam suas vitórias militares com procissões triunfais. Nos dias da república romana, uma das mais altas honras que o Senado podia conferir a um general vencedor era permitir que celebrasse a vitória com uma procissão de triunfo formal e custosa, na qual não se despercebia nenhum pormenor de pompa e glória.

A procissão romana percorria lentamente a Via Triumphalis e a serpenteante subida até o templo de Júpiter, no alto do monte Capitólio. Na frente iam os músicos, tocando e entoando canções de vitória, seguidos por moços que conduziam os animais para os sacrifícios. Depois vinham carros abertos carregados de espólios, e enormes carros alegóricos que ilustravam cenas de batalha ou a destruição de cidades e templos, e talvez com uma figura do comandante derrotado no alto. Os reis, os príncipes e os generais capturados na guerra, junto com seus filhos e assistentes, eram conduzidos em grilhões, não raro despidos, para sua humilhação e vergonha.

A seguir vinha o carro do general, decorado com marfim e ouro, adornado com louros, e puxado por quatro cavalos brancos ou, às vezes, por elefantes, leões, tigres ou veados. Os filhos do conquistador sentavam-se aos seus pés ou vinham num outro carro atrás dele. Os cônsules e magistrados romanos vinham a pé, seguidos pelos tenentes e tribunos militares, junto com o exército vitorioso — todos ornados com coroas de louro e com presentes, entoando canções de louvor a seu líder. Na vanguarda vinham os sacerdotes e seus assistentes, trazendo a principal vítima para o sacrifício, um boi branco.

À medida que o cortejo atravessava a cidade, o povo atirava flores diante do carro do vitorioso, e incenso queimado em altares do templo perfumavam o caminho. Essa agradável fragrância significava honras, promoção, riqueza e uma vida mais segura para os soldados vitoriosos, mas significava morte para os cativos não indultados, que seriam executados no fim da procissão. Isto lança luz sobre a aplicação espiritual da ilustração de Paulo em 2 Coríntios 2:14-16.

Construíram-se arcos de triunfo em homenagem a alguns generais. O Arco de Tito, em Roma, ainda comemora a queda de Jerusalém em 70 EC. (FOTO, Vol. 2, p. 536) Tito celebrou sua vitória sobre Jerusalém por meio duma procissão triunfal, acompanhado de seu pai, o Imperador Vespasiano. Alguns arcos serviam como portões de cidade, mas em geral sua função era apenas monumental. O formato dos arcos pode ter representado o jugo de submissão sob o qual os cativos eram obrigados a passar.

Os Cristãos Participam duma Procissão Triunfal. Foi de tais exemplos e do conhecimento geral daqueles tempos que Paulo extraiu sua metáfora ao escrever aos coríntios: "Graças, porém, a Deus, que sempre nos conduz numa procissão triunfal, em companhia do Cristo." (2Co 2:14-16) O quadro apresenta Paulo e concristãos como súditos devotados de Deus, "em companhia do Cristo", como filhos, oficiais de alta categoria, e soldados vitoriosos, todos no séquito de Deus e sendo conduzidos por Ele numa grandiosa procissão triunfal ao longo dum trajeto perfumado.

Em Colossenses 2:15, a situação é bem diferente. Aqui, os governos e as autoridades inimigas, sob Satanás, são descritos como os cativos e prisioneiros na procissão triunfal. A estes, Jeová, o Conquistador, desnuda e exibe em público como derrotados, aqueles que foram vencidos "por meio dela", isto é, da "estaca de tortura" mencionada no versículo anterior. A morte de Cristo na estaca de tortura não só proveu a base para a remoção do "documento manuscrito", o pacto da Lei, mas também tornou possível que os cristãos fossem libertados da escravidão aos poderes satânicos das trevas.

Outras Procissões. A Bíblia também menciona outras procissões, ou cortejos, ocasiões em que multidões se deslocavam em conjunto para celebrar eventos notáveis. Davi descreveu o cortejo vitorioso de Jeová desde o Sinai até o lugar do santo templo em Jerusalém — carros de guerra de Deus, cativos, cantores e músicos, e multidões congregadas bendizendo o Santo de Israel. (Sal 68:17, 18, 24-26) Incluiu-se um cortejo na celebra-ção inaugural por ocasião do término da reconstrução das muralhas de Jerusalém nos dias de Neemias. (Ne 12:31) E o Salmo 118:27 menciona uma "procissão festiva", evidentemente relacionada com a anual Festividade das Barracas.

PROCLAMAÇÕES SAGRADAS. Esta expressão ocorre só quatro vezes nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, e traduz a palavra grega ló·gi·on (que significa "palavrinha"), diminutivo de ló·gos ("palavra"). Originalmente, ló·gi·on significava apenas uma breve pronunciação sagrada, mas, com o tempo, veio a significar qualquer comunicação ou oráculo divinos. Certas versões em português traduzem ló·gi·on simplesmente por 'oráculo'. (Tr, VB) A tradução de Wuest emprega "pronunciações divinas", em Atos 7:38 e em Romanos 3:2.

Estêvão mencionou a Lei dada a Moisés, no monte Sinai, como "proclamações sagradas, vivas". (At 7:38) O apóstolo Paulo se referiu às inteiras Escrituras Hebraicas, e, evidentemente, também a todas as inspiradas Escrituras Cristãs escritas até aquele tempo, dizendo: "Qual é então a superioridade do judeu, ou qual é o proveito da circuncisão? Grande, de todo modo. Primeiramente, porque foram incumbidos das proclamações sagradas de Deus." (Ro 3:1, 2) Portanto, os judeus foram incumbidos da escrita deste conjunto das Escrituras inspiradas, escrevendo eles "conforme eram movidos por espírito santo". — 2Pe 1:20, 21.

Na carta aos hebreus, o apóstolo Paulo inclui como "proclamações sagradas" os ensinos proferidos à humanidade pelo Senhor Jesus Cristo, por seus apóstolos e pelos demais inspirados escritores cristãos. (He 5:12; compare isso com He 6:1, 2.) Pedro também reflete este sentido amplo ao falar aos seguidores de Cristo, em 1 Pedro 4:11: "Se alguém falar, fale como que as proclamações sagradas de Deus." Ele também classifica os escritos do apóstolo Paulo como tendo autoridade igual à do "resto das Escrituras". — 2Pe 3:15, 16.

A Septuaginta grega emprega com frequência a palavra ló·gi·on, como ao traduzir o Salmo 12:6 (11:6, LXX): "As declarações de Jeová são declarações puras." A tradução da Septuaginta para o inglês, feita por Bagster, reza neste versículo: "Os oráculos do Senhor são oráculos puros."

PROCÔNSUL. Principal administrador local duma província sob supervisão do Senado romano.

Em 27 AEC, o Imperador Augusto, de Roma, assumiu o controle de todas as províncias que exigiam a presença de forças militares, deixando dez outras como províncias senatoriais. A administração destas últimas era realizada por meio de procônsules. Os procônsules pertenciam a duas classes: ex-cônsules (aqueles que já haviam alcançado a categoria de cônsul), que eram enviados às províncias da Ásia e da África (onde se mantinha uma força legionária), e ex-pretores, enviados às outras províncias senatoriais.

A responsabilidade do procônsul era dirigir os assuntos civis da província, fazer decisões judiciais, e manter a lei e a ordem. Sua jurisdição era suprema na província, embora suas ações estivessem sujeitas a serem analisadas pelo senado romano. A arrecadação dos impostos ficava a cargo dum quaestor (questor). O procônsul não trajava vestimenta militar, nem portava espada.

O procônsul Sérgio Paulo é mencionado em Atos 13:7, 12, como tendo-se tornado cristão. Ele era o procônsul de Chipre. Em Atos 18:12, Gálio é mencionado como procônsul da província da Acaia. Lucas é exato ao empregar o termo "procônsul" nesses casos, pois a Acaia foi província senatorial de 27 AEC a 15 EC, e novamente após 44 EC; e Chipre tornou-se província senatorial em 22 AEC. Encontrou-se uma moeda de Chipre com a efígie e o título de Cláudio (em latim) no anverso, e, no reverso, "Sob Cominius Proclus, Procônsul dos Cipriotas" (em grego).

PRÓCORO [possivelmente dum radical gr. que significa "ir (ou dançar) diante dum coro"]. Um dos sete homens acreditados, cheios de espírito e sabedoria, designados para garantir um tratamento equitativo na distribuição diária de alimentos na congregação cristã em Jerusalém, no primeiro século. — At 6:1-6.

PROFECIA. Mensagem inspirada; revelação da vontade e do propósito divinos, ou a proclamação destes. A profecia pode ser um ensinamento moral inspirado, a expressão duma ordem ou dum julgamento divino, ou a declaração de algo por vir. Predição ou prenúncio não é a ideia básica transmitida pelas raízes verbais nas línguas originais (hebr.: na·vá'; gr.: pro·fe·teú·o); contudo, constitui um aspecto notável das profecias bíblicas. — Veja PROFETA.

Os seguintes exemplos ilustram o sentido das palavras originais: Quando se disse a Ezequiel, numa visão, que 'profetizasse ao vento', ele simplesmente expressou a ordem de Deus ao vento. (Ez 37:9, 10) Quando certas pessoas, no julgamento de Jesus, o cobriram, o esmurraram e então disseram: "Profetiza-nos, ó Cristo. Quem te golpeou?" eles não estavam solicitando uma predição, mas sim que Jesus identificasse os golpeadores por revelação divina. (Mt 26:67, 68; Lu 22:63, 64) A mulher samaritana junto ao poço reconheceu Jesus como "profeta", porque ele revelara coisas sobre o passado dela das quais não poderia ter conhecimento, exceto por poder divino. (Jo 4:17-19; compare isso com Lu 7:39.) Da mesma forma, trechos bíblicos tais como o Sermão do Monte, de Jesus, e a denúncia que Ele fez dos escribas e fariseus (Mt 23:1-36) podem ser definidos apropriadamente como profecia, pois eram uma 'expressão' inspirada do pensamento de Deus sobre os assuntos, assim como as proclamações feitas por Isaías, Jeremias e outros profetas anteriores. — Veja Is 65:13-16 e Lu 6:20-25.

Em toda a Bíblia há, naturalmente, muitíssimos exemplos de prenúncios ou predições, alguns dos primeiros exemplos sendo encontrados em Gênesis 3:14-19; 9:24-27; 27:27-40; 49:1-28; Deuteronômio 18:15-19.

A Fonte de toda profecia verdadeira é Jeová Deus. Ele a transmite por meio do seu espírito santo, ou, ocasionalmente, mediante mensageiros angélicos orientados pelo espírito. (2Pe 1:20, 21; He 2:1, 2) As profecias hebraicas frequentemente iniciam com: "Ouvi a palavra de Jeová" (Is 1:10; Je 2:4), e com a expressão "a palavra" não raro se tem presente uma mensagem inspirada, ou profecia. — Is 44:26; Je 21:1; Ez 33:30-33; compare isso com Is 24:3.

Em que sentido 'dar testemunho de Jesus inspira o profetizar'?

Na visão do apóstolo João, um anjo lhe disse que "dar-se testemunho de Jesus é o que inspira o [literalmente: "é o espírito do"] profetizar". (Re 19:10) O apóstolo Paulo chama a Cristo de o "segredo sagrado de Deus", e diz que "cuidadosamente ocultos nele se acham todos os tesouros da sabedoria e do conhecimento". (Col 2:2, 3) Isto se dá porque Jeová Deus designou a seu Filho o papel-chave no cumprimento do grandioso propósito de Deus de santificar Seu nome e restaurar a terra e seus habitantes ao devido lugar no Seu arranjo de coisas, fazendo isto por meio de "uma administração no pleno limite dos tempos designados, a saber, ajuntar novamente todas as coisas no Cristo, as coisas nos céus e as coisas na terra". (Ef 1:9, 10; compare isso com 1Co 15:24, 25.) Uma vez que o cumprimento do grande propósito de Deus acha-se todo vinculado a Jesus (veja Col 1:19, 20), então toda profecia, isto é, todas as mensagens inspiradas de Deus proclamadas por Seus servos, apontavam para o Filho dele. Assim, como declara Revelação (Apocalipse) 19:10, o inteiro "espírito" (toda a inclinação, toda a intenção e todo o propósito) da profecia era dar testemunho de Jesus, aquele a quem Jeová tornaria "o caminho, e a verdade, e a vida". (Jo 14:6) Isto seria veraz não só no caso das profecias que precederam o ministério terrestre de Jesus, mas também no caso das profecias posteriores a este. — At 2:16-36.

Na própria época da rebelião surgida no Éden, Jeová Deus iniciou este "testemunho de Jesus", por meio de Sua profecia referente ao "descendente [literalmente: semente]" que por fim 'esmagaria a cabeça da serpente', o Adversário de Deus. (Gên 3:15) O pacto abraâmico era profético dessa Semente, da bênção que esta representaria para todas as famílias da terra, e de sua vitória sobre o Adversário e a 'semente' dele. (Gên 22:16-18; compare isso com Gál 3:16.) Foi predito que a Semente prometida, chamada "Siló" (que significa "Aquele de Quem É; Aquele a Quem Pertence") viria da tribo de Judá. (Gên 49:10) Por meio da nação de Israel, Jeová revelou seu propósito de ter um "reino de sacerdotes e uma nação santa". (Êx 19:6; compare isso com 1Pe 2:9, 10.) Os sacrifícios e a Lei dada a Israel prefiguravam o sacrifício do Filho de Deus, e o sacerdócio representava seu sacerdócio real celestial (com sacerdotes associados) durante o Reinado Milenar. (He 9:23, 24; 10:1; Re 5:9, 10; 20:6) Por conseguinte, a Lei tornou-se um "tutor, conduzindo a Cristo". — Gál 3:23, 24.

Sobre os eventos que marcaram a história da nação de Israel, o apóstolo diz: "Ora, estas coisas lhes aconteciam como exemplos [ou: "em sentido típico"] e foram escritas como aviso para nós [seguidores de Cristo Jesus], para quem já chegaram os fins dos sistemas de coisas." (1Co 10:11) Davi, o rei mais destacado daquela nação, tornou-se figura profética do Filho de Deus, e Jesus Cristo herdou o pacto que Deus fez com Davi para um reino eterno. (Is 9:6, 7; Ez 34:23, 24; Lu 1:32; At 13:32-37; Re 22:16) As diversas batalhas travadas por reis fiéis (em geral orientados e incentivados pelos profetas de Deus) prefiguraram a guerra a ser travada pelo Filho de Deus contra os inimigos do seu Reino, e as vitórias que Deus concedeu a eles prefiguraram assim a vitória de Cristo sobre todas as forças de Satanás, resultando em libertação para o povo de Deus. — Sal 110:1-5; Miq 5:2-6; At 4:24-28; Re 16:14, 16; 19:11-21.

Muitas das profecias durante este período descreviam o reinado do Ungido (Messias, ou Cristo) de Deus e as bênçãos de seu governo. Outras profecias messiânicas apontavam para a perseguição contra o Servo de Deus e os sofrimentos dele. (Veja Is 11:1-10; 53:1-12; At 8:29-35.) Como declara o apóstolo Pedro, mesmo os antigos profetas persistiram em 'investigar que época específica ou que sorte de época o espírito neles indicava a respeito de Cristo [Messias], quando de antemão dava testemunho dos sofrimentos por Cristo e das glórias que os seguiriam'. Foi-lhes revelado que estas coisas haviam de ter um cumprimento futuro, à frente de seu próprio tempo. — 1Pe 1:10-12; compare isso com Da 9:24-27; 12:1-10.

Visto que Cristo Jesus é Aquele em quem todas estas profecias se realizam, tornando todas elas verídicas, pode-se ver como 'a verdade veio por intermédio de Jesus Cristo'. "Pois, não importa quantas sejam as promessas de Deus, elas se tornaram Sim por meio dele." (Jo 1:17; 2Co 1:20; compare isso com Lu 18:31; 24:25, 26, 44-46.) Pedro podia corretamente dizer sobre Jesus, que 'todos os profetas dão testemunho dele'. — At 3:20-24; 10:43; compare isso com 28:23.

Propósito e Época do Cumprimento. A profecia, quer uma predição, quer simplesmente uma instrução ou repreensão inspirada, servia para o benefício tanto daqueles que inicialmente a ouviam como daqueles que, em todos os períodos futuros, depositariam fé nas promessas de Deus. Para os que originalmente as recebiam, as profecias lhes asseguravam que a passagem dos anos ou dos séculos não tinha feito Deus vacilar em seu propósito, que Ele se apegava firmemente a seus termos e promessas pactuados. (Veja Sal 77:5-9; Is 44:21; 49:14-16; Je 50:5.) A profecia de Daniel, por exemplo, fornecia informações que constituíam um elo de inestimável valor entre o término da escrita das Escrituras Hebraicas, ou pré-cristãs, e a vinda do Messias. Sua previsão dos eventos mundiais, incluindo a ascensão e a queda de sucessivas potências mundiais, forneceu garantia aos judeus que viviam durante os séculos de dominação persa, grega e romana (bem como aos cristãos depois disso) de que não havia nenhum "ponto cego" na antevisão de Deus, de que os próprios tempos deles já tinham deveras sido previstos e de que o propósito soberano de Jeová ainda teria um cumprimento seguro. Protegia-os contra depositarem fé e esperança em regimes mundanos passageiros, com seu transitório poder de controle, e habilitava aqueles fiéis a conduzir suas ações com sabedoria. — Veja Da 8:20-26; 11:1-20.

O cumprimento de muitas profecias em seu próprio tempo servia para convencer os sinceros do poder de Deus de executar Seu propósito, apesar de toda e qualquer oposição. Era prova de sua ímpar Divindade poder Ele, e somente Ele, predizer tais eventos e fazê-los cumprir-se. (Is 41:21-26; 46:9-11) Estas profecias também os habilitavam a ficar mais familiarizados com Deus, entendendo mais claramente a Sua vontade e as normas morais pelas quais Ele se pauta ao agir e julgar, de modo que pudessem harmonizar sua vida com estas. — Is 1:18-20; 55:8-11.

Grande número de profecias teve sua aplicação ou seu cumprimento inicial no povo contemporâneo, muitas profecias expressando o julgamento de Deus sobre o Israel carnal e as nações circunvizinhas, e predizendo a derrubada e o subsequente restabelecimento de Israel e Judá. Todavia, essas profecias não perderam seu valor para as gerações posteriores, como para a congregação cristã, quer no primeiro século EC, quer na época atual. O apóstolo diz: "Porque todas as coisas escritas outrora foram escritas para a nossa instrução, para que, por intermédio da nossa perseverança e por intermédio do consolo das Escrituras, tivéssemos esperança." (Ro 15:4) Visto que Deus é imutável em suas normas morais e em seu propósito (Mal 3:6; He 6:17, 18), seus modos de lidar com Israel elucidaram como ele lidará com situações similares em qualquer dada época. Assim, Jesus e seus discípulos estavam justificados em empregar declarações proféticas que se aplicaram séculos antes como sendo também aplicáveis aos seus dias. (Mt 15:7, 8; At 28:25-27) Outras profecias eram claramente de predição, algumas se relacionando de forma específica e ímpar com o ministério terrestre de Jesus e eventos subsequentes. (Is 53; Da 9:24-27) Para os que viviam na época do aparecimento do Messias, as profecias forneciam os meios para identificá-lo e autenticar a comissão e a mensagem dele como genuínas. — Veja MESSIAS.

Depois de Jesus partir da terra, as Escrituras Hebraicas e as profecias destas suplementaram os ensinos de Jesus em fornecer vitais informações de fundo com as quais os seguidores cristãos podiam confrontar os eventos que se seguiram, ver como se encaixavam, e aprender o significado e o sentido de tais eventos. Isto dava validez e força à pregação e ao ensino deles, bem como confiança e coragem ao enfrentarem oposição. (At 2:14-36; 3:12-26; 4:7-12, 24-30; 7:48-50; 13:40, 41, 47) Eles encontraram nas anteriores revelações inspiradas um grande conjunto de instruções morais que podiam usar para "ensinar, para repreender, para endireitar as coisas, para disciplinar em justiça". (2Ti 3:16, 17; Ro 9:6-33; 1Co 9:8-10; 10:1-22) Pedro, que havia obtido a confirmação das profecias por meio da visão da transfiguração, disse: "Por conseguinte, temos a palavra profética tanto mais assegurada; e fazeis bem em prestar atenção a ela como a uma lâmpada que brilha em lugar escuro." (2Pe 1:16-19; Mt 16:28–17:9) Assim, as profecias pré-cristãs suplementavam as instruções de Jesus e eram o meio de Deus para guiar a congregação cristã em decisões importantes, como a que tinha que ver com os crentes gentios. — At 15:12-21; Ro 15:7-12.

As profecias também serviam para advertir, avisando quando se fazia necessária alguma ação urgente. Um poderoso exemplo é o aviso de Jesus sobre a vindoura destruição de Jerusalém e a situação que marcaria o tempo para seus seguidores fugirem dela para um lugar de segurança. (Lu 19:41-44; 21:7-21) Avisos proféticos similares se aplicam à presença de Cristo. — Veja Mt 24:36-42.

Mediante o derramamento do espírito santo em Pentecostes, concederam-se aos cristãos dons milagrosos tais como o de profetizar e a habilidade de falar em línguas que não haviam estudado. Em alguns casos (mas não necessariamente em todos), o dom de profetizar produziu predições, como as feitas por Ágabo (At 11:27, 28; 21:8-11), habilitando a congregação cristã, ou membros dela, a preparar-se para certas emergências ou provações. As cartas canônicas dos apóstolos e dos discípulos também contêm previsões inspiradas do futuro; estas avisavam da vindoura apostasia, indicando a forma que esta assumiria, avisavam do julgamento de Deus e da futura execução desse julgamento, e revelavam verdades doutrinais não entendidas antes, ou ampliavam e esclareciam as já fornecidas. (At 20:29, 30; 1Co 15:22-28, 51-57; 1Te 4:15-18; 2Te 2:3-12; 1Ti 4:1-3; 2Ti 3:1-13; 4:3, 4; compare isso com Ju 17-21.) O livro de Revelação está repleto de informações proféticas que habilitam as pessoas a serem avisadas, de modo a poderem discernir "os sinais dos tempos" (Mt 16:3) e tomar medidas urgentes. — Re 1:1-3; 6:1-17; 12:7-17; 13:11-18; 17:1-12; 18:1-8.

Entretanto, na primeira carta de Paulo aos coríntios, ele mostra que os dons milagrosos, inclusive o de profecia inspirada, seriam eliminados. (1Co 13:2, 8-10) A evidência mostra que, com a morte dos apóstolos, esses dons cessaram de ser transmitidos e depois desapareceram do cenário cristão, tendo servido ao seu objetivo. A essa altura, naturalmente, o cânon da Bíblia já estava completo.

As ilustrações, ou parábolas, de Jesus eram similares em forma a algumas das pronunciações alegóricas de profetas anteriores. (Veja Ez 17:1-18; 19:1-14; Mt 7:24-27; 21:33-44.) Quase todas tiveram algum cumprimento naquela época. Algumas basicamente delineavam princípios morais. (Mt 18:21-35; Lu 18:9-14) Outras continham aspectos ligados ao tempo, que se estenderiam até a presença de Jesus e a "terminação do sistema de coisas". — Mt 13:24-30, 36-43; 25:1-46.

Cumprimentos múltiplos. O uso de profecias, por parte de Jesus e de seus discípulos, mostra que uma profecia de predição pode ter mais de um cumprimento, como no caso em que Paulo se referiu à profecia de Habacuque, originalmente cumprida na desolação que Babilônia infligiu a Judá, e a aplicou aos seus dias. (Hab 1:5, 6; At 13:40, 41) Jesus mostrou que a profecia de Daniel, a respeito da "coisa repugnante que causa desolação", havia de ter cumprimento na geração que então vivia; contudo, a profecia de Daniel também vincula a "coisa repugnante" que causa desolação com o "tempo do fim". (Da 9:27; 11:31-35; Mt 24:15, 16) A evidência bíblica mostra que quando Miguel 'põe-se de pé', isto significa que Jesus Cristo, na qualidade de rei, toma medidas a favor dos servos de Jeová. (Da 12:1; veja MIGUEL.) A profecia do próprio Jesus sobre a terminação do sistema de coisas igualmente inclui a menção de sua vinda no poder do Reino, o que não ocorreu no primeiro século EC. (Mt 24:29, 30; Lu 21:25-32) Isto indica um cumprimento duplo. Consequentemente, ao considerar o assunto do cumprimento duplo das profecias, a Cyclopædia (Ciclopédia) de M'Clintock e Strong (1894, Vol. VIII, p. 635) comenta: "Este conceito do cumprimento da profecia parece necessário para a explanação da predição feita pelo nosso Senhor no Monte, que se relaciona a um só tempo com a queda de Jerusalém e com o fim da dispensação cristã."

Formas de Profecia. Além das declarações diretas proferidas por meio de seus profetas (talvez acompanhadas de atos simbólicos [1Rs 11:29-31] ou em forma alegórica), Jeová empregou outras formas. Personagens proféticos prefiguraram o Messias, Cristo Jesus. Além de Davi, já mencionado, estes incluíam o rei-sacerdote Melquisedeque (He 7:15-17), o profeta Moisés (At 3:20-22), e outros. Deve-se observar que, com respeito aos personagens proféticos, a pessoa não deve ser encarada como típica ou profética em todo aspecto. Assim, os três dias que Jonas passou no ventre do grande peixe prefiguraram o tempo que Jesus passou no Seol; mas a relutância de Jonas em aceitar sua designação e outros aspectos não prefiguraram o proceder do Filho de Deus. Jesus falou de si mesmo como "algo maior do que Salomão", pois a sabedoria de Jesus e a paz de seu governo do Reino são semelhantes às de Salomão, porém superiores. Entretanto, Jesus não se torna espiritualmente transgressor como Salomão se tornou. — Mt 12:39-42.

Dramas proféticos também foram usados por Deus, registrando-se pormenores da vida de pessoas e de nações como padrão de eventos futuros no desenrolar do propósito de Jeová. Paulo menciona um "drama simbólico" assim, que envolvia os dois filhos de Abraão, com Sara e com a escrava Agar. Mostra que as duas mulheres "significam" duas relações pactuadas. Elas não tipificavam, ou representavam, pessoalmente tais pactos. Mas, no drama profético, aquelas duas mulheres correspondiam a mulheres simbólicas que produziram filhos sob aqueles pactos. Assim, Agar correspondia à Jerusalém terrestre, que deixou de aceitar o Libertador para o qual apontava o pacto da Lei, e que se agarrou a essa Lei mesmo depois de Deus ter posto fim a ela; a Jerusalém terrestre e seus filhos estavam assim em escravidão à Lei. Por outro lado, Sara, a mulher livre, correspondia à "Jerusalém de cima", a parte celestial da organização de Deus comparável a uma esposa, a qual produz filhos em harmonia com o que foi predito no pacto abraâmico. (Gál 4:21-31; compare isso com Jo 8:31-36.) O Dilúvio dos dias de Noé e as condições que o precederam eram proféticos das condições por ocasião da futura presença de Cristo e do resultado para os que rejeitam o modo de agir de Deus. — Mt 24:36-39; compare isso com 1Co 10:1-11.

Lugares foram usados de forma profética, a cidade de Jerusalém, no monte Sião, sendo às vezes empregada para representar uma organização celestial que é a "mãe" dos cristãos ungidos com espírito. (Gál 4:26) A "Nova Jerusalém" simboliza a "noiva" celestial de Cristo, constituída dos membros da glorificada congregação cristã. (Re 21:2, 9-14; compare isso com Ef 5:23-27, 32, 33; Re 14:1-4.) Entretanto, Jerusalém, devido à geral infidelidade de seus habitantes, pode também ser utilizada de modo desfavorável. (Gál 4:25; compare isso com Ez 16:1-3, 8-15; veja JERUSALÉM [Importância da Cidade].) Outros lugares obviamente utilizados com significado profético são Sodoma, Egito, Megido, Babilônia e o Vale de Hinom, ou Geena. — Re 11:8; 16:16; 18:2; Mt 23:33.

Um modelo profético, envolvendo objetos e procedimentos, é encontrado no caso do tabernáculo. O apóstolo mostra que os equipamentos, as funções e os sacrifícios constituíam um modelo de realidades celestiais, uma 'representação típica e sombra das coisas celestiais'. — He 8:5; 9:23, 24.

Pôr à Prova a Profecia e Sua Interpretação. Em vista da atividade dos falsos profetas, João advertiu contra acreditar em toda "expressão inspirada", que é basicamente o que são as profecias. Antes, ele admoestou os cristãos a 'provar as expressões inspiradas, para ver se se originam de Deus'. (1Jo 4:1) João cita uma doutrina como meio de se determinar a origem divina da expressão inspirada, a saber, Cristo ter vindo na carne. Obviamente, porém, ele não estava dizendo que este era o único critério, mas, evidentemente, o citava qual exemplo de algo que naquele tempo, talvez de forma predominante, era questionado. (1Jo 4:2, 3) Um fator vital é a harmonia da profecia com a palavra e a vontade reveladas de Deus (De 13:1-5; 18:20-22), e tal harmonia não pode ser parcial, mas tem de ser completa, para que a profecia ou a interpretação duma profecia seja correta. (Veja PROFETA [Como Distinguir os Verdadeiros dos Falsos].) Na congregação cristã do primeiro século, foi concedido a alguns o dom de "discernimento de pronunciações inspiradas" (1Co 12:10), tornando possível autenticar profecias como genuínas. Embora esta capacidade milagrosa também cessasse, é razoável que Deus ainda tornasse disponível o correto entendimento das profecias por meio da congregação, em especial no predito "tempo do fim", não milagrosamente, mas em resultado de diligente investigação, estudo e comparação das profecias com circunstâncias e eventos que sucedem. — Veja Da 12:4, 9, 10; Mt 24:15, 16; 1Co 2:12-14; 1Jo 4:6; veja INTERPRETAÇÃO.

PROFETA. Alguém por meio de quem se dá a conhecer a vontade e o propósito divinos. (Lu 1:70; At 3:18-21) Embora a etimologia do termo hebraico para profeta (na·ví') seja incerta, o emprego desse termo distintivo mostra que os profetas verdadeiros não eram anunciadores comuns, mas eram porta-vozes de Deus, 'homens de Deus' com mensagens inspiradas. (1Rs 12:22; 2Rs 4:9; 23:17) Eles se achavam no "grupo íntimo" de Deus, e Ele lhes revelava seu "assunto confidencial". — Je 23:18; Am 3:7; 1Rs 17:1; veja VIDENTE.

A palavra grega pro·fé·tes significa literalmente "proclamador [gr.: pro, "antes" ou "ante", e fe·mí, "dizer" ou "clamar"]", e assim descreve um anunciador, alguém que torna conhecidas mensagens atribuídas a uma fonte divina. (Veja Tit 1:12.) Embora isso inclua a ideia de alguém que prediz o futuro, o significado fundamental da palavra não é o de predição. (Veja Jz 6:7-10.) Todavia, viver em harmonia com a vontade de Deus exige que a pessoa conheça quais são os propósitos revelados de Jeová para o futuro, de modo a poder harmonizar seu comportamento, seus desejos e seus objetivos com a vontade divina. Assim, na grande maioria dos casos, os profetas bíblicos deveras transmitiram mensagens que estavam direta ou indiretamente relacionadas com o futuro.

O Cargo de Profeta nas Escrituras Hebraicas. O primeiro porta-voz humano de Deus foi obviamente Adão, que inicialmente transmitiu as instruções de Deus a Eva, sua esposa, e, nesse respeito, cumpriu o papel de profeta. Essas instruções tinham que ver não só com o presente (para eles), mas também com o futuro, delineando o propósito de Deus para a terra e a humanidade, e o proceder que os humanos precisam seguir para usufruir um futuro abençoado. (Gên 1:26-30; 2:15-17, 23, 24; 3:1-3) O primeiro profeta humano fiel mencionado foi Enoque, e sua mensagem deveras continha uma predição direta. (Ju 14, 15) Tanto Lameque como seu filho, Noé, proclamaram revelações inspiradas do propósito e da vontade de Deus. — Gên 5:28, 29; 9:24-27; 2Pe 2:5.

A própria palavra na·ví' é aplicada pela primeira vez a Abraão. (Gên 20:7) Abraão não se notabilizou por predizer o futuro, certamente não de modo público. Todavia, Deus lhe dera uma mensagem, uma promessa profética. Abraão deve ter-se sentido agitado, impelido a 'proclamar' isto, especialmente à sua família, explicando por que ele estava partindo de Ur e qual era a promessa que Deus lhe fizera. (Gên 12:1-3; 13:14-17; 22:15-18) De modo similar, Isaque e Jacó, os herdeiros da promessa, foram "profetas" que tinham íntima comunicação com Deus. (Sal 105:9-15) Além disso, proferiram bênçãos proféticas a seus filhos. (Gên 27:27-29, 39, 40; 49:1-28) Com exceção de Jó e de Eliú, que foram evidentemente utilizados por Deus antes do Êxodo para revelar verdades divinas, todos os verdadeiros profetas foram, depois disso, suscitados dentre os descendentes de Jacó (os israelitas) até o primeiro século da Era Comum.

Com Moisés, o papel de profeta fica mais definido. A posição do profeta como porta-voz de Deus é salientada pela designação de Arão, da parte de Jeová, como "profeta" ou "boca" de Moisés, ao passo que Moisés 'servia de Deus para Arão'. (Êx 4:16; 7:1, 2) Moisés predisse muitos eventos que logo tiveram cumprimento, tais como as Dez Pragas. No entanto, serviu de forma ainda mais impressionante como profeta ou porta-voz de Deus ao transmitir o pacto da Lei no Sinai, e ao instruir a nação sobre a vontade de Deus. Embora o pacto da Lei fosse de imenso valor imediato para os israelitas, como código e guia moral, este também apontava para o futuro e para 'coisas melhores por vir'. (Gál 3:23-25; He 8:6; 9:23, 24; 10:1) A comunicação íntima, muitas vezes em diálogo, de Moisés com Jeová Deus, e ser Moisés usado para transmitir o entendimento grandemente ampliado da vontade e do propósito Dele tornaram notável a sua posição como profeta. (Êx 6:2-8; De 34:10) O irmão e a irmã dele, Arão e Miriã, também prestaram serviço profético no sentido de serem usados para transmitir mensagens ou conselhos divinos (embora não fossem necessariamente predições), assim como o fizeram 70 anciãos daquela nação. — Êx 15:20; Núm 11:25; 12:1-8.

Além do homem anônimo de Juízes 6:8, a única pessoa especificamente mencionada no livro de Juízes, como prestando serviço profético, é Débora, a profetisa. (Jz 4:4-7; 5:7) No entanto, a ausência do termo na·ví' não significa, em si, que outros não tenham servido nesta qualidade. Por volta do tempo de Samuel, "a palavra da parte de Jeová havia ficado rara . . .; não se divulgava visão". Desde pequeno, Samuel serviu como porta-voz de Deus, e o cumprimento das mensagens divinas fez com que todos o reconhecessem como alguém "acreditado para a posição de profeta de Jeová". — 1Sa 3:1-14, 18-21.

Com o estabelecimento da monarquia, surge uma série quase contínua de profetas. (Veja At 3:24.) Gade começou a profetizar antes da morte de Samuel. (1Sa 22:5; 25:1) E ele e o profeta Natã se destacaram durante o reinado de Davi. (2Sa 7:2-17; 12:7-15; 24:11-14, 18) Como fizeram outros profetas mais tarde, eles serviram como conselheiros e historiadores régios. (1Cr 29:29; 2Cr 9:29; 29:25; 12:15; 25:15, 16) O próprio Davi foi usado para proferir certas revelações divinas, e o apóstolo Pedro o chama de "profeta". (At 2:25-31, 34) O reino dividido presenciou a atividade de profetas fiéis nos reinos setentrional e meridional. Alguns foram usados para profetizar aos líderes e ao povo de ambos os reinos. Entre os profetas do tempo do exílio e do pós-exílio figuram Daniel, Ageu, Zacarias e Malaquias.

Os profetas desempenharam um papel vital na preservação da adoração verdadeira. A atividade deles servia como freio para os reis de Israel e de Judá, pois repreendiam destemidamente os reis que erravam (2Sa 12:1-12) e declaravam os julgamentos de Deus contra aqueles que praticavam iniquidade. (1Rs 14:1-16; 16:1-7, 12) Quando o sacerdócio se desviava e sofria corrupção, os profetas eram o meio usado por Jeová para fortalecer a fé dum restante justo e para indicar o caminho de retorno ao favor de Deus para aqueles que se haviam desviado. Iguais a Moisés, os profetas, em muitas ocasiões, atuavam quais intercessores, orando a Deus em favor do rei e do povo. (De 9:18-29; 1Rs 13:6; 2Rs 19:1-4; compare isso com Je 7:16; 14:11, 12.) Estavam especialmente ativos em tempos de crise ou de grande necessidade. Apresentavam esperança para o futuro, visto que às vezes suas mensagens prediziam as bênçãos do governo do Messias. Desta forma, traziam benefícios não só para os que então viviam, mas também para as gerações futuras, até os nossos dias. (1Pe 1:10-12) Todavia, ao fazerem isto, suportavam grandes vitupérios, zombarias e até mesmo maus-tratos físicos. (2Cr 36:15, 16; Je 7:25, 26; He 11:32-38) No entanto, os que os recebiam favoravelmente eram abençoados com benefícios espirituais e outros. — 1Rs 17:8-24; 2Rs 4:8-37; compare isso com Mt 10:41.

Como Eram Designados e Inspirados. O cargo de profeta não era recebido em virtude duma linhagem; entretanto, vários profetas eram levitas, tais como Samuel, Zacarias, filho de Jeoiada, Jeremias e Ezequiel, e alguns dos descendentes dos profetas também se tornaram profetas. (1Rs 16:7; 2Cr 16:7) Tampouco era uma profissão em que alguém podia ingressar por iniciativa própria. Os profetas eram escolhidos por Deus e designados por meio do espírito santo (Núm 11:24-29; Ez 1:1-3; Am 7:14, 15), mediante o qual também ficavam sabendo o que deviam proclamar. (At 28:25; 2Pe 1:21) Alguns mostraram de início grande relutância. (Êx 3:11; 4:10-17; Je 1:4-10) No caso de Eliseu, este recebeu a designação divina por meio de seu predecessor, Elias, sendo simbolizada por Elias lançar seu manto ou traje oficial sobre Eliseu. — 1Rs 19:19-21.

Embora designados pelo espírito de Jeová, os profetas, pelo visto, não falavam continuamente sob inspiração. Antes, o espírito de Deus 'vinha a estar sobre eles' em certas ocasiões, revelando as mensagens a serem anunciadas. (Ez 11:4, 5; Miq 3:8) Isto exercia um efeito estimulante sobre eles, impelindo-os a falar. (1Sa 10:10; Je 20:9; Am 3:8) Eles não só faziam coisas fora do comum, mas também sua expressão e seus modos de agir sem dúvida refletiam intensidade e sentimentos realmente extraordinários. Isto talvez explique, em parte, o que se queria dizer ao mencionar que certas pessoas 'se comportavam como profetas'. (1Sa 10:6-11; 19:20-24; Je 29:24-32; compare isso com At 2:4, 12-17; 6:15; 7:55.) A total concentração e o destemor zeloso em sua missão poderiam fazer com que o comportamento deles parecesse estranho, até mesmo irracional, aos olhos de outros, assim como certo profeta aparentou ser aos chefes militares quando Jeú foi ungido. Todavia, ao compreenderem que tal homem era profeta, os chefes aceitaram sua mensagem com toda a seriedade. (2Rs 9:1-13; compare isso com At 26:24, 25.) Quando Saul, em perseguição a Davi, foi induzido a 'comportar-se como profeta', tirou suas roupas e ficou deitado "nu todo aquele dia e toda aquela noite", oportunidade em que Davi evidentemente escapou. (1Sa 19:18–20:1) Isto não significa que os profetas andavam frequentemente nus, pois o registro bíblico revela o contrário. Nos outros dois casos registrados, o profeta ficou nu com um objetivo, para representar uma faceta de sua profecia. (Is 20:2-4; Miq 1:8-11) O motivo da nudez de Saul — quer para revelá-lo como simples homem, despido de suas vestes reais, impotente contra a autoridade e o poder reais do próprio Jeová, quer para outro propósito — não é declarado.

Jeová empregou vários métodos para inspirar os profetas: comunicação verbal através de anjos (Êx 3:2-4; compare isso com Lu 1:11-17; He 1:1, 2; 2:1, 2), visões que incutiram fortemente a mensagem de Deus na mente consciente (Is 1:1; Hab 1:1), sonhos ou visões à noite dadas enquanto o profeta dormia (Da 7:1), e mensagens transmitidas enquanto a pessoa estava em transe (At 10:10, 11; 22:17-21). Ocasionalmente, a música talvez contribuísse para o profeta receber a comunicação divina. (1Sa 10:5; 2Rs 3:15) De modo similar, a proclamação da mensagem inspirada se dava de diversas maneiras. (He 1:1) Em geral, o profeta expressava-a tanto em lugares públicos como em regiões esparsamente habitadas. (Je 7:1, 2; 36:4-13; Mt 3:3) Mas ele talvez dramatizasse a mensagem mediante o uso de símbolos ou de atos simbólicos, como quando Ezequiel representou o sítio de Jerusalém por usar um tijolo, ou no casamento de Oseias com Gômer. — Ez 4:1-3; Os 1:2, 3; compare isso com 1Rs 11:30-39; 2Rs 13:14-19; Je 19:1, 10, 11; veja INSPIRAÇÃO; SONHO; VISÃO.

Como Distinguir os Verdadeiros dos Falsos. Em alguns casos, tais como os de Moisés, Elias, Eliseu e Jesus, os profetas de Deus realizaram obras milagrosas que atestavam a genuinidade de sua mensagem e de seu cargo. Entretanto, não há registro de que todos realizassem obras poderosas assim. Os três elementos essenciais para se confirmar as credenciais do profeta verdadeiro, conforme fornecidos por Moisés, eram: o profeta verdadeiro falaria em nome de Jeová; as coisas preditas ocorreriam (De 18:20-22); e seu profetizar tinha de promover a adoração verdadeira, estando em harmonia com a palavra e os mandamentos revelados de Deus (De 13:1-4). O último requisito era provavelmente o mais vital e decisivo, pois a pessoa poderia utilizar de modo hipócrita o nome de Deus, e, por coincidência, sua predição poderia cumprir-se. Mas o profeta verdadeiro não era única ou mesmo primariamente um prognosticador, conforme já mostrado. Antes, era um defensor da justiça, e sua mensagem tratava primariamente de normas morais e de sua aplicação. Ele expressava os pensamentos de Deus sobre os assuntos. (Is 1:10-20; Miq 6:1-12) Por isso, não era necessário esperar talvez anos ou gerações para se determinar se o profeta era verdadeiro ou falso, por se cumprir uma predição sua. Se sua mensagem contradissesse a vontade e as normas reveladas de Deus, ele era falso. Assim, o profeta que predissesse paz para Israel ou Judá numa ocasião em que o povo se empenhava em desobedecer a Palavra e a Lei de Deus, forçosamente era falso. — Je 6:13, 14; 14:11-16.

O aviso posterior de Jesus a respeito de falsos profetas era comparável ao dado por Moisés. Embora utilizassem o nome dele e fizessem "sinais e prodígios, a fim de desencaminhar", seus frutos provariam que eles eram "obreiros do que é contra a lei". — Mt 7:15-23; Mr 13:21-23; compare isso com 2Pe 2:1-3; 1Jo 4:1-3.

O profeta verdadeiro jamais fazia predições simplesmente para satisfazer a curiosidade humana. Toda predição estava relacionada com a vontade, o propósito, as normas ou o julgamento de Deus. (1Rs 11:29-39; Is 7:3-9) Não raro, os eventos futuros preditos eram consequência de condições existentes; o povo colheria conforme semeasse. Os falsos profetas acalmavam o povo e seus líderes com garantias tranquilizadoras de que, apesar do proceder injusto deles, Deus ainda estava com eles para protegê-los e fazê-los prosperar. (Je 23:16-20; 28:1-14; Ez 13:1-16; compare isso com Lu 6:26.) Eles imitavam os profetas verdadeiros, empregando linguagem e ações simbólicas. (1Rs 22:11; Je 28:10-14) Ao passo que alguns eram óbvios impostores, muitos eram evidentemente profetas que se tornaram transgressores ou apóstatas. (Veja 1Rs 18:19; 22:5-7; Is 28:7; Je 23:11-15.) Alguns eram mulheres, falsas profetisas. (Ez 13:17-23; compare isso com Re 2:20.) Um "espírito de impureza" substituía o espírito de Deus. Todos os falsos profetas deviam ser mortos. — Za 13:2, 3; De 13:5.

Quanto aos que se enquadravam nas normas divinas, o cumprimento de certas profecias de "curto alcance", algumas se cumprindo no prazo de apenas um dia ou um ano, fornecia base para a confiança de que suas profecias, relativas a um futuro mais distante, também se cumpririam. — 1Rs 13:1-5; 14:12, 17; 2Rs 4:16, 17; 7:1, 2, 16-20.

"Filhos dos Profetas." Conforme explica a Gesenius' Hebrew Grammar (Gramática Hebraica de Gesenius, Oxford, 1952, p. 418) o termo hebraico ben (filho de), ou benéh (filhos de), pode indicar "ser membro duma associação ou sociedade (ou duma tribo, ou de qualquer classe definida)". (Veja Ne 3:8, onde um "membro dos misturadores de unguentos" é, literalmente, "filho dos misturadores de unguentos".) Assim, a expressão "filhos dos profetas" talvez descreva uma escola de instrução para os chamados para esta vocação, ou simplesmente uma associação cooperativa de profetas. Menciona-se que havia grupos de profetas assim em Betel, Jericó e Gilgal. (2Rs 2:3, 5; 4:38; compare isso com 1Sa 10:5, 10.) Samuel presidia um grupo em Ramá (1Sa 19:19, 20), e Eliseu parece ter ocupado uma posição similar nos seus dias. (2Rs 4:38; 6:1-3; compare isso com 1Rs 18:13.) O registro menciona que construíam sua própria morada e que se usou uma ferramenta emprestada, o que pode indicar que levavam uma vida simples. Embora não raro compartilhassem alojamentos e alimentos, talvez recebessem designações individuais para sair em missões proféticas. — 1Rs 20:35-42; 2Rs 4:1, 2, 39; 6:1-7; 9:1, 2.

Profetas nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs. A palavra grega pro·fé·tes corresponde ao hebraico na·vi'. O sacerdote Zacarias, pai de João, o Batizador, atuou como profeta em revelar o propósito de Deus relativo a seu filho, João, que seria "chamado profeta do Altíssimo". (Lu 1:76) O modo de vida simples de João e sua mensagem faziam lembrar os primitivos profetas hebreus. Ele foi amplamente reconhecido como profeta; até mesmo Herodes sentia-se um tanto reprimido por causa dele. (Mr 1:4-6; Mt 21:26; Mr 6:20) Jesus disse que João era "muito mais do que um profeta". — Mt 11:7-10; compare isso com Lu 1:16, 17; Jo 3:27-30.

Jesus, o Messias, era "O Profeta", o há muito aguardado profeta predito por Moisés. (Jo 1:19-21, 25-27; 6:14; 7:40; De 18:18, 19; At 3:19-26) Sua capacidade de realizar obras poderosas e de discernir assuntos dum modo extraordinário fazia com que outros o reconhecessem como profeta. (Lu 7:14-16; Jo 4:16-19; compare isso com 2Rs 6:12.) Acima de todos os outros, ele era alguém do "grupo íntimo" de Deus. (Je 23:18; Jo 1:18; 5:36; 8:42) Ele citava constantemente profetas anteriores como atestando sua comissão e seu cargo divinos. (Mt 12:39, 40; 21:42; Lu 4:18-21; 7:27; 24:25-27, 44; Jo 15:25) Ele predisse a forma em que se daria sua própria traição e morte, que, como profeta, morreria em Jerusalém, "matadora dos profetas", que seus discípulos o abandonariam, que Pedro o negaria três vezes, que ele seria ressuscitado no terceiro dia — muitas destas profecias baseando-se em profecias anteriores das Escrituras Hebraicas. (Lu 13:33, 34; Mt 20:17-19; 26:20-25, 31-34) Além disso, predisse a destruição de Jerusalém e seu templo. (Lu 19:41-44; 21:5-24) O cumprimento preciso de todas estas coisas no período de vida daqueles que o ouviam fornecia sólida base para se ter fé e convicção no cumprimento das profecias pertinentes à sua presença. — Veja Mt 24; Mr 13; Lu 21.

O Pentecostes de 33 EC presenciou o predito derramamento do espírito de Deus sobre os discípulos em Jerusalém, fazendo com que eles 'profetizassem e tivessem visões'. Fizeram isto por declararem as "coisas magníficas de Deus", e por meio de inspirada revelação de conhecimento sobre o Filho de Deus e o que isto significava para seus ouvintes. (At 2:11-40) Mais uma vez, é preci-so lembrar que profetizar não significa única, ou necessariamente, predizer o futuro. O apóstolo Paulo declarou que 'quem profetiza, edifica, e encoraja, e conforta os homens pelo seu falar', e apresentou o profetizar como um alvo apropriado e particularmente desejável que todos os cristãos deviam esforçar-se a alcançar. Ao passo que falar em línguas estrangeiras era um sinal para os descrentes, o profetizar o era para os crentes. Todavia, mesmo o descrente que comparecesse a uma reunião cristã se beneficiaria do profetizar, sendo repreendido e examinado de perto por isso, de modo que os 'segredos do seu coração se tornariam manifestos'. (1Co 14:1-6, 22-25) Isto também indica que o profetizar cristão não consistia principalmente de predições, mas, antes, muitas vezes tratava de coisas relacionadas com o presente, embora procedesse claramente duma fonte fora do comum, sendo inspirado por Deus. Paulo aconselhou sobre a necessidade de boa ordem e de autodomínio no profetizar congregacional, para que todos pudessem aprender e ser encorajados. — 1Co 14:29-33.

Havia, naturalmente, certas pessoas especialmente escolhidas ou dotadas para servir quais profetas. (1Co 12:4-11, 27-29) O próprio Paulo possuía o dom de profetizar, todavia, ele é primariamente conhecido como apóstolo. (Veja At 20:22-25; 27:21-26, 31, 34; 1Co 13:2; 14:6.) Aqueles especialmente chamados de profetas, tais como Ágabo, Judas e Silas, parecem ter sido notáveis porta-vozes da congregação cristã, sendo superados apenas pelos apóstolos. (1Co 12:28; Ef 4:11) Como os apóstolos, eles não só serviam localmente, mas também viajavam para diferentes lugares, proferiam discursos e também predisseram certos eventos futuros. (At 11:27, 28; 13:1; 15:22, 30-33; 21:10, 11) Como se dera anteriormente, algumas mulheres cristãs receberam o dom de profetizar, embora ficassem sempre sujeitas à chefia dos membros varões da congregação. — At 21:9; 1Co 11:3-5.

PROFETISA. Mulher que profetiza ou realiza a obra dum profeta. Conforme mostrado nos artigos PROFETA e PROFECIA, profetizar significa basicamente o proferimento de mensagens inspiradas de Deus, a revelação da vontade divina. A predição de eventos futuros podia ou não estar envolvida. Assim como havia profetas verdadeiros e falsos, assim também algumas profetisas foram usadas por Jeová e movidas por Seu espírito, ao passo que outras eram profetisas falsas, não aprovadas por Ele.

Miriã é a primeira mulher apontada na Bíblia como profetisa. Deus evidentemente transmitiu uma ou mais mensagens por intermédio dela, talvez na forma de cânticos inspirados. (Êx 15:20, 21) Assim, registra-se que ela e Arão disseram a Moisés: "Não falou [Jeová] também por meio de nós?" (Núm 12:2) O próprio Jeová, mediante o profeta Miqueias, mencionou ter enviado "Moisés, Arão e Miriã" diante dos israelitas ao conduzi-los para fora do Egito. (Miq 6:4) Embora Miriã fosse privilegiada de ser usada qual instrumento de comunicação divina, seu relacionamento como tal para com Deus era inferior ao usufruído pelo seu irmão, Moisés. Quando ela deixou de manter-se em seu devido lugar, sofreu severo castigo de Deus. — Núm 12:1-15.

No período dos juízes, Débora servia como fonte de informações da parte de Jeová, tornando conhecidos os Seus julgamentos sobre certos assuntos e transmitindo Suas instruções, como nas ordens que deu a Baraque. (Jz 4:4-7, 14-16) Assim, durante um período de fraqueza e apostasia nacionais, ela serviu figurativamente como "mãe em Israel". (Jz 5:6-8) Hulda, a profetisa, serviu de maneira similar nos dias do Rei Josias, tornando conhecidos os julgamentos de Deus para aquela nação e seu rei. — 2Rs 22:14-20; 2Cr 34:22-28.

Isaías se refere à sua esposa como 'a profetisa'. (Is 8:3) Embora certos comentaristas sugiram que ela era profetisa apenas no sentido de estar casada com um profeta, não há evidência bíblica para apoiar tal conjectura. Parece mais provável que ela tenha recebido de Jeová algum tipo de designação profética, como no caso de profetisas anteriores.

Neemias fala desfavoravelmente da profetisa Noadias, que, junto com o "resto dos profetas", procurou instilar medo em Neemias e assim impedir a reconstrução das muralhas de Jerusalém. (Ne 6:14) Embora agisse em oposição à vontade de Deus, isso não significa necessariamente que ela não detivera uma posição válida como profetisa antes disso.

Jeová mencionou a Ezequiel as mulheres israelitas que 'agiam como profetisas, do seu próprio coração'. Isto dá a entender que tais profetisas não tinham recebido nenhuma comissão divina da parte de Deus, mas eram simples profetisas de imitação, que se haviam intitulado como tais. (Ez 13:17-19) Por meio de suas práticas e propaganda enlaçadoras e enganadoras, elas 'caçavam almas', condenando os justos e tolerando os iníquos, mas Jeová livraria seu povo da mão delas. — Ez 13:20-23.

Na época do nascimento de Jesus, enquanto os judeus ainda eram o povo pactuado de Jeová, a idosa Ana servia como profetisa. Ela "nunca estava ausente do templo, prestando noite e dia serviço sagrado, com jejuns e súplicas". Por "falar sobre a criança [Jesus] a todos os que aguardavam o livramento de Jerusalém", ela atuou como profetisa no sentido básico de 'proclamar' uma revelação do propósito de Deus. — Lu 2:36-38.

Profetizar achava-se entre os milagrosos dons do espírito concedidos à recém-formada congregação cristã. Certas mulheres cristãs, tais como as quatro filhas virgens de Filipe, profetizavam induzidas pelo espírito santo de Deus. (At 21:9; 1Co 12:4, 10) Isto ocorreu em cumprimento de Joel 2:28, 29, que predizia que "vossos filhos e vossas filhas certamente profetizarão". (At 2:14-18) Tal dom, porém, não desobrigava a mulher da submissão à chefia de seu marido, ou à dos homens no âmbito da congregação cristã; em símbolo de sua sujeição, ela devia usar uma cobertura para a cabeça, ao profetizar (1Co 11:3-6), e não devia atuar como instrutora dentro da congregação. — 1Ti 2:11-15; 1Co 14:31-35.

Certa mulher, semelhante à Jezabel, na congregação de Tiatira, afirmava ter poderes proféticos, mas seguia o proceder das antigas profetisas falsas e foi condenada por Cristo Jesus em sua mensagem dada a João, em Revelação (Apocalipse) 2:20-23. Ela atuava indevidamente como instrutora e desencaminhava membros da congregação para práticas erradas.

PROGNOSTICADOR DE EVENTOS. Pessoa que afirma ter a habilidade de predizer o futuro; dentre essa classe, a Bíblia cita os sacerdotes-magos, os adivinhos espíritas, os astrólogos e outros. (Veja ADIVINHAÇÃO; ESPIRITISMO.) O termo hebraico yid·de'o·ní, traduzido "prognosticador profissional de eventos", provém do radical ya·dhá' (saber) e subentende conhecimento oculto à pessoa comum. Aparece com frequência junto com 'ohv, que significa "médium espírita". (De 18:11) Algumas dessas pessoas possuíam poderes ocultos em virtude de seu contato com os demônios, os iníquos inimigos angélicos de Deus sob Satanás, o Diabo, o governante dos demônios. (Lu 11:14-20) Nos tempos antigos, estes prognosticadores empregavam vários métodos para obter suas mensagens de predição: a contemplação das estrelas (Is 47:13); o exame do fígado e de outras vísceras de animais oferecidos em sacrifício (Ez 21:21); a interpretação de presságios (2Rs 21:6); a consulta dos chamados espíritos dos mortos e assim por diante. — De 18:11.

A vida dos egípcios, assim como a vida dos babilônios, era controlada em grande medida por seus adivinhos. (Is 19:3) Por outro lado, os servos verdadeiros de Deus nunca recorriam a tais pessoas em busca de informações. Quando a Lei foi dada a Israel pouco depois de sua libertação da escravidão no Egito, o povo foi estritamente proibido de consultar "prognosticadores profissionais de eventos". (Le 19:31) Ter "relações imorais" com eles resultaria em serem decepados (na morte) dentre o povo de Deus. E, quanto àquele que praticasse tal arte, a lei prosseguia: "Quanto ao homem ou à mulher em quem se mostre haver um espírito mediúnico ou um espírito de predição, sem falta devem ser mortos." (Le 20:6, 27) Aproximadamente 40 anos mais tarde, quando Israel estava prestes a entrar na Terra da Promessa e a expulsar seus habitantes, foi lembrado: "Não deves aprender a fazer conforme as coisas detestáveis dessas nações. Não se deve achar em ti . . . alguém que vá consultar um médium espírita, ou um prognosticador profissional de eventos, ou alguém que consulte os mortos." — De 18:9-11.

Mais de 350 anos depois, Saul, o primeiro rei de Israel, removeu do país todos os prognosticadores de eventos, mas, antes de morrer, ele se desviara tanto de Jeová que pessoalmente recorreu a 'uma mulher dona de mediunidade espírita, em En-Dor', para que ela predissesse seu futuro. De início ela ficou com receio de praticar a arte, mas, diante da insistência de Saul para que 'fizesse subir Samuel', ela evocou uma visão. Ela descreveu a figura desta como 'homem idoso com uma túnica sem mangas'. Saul convenceu-se de que se tratava do profeta Samuel. (1Sa 28:3, 7-19) Mas não podia ter sido realmente Samuel, pois ele estava morto, e os mortos "não estão cônscios de absolutamente nada". (Ec 9:5) Samuel, quando vivo, certamente não teria tido nada que ver com uma médium espírita, e Jeová Deus e seus santos anjos jamais cooperariam com alguém assim. O próprio Deus disse ao seu povo: "Caso vos digam: 'Recorrei aos médiuns espíritas ou aos que têm espírito de predição, que chilram e fazem pronunciações em voz baixa', não é a seu Deus que qualquer povo devia recorrer? Acaso se deve recorrer a pessoas mortas a favor de pessoas vivas? À lei e à atestação!" Jeová prossegue dizendo: "Seguramente persistirão em dizer o que é segundo esta declaração que não terá a luz da alva." — Is 8:19, 20.

Quase 400 anos após o reinado de Saul, o Rei Manassés, de Judá, "fez em grande escala o que era mau aos olhos de Jeová, para o ofender", incluindo consultar prognosticadores profissionais de eventos, os quais prosperaram sob seu governo. (2Rs 21:6; 2Cr 33:6) Todos estes tiveram de ser eliminados do país pelo neto de Manassés, o justo Rei Josias. — 2Rs 23:24.

A única menção nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs de predição demoníaca do futuro é o caso em que o apóstolo Paulo, na cidade de Filipos, libertou

"certa serva com um espírito, um demônio de adivinhação". Ela fornecera muito ganho para seus amos "por praticar a arte do vaticínio". Indicando que tal prática é realmente demoníaca e diametralmente oposta a Deus, os amos da moça da qual o demônio foi expulso causaram muitos problemas a Paulo em Filipos, levando Paulo e seu companheiro, Silas, perante os magistrados, os quais deram a ordem de espancá-los e depois os lançaram na prisão. — At 16:12, 16-24.

PROPICIATÓRIO. Veja TAMPA PROPICIATÓRIA.

PROPRIETÁRIO DE TERRAS. Desde tempos bem antigos, os direitos de propriedade de proprietários ou donos de terras (hebr.: be'a·lím, literalmente: donos) têm sido reconhecidos. Abraão negociou com Efrom, o hitita, uma sepultura para sua esposa Sara, e, por fim, comprou um campo por certa importância declarada, sendo a transação legalizada diante do povo da cidade. (Gên 23:1-20) Durante uma fome no Egito, José comprou para Faraó terras dos proprietários egípcios, em troca de alimentos. (Gên 47:20-26) Jó, fiel servo de Deus, que morava na terra de Uz, possuía propriedades hereditárias, incluindo sem dúvida terras que ele legou a seus filhos e suas filhas. (Jó 1:4; 42:15) Entretanto, Jeová é o Supremo Proprietário de Terras, e seus modos de lidar demonstram que os humanos têm de prestar contas a ele pela maneira em que usam Sua propriedade. — Sal 24:1; 50:10-12.

Em Israel. Quando Jeová introduziu Israel em Canaã, exerceu Seu direito como Senhor e Proprietário de toda a Terra ao desapossar os cananeus, que eram, na realidade, intrusos no país. (Jos 3:11; 1Co 10:26) Esgotara-se o período de tolerância da parte de Deus para ocuparem a terra. Embora mais de 450 anos antes Deus tivesse prometido a terra à semente de Abraão, ele havia dito a Abraão: "Ainda não se completou o erro dos amorreus [termo às vezes empregado para referir-se a todas as tribos cananeias]." (Gên 15:7, 8, 12-16) Portanto, como disse o mártir cristão Estêvão aos judeus, Deus "não lhe deu [i.e., a Abraão] nela nenhuma propriedade transmissível por herança, não, nem mesmo da largura de um pé; mas prometeu dar-lha como propriedade, e depois dele, ao seu descendente, quando ainda não tinha filho". — At 7:5.

Israel não devia travar guerras de agressão, continuando a expandir seu território por tomar a propriedade das nações à sua volta. Jeová avisou Israel de que deviam respeitar os direitos de propriedade de certas nações a quem ele havia designado terras. Essas nações eram Edom, Moabe e Amom, aparentadas com os israelitas através de Esaú (Edom) e Ló (Moabe e Amom). — De 2:4, 5, 9, 19.

A Terra da Promessa foi-lhes confiada. Até mesmo os do povo de Israel, a quem Deus dera a terra para usufruírem quais proprietários, foram informados por Jeová de que não eram realmente donos dela, mas esta apenas lhes fora confiada. A respeito da venda duma propriedade de terra da família, ele disse: "De modo que a terra não deve ser vendida em perpetuidade, porque a terra é minha. Pois, do meu ponto de vista sois residentes forasteiros e colonos." (Le 25:23) Deus expulsara os cananeus da terra devido às suas práticas repugnantes. Ele advertiu que também despojaria os israelitas de todo título de propriedade e os expulsaria da terra se seguissem tais práticas, e, quando mais tarde o fizeram, foram mandados para o exílio. (Le 18:24-30; 25:18, 19; 26:27-33; Je 52:27) Após 70 anos de desolação da terra, de 607 a 537 AEC, Deus misericordiosamente os restabeleceu, mas desta vez sob dominação gentia. Por fim, em 70 EC, os romanos destruíram completamente Jerusalém e espalharam seu povo.

Dentro da nação, designou-se às tribos setores do país ou então cidades dentro dos termos de outras tribos. Os sacerdotes e os levitas possuíam cidades com pastagens. (Jos 15-21) Por sua vez, dentro das tribos designaram-se heranças às famílias. Essas divisões tornaram-se menores à medida que as famílias, ao aumentarem em número, subdividiram seus próprios lotes. Isto resultou no cultivo e na utilização cabais da terra. Não se permitia que as heranças circulassem de uma tribo para outra. Para evitar isso, as mulheres que herdassem terras (por não terem nenhum irmão varão vivo) tinham de casar-se com membros da mesma tribo para reter sua herança. — Núm 36:1-12.

No caso de um homem morrer sem ter nenhum filho varão, seu irmão (ou, se não tivesse irmãos, seu parente mais próximo) podia casar-se com a viúva, a fim de suscitar descendência dela. O homem que se casasse com a viúva podia também resgatar a herança do falecido, se esta tivesse sido vendida. (Ru 4:9, 10, 13-17) O primogênito da mulher levaria o nome, não de seu pai real, mas do primeiro marido da viúva, tornando-se assim dono da herança de terra e perpetuando o nome do homem sobre sua herança em Israel. — De 25:5, 6.

O ano do jubileu. Deus dissera a Israel: "Ninguém deve ficar pobre no teu meio." (De 15:4, 5) O ano do jubileu, quando observado, impedia que a nação caísse numa condição em que só existissem duas classes, os muito ricos e os muito pobres. Todo 50.° ano (contado a partir de quando Israel entrou em Canaã), todo homem retornava à sua herança, e qualquer terra que ele tivesse vendido devia ser devolvida a ele. Devido a essa lei, o preço das terras diminuía a cada ano, com a aproximação do jubileu. Na realidade, o comprador, de certa forma, apenas arrendava a terra, o preço dependendo do número de colheitas previstas até o ano do jubileu. (Le 25:13-16, 28) Até mesmo o comprador da herança de outro não podia necessariamente retê-la até o jubileu. Se o proprietário original conseguisse suficiente dinheiro, podia resgatar a terra. Também, qualquer resgatador (parente próximo) podia resgatá-la para o proprietário original. — Le 25:24-27.

Um homem não podia ser forçado a vender sua propriedade. Tampouco se aplicava em Israel o princípio do domínio eminente. Isto foi ilustrado na recusa de Nabote em vender um campo de sua herança ao Rei Acabe. — 1Rs 21:1-4, 17-19; compare isso com Ez 46:18.

Os levitas. Como proteção para os levitas, seus campos não podiam ser vendidos; isto se dava porque os levitas não tinham herança individual de terras — haviam recebido apenas casas nas cidades levitas e as pastagens ao redor delas. Se um levita vendesse sua casa numa cidade levita, o direito de resgate continuava para ele, e, o mais tardar, no jubileu esta lhe era devolvida. — Le 25:32-34.

À medida que as terras produtivas davam frutos, o Grande Proprietário de todas as terras não devia ser esquecido. Por meio do sistema de dízimos, um décimo da produção devia ser destinado ao sustento dos levitas em suas importantes funções relacionadas com a adoração de Jeová, beneficiando assim espiritualmente todo o Israel. — Núm 18:21-24; De 14:22-29.

O santuário. O santuário de Jeová também podia tornar-se dono de terras em virtude de campos "santificados" para Jeová; isto é, a produção desses campos ia para o santuário por um período estipulado pelo proprietário ou possuidor. (Le 27:16-19) Se um campo "santificado" pelo proprietário não fosse resgatado, mas fosse vendido a outro homem, tal campo se tornaria propriedade permanente do santuário por ocasião do jubileu. (Le 27:20, 21) Também, campos "devotados" ao santuário por seus proprietários ficavam como propriedade permanente do santuário. — Le 27:28.

Na Congregação Cristã. A Bíblia torna claro que os direitos individuais de propriedade eram reconhecidos na congregação cristã. Quando a congregação foi estabelecida, no dia de Pentecostes de 33 EC, muitos judeus e prosélitos da religião judaica de outras terras se haviam reunido em Jerusalém para celebrar a festividade. Grande número desses estiveram presentes para ouvir o discurso de Pedro e passaram a crer em Cristo. (At 2:1, 5, 9-11, 41, 42, 47) Eles permaneceram para aprender mais. Assim, os cristãos voluntariamente venderam bens e distribuíram os proventos para ajudar esses visitantes e outros necessitados. Tinham "todas as coisas em comum". (At 2:44-46) Não se tratava de socialismo ou comunismo, mas duma partilha voluntária com o objetivo de ajudar pessoas interessadas nas boas novas e em promover sua divulgação.

Mais tarde, por razões similares, e em parte devido à perseguição dos cristãos movida pelos governantes de Jerusalém, esta prática prosseguiu, sob o espírito e a benignidade imerecida de Deus. Campos foram vendidos e os proventos foram levados aos apóstolos, que administravam o programa de assistência. (At 4:31-37) Mas a propriedade de cada cristão pertencia a ele mesmo, e seus direitos eram invioláveis; ele não era pressionado a colocar a propriedade à disposição dum fundo comum. Isso era encarado como privilégio, não como dever. Era a motivação correta que predominava e induzia esses generosos cristãos.

No caso de Ananias e Safira, porém, eles fizeram uma exibição hipócrita para obter aplausos e a honra de homens. Juntos, conspiraram vender um campo e dar apenas parte dos proventos para os apóstolos, afirmando estarem dando generosamente toda a propriedade. Pedro, orientado pelo espírito santo, discerniu o que estavam fazendo. Ele não disse: 'Por que não destes a nós todo o dinheiro que recebestes pelo campo?' como se tivessem a obrigação de fazer isso. Antes, disse: "Ananias, por que te afoitou Satanás a trapacear o espírito santo e a reter secretamente parte do preço do campo? Enquanto permanecia contigo, não permanecia teu, e depois de ter sido vendido, não continuou a estar sob o teu controle? Por que é que propuseste uma ação dessas no teu coração? Trapaceaste, não homens, mas a Deus." — At 5:1-4.

Umas três horas depois, quando entrou Safira, não sabendo o que tinha acontecido, ela fez a mesma afirmação, e Pedro replicou: "Por que concordastes entre vós dois fazer uma prova com o espírito de Jeová?" (At 5:7-9) O pecado deles foi mentir a Jeová, zombando dele e da Sua congregação, como se o espírito de Deus não estivesse sobre ela. (Gál 6:7) Eles não foram compelidos a repartir sua propriedade em alguma espécie de sistema comunal.

É Preciso Reconhecer o Direito de Propriedade de Jeová. Uma vez que Jeová é o Proprietário de todas as terras, o proprietário na Terra precisa respeitar a propriedade Dele e utilizá-la corretamente. Caso contrário, ela se tornará uma ruína e ele, por fim, a perderá por completo. (Pr 24:30-34) Até mesmo as nações precisam reconhecer esse fato. (Is 24:1-6; Je 23:10) Finalmente, aqueles que desconsideram este princípio serão eles próprios arruinados. — Re 11:18.

O reconhecimento do real direito de propriedade de Deus também impedirá que alguém tente adquirir a posse de terras de forma gananciosa ou ilícita. (Pr 20:21; 23:10, 11) Quando Israel se desviou da lei de Deus, havia homens contra os quais Deus expressou condenação, dizendo: "Ai dos que juntam casa a casa, e dos que anexam campo a campo, até não haver mais espaço e se ter feito que vós moreis sozinhos no meio da terra!" — Is 5:8; Miq 2:1-4.

Por outro lado, Jesus disse: "Felizes os de temperamento brando, porque herdarão a terra." (Mt 5:5; Sal 37:9, 22, 29) Ele ensinou seus seguidores a orar a Deus: "Venha o teu reino. Realize-se a tua vontade, como no céu, assim também na terra." (Mt 6:10) Sob a soberania do Reino do próprio Grande Proprietário de Terras, aqueles que cuidarem fielmente das terras que lhes forem confiadas sentirão a plena alegria de serem proprietários em completa segurança. Deus declarou seu ponto de vista sobre condições adequadas, no que tange à propriedade de terras, ao fornecer profecias de restauração por meio de Isaías e Miqueias. Estas indicam que condições ele estabelecerá quando Sua 'vontade for feita na terra'. Ele disse sobre seu povo: "Hão de construir casas e as ocuparão; e hão de plantar vinhedos e comer os seus frutos. Não construirão e outro terá morada; não plantarão e outro comerá." "E realmente sentar-se-ão, cada um debaixo da sua videira e debaixo da sua figueira, e não haverá quem os faça tremer." — Is 65:21, 22; Miq 4:4; veja POVO DA TERRA.

PROSCRIÇÃO. Essa palavra é empregada em certas traduções modernas (JB, NE, NM) para traduzir o termo hebraico hhé·rem, também vertido na Tradução do Novo Mundo por "coisa devotada à destruição". A palavra hebraica refere-se àquilo que é irrevogável e irremivelmente devotado a Deus, e, assim, posto à parte para uso sagrado, porém é mais frequentemente empregada com referência a coisas assim separadas para completa destruição. Pode aplicar-se a uma pessoa individual. (Êx 22:20; JB reza aqui: "Qualquer um que fizer sacrifícios a outros deuses deverá ser proscrito ["ser devotado à destruição", NM]"; Le 27:29) Ou pode aplicar-se a seus bens (Esd 10:8); a um animal, a um campo, ou a qualquer artigo assim devotado ao uso sagrado (Le 27:21, 28); ou a uma cidade inteira e a todas as coisas nela. — De 13:15-17; Jos 6:17.

Proscrições sagradas figuraram em certas profecias. (Miq 4:13; Za 14:11) Para uma consideração cabal do assunto, veja DEVOTADA, COISA.

PROSÉLITO. Converso, isto é, alguém que abraçou o judaísmo, sendo circuncidado, no caso do varão. (Mt 23:15, n) A palavra grega pro·sé·ly·tos (prosélito) é empregada tanto na Septuaginta como nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs.

Por mais de 19 séculos, Jeová lidou com um povo especial, seleto, a família de Abraão e sua semente, primariamente a nação de Israel. Todavia, era possível que um não hebreu ou não israelita que desejasse servir a Jeová segundo os requisitos da adoração verdadeira, assim o fizesse. Entretanto, ele teria de converter-se à religião verdadeira, isto é, tornar-se um prosélito. A Lei mosaica fazia provisões específicas para a pessoa de origem não israelita que morasse em Israel. Tal "residente forasteiro" podia tornar-se um adorador pleno de Jeová, sendo circuncidado, no caso dum varão, em reconhecimento de que aceitara a adoração verdadeira. (Êx 12:48, 49) O prosélito tinha a responsabilidade de obedecer a toda a Lei, e devia ser tratado pelos judeus naturais como irmão. (Le 19:33, 34; 24:22; Gál 5:3; veja RESIDENTE FORASTEIRO.) A palavra hebraica ger, traduzida "residente forasteiro" ("estrangeiro", Al), nem sempre se refere a tal converso religioso (Gên 15:13; Êx 2:22; Je 14:8), mas em mais de 70 casos em que os tradutores da Septuaginta possivelmente criam que se referia, eles a traduziram pelo grego pro·sé·ly·tos.

Durante toda a história israelita, pessoas não judias tornaram-se prosélitos, com efeito afirmando sobre os judeus o que a moabita Rute dissera a Noemi: "Teu povo será o meu povo, e teu Deus, o meu Deus." (Ru 1:16; Jos 6:25; Mt 1:5) A oração de Salomão por ocasião da inauguração do templo refletia o espírito aberto e generoso de Deus para com aqueles, dentre as muitas nações, que desejassem servir a Ele quais prosélitos. (1Rs 8:41-43) Os não judeus citados nominalmente, que, pelo visto, se tornaram prosélitos, incluíam Doegue, o edomita (1Sa 21:7), Urias, o hitita (2Sa 11:3, 11), e Ebede-Meleque, o etíope. (Je 38:7-13) Quando os judeus, nos dias de Mordecai, obtiveram permissão de pôr-se de pé e se defender, "muitos dos povos da terra declaravam-se judeus". (Est 8:17) A Septuaginta reza: "E muitos dos gentios foram circuncidados, e se tornaram judeus." — Bagster.

Ativos no Proselitismo. Em resultado do exílio babilônico, o judaísmo tornou-se difundido. Os judeus da Diáspora entraram em contato com pagãos de muitas nações. O estabelecimento de sinagogas e a disponibilidade das Escrituras Hebraicas na língua grega tornaram mais fácil que pessoas de todo o mundo romano conhecessem a religião judaica. Escritores antigos, tais como Horácio e Sêneca, atestaram que numerosas pessoas, em diversos países, juntaram-se aos judeus, tornando-se assim prosélitos. Josefo relatou que os judeus de Antioquia, da Síria, "constantemente atraíam multidões de gregos às suas cerimônias religiosas, e, em certa medida, incorporaram-nos a si mesmos". (The Jewish War [A Guerra Judaica], VII, 45, [iii, 3]) The Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible (O Dicionário Bíblico do Intérprete) salienta que "os judeus em Roma demonstravam um espírito tão agressivo de proselitismo que eles foram acusados de procurar infetar os romanos com o seu culto, e o governo expulsou os principais propagandistas da cidade, em 139 a.C.". (Editado por G. Buttrick, 1962, Vol. 3, p. 925) Naturalmente, esta acusação pode ter sido infundada ou exagerada, tendo talvez motivações políticas ou causada por algum preconceito racial ou religioso. Não obstante, o próprio Jesus disse a respeito dos hipócritas escribas e fariseus: "Percorreis o mar e a terra seca para fazer um prosélito, e, quando se torna tal, fazeis dele objeto para a Geena duas vezes mais do que vós mesmos." — Mt 23:15.

Fazer prosélitos à força. Nem todos os prosélitos judeus foram convertidos por meios pacíficos. O historiador Josefo relatou que, quando João Hircano I conquistou os idumeus, isto por volta de 125 AEC, ele disse ao povo que só poderiam permanecer no país deles se se submetessem à circuncisão, forçando-os assim a tornar-se prosélitos. (Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], XIII, 257, 258, [ix, 1]) Aristóbulo, filho de João Hircano, fez o mesmo com os itureus. (XIII, 318 [xi, 3]) Mais tarde, judeus sob Alexandre Janeu demoliram Pela porque os habitantes se recusaram a tornar-se prosélitos. (XIII, 397 [xv, 4]) Considerações políticas, em vez de o zelo missionário, sem dúvida constituíram a base para tais medidas.

Prosélitos Tornaram-se Cristãos. O registro das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs indica que alguns dos prosélitos judeus circuncisos eram sinceros na adoração prestada a Jeová. Os da multidão proveniente de muitos países, que ouviram a Pedro no dia de Pentecostes de 33 EC e se tornaram cristãos, compunham-se 'tanto de judeus como de prosélitos'. (At 2:10) Os prosélitos de outros países tinham viajado a Jerusalém em obediência à lei de Jeová. Similarmente, o eunuco etíope a quem Filipe batizou tinha ido a Jerusalém para adorar e estava lendo a Palavra de Deus ao viajar de volta para casa. (At 8:27-38) Ele deve ter sido eunuco no sentido de ser "oficial da corte", pois se fosse castrado não poderia ter-se tornado prosélito. (De 23:1; veja ETIÓPIA, ETÍOPE.) Nos primeiros dias da congregação cristã, "Nicolau, prosélito de Antioquia", foi designado a deveres especiais relacionados com a distribuição de alimentos, sendo homem 'cheio de espírito e de sabedoria'. — At 6:2-6.

As boas novas se espalham entre os gentios. Até 36 EC, a mensagem cristã foi dirigida exclusivamente aos judeus, aos gentios que se haviam tornado prosélitos judeus circuncisos, e aos samaritanos. O italiano Cornélio é descrito como "homem devoto e que temia a Deus . . . [que] fazia muitas dádivas de misericórdia ao povo e fazia continuamente súplica a Deus". Mas, ele não era prosélito judeu, pois era gentio incircunciso. (At 10:1, 2; compare isso com Lu 7:2-10.) Uma vez aberta a porta para os gentios, expandiu-se a ativa obra missionária cristã. Todavia, Paulo muitas vezes pregava primeiro aos judeus e aos prosélitos, nas cidades para as quais viajara. Paulo amava muito seus irmãos judeus e desejava que fossem salvos. (Ro 9:3; 10:1) Ademais, os judeus e os prosélitos seriam logicamente as pessoas às quais se dirigir primeiro, pois elas conheciam Jeová e Suas leis, e aguardavam o Messias. A formação delas habilitava as pessoas em seu meio, que tinham bom coração, a reconhecer a Jesus Cristo como sendo a realização de suas esperanças. Elas poderiam constituir um forte núcleo de uma congregação e, por sua vez, poderiam ensinar os gentios, que nada sabiam de Jeová e de sua Palavra.

PROSTITUIÇÃO. Veja FORNICAÇÃO.

PROSTITUTA. Mulher dada à lascívia indiscriminada; especificamente, uma que se oferece de modo indiscriminado, por dinheiro, a ter relações sexuais; meretriz. Há também a prostituição masculina. A palavra hebraica para prostituta é zoh·náh, ao passo que seu equivalente em grego é pór·ne. — Veja MERETRIZ.

Sob a Lei. A Lei dada por Deus a Israel ordenava: "Não profanes a tua filha por fazer dela uma prostituta, para que o país não cometa prostituição, nem o país deveras se encha de moral desenfreada." (Le 19:29) O sétimo mandamento proibia o adultério (Êx 20:14; De 5:18); a pena era a morte de ambos os envolvidos. (Le 20:10) A moça julgada culpada de ter-se casado fingindo ser virgem era morta. (De 22:13-21) A noiva que cometesse fornicação com outro homem era considerada da mesma forma que a esposa adúltera, e era morta. (De 22:23, 24) A moça solteira que cometesse fornicação devia casar-se com o homem que a seduzira, a menos que o pai dela se recusasse a permitir tal casamento. — Êx 22:16, 17; De 22:28, 29.

Por estes e outros motivos, as prostitutas em Israel eram, sem dúvida com raras exceções, mulheres estrangeiras. Os Provérbios advertem repetidas vezes sobre a "mulher estranha" e a "mulher estrangeira" que engodariam um homem a cometer imoralidade. — Pr 2:16; 5:20; 7:5; 22:14; 23:27.

A Lei proibia o sacerdote de se casar com uma prostituta, e a filha dum sacerdote que cometesse prostituição devia ser morta e, depois disso, queimada em fogo. (Le 21:7, 9, 14) A 'paga duma prostituta' não devia ser recebida como contribuição no santuário de Jeová, porque as prostitutas eram detestáveis aos olhos de Jeová. — De 23:18.

Foi o caso de duas prostitutas, resolvido de forma sábia e com discernimento, que fortaleceu grandemente a fé do povo em Salomão, como digno sucessor de Davi ao trono de Israel. É provável que os juízes do tribunal de menor alçada não tivessem conseguido resolver o caso, de modo que o encaminharam ao rei. (De 1:17; 17:8-11; 1Sa 8:20) Tais mulheres podem ter sido prostitutas, não em sentido comercial, mas mulheres que tinham cometido fornicação, quer mulheres judias, quer, bem possivelmente, mulheres de ascendência estrangeira. — 1Rs 3:16-28.

Prostituição no Templo. A prostituição no templo constituía uma modalidade destacada da religião falsa. O historiador Heródoto (Clássicos Jackson, Vol. XXIII, I, 199) relata: "Os babilônios possuem, todavia, uma lei vergonhosa: Toda mulher nascida no país é obrigada, uma vez na vida, a ir ao templo de Vênus [Afrodite] para entregar-se a um estrangeiro." As prostitutas de templo também estavam ligadas à adoração de Baal, Astorete, e outros deuses e deusas adorados em Canaã e em outras partes.

A adoração degenerada também envolvia homens que se prostituíam no templo. — 1Rs 14:23, 24; 15:12; 22:46.

'O Caminho da Morte.' O Rei Salomão, no capítulo sete de Provérbios, descreve uma cena por ele observada, que ilustra as artimanhas da prostituta e os resultados para aqueles que são enlaçados por ela. Fala de um rapaz que passa pela rua, perto da casa duma prostituta, ao cair da noite. Salomão descreve o rapaz como "falto de coração", sem discernimento ou bom senso. (Veja CORAÇÃO.) A mulher, vestida da forma imodesta característica da prostituta, está à espera e o aborda. Ela tem lábios suaves e linguagem afável, mas sua disposição real é impetuosa e obstinada; ela é ardilosa de coração. Esta prostituta finge-se de justa, por dizer que ofereceu sacrifícios de participação em comum naquele mesmo dia (dando a entender que havia alimento para saborearem, uma vez que o ofertante normalmente tomava parte do sacrifício de participação em comum para si mesmo e para sua família). — Pr 7:6-21.

Agora que o rapaz já foi seduzido até esse ponto, mostra Salomão, ele é irresistivelmente atraído a pecar com ela, desprezando todo o bom senso, avançando 'igual ao touro para o abate', como um homem que está agrilhoado e que não pode escapar da disciplina que receberá. "Até que", afirma Salomão, "uma flecha lhe fende o fígado", isto é, até que contraia a ferida que lhe causará a morte, tanto em sentido espiritual como físico, pois ele não só expôs seu corpo a mortíferas doenças sexualmente transmissíveis (em casos de sífilis, em estágio avançado, bactérias lesam o fígado), mas também "ele não sabia que envolvia a sua própria alma". Todo o seu ser e toda a sua vida são gravemente afetados, e ele pecou seriamente contra Deus. Salomão conclui seu relato dizendo: "Sua casa [i.e., a da prostituta] são os caminhos para o Seol; descem para os quartos interiores da morte." — Pr 7:22, 23, 27; compare isso com Pr 2:16-19; 5:3-14.

"Destrói coisas valiosas." O provérbio diz: "O homem que ama a sabedoria alegra seu pai, mas quem tem companheirismo com prostitutas destrói coisas valiosas." (Pr 29:3) Primeiro de tudo, destrói sua relação com Deus, o bem mais valioso; daí, traz vitupério à sua família e destrói relacionamentos familiares. Como adverte outro provérbio, tal homem 'dá a sua dignidade a outros, e seus anos ao que é cruel; estranhos se fartam com o seu poder, e as coisas que obteve com dor ficam na casa dum estrangeiro'. — Pr 5:9, 10.

Portanto, o sábio aconselha: "Não desejes no teu coração a sua lindeza [a da mulher estrangeira] . . . visto que por causa duma mulher prostituta fica-se reduzido a um pão redondo; mas, no que se refere à esposa de outro homem, ela caça até mesmo a alma preciosa." (Pr 6:24-26) Isto pode significar que um homem em Israel, por se relacionar com uma prostituta, esbanjava seus recursos e era reduzido à pobreza (veja 1Sa 2:36; Lu 15:30), mas o homem que cometia adultério com a esposa de outro homem estava perdendo a sua alma (sob a Lei, a pena para o adultério era a morte). Ou, o trecho inteiro talvez se refira à esposa adúltera como prostituta.

Os versículos concludentes do capítulo (Pr 6:29-35) dizem: "[Quanto a] aquele que tem relações com a esposa do seu próximo; ninguém que tocar nela ficará impune. As pessoas não desprezam o ladrão só porque furta para encher a sua alma quando está com fome. Mas, quando descoberto, ele o compensará com sete vezes tanto; dará todos os valores da sua casa. Quem comete adultério com uma mulher é falto de coração; quem faz isso, arruína a sua própria alma. Achará praga e desonra, e seu próprio vitupério não será extinto. Pois o furor dum varão vigoroso é ciúme, e ele não terá compaixão no dia da vingança. Não terá consideração para com nenhuma sorte de resgate, nem consentirá, não importa quão grande faças o presente."

Provérbios 6:30-35 talvez signifique que os homens não desprezam tanto um ladrão que rouba para saciar a fome; eles compreendem, até certo ponto, seu modo de agir. Todavia, caso seja apanhado, ele é obrigado a restituir com 'juros' o que roubou (isto se dava especialmente sob a Lei [Êx 22:1, 3, 4]; "sete vezes" talvez seja empregado no provérbio para indicar que ele se vê obrigado a cumprir a pena em sua plenitude). Mas, o adúltero não pode fazer uma restituição pelo seu pecado; seu vitupério, que é grande, permanece, e de forma alguma ele pode resgatar a si mesmo, ou livrar-se por meio dum pagamento, da punição que merece.

Se um cristão que é membro do corpo espiritual de Cristo tiver relações sexuais com uma prostituta ou cometer fornicação, estará removendo um membro do Cristo e tornando-o membro duma meretriz, unindo-se a uma prostituta como se fossem um só corpo. Desta forma, está pecando contra o seu próprio corpo, no que tange a ser este 'um membro do Cristo'. — 1Co 6:15-18.

Tem de Abandonar Tal Prática para Ser Salva. Existe esperança para as prostitutas, caso larguem esta prática detestável e exerçam fé no sacrifício resgatador de Jesus Cristo. O apóstolo escreveu aos cristãos em Corinto, lembrando-os de que alguns deles tinham sido fornicadores e adúlteros, mas tinham abandonado tal proceder e tinham sido lavados e declarados justos no nome do Senhor Jesus Cristo. (1Co 6:9-11) Muitas das meretrizes em Israel mostraram ter coração melhor do que os líderes religiosos. Tais mulheres, encaradas com desprezo pelos escribas e pelos fariseus, aceitaram humildemente a pregação de João, o Batizador, e Jesus as usou qual exemplo para os líderes religiosos, dizendo: "Deveras, eu vos digo que os cobradores de impostos e as meretrizes entrarão na frente de vós no reino de Deus." — Mt 21:31, 32.

Raabe. Raabe é exemplo duma prostituta que expressou fé em Deus e foi contada como justa. (Tg 2:25) Homens enviados por Josué para espionar Jericó alojaram-se na casa de Raabe. (Jos 2:1) Não seria razoável supor que tenham feito isso com fins imorais. Quanto à motivação deles, os professores C. F. Keil e F. Delitzsch, em Commentary on the Old Testament (Comentário sobre o Velho Testamento) observam: "Entrarem eles na casa duma pessoa assim não suscitaria muita suspeita. Ademais, a localização da casa dela junto à muralha da cidade, ou sobre esta, facilitava a fuga. Mas o Senhor orientou o proceder dos espias de forma tal, que eles encontraram nesta pecadora justamente a pessoa que foi a mais adequada para seu propósito, e em cujo coração as novas dos milagres realizados pelo Deus vivente a favor de Israel haviam causado tamanha impressão, que ela não só informou os espias do desânimo dos cananeus, mas, com implícita confiança no poder do Deus de Israel, ocultou os espias em todas as indagações feitas por seus compatriotas, embora isso representasse um grande risco para ela." (1973, Vol. II, Josué, p. 34) Em vista da declaração de Deus de que Israel havia de expulsar os cananeus devido às suas práticas imorais e também em vista da bênção de Deus sobre a conquista de Jericó e sobre a própria Raabe, seria totalmente desarrazoado supor que os espias cometeram imoralidade com Raabe, ou que ela prosseguiu com sua prática de prostituição depois disso. — Le 18:24-30.

Quanto a Jefté ser filho duma prostituta (Jz 11:1), e a Sansão alojar-se na casa duma prostituta, na cidade de Gaza (Jz 16:1), veja JEFTÉ; SANSÃO.

Uso Figurado. Uma pessoa, uma nação, ou uma congregação de pessoas dedicadas a Deus que fazem alianças com o mundo, ou que se voltam para a adoração de deuses falsos, são chamadas na Bíblia de "prostitutas". Isso ocorreu com a nação de Israel, que foi seduzida a ter "relações imorais" com deuses estrangeiros, e, assim como uma esposa infiel buscaria outros homens, Israel recorreu a nações estrangeiras em busca de segurança e de salvação dos seus inimigos, em vez de voltar-se para seu "dono marital", Jeová Deus. (Is 54:5, 6) Ademais, Jerusalém tornou-se tão degradada em sua infidelidade, que foi além do costume usual das prostitutas, como o profeta Ezequiel foi inspirado a dizer: "A todas as prostitutas costuma-se dar um presente, mas tu — tu deste os teus presentes a todos os que te amavam apaixonadamente e lhes ofereces suborno para que cheguem a ti de todas as redondezas, nos teus atos de prostituição." (Ez 16:33, 34) Tanto o reino de dez tribos de Israel como o reino de duas tribos de Judá foram denunciados como prostitutas desta maneira simbólica. — Ez 23:1-49.

O exemplo mais notório de prostituição espiritual é "Babilônia, a Grande, a mãe das meretrizes e das coisas repugnantes da terra". — Re 17:5; veja BABILÔNIA, A GRANDE.

A Província da Galileia

A GALILEIA, situada na parte norte da Palestina, era uma província próspera e bem povoada nos tempos bíblicos. Até o dia de hoje, seus aspectos geográficos são convidativos — o azul intenso do mar da Galileia, o acidentado terreno setentrional e as planícies férteis. (Veja a fotografia embaixo.) Aqui, nesta região pitoresca, Jesus passou a maior parte da sua vida terrestre, sendo criado na cidade galileia de Nazaré. — Mt 2:21-23; Lu 2:51, 52.

A lavoura, a criação de ovelhas e a pesca eram ocupações comuns dos galileus, e isto se reflete em muitas das parábolas de Jesus. Os galileus medianos, gente trabalhadora e diligente, eram menosprezados pelos fariseus e pelos principais sacerdotes em Jerusalém. Seu sotaque diferente tornava os galileus facilmente reconhecíveis entre os outros judeus. — Mt 26:73.

A Galileia foi o cenário de alguns dos eventos notáveis do ministério de Jesus. Na encosta dum monte, perto de Cafarnaum, Jesus proferiu seu famoso Sermão do Monte. (Mt 5:1, 2) Aqui, na Galileia, ele curou milagrosamente muitas pessoas. — Mr 1:32-34; 6:53-56; Jo 4:46-54.

Como foram recebidos a pregação e os milagres de Jesus na Galileia? Quando ele pregou na sua própria cidade, Nazaré, as pessoas, no começo, 'maravilhavam-se das palavras cativantes que saíam da sua boca'. Mas, depois de Jesus as comparar aos israelitas dos dias de Elias e de Eliseu, tentaram matá-lo. (Lu 4:22-30) Os galileus em geral, porém, reagiam bastante bem ao ministério de Jesus. Assim, foi dentre os galileus que procederam os primeiros discípulos dele, e todos os seus apóstolos (com a possível exceção de Judas Iscariotes) eram galileus. (Mt 4:18-22; Lu 6:12-16) A multidão de cerca de 120 discípulos, que recebeu o espírito santo no dia de Pentecostes de 33 EC, era composta de galileus. — At 1:15; 2:1-7.

Os Arredores do Mar da Galileia

CERCADO por colinas, no norte da Palestina, encontra-se o lago interiorano de água doce chamado mar da Galileia, mar de Tiberíades ou lago de Genesaré. (Veja a fotografia embaixo.) Encrustado como joia numa bacia funda, o lago se encontra a uns 210 m abaixo do nível do mar. Tem cerca de 21 km de comprimento e cerca de 12 km de largura. Tanto neste lago como em volta dele ocorreram muitos eventos notáveis do ministério de Jesus.

Jesus falou diversas vezes de dentro dum barco a multidões reunidas à beira do mar. (Mr 4:1, 2) Cafarnaum, cidade no litoral setentrional, veio a ser conhecida como "sua própria cidade", embora grande parte do tempo ele viajasse. (Mt 9:1; Mr 2:1)

Jesus andou sobre as águas deste mar e apareceu perto dele após a sua ressurreição. — Jo 6:1, 16-21; 21:1, 4-19.

EVENTOS que antecederam à morte de Jesus ocorreram em Jerusalém e nos seus arredores. Aqui o Filho de Deus foi apresentado à nação como seu Rei. Aproximando-se ele da cidade, uma multidão dos discípulos clamou: "Bendito Aquele que vem como Rei em nome de Jeová!" (Lu 19:37, 38) Mas os líderes religiosos daquela nação rejeitaram-no e acusaram-no falsamente de incitar o povo à revolta. Quando o governador romano, Pôncio Pilatos, perguntou diretamente a Jesus se ele era um rei, Jesus respondeu: "Meu reino não faz parte deste mundo." (Veja a ilustração embaixo.) Quando o próprio Pilatos apresentou Jesus aos judeus, dizendo: "Eis o vosso rei!" os principais sacerdotes responderam: "Não temos rei senão César." — Jo 18:33-38; 19:14, 15.

A Expansão do Cristianismo

ANTES de ascender ao céu, em 33 EC, Jesus Cristo, na despedida, deu aos seus seguidores esta comissão: "Sereis testemunhas de mim tanto em Jerusalém como em toda a Judeia e Samaria, e até à parte mais distante da terra." (At 1:8) Eles se mostraram à altura da sua comissão.

Dez dias depois, em Pentecostes, veio espírito santo sobre cerca de 120 discípulos que esperavam em Jerusalém, e eles passaram a falar "sobre as coisas magníficas de Deus". (At 2:1-4, 11) Naquele mesmo dia, cerca de 3.000 foram batizados. (At 2:37-41) Em pouco tempo, os discípulos 'encheram Jerusalém com o seu ensino'. (At 5:27, 28, 40-42) Com que resultado? "O número dos discípulos multiplicava-se grandemente em Jerusalém." — At 6:7.

De Jerusalém, a obra de testemunho espalhou-se. Em resultado da oposição ao seu testemunho em Jerusalém, os discípulos foram dispersos por toda a Judeia e Samaria. Novamente, o resultado foi um aumento. — At 8:1, 4, 14-17.

Em 36 EC, o apóstolo Pedro levou as boas novas a Cesareia, onde foram batizados Cornélio e os da sua casa, os primeiros conversos gentios incircuncisos. (At 10) A seguir, pelo visto, começou-se a dar um testemunho sistemático entre os não judeus na Antioquia da Síria. Em resultado disso, "um grande número, tornando-se crentes, voltaram-se para o Senhor". (At 11:20, 21) Desde então, a obra de dar testemunho expandiu-se a outras nações e literalmente atingiu a "parte mais distante da terra".

O Ministério do Apóstolo Paulo

PAULO, comissionado por Jesus a fim de ser apóstolo para as nações, executou zelosamente a tarefa que lhe foi designada. (Ro 11:13) Sua primeira viagem missionária levou-o através de Chipre e para a Ásia Menor. Foi expulso de cidades por turbas iradas, foi até mesmo apedrejado e deixado como morto. Mas ele voltou para fortalecer aqueles que se haviam tornado discípulos.

Na sua segunda viagem, chegou à Macedônia e à Grécia. Ali pôde dar testemunho no Areópago, em Atenas, conforme ilustrado embaixo.

Na terceira viagem de Paulo, ele pregou por uns três anos em Éfeso, uma das encruzilhadas do mundo romano. Daí foi para a Macedônia e para a Grécia, a fim de fortalecer as congregações ali.

Enquanto foi prisioneiro do governo romano, Paulo usou bem seu tempo para escrever cartas inspiradas, que hoje fazem parte de Bíblia.

Jerusalém Destruída pelos Romanos

POUCO antes da sua morte em 33 EC, Jesus chamou Jerusalém de "matadora dos profetas e apedrejadora dos que lhe são enviados". A cidade como um todo seguiu o modelo do seu passado e rejeitou o Filho de Deus. — Mt 23:37.

Jesus predisse o que iria acontecer: "Virão sobre ti os dias em que os teus inimigos construirão em volta de ti uma fortificação de estacas pontiagudas." (Lu 19: 41-44) Ele disse também: "Quando virdes Jerusalém cercada por exércitos acampados, então . . . comecem a fugir para os montes os que estiverem na Judeia." — Lu 21:20, 21.

Em 66 EC, depois duma revolta judaica, exércitos romanos sob o comando de Céstio Galo vieram contra Jerusalém. Mas, conforme observa Josefo, Galo "subitamente retirou seus homens, . . . e, indo contra toda a lógica, retirou-se da cidade". Isto ofereceu aos cristãos a oportunidade de fugir de Jerusalém, o que eles fizeram. Pouco depois, os exércitos romanos, sob o comando de Tito, voltaram. Esta vez construíram "uma fortificação de estacas pontiagudas", uma cerca de 7,2 km de comprimento em volta da cidade. Depois de um sítio de cerca de cinco meses, a cidade foi totalmente destruída e o templo foi reduzido a ruínas. Três anos mais tarde, em 73 EC, os exércitos romanos capturaram o último baluarte judaico, a fortaleza de Massada, no alto dum monte. (Veja embaixo.)

A destruição de Jerusalém enfatiza a importância de se prestar atenção às profecias bíblicas.

PROVÉRBIO. Veja EXPRESSÃO PROVERBIAL.

PROVÉRBIOS, LIVRO DE. Livro que consiste em uma compilação de provérbios ou declarações sábias provenientes de várias outras coleções. O próprio livro delineia seu objetivo: "Para se conhecer sabedoria e disciplina, para se discernirem as declarações de entendimento, para se receber a disciplina que dá perspicácia, justiça e juízo, e retidão, para se dar argúcia aos inexperientes, conhecimento e raciocínio ao moço." (Pr 1:2-4) "O objetivo é que andes no caminho de gente boa e que guardes as veredas dos justos." — 2:20.

As introduções de três das seções do livro atribuem os provérbios nelas contidos a Salomão. (Pr 1:1; 10:1; 25:1) Isto concorda com o fato de que Salomão "podia falar três mil provérbios". (1Rs 4:32) Existe muito pouca dúvida de que muitos dos provérbios, se não todos nestas seções, foram registrados durante o reinado de Salomão. Referindo-se a si mesmo, Salomão declarou: "O congregante se tornara sábio, ele ensinou também ao povo continuamente o conhecimento, e ponderou e fez uma investigação cabal, a fim de pôr em ordem muitos provérbios. O congregante procurou achar palavras deleitosas e a escrita de palavras corretas de verdade." — Ec 12:9, 10.

Entretanto, vários argumentos têm sido suscitados contra atribuir a maioria dos provérbios a Salomão. Certos provérbios (Pr 16:14; 19:12; 20:2; 25:3) têm sido citados como depreciando monarcas, e, portanto, não pertencendo ao tempo de Salomão. Todavia, ao examinar de perto, descobre-se que, em vez de serem depreciativos, esses provérbios exaltam reis, mostrando que se lhes deve conceder o devido temor em virtude de seu poder. (Veja 24:21.) Aqueles que afirmam que um polígamo como Salomão não teria falado sobre o relacionamento marido-esposa de modo a sugerir a monogamia (5:15-19; 18:22; 19:13, 14) perdem de vista o fato de que a poligamia não era promovida, mas simplesmente tolerada e regulada pela Lei. E é bem possível que os judeus em geral praticassem a monogamia. Do mesmo modo, tais críticos esquecem-se de que Provérbios foi inspirado por Deus e não reflete simplesmente as opiniões de Salomão. Não obstante, através de observações e de experiências próprias, Salomão pode muito bem ter chegado a reconhecer a sabedoria da norma original de Deus para o casamento, a monogamia. — Veja Ec 2:8; 7:27-29.

Os provérbios que não são atribuídos a Salomão tiveram sua origem nas expressões de outros homens sábios, e de uma mulher. (Pr 22:17; 30:1; 31:1; veja AGUR; LEMUEL.) Não se sabe com precisão quando exatamente todos estes provérbios foram ordenados em sua forma final. O último indicador de tempo que consta do próprio livro é uma referência ao reinado de Ezequias. (25:1) Assim, existe base para se crer que os provérbios já se achavam compilados em forma de livro por ocasião da morte deste governante em c. 717 AEC. A repetição de certos provérbios sugere que o livro foi compilado à base de várias coleções distintas. — Compare Pr 10:1 com 15:20; 10:2 com 11:4; 14:20 com 19:4; 16:2 com 21:2.

Estilo e Disposição Geral. O livro de Provérbios acha-se escrito em estilo poético hebraico, que consiste em pensamentos ritmados que utilizam paralelismos, cujas ideias tanto podem ser similares (Pr 11:25; 16:18; 18:15) como contrastantes. (10:7, 30; 12:25; 13:25; 15:8) A sua primeira seção (1:1–9:18) consiste de breves discursos que um pai dirige a um filho ou a filhos. Isto serve de introdução para as expressões breves e incisivas encontradas nas seções restantes do livro. Os últimos 22 versículos do livro acham-se escritos em estilo acróstico, ou alfabético, uma forma de composição também usada por Davi em vários de seus salmos. — Sal 9, 10, 25, 34, 37, 145.

Inspirado por Deus. Os escritores das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs comprovam que o livro de Provérbios faz parte da Palavra inspirada de Deus. O apóstolo Pedro (1Pe 4:18; 2Pe 2:22; Pr 11:31 [LXX]; 26:11) e o discípulo Tiago (Tg 4:6; Pr 3:34, LXX) referiram-se a ele, como também o fez o apóstolo Paulo ao escrever aos coríntios (2Co 8:21; Pr 3:4, LXX), aos romanos (Ro 12:16, 20; Pr 3:7; 25:21, 22), e aos hebreus (He 12:5, 6; Pr 3:11, 12). Adicionalmente, numerosas ideias paralelas podem ser encontradas nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs. — Compare Pr 3:7 com Ro 12:16; Pr 3:12 com Re 3:19; Pr 24:21 com 1Pe 2:17; Pr 25:6, 7 com Lu 14:7-11.

Conhecer a Jeová É o Caminho para a Vida. O livro de Provérbios fala muito sobre o conhecimento em relação ao discernimento, à sabedoria, ao entendimento e à faculdade de raciocínio. Por conseguinte, o conhecimento que ele procura transmitir e incentivar é mais do que um simples conhecimento intelectual, uma série de fatos ou erudição. Provérbios salienta que todo conhecimento verdadeiro tem como ponto de partida o apreço pela relação que a pessoa tem com Jeová. Com efeito, o capítulo 1, versículo 7, delineia o tema do livro: "O temor de Jeová é o princípio do conhecimento."

Naturalmente, o conhecimento mais importante que se pode adquirir é sobre o próprio Deus. "O conhecimento do Santíssimo é o que é entendimento", diz Provérbios 9:10. Tal conhecimento transcende ao simples fato da existência de Deus, e de ser Ele o Criador, indo mesmo além do conhecimento de muitos fatos sobre seus modos de lidar com outros. "Conhecê-lo" denota profundo apreço por Suas excelentes qualidades e por Seu grande nome, e uma relação achegada com ele.

Jesus Cristo disse aos judeus, que tinham conhecimento sobre Deus: "Ninguém conhece plenamente o Filho, exceto o Pai, tampouco há quem conheça plenamente o Pai, exceto o Filho e todo aquele a quem o Filho estiver disposto a revelá-lo." (Mt 11:27) Conhecer as qualidades de Jeová aprofundará o temor correto de Deus, e nos conscientizará de que Ele merece toda a nossa adoração e nosso serviço, e de que conhecê-lo e obedecê-lo é o caminho para a vida. "O temor de Jeová é fonte de vida para se desviar dos laços da morte", e: "O temor de Jeová tende para a vida." — Pr 14:27; 19:23.

Jeová, o Criador. Jeová, com incomparável sabedoria, é o Criador de todas as coisas e o Promulgador de leis que governam essas coisas; assim, ele merece a adoração de todas as criaturas. (Pr 3:19, 20) Ele fez o ouvido que ouve e o olho que vê, tanto em sentido literal como moral. Assim sendo, é preciso recorrer a Ele para ver e ouvir com real entendimento. E é preciso entender que somos responsáveis perante Aquele que tudo vê e ouve. — 20:12.

Justiça. O livro exalta a Jeová como o centro de todas as coisas e Aquele de quem se originam todos os princípios justos. Por exemplo: "Fiel e balança justos pertencem a Jeová; todos os pesos de pedra da bolsa são seu trabalho." (Pr 16:11) Sua vontade qual Legislador é que a honestidade e a justiça governem todas as transações. (11:1; 20:10) Por temê-lo, a pessoa aprende a amar o que Ele ama, e a odiar o que Ele odeia, e, desta forma, a tornar reto o seu modo de vida, pois "o temor de Jeová significa odiar o mal". (8:13) Provérbios revela que Jeová odeia especialmente olhos altaneiros, língua falsa, mãos que derramam sangue inocente, o coração que projeta ardis prejudiciais, pés que se apressam a correr para a maldade, a testemunha falsa e mentirosa, e aquele que cria contendas entre irmãos. (6:16-19; 12:22; 16:5) Quem verdadeiramente odeia tais coisas já está bem estabelecido no caminho da vida.

Além disso, o livro de Provérbios ilumina o caminho dos justos por mostrar o que Jeová aprova. "Os inculpes no seu caminho são um prazer para ele", como também são as orações de tais pessoas. (Pr 11:20; 15:8, 29) "O bom obtém a aprovação de Jeová." (12:2) "Ele ama aquele que se empenha pela justiça." — 15:9.

Julgamento e orientação. Quem conhece a Jeová se dá conta, através do conhecimento e da experiência, que, conforme diz Provérbios 21:30, "não há sabedoria, nem discernimento, nem conselho em oposição a Jeová". Portanto, embora talvez ouça outros planos, ou os acalente no coração, a pessoa sensata orientará seu modo de vida em harmonia com o conselho de Jeová, sabendo que conselhos contrários, não importa quão sábios ou plausíveis estes aparentam ser, não podem prevalecer contra a palavra de Jeová. — 19:21; compare isso com Jos 23:14; Mt 5:18.

O inspirado Rei Salomão disse: "Confia em Jeová de todo o teu coração . . . Nota-o em todos os teus caminhos, e ele mesmo endireitará as tuas veredas." (Pr 3:5, 6) O coração do homem escolhe o caminho que tal homem deseja trilhar, mas, mesmo quando ele escolhe o caminho correto, para ter êxito, precisa voltar-se para Jeová, a fim de que Ele dirija os seus passos. — 16:3, 9; 20:24; Je 10:23.

Tendo escolhido a vereda da vida, a pessoa deve reconhecer o vívido interesse que Jeová tem nela. Provérbios nos lembra de que os olhos de Jeová "estão em todo lugar, vigiando os maus e os bons". (Pr 15:3) "Porque os caminhos do homem estão diante dos olhos de Jeová e ele contempla todos os seus trilhos." (5:21) Jeová examina, não só o que tal homem aparenta ser, mas também seu coração. (17:3) "Jeová faz a avaliação dos corações" (21:2), e pesa o verdadeiro valor dos pensamentos, da motivação e dos desejos mais íntimos da pessoa.

Mostra-se que os julgamentos de Jeová são inteiramente corretos, em todos os sentidos, e resultam no bem dos que buscam a retidão. No devido tempo, Deus eliminará os iníquos da Terra, a morte destes sendo o preço da liberdade dos justos. Concordemente, o provérbio declara: "O iníquo é resgate para o justo; e quem age traiçoeiramente toma o lugar dos retos." (Pr 21:18) Entre tais iníquos acham-se os orgulhosos, que são detestáveis para Jeová. Eles 'não ficarão impunes'. (16:5) "A casa dos que se enaltecem, Jeová a derrubará." (15:25) Ele "roubará a alma" dos que roubam dos humildes. — 22:22, 23.

Por observar estes modos de Jeová lidar com outros, o homem de mentalidade justa torna retas as suas veredas. (Veja Pr 4:26.) Vê que permitir a parcialidade por meio de suborno (17:23) ou da influência da personalidade (18:5) faz com que a pessoa perverta o julgamento. 'Declarar justo ao iníquo e iníquo ao justo' o tornaria detestável aos olhos de Jeová. (17:15) Aprende também a não ter preconceito, mas a ouvir plenamente ambos os lados dum assunto, antes de julgá-lo. — 18:13.

Segurança com felicidade. Àquele que resguarda a sabedoria prática e o raciocínio que obtém de Jeová, o livro de Provérbios diz: "O próprio Jeová, de fato, mostrará ser tua confiança e ele certamente guardará teu pé da captura." (Pr 3:21, 26; 10:29; 14:26) Se alguém teme a Jeová, "neste caso haverá futuro". (23:17, 18) Ademais, não só existe uma esperança futura, mas há também felicidade e segurança no tempo atual. (3:25, 26) "Quando Jeová tem prazer nos caminhos de um homem, faz que até os seus próprios inimigos estejam em paz com ele." (16:7) Deus não permitirá que o justo passe fome. (10:3) Se alguém honra a Deus com as coisas valiosas que possui, seus "depósitos de suprimentos se encherão de fartura". (3:9, 10) Ele acrescenta dias à vida de tal homem. — 10:27.

Quem 'se refugia' no nome de Jeová (entendendo e reconhecendo este nome em tudo o que representa) verificará que é como uma torre forte, para a qual, nos tempos antigos, as pessoas fugiam em busca de segurança diante do inimigo. — Pr 18:10; 29:25.

A humildade perante Jeová traz "riquezas, e glória, e vida". (Pr 22:4) Misericórdia e verdade é o que ele deseja; estas são mais valiosas do que sacrifícios. Aqueles que se desviam do mal, temem a Jeová e o servem deste modo não receberão Seu julgamento adverso. (Pr 16:6; compare isso com 1Sa 15:22.) Por conhecer os modos de Jeová, pode-se seguir "o curso inteiro do que é bom". — Pr 2:9.

Visa o Coração. Para alcançar seu objetivo, o livro de Provérbios visa o coração. Mais de 75 vezes, refere-se ao coração como obtendo conhecimento, entendimento, sabedoria e discernimento; como sendo responsável por palavras e ações; ou como sendo afetado por circunstâncias e condições. Deve-se aplicar o coração ao discernimento (Pr 2:2); o coração deve observar mandamentos justos (3:1); estes devem ser escritos "na tábua do . . . coração". (3:3) "Mais do que qualquer outra coisa", deve-se resguardar o coração. (4:23) É de todo o coração que se deve confiar em Jeová. — 3:5; veja CORAÇÃO.

A disciplina e o coração. Provérbios dá muito valor à disciplina, sob várias formas. (Pr 3:11, 12) Diz: "Quem se esquiva da disciplina rejeita a sua própria alma, mas aquele que escuta a repreensão adquire coração." (15:32) Assim, a repreensão atinge o coração e o ajusta, ajudando a pessoa a adquirir bom senso ou discernimento. "Os próprios tolos estão morrendo por serem faltos de coração [sem discernimento]." (10:21) Visto ser o coração que precisa ser alcançado no treinamento dos filhos, somos informados: "A tolice está ligada ao coração do rapaz; a vara da disciplina é a que a removerá para longe dele." — 22:15.

O Espírito e a Alma. Provérbios não é um livro de declarações de mera sabedoria humana, de como agradar ou influenciar os homens. Antes, Provérbios penetra fundo no coração no que tange a este influir no raciocínio e na motivação, penetra no espírito ou na inclinação mental, e na alma, no sentido de constituir toda fibra do ser e da personalidade da pessoa. (He 4:12) Mesmo que um homem talvez julgue estar certo, ou justifique suas ações, 'todos os caminhos dum homem sendo puros aos seus próprios olhos', Provérbios 16:2 nos faz lembrar que "Jeová faz a avaliação dos espíritos", e, assim, sabe qual é a disposição da pessoa. O poder ou a força são altamente prezados no mundo, porém, "melhor é o vagaroso em irar-se do que o homem poderoso, e aquele que controla seu espírito, do que aquele que captura uma cidade". — Pr 16:32.

Obter o conhecimento e a sabedoria deste livro divinamente provido será de grande ajuda para a pessoa ser feliz na vida atual, e a colocará no caminho da vida eterna. Visto que "quem adquire coração ama a sua própria alma", os conselhos e a disciplina inspirados ali contidos, se forem seguidos, acrescentarão "longura de dias e anos de vida", e "mostrar-se-ão vida para a tua alma". (Pr 19:8; 3:2, 13-18, 21-26) "Jeová não fará que a alma do justo passe fome." (10:3) "Quem guarda o mandamento guarda a sua alma", admoesta Salomão. — 19:16.

Relacionamentos com Outros. Provérbios descreve o verdadeiro servo de Deus como alguém que usa sua língua para o bem (Pr 10:20, 21, 31, 32), não proferindo falsidades nem mesmo magoando outros com palavras impensadas. (12:6, 8, 17-19; 18:6-8, 21) Caso seja provocado, ele aplaca o furor de seu oponente com uma resposta branda. (15:1; 25:15) Não aprecia disputas, nem altercações, e exerce autodomínio para evitar acessos de ira, ciente de que poderia cometer irreparável tolice. (Pr 14:17, 29; 15:18; compare isso com Col 3:8.) De fato, evitará o companheirismo dos que permitem que a ira os controle, e que são tomados por acessos de ira, pois sabe que estes o levariam a um laço. — Pr 22:24, 25; compare isso com 13:20; 14:7; 1Co 15:33.

Faça o bem, e não o mal. Os Provérbios inspirados instam com a pessoa para que tome a iniciativa de fazer o bem aos outros. Não só deve agir para o benefício daqueles que 'moram em segurança' junto com ela, que não lhe fizeram nenhum mal (Pr 3:27-30), mas insta-se também a que retribua o mal com o bem. (25:21, 22) Deve vigiar atentamente seu coração, para que não sinta regozijo íntimo diante da calamidade advinda a alguém a quem ela despreza, ou a alguém que a odeie. — 17:5; 24:17, 18.

Tagarelice e calúnia. Muito se diz no livro de Provérbios sobre as dificuldades, o pesar e os danos resultantes da tagarelice, bem como a gravidade da culpa que pesa sobre o mexeriqueiro. O 'petisco' dum caluniador é 'engolido avidamente' por seu ouvinte, e não é encarado como de somenos importância, mas causa duradoura impressão, descendo "até as partes mais íntimas do ventre". Portanto, causa dificuldades, e quem a profere não pode 'eximir-se' da culpa. Embora tal pessoa possa parecer muito graciosa, e possa disfarçar sua verdadeira condição de coração, Deus providenciará que o ódio e a maldade que realmente existem dentro dela sejam 'descobertos na congregação'. A pessoa cairá na cova que escavou para outrem. — Pr 26:22-28.

Relações familiares. Provérbios aconselha estritamente a fidelidade conjugal. O homem deve deleitar-se na 'esposa de sua mocidade', e não buscar satisfação em outra parte. (Pr 5:15-23) O adultério trará ruína e morte aos que o praticam. (5:3-14; 6:23-35) A boa esposa é uma "coroa" e uma bênção para o marido. Mas, se a esposa age

DESTAQUES DE PROVÉRBIOS

Livro constituído de seções em forma de discursos, bem como de coleções de declarações sábias sobre assuntos práticos da vida.

Embora seja atribuído principalmente ao Rei Salomão, Provérbios só foi compilado na sua inteireza por volta da época do reinado de Ezequias.

O valor superior da sabedoria.

- Sabedoria, junto com compreensão, é a coisa principal. (4:5-8; 16:16)
- Elementos essenciais para se adquirir sabedoria. (2:1-9; 13:20)
- Benefícios resultantes da sabedoria, tais como segurança, proteção, honra e vida mais longa e mais feliz. (2:10-21; 3:13-26, 35; 9:10-12; 24:3-6, 13, 14)
- A sabedoria personificada foi o colaborador de Jeová. (8:22-31)
- As consequências amargas de se deixar de agir sabiamente. (1:24-32; 2:22; 6:12-15)

Atitude correta para com Jeová.

- Confie em Jeová. (3:5, 6; 16:20; 18:10; 29:25)
- Tema-o e evite a maldade. (3:7; 10:27; 14:26, 27; 16:6; 19:23)
- Honre-o por apoiar a adoração verdadeira. (3:9, 10)
- Aceite Sua disciplina como expressão de amor. (3:11, 12)
- Mostre apreço por Sua palavra. (3:1-4; 30:5, 6)
- Descubra o que Jeová odeia e aja em harmonia com esse conhecimento. (6:16-19; 11:20; 12:22; 16:5; 17:15; 28:9)
- Se agradarmos a Jeová, ele cuidará de nós, nos protegerá e ouvirá nossas orações. (10:3, 9, 30; 15:29; 16:3)

Conselhos excelentes para governar a vida familiar.

- A esposa capaz é uma bênção da parte de Jeová. (12:4; 14:1; 18:22; 31:10-31)
- Os pais devem treinar e disciplinar os filhos. (13:1, 24; 22:6, 15; 23:13, 14; 29:15, 17)
- Os filhos devem respeitar profundamente os pais. (1:8, 9; 4:1-4; 6:20-22; 10:1; 23:22-26; 30:17)
- Amor e paz são qualidades muito desejáveis no lar. (15:16, 17; 17:1; 19:13; 21:9, 19)
- Resista à imoralidade e estará evitando muita dor e sofrimento. (5:3-23; 6:23-35; 7:4-27; 9:13-18)

Características que devem ser cultivadas, e as que devem ser evitadas.

- Cultive consideração amorosa para com os pobres e os aflitos. (3:27, 28; 14:21, 31; 19:17; 21:13; 28:27)
- Seja generoso, evite a ganância. (11:24-26)
- Cultive a diligência; não seja preguiçoso. (6:6-11; 10:26; 13:4; 20:4; 24:30-34; 26:13-16)
- Modéstia e humildade trazem honra; presunção e orgulho conduzem à humilhação. (11:2; 16:18, 19; 25:6, 7; 29:23)
- Exerça autodomínio na questão da ira. (14:29; 16:32; 25:28; 29:11)
- Evite ter espírito maldoso ou o desejo de vingança. (20:22; 24:17, 18, 28, 29; 25:21, 22)
- Pratique a justiça em tudo. (10:2; 11:18, 19; 14:32; 21:3, 21)

Orientações práticas para a vida cotidiana.

- Corresponda corretamente à disciplina, à repreensão e ao conselho. (13:18; 15:10; 19:20; 27:5, 6)
- Seja amigo genuíno. (17:17; 18:24; 19:4; 27:9, 10)
- Seja criterioso ao aceitar hospitalidade. (23:1-3, 6-8; 25:17)
- O materialismo é fútil. (11:28; 23:4, 5; 28:20, 22)
- O trabalho árduo resulta em bênçãos. (12:11; 28:19)
- Desenvolva práticas comerciais honestas. (11:1; 16:11; 20:10, 23)
- Tome cuidado no que diz respeito a ser fiador de outros, especialmente de estranhos. (6:1-5; 11:15; 22:26, 27)
- Evite conversa prejudicial; certifique-se de que sua conversa seja edificante. (10:18-21, 31, 32; 11:13; 12:17-19; 15:1, 2, 4, 28; 16:24; 18:8)
- A lisonja é traiçoeira. (28:23; 29:5)
- Evite altercações. (3:30; 17:14; 20:3; 26:17)
- Evite más companhias. (1:10-19; 4:14-19; 22:24, 25)
- Aprenda a lidar sabiamente com zombadores, bem como com tolos. (9:7, 8; 19:25; 22:10; 26:4, 5)
- Evite as armadilhas de bebidas alcoólicas. (20:1; 23:29-35; 31:4-7)
- Não inveje os iníquos. (3:31-34; 23:17, 18; 24:19, 20)

vergonhosamente, ela é "como podridão nos . . . ossos [do marido]". (12:4) E é uma desgraça para um homem até mesmo conviver com uma esposa contenciosa. (25:24; 19:13; 21:19; 27:15, 16) Embora ela possa ser exteriormente linda e atraente, é como "uma argola de ouro, para as narinas, no focinho dum porco". (11:22; 31:20) A mulher tola realmente derruba sua própria casa. (14:1) O excelente valor da boa esposa — sua diligência, sua fidedignidade e seus cuidados da casa com fidelidade e submissão ao marido — é plenamente descrito em Provérbios, capítulo 31.

Mostra-se que os pais são plenamente responsáveis pelos filhos, e destaca-se a disciplina como essencial. (Pr 19:18; 22:6, 15; 23:13, 14; 29:15, 17) Ressalta-se a responsabilidade do pai, mas o filho tem de respeitar tanto o pai como a mãe, caso deseje vida da parte de Jeová. — 19:26; 20:20; 23:22; 30:17.

O cuidado com os animais. O livro de Provérbios considera até mesmo a preocupação com os animais domésticos. "O justo importa-se com a alma do seu animal doméstico." (Pr 12:10) "Devias conhecer positivamente a aparência do teu rebanho." — 27:23.

Estabilidade e fidelidade governamentais. Os Provérbios expressam princípios do bom governo. Homens em altas posições, tais como os reis, devem esquadrinhar os assuntos (Pr 25:2), manifestar benevolência e veracidade (20:28), e lidar de forma justa com seus súditos (29:4; 31:9), inclusive com os humildes (29:14). Seus conselheiros não podem ser homens iníquos, se o governo há de ser firmemente estabelecido pela justiça. (25:4, 5) O líder tem de ser homem de discernimento, e alguém que odeia o lucro injusto. — 28:16.

Ao passo que 'a justiça enaltece uma nação' (Pr 14:34), a transgressão resulta num governo instável. (28:2) A revolução também traz grande instabilidade, e, em Provérbios 24:21, 22, aconselha-se contra ela: "Filho meu, teme a Jeová e ao rei. Não te metas com os que estão a favor duma mudança. Porque o seu desastre surgirá tão repentinamente, que da extinção daqueles que estão a favor duma mudança quem se aperceberá?"

Úteis para Aconselhar. Visto que Provérbios abrange uma ampla gama de empenhos humanos, pode fornecer uma base para se dar muitos conselhos e admoestações práticas, como no caso dos escritores das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs. "O coração do justo medita a fim de responder." (Pr 15:28) No entanto, não é sábio aconselhar os zombadores. "Quem corrige ao zombador toma para si desonra, e quem dá repreensão a um iníquo — defeito nele. Não repreendas ao zombador, para que não te odeie. Dá repreensão ao sábio e ele te amará." (9:7, 8; 15:12; compare isso com Mt 7:6.) Nem todas as pessoas são zombadoras, e, por isso, os que se acham em posição de dar conselhos a outros devem fazê-lo, conforme destacam as seguintes palavras: "Os próprios lábios do justo estão apascentando a muitos." — Pr 10:21.

PROVÍNCIA. O termo grego e·par·khei·a, traduzido "província", refere-se à esfera de autoridade dum administrador romano. Quando Roma estendeu suas conquistas para além da península italiana, o território ou os limites geográficos dos domínios dum governador vieram a ser chamados de província.

Em 27 AEC, Augusto, o primeiro imperador romano, organizou as 22 províncias então existentes em duas categorias. As dez mais pacíficas, que não exigiam a presença constante das legiões romanas, tornaram-se províncias senatoriais. A principal autoridade romana deste tipo de província era o procônsul. (At 18:12; veja PROCÔNSUL.) As províncias restantes foram constituídas províncias imperiais, reportando-se diretamente ao imperador, e administradas por um governador, e, no caso das maiores, por um comandante militar chamado legado. As províncias imperiais não raro estavam situadas próximas às fronteiras, ou, por algum outro motivo, exigiam a presença de legiões; por controlar de perto estas províncias, o imperador mantinha o exército sob sua autoridade. Depois de 27 AEC, novas províncias formadas em resultado de territórios conquistados tornaram-se províncias imperiais. A província talvez fosse subdividida em seções ou distritos administrativos menores.

A condição duma província podia variar entre senatorial e imperial. (Veja CHIPRE.) Também, as fronteiras duma província eram às vezes ajustadas. Em resultado disso, uma cidade ou área específica podia pertencer a uma província em certa época e mais tarde fazer parte duma província adjacente, ou mesmo recém-formada. Poderá encontrar exemplos disso vendo CAPADÓCIA; CILÍCIA; PANFÍLIA; PISÍDIA.

Com o banimento de Arquelau (Mt 2:22), filho de Herodes, o Grande, a Judeia passou a ser administrada por governadores romanos. O governador da província era, até certo ponto, responsável perante o legado da província maior da Síria.

Quando Paulo foi entregue a Félix, em Cesareia, o governador "indagou de que província ele [Paulo] era, e averiguou que era da Cilícia". (At 23:34) Tarso, terra natal de Paulo, ficava na província romana da Cilícia. — At 22:3.

O governador duma província imperial era nomeado pelo imperador por um período indeterminado no cargo, diferente do procônsul duma província senatorial, que normalmente servia apenas por um ano. Félix foi substituído por Festo como governador da província imperial da Judeia. — At 25:1.

PRUMO. Fio atado a um lastro de metal, pedra ou argila, que mantinha a linha esticada e tornava possível a construção de paredes e de outras estruturas em ângulo reto ou perpendicular ao horizonte. O próprio peso é, às vezes, chamado de chumbada de prumo, ou prumo. Carpinteiros, pedreiros e outros artífices dos tempos antigos utilizavam o prumo.

Relacionado com a reconstrução do templo em Jerusalém, representa-se a Zorobabel como tendo na mão um prumo, literalmente: "a pedra [ou: o peso], o estanho", segundo o texto massorético. (Za 4:9, 10) Conforme predito, Zorobabel não só lançou o alicerce do templo, mas, sob sua supervisão, o trabalho foi concluído. — Esd 3:8-10; 6:14, 15.

Em visão, Amós contemplou Jeová postado sobre uma muralha erguida com um prumo, e, portanto, uma muralha originalmente reta e perpendicular. Jeová foi visto segurando um prumo, e se disse ao profeta que Deus estava colocando um prumo no meio do Seu povo. Visto que Israel não passou pela prova de retitude em sentido espiritual, não agindo em harmonia com os requisitos de Deus, Jeová executaria justiça e 'não mais o desculparia'. Os altos de Israel seriam desolados, seus santuários seriam devastados e Deus 'levantar-se-ia contra a casa de Jeroboão com uma espada'. (Am 7:7-9) Fiel a estas palavras, Israel foi devastado e Samaria foi destruída pelos assírios em 740 AEC.

PTOLEMAIDA [Cidade [Que Leva o Nome] de Ptolomeu]. Nome posterior de Aco. O apóstolo Paulo passou nessa cidade portuária, próxima ao monte Carmelo, quando estava a caminho de Jerusalém, por volta de 56 EC. — At 21:7; veja ACO.

PUÁ. Este nome representa dois nomes hebraicos similares que diferem em gênero e significado, mas que são grafados de forma igual na tradução em grego e em português.

1. [Pu·'ah']. Segundo filho de Issacar. — 1Cr 7:1; veja PUVA.

2. [Pu·ʽah']. Parteira hebreia que, junto com a parteira Sifrá, recebeu ordens de Faraó no sentido de matar todos os bebês do sexo masculino nascidos às hebreias. Entretanto, por temer a Deus, ela preservava vivos os bebês varões e foi abençoada por Jeová por ela mesma ter filhos. — Êx 1:15-21.

3. [Pu·'ah']. Pai do juiz Tola e filho de Dodo; da tribo de Issacar. — Jz 10:1.

PUBLICANO. Veja COBRADOR DE IMPOSTOS.

PÚBLIO [do lat., significando "Popular"]. Rico proprietário de terras, residente em Malta, que bondosamente acolheu Paulo e os que estavam com ele, durante três dias, depois de sofrerem naufrágio naquela ilha. Paulo, por sua vez, curou a febre e a disenteria do pai de Públio. — At 28:7, 8.

Públio era o "homem de destaque da ilha". Neste caso, tal denominação parece indicar um título oficial comparável ao de governador, indicando provavelmente a principal autoridade romana na ilha.

PUDENTE [do lat., significando "Modesto"]. Companheiro de Paulo perto do fim da vida do apóstolo. Enviou cumprimentos a Timóteo. — 2Ti 4:21.

PUL.

1. Nome dado ao rei da Assíria em 2 Reis 15:19 e em 1 Crônicas 5:26. Durante o reinado de Menaém, rei de Israel, Pul invadiu a Palestina e recebeu tributo de Menaém. A questão da identidade de Pul ficou pendente durante muito tempo. Entretanto, a maioria dos eruditos conclui agora que Pul e Tiglate-Pileser III, da Assíria, eram a mesma pessoa, uma vez que o nome Pulu (Pul) é encontrado na tabuinha dinástica conhecida como Lista de Reis A, babilônica, ao passo que no lugar correspondente da "Crônica Sincronística" acha-se alistado o nome Tukultiapilesharra (Tiglate-Pileser). (Ancient Near Eastern Texts [Textos Antigos do Oriente Próximo], editado por J. Pritchard, 1974, pp. 272, 273) "Pul" talvez tenha sido seu nome pessoal ou o nome pelo qual era conhecido em Babilônia, ao passo que Tiglate-Pileser (Tilgate-Pilneser) era o nome que ele assumiu ao tornar-se rei da Assíria. Com esse entendimento, pode-se ler 1 Crônicas 5:26 como se referindo à mesma pessoa, quando diz: "Pul, o rei da Assíria, e . . . Tilgate-Pilneser, rei da Assíria." — Veja TIGLATE-PILESER (III).

2. País ou povo alistado somente em Isaías 66:19, junto com Társis (pelo visto o sul da Espanha) e Lude (no N da África). Evidentemente, todos os três lugares eram notórios por seus arqueiros peritos. Desconhece-se a exata localização de Pul. A Septuaginta grega reza "Phud" ou "Pute" em Isaías 66:19 em vez de "Pul", e Pute (identificada com os líbios na África) e Lude são vinculados em outros textos. (Ez 27:10; Je 46:9; veja PUTE.) Entretanto, a versão "Pul" do texto massorético é apoiada pelo Rolo do Mar Morto de Isaías e pela Pesito siríaca. Alguns eruditos têm sugerido que "Pul" era a ilha Philae, no Nilo.

PULGA [hebr.: par·ʽósh]. Pequenino inseto parasítico desprovido de asas. As pulgas são, em geral, de cor marrom-avermelhado, e as pernas dianteiras e do meio são curtas, mas as pernas posteriores são compridas. As pernas fortes e espinhosas da pulga, bem como suas laterais comprimidas, a habilitam a mover-se com facilidade e rapidez por entre os pelos ou as penas do hospedeiro. As curtas cerdas voltadas para trás, deste inseto com corpo em formato oval, não só permitem à pulga mover-se com facilidade para frente, mas também torna mais difícil para a vítima removê-la. A pequena cabeça da pulga é dotada dum aparelho bucal picador usado para furar a pele da vítima, fazendo o sangue fluir. Sua capacidade de saltar é fenomenal. Embora tenha menos de 3 mm de comprimento, a pulga que vive nos humanos é capaz de saltar mais de 30 cm em sentido horizontal e quase 20 cm em sentido vertical. A variedade de pulga mencionada na Bíblia é provavelmente a chamada Pulex irritans.

As Escrituras só mencionam a pulga duas vezes. Quando Davi estava sendo perseguido pelo Rei Saul, ele perguntou ao rei: "No encalço de quem vais? . . . Atrás de uma única pulga?" Por comparar-se a uma pulga, Davi enfatizou sua pequenez em relação a Saul, indicando assim que dificilmente valeria a pena o rei ir no encalço dele. (1Sa 24:14) Primeiro Samuel 26:20 transmite uma ideia similar, mas, na Septuaginta grega as palavras "uma única pulga" são vertidas "minha alma".

PULSEIRA, BRACELETE. Argola decorativa usada no pulso ou no antebraço, formando às vezes um círculo completo, embora em outros casos estivesse aberta ou tivesse um fecho. Nos tempos antigos, tanto homens como mulheres usavam pulseiras, às vezes apenas em um dos braços, mas, vez por outra, em ambos. As pulseiras antigas eram feitas de bronze, de vidro, de ferro, de prata e de ouro, e não raro eram muitíssimo adornadas, sendo às vezes cravejadas de pedras preciosas.

Os hebreus usavam pulseiras e seu uso era generalizado desde os tempos antigos, na Palestina, onde os arqueólogos têm encontrado muitas, feitas de materiais diversos, especialmente de bronze. O servo de Abraão deu a Rebeca uma argola de ouro para as narinas e também duas pulseiras (hebr.: tsemi·dhím), pesando dez siclos (114 g) de ouro. (Gên 24:22, 30, 47) Entre os itens tirados como despojos de guerra dos midianitas havia pulseiras, que se achavam entre os artigos valiosos que os israelitas ofertaram a Deus. — Núm 31:50.

Por intermédio de Ezequiel, Deus representou a si mesmo como enfeitando Jerusalém com pulseiras e outros ornamentos. Mas, visto que ela usara tais belos artigos de forma idólatra e se prostituíra, Jeová predisse que a puniria e lhe tiraria essas coisas. (Ez 16:11, 17, 38, 39) Os braceletes (hebr.: sheh·róhth) achavam-se entre as coisas que Jeová disse que tiraria das soberbas "filhas de Sião". — Is 3:16, 19.

Monarcas usavam um bracelete ou pulseira no braço (hebr.: 'ets·ʽa·dháh) como uma de suas insígnias de autoridade régia ou de poder soberano. O bracelete que o Rei Saul, de Israel, usava no braço talvez tivesse tal significado. — 2Sa 1:10; veja ENFEITES (ORNAMENTOS).

PUNIÇÃO. Veja CRIME E PUNIÇÃO.

PUNITAS [De (Pertencentes a) Puva ou Puá]. A família de descendentes do segundo filho de Issacar, Puva. — Núm 26:23.

PUNOM. Lugar de acampamento, situado entre Zalmona e Obote, ao qual Israel chegou algum tempo depois de partir do monte Hor (Jebel Madurah [?]). (Núm 33:41-43) Sua localização não foi determinada com certeza, mas é em geral identificada com Feinan, uns 30 km ao SE de ʽAin Husb.

PUPILA. Veja MENINA DO OLHO.

PUPILO. Este termo significa alguém que aprende ou que assimila instrução, um discípulo. Assim, algumas versões da Bíblia usam-no para traduzir a palavra grega ma·the·tés, como em Lucas 6:40 (NE, TEV, AT), sendo que outras traduzem-no por "aluno" (BLH, NM). Quanto ao sentido, veja DISCÍPULO.

PUR. Palavra não hebraica encontrada em Ester 3:7 e 9:24, 26; significa "sorte" (hebr.: goh·rál; veja SORTE). Trata-se da forma singular; o plural é "Purim". (Est 9:26, 28-32) "Pur" está vinculada a uma palavra acadiana, puru, que significa "sorte". Deu origem ao nome da festa judaica de Purim. — Veja PURIM.

PURA. O ajudante, provavelmente o escudeiro, de Gideão que o acompanhou durante a noite em espionar o acampamento midianita. — Jz 7:9-15.

PURIFICAÇÃO. Veja LIMPO, LIMPEZA.

PURIM. Festividade celebrada nos dias 14 e 15 de adar, o último mês do ano judaico, que corresponde a fins de fevereiro e princípios de março; chamada também de Festividade das Sortes. (Est 9:21) O nome provém da ação de Hamã em lançar pur (a sorte) para determinar o dia auspicioso para levar a cabo uma conspiração para exterminar os judeus. Sendo agagita, talvez um amalequita real, e adorador de deidades pagãs, ele recorria a isto como "uma espécie de adivinhação". (Est 3:7, Le n; veja ADIVINHAÇÃO; PUR; SORTE.) No 12.º ano do Rei Assuero (Xerxes I), em 13 de nisã, pelo visto na primavera do hemisfério setentrional de 484 AEC, o decreto oficial de extermínio que Hamã havia induzido o rei a aprovar foi preparado para todas as províncias persas, ordenando a destruição dos judeus.

Comemoração do Livramento. A festividade comemora o livramento dos judeus da destruição que resultaria da conspiração de Hamã. Consequentemente, o nome Purim foi provavelmente dado pelos judeus de forma irônica. (Est 9:24-26) É também chamada no livro apócrifo de Macabeus de "dia de Mardoqueu", uma vez que Mordecai (Mardoqueu) desempenhou importante papel nos eventos relativos à festividade. (2 Macabeus 15:36, BV) Mediante os esforços da Rainha Ester, arriscando a vida e sob a orientação de seu primo mais velho, Mordecai, os judeus foram livrados. Ester jejuou por três dias antes de tentar conseguir uma audiência com o rei, a fim de convidá-lo para um banquete, e, daí, para um segundo banquete, onde pudesse apresentar seu pedido. (Est 4:6–5:8) O pedido foi acolhido favoravelmente e, visto que o decreto original não podia ser alterado, por causa da lei imutável dos medos e dos persas (Da 6:8), emitiu-se outro decreto no dia 23 de sivã. Este documento concedia aos judeus o direito de se defenderem, e possibilitou que se preparassem para isso. Foi redigido por Mordecai e traduzido em muitas línguas para os diversos distritos do Império Persa. Os judeus lutaram — com a ajuda dos príncipes, dos sátrapas e dos governadores — e houve uma troca de posições para os inimigos antijudeus. Ocorreu em 13 de adar uma grande matança, não de judeus, mas de seus inimigos. Esta prosseguiu na cidade real de Susã, até o dia 14. No dia 14 de adar, os judeus nos distritos jurisdicionais descansaram, e os em Susã no dia 15, banqueteando-se e regozijando-se. — Est 8:3–9:19.

A fim de comemorar tal livramento, Mordecai impôs aos judeus a obrigação de celebrarem os dias 14 e 15 de adar de cada ano com 'banquetes e alegria, e o envio de porções uns aos outros, e de dádivas aos pobres'. (Est 9:20-22) Mais tarde, outra carta foi escrita com a confirmação de Ester, a rainha, ordenando que se celebrasse esta festividade. Devia ser realizada em cada geração, família, distrito jurisdicional e cidade na época estipulada de cada ano. — Est 9:28-31; veja ESTER, LIVRO DE.

A festividade é celebrada pelos judeus até os dias de hoje, de forma minuciosa, com muitos acréscimos. Uma das ampliações tradicionais que surgiram com o passar do tempo foi a de se reservar o dia 13 de adar como um dia de jejum, chamado de Jejum de Ester. Durante esta festividade não se proíbe o comércio ou o trabalho.

Uma Pergunta sobre João 5:1. Não existe nenhuma menção direta da Festividade de Purim nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs. Alguns têm afirmado que há uma referência a ela em João 5:1: "Depois destas coisas houve uma festividade dos judeus, e Jesus subiu a Jerusalém." Todavia, a aplicação deste versículo à Festividade de Purim não tem base sólida. Certos manuscritos têm o artigo definido, rezando: "a festividade dos judeus". (Veja NM n.) Isto indicaria que devia tratar-se de uma das três festividades periódicas solenes alistadas em Deuteronômio 16:16, especialmente quando notamos que Jesus subiu a Jerusalém, o que não seria necessário para celebrar a Festividade de Purim. Purim estava relacionada mais com a sinagoga local e com a região local do que com o templo; a festividade devia ser celebrada na cidade onde se residia. É também improvável que Jesus percorresse a pé todo o caminho até Jerusalém e depois partisse novamente para a Galileia, restando apenas um mês para a Páscoa. Ademais, adotando-se o conceito de que João 5:1 se refere a Purim e João 6:4 à Páscoa um mês mais tarde, isto situaria um impossível número de eventos neste curto espaço de tempo, pois incluiria o ministério de Jesus em Cafarnaum, viagens na Galileia, e um retorno a Cafarnaum e à Judeia e a Jerusalém. (Veja JESUS CRISTO [Tabela de Principais Eventos da Vida Terrestre de Jesus].) Portanto, há motivos para se crer que a "festividade dos judeus" mencionada em João 5:1 era na realidade a festividade da Páscoa de 31 EC. — Veja JESUS CRISTO (Evidência a favor dum ministério de três anos e meio).

Objetivo. Embora alguns comentaristas digam que a Festividade de Purim, conforme celebrada pelos judeus da atualidade, tem um cunho mais secular do que religioso, sendo às vezes acompanhada de excessos, isso não se deu na época em que foi instituída, nem nas primitivas celebrações. Tanto Mordecai como Ester eram servos do verdadeiro Deus Jeová, e a festividade foi instituída em honra a Ele. A libertação dos judeus naquele tempo pode ser atribuída a Jeová Deus, pois a questão surgiu em razão da integridade de Mordecai, por este prestar adoração exclusiva a Jeová. Hamã era provavelmente um amalequita, cuja nação Jeová especificamente amaldiçoara e condenara à destruição. Mordecai respeitava o decreto de Deus, de modo que se recusava a dobrar-se diante de Hamã. (Est 3:2, 5; Êx 17:14-16) Também, as palavras de Mordecai a Ester (Est 4:14) indicam que ele contava com um poder mais elevado para conseguir a libertação dos judeus, e jejuar Ester antes de entrar na presença do rei com seu pedi-do original, o convite para um banquete, indica que apelava para ajuda de Deus. — Est 4:16.

PÚRPURA. Veja CORANTES, TINGIR; CORES.

PUTE. "Filho" de Cã. (Gên 10:6; 1Cr 1:8) Embora Pute seja mencionado em outras partes da Bíblia, nenhum de seus descendentes é mencionado por nome. Não raro, os descendentes dele deram apoio militar ao Egito. (Je 46:9; Ez 30:4-6; Na 3:9) Serviam como mercenários nos exércitos de Tiro e contribuíram para a grandeza daquela cidade. (Ez 27:3, 10) Predisse-se também que Pute estaria entre as forças de Gogue, de Magogue. — Ez 38:5.

A evidência disponível aponta para uma ligação entre Pute e os líbios, do N da África. Em três de suas ocorrências, "Pute" é traduzido "líbios" na Septuaginta grega e na Vulgata latina. (Je 46:9; Ez 27:10; 38:5) O hebraico Pute corresponde também de perto ao vocábulo put[i]ja (geralmente considerado como a Líbia), em inscrições no antigo persa. No entanto, Naum 3:9 parece indicar que Pute e os Lu·vím (líbios) são povos distintos. Mas isto, em si, não eliminaria a identificação de Pute com os líbios. O termo "líbios" talvez fosse mais abrangente do que a denominação hebraica Lu·vím, como se pode deduzir da referência feita por Heródoto (Clássicos Jackson, Vol. XXIII, II, 32) aos "líbios e . . . diversas nações líbias".

A identificação de Pute com o "Punt" das inscrições egípcias, em geral, não é hoje aceita por razões fonéticas.

PUTÉOLI. No primeiro século EC, um dos principais portos ao SE de Roma. Paulo chegou a Putéoli a caminho de comparecer perante César, em Roma, por volta do ano 59 EC. (At 28:13) Com a ajuda dum vento S, seu navio chegou "no segundo dia" a Putéoli, vindo de Régio, lugar situado a uns 320 km ao SSE.

Os irmãos cristãos em Putéoli suplicaram para que Paulo e os que o acompanhavam passassem uma semana com eles. (At 28:14) Isto indica que ele usufruía de certa liberdade, embora fosse prisioneiro. Anteriormente, quando estava sob custódia em Cesareia e em Sídon, Paulo havia similarmente gozado de limitada liberdade. — At 24:23; 27:3.

Putéoli é geralmente identificada com a atual Pozzuoli, situada na baía do mesmo nome, uns 10 km a OSO de Nápoles. Ainda podem ser vistas extensas ruínas de um antigo molhe. Josefo chama o lugar pelo seu nome antigo, Dicearquia, e diz que ali se localizava uma colônia judaica. — Jewish Antiquities (Antiguidades Judaicas), XVII, 328 (xii, 1).

PUTIEL. Sogro do filho de Arão, Eleazar, e avô de Fineias. — Êx 6:25.

PUTITAS. Família que morava em Quiriate-Jearim; descendentes de Judá por intermédio de Sobal. — 1Cr 2:52, 53.

PUVA. Filho de Issacar cujos descendentes foram chamados de punitas. (Gên 46:13; Núm 26:23) Seu nome é grafado Puá em 1 Crônicas 7:1.

Q

QUADRIS. Região lombar externa até a parte mais estreita das costas. A palavra hebraica moth·ná·yim é geralmente traduzida "quadris" ou "lombos", embora exista outro vocábulo hebraico que significa, mais especificamente, "lombos". — Veja LOMBOS.

Usava-se com frequência um cinto nos quadris, especialmente no caso do soldado, que enfiava uma espada ou punhal embainhado sob o cinto, ou prendia nele a bainha da espada. (2Sa 20:8; Ne 4:18) O escrivão usava o tinteiro preso nos quadris, colocado sob seu cinto ou faixa. (Ez 9:2) Usava-se pano de saco, ou serapilheira, em torno dos quadris, como sinal de pranto. — Gên 37:34; Am 8:10.

Antes de se empenhar em alguma forma de atividade física vigorosa, a pessoa 'cingia os quadris', amiúde passando por entre as pernas as pontas de sua veste solta, esvoaçante, e enfiando-as sob a faixa. No Egito, os israelitas comeram a Páscoa com os quadris cingidos, prontos para marchar para fora do país. Elias estava similarmente preparado quando correu adiante do carro de Acabe. — Êx 12:11; 1Rs 18:46.

Emprego Figurado. Os músculos na região dos quadris desempenham um grande papel em se erguer e transportar cargas pesadas; assim sendo, é apropriada a declaração no Salmo 66:11, "fizeste pressão sobre os nossos quadris". Fortalecer os quadris denotaria aprontar-se para exercer poder, tal como numa luta. (Na 2:1) Diz-se que a boa esposa cinge os quadris com força e fortifica seus braços para executar suas numerosas atividades, visando o bem-estar da família. (Pr 31:17) Inversamente, diz-se que aqueles que, pelo temor, pela aflição ou pela derrota, foram reduzidos a uma condição debilitada apresentam quadris vacilantes ou trêmulos. (Sal 69:23; Ez 21:6; 29:7) Descingir os quadris de reis significa remover-lhes a força. — Is 45:1.

Jeová mencionou as casas de Israel e de Judá como tendo sido semelhantes a um cinto em seus quadris, tão próximas de si mesmo ele as mantinha, a fim de se tornarem para ele um louvor e algo belo. (Je 13:11) Jesus Cristo é representado profeticamente como reinando com a justiça por cinto de seus quadris e a fidelidade por cinto de seus lombos. Isto pode referir-se a que todos os poderes ativos de Jesus Cristo aderem invariavelmente à justiça e à fidelidade. Como um cinto que proporciona apoio, a qualidade moral da justiça fortalece-o para atuar como Juiz designado de Jeová. — Is 11:1, 5.

QUEBAR [do babilônio, significando "Grande (Canal)"]. "Rio" "na terra dos caldeus", perto do qual os judeus da comunidade de Tel-Abibe foram exilados. (Ez 1:1-3; 3:15) Ao mencionar o "rio Quebar", Ezequiel empregou o termo hebraico na·hár (traduzido "rio"), pelo visto em seu sentido mais amplo, de modo a incluir os numerosos canais babilônicos que outrora cruzavam a fértil área entre os cursos inferiores dos rios Eufrates e Tigre. Tal emprego seria coerente com a correspondente palavra babilônica, que também descreve quer um rio, quer um canal. A localização exata do Quebar é desconhecida.

Todavia, a maioria dos geógrafos bíblicos liga o "rio Quebar" com o Shatt en-Nil, que tem sido identificado com o naru Kabaru (ou "Grande Canal") mencionado em tabuinhas cuneiformes de contrato encontradas na cidade de Nipur, cerca de 85 km ao SE de Babilônia. O Shatt en-Nil se separa do Eufrates acima de Babilônia e corre em direção ao SE, passando próximo a Nipur, para unir-se novamente ao Eufrates ao S de Ur, cerca de 240 km abaixo de Babilônia.

Em 613 AEC, Tel-Abibe, próximo ao rio Quebar, foi o lugar da primeira visão registrada do profeta Ezequiel, cujos efeitos assombrosos perduraram sete dias, e de seu comissionamento como "vigia para a casa de Israel". (Ez 1:1–3:21) Visões similares em ocasiões posteriores fizeram o profeta lembrar-se de sua experiência em Quebar. — Ez 10:15, 20, 22; 43:3.

QUEDAR [duma raiz que significa "ser escuro"].

1. Um dos 12 filhos de Ismael. — Gên 25:13-15; 1Cr 1:29-31.

2. Tribo árabe, que descendia de Quedar, filho de Ismael, e que era classificada com "os filhos do Oriente". Sua terra é também chamada de Quedar. (Je 2:10; 49:28, 29) Os quedaritas, um povo nômade e pastoril que possuía manadas de ovelhas, de cabras e de camelos (Is 60:7; Je 49:28, 29), evidentemente habitavam o deserto siro-arábico ao L da Palestina, na parte NO da península da Arábia. A referência aos "povoados habitados por Quedar" (Is 42:11), embora possivelmente se refira aos acampamentos temporários, pode, em vez disso, indicar que parte deles, de alguma forma, fixara residência. Talvez devido à sua importância entre as tribos árabes, o nome de Quedar, em épocas posteriores, passou a aplicar-se às tribos desérticas em geral. Nos targuns e na literatura rabínica, a própria Arábia é às vezes chamada de Quedar.

A jovem sulamita, de O Cântico de Salomão, comparou sua aparência trigueira às "tendas de Quedar" (Cân 1:5, 6; compare isso com Sal 120:5), estas provavelmente sendo feitas do pelame da cabra-negra, como o são as tendas de muitos beduínos da atualidade. A profecia de Ezequiel menciona os "maiorais de Quedar", junto com os árabes, como sendo mercadores de cordeiros, de carneiros e de cabritos para a cidade comercial de Tiro. — Ez 27:21.

Durante o período do domínio da Assíria no Oriente Médio, o profeta Isaías predisse o súbito declínio da glória de Quedar, seus poderosos arqueiros sendo reduzidos a um simples restante. (Is 21:16, 17) Os quedaritas são, evidentemente, os qidri ou qadri mencionados nos registros assírios de campanhas bélicas. O rei assírio Assurbanipal os inclui junto com os aribi (árabes) e Nebaiote (veja Is 60:7) no relato duma campanha, e se jacta dos jumentos, dos camelos e das ovelhas tomadas deles como despojo.

Numa época posterior, Nabucodonosor, rei de Babilônia, golpeou Quedar. (Je 49:28, 29) A conquista do N da Arábia, por esse monarca, é mencionada pelo historiador babilônio Beroso, citado por Josefo. — Against Apion (Contra Apião), I, 129, 133 (19).

Uma tigela de prata (considerada como do quinto século AEC), encontrada em Tell el-Maskhutah, no Egito, estampa a seguinte inscrição aramaica: "Qainu bar [filho de] Gesem [Gesém], rei de Qedar [Quedar]." O Gesém que se tem presente neste caso pode ser "Gesém, o árabe", que se opôs à obra de reconstrução da muralha de Jerusalém, nos dias de Neemias. — Ne 2:19; 6:1, 2, 6.

Registros assírios indicam que, no santuário do Rei Hazail, de Quedar, havia imagens das seguintes deidades falsas: Atarsamain (os assírios a identificavam com Istar Dilbat), Dai, Nahai, Ruldaiu, Atarquruma e Abirillu. Uma estrela de ouro decorada com pedras preciosas servia como símbolo da deusa Atarsamain. De acordo com o Talmude Babilônico (Ta'anit 5*b*), o povo de Quedar também adorava a água.

QUEDEMÁ [Para o Leste; em Direção ao Leste]. Filho de Ismael, citado por último em Gênesis 25:15 e em 1 Crônicas 1:31. Em cumprimento da promessa que Jeová fez a Abraão (Gên 17:20), Quedemá foi um dos 12 maiorais produzidos por Ismael.

QUEDEMOTE [duma raiz que significa "leste"]. Nome aplicado a uma cidade situada ao L do Jordão, e, pelo visto, também ao ermo que a circundava. Foi do ermo de Quedemote que Moisés enviou mensageiros ao rei amorreu Síon, solicitando permissão para passar pela sua terra. (De 2:26, 27) Dada originalmente aos rubenitas, Quedemote foi mais tarde designada aos levitas meraritas. (Jos 13:15, 18; 21:34, 36, 37; 1Cr 6:77-79) Os peritos geralmente favorecem como possível identificação um tel próximo de onde começa o vale da torrente do Árnon, tal como Qasr ez-Za'faran, situado cerca de 16 km ao NE do que se pensa ser o local da antiga Díbon.

QUEDES [Lugar Santo].

1. Cidade no S de Judá (Jos 15:21, 23), possivelmente a mesma que Cades-Barneia. — Veja CADES, CADES-BARNEIA.

2. Cidade de Naftali dada aos gersonitas e reservada como cidade de refúgio. (Jos 20:7; 21:32, 33; 1Cr 6:71, 76) Devido à sua localização, era também chamada de "Quedes-Naftali" (Jz 4:6) e "Quedes na Galileia". (Jos 20:7) Sendo pelo visto residência do Juiz Baraque, Quedes serviu de ponto de reunião para seus 10.000 homens de Naftali e Zebulão antes de sua vitória sobre o exército cananeu chefiado por Sísera. (Jz 4:6, 10) Séculos mais tarde, a cidade foi conquistada pelo rei assírio Tiglate-Pileser III durante o reinado do Rei Peca, de Israel (c. 778-759 AEC). — 2Rs 15:29.

Quedes tem sido identificada com Tell Qades (Tel Qedesh), uma elevação que dá para uma pequena e fértil planície uns 20 km ao SO de Dã.

3. Local em Issacar designado aos "filhos de Gersom" (1Cr 6:71, 72), aparentemente o mesmo que "Quisiom" mencionado na lista paralela em Josué 21:28. Tell Abu Qedeis (Tel Qedesh), uns 4 km ao SE de Megido, tem sido sugerido como possível identificação. Isto pareceria ajustar-se a Josué 12:21, 22, onde Quedes parece ser colocado nos arredores de Megido e Jocneão. Uma vez que Baraque derrotou Sísera na região de Megido (Jz 5:19), pode ter sido perto deste Quedes (e não do N.º 2) que Jael matou Sísera, chefe do exército cananeu, em sua tenda. — Jz 4:11, 17, 21.

QUEDORLAOMER. Rei do antigo Elão que, antes da entrada de Abraão na Terra da Promessa, em 1943 AEC, estendera seu poder para o O, até as fronteiras do Egito. Depois de 12 anos de servidão, cinco reis nas proximidades do extremo S do Mar Morto se rebelaram contra seu senhor oriental. No 14.º ano, Quedorlaomer e três aliados, Anrafel, de Sinear, Arioque, de Elasar, e Tidal, de Goim, foram ao O para debelar a rebelião. Iniciando no N e avançando avassaladoramente em direção ao S, derrotaram cidades ao longo das rotas comerciais ao L do Jordão, e ao S do Mar Morto, no território mais tarde ocupado pelos amalequitas. Foi então fácil pôr em fuga os cinco reis que constituíam o âmago da insurreição.

Entre os cativos de Quedorlaomer achava-se o sobrinho de Abraão, Ló, que morava ali próximo. Abraão, ao saber disto, partiu rapidamente em ardente perseguição, junto com 318 servos armados. Em Dã, eles surpreenderam as forças inimigas bem superiores, e, com êxito, perseguiram-nas até Hobá, ao N de Damasco, recuperando Ló e os bens dele. — Gên 14:1-17.

O nome de Quedorlaomer não foi encontrado nas listagens dos antigos governantes de Elão, mas é reconhecido como elamita. Kudur, uma possível variação de Quedor, aparece em muitos nomes compostos. Lagamar, que apresenta uma semelhança com laomer, era uma deidade elamita.

QUEELATA [duma raiz que significa "congregação"]. Um dos lugares onde os israelitas acamparam enquanto peregrinavam no ermo. (Núm 33:22, 23) Sua localização exata é hoje desconhecida.

QUEFAR-AMONI [Aldeia dos Amonitas]. Cidade na herança tribal de Benjamim. (Jos 18:21, 24) A localização é incerta; alguns a ligam com Khirbet Kefr ʽAna, lugar arruinado uns 5 km ao NNE de Betel.

QUEFIRA [Aldeia]. Cidade heveia (Jos 9:7, 17) e uma das quatro cidades representadas pelos embaixadores gibeonitas que afirmaram falsamente provir duma terra distante e que por meio desse ardil conseguiram concluir um pacto com os israelitas chefiados por Josué. (Jos 9:3-27) Quefira é hoje facilmente identificável com as impressionantes ruínas desabitadas em Khirbet Kefireh, 7 km ao OSO de el-Jib (Gibeão) no cume do que outrora era uma série de terraços armados. Essa posição estratégica de Quefira servia para impedir que forças inimigas se aproximassem de Gibeão pelo lado O. Por ocasião da distribuição de terras, Quefira entrou na herança de Benjamim (Jos 18:26), e após o exílio estava entre aquelas cidades que foram repovoadas. — Esd 2:1, 25; Ne 7:29.

QUEIJO. Jó, em linguagem poética, descreveu de forma figurada como ele havia sido formado no ventre de sua mãe, dizendo ao Grandioso Criador: "Não passaste a despejar-me como o próprio leite e a coalhar-me como o queijo?" — Jó 10:10.

A fabricação de queijo diferia da fabricação da manteiga; esta última era obtida por se bater a nata. Para a fabricação de queijo, nos tempos antigos, o leite era rapidamente coalhado com coalho do estômago dum animal ou com o sumo de certas folhas ou raízes. Depois de coalhado, escoava-se o soro e comia-se a coalhada fresca.

Davi foi instruído a levar "dez porções de leite" ao chefe dos 1.000, sob o qual serviam seus irmãos, no exército de Saul. (1Sa 17:17, 18) A leitura literal original é "dez pedaços de leite", que pode ter significado "dez queijos de leite fresco". A Vulgata latina reza "dez pequenas formas [ou moldes] de queijo". Durante a guerra civil instigada por Absalão, amigos enviaram a Davi provisões alimentícias, incluindo "requeijão de gado vacum", e este pode também ter sido queijos macios. — 2Sa 17:29.

QUEILA. Cidade fortificada de Judá na Sefelá. (Jos 15:20, 33, 44; 1Sa 23:7) Queila foi talvez fundada, ou, certa vez, governada por algum(ns) calebita(s). (1Cr 4:15, 19) É comumente identificada com Khirbet Qila (Qeila), situada num morro cerca de 14 km ao NO de Hébron. Assim como na região da antiga Queila, cultivam-se hoje cereais nos arredores de Khirbet Qila. — Veja 1Sa 23:1.

Davi, enquanto foragido do Rei Saul, salvou Queila de cair diante dos filisteus. Contudo, depois ele e seus homens tiveram de fugir da cidade para evitar serem entregues ao exército de Saul pelos proprietários de terras de Queila. — 1Sa 23:5, 8-13.

A cidade foi reocupada após o exílio babilônico. Por ocasião dos reparos nas muralhas de Jerusalém sob a direção de Neemias, o distrito de Queila estava dividido em duas partes, cada uma com seu próprio "príncipe". — Ne 3:17, 18.

QUELAÍAS. Outro nome do levita Quelita, contemporâneo de Esdras, o sacerdote. — Esd 10:23; veja QUELITA N.º 1.

QUELAL [Perfeição]. Ex-exilado dos "filhos de Paate-Moabe" entre aqueles que despediram suas esposas estrangeiras segundo as instruções de Esdras. — Esd 10:16, 17, 30, 44.

QUELITA [possivelmente derivado duma raiz que significa "curto demais" [isto é, ananicado]].

1. Um dos levitas dos dias de Esdras que reconheceram sua culpa por terem tomado esposas estrangeiras, e, portanto, as despediram. Ele também é chamado de Quelaías. (Esd 10:23, 44) Possivelmente o mesmo que os N.º 2 e 3.

2. Levita que auxiliou Esdras a 'explicar a lei ao povo' em 455 AEC. — Ne 8:7, 8; veja N.º 1.

3. Levita cujo descendente, se não ele próprio, atestou com selo o "arranjo fidedigno" do tempo de Neemias. (Ne 9:38; 10:1, 9, 10) Se foi o próprio Quelita, em vez de um descendente, que esteve presente quando se concluiu esse acordo, pode ter sido o mesmo que o N.º 1 ou o N.º 2.

QUELUBAI. Veja CALEBE N.º 1.

QUELUBE [Cesto; Gaiola].

1. Descendente de Judá; irmão de Suá e pai de Meir. (1Cr 4:1, 11) A tradução do nome como "Quelube" baseia-se no texto massorético e aparece dessa forma em algumas traduções. (Al, BLH, IBB, NM) Todavia, ele é chamado de "Calebe" na Septuaginta grega, na Pesito siríaca e na Vulgata latina (recensão clementina), e, portanto, essa forma é encontrada nas traduções de Knox e de Lamsa.

2. Pai de Ezri, que servia sob o Rei Davi como superintendente dos que cultivavam os campos. — 1Cr 27:26.

QUELUÍ. Descendente de Bani; um dos que despediram suas esposas estrangeiras no tempo de Esdras. — Esd 10:34, 35, 44.

QUEMÓS. Principal deidade dos moabitas, que são mencionados como o "povo de Quemós". (Núm 21:29; Je 48:46) Alguns peritos identificam esta deidade com o Baal de Peor por causa da associação deste último com os moabitas. (Núm 25:1-3) Mesmo que isso não fosse uma prática habitual, pelo menos em casos de extrema tensão, filhos eram provavelmente sacrificados a Quemós. — 2Rs 3:26, 27.

A estela de basalto negro, conhecida comumente como Pedra Moabita, erigida pelo Rei Mesa, de Moabe, para comemorar sua revolta contra Israel, ajuda a entender melhor como os moabitas encaravam seu deus, Quemós. De acordo com este monumento, Quemós concedia as vitórias em batalha, e a guerra era travada sob suas ordens. O Rei Mesa atribuiu a Quemós a libertação relativa à opressão israelita, e raciocinou que a real aflição às mãos de Onri, rei de Israel, se devia à ira do deus contra sua terra.

Jefté referiu-se a Quemós como o deus dos amonitas. (Jz 11:24) Alguns peritos questionam a exatidão desta declaração de Jefté, visto que Quemós, em outros lugares, é relacionado sempre com os moabitas. Contudo, é preciso lembrar-se de que os amonitas adoravam inúmeros deuses. (Jz 10:6) Ademais, considerando que os amonitas e os moabitas eram povos vizinhos, possuindo ancestrais comuns, por meio de Ló, sobrinho de Abraão, não existe nada de incomum em ambas as nações adorarem a Quemós.

A adoração de Quemós foi evidentemente introduzida em Israel durante o reinado de Salomão. Sem dúvida sob a influência de suas esposas moabitas, Salomão construiu um alto para Quemós, "no monte que estava defronte de Jerusalém". (1Rs 11:1, 7, 8, 33) Durante a extensa reforma religiosa realizada por Josias, mais de três séculos depois, fez-se com que este alto se tornasse impróprio para adoração. — 2Rs 23:13.

O profeta Jeremias, ao predizer calamidade para Moabe, indicou que o principal deus dela, Quemós, bem como seus sacerdotes e príncipes, iriam para o exílio. Os moabitas ficariam envergonhados de seu deus devido à impotência dele, assim como os israelitas do reino de dez tribos ficaram envergonhados de Betel, provavelmente em virtude de sua associação com a adoração do bezerro. — Je 48:7, 13, 46.

QUEMUEL.

1. Filho do irmão de Abraão, Naor, com a esposa Milca; portanto, sobrinho de Abraão. Ele tinha um filho chamado Arã. — Gên 22:20, 21.

2. Filho de Siftã e maioral da tribo de Efraim. Foi um dos 12 homens designados por Jeová, mediante Moisés, para repartir a terra de Canaã entre os israelitas, representando a tribo de Efraim nessa tarefa. — Núm 34:16-29.

3. Levita que foi pai de Hasabias, líder da tribo de Levi nos dias de Davi. — 1Cr 27:16, 17.

QUENÃ [duma raiz que significa "produzir; adquirir; comprar"]. Filho de Enos, neto de Sete, e bisneto de Adão. Ele foi o pai de Malalel e viveu 910 anos. (Gên 5:3-14; 1Cr 1:1, 2) Quenã é evidentemente mencionado como "Cainã, filho de Enos", na lista de Lucas referente à genealogia de Jesus. — Lu 3:37, 38.

QUENAANÁ [forma feminina de Canaã].

1. Pai de Zedequias, o falso profeta contemporâneo dos reis Acabe e Jeosafá. — 1Rs 22:11, 24; 2Cr 18:10, 23.

2. Descendente de Benjamim por meio de Jediael e Bilã. — 1Cr 7:6, 10.

QUENANI [forma abreviada de Quenanias]. Levita que fez confissão a Jeová antes da selagem do "arranjo fidedigno" pactuado durante o governo de Neemias. — Ne 9:3, 4, 38.

QUENANIAS [provavelmente: Firmemente Estabelecido por Jeová].

1. Levita contemporâneo do Rei Davi. "Quenanias, chefe dos levitas que faziam o carregamento", era um especialista habilitado para instruir outros sobre a forma correta de lidar com a Arca sagrada. — 1Cr 15:22, 25-27.

2. Coatita da família de Izar. Quenanias e seus filhos haviam sido designados sobre "o negócio externo", constituindo evidentemente o serviço quais juízes e oficiais, dos quais havia 6.000 quando Davi fez a contagem dos levitas. (1Cr 26:29; 23:1-4, 12) Uma vez que os coatitas carregavam os utensílios do santuário nos dias de Moisés, este Quenanias é possivelmente o mesmo que o N.º 1 acima. — Núm 4:4, 5, 15.

QUENATE. Lugar ao L do Jordão capturado por Noba, provavelmente um manassita, que depois o chamou pelo seu próprio nome. (Núm 32:42) Mas a designação "Noba" talvez não pegou, pois mais tarde relata-se que "Quenate" foi tomada por Gesur e pela Síria. (1Cr 2:23) Quenate é identificada com as ruínas em Kanaouat (ou Canata), uns 90 km ao SSE de Damasco e 7 km ao NO da atual Soueida. Kanaouat foi uma das dez cidades originais de Decápolis.

QUENAZ.

1. Um dos filhos do filho de Esaú, Elifaz, e xeque na terra de Edom. — Gên 36:11, 15, 42, 43; 1Cr 1:36, 53.

2. Pai de Otniel e Seraías, e irmão de Calebe, filho de Jefuné. — Jos 15:17; Jz 1:13; 3:9, 11; 1Cr 4:13.

3. Descendente de Calebe, o filho de Jefuné, através de Elá. — 1Cr 4:15.

QUENEU. Membro dum povo que residia em Canaã ou cercanias nos dias de Abrão (Abraão). As Escrituras, porém, não fornecem nenhum elo genealógico definido para se determinar sua origem. — Gên 15:18-21.

Embora alguns peritos considerem "queneu", com base numa palavra aramaica similar, como significando "ferreiro", isto é incerto. A própria Bíblia não menciona os queneus como ferreiros, mas parece realmente indicar que ao menos alguns deles eram pastores. (Veja Êx 2:15, 16; 3:1; Jz 1:16.) Outra sugestão liga o termo "queneu" com uma palavra hebraica que significa "ninho", e isso se ajustaria à descrição do lugar de morada, ou 'ninho', dos queneus, como estando "no rochedo". — Núm 24:21.

Na época em que Moisés fugiu do Egito para a terra de Midiã, ele se casou com alguém duma família de queneus que morava ali. Quando as circunstâncias dum relato envolvem a morada em Midiã, os membros desta família são chamados de midianitas; em outros casos eles são citados como queneus. Isto sugere que Jetro, sogro de Moisés, "sacerdote de Midiã", e o cunhado Hobabe podem ter sido midianitas dum ponto de vista geográfico. (Êx 2:15, 16; 3:1; 18:1; Núm 10:29, 30; Jz 1:16) Por outro lado, se os parentes de Moisés eram descendentes de Midiã em sentido racial, então podem ter sido chamados de queneus por pertencerem a um ramo queneu ou família queneia dos midianitas, o que os torna assim racialmente distintos dos queneus que existiam no tempo de Abraão, antes do nascimento de Midiã.

Quando os israelitas estavam prestes a deixar a região do monte Sinai, Moisés solicitou que Hobabe os acompanhasse para servir de "olhos" ou de batedor para a nação, em virtude do conhecimento que possuía daquela área. Embora recusasse de início, Hobabe, pelo visto, os acompanhou, pois os queneus são mencionados mais tarde como fixando residência no ermo de Judá, ao S de Arade. — Núm 10:29-32; Jz 1:16.

Num período posterior, Héber, o queneu, separou-se dos demais queneus e armou sua tenda em Quedes. (Jz 4:11; veja QUEDES N.º 3.) Quando as forças cananeias foram derrubadas, Sísera "fugiu a pé para a tenda de Jael, esposa de Héber, o queneu, pois havia paz entre Jabim, rei de Hazor, e os da casa de Héber, o queneu". No entanto, ali findou a vida de Sísera, às mãos de Jael. — Jz 4:17-21; 5:24-27.

Nos dias do Rei Saul, alguns queneus residiam entre os amalequitas. Assim sendo, Saul, quando estava prestes a travar guerra contra os amalequitas, instou com os queneus para que se separassem deles, a fim de escapar da calamidade. Esta bondade foi demonstrada porque os queneus mesmos 'usaram de benevolência para com os filhos de Israel no tempo em que subiram do Egito'. (1Sa 15:5, 6; compare isso com Êx 18:8, 9; Núm 10:29-33.) Mais tarde, Davi disse a Aquis que ele fizera uma incursão "no sul dos queneus". (1Sa 27:10) Mas, isto fazia parte dum subterfúgio. Na realidade, os queneus mantinham relações amistosas com os israelitas. Assim, Davi enviou parte dos despojos tomados dos amalequitas "aos nas cidades dos queneus", provavelmente na região montanhosa no S de Judá. — 1Sa 30:29.

As famílias dos escribas que residiam em Jabez eram queneus "que procederam de Hamate, pai da casa de Recabe". (1Cr 2:55) São mencionados em relação com os descendentes de Judá. — 1Cr 2:3.

Viverem os queneus associados a diferentes povos, em ocasiões e locais diversos, pode dar a entender que este povo nômade ou seminômade não foi inteiramente absorvido por nenhuma outra tribo ou povo.

A Bíblia não relata especificamente o que aconteceu com os queneus, também chamados Caim. A expressão proverbial de Balaão a respeito deles apresentava a pergunta: "Quando será que a Assíria te levará cativo?" (Núm 24:21, 22) Assim, é possível que alguns queneus morassem no reino setentrional de Israel e nas áreas circunvizinhas, e tenham sido levados cativos junto com eles pelos assírios. — 2Rs 15:29; 17:6.

QUENIZEU [De (Pertencente a) Quenaz].

1. Membro dum povo não israelita e situado em Canaã ou próximo dali, cujo território foi prometido por Jeová à semente de Abrão. (Gên 15:18, 19) Os quenizeus evidentemente mudaram-se para o Negebe procedentes do SE, possivelmente espalhando-se sobre parte de Edom, bem como sobre o que se tornou Judá meridional, fazendo-o antes de os israelitas conquistarem a Terra da Promessa.

Alguns peritos têm ligado os quenizeus com o Quenaz que foi xeque de Edom, descendente de Esaú por meio de Elifaz (Gên 36:15, 16), de modo que são encarados como proeminente família edomita. Há, porém, incerteza a respeito da verdadeira identidade do ancestral patronímico dos quenizeus, uma vez que a própria Bíblia não fornece pormenores sobre isso. Ter Jeová, no tempo de Abrão, alistado os quenizeus entre os ocupantes do território que haveria de pertencer à semente de Abrão (Gên 15:18, 19) não favorece o conceito de que os quenizeus eram descendentes de Esaú, que ainda não havia nascido.

2. O fiel Calebe é chamado de "filho de Jefuné, o quenizeu". (Núm 32:12; Jos 14:6, 14) Jefuné pode ter descendido de algum membro dos quenizeus não israelitas (Gên 15:18, 19) que se associaram com os descendentes de Jacó (Israel), casando-se com uma mulher israelita. Todavia, é mais provável que o nome quenizeu, no seu caso, derive de algum ancestral chefe de família, de Judá, chamado Quenaz, assim como o irmão de Calebe tinha esse nome. — Jos 15:17; Jz 1:13; 1Cr 4:13.

QUERÃ. Filho do xeque horeu Disom. — Gên 36:26; 1Cr 1:41.

QUERÉM-HAPUQUE [possivelmente: Chifre de Pintura Preta (Para os Olhos) [quer dizer, recipiente para maquiagem]]. Terceira e mais jovem das filhas nascidas a Jó depois que sua grande provação e sofrimento haviam terminado e Jeová o abençoara. (Jó 42:12-14) O nome pode sugerir belos olhos, ou pode indicar sua grande beleza geral, visto que "não se achavam em todo o país mulheres mais bonitas do que as filhas de Jó". (Jó 42:15) O antimônio, uma substância metálica branco-azulada, produz uma cor preta brilhante que era usada pelas mulheres orientais dos tempos bíblicos para tingir os cílios e talvez as sobrancelhas, ou era usada para delinear os olhos, fazendo-os parecer grandes e brilhantes. — Veja 2Rs 9:30; Je 4:30.

QUERETITAS. Nome dum povo ligado aos filisteus. (Ez 25:16; Sof 2:5) Alguns queretitas serviram nas forças militares da nação escolhida de Jeová. — 2Sa 8:18; 20:23; 1Cr 18:17.

Certos lexicógrafos do hebraico acreditam que kere·thím provém da raiz ka·ráth (que significa "decepar") e devia ser traduzido "executores". No entanto, a maioria dos comentaristas bíblicos considera que o termo hebraico "queretitas" (kere·thím) se refere à nacionalidade. Todavia, reconhecem que ka·ráth pode ser a raiz correta de kere·thím e que Jeová, em Ezequiel 25:16, talvez esteja fazendo um jogo aliterativo de palavras ao prometer: "Vou decepar [hikh·rat·tí] os queretitas [kere·thím]", ou, com efeito: 'Vou matar os matadores'.

Serem os queretitas e os filisteus mencionados juntos em Ezequiel 25:15-17 e em Sofonias 2:5-7 parece indicar uma afinidade entre eles. A versão Septuaginta grega desses versículos substitui o termo "queretitas" por "cretenses", talvez tentando ligá-los com os filisteus que vieram "de Creta [Caftor]". (Am 9:7) Por causa disso e da aparente ligação dos queretitas com a "terra dos filisteus" em 1 Samuel 30:14, 16, a maioria dos peritos conclui que os queretitas e os filisteus eram ou o mesmo povo, ou dois povos intimamente associados. Outros raciocinam que os queretitas podem ter sido uma importante tribo dos filisteus.

Uma sugestão apresentada é que, embora fossem originalmente dois povos, os filisteus ou eram os mais poderosos dos dois, ou foram os primeiros a chegar a Canaã, de modo que acabaram predominando, dando seu nome ao território chamado Filístia, embora o nome queretitas não tivesse desaparecido por completo. Segundo este conceito, o significado das profecias acima citadas de Ezequiel e de Sofonias seria que Jeová iria trazer vingança e calamidade sobre todos os habitantes das cidades da Filístia, tanto os filisteus como os queretitas, profecias estas que aparentemente foram cumpridas pelos babilônios.

Alguns queretitas vieram a fazer parte das forças armadas de Davi, e eles e os peletitas (frequentemente mencionados com eles) podem ter servido na escolta real sob Benaia. (2Sa 8:18; 20:23; 1Cr 18:17; compare isso com 2Sa 23:22, 23; 1Cr 11:25.) Em vista disso, os peritos procuram muitas vezes ligá-los com a "escolta cariana" do tempo do sacerdote Jeoiada, mais de 100 anos depois. (2Rs 11:4, 19; veja ESCOLTA CARIANA.) Embora fossem aparentemente estrangeiros de nascimento, os queretitas dos dias de Davi não eram meros mercenários que agiam exclusivamente para obter ganho pessoal (como muitas vezes se afirma erroneamente), mas eram genuinamente devotados a Davi como o ungido de Jeová. Isto foi amplamente demonstrado por se apegarem firmemente a Davi quando este se viu obrigado a retirar-se de Jerusalém porque "o coração dos homens de Israel" passara para o lado do rebelde Absalão. (2Sa 15:13, 18) De modo similar, os queretitas obedientemente ajudaram mais tarde na repressão da revolta de Seba, o benjamita, e em dar apoio a Salomão, o escolhido por Davi como sucessor real de Israel. — 2Sa 20:7; 1Rs 1:38, 39, 44.

QUERIOTE [Cidades]. Lugar mencionado em duas profecias contra Moabe. (Je 48:24; Am 2:2) O significado de seu nome pode indicar que a cidade era constituída de diversas cidades menores. A localização exata de Queriote é incerta. Alguns peritos provisoriamente sugerem Saliya, um lugar que fica uns 16 km ao ESE de Díbon e ao N do Árnon. Outros acreditam que Queriote talvez seja o mesmo que Ar, ao S do Árnon. Este conceito parece encontrar algum apoio no fato de que Ar e Queriote, embora figurem como cidades importantes (veja Am 2:1-3; De 2:9, 18), não aparecem juntas nas listas das cidades moabitas. — Veja Is 15 e 16; Je 48.

A Pedra Moabita, embora não forneça nenhuma pista quanto à localização de Queriote, realmente indica que o deus Quemós possuía um santuário ali.

QUERIOTE-ESROM [Cidades de Esrom]. Outro nome de Hazor (N.º 3), uma cidade de Judá que provisoriamente tem sido identificada com Khirbet el-Qaryatein (Tel Qeriyyot), a uns 20 km ao S de Hébron. — Jos 15:25.

QUERITE, VALE DA TORRENTE DE [Escavado]. Vale de torrente ao L do Jordão, onde Elias se escondeu e foi alimentado por corvos depois de anunciar ao Rei Acabe de Israel um iminente período de seca. (1Rs 17:1-7) Desconhece-se a localização exata.

QUEROS [possivelmente: Encurvado]. Fundador duma família de netineus, cujos descendentes estavam entre os que retornaram a Jerusalém e a Judá junto com Zorobabel após o exílio babilônico. — Esd 2:1, 2, 43, 44; Ne 7:6, 7, 46, 47.

QUERUBE. Cidade de Babilônia, da qual certos exilados retornaram a Jerusalém em 537 AEC; estes não conseguiram remontar sua genealogia, de modo que não podiam provar que eram israelitas. — Esd 2:59; Ne 7:61.

QUERUBIM. Criatura angélica de alta categoria, com deveres especiais, que se distingue da ordem dos serafins. A primeira das 92 vezes em que são mencionados na Bíblia acha-se em Gênesis 3:24; depois de Deus expulsar Adão e Eva do Éden, colocaram-se querubins (hebr.: keru·vím) à entrada L, com a lâmina chamejante duma espada, "para guardar o caminho para a árvore da vida". Não se revela se mais de dois foram posicionados ali.

Figuras representativas de querubins foram incluídas no mobiliário do tabernáculo erguido no ermo. Das pontas da tampa da Arca erguiam-se dois querubins de ouro batido. Estes encaravam um ao outro, e se curvavam em direção à tampa em atitude de adoração. Cada um deles tinha duas asas que se estendiam para cima e recobriam a tampa como que dum modo defensor e protetor. (Êx 25:10-21; 37:7-9) Também, a face interior dos panos da tenda do tabernáculo e a cortina que dividia o Santo do Santíssimo estampavam figuras bordadas de querubins. — Êx 26:1, 31; 36:8, 35.

Estas não eram figuras grotescas, modeladas segundo as monstruosas imagens aladas que eram adoradas pelas nações pagãs nos arredores, como alguns argumentam. Segundo o testemunho unânime da antiga tradição judaica (a Bíblia guarda silêncio sobre o assunto), estes querubins tinham forma humana. Eram excelentes obras de arte que representavam criaturas angélicas de gloriosa beleza, e cada detalhe fora feito 'segundo o modelo' que Moisés recebeu do próprio Jeová. (Êx 25:9) O apóstolo Paulo os descreve como 'querubins gloriosos que encobriam a tampa propiciatória'. (He 9:5) Tais querubins eram associados com a presença de Jeová: "E ali me hei de apresentar a ti e falar contigo de cima da tampa, de entre os dois querubins que há sobre a arca do testemunho." (Êx 25:22; Núm 7:89) Por isso, dizia-se que Jeová estava "sentado sobre [ou entre] os querubins". (1Sa 4:4; 2Sa 6:2; 2Rs 19:15; 1Cr 13:6; Sal 80:1; 99:1; Is 37:16) De maneira simbólica, os querubins serviam como "a representação do carro" de Jeová, no qual ele viajava (1Cr 28:18), e as asas dos querubins ofereciam tanto proteção vigilante como rapidez na viagem. Assim Davi, em cântico poético, descreveu a rapidez com que Jeová veio em sua ajuda, dizendo que "veio montado num querubim e veio voando", até mesmo "nas asas dum espírito". — 2Sa 22:11; Sal 18:10.

Os pormenorizados planos arquitetônicos para o magnífico templo de Salomão requeriam a colocação de dois enormes querubins no Santíssimo. Estes foram feitos de madeira de oleastro, sendo recobertos de ouro, cada um com dez côvados (4,5 m) de altura. Ambos estavam voltados para o L, numa linha N-S que percorria, presumivelmente, o centro do recinto. Embora estivessem a dez côvados de distância um do outro, uma das asas de cada querubim tocava a ponta da asa estendida do outro, no centro do recinto, abrigando a Arca do Pacto e seus varais, que ficavam abaixo. As asas opostas de cada querubim tocavam, respectivamente, as paredes N e S. Assim as asas dos querubins se estendiam por toda a largura de 20 côvados do recinto. (Veja TEMPLO.) Entalhes de querubins, recobertos de ouro, também decoravam as paredes e as portas do templo. Semelhantemente, as laterais dos carrocins de cobre, para água, eram ornamentadas de querubins. (1Rs 6:23-35; 7:29-36; 8:6, 7; 1Cr 28:18; 2Cr 3:7, 10-14; 5:7, 8) De maneira similar, querubins entalhados ornamentavam as paredes e as portas do templo que Ezequiel observou em visão. — Ez 41:17-20, 23-25.

Ezequiel também relata várias visões em que foram observados querubins simbólicos, de descrição incomum. Depois de se referir a eles como "criaturas viventes" (Ez 1:5-28), mais tarde os identifica como "querubins". (Ez 9:3; 10:1-22; 11:22) Nestas visões pictóricas, os querubins são intimamente associados com a gloriosa pessoa de Jeová, e prestam serviço constante a ele.

No livro profético de Ezequiel, disse-se a ele que 'levantasse uma endecha concernente ao rei de Tiro', na qual ele chama o rei de glorioso querubim que cobre, que outrora estava "no Éden, jardim de Deus", mas que foi despojado de sua beleza e tornado como as cinzas do solo. "Assim disse o Soberano Senhor Jeová: . . . 'Tu és o querubim ungido que cobre, e eu te constituí. Vieste a estar no monte santo de Deus. No meio de pedras afogueadas andavas. Eras sem defeito nos teus caminhos, desde o dia em que foste criado, até que se achou injustiça em ti. . . . E eu te porei para fora do monte de Deus, por seres profano, e te destruirei, ó querubim que cobre [ó querubim protetor, Vg].' " — Ez 28:11-19.

QUESALOM [(No) Lombo [isto é, encosta]]. Cidade mencionada junto com o monte Jearim e que servia para marcar parte da fronteira N de Judá. (Jos 15:10) É hoje em dia comumente identificada com Kesla (Kesalon), situada a uns 17 km ao O de Jerusalém.

QUESEDE. Um dos oito filhos que Milca deu à luz a Naor, irmão de Abraão. — Gên 22:20-22.

QUESIL [Lombo [isto é, encosta]]. Nome duma cidade que aparece na lista de lugares abrangidos pelo território de Judá. (Jos 15:21, 30) Uma comparação de Josué 15:30 com Josué 19:4 e 1 Crônicas 4:30 indica que Quesil pode ser o mesmo que Betuel. — Veja BETUEL N.º 2.

QUESIL, CONSTELAÇÃO DE [hebr.: kesíl, "estúpido"]. Embora esta palavra seja empregada muitas vezes em seu sentido básico de "estúpido" (veja Sal 49:10; 92:6; Pr 1:22), o contexto em quatro lugares (Jó 9:9; 38:31; Am 5:8 e Is 13:10 [aqui no plural]), indica seu emprego para designar um conjunto ou grupo de estrelas.

Considera-se em geral este termo como aplicado a Órion, também chamado de o caçador, uma constelação meridional bem destacada que contém as gigantescas estrelas Betelgeuse e Rígel. A Vulgata latina traduziu kesíl como "Órion" em Jó 9:9 e em Amós 5:8. A maioria das traduções imitam a Vulgata latina no que tange a encarar kesíl como referindo-se a Órion. As antigas versões do Targum e Siríaca rezam "gigante", e isto corresponde ao nome árabe para a constelação de Órion, gabbar, ou "o forte" (equivalente hebraico: gibbóhr).

O termo é empregado em Amós 5:8 com relação à censura feita a Israel por deixar de buscar o verdadeiro Deus Jeová, o Criador das constelações celestes. Em Isaías 13:9, 10, onde se emprega o plural kesi·leh·hém (suas constelações de Quesil), a descrição é do "dia de Jeová", no qual os tiranos orgulhosos e altivos serão rebaixados e os corpos celestes deixarão de dar sua luz.

QUESULOTE [Lombos, [isto é, encostas]]. Cidade limítrofe de Issacar (Jos 19:18) e provavelmente o mesmo que Quislote-Tabor. (Jos 19:12) É geralmente identificada com Iksal (Kislot Tavor), situada ao sopé dos morros de Nazaré e 3 km ao SE dessa cidade. Portanto, ficava na planície de Jezreel, ao O do monte Tabor.

QUETURA [duma raiz que significa "fazer fumaça sacrificial"]. Uma das esposas de Abraão e mãe de seis dos filhos dele, Zinrã, Jocsã, Medã, Midiã, Isbaque e Suá, ancestrais de vários povos do N da Arábia, que moravam ao S e ao L da Palestina. — Gên 25:1-4.

Em 1 Crônicas 1:32, Quetura é especificamente mencionada como "concubina de Abraão", e é bem evidente que ela e Agar são as pessoas visadas em Gênesis 25:6, onde se faz referência aos filhos das "concubinas" de Abraão. Quetura era, por conseguinte, uma esposa secundária que jamais alcançou a mesma posição que Sara, a mãe de Isaque, por meio de quem veio a Semente prometida. (Gên 17:19-21; 21:2, 3, 12; He 11:17, 18) Ao passo que "Abraão deu a Isaque tudo o que possuía", o patriarca deu presentes aos filhos das concubinas e então "os enviou para longe de Isaque, seu filho, enquanto ainda vivia, para o leste, para a terra do Oriente". — Gên 25:5, 6.

Tem-se argumentado que Abraão tomou Quetura como concubina antes da morte de Sara, uma vez que alguns acham improvável ele ter seis filhos com uma só mulher depois de passar dos cerca de 140 anos de idade, e então sobreviver para vê-los atingir uma idade em que poderia mandá-los embora. Todavia, Abraão viveu mais de 35 anos após a morte de Sara, vindo a morrer aos 175 anos de idade. (Gên 25:7, 8) Assim, ele podia muito bem ter tomado Quetura por esposa, ter tido seis filhos com ela e os ter visto crescer antes de morrer. Também, parece apropriado tomar em consideração o respeito de modo geral que Abraão tinha pelos sentimentos de Sara, o que torna improvável que ele arriscasse a possibilidade de mais discórdia na família (comparável àquela que envolveu Agar e Ismael) por tomar outra concubina enquanto Sara ainda vivia. A ordem dos eventos, conforme delineada no livro de Gênesis, é bem conclusiva ao indicar que foi após a morte de Sara que Abraão tomou Quetura como esposa. — Veja Gên 23:1, 2; 24:67; 25:1.

Foi somente porque suas faculdades reprodutivas foram miraculosamente reativadas que Abraão e Sara puderam ter um filho, Isaque, em sua velhice. (He 11:11, 12) Evidentemente, tais poderes restaurados habilitaram Abraão a tornar-se pai de mais seis filhos, com Quetura, quando ele já era ainda mais idoso.

QUEZIA [possivelmente: Cássia]. Segunda das três filhas de Jó nascidas após sua severa provação e subsequente restabelecimento e bênção por parte de Jeová. (Jó 42:14) A palavra hebraica para "cássia" era empregada como nome de mulher, provavelmente por causa da fragrância da cássia, e pode ter sido dado a esta moça como indício de sua beleza. — Jó 42:15.

QUIBROTE-ATAAVÁ [Sepulturas do Almejo]. Local dum acampamento israelita no ermo, onde a multidão mista expressou almejo egoísta pelos alimentos que havia no Egito. (Núm 11:4; 33:16, 17; De 9:22) É geralmente identificado com Rueis el-Eberij, mais ou menos na metade do trajeto entre Jebel Musa, local tradicional do monte Sinai, e Hazerote. Ali, Jeová forneceu milagrosamente ao inteiro acampamento um suprimento de codornizes suficiente para um mês. (Núm 11:19, 20, 31) Mas o povo foi tão ganancioso que "quem recolhia menos ajuntou dez ômeres" (2.200 l). O registro diz que enquanto "a carne estava ainda entre os seus dentes, antes que pudesse ser mastigada, . . . Jeová começou a atingir o povo com uma matança muito grande". Em vez de denotar mastigação literal na boca, isso pode significar antes que a inteira provisão de carne pudesse ficar "esgotada" ou ser "consumida" (AT, RS), pois a palavra hebraica traduzida "mastigada" significa basicamente "cortada". (Veja Jl 1:5.) Depois disso, os mortos foram sepultados, de modo que o lugar passou a ser chamado de Quibrote-Ataavá. — Núm 11:32-35.

QUIBZAIM [Ajuntamento (Reunião) Duplo(a)]. Cidade efraimita dada aos levitas coatitas. (Jos 21:20-22) Em 1 Crônicas 6:68, é aparentemente chamada de Jocmeão.

QUIDOM. Nome do proprietário da eira, ou da própria eira, onde Uzá foi golpeado por Jeová quando se tentou transportar a arca do testemunho de forma imprópria de Quiriate-Jearim para a Cidade de Davi. Pelo visto, a eira ficava entre esses dois pontos, e próximo à casa de Obede-Edom. (1Cr 13:6-14) Sua exata localização é desconhecida. A narrativa paralela de 2 Samuel 6:6 diz "Nacom", o que possivelmente indica que um relato emprega o nome do local da eira, ao passo que o outro emprega o nome de seu proprietário. Após o incidente acima, o lugar passou a ser chamado de Peres-Uzá, que significa "Ruptura Contra Uzá".

QUILEABE. Segundo filho de Davi nascido em Hébron. Sua mãe, Abigail, era a ex-esposa de Nabal. (2Sa 3:2, 3) Quileabe é chamado de Daniel em 1 Crônicas 3:1. — Veja DANIEL N.º 1.

QUILIOM [Aquele Que Falha; Aquele Que Chega ao Fim]. Filho de Noemi e Elimeleque, e irmão de Malom, o marido de Rute. A família mudara-se de Belém, em Judá, para Moabe, a fim de escapar duma fome que ocorreu no tempo dos juízes. Após a morte de seu pai, Quiliom casou-se com a moabita Orpa. Tanto ele como seu irmão morreram em Moabe sem ter filhos. — Ru 1:1-5; 4:9, 10.

QUILMADE. Evidentemente um lugar alistado entre os que negociavam com Tiro na comercialização de roupas finas, tecidos tingidos, tapetes e cordas. — Ez 27:2, 23, 24.

QUILO. Veja LIBRA.

QUILÔMETRO. Veja MILHA.

QUIMA, CONSTELAÇÃO DE. Este termo é empregado em Jó 9:9; 38:31; e em Amós 5:8 para se referir a uma constelação celeste. É geralmente considerada como referindo-se às Plêiades, um grupo de estrelas formado de sete grandes estrelas e outras menores, envolvido em matéria nebulosa e situado uns 380 anos-luz do sol. Em Jó 38:31, Jeová pergunta a Jó se este pode "atar as cadeias da constelação de Quima", e alguns relacionam isto com a condição compacta do aglomerado das Plêiades, o aglomerado de estrelas mais provável de ser observado a olho nu. Ao passo que a identificação da constelação específica tencionada é indefinida, o sentido da pergunta proposta evidentemente é se um simples homem pode atar, na forma dum aglomerado, um grupo de estrelas, de modo a constituir uma constelação permanente. Assim, por meio dessa pergunta, Jeová fez ver a Jó a inferioridade do homem em comparação com o Soberano Universal.

QUIMÃO [Enfraquecido [de anseio]]. Presumivelmente um filho de Barzilai. Quando o idoso Barzilai rejeitou o convite de fazer parte da corte do Rei Davi e recomendou que Quimão fosse em seu lugar, Davi respondeu: "Quimão atravessará comigo [o Jordão] e eu mesmo farei com ele o que for bom aos teus olhos; e tudo o que escolheres impor-me farei para ti." (2Sa 19:33, 37-40) Pelo visto, Quimão permaneceu na corte real, conforme indicam as instruções finais de Davi a Salomão. (1Rs 2:7) Em Jeremias 41:17, faz-se referência à "hospedaria de Quimão" próxima a Belém. Não se sabe se isto se refere ao Quimão do tempo de Davi ou a um homem posterior com o mesmo nome. Alguns comentaristas dizem que Quimão pode ter recebido um lote de terreno por serviços prestados a Davi, ou que esse foi o lugar onde Quimão construíra uma hospedaria para viajantes.

QUINÁ. Cidade no S de Judá. (Jos 15:21, 22) Alguns a identificam com Khirbet Taiyib (Horvat Tov), a uns 30 km ao ENE de Berseba. O nome parece estar preservado no uádi el-Qeini, próximo dali.

QUINERETE.

1. Cidade fortificada de Naftali. (Jos 19:32, 35) É atualmente identificada com Khirbet el-ʽOreimeh (Tel Kinnerot), situado numa elevação mais de 3 km ao SO de Cafarnaum, que dá para a parte NO do mar da Galileia. Quinerete aparece nas paredes do templo de Karnak, em Tebas, Egito, na lista das cidades cananeias conquistadas por Tutmés III (cujo reinado os historiadores situam no século 16 AEC).

2. Distrito ou região de Israel atacada pelo Rei Ben-Hadade I, da Síria, às instigações do Rei Asa, de Judá. (c. 962 AEC) (1Rs 15:20; compare isso com 2Cr 16:4.) A expressão "todo o Quinerete" é geralmente encarada como referindo-se à fértil planície de Genesaré.

3. Nome primitivo do mar da Galileia. (Núm 34:11) Associando o nome com a palavra hebraica para harpa (kin·nóhr), alguns sugerem que é aplicado ao lago por causa do formato de harpa de sua massa de água. Os nomes mar da Galileia e mar de Tiberíades, bem como Genesaré, provavelmente a forma grega do nome, eram usados quando Jesus estava na terra. — Lu 5:1; Jo 6:1.

Além de ser incluído entre as fronteiras da Terra da Promessa (Núm 34:11), o lago formava parte da fronteira O do reino amorreu de Ogue, e, após a conquista israelita, figurou como fronteira O da tribo de Gade. (De 3:16, 17; Jos 13:24-27) A menção feita das "planícies desérticas [hebr.: ʽara·váh] ao sul de Quinerete" (Jos 11:2) evidentemente se refere ao vale do Jordão ao S do mar da Galileia, conhecido como Gor. — Veja GALILEIA, MAR DA.

QUIOS. Uma das ilhas maiores do mar Egeu, separada da costa ocidental da Ásia Menor por um estreito de 8 km ou mais de largura. A ilha tem uns 50 km de comprimento (de N a S), e varia de 13 a 29 km de largura (de L a O).

Quios é mencionada no relato de Atos 20, com relação à viagem de Paulo ao retornar a Jerusalém, ao fim de sua terceira viagem missionária, por volta de 56 EC. O barco em que Paulo viajava deixou Mitilene (At 20:14), uns 100 km ao NE, provavelmente de manhã, e 'chegou defronte de Quios' (At 20:15), possivelmente ao pôr do sol. Daí, no dia seguinte, a viagem prosseguiu até Samos, aproximadamente 100 km costa abaixo.

Na ocasião da viagem de Paulo, Quios era considerada uma cidade-estado livre da província romana da Ásia, condição que manteve até o reinado do imperador Vespasiano (69-79 EC). Tanto a ilha como sua cidade principal são atualmente chamadas de Khios pelos gregos, e de Scio pelos italianos.

QUIR. Lugar de onde os arameus emigraram para a Síria, embora não fosse necessariamente sua terra de origem. (Am 9:7) Por meio de seu profeta Amós (1:5), Jeová indicou que os arameus retornariam a Quir, mas como exilados. Esta profecia cumpriu-se quando Tiglate-Pileser III, depois de ser subornado pelo Rei Acaz, de Judá, para fazer isso, capturou Damasco, a capital arameia, e conduziu seus habitantes para o exílio em Quir. — 2Rs 16:7-9.

Isaías 22:5, 6 representa Quir como aprontando-se contra o "vale da visão" (que se julga representar Jerusalém). Entende-se em geral esta profecia como tendo sido cumprida na época da campanha do rei assírio, Senaqueribe, contra Judá. Devido à associação de Quir com Elão nesse texto, alguns têm sugerido que deve ter-se localizado na mesma área geral que Elão ao L do rio Tigre. (Veja Is 21:2, onde a Média, conhecida vizinha geográfica de Elão, é similarmente vinculada com Elão.) A Septuaginta grega não emprega "Quir" em nenhum dos textos acima citados, mas emprega várias palavras distintas para o hebraico qir. Assim, a localização real permanece incerta.

QUIR DE MOABE. Importante cidade de Moabe, provavelmente a capital em certa época. O Targum aramaico se refere coerentemente a Quir (de Moabe), a Quir-Haresete e a Quir-Heres como Karak, indicando que estes não passam de nomes alternativos para o mesmo lugar. Portanto, "Quir de Moabe" é geralmente identificada com a moderna Karak. (Is 15:1) Esta cidade se acha situada num pequeno platô mais de 900 m acima do nível do mar e cerca de 35 km ao S de Díbon. Vales profundos separam a maior parte de Karak das montanhas vizinhas mais elevadas.

Perto do fim do décimo século AEC, as forças aliadas de Israel, Judá e Edom atacaram Quir-Haresete. Se o local for corretamente identificado com Karak, sem dúvida foi das montanhas vizinhas que fundibulários bombardearam com pedras a cidade. Embora Quir-Haresete evidentemente não fosse tomada, a batalha se tornou difícil contra o rei de Moabe. Por algum motivo não declarado, ele, junto com 700 guerreiros, procurou abrir uma brecha através das linhas de frente, a fim de alcançar o rei de Edom, mas não teve êxito. Como último recurso, parece que o rei de Moabe sacrificou publicamente seu próprio filho primogênito, provavelmente para apaziguar o deus Quemós. (2Rs 3:5, 9, 25-27) O texto hebraico (2Rs 3:27) também pode ser entendido como referindo-se ao filho primogênito do rei de Edom, e alguns sugerem que Amós 2:1 faz alusão a isso. Mas isto é menos provável.

A profecia de Isaías indicava que os moabitas pranteariam pelos bolos de passas de Quir-Haresete, talvez um importante produto de comercialização da cidade. (Is 16:6, 7) Isaías também falou de ficar turbulento como a harpa, por causa de Moabe e Quir-Haresete. Assim como as cordas duma harpa vibram com som, assim também as partes íntimas de Isaías ficaram agitadas com a mensagem de calamidade para Quir-Haresete. — Is 16:11; veja também Je 48:31, 36.

QUIR-HARESETE. Aparentemente outro nome de Quir de Moabe, cidade geralmente identificada com a moderna Karak. — 2Rs 3:25; Is 16:7; veja QUIR DE MOABE.

QUIR-HERES. Evidentemente um nome alternativo para Quir-Haresete ou Quir de Moabe, cidade comumente relacionada com a moderna Karak. — Je 48:31, 36; veja QUIR DE MOABE.

QUIRIATAIM [Cidade Dupla].

1. Cidade ao L do Jordão, construída ou reconstruída pelos rubenitas. (Núm 32:37; Jos 13:15, 19) Num período posterior, a cidade veio a estar sob controle moabita. É mencionada nas profecias de Jeremias (48:1) e Ezequiel (25:9) como cidade de Moabe que sofreria calamidade. Anteriormente, o Rei Mesa, de Moabe, no nono século AEC jactara-se de construir Qaryaten (aparentemente Quiriataim).

Peritos geralmente a situam na área próxima a Quraiyat, a uns 10 km ao ONO de Díbon. As ruínas ali encontradas, porém, não datam de antes do primeiro século AEC, de modo que a localização exata é incerta.

2. Lugar em Naftali dado aos gersonitas levíticos (1Cr 6:71, 76) e chamado de Cartã em Josué 21:32. — Veja CARTÃ.

QUIRIATE [Cidade]. Cidade de Benjamim geralmente considerada como a própria Quiriate-Jearim. Alguns peritos creem que o nome Quiriate-Jearim aparecia no texto hebraico original de Josué 18:28, assim como aparece no Manuscrito Alexandrino (LXX). — Veja QUIRIATE-JEARIM.

QUIRIATE-ARBA [Cidade de Arba]. O antigo nome da cidade de Hébron. O nome foi usado até mesmo após o exílio babilônico. (Ne 11:25) Esta cidade, como sugere o nome, parece ter sido fundada por Arba, "o grande homem entre os anaquins". — Jos 14:15; veja HÉBRON N.º 3.

QUIRIATE-BAAL [Cidade de Baal]. Nome alternativo para a cidade de Quiriate-Jearim, de Judá. Este lugar é geralmente identificado com Deir el-ʿAzar (Tel Qiryat Yeʿarim), a uns 9 km ao S de Bete-Horom Alta. — Jos 15:60; 18:14; veja QUIRIATE-JEARIM.

QUIRIATE-HUZOTE [Cidade de Ruas]. Lugar provavelmente localizado em Moabe, em alguma parte entre o vale da torrente do Árnon e Bamote-Baal. (Núm 22:36, 39, 41) Sua localização exata é hoje desconhecida.

QUIRIATE-JEARIM [Cidade de Florestas]. Cidade heveia associada com os gibeonitas (Jos 9:17), também conhecida como Baalá (Jos 15:9), Baale-Judá (2Sa 6:2), e Quiriate-Baal (Jos 15:60). Mais tarde, Quiriate-Jearim veio a pertencer a Judá, e fazia fronteira com o território de Benjamim. (Jos 15:1, 9; 18:11, 14; Jz 18:12) Pelo visto, os descendentes de Judá, por meio de Calebe, fixaram-se ali. — 1Cr 2:3, 50, 52, 53.

No século 12 AEC, a Arca, algum tempo depois de ser devolvida pelos filisteus, foi levada para Quiriate-Jearim a pedido dos homens da vizinha Bete-Semes. Parece ter permanecido ali até ser levada pelo Rei Davi para Jerusalém, uns 70 anos depois. — 1Sa 6:20–7:2; 1Cr 13:5, 6; 16:1; 2Cr 1:4.

O profeta Urijá, contemporâneo de Jeremias, era filho de Semaías, de Quiriate-Jearim. (Je 26:20) Entre aqueles que retornaram do exílio em Babilônia também estavam representados os descendentes dos que tinham morado nessa cidade. — Esd 2:1, 2, 25; Ne 7:6, 7, 29.

Deir el-ʿAzar (Tel Qiryat Yeʿarim) é o lugar comumente sugerido como correspondendo à descrição bíblica de Quiriate-Jearim, uma cidade da região montanhosa (Jos 15:48, 60) na fronteira entre Judá e Benjamim, nas proximidades de outras cidades dos gibeonitas. Este lugar está estrategicamente situado no topo duma colina, a uns 14 km ao ENE de Bete-Semes, e uns 13 km ao ONO de Jerusalém. Esta localidade se ajusta aproximadamente à colocação de Quiriate-Jearim por Eusébio, como distando certa vez 9 milhas romanas (13 km), e outra vez, 10 milhas romanas (15 km) de Jerusalém. Também, estar Deir el-ʿAzar situada num lugar que outrora parece ter sido uma região bem arborizada se coaduna bem com o nome Quiriate-Jearim, "Cidade de Florestas".

QUIRIATE-SANA [Cidade de Sana]. Nome alternativo para Debir, uma cidade de Judá designada aos sacerdotes arônicos, uns 13 km ao SO de Hébron. (Jos 15:49; 21:13, 15) Alguns encaram Quiriate-Sana como erro de copista na escrita de Quiriate-Sefer. — Veja DEBIR N.º 2.

QUIRIATE-SEFER [Cidade do Livro]. O antigo nome de Debir, uma cidade sacerdotal no território de Judá, a uns 13 km ao SO de Hébron. — Jos 15:15, 16; 21:13, 15; Jz 1:11, 12; veja DEBIR N.º 2.

QUIRINO. Governador romano da Síria, na época do "registro" decretado por César Augusto, que resultou em o nascimento de Jesus se dar em Belém. (Lu 2:1, 2) Seu nome completo era Públio Sulpício Quirino.

No Chronographus Anni CCCLIIII, uma lista dos cônsules romanos, o nome de Quirino aparece em 12 AEC, junto com o de Messala. (Chronica Minora, editada por T. Mommsen, Munique, 1981, Vol. I, p. 56) Tácito, historiador romano, relata brevemente a história de Quirino, dizendo: "Era oriundo do município de Lanuvium, mas tinha sido muito bom militar; e pela sua grande capacidade e aptidão para os negócios havia no tempo do divino Augusto merecido o consulado. Tendo depois disto feito na Cilícia a conquista das fortalezas dos Homonades, foi condecorado com as honras do triunfo; e sendo escolhido para dirigir C. César no seu governo da Armênia." (Anais, Livro III, XLVIII, Clássicos Jackson, Vol. XXV) Morreu em 21 EC.

O que Tácito não menciona é a relação de Quirino com a Síria. O historiador judeu Josefo relaciona a indicação de Quirino para a Síria como governador com a indicação simultânea de Copônio como governante romano da Judeia. Ele declara: "Quirino, senador romano que passara por todos os cargos de magistrado até o consulado e homem extremamente distinto em outros sentidos, chegou à Síria, enviado por César para ser governador da nação e para avaliar suas propriedades. Copônio, homem da ordem equestre, foi enviado junto com ele para governar os judeus com plena autoridade." Josefo prossegue relatando que Quirino veio à Judeia, sobre a qual foi estendida sua autoridade, e determinou uma tributação ali. Isso causou muito ressentimento e uma tentativa fracassada de revolta, liderada por "Judas, um galileu". (Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas] XVIII, 1, 2, 3, 4 [i, 1]) Essa é evidentemente a revolta mencionada por Lucas em Atos 5:37. De acordo com o relato de Josefo, ocorreu no "trigésimo sétimo ano depois que César derrotou Antônio em Áccio". (Jewish Antiquities, XVIII, 26 [ii, 1]) Isso indicaria que Quirino era governador da Síria em 6 EC.

Durante muito tempo, esse governo de Quirino sobre a Síria foi o único para o qual a história secular fornecia confirmação. Todavia, encontrou-se em Roma, no ano de 1764, uma inscrição conhecida como Lapis Tiburtinus, que, embora não forneça o nome, contém informações que a maioria dos peritos reconhece que poderiam aplicar-se somente a Quirino. (Corpus Inscriptionum Latinarum, editado por H. Dessau, Berlim, 1887, Vol. 14, p. 397, N.º 3613) Contém a declaração de que, ao ir para a Síria, ele se tornou governador (ou, legado) pela 'segunda vez'. Com base em inscrições encontradas em Antioquia, que contêm o nome de Quirino, muitos historiadores reconhecem que Quirino também foi governador da Síria no período AEC.

Há incerteza da parte deles a respeito de onde Quirino se encaixa entre os governadores da Síria registrados secularmente. Josefo alista Quintílio Varo como governador da Síria por ocasião da morte de Herodes, o Grande, e após isso. (Jewish Antiquities, XVII, 89 [v, 2]; XVII, 221 [ix, 3]) Tácito também menciona Varo como governador por ocasião da morte de Herodes. (The Histories [As Histórias] V, IX) Josefo declara que o antecessor de Varo foi Saturnino (C. Sentius Saturninus).

Muitos peritos, diante da evidência de que Quirino já tinha governado antes, sugerem os anos 3-2 AEC para seu governo. Embora tais datas se harmonizem satisfatoriamente com o registro bíblico, a base em que esses peritos as escolhem está errada. Quer dizer, eles alistam Quirino como governador durante esses anos porque estabelecem seu governo após o de Varo, e, portanto, após a morte de Herodes, o Grande, para a qual eles empregam a data popular, porém errônea, de 4 AEC. (Veja CRONOLOGIA; HERODES N.º 1 [Data da Sua Morte].) (Pelo mesmo motivo, isto é, o uso que fazem da data não comprovada de 4 AEC para a morte de Herodes, eles fixam o governo de Varo como de 6 a 4 AEC; a duração do seu governo, porém, é conjectura, pois Josefo não especifica a data de seu início ou de seu fim.) A melhor evidência aponta para 2 AEC como o ano do nascimento de Jesus. Portanto, o governo de Quirino deve ter incluído este ano ou parte dele.

Alguns peritos trazem à atenção que o termo empregado por Lucas, e geralmente traduzido "governador", é he·ge·món. Esse termo grego é empregado para descrever legados, procuradores e procônsules romanos, e significa basicamente um "líder" ou "eminente oficial executivo". Portanto, alguns sugerem que, na ocasião mencionada por Lucas como "primeiro registro", Quirino servia na Síria no cargo de legado especial do imperador, exercendo poderes extraordinários. Um fator que também pode ajudar a compreender o assunto é a clara referência feita por Josefo a um governo duplo da Síria, uma vez que ele menciona em seu relato duas pessoas, Saturnino e Volumnio, como servindo simultaneamente como "governadores da Síria". (Jewish Antiquities, XVI, 277, 280 [ix, 1]; XVI, 344 [x, 8]) Assim, se Josefo estiver correto ao alistar Saturnino e Varo como presidentes sucessivos da Síria, é possível que Quirino servisse simultaneamente, ou com Saturnino (como fizera Volumnio) ou com Varo antes da morte de Herodes (que provavelmente ocorreu em 1 AEC). The New Schaff-Herzog Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge (A Nova Enciclopédia de Conhecimento Religioso de Schaff-Herzog) apresenta o seguinte conceito: "Quirino achava-se exatamente na mesma relação com Varo, o governador da Síria, como numa época posterior Vespasiano achou-se com relação a Muciano. Vespasiano conduziu a guerra na Palestina enquanto Muciano era governador da Síria; e Vespasiano era legatus Augusti, detendo precisamente o mesmo título e categoria técnica que Muciano." — 1957, Vol. IX, pp. 375, 376.

Uma inscrição encontrada em Veneza (Lapis Venetus) cita um censo efetuado por Quirino, na Síria. Todavia, não fornece meio algum para se determinar se isto se deu no início ou no fim de seu governo. — Corpus Inscriptionum Latinarum, editado por T. Mommsen, O. Hirschfeld, e A. Domaszewski, 1902, Vol. 3, p. 1222, N.º 6687.

A exatidão comprovada de Lucas em assuntos históricos fornece sólidos motivos para se aceitar como fato sua referência a Quirino como governador da Síria na época do nascimento de Jesus. É bom lembrar que Josefo, praticamente a única outra fonte de informações, só nasceu em 37 EC, portanto, quase quatro décadas após o nascimento de Jesus. Lucas, por outro lado, já era médico e viajava com o apóstolo Paulo por volta de 49 EC, quando Josefo não passava dum menino de 12 anos. Dos dois, Lucas, mesmo de modo geral, é a mais provável fonte de informações fidedignas na questão do governo da Síria pouco antes do nascimento de Jesus. Justino, o Mártir, um palestino do segundo século EC, citou os registros romanos como prova da exatidão de Lucas no que tange ao governo de Quirino na época do nascimento de Jesus. (A Catholic Commentary on Holy Scripture [Comentário Católico sobre a Sagrada Escritura], editado por B. Orchard, 1953, p. 943) Não há evidência de que o relato de Lucas tenha sido alguma vez contestado por primitivos historiadores, nem mesmo por primitivos críticos tais como Celso.

QUIS.

1. Levita merarita, filho de Mali e irmão de Eleazar. Visto que Eleazar morreu sem ter filhos varões, tendo apenas filhas, os filhos de Quis tomaram tais herdeiras por esposas. Um dos "filhos de Quis" foi Jerameel. — 1Cr 23:21, 22; 24:29.

2. Benjamita; o filho de Jeiel e Maacá, sua esposa. (1Cr 8:29, 30) Seu irmão Ner era avô de Saul, o primeiro rei de Israel. (1Cr 9:35-39) Pelo visto, Jeiel, pai de Quis, também era chamado de Abiel. — Veja ABIEL N.º 1.

3. Benjamita que era pai do Rei Saul. (1Sa 14:51; At 13:21) Era um membro abastado da família dos matritas. (1Sa 9:1; 10:21) Este Quis era filho de Ner e neto de Jeiel (Abiel), sendo assim sobrinho do Quis acima mencionado e irmão de Abner. (1Cr 8:29-33; 9:35-39) Todavia, 1 Samuel 9:1 chama-o de filho de Abiel, aparentemente empregando o termo "filho" para representá-lo, não como filho imediato de Abiel (Jeiel), mas antes como seu neto.

A casa de Quis ficava evidentemente em Gibeá, em Benjamim (1Sa 10:26), embora sua sepultura ficasse em Zela. (2Sa 21:14) O único evento mencionado na Bíblia referente a Quis diz respeito a ele enviar seu filho Saul e um ajudante para procurar algumas jumentas perdidas. — 1Sa 9:3, 4.

4. Levita do tempo do Rei Ezequias; filho de Abdi dos filhos de Merari. Quis foi um dos levitas que ajudaram na limpeza do templo no primeiro ano do reinado de Ezequias. — 2Cr 29:1-5, 12-17.

5. Benjamita ancestral de Mordecai, primo de Ester. — Est 2:5-7.

QUISI [forma abreviada de Cusaías]. Aparentemente a mesma pessoa que o levita merarita Cusaías, pai do músico Etã. — 1Cr 6:19, 44; 15:17.

QUISIOM. Cidade limítrofe de Issacar designada aos gersonitas. (Jos 19:17, 18, 20; 21:27, 28) "Quedes", encontrada em 1 Crônicas 6:72, parece ser um nome alternativo para Quisiom. — Veja QUEDES N.º 3.

QUISLEU. Nome pós-exílico do nono mês lunar judaico, que caía em novembro e dezembro. (Ne 1:1; Je 36:9; Za 7:1) Correspondia ao terceiro mês do calendário secular.

Tratava-se dum mês hibernal, um mês de frio e chuva. Assim, lemos que o Rei Jeoiaquim estava "sentado na casa de inverno, no nono mês, havendo um braseiro aceso diante dele". (Je 36:22) Na Jerusalém após o exílio, o povo que se reuniu para a assembleia ordenada pelo sacerdote Esdras, a partir do dia 20 deste mês, "ficou sentado na praça da casa do verdadeiro Deus, tiritando por causa do assunto e por causa das chuvadas". — Esd 10:9, 13.

A Festividade da Dedicação, realizada em Jerusalém no inverno, é mencionada em João 10:22.

Conforme mostrado no livro apócrifo de 1 Macabeus (4:52-59), esta festividade de oito dias foi instituída por Judas Macabeu, no dia 25 de quisleu do ano 165 AEC, a fim de comemorar a rededicação do templo em Jerusalém. Esta festa é atualmente conhecida como Hanucá. — Veja FESTIVIDADE DA DEDICAÇÃO.

QUISLOM [possivelmente: Estúpido]. Benjamita dos dias de Moisés cujo filho Elidade ajudou na divisão da Terra da Promessa em lotes de herança. — Núm 34:17, 21.

QUISLOTE-TABOR [Lombos [isto é, encostas] de Tabor]. Cidade que marcava a fronteira de Zebulão, e aparentemente uma forma variante de Quesulote. (Jos 19:12, 18) É geralmente identificada com Iksal (Kislot Tavor), 3 km ao SE de Nazaré, no sopé do monte Tabor, cuja localização pode ser responsável pelo nome dela.

QUISOM, VALE DA TORRENTE DO. Corrente identificada com o Nahr el-Muqatta' (Nahal Qishon). O Quisom serpenteia na direção NO, desde as colinas próximas a Taanaque, através da planície de Jezreel, ou Esdrelom ('Emeq Yizre'el), e, depois de fluir por uma garganta estreita entre o monte Carmelo e um contraforte das colinas da Galileia, penetra na planície de Aco (Acre) antes de finalmente desaguar no Mediterrâneo. A distância em linha reta desde os mananciais do Quisom até sua desembocadura, na baía de Aco, é de cerca de 37 km. Tendo aproximadamente 6 m de largura na primavera, o trecho do Quisom que flui através da planície de Jezreel amplia sua largura em c. 3 m na parte ocidental da planície. A largura máxima do Quisom, de c. 20 m, é atingida na planície de Aco. Excetuando-se mais ou menos os últimos 10 km de seu curso, o Quisom geralmente fica seco durante o verão. Mas, na estação das chuvas, torna-se uma avassaladora torrente, inundando suas margens e arrastando tudo o que estiver no caminho. A planície através da qual flui o Quisom torna-se então uma região de alagados.

Nos dias de Baraque e de Débora, o vale da torrente do Quisom constou da libertação dos israelitas da opressão cananeia. Baraque e suas tropas tomaram posição no monte Tabor, medida que atraiu Sísera, chefe do exército, junto com suas forças bem equipadas e 900 carros para o Quisom. (Jz 4:6, 7, 12, 13) Os israelitas pareciam estar em desvantagem militar. Todavia, quando orientados a assim agir, Baraque e seus 10.000 homens desceram do monte Tabor para batalhar contra o inimigo. Jeová Deus então interveio. "Desde o céu lutaram as estrelas, desde as suas órbitas lutaram contra Sísera." — Jz 4:14, 15; 5:20.

Segundo o conceito tradicional judaico expresso nos escritos de Josefo, "ocorreu uma grande tempestade, com torrentes de chuva e saraiva; e o vento soprou a chuva nos rostos dos cananeus, obscurecendo-lhes a visão, de modo que de nada lhes serviram seus arcos e suas fundas". (Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], V, 205 [v, 4]) Tal chuvarada teria transformado o solo em lama, imobilizando carros e fazendo com que os cavalos atolassem e o inimigo se pusesse em fuga aterrorizado diante dos homens de Baraque. Quaisquer que tenham sido os meios utilizados, com a ajuda de Jeová, "todo o acampamento de Sísera caiu ao fio da espada. Não restou nem sequer um". (Jz 4:15, 16; veja também Sal 83:9, 10.) Pelo que parece, a traiçoeira torrente do Quisom arrastou consigo os cadáveres do inimigo. (Jz 5:21) O próprio Sísera escapou a pé, só para sofrer uma morte inglória às mãos duma mulher, Jael, a esposa de Héber, o queneu. — Jz 4:17-21.

Posteriormente, no reinado do Rei Acabe, de Israel, o profeta Elias matou 450 profetas de Baal no vale da torrente do Quisom. — 1Rs 18:22, 40.

As "águas de Megido" e o "vale da torrente que está defronte de Jocneão" (Jos 19:11) são considerados como o Quisom.

QUITIM. Quitim é alistado como um dos quatro "filhos" de Javã, embora este nome no hebraico só apareça na forma plural em todas as referências bíblicas. (Gên 10:4; 1Cr 1:7) Depois disso, esse nome é usado para representar um povo e uma região.

Josefo (Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], I, 128 [vi, 1]) referiu-se a Quitim como "Chethimus", e associou esta com Chipre e com "o nome Hhethim dado pelos hebreus a todas as ilhas e à maior parte dos países marítimos". Os antigos fenícios se referiam ao povo de Chipre como Kitti. Autoridades modernas geralmente concordam com tal identificação de Quitim com Chipre.

A cidade de Kition (Cítio) na costa SE de Chipre é mais conhecida como colônia fenícia, e assim certos peritos têm encarado o alistamento de Quitim entre os descendentes de Jafé como impróprio. (Gên 10:2, 4; 1Cr 1:5, 7) Entretanto, a evidência mostra que os fenícios chegaram relativamente mais tarde a Chipre, e considera-se que sua colônia em Kition date de apenas cerca do nono século AEC. Assim, The New Encyclopædia Britannica (A Nova Enciclopédia Britânica, 1987, Vol. 3, p. 332), após identificar Kition como a "principal cidade fenícia em Chipre", acrescenta: "As mais antigas ruínas em Cítio são as duma colônia egeia da Era Micênica (c. 1400-1100 AC)." — Veja também Vol. 16, p. 948.

Que Quitim pode abranger outras áreas, além da ilha de Chipre, é indicado pela declaração de Josefo, acima citada, a respeito do emprego hebraico desse termo como abrangendo outras ilhas e regiões costeiras do Mediterrâneo, sendo Chipre apenas a mais próxima (da Palestina) das terras de Quitim. Isto parece ser comprovado pelas referências às "ilhas" ou "litorais" de Quitim, em Ezequiel 27:6 e Jeremias 2:10. Alguns comentaristas consideram que Quitim é também empregado neste sentido mais amplo em Números 24:24, onde o profeta Balaão, contemporâneo de Moisés, predisse que "navios da costa de Quitim" afligiriam a Assíria e Éber, mas que o atacante finalmente pereceria. Este ponto de vista daria margem a que tal ataque se originasse, talvez, da região costeira da Macedônia, país do qual avançou Alexandre Magno, conquistando a terra de "Assur" (Assíria-Babilônia), junto com o Império Medo-Persa; outros sugerem que os atacantes eram romanos, das regiões costeiras e mediterrâneas da Itália. A Vulgata latina emprega "Itália" em lugar de "Quitim" em Números 24:24, e o Targum de Onkelos reza "romanos"; todavia o livro apócrifo de 1 Macabeus (1:1, PIB) emprega Quitim para representar a terra da Macedônia.

Na pronúncia de Isaías contra Tiro, Quitim (provavelmente Chipre) é o ponto em que os navios de Társis, destinados ao oriente, recebem as notícias da queda de Tiro, e Jeová manda a "filha virgem de Sídon" que 'atravesse para a própria Quitim', num vão esforço de encontrar refúgio. (Is 23:1, 11, 12) Isto se harmoniza com a evidência histórica relativa às colônias fenícias em Chipre na época da profecia de Isaías (c. 778-d. 732 AEC). Uma inscrição de Senaqueribe relata a fuga do Rei Luli, de Sídon, para a ilha de Iadnana (Chipre) em resultado do ataque assírio. (Ancient Near Eastern Texts [Textos Antigos do Oriente Próximo], editado por J. Pritchard, 1974, pp. 287, 288) De modo similar, muitos de Tiro evidentemente procuraram abrigo em Chipre, durante os 13 anos em que Tiro ficou sitiada por Nabucodonosor, em cumprimento da proclamação feita por Isaías.

A menção final de Quitim (por tal nome) ocorre na profecia de Daniel sobre a rivalidade entre o "rei do norte" e o "rei do sul", onde um ataque do "rei do norte" é frustrado pelos "navios de Quitim". — Da 11:30; veja CHIPRE.

QUITLIS. Cidade na Sefelá, da herança de Judá. (Jos 15:33, 40) É provisoriamente identificada com a moderna Khirbet el-Maghaz (Mishlat Ma'ahaz), 7 km ao SO de Laquis.

QUITROM [duma raiz que significa "fazer fumaça sacrificial"]. Cidade da qual os zebulonitas deixaram de expulsar os habitantes cananeus. (Jz 1:30) Embora vários lugares tenham sido sugeridos, nenhum deles é comprovado. Esta antiga cidade de Zebulão pode ser a mesma que Catate. — Jos 19:15.

R

RÃ [hebr.: tsefar·dé·a'; gr.: bá·tra·khos]. Anfíbio desprovido de cauda, que possui pele lisa e patas traseiras longas, musculosas, ideais para saltar. Nas Escrituras Hebraicas, as rãs são mencionadas unicamente com relação ao segundo golpe desfechado por Jeová contra o Egito (Êx 8:1-14; Sal 78:45; 105:30), o qual, como as demais pragas, era um julgamento contra as deidades adoradas naquela terra. (Êx 12:12) A rã era consagrada a Heqt, deusa egípcia cuja representação trazia a cabeça desta criatura.

Em Revelação (Apocalipse) 16:13, "impuras expressões inspiradas" são assemelhadas a rãs. Isto é apropriado, uma vez que as rãs eram impuras como alimento, segundo a Lei mosaica. — Le 11:12.

RAABE.

1. [hebr.: Ra·hháv; possivelmente: Amplo; Espaçoso]. Prostituta de Jericó que se tornou adoradora de Jeová. Na primavera setentrional de 1473 AEC, dois espias israelitas penetraram em Jericó e se alojaram na casa de Raabe. (Jos 2:1) Não se declara quanto tempo permaneceram ali, mas Jericó não era tão grande a ponto de levar muito tempo para ser espionada.

Que Raabe era realmente uma meretriz ou prostituta no sentido comum da palavra tem sido negado em alguns círculos, especialmente entre os tradicionalistas judaicos, mas isto não parece encontrar respaldo nos fatos. A palavra hebraica zoh·náh sempre tem que ver com uma relação ilícita, quer sexual, quer como metáfora de infidelidade espiritual, e, em todos os casos em que indica uma prostituta, ela é assim traduzida. Não é traduzida "anfitriã", "estalajadeira" ou algo semelhante. Ademais, entre os cananeus, a prostituição não era uma profissão mal-afamada.

Os dois hóspedes de Raabe foram reconhecidos por outros como israelitas, de modo que relataram o assunto ao rei. No entanto, Raabe prontamente escondeu os homens entre as hastes de linho que estavam secando no terraço, de modo que, quando as autoridades ali chegaram para capturar os homens, ela conseguiu encaminhá-las noutra direção, sem despertar suspeitas. Em tudo isto, Raabe demonstrou maior devoção ao Deus de Israel do que à sua própria comunidade condenada. — Jos 2:2-7.

Não se tem certeza de quando Raabe ficara cônscia do objetivo dos espias ali, e das intenções de Israel para com Jericó. Mas ela passou a confessar-lhes o grande temor e horror existentes na cidade, devido às notícias sobre os atos salvadores de Jeová em favor de Israel durante os 40 ou mais anos passados. Pediu que os espias lhe jurassem que ela e toda a sua família seriam preservadas — pai, mãe e todos os demais. Eles concordaram com isto, desde que ela reunisse toda a família em sua casa, pendurasse um cordão escarlate na janela, e mantivesse sigilo sobre a visita deles, o que ela prometeu fazer. Protegendo ainda mais os espias, permitiu que eles fugissem por uma janela (a casa dela ficava sobre a muralha da cidade) e lhes disse como poderiam evitar o grupo de busca que se dirigira para os vaus do Jordão. — Jos 2:8-22.

Os espias relataram a Josué tudo o que tinha ocorrido. (Jos 2:23, 24) Daí, quando a muralha de Jericó caiu, a casa de Raabe, "num lado da muralha", não foi destruída. (Jos 2:15; 6:22) Sob as ordens de Josué para que a família de Raabe fosse poupada, os mesmos dois espias levaram Raabe a um lugar seguro. Depois dum período em que ficaram separadas do acampamento de Israel, Raabe e sua família tiveram permissão de morar entre os israelitas. (Jos 6:17, 23, 25) Essa ex-prostituta tornou-se então esposa de Salmom e mãe de Boaz, ancestrais dos reis davídicos; ela é uma das quatro mulheres cujos nomes foram citados na genealogia de Jesus, registrada por Mateus. (Ru 4:20-22; Mt 1:5, 6) Ela é também notável exemplo de alguém que, embora não fosse israelita, provou por obras a sua completa fé em Jeová. "Pela fé", Paulo nos diz, "Raabe, a meretriz, não pereceu com os que agiram desobedientemente, porque ela recebeu os espiões de modo pacífico". "Não foi também Raabe, a meretriz, declarada justa pelas obras, depois de ter acolhido hospitaleiramente os mensageiros e os ter enviado embora por outro caminho?", pergunta Tiago. — He 11:30, 31; Tg 2:25.

2. [hebr.: Rá·hav, duma raiz que significa "assediar com importunações"]. Expressão simbólica, empregada primeiro em Jó (9:13; 26:12), onde é traduzida "arremetedor". (NM) No segundo destes trechos, o contexto e a construção paralela a relacionam com um grande monstro marinho. Similarmente, Isaías 51:9 liga Raabe com um monstro marinho: "Não és tu aquele que despedaçou Raabe, que traspassou o monstro marinho?"

Raabe, um "monstro marinho", veio a simbolizar o Egito e seu Faraó, que se opusera a Moisés e a Israel. Isaías 51:9, 10 faz alusão à libertação do Egito, que Jeová concedeu a Israel: "Não és tu aquele que secou o mar, as águas da vasta profundeza? Aquele que fez das funduras do mar um caminho a ser atravessado pelos resgatados?" Em Isaías 30:7, "Raabe" é de novo ligado ao Egito. O Salmo 87:4 menciona "Raabe", onde apropriadamente se enquadra o Egito, como o primeiro duma lista dos inimigos de Israel, junto com Babilônia, Filístia, Tiro e Cus. Os Targuns empregam "os egípcios" neste versículo, e no Salmo 89:10 eles parafraseiam "Raabe" de modo a vincular este termo com o arrogante Faraó do Egito, a quem Jeová humilhou.

RAAMÁ. Filho de Cus, o primogênito de Cã, e irmão de Ninrode. Raamá e seus dois filhos, Sabá e Dedã, fundaram três das 70 famílias pós-diluvianas. (Gên 10:6-8; 1Cr 1:9) Muitos séculos mais tarde, os descendentes tribais de Raamá, Dedã e Sabá negociavam com Tiro. (Ez 27:20, 22) Não se tem certeza de exatamente onde residia a tribo que surgiu de Raamá, mas é bem provável que seja a cidade de Raamah, próxima a Ma'in, no SO da Arábia.

RAAMIAS [Jeová Trovejou; Bramido de Jeová]. Pessoa que retornou a Jerusalém junto com Zorobabel. O nome é uma forma alternativa de Reelaías. — Ne 7:7; Esd 2:2.

RAÃO [Abutre]. Filho de Sema no ramo calebita da genealogia de Judá. — 1Cr 2:4, 5, 9, 42-44.

RABÁ [Muitos; Abundante].

1. Cidade na extremidade O do antigo reino de Amom, depois que perdeu território para os amorreus. Rabá é a única cidade do reino amonita cujo nome é citado no registro bíblico, de modo que se presume que era a capital. Ficava a uns 37 km ao L do Jordão. A cidade se achava junto a um tributário do Jaboque superior, e, assim, estava em condições de beneficiar-se da rica fertilidade daquela região. Também, constituía importante elo na rota de comércio entre Damasco e a Arábia.

"Rabá dos filhos de Amom" (Rab·báth benéh 'Ammóhn) é mencionada inicialmente na Bíblia como o local do esquife de ferro de Ogue, rei de Basã. (De 3:11) Quando os israelitas chegaram à Terra da Promessa, a tribo de Gade recebeu terras dos amorreus (anteriormente, pelo que parece, dominadas por Amom), "até Aroer, que está defronte de [talvez ao NE de] Rabá". — Jos 13:25.

Ruínas em ʽAmman, lugar da antiga Rabá de Amom, e, mais tarde, de Filadélfia, em Decápolis.

Capturada por Davi. A cidade é de novo mencionada com relação à guerra que resultou da forma como o Rei Hanum, de Amom, maltratou os mensageiros de Davi. (2Sa 10:1-19; 1Cr 19:1-19) Joabe e suas tropas combateram os sírios que estavam a soldo dos amonitas, enquanto que os israelitas, sob o comando de Abisai, subiram contra os amonitas, "à entrada da cidade", evidentemente Rabá. (1Cr 19:9) Quando os sírios foram derrotados, os amonitas retrocederam para dentro da cidade. Na primavera setentrional seguinte, Joabe e seu exército cercaram Rabá. Foi durante esta campanha que Davi, em Jerusalém, pecou com Bate-Seba. O rei enviou o marido dela, Urias, o hitita, de volta para a batalha, e, segundo instruções de Davi, Urias foi colocado nas linhas de frente. Quando alguns amonitas saíram impetuosamente de Rabá, a batalha levou Urias próximo o bastante para ser morto por um arqueiro postado na muralha. — 2Sa 11:1-25; 1Cr 20:1.

Com o tempo, Joabe teve êxito em sua luta contra Rabá, ao ponto de capturar "a cidade das águas". (2Sa 12:27) Visto que Joabe informou então Davi da situação, para que o rei fosse consumar a conquista, obtendo assim o mérito pela captura de Rabá, parece que Joabe capturou apenas parte da cidade. A expressão "cidade das águas" pode referir-se a uma parte situada à margem do rio, em contraste com alguma outra parte da cidade, ou pode significar que ele obteve o controle da principal fonte de abastecimento de água da cidade. — 2Sa 12:26-28.

Davi foi e concluiu a captura de Rabá e "foi muito grande o despojo da cidade que tirou de lá". (2Sa 12:29-31; 1Cr 20:2, 3) Com o tempo, os amonitas se tornaram de novo independentes. No nono século AEC, Amós predisse o julgamento contra os amonitas, e mencionou especificamente que Rabá seria incendiada. (Am 1:13, 14) Tanto Jeremias como Ezequiel também proferiram mensagens contra Rabá. Conforme mostrado no artigo AMONITAS, estas profecias se cumpriram, evidentemente, nos dias de Nabucodonosor. — Je 49:2, 3; Ez 21:19-23; 25:5.

No terceiro século AEC, Ptolomeu Filadelfo reconstruiu Rabá e mudou o nome da cidade para Filadélfia. Foi mais tarde incluída entre as cidades de Decápolis, e, pelo visto, era bem próspera e forte. A moderna cidade de ʽAmman se acha localizada ali, e existem consideráveis ruínas antigas, inclusive um enorme anfiteatro, mas estas datam mormente dos tempos romanos.

2. Uma das cidades dadas à tribo de Judá em seu lote territorial. Sua exata localização é desconhecida. É alistada em Josué 15:60 junto com Quiriate-Jearim, que se achava na região colinosa de Judá, 13 km ao ONO de Jerusalém.

RABE-MAGUE. Título dum dos principais oficiais do Império Babilônico, na época em que Jerusalém foi destruída, em 607 AEC. Tal título tem sido identificado em inscrições encontradas em escavações. Nergal-Sarezer, o Rabe-Mague, era um dos homens do tribunal especial, composto de altos príncipes babilônios que se sentaram para julgar junto ao Portão do Meio, de Jerusalém, depois que a cidade caiu diante de Nabucodonosor, sendo ele mencionado com relação à libertação de Jeremias, para que este se dirigisse a Gedalias. — Je 39:3, 13, 14.

RABE-SARIS [Oficial Principal da Corte]. Título do oficial principal da corte nos governos assírio e babilônico. O Rabe-Saris era um dos membros do comitê de três altos dignitários assírios enviados pelo rei da Assíria para exigir a rendição de Jerusalém, na época do Rei Ezequias. — 2Rs 18:17.

O Rabe-Saris era um dos oficiais babilônicos que assumiram o controle de Jerusalém para Nabucodonosor, quando a cidade caiu em 607 AEC, e Nebusazbã é citado nominalmente como o Rabe-Saris, com relação à ordem dada a Jeremias para que morasse com Gedalias. (Je 39:3, 13, 14; 40:1-5) Escavações desenterraram inscrições que trazem este título. — Bulletin of the Israel Exploration Society (Boletim da Sociedade de Exploração de Israel), Jerusalém, 1967, Vol. XXXI, p. 77; Le palais royal d'Ugarit (O Palácio Real de Ugarit), III, Paris, 1955, N.º 16:162, p. 126.

RABI. O designativo "Rabi" era usado no verdadeiro sentido da palavra como "instrutor". (Jo 1:38) Mas, entre os judeus, pouco antes do nascimento de Jesus, veio a ser usado também como uma expressão de tratamento, e como um título de respeito e honra, significando "meu grande; meu excelente". Esse título era exigido por alguns dos homens instruídos, escribas, instrutores da Lei. Eles se deleitavam em ser chamados de "Rabi" como título honorífico. Jesus Cristo condenou tal anseio por títulos, e proibiu seus seguidores de serem chamados de "Rabi", uma vez que ele era o instrutor deles. — Mt 23:6-8.

Na Bíblia, só encontramos o termo "Rabi" nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs. É usado ali 12 vezes em relação a Jesus, no sentido real de "Instrutor": duas vezes por Pedro (Mr 9:5; 11:21), uma vez por dois discípulos de João (Jo 1:38), uma vez por Natanael (Jo 1:49), uma vez por Nicodemos (Jo 3:2), três vezes por discípulos de Jesus, cujos nomes não são especificados (Jo 4:31; 9:2; 11:8), uma vez pela multidão (Jo 6:25), e duas vezes por Judas (um dos casos é repetição) (Mt 26:25, 49; Mr 14:45). Maria Madalena se dirigiu a Jesus como "Rabôni" (Meu Instrutor), e um homem cego a quem Jesus curou também fez o mesmo. O pronome pessoal "meu" é um sufixo, neste caso, mas, por causa do seu emprego comum, parece ter perdido seu significado, assim como Monsieur, que originalmente significava "meu senhor". (Jo 20:16; Mr 10:51) João, o Batizador, é uma vez chamado de Rabi. — Jo 3:26.

RABITE [Multidão; Abundância]. De acordo com o texto massorético, um lugar que ficava na fronteira de Issacar. (Jos 19:17, 18, 20) Considera-se tratar-se de Daberate, identificada com Khirbet Dabura (Horvat Devora). (Jos 19:12) Em apoio a esse conceito, o Manuscrito Vaticano N.º 1209, do quarto século EC, diz Da·bi·ron em lugar de "Rabite". — Veja DABERATE.

RABÔNI. Palavra semítica que significa "Meu Instrutor". (Mr 10:51) Pode ser que "Rabôni" fosse uma forma mais respeitosa do que "Rabi", título este que significa "Instrutor", ou que transmitisse mais calor humano. (Jo 1:38) No entanto, quando João escreveu, talvez o sufixo (i) da primeira pessoa, acrescentado a esta palavra, tivesse perdido seu significado especial no título, uma vez que João o traduz como significando simplesmente "Instrutor". — Jo 20:16.

RABSAQUÉ [do acadiano, provavelmente significando "Copeiro-Mor"]. Título dum destacado oficial assírio. (2Rs 18:17) Certa inscrição num prédio do rei assírio Tiglate-Pileser III reza: "Enviei um oficial meu, o rabsaq, a Tiro." Também, uma tabuinha que se acha no Museu Britânico contém uma inscrição do Rei Assurbanipal, que diz: "Ordenei que se adicionasse às minhas anteriores forças (de batalha) (no Egito) o oficial rabsaq." — Ancient Near Eastern Texts (Textos Antigos do Oriente Próximo), editado por J. Pritchard, 1974, pp. 282, 296.

Enquanto Senaqueribe, rei da Assíria, sitiava a fortaleza de Laquis, em Judá, ele enviou uma grande força militar a Jerusalém, sob Tartã, o comandante-chefe, junto com dois outros altos oficiais, o Rabe-Saris e o Rabsaqué. (2Rs 18:17; o relato inteiro também aparece em Is caps. 36, 37.) Destes três oficiais superiores assírios, Rabsaqué foi o principal porta-voz no esforço de obrigar o Rei Ezequias a render-se. (2Rs 18:19-25) Os três ficaram de pé junto ao aqueduto do reservatório superior. Este Rabsaqué, cujo nome pessoal não é revelado, era alguém que falava fluentemente o hebraico, bem como o sírio. Ele clamou em voz alta, em hebraico, para o Rei Ezequias, mas três dos oficiais de Ezequias saíram ao seu encontro. Os oficiais do Rei Ezequias pediram-lhe que lhes falasse na língua síria, em vez de na língua dos judeus, porque o povo na muralha estava ouvindo. (2Rs 18:26, 27) Mas a situação era ideal para o objetivo de Rabsaqué como propagandista. Ele queria que o povo o ouvisse, visando desmoralizar suas fileiras. Utilizando palavras calculadas para provocar terror, valendo-se de falsas promessas e mentiras, bem como de vitupério e zombaria contra Jeová, Rabsaqué falou ainda mais alto em hebraico, apresentando argumentos ao povo para que traíssem o Rei Ezequias, entregando-se ao exército assírio. (2Rs 18:28-35) Todavia, o povo de Jerusalém permaneceu leal a Ezequias. — 2Rs 18:36.

Ezequias apresentou em oração a Jeová as palavras escarnecedoras de Rabsaqué, e enviou-se uma delegação ao profeta Isaías, para obter a resposta de Jeová. (2Rs 18:37; 19:1-7) No ínterim, Rabsaqué se viu obrigado a se retirar quando soube que o rei da Assíria se afastara de Laquis, e estava lutando contra Libna. Sustentando sua campanha de propaganda contra Ezequias à distância, Senaqueribe enviou mensageiros a Jerusalém com cartas de contínua zombaria e forte ameaça, para fazer com que Ezequias se rendesse. (2Rs 19:8-13) O Rei Ezequias levou as cartas ao templo de Jerusalém e as estendeu diante de Jeová, orando ao mesmo tempo com instância em busca de ajuda. (2Rs 19:14-19) Jeová respondeu mediante o profeta Isaías, dizendo sobre o rei da Assíria: "Não entrará nesta cidade, nem atirará flecha nela, nem a confrontará com escudo, nem levantará um aterro de sítio contra ela. Pelo caminho por onde passou a vir, ele voltará, e não entrará nesta cidade, é a pronunciação de Jeová." (2Rs 19:32, 33) Naquela noite o anjo de Jeová golpeou mortalmente 185.000 soldados dos assírios. Este poderoso golpe inesperado fez com que Senaqueribe, o rei da Assíria, recuasse imediatamente e retornasse a Nínive, capital da Assíria, onde Senaqueribe foi assassinado algum tempo depois. (2Rs 19:35-37) Como escarnecedor blasfemo do Deus vivente, Jeová, os esforços do Rabsaqué não deram em nada.

RACAL. Um dos lugares para onde Davi enviou despojos de sua guerra com os amalequitas. (1Sa 30:18, 26, 29) A Septuaginta grega reza "Carmelo" em vez de Racal, e alguns peritos creem que isso represente o texto original.

RAÇAS. Veja BÍBLIA (Raças e línguas); HOMEM.

RACATE. Cidade fortificada de Naftali. (Jos 19:32, 35) É identificada com Khirbet el-Quneitireh (Tel Raqqat), situada junto ao mar da Galileia, a uma curta distância ao N de Tiberíades.

RACIOCÍNIO. O termo hebraico mezim·máh é empregado para designar a faculdade de raciocínio, ou a habilidade de refletir num assunto com sabedoria e ponderação, com base em conhecimento cabal (Pr 5:2; 8:12); os ardis, projetos e ideias tolas de homens iníquos (Sal 10:2, 4; 21:11; 37:7; 139:19, 20; Pr 12:2; 24:8; Je 11:15); ou as 'ideias' objetivas de Jeová Deus ou de seu "coração" (Jó 42:2; Je 23:20; 30:24; 51:11).

Um dos objetivos de Provérbios é suprir ao moço conhecimento e raciocínio. (Pr 1:1-4) As informações contidas em Provérbios habilitam a pessoa a formular pensamentos e ideias salutares que possam dar orientação objetiva à sua vida. O raciocínio salvaguarda-a de seguir um proceder errado e de se associar com aqueles que a influenciariam para o mal, uma vez que a ajuda a ver a que tal ação a levaria. Isto resulta em bênção para a pessoa. A sabedoria e o raciocínio a salvaguardam de empenhar-se em atividades que conduzem à calamidade, e, assim, provam ser vida para a sua alma. Ela goza de segurança, não precisando temer que a justiça a apanhe por ter-se tornado culpada de transgressão. — Pr 3:21-25.

No entanto, aquele que realmente faz uso do raciocínio pode também tornar-se objeto de ódio. Esta pode ser a ideia expressa em Provérbios 14:17: "O homem de raciocínios é odiado." Com frequência, as pessoas que não raciocinam encaram de modo desfavorável os que usam suas faculdades mentais. Também, em princípio, aqueles que usam a mente para fazer a vontade de Deus são odiados. Como Jesus Cristo disse: "Porque não fazeis parte do mundo, mas eu vos escolhi do mundo, por esta razão o mundo vos odeia." (Jo 15:19) Naturalmente, o termo da língua original para "raciocínios", em Provérbios 14:17, pode abranger o raciocínio malévolo. Por conseguinte, o texto pode também significar que um homem que maquina o mal é odiado, e algumas traduções rezam concordemente: "O homem de maus desígnios ["desígnios perversos"] é odiado." — ALA, VB.

RACOM. Cidade alistada ao se descrever a fronteira de Dã. (Jos 19:40, 41, 46) É provisoriamente identificada por alguns com Tell er-Reqqeit, a uma curta distância ao N de Tel Aviv-Yafo, na costa do mar Mediterrâneo.

RADAI. Quinto filho mencionado de Jessé; um irmão mais velho de Davi, da tribo de Judá. — 1Cr 2:13-15.

RAFA, I [duma raiz que significa "curar"]. Filho de Benjamim, chamado de o quinto em 1 Crônicas 8:1, 2. Seu nome não consta da lista daqueles que foram para o Egito (Gên 46:21) nem da lista das famílias tribais de Benjamim. (Núm 26:38-40) Isto pode indicar que, não importa onde Rafa tenha nascido, morreu sem descendentes, ou então eles foram absorvidos por outra família.

RAFA, II [forma abreviada de Refaías, que significa "Jah Curou"]. Descendente de Benjamim por intermédio de Saul; também chamado Refaías. — 1Cr 8:33-37; 9:43.

RAFU [duma raiz que significa "curar"]. Benjamita cujo filho Palti foi um dos 12 enviados para espionar a terra de Canaã em 1512 AEC. — Núm 13:9, 16.

RAINHA. No sentido moderno, um título concedido quer à esposa dum rei, quer a um monarca do sexo feminino. Na Bíblia, este título se refere mais frequentemente a mulheres de fora dos reinos de Israel e de Judá. A palavra hebraica que mais de perto exprime a ideia de rainha, conforme é entendida atualmente, é mal·káh. Mas, no Oriente era raro uma mulher possuir autoridade governamental. A rainha de Sabá talvez fosse uma mulher dotada de tal poder. (1Rs 10:1; Mt 12:42) Nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, "rainha" é tradução da palavra ba·sí·lis·sa, a forma feminina do vocábulo para "rei". O título é aplicado à Rainha Candace, da Etiópia. — At 8:27.

Nas Escrituras Hebraicas, mal·káh é empregado mais frequentemente com referência à rainha consorte, ou à esposa principal dum rei duma potência estrangeira. Vasti, como esposa principal do Rei Assuero, da Pérsia, era uma rainha consorte em vez de rainha reinante. Ela foi substituída pela judia Ester, o que fez de Ester a rainha consorte, e, embora Ester dispusesse de dignidade régia, não era governante associada (Est 1:9, 12, 19; 2:17, 22; 4:11); qualquer autoridade de que dispusesse seria por concessão do rei. — Veja Est 8:1-8, 10; 9:29-32.

Israel. A palavra hebraica gevi·ráh, traduzida "rainha" em algumas versões, significa, mais corretamente, "senhora". Nos casos em que o título é empregado, parece aplicar-se principalmente à mãe ou à avó do rei, conferindo-se a tais mulheres respeito régio, como por exemplo, Jezabel, a mãe do Rei Jeorão, de Israel. (2Rs 10:13) Quando a mãe de Salomão se dirigiu a ele com um pedido, ele se curvou diante dela e mandou colocar um trono para ela, à sua direita. (1Rs 2:19) A "senhora" podia ser deposta pelo rei, como se deu com Maacá, a avó do Rei Asa, de Judá, a qual ele removeu da posição de "senhora" por ela ter feito um ídolo horrível para o poste sagrado. — 1Rs 15:13.

Nenhuma mulher poderia legalmente tornar-se chefe de estado nos reinos de Israel e de Judá. (De 17:14, 15) No entanto, após a morte de seu filho Acazias, rei de Judá, Atalia, que era filha do iníquo Rei Acabe, de Israel, e da esposa dele, Jezabel, eliminou todos os herdeiros do reino, exceto o filho de Acazias, Jeoás, a quem Jeoseba, irmã de Acazias, escondera. Atalia reinou então ilegalmente por seis anos, até que foi executada por ordens do sumo sacerdote, Jeoiada. — 2Rs 11:1-3, 13-16.

Babilônia. Em Babilônia, o trono se limitava a reis. Em Daniel 5:10, a "rainha" (aramaico: mal·káh), pelo visto, não era a esposa, e sim a mãe de Belsazar, conforme indicado por ela estar a par dos eventos pertinentes a Nabucodonosor, avô de Belsazar. Como rainha-mãe, ela possuía certa dose de dignidade régia, e era muitíssimo respeitada por todos, incluindo Belsazar.

Egito. Os primitivos chefes de Estado egípcios eram homens. As "rainhas" eram, na realidade, consortes. Tafnes, a esposa de Faraó, é chamada de "senhora" em 1 Reis 11:19. Hatxepset governou como rainha somente por ter-se recusado a entregar a regência quando o herdeiro, Tutmés III, atingiu a maioridade. Após a morte dela, Tutmés III mandou apagar ou destruir todos os monumentos dela. Mais tarde, porém, durante a época do reinado ptolemaico (macedônio) sobre o Egito, houve rainhas governantes.

Na Adoração Falsa. Os israelitas apóstatas dos dias de Jeremias abandonaram a Jeová, seu verdadeiro Rei, e idolatramente faziam bolos, ofertas de bebidas, e ofereciam fumaça sacrificial, à "rainha [hebr.: melé·kheth] dos céus". — Je 7:18; 44:17, 18; veja RAINHA DOS CÉUS.

Em Revelação (Apocalipse) 18:7, mostra-se Babilônia, a Grande, como dizendo jactanciosamente: "Estou sentada como rainha [gr.: ba·sí·lis·sa]", sentando-se sobre "povos, e multidões, e nações, e línguas". (Re 17:15) Ela mantém o controle por meio de suas relações imorais com os governantes terrestres, assim como fizeram muitas rainhas do passado. — Re 17:1-5; 18:3, 9, veja BABILÔNIA, A GRANDE.

"Consorte Real" no Céu. Uma vez que Hebreus 1:8, 9, aplica o Salmo 45:6, 7, a Cristo Jesus, parece provável que "a filha do rei", no Salmo 45:13, simbolize profeticamente a classe da sua noiva. Isto tornaria "a consorte real" (hebr.: she·ghál) mencionada no Salmo 45:9 a esposa do Grande Rei, Jeová. Não é a esta "consorte real", mas a Jesus Cristo e aos seus 144.000 associados remidos da terra que Jeová confere autoridade para reinar como reis. — Re 20:4, 6; Da 7:13, 14, 27.

RAINHA DOS CÉUS.

Título duma deusa adorada pelos israelitas apóstatas nos dias de Jeremias. — Je 44:17-19.

Embora estivessem envolvidas primariamente as mulheres, pelo visto a família toda participava de algum modo na adoração da "rainha dos céus". As mulheres coziam bolos sacrificiais, os filhos ajuntavam a lenha e os pais acendiam as fogueiras. (Je 7:18) Que a adoração desta deusa exercia forte influência sobre os judeus é refletido em que aqueles que haviam fugido para o Egito após o assassinato do governador Gedalias atribuíram sua calamidade à negligência em oferecerem fumaça sacrificial e ofertas de bebida à "rainha dos céus". O profeta Jeremias, porém, mostrou vigorosamente quão errado era esse conceito. — Je 44:15-30.

As Escrituras não identificam especificamente a "rainha dos céus". Sugere-se que essa deusa deva ser identificada com a deusa sumeriana da fertilidade Inana, a Istar babilônica. O nome Inana significa literalmente "Rainha do Céu". Istar, a deusa babilônica correspondente, era qualificada nos textos acadianos com os epítetos "rainha dos céus" e "rainha dos céus e das estrelas".

Pelo visto, a adoração de Istar propagou-se para outros países. Numa das Tabuinhas de Amarna, escrevendo a Amenófis III, Tushratta menciona

"Istar, senhora do céu". No Egito, certa inscrição do Rei Horemheb, que segundo se crê reinou no século 14 AEC, menciona "Astarte [Istar], senhora do céu". Um fragmento duma estela encontrada em Mênfis, do reinado de Mernepta, rei egípcio que segundo se crê reinou no século 13 AEC, representa Astarte com a inscrição: "Astarte, senhora do céu." No período persa, em Siene (moderna Assuã), Astarte foi apelidada de "a rainha dos céus".

A adoração da "rainha dos céus" chegou a ser praticada até o quarto século EC. Por volta de 375 EC, Epifânio declarou o seguinte em seu tratado Panarion (79, 1, 7): "Algumas mulheres decoram uma espécie de carro ou um banco de quatro cantos e, depois de estirarem sobre ele uma toalha de linho, num certo dia festivo do ano, colocam em frente dele um pão durante alguns dias e o oferecem em nome de Maria. Então, todas as mulheres partilham deste pão." Epifânio (79, 8, 1, 2) relacionou tais práticas com a adoração da "rainha dos céus" apresentada em Jeremias, e cita Jeremias 7:18 e 44:25. — Epiphanius (Epifânio), editado por Karl Holl, Leipzig, 1933, Vol. 3, pp. 476, 482, 483.

RALHAR. Veja FALTA, ACHAR FALTA.

RAMÁ [Altura]. A palavra hebraica significa uma elevação ou lugar alto. (Ez 16:24) Era empregada como nome próprio de vários lugares em Israel.

1. Cidade do território de Benjamim. Em Josué 18:25, é alistada entre Gibeão e Beerote. Pelo que parece, achava-se próxima de Betel, cidade situada no S do território de Efraim. (Jz 4:5) Um levita que viajava para o N, passando por Jerusalém, chegou a Gibeá, tendo a Ramá evidentemente logo adiante. (Jz 19:11-15; Os 5:8) E se achava na vizinhança de Geba. (Is 10:29) Tais referências se combinam com o testemunho de Eusébio em identificar Ramá, em Benjamim, com a localidade da atual er-Ram, que se acha a uns 8 km ao N de Jerusalém, 3 km ao N de Gibeá, 5 km ao L de Gibeão, e 3 km ao O de Geba. A cidade está situada sobre uma elevação, como o nome sugere.

Durante o reino dividido, Ramá passou a receber considerável atenção, estando situada, como era o caso, perto da fronteira entre Israel e Judá, e da estrada N-S da região colinosa. O Rei Baasa, de Israel, começou a expandir ou fortalecer Ramá, em Benjamim, enquanto guerreava contra Asa. (1Rs 15:16, 17; 2Cr 16:1) Mas, quando o rei da Síria atacou Israel, do N, a atenção de Baasa foi desviada e Asa tomou Ramá, bem como os materiais de construção que Baasa estava utilizando ali, empregando-os em construções nas vizinhas Geba e Mispá. (1Rs 15:20-22; 2Cr 16:4-6) Parece que, quando Jerusalém foi destruída, em 607 AEC, os judeus levados cativos foram reunidos em Ramá antes de serem conduzidos a Babilônia. (Je 40:1) Após o exílio, Ramá voltou a ser povoada. — Esd 2:1, 26; Ne 7:30; 11:33.

Alguns peritos concluíram que esse ajuntamento de judeus em Ramá antes de levá-los para o exílio (talvez acompanhado da matança de alguns ali) foi mencionado pelas seguintes palavras: "Ouve-se uma voz em Ramá, lamentação e choro amargo; Raquel chorando por seus filhos. Negou-se a ser consolada por causa dos seus filhos, porque eles já não existem." (Je 31:15) Raquel, esposa de Jacó, desejara tanto ter filhos a ponto de considerar-se "morta" sem eles. (Gên 30:1) Então, pode-se falar figuradamente de Raquel chorar a perda dos judeus na morte ou no cativeiro. Ou visto que Raquel era mãe de Benjamim, as palavras de Jeremias talvez a representem como chorando especialmente pelos habitantes benjamitas de Ramá. Jeremias passou a explicar que havia esperança, pois os exilados retornariam. (Je 31:16) Em Mateus 2:18, as palavras proféticas de Jeremias 31:15 são citadas como aplicando-se também ao tempo em que Herodes mandou matar as criancinhas de Belém. — Veja RAQUEL.

2. Cidade enclave da tribo de Simeão, no Negebe. (Jos 19:1, 8) Era a mesma que Baalate-Beer e era conhecida como "Ramá do sul". É provisoriamente identificada com Khirbet Ghazzah (Horvat ʽUza), c. 30 km ao L de Berseba. — Veja BAALATE-BEER.

3. Cidade não identificada do território de Aser, alistada apenas em Josué 19:24, 29. É difícil determinar à base do texto exatamente em que lugar da herança de Aser estava situada a cidade, embora pareça ter estado ao N, em direção a Tiro.

4. Cidade fortificada no território de Naftali. (Jos 19:32, 36) É provisoriamente identificada com Khirbet Zeitun er-Rameh (também conhecida como Khirbet Jul) logo ao L de er-Rameh (Rama) e uns 30 km ao L da cidade portuária de ʽAkko (Aco). Mas a única referência a ela em Josué não permite uma identificação positiva de sua localização.

5. Cidade do profeta Samuel e de seus pais. Em 1 Samuel 1:1, Elcana, pai de Samuel, é descrito como "homem de Ramataim-Zofim, da região montanhosa de Efraim". Em todo o restante do relato usa-se a forma abreviada "Ramá". (1Sa 1:19) Talvez o nome mais extenso seja empregado primeiro para distinguir esta Ramá de outros lugares com o mesmo nome, tais como a Ramá de Benjamim. A versão An American Translation (Uma Tradução Americana) reza: "Homem de Ramá, um zufita." Esta tradução do texto massorético indicaria que Elcana era, quer descendente de Zufe (Zofai), quer procedente do distrito de Zufe. — 1Cr 6:27, 28, 34, 35; 1Sa 9:5.

Certa tradição antiga apresentada por Eusébio identifica Ramá com o lugar da atual Rentis (Rantis), nas colinas de Efraim, c. 35 km ao NO de Jerusalém. Isto seria o mesmo lugar que a Arimateia (forma gr. do hebr. Ra·máh) mencionada nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs. — Lu 23:50-53.

Elcana se estabeleceu em Ramá, onde evidentemente nasceu Samuel, mas ele viajava todo ano até Silo para oferecer sacrifícios. (1Sa 1:3, 19; 2:11) Embora Samuel tivesse morado algum tempo em Silo com Eli, o sacerdote, por fim fixou residência em Ramá e a utilizou como base da qual viajava num circuito, julgando Israel. (1Sa 3:19-21; 7:15-17; 8:4; 15:24-35; 16:4, 13; 19:18-24) Quando Samuel morreu, foi sepultado em sua casa, em Ramá, "sua própria cidade". — 1Sa 25:1; 28:3.

6. Forma abreviada de Ramote-Gileade. — 2Rs 8:28, 29; 2Cr 22:5, 6; veja RAMOTE-GILEADE.

RAMATAIM-ZOFIM. Lugar onde morava Elcana, pai de Samuel, na região montanhosa de Efraim. — 1Sa 1:1; veja RAMÁ N.º 5.

RAMATE-LEÍ [Lugar Elevado da Queixada]. O nome que Sansão deu ao local de Judá onde ele golpeou mil filisteus com a queixada fresca dum jumento. — Jz 15:16-18; veja LEÍ.

RAMATE-MISPA. Veja RAMATE-MISPÉ.

RAMATE-MISPÉ [Lugar Elevado da Torre de Vigia]. Uma das cidades ao L do Jordão, dadas à tribo de Gade. (Jos 13:24, 26) Evidentemente, Ramate-Mispé ficava perto de Betonim.

RAMATITA [De (Pertencente a) Ramá]. Apelido de Simei, guardião do vinhedo do Rei Davi. (1Cr 27:27) Indica que ele procedia duma das várias cidades chamadas Ramá, mas não há como determinar qual delas.

RAMESSÉS. Veja RAMSÉS, RAMESSÉS.

RAMIAS [possivelmente: Jah É Alto (Enaltecido)]. Israelita, um "dos filhos de Parós" que despediram suas esposas estrangeiras e os filhos, segundo o incentivo de Esdras. — Esd 10:10, 11, 25, 44.

RAMO, RENOVO. Ramo é uma divisão menor da parte principal, seja duma árvore, dum rio, ou duma família. Na Bíblia, diversas palavras hebraicas e gregas são traduzidas de formas variadas como "ramo", "renovo", "raminho", "rebento", "rebentão", "broto", "galho", "folha" e "copa (de árvore)". Ramos de árvores desempenhavam um papel na adoração de Israel. Na Festividade das Barracas, no sétimo mês, etanim ou tisri, ramos de árvores, incluindo de palmeiras, oliveiras, murtas e choupos, eram usados na construção de barracas em que as pessoas residiam enquanto durasse a festividade. — Le 23:40; Ne 8:15.

Por ocasião da entrada de Jesus em Jerusalém, em 9 de nisã de 33 EC, a multidão que viera a Jerusalém para a Páscoa e para a Festividade dos Pães Não Fermentados saudou-o agitando ramos de palmeira e aclamando-o rei de Israel. (Jo 12:12, 13) De modo similar, a "grande multidão" da visão de João em Revelação (Apocalipse), capítulo 7, é apresentada como agitando ramos de palmeira, ao atribuir a salvação a Deus, que está no trono, e ao Cordeiro. — Re 7:9, 10.

Uso Figurado. Jesus foi criado na cidadezinha de Nazaré, que provavelmente significa "Cidade [do] Rebentão". O apóstolo Mateus traz-nos à atenção que Jesus era chamado de Nazareno (provavelmente do hebr. né·tser: "rebentão") em cumprimento da profecia, fazendo alusão à profecia de Isaías 11:1. — Mt 2:23.

O apóstolo Paulo compara os que se tornam parte do descendente de Abraão como candidatos ao Reino celestial a ramos numa oliveira simbólica. Ramos de oliveiras bravas (pessoas das nações, gentios) foram enxertados para substituir os ramos naturais (judeus) que foram "arrancados", porque apenas uns poucos aceitaram a Cristo, a maioria deixando de fazê-lo. Assim se completa o pleno número ordenado por Deus, que por fim se compõe de judeus e gentios. — Ro 11:17-24.

"Rebentão", "renovo" e "broto", e os termos relacionados supracitados, são empregados nas Escrituras para indicar um filho ou uma prole, um descendente. Nas bênçãos que Jacó concedeu a seus filhos, ele chamou José de broto (hebr.: ben, "filho"). (Gên 49:22 n) A destruição sem deixar raiz nem ramos simboliza a extirpação da família ou de todos de certa espécie, ou a destruição completa sem possibilidade de reavivamento. — Mal 4:1; compare isso com Is 5:24; Os 9:16.

Jesus Cristo é mencionado profeticamente nas Escrituras Hebraicas como o servo "Renovo" (NM, Al) ou "Rebento" (BJ, BV), "Gérmen" (CBC, MC) de Jeová. (Za 3:8) Em Zacarias 6:12, 13, "o homem cujo nome é Renovo" é descrito como edificando o templo de Jeová e sentando-se como sacerdote sobre seu trono. Isto não se pode aplicar a outrem senão a Jesus Cristo, visto que somente ele pode ocupar os cargos de Rei e Sacerdote sob o arranjo de Deus. Promete-se Jesus Cristo como o justo "renovo" suscitado a Davi. Este executará a justiça e o juízo. (Je 23:5; 33:15; compare isso com Is 53:2; Re 22:16.) Ele é também chamado de renovo e de rebentão de Jessé, pai de Davi. — Is 11:1.

O fim da dinastia dos reis de Babilônia foi representado por compará-la a um "rebentão detestado", lançado fora e imerecedor dum enterro. — Is 14:19.

Assim como Jeová, o Criador, faz surgir brotos em plantas de jardim e em árvores, assim também "broto", "ramo" e termos similares acham-se associados à prosperidade, aos aumentos e às bênçãos de Jeová. (Is 4:2; 60:21, 22; Jó 29:19) Ele promete que "os justos florescerão como a folhagem ["um ramo", KJ; "folhas verdes", BV]". — Pr 11:28.

RAMOTE [provavelmente: Lugares Elevados; duma raiz que significa "elevar"].

1. Cidade levita no território de Issacar. (1Cr 6:71-73) É aparentemente o mesmo que Remete e Jarmute (N.º 2). (Jos 19:17, 21; 21:27-29) Ramote é provisoriamente identificada com Kokab el-Hawa (Kokhav ha-Yarden), num planalto a uns 10 km ao N de Bete-Seã.

2. "Ramote do sul", em 1 Samuel 30:27, pelo visto se refere à "Baalate-Beer, Ramá do sul", mencionada em Josué 19:8. Estava evidentemente situada no Negebe. — Veja RAMÁ N.º 2.

3. Cidade em Gileade, ao L do rio Jordão. (Jos 20:8) Com o tempo passou a ser chamada de Ramote-Gileade. — Veja RAMOTE-GILEADE.

RAMOTE-GILEADE [provavelmente: Lugares Elevados de Gileade]. Cidade estratégica situada no território de Gade, ao L do Jordão. A cidade também era chamada pela forma abreviada de Ramá. (2Rs 8:28, 29; 2Cr 22:5, 6) Era uma das cidades levitas naquele lado do rio (1Cr 6:80), e foi escolhida como uma das cidades de refúgio. (De 4:43; Jos 20:8; 21:38) Salomão designou um preposto em Ramote-Gileade para cuidar das provisões de alimentos para o rei, provenientes das cidades de Gileade e Basã. — 1Rs 4:7, 13.

Após a divisão do reino, quando a Síria lançou ataques contra Israel, Ramote-Gileade desempenhou importante papel na história israelita, sendo evidentemente uma espécie de chave de acesso para o território ao L do Jordão. Em certo ponto, os sírios tomaram a cidade. Apesar da promessa de Ben-Hadade II de devolver as cidades israelitas tomadas anteriormente, pelo visto Ramote-Gileade não foi devolvida. (1Rs 20:34) Assim, Acabe, de Israel, tentou recuperá-la com a ajuda do Rei Jeosafá, de Judá. Esse esforço contrário aos conselhos de Micaías resultou na morte de Acabe. — 1Rs 22:13-38.

Jeorão, filho de Acabe, junto com Acazias, de Judá, também combateu os sírios em Ramote-Gileade. O Segundo dos Reis 9:14 diz: "Tinha acontecido que o próprio Jeorão ficara de guarda em Ramote-Gileade . . . por causa de Hazael, rei da Síria." Assim, é possível que Jeorão tivesse tomado a cidade antes e a estivesse defendendo (não atacando) quando Acazias juntou-se a ele no combate a Hazael. Na luta, Jeorão foi ferido, de modo que se retirou para Jezreel, a fim de recuperar-se. — 2Rs 8:25-29; 9:14, 15; 2Cr 22:5-8.

Em Ramote-Gileade, o ajudante de Eliseu ungiu Jeú, o chefe militar, para ser o próximo rei. — 2Rs 9:1-14.

Não se tem certeza da localização exata de Ramote-Gileade. Um dos muitos lugares sugeridos é Tell Ramith, a uns 45 km ao SE da ponta S do mar da Galileia. O nome deste tel pode ter-se derivado do nome Ramote-Gileade. Acha-se situado numa colina que dá para uma planície, o que concorda com o provável significado de Ramote (Lugares Elevados; duma raiz que significa "elevar"). Esta localização teria sido apropriada para um preposto responsável por Gileade e Basã. — 1Rs 4:13.

RAMPA DE ATAQUE. Veja ESCARPA.

RAMSÉS, RAMESSÉS [do egípcio, que significa "Rá (o deus-sol) o Gerou"]. Quando a família de Jacó se mudou para o Egito, foi-lhe designada como moradia a "terra de Ramessés". (Gên 47:11) Uma vez que em outros lugares eles são mencionados como residindo na terra de Gósen, parece que Ramessés era ou um distrito de Gósen, ou outro nome de Gósen. (Gên 47:6) Posteriormente, os israelitas foram escravizados e obrigados a construir cidades "como lugares de armazenagem para Faraó, a saber, Pitom e Ramsés [o sinal vocálico, neste caso, difere ligeiramente do de "Ramessés"]". (Êx 1:11) Muitos peritos sugerem que Ramsés era assim denominada por causa do distrito de Ramessés, em que eles presumem que Ramsés estava localizada.

Quando se iniciou o Êxodo do Egito, Ramessés é indicada como ponto de partida. A maioria dos peritos acha que isso se refere à cidade, sendo talvez o ponto de encontro onde os israelitas se reuniram, vindos de várias partes de Gósen. Ramessés, porém, pode referir-se neste caso a um distrito, e pode ser que os israelitas tenham partido de todas as partes desse distrito, convergindo para Sucote como local de encontro. — Êx 12:37; Núm 33:3-5.

A localização exata deste ponto de partida, se se trata duma cidade em vez de dum distrito, é muitíssimo incerta. Os peritos modernos identificam Ramessés com a cidade chamada de Per-Ramsés (Casa de Ramsés) nos registros egípcios, sendo situada por alguns em San el-Hagar, no canto NE do Delta, e, por outros, em Qantir, a uns 20 km ao S. Mas esta identificação baseia-se na teoria de que Ramsés II era o Faraó no tempo do Êxodo. Tal teoria, por sua vez, baseia-se em inscrições de Ramsés II, que mostram a pretensão dele de ter construído a cidade que leva seu nome (Per-Ramsés), utilizando o trabalho escravo. Contudo, existem poucos motivos para se crer que Ramsés II era o governante por ocasião do Êxodo, uma vez que seu governo provavelmente não deve ter ocorrido muito antes do século 13 AEC, ou entre 200 e 300 anos após o Êxodo (1513 AEC). A Ramsés bíblica começou a ser construída antes do nascimento de Moisés, assim, mais de 80 anos antes do Êxodo. (Êx 1:11, 15, 16, 22; 2:1-3) Ademais, sustenta-se que Per-Ramsés era a capital nos dias de Ramsés II, ao passo que a Ramsés bíblica era apenas um 'lugar de armazenagem'. Aceita-se, em geral, que Ramsés II era culpado de assumir o mérito por certas consecuções de seus predecessores, e isto suscita a possibilidade de que, no máximo, ele apenas reconstruiu ou ampliou Per-Ramsés. Finalmente, o nome Ramessés estava claramente em uso já mesmo na época de José (no século 18 AEC); assim, não existem motivos para se presumir que sua aplicação (na forma Ramsés), como nome duma cidade, fosse exclusividade do tempo de Ramsés II. (Gên 47:11) O seu próprio significado, também, torna provável que tenha sido popular entre os egípcios já desde os tempos antigos. Por ocasião do reinado de Ramsés II havia diversas cidades que tinham tal nome. D. B. Redford diz: "A Ramsés bíblica e a capital Pr Rʿ·mś·św [Per-Ramsés], além do nome pessoal, não parecem ter nada em comum. Devido à completa falta de evidência corroborativa, é absolutamente essencial que se exerça cautela em igualar as duas." — Vetus Testamentum, Leiden, 1963, p. 410.

Em virtude da falta de informações fidedignas, só se pode dizer que Ramessés provavelmente não distava muito da capital egípcia na época do Êxodo. Isto permitiria que Moisés estivesse no palácio do Faraó na noite da décima praga e, antes do fim do dia seguinte, começasse a conduzir o povo de Israel em sua marcha para fora do Egito. (Êx 12:31-42; Núm 33:1-5) Se a capital fosse então Mênfis, cidade que deteve esta posição durante muitos séculos, isto explicaria a tradição judaica de que a marcha do Êxodo (tendo a Ramessés como ponto de partida) iniciou-se nas cercanias de Mênfis. — Veja Jewish Antiquities (Antiguidades Judaicas), II, 315 (xv, 1), que menciona Letópolis, um local próximo a Mênfis.

RÃO [Alto].

1. Descendente de Judá através de Peres e de Esrom; viveu quando Israel estava no Egito. Embora Rão não fosse, pelo visto, o primeiro filho de Esrom, a genealogia de Rão, que conduz à linhagem davídica, é alistada primeiro entre os três filhos de Esrom. (1Cr 2:4, 5, 9-17, 25) Tendo a Nasom, Boaz e Davi entre seus descendentes, Rão foi antepassado de Jesus. (Núm 1:7; Ru 4:18-22; Mt 1:3, 4) Seu nome é escrito Arni (Arã em certos manuscritos) na lista dos antepassados de Jesus elaborada por Lucas. — Lu 3:33.

2. Primogênito de Jerameel e sobrinho do N.º 1. Foi pai de três filhos varões. — 1Cr 2:9, 25, 27.

3. Fundador da família de Eliú. — Jó 32:2.

RAPAR. Veja BARBA; CALVÍCIE.

RAPAZ. Veja CRIANÇA (FILHO), CRIANCINHAS.

RAPOSA [hebr.: shu·ʿál; gr.: a·ló·pex]. Animal canídeo, que se distingue por seu focinho pontudo, suas grandes e eretas orelhas triangulares, e sua basta cauda. A raposa é bem conhecida por sua astúcia, e foi talvez com referência a essa característica que Jesus Cristo mencionou o Rei Herodes como 'aquela raposa'. (Lu 13:32) Para enganar seus inimigos, a raposa depende mais de sua esperteza do que da rapidez, embora em curtas distâncias tem-se relatado que tal animal consegue atingir uma velocidade superior a 70 km/h.

Os nativos atuais da Síria e da Palestina nem sempre distinguem o chacal da raposa, e muitos peritos acreditam que o designativo hebraico shu·ʿál provavelmente inclui tanto a raposa (Vulpes vulpes) como o chacal (Canis aureus). Diversos tradutores da Bíblia verteram shu·ʿál como "chacal" em algumas de suas ocorrências.

Jesus Cristo, ao prevenir um homem desejoso de segui-lo, trouxe à atenção que as raposas tinham covis, ao passo que o Filho do homem não tinha onde deitar a cabeça. (Mt 8:20; Lu 9:58) A não ser que as raposas utilizem uma greta natural ou o buraco abandonado ou usurpado de outro animal, elas comumente cavam buracos no solo para formar seus covis.

De acordo com os naturalistas, a raposa não é realmente tão ladra de aves domésticas quanto tem fama de ser. A dieta desse animal inclui insetos, roedores e outros pequenos animais, aves, carne em putrefação, relva e frutas. (Cân 2:15) O naturalista do século 18, F. Hasselquist, relatou que na vizinhança de Belém e em outras partes era preciso tomar medidas para impedir a incursão de raposas nos vinhedos, quando as uvas estavam maduras. (Voyages and Travels in the Levant [Viagens e Excursões no Levante], Londres, 1766, p. 184) Muitos julgam que o Salmo 63:10 se refere ao chacal, quando se mencionam raposas como obtendo sua porção dos que foram mortos. A tradução "raposas", contudo, não é imprópria quando se considera que as raposas também se alimentam de carne em putrefação.

As Escrituras fazem alusão a raposas morarem em áreas desoladas, até mesmo em ruínas, afastadas de habitações humanas. (La 5:18; Ez 13:4) Falam também de Sansão utilizar 300 raposas para queimar os cereais, os vinhedos e os olivais dos filisteus (Jz 15:4, 5), e da zombaria de Tobias, o amonita, no sentido de que 'uma simples raposa poderia derrocar a muralha de Jerusalém' que estava sendo reconstruída pelos judeus repatriados. — Ne 4:3.

RAPTO. Apoderar-se, levar embora e deter uma pessoa contra a sua vontade por meio de força ilícita, fraude ou intimidação. Sob a Lei mosaica, o rapto era um crime que incorria em pena de morte. Se uma pessoa roubasse ou raptasse um homem e o vendesse, ou se a pessoa raptada fosse encontrada com ele, o raptor devia ser morto. (Êx 21:16; De 24:7) Antes de esta lei ser dada a Israel, José, filho de Jacó, que foi vendido como escravo, fora vítima dum rapto. (Gên 37:27, 28; 40:15) Deus transformou mais tarde esse ato numa bênção para José, no Egito, e José perdoou seus irmãos pela ação iníqua deles. — Gên 45:4, 5.

Ao escrever a Timóteo, o apóstolo Paulo comentou que "a lei é promulgada, não para o justo", mas para os que violam a lei, incluindo raptores. — 1Ti 1:8-11.

RAQUEL [Ovelha; Cordeira]. Filha de Labão, irmã mais moça de Leia, prima em primeiro grau e esposa predileta de Jacó. (Gên 29:10, 16, 30) Jacó fugiu de seu irmão Esaú, que queria matá-lo, em 1781 AEC, viajando para Harã, em Padã-Arã, na "terra dos orientais". (Gên 28:5; 29:1) Raquel, uma jovem "bela de figura e bela de semblante", servia como pastora de seu pai; ela conheceu Jacó num poço próximo a Harã. Jacó foi acolhido na casa de seu tio, e, um mês depois, concordou em servir a Labão por sete anos a fim de se casar com Raquel, de quem estava então enamorado. Seu amor não diminuiu durante os sete anos, de modo que "se mostraram aos seus olhos como apenas alguns dias". Na noite de núpcias, porém, seu tio a substituiu por sua filha mais velha, Leia, que evidentemente cooperou em executar este logro. Na manhã seguinte, quando Jacó acusou Labão de trapaça, este apelou para o costume local como desculpa para sua conduta. Jacó concordou em passar a semana inteira de núpcias com Leia, antes de receber Raquel, e, depois disso, trabalhar outros sete anos para Labão. — Gên 29:4-28.

Raquel não desapontou a Jacó como esposa, e Jacó mostrou-lhe mais amor do que a Leia. Jeová favoreceu então a Leia na posição desvantajosa desta, abençoando-a com quatro filhos, enquanto Raquel permanecia estéril. (Gên 29:29-35) Raquel demonstrou ciúmes de sua irmã, bem como desespero devido à sua própria infertilidade, condição encarada naquele tempo como grande vitupério entre as mulheres. A sua impertinente impaciência deixou irado até mesmo o seu amoroso marido. Para compensar a sua esterilidade, Raquel deu sua serva a Jacó, para fins procriativos (como Sara havia feito antes com Agar, sua escrava), e os dois filhos que nasceram em consequência disto foram considerados como de Raquel. A serva de Leia e a própria Leia tiveram um total de outros quatro filhos, antes que a esperança de Raquel finalmente se consumasse e ela desse à luz o seu próprio primeiro filho, José. — Gên 30:1-24.

Jacó estava então pronto para partir de Harã, mas seu sogro insistiu em que ele permanecesse por mais tempo, e foi seis anos depois que, sob a orientação de Deus, Jacó foi embora. Em virtude dos métodos dúplices de Labão, Jacó não o avisou de sua partida, e tanto Leia como Raquel concordaram com seu marido nisto. Antes de partir, Raquel roubou os "terafins" do pai, evidentemente algum tipo de imagens idólatras. Quando Labão, mais tarde, conseguiu alcançar o grupo e os informou desse roubo (pelo visto sua principal preocupação), Jacó, sem saber da culpa de Raquel, revelou que desaprovava este ato em si, decretando a morte do ofensor, caso fosse encontrado entre os que estavam com ele. A busca de Labão o levou à tenda de Raquel, mas ela evitou expor-se, afirmando estar indisposta devido ao período menstrual, enquanto permanecia sentada no cesto de sela que continha os terafins. — Gên 30:25-30; 31:4-35, 38.

Quando se encontrou com seu irmão Esaú, Jacó mostrou sua contínua preferência por Raquel por colocá-la, junto com o único filho dela, em último lugar na ordem do grupo, sem dúvida encarando-o como a posição mais segura caso fossem atacados por Esaú. (Gên 33:1-3, 7) Depois de morar por certo tempo em Sucote, daí em Siquém, e, por fim, em Betel, Jacó se dirigiu mais para o S. Em alguma parte entre Betel e Belém, Raquel deu à luz seu segundo filho, Benjamim, mas morreu no parto e foi sepultada ali, Jacó erigindo uma coluna para marcar o túmulo. — Gên 33:17, 18; 35:1, 16-20.

Os poucos pormenores registrados fornecem apenas um quadro incompleto da personalidade de Raquel. Ela era adoradora de Jeová (Gên 30:22-24), mas revelou ter falhas humanas, seu furto dos terafins e sua astúcia em evitar ser apanhada podendo ser atribuídos, pelo menos em parte, à sua formação familiar. Quaisquer que fossem suas fraquezas, Jacó a amava ternamente, e, mesmo na velhice, considerava-a como tendo sido sua verdadeira esposa, e estimava os filhos dela mais do que todos os seus outros filhos. (Gên 44:20, 27-29) Suas palavras a José, pouco antes de morrer, embora simples, transmitem a profundeza da afeição de Jacó por ela. (Gên 48:1-7) Ela e Leia são mencionadas como tendo 'construído a casa de Israel [Jacó]'. — Ru 4:11.

As descobertas arqueológicas podem lançar alguma luz quanto à apropriação por parte de Raquel dos "terafins" do pai. (Gên 31:19) Tabuinhas cuneiformes encontradas em Nuzi, ao N da Mesopotâmia, que segundo se crê datam de cerca de meados do segundo milênio AEC, revelam que certos povos da antiguidade encaravam a posse dos deuses da família como representando o título legal à herança da propriedade da família. (Ancient Near Eastern Texts [Textos Antigos do Oriente Próximo], editado por J. Pritchard, 1974, pp. 219, 220) Alguns sugerem que Raquel pode ter achado que Jacó tinha direito a uma parte da herança da propriedade de Labão como filho adotivo, e que ela pode ter levado os terafins para garantir isso ou mesmo para obter vantagem sobre os filhos de Labão. Ou então, ela pode ter encarado a posse deles como meio de impedir qualquer tentativa legalista do pai de reclamar parte das riquezas que Jacó ganhara enquanto servia a ele. (Veja Gên 30:43; 31:1, 2, 14-16.) Naturalmente, essas possibilidades dependem da existência de tal costume entre o povo de Labão e de os terafins terem sido realmente tais deuses da família.

O local do túmulo de Raquel "no território de Benjamim, em Zelza", ainda era conhecido nos dias de Samuel, uns seis séculos mais tarde. (1Sa 10:2) O local tradicional do túmulo fica mais ou menos a 1,5 km ao N de Belém. Isto, porém, o situaria no território de Judá, não no de Benjamim. Portanto, outros sugerem um local mais ao N, mas qualquer tentativa de precisão hoje é inútil.

Séculos após a morte de Raquel, por que falou a Bíblia de ela chorar por seus filhos no futuro?

Em Jeremias 31:15, Raquel é representada como chorando por seus filhos que haviam sido levados para a terra do inimigo, a lamentação dela sendo ouvida em Ramá (ao N de Jerusalém, no território de Benjamim). (Veja RAMÁ N.º 1.) Visto que Efraim, cujos descendentes tribais são amiúde usados de forma coletiva para representar o reino setentrional de Israel, é mencionado várias vezes no contexto (Je 31:6, 9, 18, 20), alguns peritos acreditam que esta profecia se relaciona com o exílio do povo do reino setentrional pelos assírios. (2Rs 17:1-6; 18:9-11) Por outro lado, poder-se-ia relacionar com o exílio posterior tanto do povo de Israel como do de Judá (este último por Babilônia). No primeiro caso, a figura de Raquel seria muito apropriada, visto que ela era a ancestral materna de Efraim (por meio de José), a tribo mais destacada do reino setentrional. No segundo caso, ser Raquel a mãe não só de José, mas também de Benjamim, cuja tribo fazia parte do reino meridional de Judá, a tornava um símbolo apropriado das mães de todo o Israel, parecendo então que tinha sido em vão que tiveram filhos. A promessa confortadora de Jeová, porém, era de que os exilados 'certamente retornariam da terra do inimigo'. — Je 31:16.

Este texto foi citado por Mateus com relação à matança das criancinhas em Belém, às ordens de Herodes. (Mt 2:16-18) Visto que o túmulo de Raquel estava pelo menos relativamente perto de Belém (embora não estivesse, pelo visto, no local tradicional), esta figura de Raquel chorando era apropriada para expressar o pesar das mães pela morte dos filhos. Mas, esta citação da profecia de Jeremias era ainda mais apropriada em vista da similaridade da situação. Os israelitas estavam sujeitos a uma potência estrangeira. Seus filhos novamente haviam sido levados embora. Esta vez, porém, a "terra do inimigo" para a qual os filhos tinham ido obviamente não era uma região política como no caso anterior. Tratava-se da sepultura, a região dominada pelo 'Rei Morte' (veja Sal 49:14; Re 6:8), a morte sendo chamada de "último inimigo" a ser destruído. (Ro 5:14, 21; 1Co 15:26) Qualquer retorno de tal "exílio" significaria, naturalmente, uma ressurreição dentre os mortos.

RASGAR VESTES. Sinal comum de pesar entre os judeus, bem como entre outros orientais, especialmente ao ficarem sabendo da morte dum parente achegado. Em muitos casos, consistia em rasgar a parte da frente da veste, apenas o suficiente para expor o peito, de modo que não envolvia necessariamente rasgar inteiramente a veste, tornando-a inadequada para vestir.

O primeiro caso dessa prática registrado na Bíblia é o de Rubem, o filho mais velho de Jacó, que, ao retornar e não encontrar José na cisterna, rasgou suas vestes, dizendo: "O menino desapareceu! E eu — para onde é que irei eu?" Como primogênito, Rubem era especialmente responsável por seu irmão mais moço. Seu pai, Jacó, ao ser informado da suposta morte do filho, igualmente rasgou suas capas e pôs serapilheira em sinal de luto (Gên 37:29, 30, 34), e, lá no Egito, os meios-irmãos de José indicaram seu pesar por rasgarem suas vestes quando se fez parecer que Benjamim era ladrão. — Gên 44:13.

Em contraste com isso, quando Nadabe e Abiú, os dois filhos mais velhos de Arão, foram destruídos por Jeová em razão do ato iníquo que cometeram, Moisés instruiu o pai deles, Arão, e os dois filhos restantes: "Não deixeis as vossas cabeças ficar desgrenhadas e não deveis rasgar as vossas roupas, para que não morrais." (Le 10:6) Noutras ocasiões, porém, permitia-se aos sacerdotes inferiores da linhagem arônica manifestar tal evidência de pesar no caso da morte de parentes achegados, todavia o sumo sacerdote não tinha permissão de deixar o cabelo desgrenhado ou de rasgar as vestes. — Le 21:1-4, 10, 11.

Encontramos muitos outros casos de tal expressão de pesar: o de Jó, que rasgou sua túnica sem mangas ao ser informado da morte dos filhos (Jó 1:20); seus três pretensos amigos que, assim que o viram em seu estado adoentado, fizeram uma demonstração de pesar por chorarem, rasgarem as vestes e atirarem pó ao ar (Jó 2:12); Josué, após a derrota em Ai (Jos 7:6); o jovem que anunciou a morte do Rei Saul (2Sa 1:2); Davi, ao receber a falsa notícia de que Absalão assassinara todos os seus outros filhos (2Sa 13:30, 31); e o Rei Ezequias e seus servos, que rasgaram suas vestes ao ouvir as palavras do Rabsaqué assírio contra Jeová e Jerusalém (Is 37:1; 36:22). A Rainha Atalia, vendo sua usurpação do trono chegar ao fim, também 'rasgou a sua roupa e começou a clamar: "Conspiração! Conspiração!"' — 2Rs 11:14.

No período de declínio da história do reino de Judá, a insensibilidade dos corações endurecidos do Rei Jeoiaquim e de seus príncipes é notada no fato de que quando a profecia de Jeremias, que avisava dos julgamentos de Jeová, lhes foi lida, eles não ficaram apavorados, nem "rasgaram as suas vestes". — Je 36:24.

Entretanto, indicando que tal demonstração exterior podia ser hipócrita, ou pelo menos insincera, e que não tinha valor algum a menos que o pesar da pessoa fosse genuíno, Jeová falou ao povo de Judá, mediante o profeta Joel, e lhes disse: "Rasgai os vossos corações e não as vossas vestes; e retornai a Jeová, vosso Deus." — Jl 2:13.

Mais tarde, o sumo sacerdote Caifás simulou grande indignação e ultraje por rasgar suas vestes quando Jesus admitiu ser o Filho de Deus. (Mt 26:65) Em contraste com isso, Paulo e Barnabé, quais seguidores cristãos de Jesus, demonstraram sincera tristeza e angústia rasgando suas vestes exteriores quando viram que o povo de Listra estava prestes a adorá-los como deuses. — At 14:8-18.

A Lei exigia que o leproso usasse uma veste rasgada (Le 13:45), talvez devido à associação que os hebreus faziam entre a lepra e a morte, refletida em relatos tais como o em que Miriã é mencionada "como alguém morto" depois de ser acometida pela temível doença. (Núm 12:12) Assim, o leproso era obrigado a usar uma veste distintiva, na realidade enlutado por si mesmo como estando entre os 'mortos vivos'.

Uso Simbólico. Rasgava-se às vezes a roupa também por motivos simbólicos, como quando Aijá, o profeta, rasgou a veste que usava em 12 pedaços e mandou que Jeroboão tomasse 10 deles, representando assim a divisão do reino de Salomão. (1Rs 11:29-39) De modo similar, Samuel ilustrou que Jeová rejeitara a casa de Saul por fazer menção da túnica sem mangas de Samuel que fora rasgada quando Saul o agarrou. — 1Sa 15:26-28.

RASTEJANTE, COISA. A raiz verbal do termo hebraico ré·mes significa "rastejar" ou "locomover-se". (Gên 1:21, 28 n) O léxico hebraico e aramaico de Koehler e Baumgartner sugere que o termo indica um movimento um tanto sem objetivo. (Lexicon in Veteris Testamenti Libros [Léxico dos Livros do Velho Testamento], Leiden, 1958, p. 895; compare isso com Hab 1:14.) O substantivo ré·mes parece abranger uma ampla variedade de criaturas viventes e, no seu emprego nos diversos textos, geralmente distingue tais "animais moventes" dos animais selváticos e dos domésticos, das aves e dos peixes. (Gên 1:24, 25; 6:7, 20; 7:14, 23; 8:17, 19; 9:3; Ez 8:10; 38:20) Isto daria margem para a inclusão de répteis e outras formas de vida animal que não fazem parte daquelas outras categorias mais proeminentes. Pode aplicar-se não só a criaturas terrestres, mas também a criaturas aquáticas. — Sal 104:25.

Entre os 3.000 provérbios do sábio Rei Salomão havia alguns que falavam sobre "os animais e sobre as criaturas voadoras, e sobre as coisas moventes, e sobre os peixes". (1Rs 4:33; compare isso com Pr 30:19, 24-28.) Oseias 2:18 descreve um pacto feito com o animal selvático, a criatura voadora e a coisa rastejante do solo; e o Salmo 148:10 inclui estes entre as criaturas que servem para o louvor de seu Criador.

O grego her·pe·tón corresponde de perto ao hebraico ré·mes, sendo frequentemente empregado com referência a répteis. É empregado com respeito à visão que Pedro teve em Jope (At 10:12; 11:6), por Paulo ao considerar a idolatria do homem (Ro 1:23), e por Tiago a respeito de criaturas que o homem consegue domesticar. — Tg 3:7.

RAZOABILIDADE. A palavra grega e·pi·ei·kés, traduzida "razoabilidade", tem sido definida como significando "conveniente, apropriado; portanto, equitativo, justo, moderado, indulgente, não insistindo na letra da lei; expressa aquela consideração que encara 'humana e razoavelmente os fatos dum caso'". — Vine's Expository Dictionary of Old and New Testament Words (Dicionário Expositivo de Palavras do Velho e do Novo Testamento, de Vine), 1981, Vol. 2, pp. 144, 145.

A razoabilidade é uma modalidade distintiva da sabedoria celestial. (Tg 3:17) É uma qualidade que o homem designado superintendente duma congregação cristã precisa ter. (1Ti 3:2, 3) Teria de ser razoável com ele próprio, ao lidar com outros, e na maneira de enfocar os problemas. Também, os cristãos em geral são incentivados a ser razoáveis. O apóstolo Paulo aconselhou os filipenses: “Seja a vossa razoabilidade [“docilidade”, Int] conhecida de todos os homens.” (Fil 4:5) E Tito foi instruído a lembrar aos cristãos de Creta a ‘serem razoáveis [literalmente: dóceis]’. (Tit 3:1, 2, n) Isto era especialmente apropriado, uma vez que os habitantes de Creta, como um todo, tinham a reputação de ser mentirosos, feras prejudiciais e glutões desempregados. — Tit 1:12.

Em 1 Pedro 2:18, admoesta-se os servos domésticos a ‘estarem sujeitos aos seus donos com todo o temor devido, não somente aos bons e razoáveis, mas também aos difíceis de agradar’.

REABIAS [Jeová Alargou (Tornou Espaçoso)]. Neto de Moisés, filho único de Eliézer, e fundador duma família de levitas que ainda existia quando Davi era rei. — 1Cr 23:15, 17; 24:21; 26:25.

REAÍAS [Jah Viu].

1. Filho de Sobal e descendente de Judá. (1Cr 4:1, 2) É possível que Haroé em 1 Crônicas 2:52 seja a mesma pessoa. A grafia em hebraico é bem similar.

2. Rubenita, provavelmente ancestral de pessoas levadas ao exílio por Tiglate-Pileser III. — 1Cr 5:5, 6.

3. Antepassado de alguns dos netineus que retornaram a Jerusalém após o exílio babilônico. — Esd 2:1, 43, 47; Ne 7:6, 46, 50.

REBA [possivelmente: Quarta [Parte]]. Um dos cinco reis de Midiã mortos na vingança contra Midiã, por ter seduzido Israel de forma imoral. (Núm 31:2, 8) Na ocasião, os cinco eram provavelmente vassalos dos amorreus, e, portanto, também são chamados de “os caudilhos de Síon”. — Jos 13:21.

REBECA [possivelmente: Vaca]. Filha de Betuel, filho de Naor, e, portanto, sobrinha-neta de Abraão. O nome do seu irmão era Labão. — Gên 22:20-23.

Em 1878 AEC, quando Abraão mandou o administrador de sua casa, provavelmente Eliézer, à procura duma esposa apropriada para seu filho Isaque (então com 40 anos), este chegou ‘à cidade de Naor’, no vale superior da Mesopotâmia. Ali, junto a um poço, este servo orou para que a escolhida por Jeová fosse a moça que não só lhe desse um gole de água quando lhe pedisse, mas que também se oferecesse para dar água aos seus dez camelos. (Gên 24:1-14) Enquanto ele orava, Rebeca chegou ao poço com um cântaro de água. Quando lhe pediu um gole de água, ela graciosamente lhe deu de beber e então “esvaziou depressa o seu cântaro no bebedouro e correu ainda várias vezes ao poço para tirar água, e continuou a tirar água para todos os seus camelos. Durante todo esse tempo, o homem fitava-a admirado, mantendo-se calado para saber se Jeová fizera sua viagem bem sucedida ou não”. Rebeca revelou-se bondosa, hospitaleira, modesta em suas maneiras, e laboriosa; além disso, “a moça era de aparência muito atraente”. — Gên 24:14-21.

O servo de Abraão, reconhecendo que sua oração tinha sido respondida, deu a Rebeca uma argola de ouro para as narinas e duas lindas pulseiras de ouro (valendo c. US$ 1.350 em moeda atual). Ela as mostrou à família — à mãe e ao irmão, Labão — a qual, por sua vez, ofereceu a hospitalidade de seu lar ao visitante e aos ajudantes que estavam com ele. (Gên 24:22-32) Mas, antes de consentir em comer, o homem declarou qual era sua tarefa. Labão e seu pai, Betuel, deram seu consentimento para que Rebeca se casasse com Isaque; foram dados presentes a Rebeca e à sua família, consistindo em preciosos artigos de ouro e de prata, e em lindas roupas, e então todos comeram juntos. (Gên 24:33-54) Tal transação constituía um honroso contrato matrimonial, não entre Rebeca e Isaque, mas entre os pais deles, de acordo com o costume da época. Rebeca tornou-se assim noiva de Isaque, e dali em diante era, efetivamente, esposa dele.

Com o consentimento de Rebeca, a caravana partiu na manhã seguinte para a longa jornada até o Negebe, perto de Beer-Laai-Roi, onde Isaque estava morando naquele tempo. Antes de Rebeca partir, a família a abençoou, dizendo: “Que tu . . . te tornes milhares de vezes dez mil, e que teu descendente tome posse do portão dos que o odeiam.” Sua ama, Débora, e outras criadas de companhia acompanharam Rebeca, sendo que nenhuma delas, pelo que parece, jamais voltou à sua terra. — Gên 24:55-62; 35:8.

Ao chegarem ao destino, Rebeca colocou um lenço na cabeça quando Isaque, seu noivo, se aproximou, e, depois de o servo de Abraão ter narrado todos os eventos de sua missão, relatando como Jeová tinha orientado a escolha, Isaque levou Rebeca para a tenda de sua mãe, para que se tornasse sua esposa. Isaque amou ternamente a Rebeca, e nela “encontrou consolo depois da perda de sua mãe”, Sara, que morrera três anos antes. — Gên 24:63-67.

Semelhante a Sara, Rebeca permaneceu estéril por longo tempo. Depois de uns 19 anos, tempo durante o qual Isaque apelou persistentemente para Jeová, ela concebeu e deu à luz os gêmeos Esaú e Jacó. Tão aflitiva foi a sua gravidez, ao passo que os dois lutavam entre si no ventre dela, que Rebeca se perguntou: “Por que é que estou viva?” Em resposta, Jeová lhe garantiu que ela se tornaria mãe de duas grandes nações, e que ‘o mais velho serviria ao mais jovem'. (Gên 25:20-26) Isto, diz Paulo, era para demonstrar que a escolha do 'descendente [lit.: semente] da promessa' dependia inteiramente de Deus. — Ro 9:6-13.

Também semelhante a Sara, Rebeca disfarçou a identidade em certa ocasião, passando-se por irmã do marido. Isto ocorreu quando uma fome no país obrigou a família a fixar residência por algum tempo em território filisteu governado pelo Rei Abimeleque. Rebeca já devia estar avançada em anos, mas, devido à sua grande beleza, presumia-se que Isaque, o herdeiro designado do pacto abraâmico, correria o perigo de ser morto caso soubessem que era marido dela. — Gên 26:1-11.

Quando Isaque envelheceu e se preparou para abençoar Esaú, seu primogênito, Rebeca deu passos imediatos para garantir a desejada bênção para Jacó. (Gên 25:28-34; 27:1-5) Não se declara se Rebeca sabia do direito legal de Jacó à primogenitura, mediante a compra, mas ela estava bem a par daquilo que Jeová lhe dissera, a saber, que o mais velho serviria ao mais jovem. Por conseguinte, ela tomou medidas para garantir que Jacó obtivesse a bênção do pai. O resultado estava em harmonia com o propósito de Jeová. — Gên 27:6-29; veja JACÓ N.º 1.

Mais tarde, quando Rebeca soube dos planos de Esaú, de matar Jacó, ela influenciou Isaque a mandar Jacó para a terra natal dela, em busca duma esposa. Ter Esaú tomado duas esposas de entre os odiados cananeus havia amargurado profundamente tanto a ela como a Isaque. — Gên 26:34, 35; 27:41-46; 28:1-5; 29:10-12.

Não se declara exatamente quando Rebeca morreu, mas pode ter sido antes de Jacó voltar da Mesopotâmia. (Gên 35:27) Ela foi sepultada na caverna familiar de Macpela, junto com Abraão e Sara, onde mais tarde foram sepultados Isaque, Leia e Jacó. — Gên 49:29-31; 50:13.

REBELDIA. Desobediência ou resistência e desafio a uma autoridade superior. O orgulho, o egoísmo, as pressões externas, a discordância com o critério dum superior e o desejo de sair de debaixo da sujeição ou da opressão, quer real, quer imaginária, têm constituído as principais causas de rebelião.

Primórdios Históricos. A rebelião contra Deus teve início no domínio invisível. Uma criatura espiritual, que mais tarde ficou conhecida como Satanás, o Diabo, esforçou-se, por meio duma serpente, a fazer com que a primeira mulher Eva se rebelasse contra seu Criador. Ele tornou atrativa a rebelião, apresentando-a como proceder que conduziria ao esclarecimento. Eva cedeu diante da ambição egoísta de "ser como Deus", no sentido de determinar por si mesma o que era bom e o que era mau, em vez de ater-se ao critério de Deus sobre este assunto. (Veja ÁRVORES [Uso Figurativo].) Imaginando-se privada de algo que ela agora passara a encarar como pertencendo-lhe de direito, Eva preferiu transgredir a ordem de Deus. Mais tarde, seu marido Adão cedeu à pressão dela e uniu-se a ela nessa rebelião. Fez isso, não por ter sido enganado a pensar que a serpente falava a verdade, mas evidentemente por ter preferido de forma egoísta a companhia de sua esposa pecaminosa, em vez da aprovação de Deus. — Gên 3:1-6; 1Ti 2:14.

Durante séculos depois disso, parece que a maioria da humanidade não desejou sujeitar-se a Deus. Desde o tempo da morte de Abel até o nascimento de Noé — um período de mais de 926 anos — apenas Enoque é mencionado especificamente como alguém que andava com Deus. (Gên 5:22) A rebeldia também continuou a propagar-se no domínio celestial. Nos dias de Noé, anjos desejosos de prazer sensual desobedientemente abandonaram seus postos celestiais, materializaram corpos humanos, casaram-se com mulheres e geraram descendentes. — Gên 6:4; 1Pe 3:19, 20; 2Pe 2:4, 5; Ju 6.

Já no tempo de Noé, o espírito de rebeldia havia saturado de tal modo a humanidade, que Jeová Deus achou apropriado destruir a raça humana por meio dum dilúvio. Apenas Noé e sua família, oito pessoas ao todo, foram considerados dignos de ser preservados. — Gên 6:5-8; 7:13, 23.

Em Israel. Anos mais tarde, Jeová Deus começou a lidar exclusivamente com a nação de Israel. Todavia, em toda a história de Israel houve numerosos casos de rebelião contra Jeová e contra seus representantes, em nível nacional, grupal ou individual. Em certos casos, aqueles que se rebelaram não eram pessoas constantemente rebeldes. Por exemplo, Moisés e Arão serviram fielmente a Jeová Deus durante muitos anos. Todavia, certa ocasião, quando submetidos à pressão de israelitas resmungadores, perderam o autodomínio e rebeldemente deixaram de dar glória a Deus por uma provisão milagrosa de água. (Núm 20:12, 24; 27:13, 14) Mas, a nação como um todo foi tão persistente em seu proceder rebelde, que Ezequiel 44:6 aplica o nome "Rebeldia" à casa de Israel, como se a nação de Israel personificasse a rebeldia.

Jeová Deus não deixou impune tal rebeldia. (1Sa 12:15; 15:23; 1Rs 13:21, 22, 26; Sal 5:10; Is 1:20; 63:10; Je 4:16-18; Ez 20:21; Os 13:16) Sua lei exigia a pena de morte para os que persistissem em rebelar-se contra os pais. (De 21:18-21) A execução divina sobreveio aos orgulhosos e ambiciosos Corá, Datã e Abirão, e aos que se juntaram a eles na rebelião contra Moisés e Arão, representantes nomeados de Deus. Quando os israelitas questionaram a justeza desta execução e manifestaram um espírito rebelde para com Moisés e Arão, mais 14.700 pereceram num flagelo enviado por Jeová. (Núm 16:1-3, 25-50) Não raro, Jeová permitia que outras nações atuassem quais instrumentos dele para infligir punição aos israelitas, quando estes cediam à pressão de ser semelhantes às nações circunvizinhas, e rebeldemente abandonavam a adoração verdadeira. — Jz 2:3, 11-16; 3:4, 5; Ne 9:26, 27.

A rebelião do Rei Zedequias por violar o pacto. No tempo em que o Rei Nabucodonosor fez do Rei Zedequias, de Judá, um rei vassalo, ele fez com que Zedequias concluísse um pacto em nome de Jeová. Portanto, quando Zedequias se rebelou contra Nabucodonosor, desejando libertar-se da sujeição a uma potência estrangeira, também se rebelou contra Jeová, em cujo nome se comprometera a ser leal rei vassalo. Por causa dessa rebelião, Jeová decretou que Zedequias morresse como cativo em Babilônia. — 2Rs 24:17-20; 2Cr 36:11-21; Ez 17:12-18.

Entre os Cristãos. Os cristãos também tiveram de contender com pessoas rebeldes. O apóstolo Paulo predisse uma apostasia, ou rebelião, entre os professos cristãos (2Te 2:3) e, já nos seus dias, existiam apóstatas. (1Ti 1:19, 20; 2Ti 2:16-19) O discípulo Judas escreveu sobre aqueles que falavam de forma abusiva dos "gloriosos" na congregação cristã. Visto que a destruição de tais rebeldes era certa, Judas se referiu a essa destruição como se já tivesse ocorrido, dizendo: "[Eles] pereceram na conversa rebelde de Corá!" — Ju 8, 11; veja APOSTASIA.

A sujeição à autoridade governamental é correta. Em vez de se rebelarem, os que desejam obter a aprovação de Deus como seguidores de Cristo são incentivados a ser obedientes aos que tomam a dianteira na congregação (He 13:17) e às autoridades governamentais fora da congregação. (Tit 3:1, 2) A rebeldia contra a autoridade governamental secular constitui rebelião contra Deus, pois tais autoridades existem pela permissão de Deus, e é da Sua vontade que os cristãos estejam sujeitos a elas conquanto aquilo que elas exijam não colida com Sua lei. — Ro 13:1-7; At 5:29.

REBOCO. Revestimento para paredes e divisórias que era comumente feito de barro misturado com palha. Por vezes, essa mistura incluía cal, cinzas, cacos pulverizados de cerâmica, ou conchas ou pedra calcária trituradas. — Le 14:42; Ez 13:10-16; Da 5:5; veja ARGAMASSA.

REBUSCA. Veja RESPIGA, REBUSCA.

RECA. Aparentemente o nome dum lugar de Judá. É mencionado junto com informações genealógicas sobre a tribo de Judá. — 1Cr 4:12.

RECABE [Auriga; Condutor de Carro].

1. Benjamita filho de Rimom, o beerotita. Recabe e seu irmão Baaná, ambos chefes de guerrilhas, assassinaram Is-Bosete, filho e sucessor de Saul, e apresentaram sua cabeça a Davi, esperando obter favor, mas Davi mandou que fossem executados pelo ato iníquo contra um homem justo. — 2Sa 4:2, 5-12.

2. Queneu, pai ou ancestral de Jonadabe, companheiro de Jeú, e antepassado dos recabitas. — 1Cr 2:55; 2Rs 10:15, 23; Je 35:6, 8, 14, 16, 18, 19; veja RECABITAS.

3. Pai ou ancestral do Malquijá que ajudou Neemias a reparar um portão da muralha de Jerusalém. (Ne 3:14) Se ele for o mesmo Recabe que o N.º 2, a presença de Malquijá confirma o cumprimento da promessa de Jeová aos recabitas encontrada em Jeremias 35:19.

RECABITAS [De (Pertencentes a) Recabe]. Descendentes de Recabe, o queneu, através de Jonadabe. — Je 35:6; 1Cr 2:55.

No tempo de Jonadabe, parece que pelo menos alguns dos recabitas viviam no reino setentrional, pois foi ali que Jonadabe uniu-se a Jeú (rei, c. 904-877 AEC) em oposição à adoração de Baal e a "todos os que restaram dos de Acabe em Samaria". (2Rs 10:15-17) Jonadabe deu ordem à família (não se declara se o fez antes ou depois da experiência que teve com Jeú) para viverem em tendas, não semearem semente, nem plantarem vinhedos, nem beberem vinho, por serem residentes forasteiros naquela terra. — Je 35:6-10.

Na parte final do reinado de Jeoiaquim (628-618 AEC), certo número de recabitas morava em Judá. Quando Nabucodonosor investiu contra aquela terra, os recabitas entraram em Jerusalém para proteger-se dos caldeus e dos sírios. Por ordem de Jeová, Jeremias levou Jaazanias, líder deles, e todos os recabitas a um dos refeitórios do templo. (Je 35:1-4) Poderem todos caber em um dos refeitórios do templo sugere que não eram muito numerosos. Jeremias, conforme Deus o havia orientado, colocou copos de vinho diante deles e disse: "Bebei vinho." Por respeito à ordem de seu ancestral, eles se recusaram a fazê-lo e explicaram que recentemente tinham abandonado sua moradia usual, mudando-se para a cidade, só por causa dos exércitos invasores. — Je 35:5-11.

Jeová se agradou da respeitosa obediência que demonstraram. Sua obediência inquebrantável a um pai terrestre se contrastava com a desobediência dos habitantes de Judá ao seu Criador. (Je 35:12-16) Deus fez aos recabitas a recompensadora promessa: "De Jonadabe, filho de Recabe, não se decepará homem, impedindo-o de ficar de pé diante de mim para sempre." — Je 35:19.

Durante o governo de Neemias, após o exílio, "Malquijá, filho de Recabe", fez reparos no Portão dos Montes de Cinzas. Se este Recabe for o mesmo que o pai ou ancestral de Jonadabe, indica que os recabitas sobreviveram ao exílio e retornaram àquela terra. (Ne 3:14) Em 1 Crônicas 2:55, Hamate é alistado como "pai da casa de Recabe".

RECIPIENTE. Vasilha usada para armazenar coisas tais como água, azeite, leite, vinho, manteiga e queijo. Os recipientes dos tempos antigos variavam grandemente em tamanho e formato, alguns deles sendo bolsas de couro, e outros sendo vasos de gargalo estreito, com rolha. Os egípcios possuíam vasos ornamentados que serviam quais frascos, e estes eram de alabastro, osso, bronze, vidro, ouro, marfim, porcelana, prata ou pedra. Frascos de vidro eram utilizados na antiga Assíria, e vasos de cerâmica eram comuns em várias terras bíblicas da antiguidade. No entanto, os antigos usavam especialmente odres.

O modo comum de se fazer um odre era abater um animal, decepar-lhe a cabeça e as patas, e então retirá-lo cuidadosamente do couro, de um modo que fosse desnecessário abrir a barriga do animal. O couro era então curtido, e depois todas as aberturas, exceto uma, eram costuradas. O pescoço, ou talvez uma das pernas, ficava sem costura e servia de abertura que podia ser tampada com uma rolha ou um cordão. Os couros de ovelha, de cabrito, e às vezes de boi, eram utilizados com tal objetivo, e, em alguns casos, deixavam-se os pelos nas peles usadas como recipientes para leite, manteiga, queijo e água. No entanto, era necessário um processo mais cabal de curtição quando os odres se destinavam a guardar azeite ou vinho. Até mesmo em épocas mais recentes, têm-se fabricado muitos odres dessa mesma forma, no Oriente Médio. Quando os odres para água não são curtidos, transmitem um sabor desagradável à água conservada neles.

Ao despedir Agar, Abraão equipou-a com um "odre [hebr.: hhé·meth]". (Gên 21:14, 15, 19) Os gibeonitas disseram a Josué: "Estes são odres de vinho [hebr.: no'·dhóhth] que enchemos quando novos, e eis que rebentaram." (Jos 9:13) Tal coisa poderia acontecer com o tempo, devido à crescente pressão resultante da fermentação ativa do vinho. Eliú disse: "Eis que meu ventre é como o vinho sem respiradouro; como odres novos [hebr.: 'o·vóhth], quer rebentar." (Jó 32:19) Em geral, porém, os odres novos de vinho suportavam a pressão interna resultante da fermentação ativa do vinho. Todavia, velhos odres de vinho ficavam com o tempo endurecidos e perdiam a elasticidade, de modo que tendiam a rebentar. Por isso, Jesus Cristo disse apropriadamente: "Tampouco se põe vinho novo em odres velhos; mas, caso o façam, então os odres rebentarão e o vinho se derramará, e os odres ficarão arruinados. Mas, põe-se vinho novo em odres novos, e ambas as coisas ficam preservadas." — Mt 9:17.

Davi, fugitivo assediado por inimigos, referiu-se de forma figurada ao odre, dizendo: "Põe deveras as minhas lágrimas no teu odre." (Sal 56:8) Com isso, Davi pedia a Deus, em quem depositava sua confiança, que colocasse suas lágrimas num odre, por assim dizer, para que se lembrasse delas.

Provavelmente bolsas de pele cheias de vinho eram às vezes penduradas num local em que podiam ser defumadas, de modo a protegê-las dos insetos, ou para que o vinho adquirisse rapidamente certas propriedades desejadas. Por outro lado, quando não estavam em uso, os odres talvez fossem pendurados num aposento sem chaminé, e assim ficavam enegrecidos pela fumaça do fogo ali aceso. Tais odres de vinho logo perdiam sua elasticidade e se enrugavam. Foi talvez pensando nisso que o salmista, assolado por tribulações, disse: "Pois, tornei-me como um odre na fumaça." — Sal 119:83; veja ODRES; OLEIRO; VASOS.

RECONCILIAÇÃO. Reconciliar significa restituir a harmonia ou tornar novamente amigável; também ajustar ou resolver, como no caso de conciliar diferenças. Em grego, as palavras relacionadas com a reconciliação derivam do verbo al·lás·so, que significa basicamente "mudar, alterar". — At 6:14; Gál 4:20, Int.

Assim, a forma composta, ka·tal·lás·so, embora signifique basicamente "trocar", veio a ter o significado de "reconciliar". (Ro 5:10) Paulo empregou este verbo ao falar de uma mulher 'se reconciliar' com o marido, do qual ela se tenha separado. (1Co 7:11) O termo relacionado di·al·lás·so·mai aparece em Mateus 5:24 nas instruções de Jesus no sentido de que a pessoa primeiro 'faça as pazes' com seu irmão, antes de apresentar uma oferta no altar.

Reconciliação com Deus. Na carta de Paulo aos romanos, e em várias outras cartas, ele emprega ka·tal·lás·so e a·po·ka·tal·lás·so (uma forma intensificada) ao tratar da questão da reconciliação do homem com Deus por meio do sacrifício de Cristo Jesus.

Essa reconciliação com Deus é necessária visto existir uma alienação, uma separação, uma falta de harmonia e de relações amigáveis, mais do que isso, uma condição de inimizade. Isto resultou do pecado do primeiro homem, Adão, e da consequente pecaminosidade e imperfeição herdadas por todos os descendentes dele. (Ro 5:12; compare isso com Is 43:27.) Portanto, o apóstolo podia dizer que "a mentalidade segundo a carne significa inimizade com Deus, visto que não está em sujeição à lei de Deus, de fato, nem pode estar [devido à sua natureza imperfeita e pecaminosa herdada.] De modo que os que estão em harmonia com a carne não podem agradar a Deus". (Ro 8:7, 8) Existe inimizade porque os padrões perfeitos de Deus não permitem que Ele aprove ou tolere o erro. (Sal 5:4; 89:14) Sobre seu Filho, que refletia as perfeitas qualidades do Pai, está escrito: "Amaste a justiça e odiaste o que é contra a lei." (He 1:9) Por isso, ainda que 'Deus seja amor', e ainda que 'Deus tenha amado tanto o mundo [da humanidade] que deu o seu Filho unigênito' a favor da humanidade, permanece o fato de que a humanidade, como um todo, tem estado numa condição de inimizade para com Deus, e que o amor de Deus para com o mundo da humanidade foi um amor para com inimigos, um amor guiado por princípios (gr.: a·gá·pe), em vez de afeto ou amizade (gr.: fi·lí·a). — 1Jo 4:16; Jo 3:16; compare isso com Tg 4:4.

Visto que o padrão de Deus é de perfeita justiça, ele não pode contemplar ou encarar com favor o pecado, que é a violação de Sua vontade expressa. Ele é "clemente e misericordioso", e "rico em misericórdia" (Sal 145:8, 9; Ef 2:4); mas não desrespeita a justiça só para mostrar misericórdia. Conforme comenta corretamente a Cyclopædia (Ciclopédia) de M'Clintock e Strong (1894, Vol. VIII, p. 958), a relação entre Deus e o homem pecaminoso é assim "legalista, como a dum soberano, em seu cargo judicial, e um criminoso que violou suas leis e se rebelou contra sua autoridade, e que, portanto, é tratado como inimigo". Esta é a situação à qual a humanidade foi levada por ter herdado o pecado de seu primeiro pai, Adão.

A base para a reconciliação. É unicamente pelo sacrifício de resgate de Cristo Jesus, e através dele, que é possível a plena reconciliação com Deus; ele é "o caminho", e ninguém vai ao Pai exceto por intermédio dele. (Jo 14:6) A morte dele serviu como "sacrifício propiciatório [gr.: hi·la·smón] pelos nossos pecados". (1Jo 2:2; 4:10) A palavra hi·la·smós significa "um meio de apaziguamento", uma "expiação". É evidente que o sacrifício de Jesus Cristo não era um "meio de apaziguamento" no sentido de amenizar sentimentos feridos da parte de Deus, abrandando-o, pois a morte de seu Filho amado certamente não produziria tal efeito. Antes, tal sacrifício apaziguou ou satisfez as exigências da perfeita justiça de Deus por fornecer a base justa e equitativa para o perdão de pecados, de modo que Deus "fosse justo, mesmo ao declarar justo o homem [o homem hereditariamente pecaminoso] que tem fé em Jesus". (Ro 3:24-26) Por fornecer os meios para expiar (ou compensar por completo) os pecados e atos ilícitos do homem, o sacrifício de Cristo tornou propício (favorável) que o homem buscasse e obtivesse uma restauração do relacionamento correto com o Deus Soberano. — Ef 1:7; He 2:17; veja RESGATE.

Assim, mediante Cristo, Deus tornou possível "reconciliar novamente todas as outras coisas consigo mesmo, por fazer a paz por intermédio do sangue que ele [Jesus] derramou na estaca de tortura", e, desta forma, as pessoas que certa vez estavam 'apartadas e eram inimigas', devido a fixarem sua mente em obras iníquas, podiam então ser 'reconciliadas mediante o corpo carnal daquele, por intermédio da morte dele, a fim de serem apresentadas santas e sem mácula, e não expostas a nenhuma acusação perante ele'. (Col 1:19-22) Jeová Deus podia então 'declarar justos' aqueles a quem selecionou para se tornarem seus filhos espirituais; eles não estariam mais sujeitos a qualquer acusação, uma vez que eram agora pessoas plenamente reconciliadas e em paz com Deus. — Veja At 13:38, 39; Ro 5:9, 10; 8:33.

O que, então, podemos dizer a respeito dos homens que serviram a Deus em épocas anteriores à morte de Cristo? Isso incluiria homens tais como Abel, que "se lhe deu testemunho de que era justo, dando Deus testemunho com respeito a suas dádivas"; Enoque, que "teve o testemunho de que agradara bem a Deus"; Abraão, que "veio a ser chamado 'amigo de Jeová' "; Moisés, Josué, Samuel, Davi, Daniel, João, o Batizador, e os discípulos de Cristo (aos quais Jesus dissera antes de sua morte: "O próprio Pai tem afeição por vós"). (He 11:4, 5; Tg 2:23; Da 9:23; Jo 16:27) Jeová lidou com todos estes e os abençoou. Como, então, precisariam eles de qualquer reconciliação por meio da morte de Cristo?

Tais pessoas obviamente gozavam de certa medida de reconciliação com Deus. Todavia, elas, assim como o restante do mundo da humanidade, ainda eram pecadores por herança, e se reconheciam como tais pelos sacrifícios animais que ofereciam. (Ro 3:9, 22, 23; He 10:1, 2) É verdade que alguns homens têm sido mais flagrantes ou crassos em seu proceder pecaminoso do que outros, sendo até mesmo abertamente rebeldes; mas, pecado é pecado, não importa em que grau ou em que medida. Uma vez que todos são pecadores, todos os homens que descenderam de Adão precisaram, sem exceção, da reconciliação com Deus que o sacrifício de seu Filho tornou possível.

A amizade relativa de Deus para com homens tais como os que já consideramos era à base da fé que eles mostravam, fé esta que abrangia a crença de que Deus, no seu devido tempo, forneceria o meio para aliviá-los por completo de sua condição pecaminosa. (Veja He 11:1, 2, 39, 40; Jo 1:29; 8:56; At 2:29-31.) Assim, a medida de reconciliação que eles usufruíam dependia da futura provisão do resgate, feita por Deus. Conforme mostrado no verbete DECLARAR JUSTO, Deus "contava", "imputava" ou creditava a fé que eles tinham como justiça, e, nessa base, e tendo em vista a absoluta certeza de Sua própria provisão dum resgate, Jeová podia manter provisoriamente um relacionamento amigável com eles, sem violar Seus padrões de perfeita justiça. (Ro 4:3, 9, 10, NM e Al; compare também isso com 3:25, 26; 4:17.) Todavia, as exigências corretas de Sua justiça precisavam por fim ser satisfeitas, de modo que o "crédito" fosse coberto pelo real pagamento do exigido preço de resgate. Tudo isto exalta a importância da posição de Cristo no arranjo de Deus, e demonstra que, à parte de Cristo Jesus, os homens não gozam de nenhuma justiça que possa habilitá-los a ter uma posição correta perante Deus. — Veja Is 64:6; Ro 7:18, 21-25; 1Co 1:30, 31; 1Jo 1:8-10.

Os passos necessários para se obter a reconciliação. Uma vez que Deus, cuja lei foi e ainda é violada, é a parte ofendida, é o homem que precisa reconciliar-se com Deus, e não Deus com o homem. (Sal 51:1-4) O homem não se chega a Deus em pé de igualdade, nem é a posição de Deus quanto ao que é correto sujeita a mudanças, a emendas ou a modificações. (Is 55:6-11; Mal 3:6; compare isso com Tg 1:17.) Por conseguinte, Seus termos para a reconciliação são inegociáveis, não estando sujeitos a questionamento ou a acordos. (Veja Jó 40:1, 2, 6-8; Is 40:13, 14.) Ao passo que muitas versões traduzem Isaías 1:18 de modo a rezar: "Vinde, pois, e arrazoemos, diz o SENHOR [Jeová]" (ALA; IBB; VB), uma tradução mais apropriada e coerente é: "Vinde, pois, e resolvamos as questões ["solucionemos a disputa", Ro] entre nós', diz Jeová." A falha que produz a desarmonia reside inteiramente no homem, e não em Deus. — Veja Ez 18:25, 29-32.

Isto não impede a Deus de misericordiosamente tomar a iniciativa de abrir o caminho para a reconciliação. Ele fez isso mediante seu Filho. O apóstolo escreve: "Pois, deveras, Cristo, enquanto ainda éramos fracos, morreu por homens ímpios, no tempo designado. Pois, dificilmente morrerá alguém por um justo; deveras, por um homem bom, talvez, alguém ainda se atreva a morrer. Mas Deus recomenda a nós o seu próprio amor [a·gá·pen], por Cristo ter morrido por nós enquanto éramos ainda pecadores. Muito mais, portanto, visto que agora fomos declarados justos pelo seu sangue, havemos de ser salvos do furor por intermédio dele. Pois se nós, quando éramos inimigos, ficamos reconciliados com Deus por intermédio da morte de seu Filho, muito mais agora, que temos ficado reconciliados, seremos salvos pela sua vida. E não somente isso, mas exultemos também em Deus por intermédio de nosso Senhor Jesus Cristo, por meio de quem temos agora recebido a reconciliação." (Ro 5:6-11) Jesus, que "não conheceu pecado", tornou-se "pecado por nós", morrendo como uma oferta humana pelo pecado, a fim de livrar as pessoas da acusação e da pena do pecado. Livradas da acusação de pecado, tais pessoas podem, desse modo, parecer justas aos olhos de Deus, e assim, 'por meio dele [Jesus], tornam-se a justiça de Deus'. — 2Co 5:18, 21.

Deus demonstra adicionalmente Sua misericórdia e seu amor por enviar embaixadores à humanidade pecaminosa. Nos tempos antigos, enviavam-se embaixadores primariamente em épocas de hostilidade (veja Lu 19:14), e não de paz, a sua missão sendo frequentemente a de procurar evitar a guerra, ou combinar termos de paz, quando predominava um estado de guerra. (Is 33:7; Lu 14:31, 32; veja EMBAIXADOR.) Deus envia seus embaixadores cristãos aos homens, a fim de os habilitar a conhecer seus termos para a reconciliação, e se aproveitarem de tais termos. Como escreveu o apóstolo: "Somos, portanto, embaixadores, substituindo a Cristo, como se Deus instasse por nosso intermédio. Rogamos, como substitutos de Cristo: 'Sede reconciliados com Deus.' " (2Co 5:20) Este rogo não significa nenhum enfraquecimento da posição de Deus ou de sua oposição à transgressão; trata-se, em vez disso, duma exortação misericordiosa para que os ofensores busquem a paz e escapem das consequências inevitáveis da justa ira de Deus contra todos os que persistem em agir contrário à sua santa vontade, sendo a destruição o fim certo de tais. (Veja Ez 33:11.) Até mesmo os cristãos precisam cuidar para 'não aceitar a benignidade imerecida de Deus e desacertar o propósito dela', por deixarem de buscar continuamente o favor e a boa vontade de Deus durante o "tempo aceitável" e o "dia de salvação" que Deus proporciona misericordiosamente, como indicam as palavras seguintes de Paulo. — 2Co 6:1, 2.

A pessoa, ao reconhecer a necessidade de reconciliação e aceitar a provisão de Deus para a reconciliação, a saber, o sacrifício do Filho de Deus, tem então de arrepender-se de seu proceder pecaminoso e converter-se, ou dar meia-volta quanto a seguir o caminho pecaminoso do mundo da humanidade. Por apelar para Deus à base do resgate de Cristo, é possível obter o perdão de pecados e a reconciliação, resultando em "épocas de refrigério da parte da pessoa de Jeová" (At 3:18, 19), bem como em paz mental e de coração. (Fil 4:6, 7) Não sendo mais inimiga sujeita ao furor de Deus, tal pessoa, com efeito, "tem passado da morte para a vida". (Jo 3:16; 5:24) Depois disso, a pessoa tem de reter a boa vontade de Deus por 'invocá-lo em veracidade', 'continuando na fé e não sendo deslocada da esperança das boas novas'. — Sal 145:18; Fil 4:9; Col 1:22, 23.

Em que sentido Deus 'reconciliou um mundo consigo mesmo'?

O apóstolo Paulo menciona Deus como estando, 'por meio de Cristo, reconciliando um mundo consigo mesmo, não lhes imputando as suas falhas'. (2Co 5:19) Isto não deve ser entendido erroneamente como significando que todas as pessoas são automaticamente reconciliadas com Deus por meio do sacrifício de Jesus, uma vez que o apóstolo, logo em seguida, prossegue descrevendo a obra de embaixador de 'rogar' com os homens para que se 'reconciliem com Deus'. (2Co 5:20) Na realidade, foi provido o meio através do qual todos os do mundo da humanidade que se dispusessem a corresponder a tal apelo pudessem obter a reconciliação. Assim, Jesus veio para "dar a sua alma como resgate em troca de muitos", e "quem exerce fé no Filho tem vida eterna; quem desobedece ao Filho não verá a vida, mas o furor de Deus permanece sobre ele". — Mt 20:28; Jo 3:36; compare isso com Ro 5:18, 19; 2Te 1:7, 8.

Todavia, Jeová Deus tencionava "ajuntar novamente todas as coisas no Cristo, as coisas nos céus e as coisas na terra". (Ef 1:10) Embora seja necessário destruir aqueles que se recusam a 'resolver as questões' (Is 1:18) com Jeová Deus, o resultado será um universo em total harmonia com Deus, e a humanidade se regozijará novamente com a amizade de Deus e usufruirá o pleno fluxo de suas bênçãos, assim como no início, no Éden. — Re 21:1-4.

Jeová Deus pôs fim à sua relação pactuada com Israel, como nação, por esta ter sido infiel e ter rejeitado em âmbito nacional o Seu Filho. (Mt 21:42, 43; He 8:7-13) Evidentemente, o apóstolo refere-se a isso ao dizer que 'serem lançados fora significa reconciliação para o mundo' (Ro 11:15), pois, como mostra o contexto, o caminho foi desse modo aberto para o mundo fora da comunidade ou congregação judaica. Isto é, as nações não judaicas tinham então a oportunidade de ser unidas a um restante fiel de judeus no novo pacto como nova nação de Deus, o Israel espiritual. — Veja Ro 11:5, 7, 11, 12, 15, 25.

Como povo do pacto de Deus, sua "propriedade especial" (Êx 19:5, 6; 1Rs 8:53; Sal 135:4), o povo judeu usufruíra certa medida de reconciliação com Deus, embora ainda necessitasse da plena reconciliação por meio do predito Redentor, o Messias. (Is 53:5-7, 11, 12; Da 9:24-26) As nações não judaicas, por outro lado, estavam 'apartadas do estado de Israel e estranhas aos pactos da promessa, e não tinham esperança e estavam sem Deus no mundo', pois não tinham uma posição reconhecida para com ele. (Ef 2:11, 12) Todavia, em harmonia com o segredo sagrado a respeito da Semente, Deus tencionava abençoar pessoas de "todas as nações da terra". (Gên 22:15-18) Portanto, o meio para se realizar isso, o sacrifício de Cristo Jesus, abriu o caminho para que os que faziam parte das apartadas nações não judaicas chegassem "a estar perto pelo sangue do Cristo". (Ef 2:13) Não só isso, mas tal sacrifício removeu também a divisão entre judeus e não judeus, pois cumpriu o pacto da Lei e o tirou do caminho, permitindo assim que Cristo "reconciliasse plenamente ambos os povos com Deus, em um só corpo, por intermédio da estaca de tortura, porque ele matara a inimizade [a divisão produzida pelo pacto da Lei] por meio de si mesmo". O judeu e o não judeu teriam então acesso a Deus por meio de Cristo Jesus, e, com o passar do tempo, não judeus foram incluídos no novo pacto quais herdeiros do Reino junto com Cristo. — Ef 2:14-22; Ro 8:16, 17; He 9:15.

RECRIAÇÃO. Veja CRIAÇÃO; TRIBO.

REDE. Em geral, um tecido que consiste em barbante, linha ou corda, entrelaçados em malha. Redes eram utilizadas para apanhar peixes (Ec 9:12; Is 19:8; Mt 4:18-21), aves (Pr 1:17) e outros animais (Is 51:20). Entre os principais materiais usados em sua construção achavam-se o linho, a fibra de palmeira e o papiro.

Redes de metal, porém, serviam para fins inteiramente diversos. Usavam-se redes de cobre como ornamentos para os capitéis das colunas do templo, Jaquim e Boaz (veja CAPITEL), e uma rede ou grade de cobre servia de grelha para o altar de sacrifício. — Êx 27:4, 5; 38:4; 1Rs 7:16-18, 41, 42; Je 52:22, 23.

Emprego Figurado. "Rede" é amiúde empregada de forma figurada na Bíblia para representar os meios de enredar outros — cercando-os e levando-os cativos, ou trazendo a calamidade sobre eles. (Jó 18:8; 19:6; Sal 66:11; La 1:13; Ez 12:13; 17:20; 19:8; 32:3; Os 5:1; 7:12; Miq 7:2) O meio empregado pelos caldeus para conquistar nações, ao estenderem seu domínio sobre ampla área, é comparado a uma rede de arrasto. (Hab 1:6, 15-17) Também, a lisonja e o coração ardiloso da mulher imoral são comparados a redes. (Pr 29:5; Ec 7:26) O salmista expressou a confiança de que Jeová o livraria das redes enganadoras (Sal 25:15; 31:4; 140:5, 12), e de que aqueles que lançavam tais redes seriam, eles mesmos, apanhados por elas. — Sal 9:15; 35:7, 8; 57:6; 141:10.

Quanto à fabricação e ao uso das diversas redes, veja CAÇA E PESCA; PASSARINHEIRO; REDE DE ARRASTO.

REDE DE ARRASTO. Rede que era arrastada pelo fundo dum corpo de água para apanhar peixes. (Ez 26:5, 14; 47:10) No antigo Egito, as redes de arrasto eram feitas de cordões de linho, e equipadas com pesos de chumbo no fundo e com boias de madeira no topo. É bem provável que as empregadas pelos israelitas fossem similares.

Os métodos de pesca com a rede de arrasto usados antigamente eram provavelmente bem semelhantes aos empregados no Oriente Médio em tempos mais recentes. Os barcos baixavam a rede de arrasto de tal modo que cercasse um cardume de peixes, e longas cordas presas nas extremidades opostas da rede eram levadas para a praia, onde em cada corda diversos homens puxavam aos poucos a rede para a praia, como que num semicírculo. (Mt 13:47, 48) Outro método era recolher a rede, juntando-a num círculo que se estreitava. Pescadores mergulhavam então na água e puxavam uma parte da borda com os pesos por baixo do restante da rede, formando assim um fundo. Depois disso, a rede era recolhida em um ou mais barcos. (Lu 5:6, 7) Às vezes, a rede era primeiro arrastada para águas mais rasas antes de ser esvaziada. — Veja Jo 21:8, 11.

Nas Escrituras, a rede de arrasto é usada de forma figurada com referência ao ajuntamento de pessoas. (Mt 13:47, 48) Também é usada para descrever o coração duma mulher imoral (Ec 7:26), bem como as tramas para enredar outros. (Miq 7:2) Também, a conquista militar é assemelhada à pesca com uma rede de arrasto. — Hab 1:15-17.

REDENÇÃO. Veja RESGATE.

REDIL. Pequeno cercado para animais. (Sof 2:6; veja OVELHAS, APRISCO DAS.) Na profecia de Miqueias, o Israel reagrupado e unido é comparado a um "rebanho no redil". (Miq 2:12, NW; Le) O texto massorético emprega aqui a palavra hebraica bots·ráh, traduzida em outras partes "Bozra", nome duma cidade de Edom e duma cidade de Moabe. Entretanto, em vista da fraseologia de Miqueias 2:12, alguns peritos acham que bots·ráh também significa "redil" ou "aprisco". (BJ, JP) Se a palavra recebesse sinais vocálicos ligeiramente diferentes, corresponderia de perto ao árabe sirat (redil).

REELAÍAS. Pessoa cujo nome ocorre junto com o de homens de destaque tais como Zorobabel e Jesua no início da lista dos que retornaram de Babilônia a Jerusalém em 537 AEC. (Esd 2:1, 2) O nome é grafado Raamias (que significa: "Jeová Trovejou; Bramido de Jeová") em Neemias 7:7.

REFA. Efraimita ancestral de Josué. — 1Cr 7:22-27.

REFÃ. Deidade astral mencionada por Estêvão em sua defesa perante o Sinédrio. (At 7:43) Estêvão provavelmente citava da Septuaginta grega as palavras de Amós 5:26, 27, para mostrar que o exílio de Israel resultou de terem adorado deidades estrangeiras tais como Refã (Caivã). Os tradutores da Septuaginta traduziram "Caivã" por Rhaifán, mas, na citação de Estêvão, o designativo Rhom·fá aparece no texto grego de Westcott e Hort. Numa nota em Atos 7:43, F. J. A. Hort comentou: "Na LXX de Am v 26, a forma empregada é [Rhai·fán] ou [Rhe·fán], que é similar a Repa ou Refa, um dos nomes do Saturno egípcio (Seb)." — The New Testament in the Original Greek (O Novo Testamento no Grego Original), de Westcott e Hort, Graz, 1974, Vol. II, apêndice, p. 92; veja ASTRÓLOGOS (Moloque e a Astrologia em Israel); CAIVÃ.

REFAEL [Deus Curou]. Um dos filhos de Semaías, primogênito de Obede-Edom. Ele foi designado junto com seus irmãos como porteiro, cuidando das casas de armazenagem ao S do santuário. — 1Cr 26:4, 7, 8, 15.

REFAÍAS [Jah Curou].

1. Segundo filho mencionado de Tola e cabeça duma casa paterna da tribo de Issacar — 1Cr 7:1, 2.

2. Benjamita descendente do Rei Saul e de Jonatã. (1Cr 9:39-43) É chamado de Rafa em 1 Crônicas 8:37.

3. Um dos quatro filhos de Isi, os quais, provavelmente durante o reinado de Ezequias, conduziram 500 simeonitas contra os amalequitas que haviam escapado para o monte Seir. Os simeonitas assumiram então o controle desse território. — 1Cr 4:41-43.

4. Descendente pós-exílico de Davi. — 1Cr 3:5, 9, 10, 21.

5. Oficial em Jerusalém que ajudou no projeto de Neemias de reparação da muralha de Jerusalém; filho de Hur. — Ne 3:9.

REFAIM, BAIXADA DE. Larga planície ou vale próximo de Jerusalém. Ela presumivelmente derivou tal nome das pessoas de estatura elevada, chamadas refains, que outrora devem ter morado ali. Acha-se alistada como limite entre os territórios de Judá e Benjamim. (Jos 15:1, 8; 18:11, 16) Em sua extremidade N, havia um monte, ou serra, que dava para o vale de Hinom. A identificação tradicional da baixada de Refaim é a planície do Baqa', ao SO do monte do Templo. Desce c. 1,5 km e então estreita-se no uádi el Werd (Nahal Refa'im).

A fertilidade da planície (Is 17:5), bem como sua proximidade de Jerusalém e de Belém a teriam tornado desejável para os filisteus. (2Sa 23:13, 14; 1Cr 11:15-19) Depois de Davi ter sido ungido rei sobre Israel, os filisteus fizeram incursões na baixada de Refaim. No entanto, Davi seguiu as orientações de Deus e obteve a vitória sobre eles. — 2Sa 5:17-25; 1Cr 14:8-17; veja BAAL-PERAZIM.

REFAINS. Povo ou tribo de estatura elevada. Há incerteza a respeito do significado e da origem desse nome. É provável que tenham sido chamados de refains por descenderem de um homem chamado Rafa. Em 2 Samuel 21:16, ha·Ra·fáh (literalmente: o Rafa) parece empregar o nome do pai para representar a inteira raça gigante.

Em algum período antigo, os refains evidentemente moraram ao L do Mar Morto. Os moabitas, que os desapossaram, referiam-se aos refains como emins ("Coisas Temíveis"). Os amonitas os chamavam de zanzumins (possivelmente duma raiz que significa "ter em mente; tramar"). (De 2:10, 11, 19, 20) Quando o Rei Quedorlaomer, do Elão, veio na direção O para combater cinco reis rebeldes perto do Mar Morto (tomando cativo a Ló), ele derrotou os refains em Asterote-Carnaim. (Gên 14:1, 5) Isto situa os refains, nessa época, em Basã, ao L do Jordão. Pouco depois disso, Deus disse que daria a Terra da Promessa aos descendentes de Abraão, o que incluía o território onde moravam os refains. — Gên 15:18-20.

Mais de 400 anos depois, pouco antes de Israel entrar em Canaã, a "terra dos refains" ainda era identificada com Basã. Ali, os israelitas derrotaram Ogue, rei de Basã (De 3:3, 11, 13; Jos 12:4; 13:12), o único 'que restou do que sobrou dos refains'. Não se tem certeza se isto significa que ele foi o último rei dos refains, ou se ele foi o último dos refains naquela área, pois, pouco depois, encontraram-se refains ao O do Jordão.

Na Terra da Promessa, os israelitas tiveram problemas com os refains, pois alguns deles persistiram em ficar nas florestas da região montanhosa de Efraim. Os filhos de José ficaram com receio de expulsá-los. (Jos 17:14-18) Quando Davi combatia os filisteus, ele e seus servos abateram quatro homens "que nasceram aos refains em Gate". Um deles foi descrito como "um homem de tamanho extraordinário, cujos dedos das mãos e dos pés eram aos seis, vinte e quatro". A descrição das armas deles indica que eram todos homens de grande estatura. Um destes era "Lami, irmão de Golias, o geteu". (1Cr 20:4-8) Este Golias, a quem Davi matou, tinha seis côvados e um palmo de altura (2,90 m). (1Sa 17:4-7) O relato em 2 Samuel 21:16-22 reza "Golias", em vez de "irmão de Golias", como em 1 Crônicas 20:5, o que pode indicar que havia dois Golias. — Veja GOLIAS.

O termo hebraico refa·'ím é empregado em outro sentido na Bíblia. Às vezes aplica-se claramente, não a um povo específico, mas àqueles que estão mortos. Vinculando esta palavra a uma raiz que significa "abaixar, descontrair", alguns peritos concluem que ela significa "os afundados, impotentes". Nos textos em que ela tem esta acepção, a Tradução do Novo Mundo a verte por "os impotentes na morte", e muitas outras versões empregam traduções tais como "coisas mortas", "defuntos" e "mortos". — Jó 26:5; Sal 88:10 (88:11, PIB); Pr 2:18; 9:18; 21:16; Is 14:9; 26:14, 19.

REFEIÇÃO. Frequentemente ocasiões de feliz associação e de benefícios espirituais entre os antigos hebreus, e, mais tarde, entre os primitivos cristãos. As refeições também proporcionavam oportunidades para se mostrar amor e hospitalidade para com outros. Parece que os hebreus e os primitivos cristãos costumavam orar por ocasião das refeições. — 1Sa 9:13; At 27:35; 1Ti 4:1, 3; veja ÁGAPES (FESTAS DE AMOR); HOSPITALIDADE; REFEIÇÃO NOTURNA DO SENHOR.

Pelo que parece, os israelitas faziam duas refeições principais ao dia, uma de manhã e a outra à noite, no fim do dia de trabalho. (Veja Rute 3:2, 3, 7; 1Rs 17:6.) Ao passo que muitos comiam em casa a sua refeição matinal, outros, inclusive os pescadores, que labutavam a noite inteira, pelo visto tinham por hábito levar comida quando saíam para o trabalho. Os pescadores podiam também preparar para a refeição matinal alguns dos peixes que haviam pescado. — Veja Mr 8:14; Jo 21:12, 15.

No entanto, há evidência de que se servia uma refeição, talvez em geral uma mais leve, por volta do meio-dia. (At 10:9, 10) Provavelmente, nesta hora as pessoas que trabalhavam nos campos paravam para descansar e comer alguma coisa. — Veja Ru 2:14.

As mulheres costumavam servir os alimentos. (Jo 12:1-3) Mas, às vezes elas tomavam suas refeições em companhia dos homens. (1Sa 1:4, 5; Jó 1:4) Nas casas abastadas, especialmente as reais, havia criados que serviam à mesa. A mesa do Rei Salomão era servida por garçons que usavam vestes especiais. — 1Rs 10:4, 5; 2Cr 9:3, 4.

As bebidas eram geralmente servidas em copos individuais, mas o alimento era com frequência colocado num prato comum. Os que comiam talvez retirassem o alimento com os dedos, ou usassem um pedaço de pão como se fosse uma colher, para pegar certos alimentos. — Mr 14:20; Jo 13:25, 26; veja também Pr 26:15.

As posições assumidas pelas pessoas às refeições incluíam reclinar-se e sentar-se. (Gên 18:4; 27:19; Jz 19:6; Lu 9:14) Um relevo do palácio do rei assírio, Assurbanipal, apresenta-o reclinado num divã, e a rainha sentada numa poltrona elevada, enquanto se regalavam. Reclinar-se em leitos, às refeições, era, pelo visto, um costume comum também entre os persas. (Est 7:8) Nos dias de Ezequiel, mesas e leitos eram utilizados ao menos por alguns israelitas. — Ez 23:41.

Na Época do Ministério Terrestre de Jesus. O costume geral dos hebreus, no primeiro século EC, era que as pessoas lavassem as mãos antes de tomarem uma refeição. Tratava-se dum costume ritualístico entre os escribas e os fariseus. — Mr 7:1-8; veja LAVAR AS MÃOS.

Nos banquetes ou em grandes festas, na época do ministério terrestre de Jesus, colocavam-se leitos em torno de três lados da mesa. Isto deixava o quarto lado livre, de modo que os que serviam a comida tivessem acesso à mesa. Às vezes, quatro ou cinco pessoas ocupavam um único leito, mas em geral o número era de três pessoas. Os comensais geralmente se apoiavam no cotovelo esquerdo, provavelmente sobre uma almofada, com a cabeça voltada para a mesa. A comida era normalmente apanhada com a mão direita. O lugar de maior importância num leito era o ocupado pela pessoa que não tinha ninguém atrás de si. Estar na "posição junto ao seio" em relação a alguém que se reclinava para uma refeição queria dizer estar à sua frente e também significava ter o seu favor. (Jo 13:23) A pessoa que tinha alguém na posição junto ao seu seio podia facilmente manter uma palestra confidencial com ele.

As três posições costumeiras em cada leito indicavam que a pessoa ocupava a posição superior, a média ou a inferior no leito. Quando se usavam vários leitos, a pessoa que ficava na posição inferior do leito mais afastado do anfitrião ocupava a posição mais humilde na refeição. — Veja Mt 23:6; Lu 14:7-11.

Pelo menos em certas ocasiões festivas, uma grande refeição ou banquete talvez ficasse sob a supervisão dum diretor (Jo 2:9) e podia incluir entretenimentos tais como "um concerto de música e dança". — Lu 15:25.

Conceito Correto sobre as Refeições. É a vontade de Deus que o homem usufrua comida e bebida. (Ec 2:24) Mas os excessos são detestáveis para Deus. (Pr 23:20, 21; Ec 10:17; Ro 13:13; 1Pe 4:3; veja BEBEDICE, EMBRIAGUEZ; GLUTÃO.) Visto que tomar refeições com moderação pode ser muitíssimo deleitoso, a condição de alguém que é alegre de coração é comparável a um contínuo banquete. (Pr 15:15) Também, uma atmosfera amorosa contribui para o prazer duma refeição. O provérbio diz: "Melhor um prato de verduras onde há amor, do que um touro cevado e com ele ódio." — Pr 15:17.

Uso Figurado. Tomar uma refeição junto com outrem significava amizade e paz entre os envolvidos. Por conseguinte, alguém privilegiado em comer regularmente à mesa dum rei era especialmente favorecido e gozava dum vínculo muito íntimo com o monarca. (1Rs 2:7) Este foi o relacionamento que Jesus prometeu a seus discípulos fiéis, quando lhes disse que eles comeriam e beberiam junto com ele em seu Reino. — Lu 22:28-30; veja também Lu 13:29; Re 19:9.

A destruição dos que se colocam em oposição a Deus fornece a ocasião para uma "grande refeição noturna". Esta refeição é para as aves que se alimentarão dos cadáveres dos que forem mortos. (Re 19:15-18) Uma refeição bem diferente é o grande banquete para todos os povos, mencionado em Isaías 25:6.

REFEIÇÃO NOTURNA DO SENHOR. Refeição literal, que celebra a morte do Senhor Jesus Cristo; consequentemente, a comemoração da sua morte. Visto ser o único acontecimento que as Escrituras ordenam que seja comemorado pelos cristãos, é também corretamente chamado de Comemoração. Às vezes é chamado de "ceia do Senhor". — 1Co 11:20, Al.

A instituição da Refeição Noturna do Senhor é relatada por dois apóstolos que foram testemunhas oculares e participantes, a saber, Mateus e João. Marcos e Lucas, embora não estivessem presentes na ocasião, suprem alguns pormenores. Paulo, ao dar instruções à congregação de Corinto, fornece esclarecimento sobre algumas de suas particularidades. Tais fontes nos dizem que, na noite antes de sua morte, Jesus se reuniu com os discípulos numa grande sala de sobrado para celebrar a Páscoa. (Mr 14:14-16) Mateus relata: "Ao continuarem a comer, Jesus tomou um pão, e, depois de proferir uma bênção, partiu-o, e, dando-o aos discípulos, disse: 'Tomai, comei. Isto significa meu corpo.' Tomou também um copo, e, tendo dado graças, deu-lho, dizendo: 'Bebei dele, todos vós; pois isto significa meu "sangue do pacto", que há de ser derramado em benefício de muitos, para o perdão de pecados. Eu vos digo, porém: Doravante, de modo algum beberei deste produto da videira, até o dia em que o beberei novo, convosco, no reino de meu Pai.' Por fim, depois de cantarem louvores, saíram para o Monte das Oliveiras." — Mt 26:17-30; Mr 14:17-26; Lu 22:7-39; Jo 13:1-38; 1Co 10:16-22; 11:20-34.

Ocasião da Sua Instituição. A Páscoa sempre era celebrada em 14 de nisã (abibe), no dia ou perto do dia da lua cheia, uma vez que o primeiro dia de cada mês (mês lunar) do calendário judaico era o dia da lua nova, conforme determinado por observação visual. Portanto, o dia 14 do mês se situaria mais ou menos na metade duma lunação. A data da morte de Jesus é indicada no artigo JESUS CRISTO (Tempo da sua morte) como 14 de nisã de 33 EC. Concernente ao dia da sua morte, segundo o calendário gregoriano, os cálculos astronômicos indicam que houve um eclipse da Lua na sexta-feira, 3 de abril de 33 EC. (calendário juliano), que seria sexta-feira, 1.º de abril no calendário gregoriano. (Canon of Eclipses [Cânon de Eclipses] de Oppolzer, traduzido para o inglês por O. Gingerich, 1962, p. 344) Os eclipses da Lua sempre ocorrem por ocasião da lua cheia. Esta evidência indica fortemente que 14 de nisã de 33 EC caiu na quinta-feira/sexta-feira, de 31 de março a 1.º de abril de 33 EC, no calendário gregoriano.

Foi na noite anterior à sua morte que Jesus celebrou sua última refeição pascoal, e, depois disso, instituiu a Refeição Noturna do Senhor. Mesmo antes de iniciar a refeição da Comemoração, mandou-se que o traidor Judas saísse, ocasião em que, segundo o relato, "era noite". (Jo 13:30) Visto que os dias do calendário judaico decorriam da noitinha de um dia até a noitinha do dia seguinte, a Refeição Noturna do Senhor foi também celebrada em 14 de nisã, na noite de quinta-feira, 31 de março. — Veja DIA.

Frequência da Sua Celebração. Segundo Lucas e Paulo, ao instituir a Comemoração da sua morte, Jesus disse: "Persisti em fazer isso em memória de mim." (Lu 22:19; 1Co 11:24) Com base nisto, é razoável entendermos que Jesus quis dizer que seus seguidores deviam celebrar anualmente a Refeição Noturna do Senhor, e não com mais frequência. A Páscoa, celebrada em lembrança da libertação de Israel da escravidão egípcia, efetuada por Jeová em 1513 AEC, só era comemorada uma vez por ano, no seu aniversário, em 14 de nisã. A Comemoração da morte de Cristo, também um aniversário, seria apropriadamente realizada somente em 14 de nisã.

Paulo citou Jesus como dizendo concernente ao copo: "Persisti em fazer isso, todas as vezes que o beberdes, em memória de mim", e acrescentou: "Pois, todas as vezes que comerdes este pão e beberdes este copo, estais proclamando a morte do Senhor, até que ele chegue." (1Co 11:25, 26) "Todas as vezes" pode referir-se a algo feito apenas uma vez por ano, especialmente quando é feito no decorrer de muitos anos. (He 9:25, 26) O dia 14 de nisã foi o dia em que Cristo ofereceu seu corpo literal como sacrifício na estaca de tortura, e derramou seu sangue vital para o perdão de pecados. Portanto, esse era o dia da "morte do Senhor", e, por conseguinte, era a data para dali em diante se comemorar a morte dele.

Os participantes desta refeição estariam "ausentes do Senhor" e celebrariam a Refeição Noturna do Senhor 'muitas vezes' antes de morrerem fiéis. Daí, após a ressurreição deles para a vida celestial, estariam junto com Cristo e não mais precisariam de algo que os fizesse lembrar-se dele. A respeito da continuidade desta observância, "até que ele chegue", o apóstolo Paulo evidentemente se referia a Cristo vir de novo e os acolher no céu por meio duma ressurreição, no tempo de sua presença. Este entendimento da questão é elucidado pelas palavras de Jesus aos 11 apóstolos, mais tarde naquela mesma noite: "Se eu for embora e vos preparar um lugar, virei novamente e vos acolherei a mim, para que, onde eu estiver, vós também estejais." — Jo 14:3, 4; 2Co 5:1-3, 6-9.

Jesus informou aos discípulos que o vinho que havia bebido (nesta Páscoa que antecedeu à Comemoração) tinha sido o último do produto da videira que ele beberia "até o dia em que o beberei novo, convosco, no reino de meu Pai". (Mt 26:29) Visto que ele não beberia vinho literal no céu, referia-se obviamente àquilo que o vinho por vezes simbolizava nas Escrituras, a saber, a alegria. Estarem juntos no Reino era o que eles aguardavam com a máxima expectativa. (Ro 8:23; 2Co 5:2) O Rei Davi escreveu, em cântico, sobre Jeová suprir "vinho que alegra o coração do homem mortal", e seu filho Salomão disse: "O próprio vinho alegra a vida." — Sal 104:15; Ec 10:19.

Os Emblemas. Marcos relata o seguinte quanto ao pão usado por Jesus ao instituir a Refeição Noturna do Senhor: "Enquanto continuavam a comer, tomou um pão, proferiu uma bênção, partiu-o e o deu a eles, e disse: 'Tomai-o, isto significa meu corpo.' " (Mr 14:22) O pão era da espécie disponível para a refeição pascoal, que Jesus e seus discípulos já tinham acabado de celebrar. Era pão sem fermento, uma vez que não se permitia nenhum fermento nas casas dos judeus durante a Páscoa e a conjugada Festividade dos Pães Não Fermentados. (Êx 13:6-10) Na Bíblia, fermento indica pecaminosidade. Era apropriado que o pão estivesse isento de fermento, porque o pão representava o corpo carnal, sem pecados, de Jesus. (He 7:26; 9:14; 1Pe 2:22, 24) O pão não fermentado era achatado e quebradiço; assim, foi partido, como era costumeiro nas refeições daqueles dias. (Lu 24:30; At 27:35) Anteriormente, quando Jesus multiplicou de forma miraculosa o pão para milhares de pessoas, ele o partiu para distribuí-lo a tais pessoas. (Mt 14:19; 15:36) Por conseguinte, parece que não havia nenhum significado espiritual no ato de se partir o pão da Comemoração.

Depois de Jesus ter passado o pão, ele tomou um copo e "rendeu graças e o deu a eles, e todos beberam dele. E disse-lhes: 'Isto significa meu "sangue do pacto", que há de ser derramado em benefício de muitos.' " (Mr 14:23, 24) Ele utilizou vinho fermentado, não suco não fermentado de uva. As referências bíblicas ao vinho são ao vinho literal, e não ao suco não fermentado de uva. (Veja VINHO E BEBIDA FORTE.) Seria o vinho fermentado, não o suco de uva, que faria rebentar "odres velhos", como disse Jesus. Os inimigos de Jesus o acusaram de ser "dado a beber vinho", acusação que nada representaria se o "vinho" aqui fosse mero suco de uva. (Mt 9:17; 11:19) Vinho genuíno estava disponível na celebração da Páscoa que haviam acabado de realizar, e este podia ser usado apropriadamente por Cristo ao instituir a Comemoração da sua morte. Sem dúvida, o vinho era tinto, pois apenas o vinho tinto seria um símbolo apropriado do sangue. — 1Pe 1:19.

Uma Refeição de Participação em Comum. No antigo Israel, um homem podia prover uma refeição de participação em comum. Ele trazia um animal ao santuário, onde este era abatido. Parte do animal oferecido ia para o altar, como "cheiro repousante para Jeová". Parte ia para o sacerdote oficiante, e outra parte ia para os filhos sacerdotais de Arão, e o ofertante e a casa deste compartilhavam da refeição. (Le 3:1-16; 7:28-36) Alguém que estivesse 'impuro', conforme definido na Lei, estava proibido de comer dum sacrifício de participação em comum, sob pena de ser 'decepado do seu povo'. — Le 7:20, 21.

A Refeição Noturna do Senhor é igualmente uma refeição de participação em comum, visto haver uma participação conjunta. Jeová Deus está envolvido como Autor do arranjo, Jesus Cristo é o sacrifício resgatador, e seus irmãos espirituais comem os emblemas como coparticipantes. O comerem à "mesa de Jeová" significa que estão em paz com Jeová. (1Co 10:21) De fato, as ofertas de participação em comum eram, às vezes, chamadas de "ofertas pacíficas". — Le 3:1 n.

Os participantes da refeição, ao comerem o pão e beberem o vinho, admitem que são coparticipantes em Cristo, em completa união. Diz o apóstolo Paulo: "O copo de bênção que abençoamos, não é uma participação no sangue do Cristo? O pão que partimos, não é uma participação no corpo do Cristo? Porque há um só pão, nós, embora muitos, somos um só corpo, pois estamos todos participando daquele um só pão." — 1Co 10:16, 17.

Ao assim participarem, tais pessoas indicam que estão no novo pacto e estão recebendo os benefícios dele, isto é, o perdão de pecados da parte de Deus, mediante o sangue de Cristo. Prezam devidamente o valor do "sangue do pacto" pelo qual são santificados. (He 10:29) As Escrituras os chamam de "ministros dum novo pacto", servindo aos seus objetivos. (2Co 3:5, 6) E participam de forma apropriada do pão emblemático, pois podem dizer: "Pela dita 'vontade' é que temos sido santificados por intermédio da oferta do corpo de Jesus Cristo, uma vez para sempre." (He 10:10) Participam nos sofrimentos de Cristo e de uma morte semelhante à dele, uma morte de integridade. Esperam compartilhar da "semelhança de sua ressurreição", uma ressurreição para a vida imortal num corpo espiritual. — Ro 6:3-5.

A respeito de cada participante da refeição, o apóstolo Paulo escreve: "Quem comer o pão ou beber o copo do Senhor indignamente, será culpado com respeito ao corpo e ao sangue do Senhor. Primeiro, aprove-se o homem depois de escrutínio, e deste modo coma do pão e beba do copo. Pois, quem come e bebe, come e bebe julgamento contra si mesmo, se não discernir o corpo." (1Co 11:27-29) Práticas impuras, antibíblicas ou hipócritas desqualificam a pessoa de comer. Se participasse nestas condições, estaria comendo e bebendo julgamento contra si mesma. Estaria deixando de demonstrar apreço pelo sacrifício de Cristo, seu propósito e seu significado. Estaria revelando desrespeito e desprezo por tal sacrifício. (Veja He 10:28-31.) Tal pessoa correria o perigo de ser 'decepada do povo de Deus', como o era quem, em Israel, tomasse parte num sacrifício de participação em comum numa condição impura. — Le 7:20.

Efetivamente, Paulo compara a Refeição Noturna do Senhor a uma refeição israelita de participação em comum, ao falar primeiro de os partícipes gozarem de uma participação comum em Cristo, dizendo então: "Olhai para aquilo que é o Israel de modo carnal: Não são parceiros do altar os que comem dos sacrifícios? . . . Não podeis estar bebendo o copo de Jeová e o copo de demônios; não podeis estar participando da 'mesa de Jeová' e da mesa de demônios." — 1Co 10:18-21.

Os Participantes e Outros Que Comparecem à Refeição. Jesus havia reunido seus 12 apóstolos, dizendo-lhes: "Desejei muito comer esta páscoa convosco antes de eu sofrer." (Lu 22:15) Mas o relato de João, qual testemunha ocular, indica que Jesus despediu o traidor Judas antes de instituir a refeição da Comemoração. Durante a Páscoa, Jesus, sabendo que seria Judas quem o trairia, mergulhou um bocado da refeição pascoal e o deu a Judas, instruindo-o a sair. (Jo 13:21-30) O relato de Marcos também sugere esta ordem de eventos. (Mr 14:12-25) Na Refeição Noturna do Senhor que se seguiu, Jesus passou o pão e o vinho aos 11 apóstolos remanescentes, dizendo-lhes que comessem e bebessem. (Lu 22:19, 20) Depois disso, conversou com eles como sendo 'os que ficaram comigo nas minhas provações', outro indício de que Judas havia sido despedido. — Lu 22:28.

Não há evidência de que o próprio Jesus tenha comido o pão assim oferecido, ou bebido do copo durante esta refeição da Comemoração. O corpo e o sangue que ofereceu eram em benefício deles e para validar o novo pacto, mediante o qual os pecados deles foram removidos. (Je 31:31-34; He 8:10-12; 12:24) Jesus não tinha pecado algum. (He 7:26) Ele mediava o novo pacto entre Jeová Deus e os escolhidos quais associados de Cristo. (He 9:15; veja PACTO.) Além dos apóstolos que estavam presentes àquela refeição, haveria outros que constituiriam o espiritual "Israel de Deus", um "pequeno rebanho", que por fim seriam reis e sacerdotes junto com Cristo. (Gál 6:16; Lu 12:32; Re 1:5, 6; 5:9, 10) Portanto, todos os irmãos espirituais de Cristo na Terra seriam participantes desta refeição, cada vez que esta fosse celebrada. Indica-se que são "certas primícias das suas criaturas" (Tg 1:18), compradas dentre a humanidade como "primícias para Deus e para o Cordeiro", e a visão concedida a João revela que somam 144.000. — Re 14:1-5.

Observadores não participantes. O Senhor Jesus Cristo revelou que durante sua presença haveria pessoas que fariam o bem a seus irmãos espirituais, visitando-os em épocas de necessidade e prestando-lhes ajuda. (Mt 25:31-46) Será que estas pessoas, que poderiam comparecer à celebração da Refeição Noturna do Senhor, se habilitariam quais participantes dos emblemas? As Escrituras dizem que Deus, mediante seu espírito santo, fornece evidência e certeza aos habilitados a participar dos emblemas, quais "herdeiros de Deus, mas co-herdeiros de Cristo", de que eles são filhos de Deus. O apóstolo Paulo escreve: "O próprio espírito dá testemunho com o nosso espírito de que somos filhos de Deus." Ele prossegue explicando que há outros que tiram proveito do arranjo feito por Deus para esses filhos: "Pois a expectativa ansiosa da criação está esperando a revelação dos filhos de Deus." (Ro 8:14-21) Visto que os co-herdeiros de Cristo hão de 'reinar como reis e sacerdotes sobre a terra', o Reino beneficiará os que viverem sob ele. (Re 5:10; 20:4, 6; 21:3, 4) Os beneficiados estariam naturalmente interessados no Reino e em seu desenvolvimento. Por conseguinte, tais pessoas compareceriam à celebração da Refeição Noturna do Senhor, e a comemorariam, mas, não sendo co-herdeiros de Cristo, nem filhos espirituais de Deus, não participariam dos emblemas como coparticipantes da morte de Cristo, que têm a esperança de ressurreição para uma vida celestial junto com ele. — Ro 6:3-5.

Nenhuma Transubstanciação, nem Consubstanciação. Ao oferecer o pão, Jesus ainda possuía seu corpo carnal. Este corpo, no todo e por inteiro, seria oferecido como sacrifício perfeito, imaculado, pelos pecados na tarde seguinte (do mesmo dia do calendário hebraico, 14 de nisã). Também, Jesus reteve todo o seu sangue para aquele sacrifício perfeito. "Esvaziou a sua alma [que está no sangue] até a própria morte." (Is 53:12; Le 17:11) Por conseguinte, durante a refeição noturna ele não realizou um milagre de transubstanciação, transformando o pão em sua carne literal, e o vinho em seu sangue literal. Por estas mesmas razões, não se pode dizer veridicamente que ele tenha feito, de forma miraculosa, que sua carne e seu sangue estivessem presentes no pão e no vinho, ou que se combinassem com estes, conforme pretendido pelos que aderem à doutrina da consubstanciação.

As palavras de Jesus em João 6:51-57 não contradizem isso. Ali, Jesus não estava considerando a Refeição Noturna do Senhor; tal arranjo só foi instituído um ano mais tarde. O 'comer' e o 'beber' mencionados neste relato se dão em sentido figurativo por se exercer fé em Jesus Cristo, como indicam os versículos 35 e 40.

Ademais, comer carne humana e beber sangue humano reais seria canibalismo. Portanto, os judeus que não exerciam fé e que não entenderam corretamente a declaração de Jesus quanto a comer de sua carne e beber de seu sangue ficaram chocados. Indicou-se assim o conceito judaico sobre comer carne humana e beber sangue humano, conforme inculcado pela Lei. — Jo 6:60.

Além disso, beber sangue era violação da lei que Deus deu a Noé, antes do pacto da Lei. (Gên 9:4; Le 17:10) O Senhor Jesus Cristo jamais instruiria outros a violar a lei de Deus. (Veja Mt 5:19.) Ademais, Jesus ordenou: "Persisti em fazer isso, . . . em memória de mim", e não em sacrifício de mim. — 1Co 11:23-25.

O pão e o vinho, por conseguinte, são emblemas que representam a carne e o sangue de Cristo, do mesmo modo que suas palavras sobre comer a sua carne e beber o seu sangue. Jesus dissera aos que ficaram ofendidos com suas palavras: "De fato, o pão que eu hei de dar é a minha carne a favor da vida do mundo." (Jo 6:51) Esta foi dada por ocasião de sua morte como sacrifício na estaca de tortura. Seu corpo foi sepultado e seu Pai lhe deu uma destinação final, antes que pudesse ver a corrupção. (At 2:31) Literalmente, ninguém jamais comeu alguma parte de sua carne, nem bebeu seu sangue.

Celebração Correta e Ordeira. A congregação cristã em Corinto se tinha degenerado numa condição espiritualmente ruim, em alguns sentidos, de modo que, como disse o apóstolo Paulo: "Muitos entre vós estão fracos e doentios, e não poucos estão dormindo na morte." Isto se devia, em grande parte, ao seu entendimento errôneo da Refeição Noturna do Senhor e seu significado. Estavam deixando de respeitar a santidade da ocasião. Alguns levavam consigo a ceia para comer antes ou durante a reunião. Entre estes havia pessoas que passavam dos limites e ficavam embriagadas, ao passo que outros da congregação, que não tinham ceia, ficavam famintos e se sentiam envergonhados na presença daqueles que tinham muito. Com a mente sonolenta ou concentrada em outros assuntos, eles não estavam em condições de participar dos emblemas com apreço. Ademais, havia divisões na congregação, pois alguns no seu meio eram a favor de Pedro, ao passo que outros preferiam Apolo, e ainda outros buscavam a liderança de Paulo. (1Co 1:11-13; 11:18) Estavam deixando de reconhecer que esta ocasião devia ressaltar a união. Não se davam plenamente conta da seriedade do assunto, que os emblemas representavam o corpo e o sangue do Senhor, e que a refeição era uma recordação da morte dele. Paulo sublinhou o grave perigo em que incorriam aqueles que participavam dos emblemas sem discernir estes fatos. — 1Co 11:20-34.

REFIDIM [duma raiz que significa "estender"; ou, "revigorar"]. Um dos lugares onde os israelitas acamparam em sua jornada do Mar Vermelho ao monte Sinai. Ao partirem do ermo de Sim, acamparam em Dofca, daí em Alus, e, por fim, em Refidim. (Êx 17:1; Núm 33:12-14) Faltando-lhes água em Refidim, o povo queixou-se e altercou com Moisés. Sob a orientação de Deus, Moisés levou alguns dos anciãos até a "rocha em Horebe" (evidentemente a região montanhosa de Horebe, e não o monte Horebe), e golpeou uma rocha com seu bastão. A água fluiu, pelo visto chegando até o povo acampado em Refidim. — Êx 17:2-7.

Os amalequitas atacaram os israelitas em Refidim, mas, sob a liderança de Josué na batalha, o povo de Deus venceu seus atacantes. (Êx 17:8-16) O ponto em que esse relato foi colocado no registro indica que foi enquanto os israelitas estavam em Refidim que o sogro de Moisés trouxe Zípora e seus dois filhos a Moisés, e sugeriu que ele escolhesse chefes para ajudá-lo a julgar o povo. — Êx 18:1-27.

A localização exata de Refidim é incerta. As várias localidades que os geógrafos propõem têm sido determinadas de acordo com o entendimento deles da rota que os israelitas percorreram do ermo de Sim até o monte Sinai. Muitos geógrafos da atualidade identificam Refidim com um lugar no uádi Refayied, não muito ao NO do local tradicional do monte Sinai. Adjacente ao uádi existe uma colina com o mesmo nome, na qual Moisés poderia ter-se postado de pé, com os braços erguidos, durante a batalha com os amalequitas.

REFINAÇÃO, REFINADOR. Processo de separar e purificar metais, e o artífice que realiza isso. Por meio de repetidas fundições em cadinhos refinadores de barro, chamados crisóis, a escória e as impurezas eram removidas do metal desejado. (Sal 12:6; Pr 17:3; 27:21) Restos de despejadouros de escória têm sido encontrados na região em torno da antiga Sucote, onde ficavam algumas das minas e das fundições de Salomão. Às vezes, as impurezas eram eliminadas pela queima; outras vezes, empregava-se a barrela do refinador (veja LAVADEIRO) para amalgamar a escumosa escória, de modo que pudesse ser escumada. (Is 1:25; Mal 3:2) O refinador se sentava diante do forno, e atiçava o fogo de brasas de carvão com um jato de ar provido por foles. — Je 6:29; Mal 3:3.

O ouro com frequência contém prata em várias dosagens. Não se sabe como estes eram separados nos tempos bíblicos, mas uma diferença no método de tratar os dois parece ser indicada em Provérbios 17:3 e 27:21: "O cadinho de refinação é para a prata e o forno de fundição para o ouro." O ácido nítrico evidentemente só foi descoberto no nono século EC; assim, antes disso o ouro era purificado por outros meios. Por exemplo, caso houvesse chumbo misturado com o ouro, as impurezas podiam ser eliminadas como escória por fundição, ao passo que o ouro era retido pelo chumbo. Daí, pela lenta fervura do chumbo (operação conhecida como copelação), o ouro puro permanecia. Tal processo exige considerável perícia, pois, se a temperatura for elevada demais, ou a fervura rápida demais, o ouro será eliminado junto com o chumbo. O operador aprende a avaliar e a controlar o refino pela cor do metal fundido. (Veja Sal 12:6; Je 6:28-30; Ez 22:18-22.) As Escrituras fazem alusão ao emprego de barrela na refinação da prata. — Mal 3:2, 3.

Se o minério de cobre era um óxido ou um carbonato, misturar o minério triturado com carvão e queimá-lo liberava o cobre no estado metálico. Entretanto, se o minério de cobre era um sulfeto, fazia-se necessária uma ustulação preliminar, para queimar o enxofre e reduzi-lo a bióxido de enxofre, e ao mesmo tempo converter o sulfeto de cobre em óxido de cobre. Daí, este podia ser reduzido com o carvão para se obter o metal puro.

A extração de ferro era mais difícil, devido ao tremendo calor exigido. O ferro se funde a 1.535°C. Os antigos, contudo, construíram fornos de fundição equipados de foles para prover um jato de ar, similar aos atuais altos-fornos. (De 4:20; Je 6:29; Ez 22:20-22) Não existem pormenores quanto aos fornos hebreus para ferro, mas podem ter sido similares aos que se sabe existiam na antiga Índia. Feitos de argila, em forma de pera, tendo cerca de 1,20 m de diâmetro no fundo, e estreitando-se a cerca de 30 cm no topo, possuíam foles de pele de cabrito, dotados de bocais ligados a tubos de argila, que forneciam ar para o fundo do forno. Alimentados a carvão de lenha, acendia-se o fogo e adicionava-se o minério. Outra camada de carvão era então acrescentada, e o jato de calor continuava por três ou quatro horas. Terminada a operação, quebrava-se a frente do forno, a fim de remover o lingote de metal.

É relativamente simples a remoção do chumbo de seu minério comum, a galena, isto é, o sulfeto de chumbo. Primeiro se ustula o minério com uma injeção de ar, a fim de reduzir o sulfeto de chumbo a óxido de chumbo; o enxofre se combina com o oxigênio e forma o gás bióxido de enxofre. O óxido de chumbo é então misturado com carvão e lançado num alto-forno; daí, o bióxido de carbono é retirado, deixando o chumbo líquido no crisol.

Uso Figurado. Menciona-se o próprio Jeová como refinador. Sua Palavra é altamente refinada. (2Sa 22:31; Sal 18:30; 119:140; Pr 30:5) Esta Palavra testada e comprovada é um dos meios através dos quais Deus purifica seu povo, removendo toda a escória pecaminosa da impureza. (Sal 17:3; 26:2; 105:19; Da 12:9, 10; Mal 3:3) Provas ardentes também refinam os fiéis. (Is 48:10; Da 11:35; Za 13:9; compare isso com 1Pe 1:6, 7.) Os iníquos, por outro lado, são julgados como não sendo nada mais do que escumosa escória, que serve apenas para ser lançada no imprestável monturo de restos. — Sal 119:119; Pr 25:4, 5; Ez 22:18-20.

REFÚGIO. Veja CIDADES DE REFÚGIO.

REGÉM. Primeiro filho mencionado de Jadai no ramo calebita da genealogia de Judá. — 1Cr 2:3, 42, 47.

REGEM-MELEQUE. Um dos dois homens de destaque enviados pelo povo de Betel, após o exílio, para "abrandar a face de Jeová" e indagar sobre se deviam prosseguir com o jejum costumeiro. Isto se deu mais de dois anos antes do término da reconstrução do templo. — Za 7:1-3; Esd 6:15.

RÉGIO. Cidade no S da Itália, atualmente chamada de Reggio, ou Reggio di Calabria. O barco em que o apóstolo Paulo estava viajando como prisioneiro fez escala em Régio, quando ele estava a caminho de Roma para apresentar-se perante César, por volta do ano 59 EC.

Régio está situada no estreito de Messina, que separa a Itália da Sicília. Pouco ao N de Régio, o barco em que Paulo viajava teria de navegar ao largo do promontório de Cila, do lado italiano do estreito, e do abismo de Caribdis, do lado siciliano, ambos considerados perigosos pelos antigos marujos. Um dia depois de sua chegada a Régio, soprou um vento S e este os levou em segurança pelo estreito e na direção NNO até Putéoli. — At 28:13.

REGISTRO. Alistamento, em geral por nome e linhagem, segundo a tribo e a família. Envolvia mais do que um simples recenseamento ou uma contagem de cabeças. Os registros nacionais mencionados na Bíblia serviram para vários fins, tais como para tributação, designações para o serviço militar, ou (para os levitas incluídos) atribuições de deveres no santuário.

No Sinai. Por ordem de Jeová, o primeiro registro se deu durante o acampamento no Sinai, no segundo mês do segundo ano após o Êxodo do Egito. Para auxiliar Moisés nesse empreendimento, escolheu-se um chefe de cada tribo para assumir a responsabilidade e a supervisão do registro da tribo. Não só foram alistados todos os varões com 20 anos ou mais — elegíveis para servir no exército — mas a Lei também impunha aos registrados um imposto por cabeça de meio siclo (US$ 1,10) para o serviço do tabernáculo. (Êx 30:11-16; Núm 1:1-16, 18, 19) O total alistado foi de 603.550, excluindo-se os levitas, que não teriam nenhuma herança na terra. Estes não pagavam nenhum imposto para o tabernáculo, e não se exigia que servissem no exército. — Núm 1:44-47; 2:32, 33; 18:20, 24.

A narrativa no livro de Números mostra que também se fez uma contagem dos primogênitos do sexo masculino, dentre as 12 tribos, e de todos os varões levitas, de um mês ou mais de idade. (Núm 3:14, 15) Isto se deu porque Jeová tinha comprado para si os primogênitos, quando os preservou da destruição dos primogênitos no Egito. Agora, ele desejava usar os levitas como os especialmente santificados para o serviço no santuário. Por conseguinte, os levitas deveriam ser dados por Israel a Jeová, para remir os primogênitos das outras tribos. A contagem revelou que havia 22.000 varões levitas e 22.273 primogênitos não levitas. (Núm 3:11-13, 39-43) Para remir os 273 primogênitos que ultrapassavam o total de levitas, exigiu-se o pagamento de cinco ciclos (US$ 11) ao santuário referente a cada um deles. — Núm 3:44-51.

Os coatitas, os gersonitas e os meraritas entre 30 e 50 anos também foram contados. A estes foram dadas designações especiais de serviço no santuário. — Núm 4:34-49.

Nas Planícies de Moabe. Um segundo registro alistado é o que foi feito nas planícies de Moabe, após o flagelo resultante do pecado de Israel com relação a Baal de Peor. Constatou-se, então, que o total de homens com 20 anos ou mais era de 601.730, um decréscimo de 1.820 em comparação com o recenseamento feito quase 39 anos antes. (Núm 26:1, 2, 51) A contagem dos levitas de um mês ou mais de idade deu 23.000, ou 1.000 a mais do que no primeiro recenseamento. — Núm 26:57, 62.

O Registro Calamitoso Feito por Davi. Um registro feito perto do fim do reinado do Rei Davi também se acha relatado, um que trouxe calamidade. O relato em 2 Samuel 24:1 reza: "E novamente veio a acender-se a ira de Jeová contra Israel, quando se instigou Davi contra eles, dizendo: 'Vai, faze a contagem de Israel e de Judá.'" Não se identifica ali quem o instigou a isso. Teria sido algum conselheiro humano? Teria sido Satanás? Ou mesmo Deus? Primeira das Crônicas 21:1 ajuda a responder à pergunta, dizendo: "Satanás passou a pôr-se de pé contra Israel e a instigar Davi a recensear Israel." Tal versão na Tradução do Novo Mundo concorda com o texto hebraico e com as traduções para o grego, o siríaco e o latim. É também coerente com a versão de outras traduções. — ALA, IBB, So, Tr, VB.

Entretanto, como salienta a nota ao pé da página, referente a 1 Crônicas 21:1, a palavra hebraica sa·tán também pode ser vertida "opositor". Byington traduz "um Satanás"; a tradução de Young reza "um adversário". Portanto, é possível que aquele que induziu Davi a optar pelo proceder calamitoso tenha sido um conselheiro humano mau.

É interessante que uma nota em 2 Samuel 24:1 indica que este texto poderia ser traduzido: "E novamente veio a acender-se a ira de Jeová contra Israel, quando ele instigou Davi contra eles." A tradução da The Bible in Basic English (A Bíblia em Inglês Básico) reza: "Novamente a ira do Senhor ardia contra Israel, e movendo Davi contra eles, ele disse: Vai, faze a contagem de Israel e Judá." Assim, alguns comentaristas consideram que o "ele" que instigou Davi a fazer o recenseamento foi Jeová. Sua 'ira contra Israel', segundo este conceito, acendeu-se antes do recenseamento e se devia às recentes rebeliões deles contra Jeová e seu rei designado, Davi, quando seguiram primeiro o ambicioso Absalão e depois o imprestável Seba, filho de Bicri, em oposição a Davi. (2Sa 15:10-12; 20:1, 2) Tal ponto de vista poderá ser harmonizado com o conceito de que Satanás ou algum conselheiro humano mau instigou Davi, se a instigação for encarada como algo que Jeová propositadamente permitiu, como por remover sua proteção ou sua mão restritiva. — Compare isso com 1Rs 22:21-23; 1Sa 16:14; veja PRESCIÊNCIA, PREDETERMINAÇÃO (Com relação a pessoas).

Da parte de Davi, talvez tenha havido motivação errada, devido ao orgulho ou à confiança nos números de seu exército, deixando ele assim de demonstrar plena confiança em Jeová. Em todo caso, torna-se claro que nesta ocasião a motivação de Davi não era a de glorificar a Deus.

Joabe levanta objeção. Ao receber ordens de fazer o registro, Joabe, o general de Davi, objetou, dizendo: "Acrescente Jeová, teu Deus, ainda cem vezes mais do que são, vendo-os os próprios olhos do meu senhor, o rei. Mas, quanto ao meu senhor, o rei, por que se deleitou nesta coisa?" (2Sa 24:3) As palavras de Joabe subentendem que a força nacional não dependia de números, mas de Jeová, que podia fornecer grandes números se assim quisesse. Joabe, por insistência de Davi, fez o recenseamento, porém a contragosto, declarando o relato: "A Levi e a Benjamim não registrou entre eles, porque a palavra do rei tinha sido detestável para Joabe" (Levi não sendo contado, de acordo com a lei registrada em Números 1:47-49). Ou Joabe parou antes de registrar a Benjamim, ou retardou o andamento do registro, de modo que, antes de Joabe o ter concluído, Davi caiu em si e pediu-lhe que parasse. (1Cr 21:6) Joabe talvez tenha evitado Benjamim por não querer atiçar esta tribo, que era a tribo de Saul e que havia combatido o exército de Davi, sob Joabe, antes da unificação com as outras tribos sob Davi. (2Sa 2:12-17) Sem dúvida, por tal recenseamento ser errado, não foi incluído na "narração dos assuntos dos dias do Rei Davi". — 1Cr 27:24.

A contagem revelou que Israel dispunha de 1.100.000 homens, e Judá de 470.000, segundo o relato de 1 Crônicas 21:5. O relato de 2 Samuel 24:9 diz que havia 800.000 homens em Israel, e 500.000 homens em Judá. Alguns creem que haja algum erro de cópia. Mas não convém atribuir ao relato um erro quando não se entendem plenamente as circunstâncias, os métodos de cômputo, e assim por diante. Os dois relatos podem ter com-putado os números através de enfoques diferentes. Por exemplo, é possível que os membros do exército efetivo e/ou de seus oficiais tenham sido computados, ou omitidos. E diferentes métodos de cômputo podem ter causado uma variação na listagem de certos homens, quanto a se eles se achavam sob Judá ou sob Israel. Em 1 Crônicas, capítulo 27, encontramos o que pode ser um exemplo disso. Alistam-se 12 divisões a serviço do rei, citando-se nominalmente todas as tribos, exceto Gade e Aser, e citando-se Levi e as duas meias-tribos de Manassés. Isto talvez tenha ocorrido porque os homens de Gade e de Aser se achavam incluídos sob outros cabeças naquela época, ou por outros motivos não declarados.

O julgamento de Jeová. Gade, profeta de Jeová, foi enviado a Davi, aquele que autorizara o recenseamento, a fim de que este escolhesse uma dentre três formas de punição: uma fome durante três anos, a espada dos inimigos de Israel sobrepujando Israel durante três meses, ou uma pestilência durante três dias. Davi, confiando na misericórdia de Deus, em vez de na do homem, preferiu 'cair na mão de Jeová'; na pestilência que se seguiu, morreram 70.000 pessoas. — 1Cr 21:10-14.

Aqui se encontra outra variação entre os relatos de Samuel e de Crônicas. Ao passo que 2 Samuel 24:13 diz sete anos de fome, 1 Crônicas 21:12 diz três. (A Septuaginta grega reza "três" no relato de Samuel.) Uma explicação oferecida é que os sete anos mencionados em Segundo Samuel seriam, em parte, uma extensão dos três anos de fome que lhes sobrevieram devido ao pecado de Saul e de sua casa contra os gibeonitas. (2Sa 21:1, 2) O ano então corrente (o registro levou 9 meses e 20 dias [2Sa 24:8]) seria o quarto, e os três anos seguintes perfariam sete. Embora tal diferença talvez se deva a um erro de cópia, pode-se novamente frisar que, antes de se chegar a tal conclusão, é mister que se tenha pleno conhecimento de todos os fatos e de todas as circunstâncias.

Para o Serviço no Templo. Algum tempo depois, Davi, que então já estava bem avançado em anos, mandou contar os levitas para serviço futuro no templo, com a aparente aprovação de Jeová. Tal contagem revelou que havia 38.000 levitas com 30 anos ou mais, todos homens vigorosos. Foram alistados como segue: 24.000 supervisores, 6.000 oficiais e juízes, 4.000 porteiros e 4.000 músicos. — 1Cr 23:1-5.

Relacionado com a construção do templo, lemos: "Salomão fez então a contagem de todos os homens que eram residentes forasteiros, que estavam na terra de Israel, depois do censo que Davi, seu pai, fizera deles; e vieram a achar-se cento e cinquenta e três mil e seiscentos. De modo que fez setenta mil deles carregadores e oitenta mil talhadores no monte, e três mil e seiscentos supervisores para manter o povo no serviço." — 2Cr 2:17, 18.

Registros Posteriores. Outros registros foram feitos por reis posteriores de Israel e de Judá. Nos dias do Rei Amazias, os homens de Judá e de Benjamim, de 20 anos ou mais, totalizavam 300.000. (2Cr 25:5) No registro das forças armadas feito pelo Rei Uzias, havia 307.500 homens, tendo sobre eles 2.600 dos cabeças das casas paternas. — 2Cr 26:11-13.

Os exilados que voltaram sob Zorobabel, em 537 AEC, também foram contados. Incluíam 42.360 israelitas, também 7.337 escravos e 200 cantores (o texto massorético de Neemias diz 245 cantores). — Esd 2:64, 65; Ne 7:66, 67; veja NEEMIAS, LIVRO DE.

Na Época do Nascimento de Jesus. As Escrituras Gregas Cristãs mencionam dois registros ocorridos depois que a Judeia ficou sujeita a Roma. Tais registros não visavam apenas apurar dados sobre a população, mas, antes, foram feitos principalmente para fins de tributação e conscrição dos homens para o serviço militar. A respeito do primeiro deles, lemos: "Ora, naqueles dias [cerca de 2 AEC] saiu um decreto da parte de César Augusto, para que toda a terra habitada se registrasse (este primeiro registro ocorreu quando Quirino era governador da Síria;) e todos viajaram para se registrarem, cada um na sua própria cidade." (Lu 2:1-3) Tal edito do imperador resultou ser providencial, pois obrigou José e Maria a viajarem da cidade de Nazaré para Belém, apesar de Maria se achar então em adiantado estado de gravidez; assim, Jesus nasceu na cidade de Davi, em cumprimento da profecia. — Lu 2:4-7; Miq 5:2.

Dois registros sob Quirino. Os críticos da Bíblia têm dito que o único censo feito enquanto Públio Sulpício Quirino era governador da Síria se deu por volta de 6 EC, evento este que incitou uma rebelião da parte de Judas, o Galileu, e dos zelotes. (At 5:37) Este foi na realidade o segundo registro feito sob Quirino, pois inscrições descobertas em Antioquia e nas proximidades revelaram que, alguns anos antes, Quirino servira como legado do imperador na Síria. (The Bearing of Recent Discovery on the Trustworthiness of the New Testament [Como as Recentes Descobertas Influem na Fidedignidade do Novo Testamento], de W. Ramsay, 1979, pp. 285, 291) Sobre isso, o Dictionnaire du Nouveau Testament (Dicionário do Novo Testamento) da Bíblia francesa de Crampon (ed. de 1939, p. 360) diz: "As pesquisas eruditas de Zumpt (Commentat. epigraph., II, 86-104; De Syria romana provincia, 97-98) e de Mommsen (Res gestæ divi Augusti) estabelecem, além de dúvida, que Quirino foi por duas vezes governador da Síria." Muitos peritos situam o período do primeiro governo de Quirino em algum tempo entre os anos 4 e 1 AEC, provavelmente de 3 a 2 AEC. Seu método de cálculo para chegar a tais datas, porém, não é abalizado, e o real período de seu governo permanece indefinido. (Veja QUIRINO.) Seu segundo governo, porém, incluiu o ano 6 EC, conforme pormenores relatados por Josefo. — Jewish Antiquities (Antiguidades Judaicas), XVIII, 26 (ii, 1).

Assim, o historiador e escritor bíblico Lucas estava certo quando disse a respeito do registro feito na época do nascimento de Jesus: "Este primeiro registro ocorreu quando Quirino era governador da Síria", distinguindo-o do segundo, que ocorreu mais tarde sob o mesmo Quirino, registro este a que Gamaliel se referiu, conforme relatado por Lucas em Atos 5:37.

REI. Soberano que tem autoridade para governar outros. Jeová é o Rei supremo, possuindo ilimitado poder e autoridade. Os reis de Judá eram reis subordinados, que representavam a Sua soberania na terra. Como eles, Jesus Cristo é um Rei subordinado, porém dotado de poder muito maior do que aqueles reis terrestres, porque Jeová o colocou em posição para governar o Universo. (Fil 2:9-11) Portanto, Jesus Cristo foi constituído "Rei dos reis e Senhor dos senhores". — Re 19:16; veja JESUS CRISTO; REINO.

Primitivos Reis. Entre os governantes terrestres, o rei é um soberano do sexo masculino, investido de autoridade suprema sobre uma cidade, uma tribo, uma nação ou um império, e ele geralmente governa de forma vitalícia. Ninrode, descendente de Cã, foi o primeiro rei humano registrado na Bíblia. Ele governou sobre um reino que abrangia várias cidades da Mesopotâmia. Foi um rebelde contra a soberania de Jeová. — Gên 10:6, 8-10.

Nos dias de Abraão, Canaã e os países à sua volta já possuíam reis muito antes de os israelitas os terem. (Gên 14:1-9) Desde os primórdios históricos, também encontramos reis entre os filisteus, os edomitas, os moabitas, os midianitas, os amonitas, os sírios, os hititas, os egípcios, os assírios, os babilônios, os persas, os gregos e os romanos. Muitos destes reis governavam domínios restritos, tais como uma cidade-estado. Adoni-Bezeque, por exemplo, jactava-se de ter conquistado 70 de tais reis. — Jz 1:7.

O primeiro rei humano registrado na Bíblia como justo foi Melquisedeque, rei-sacerdote de Salém. (Gên 14:18) Além de Jesus Cristo, que é tanto Rei como Sumo Sacerdote, Melquisedeque é o único governante com os dois cargos, aprovado por Deus. O apóstolo Paulo indica que Deus usou Melquisedeque como representação típica de Cristo. (He 7:1-3; 8:1, 6) Nenhum outro servo fiel de Deus, nem mesmo Noé, procurou ser rei, e Deus não nomeou a nenhum deles até que Saul foi ungido, sob a orientação de Deus.

Reis Israelitas. Inicialmente, Jeová governou Israel como Rei invisível por vários meios, primeiro por meio de Moisés, e mais tarde por meio de juízes humanos, desde Otniel até Sansão. (Jz 8:23; 1Sa 12:12) Por fim, os israelitas clamaram por um rei, a fim de serem semelhantes às nações em sua volta. (1Sa 8:5-8, 19) Sob a provisão legal incorporada no pacto da Lei, que previa um rei humano divinamente nomeado, Jeová nomeou a Saul, da tribo de Benjamim, mediante o profeta Samuel. (De 17:14-20; 1Sa 9:15, 16; 10:21, 24) Devido à desobediência e à presunção, Saul perdeu o favor de Jeová e a oportunidade de fornecer uma dinastia de reis. (1Sa 13:1-14; 15:22-28) Voltando-se então para a tribo de Judá, Jeová escolheu a Davi, filho de Jessé, para ser o próximo rei de Israel. (1Sa 16:13; 17:12) Por apoiar fielmente a adoração e as leis de Jeová, Davi foi privilegiado de estabelecer uma dinastia de reis. (2Sa 7:15, 16) Os israelitas alcançaram um auge de prosperidade sob o reinado de Salomão, filho de Davi. — 1Rs 4:25; 2Cr 1:15.

Durante o reinado de Roboão, filho de Salomão, a nação se dividiu em dois reinos. O primeiro rei do reino setentrional de dez tribos, geralmente mencionado como Israel, foi Jeroboão, filho de Nebate, da tribo de Efraim. (1Rs 11:26; 12:20) Desobedientemente, ele dirigiu a adoração de seu povo para bezerros de ouro. Devido a este pecado, ele incorreu no desfavor de Jeová. (1Rs 14:10, 16) Um total de 20 reis governaram no reino setentrional, entre 997 e 740 AEC, começando com Jeroboão e terminando com Oseias, filho de Elá. No reino meridional, Judá, 19 reis reinaram entre 997 e 607 AEC, começando com Roboão e terminando com Zedequias. (Atalia, usurpadora do trono, e que não era rei, não é contada.) — Veja CRONOLOGIA; ENTERRO, LUGARES DE SEPULTAMENTO.

Representantes divinamente nomeados. Jeová nomeava os reis do seu povo, e eles deviam atuar como Seus agentes régios, sentando-se, não em seus próprios tronos, mas no "trono do reinado de Jeová", isto é, como representantes de Seu governo teocrático. (1Cr 28:5; 29:23) Contrário ao costume de alguns povos orientais daqueles dias, a nação de Israel não deificava seus reis. Todos os reis de Judá eram considerados ungidos de Jeová, embora o registro não declare de maneira específica que cada um dos reis foi literalmente ungido com óleo ao ascender ao trono. Registra-se que se usou óleo literal de unção quando se estabeleceu uma nova dinastia, quando o trono foi disputado durante a velhice de Davi, bem como nos dias de Jeoás, e quando um filho mais velho foi passado por alto em favor de um filho mais moço, na época em que Jeoacaz foi entronizado. (1Sa 10:1; 16:13; 1Rs 1:39; 2Rs 11:12; 23:30, 31, 34, 36) No entanto, parece provável que tal unção era uma prática costumeira.

O rei de Judá era o principal administrador dos assuntos daquela nação, como um pastor do povo. (Sal 78:70-72) Ele geralmente tomava a dianteira nas batalhas. (1Sa 8:20; 2Sa 21:17; 1Rs 22:29-33) Também atuava como o tribunal de maior instância do judiciário, exceto que o sumo sacerdote consultava a Jeová para obter decisões sobre algumas questões de Estado e sobre certos assuntos em que a decisão era muito difícil, ou a evidência fornecida por testemunhas era insuficiente. — 1Rs 3:16-28.

Instrumentos limitadores do poder real. Os instrumentos limitadores impostos ao rei no exercício de sua autoridade eram o seu próprio temor de Deus, a lei de Deus, à qual tinha a obrigação de obedecer, e a influência persuasiva dos profetas e dos sacerdotes, bem como o conselho assessório dos anciãos. Exigia-se que escrevesse para si mesmo uma cópia da Lei e a lesse todos os dias de sua vida. (De 17:18, 19) Ele era, como servo especial e representante de Jeová, responsável perante Jeová. Infelizmente, houve muitos reis de Judá que extrapolaram tais limitações e governaram de forma despótica e iníqua. — 1Sa 22:12, 13, 17-19; 1Rs 12:12-16; 2Cr 33:9.

Líder religioso. Embora a lei impedisse que o rei fosse sacerdote, ele devia supostamente ser o principal apoiador não sacerdotal da adoração de Jeová. Às vezes, o rei abençoava a nação em nome de Jeová e representava o povo em oração. (2Sa 6:18; 1Rs 8:14, 22, 54, 55) Além de ser responsável por salvaguardar a vida religiosa do povo das intrusões idólatras, ele dispunha da autoridade para destituir o sumo sacerdote infiel, como fez o Rei Salomão quando Abiatar, o sumo sacerdote, apoiou a tentativa sediciosa de Adonias de apoderar-se do trono. — 1Rs 1:7; 2:27.

Esposas e propriedades. O casamento e os costumes familiares dos reis de Judá incluíam a prática de ter muitas esposas e concubinas, embora a Lei estipulasse que o rei não devia multiplicar esposas para si. (De 17:17) As concubinas eram consideradas propriedade da coroa, e eram repassadas para o sucessor ao trono, junto com os direitos e as propriedades do rei. Casar-se com uma concubina do rei falecido, ou tomá-la, equivalia a reivindicar publicamente o trono. Assim sendo, ter tido Absalão relações sexuais com as concubinas de seu pai, o Rei Davi, e ter Adonias solicitado como esposa a Abisague, enfermeira e companheira de Davi em sua velhice, equivaliam a uma reivindicação do trono. (2Sa 16:21, 22; 1Rs 2:15-17, 22) Tais atos representavam alta traição.

Além dos bens pessoais do rei, dos despojos de guerra e dos presentes (1Cr 18:10), criaram-se outras fontes de renda. Estas incluíam impostos especiais sobre os produtos da terra para a mesa real, tributos dos reinos subjugados, pedágios cobrados de mercadores viajantes que atravessavam o país, e empreendimentos comerciais, tais como as frotas de comércio de Salomão. — 1Rs 4:7, 27, 28; 9:26-28; 10:14, 15.

A Instabilidade do Reino Setentrional. No reino setentrional de Israel observava-se o princípio da sucessão hereditária, exceto quando interferido por assassinato ou revolta. A prática da religião falsa manteve o reino setentrional em constante estado de inquietação, o que contribuiu para frequentes assassínios de seus reis e para usurpações do trono. Apenas duas dinastias duraram mais de duas gerações, a de Onri e a de Jeú. Não estando sob o pacto davídico do reino, nenhum dos reis do reino setentrional se sentava no "trono do reinado de Jeová", como o ungido de Jeová. — 1Cr 28:5.

Reis Gentios e Reis Subordinados. Os reis babilônios eram oficialmente consagrados como monarcas sobre todo o Império Babilônico por agarrarem a mão da imagem de ouro de Marduque. Ciro, o Grande, fez isso para assumir o controle do Império Babilônico sem ter de conquistar todo o império por ação militar.

Outros reis subiram ao trono por serem nomeados por um rei superior, tal como aquele que tivesse conquistado o território envolvido. Era costume frequente os reis governarem os domínios conquistados através de reis nativos tributários de categoria inferior. Por meio deste processo, Herodes, o Grande, tornou-se rei tributário de Roma sobre a Judeia (Mt 2:1), e Aretas, o rei dos nabateus, foi confirmado por Roma em seu reino tributário. — 2Co 11:32.

Os reis não israelitas eram menos acessíveis a seus súditos do que aqueles que governavam o povo de Deus. Os reis israelitas evidentemente se misturavam de forma bem livre com o povo. Os reis gentios, com frequência, distanciavam-se muito. Penetrar na corte interna do rei persa, sem permissão expressa, automaticamente tornava a pessoa passível de morte, a menos que o rei lhe concedesse aprovação específica por estender-lhe o cetro, como se deu no caso de Ester. (Est 4:11, 16) Todavia, o imperador romano estava disponível para audiência, se um cidadão romano apelasse duma decisão feita por um juiz de menor alçada, mas somente depois de o processo tramitar por muitos oficiais de menor instância. — At 25:11, 12.

REÍ [Companheiro; Amigo]. Um dos poderosos de Davi que se recusaram a aderir à conspiração de Adonias. — 1Rs 1:8.

REINO. Basicamente, um governo régio; também o território e as pessoas governadas por um rei, ou, menos frequentemente, por uma monarca ou rainha. Não raro o reinado era hereditário. O governante soberano talvez tivesse outros títulos tais como Faraó ou César.

Os reinos da antiguidade, assim como os de hoje, tinham vários símbolos de realeza. Em geral, havia uma capital ou cidade onde o rei morava, uma corte real, um exército efetivo (embora talvez de tamanho bem reduzido em tempos de paz). A palavra "reino", conforme empregada na Bíblia, não revela em si mesma nada de específico quanto à estrutura governamental, quanto à extensão territorial, ou quanto à autoridade do monarca. Os reinos variavam em tamanho e influência, desde poderosas potências mundiais tais como o Egito, a Assíria, Babilônia, a Medo-Pérsia, a Grécia e Roma, até pequenas cidades-reinos, tais como as em Canaã por ocasião da conquista israelita. (Jos 12:7-24) A estrutura governamental também podia variar consideravelmente de reino para reino.

O primeiro reino da história humana, o de Ninrode, parece ter sido inicialmente uma cidade-reino, ampliando mais tarde seu domínio de modo a abranger outras cidades, permanecendo sua base em Babel. (Gên 10:9-11) Salém, cidade em que o rei-sacerdote Melquisedeque governou no primeiro reino com aprovação divina, pelo visto também era uma cidade-reino. (Gên 14:18-20; compare isso com He 7:1-17.) Reinos maiores abrangiam uma região inteira, tais como os reinos de Edom, Moabe e Amom. Os grandes impérios, que governavam sobre vastas áreas e tinham outros reinos tributários sujeitos a eles, em geral parecem ter surgido ou se desenvolvido de pequenas cidades-estados ou de grupos tribais que por fim se conjugaram sob um líder dominante. Tais coalizões eram às vezes de natureza temporária, não raro formadas para combater um inimigo comum. (Gên 14:1-5; Jos 9:1, 2; 10:5) Reinos vassalos gozavam com frequência dum considerável grau de autonomia, ou independência, embora estivessem sujeitos à vontade e às exigências da potência suserana. — 2Rs 17:3, 4; 2Cr 36:4, 10.

Sentidos Amplos. Biblicamente, o termo "reino" pode referir-se a aspectos específicos dum governo régio. Pode referir-se ao domínio ou à área geográfica sobre a qual se exerce a soberania. O domínio real abrangia assim, não só a capital, mas o inteiro domínio, abarcando quaisquer reinos subordinados ou tributários. — 1Rs 4:21; Est 3:6, 8.

"Reino" pode referir-se de forma geral a qualquer ou a todos os governos humanos, quer sejam realmente dirigidos por um rei, quer não. — Esd 1:2; Mt 4:8.

Pode significar realeza, o cargo ou a posição régia do rei (Lu 17:21), com sua dignidade, seu poder e sua autoridade acompanhantes. (1Cr 11:10; 14:2; Lu 19:12, 15; Re 11:15; 17:12, 13, 17) Os filhos do rei podem ser mencionados como a "descendência do reino". — 2Rs 11:1.

O Reino Israelita. O pacto da Lei, dado por meio de Moisés à nação de Israel, fazia provisão para o governo dum reino. (De 17:14, 15) A pessoa que dirigia o reino era investido de poder e de dignidade real, não para exaltação pessoal, mas para servir para a honra de Deus e para o bem de seus irmãos israelitas. (De 17:19, 20; compare isso com 1Sa 15:17.) Todavia, quando os israelitas solicitaram com o tempo um rei humano, o profeta Samuel advertiu-os das exigências que um governante assim imporia ao povo. (1Sa 8) Os reis de Israel parecem ter sido mais abordáveis e acessíveis aos súditos do que os monarcas da maioria dos antigos reinos orientais. — 2Sa 19:8; 1Rs 20:39; 1Cr 15:25-29.

Embora o reino de Israel iniciasse com um rei da linhagem de Benjamim, Judá tornou-se depois a tribo real, em harmonia com a profecia de Jacó no leito de morte. (1Sa 10:20-25; Gên 49:10) Estabeleceu-se uma dinastia real na linhagem de Davi. (2Sa 2:4; 5:3, 4; 7:12, 13) Quando o reino foi 'arrancado' de Roboão, filho de Salomão, dez tribos formaram um reino setentrional, ao passo que Jeová Deus reteve uma tribo, Benjamim, para permanecer com Judá, "a fim de que Davi, meu servo, continue a ter sempre uma lâmpada diante de mim em Jerusalém, a cidade que escolhi para mim, a fim de pôr ali o meu nome". (1Rs 11:31, 35, 36; 12:18-24) Embora o reino de Judá caísse diante dos babilônios em 607 AEC, o direito legal ao governo passou por fim ao legítimo herdeiro, o "filho de Davi", Jesus Cristo. (Mt 1:1-16; Lu 1:31, 32; compare isso com Ez 21:26, 27.) Seu Reino havia de ser infindável. — Is 9:6, 7; Lu 1:33.

Criou-se em Israel uma organização régia para administrar os interesses do reino. Esta consistia dum círculo interno de conselheiros e ministros de estado (1Rs 4:1-6; 1Cr 27:32-34), bem como de vários departamentos governamentais com seus respectivos superintendentes para administrar as terras da coroa, supervisionar a economia e suprir as necessidades da corte real. — 1Rs 4:7; 1Cr 27:25-31.

Ao passo que os reis de Israel, da linhagem davídica, podiam emitir ordens específicas, o genuíno poder legislativo repousava em Deus. (De 4:1, 2; Is 33:22) Em todas as coisas, o rei era responsável perante o verdadeiro Soberano e Senhor, Jeová. A transgressão e a obstinação por parte do rei resultavam em sanções divinas. (1Sa 13:13, 14; 15:20-24) Às vezes Jeová se comunicava com o próprio rei (1Rs 3:5; 11:11); outras vezes ele dava instruções e conselhos, ou repreensão, por meio de profetas designados. (2Sa 7:4, 5; 12:1-14) O rei podia também recorrer ao sábio conselho do corpo de anciãos. (1Rs 12:6, 7) No entanto, a execução das instruções ou da repreensão dependia, não dos profetas nem dos anciãos, mas de Jeová.

Quando o rei e o povo aderiam fielmente ao pacto da Lei, que lhes fora dado por Deus, a nação de Israel usufruía certo grau de liberdade individual, prosperidade material e harmonia nacional jamais alcançadas por outros reinos. (1Rs 4:20, 25) Nos anos em que Salomão obedeceu a Jeová, o reino israelita tornou-se muito famoso e respeitado, possuindo muitos reinos tributários e beneficiando-se dos recursos de muitas terras. — 1Rs 4:21, 30, 34.

O reinado de Jeová Deus, embora durante algum tempo expresso visivelmente por meio do reino israelita, é um reino de soberania universal. (1Cr 29:11, 12) Quer os povos e os reinos da humanidade reconheçam, quer não, seu reinado é absoluto e inalterável, e toda a terra pertence ao seu domínio legítimo. (Sal 103:19; 145:11-13; Is 14:26, 27) Por ser o Criador, Jeová exerce sua vontade soberana no céu e na terra, segundo seus próprios propósitos, e não tem de prestar contas a ninguém (Je 18:3-10; Da 4:25, 34, 35), contudo sempre age em harmonia com suas próprias normas justas. — Mal 3:6; He 6:17, 18; Tg 1:17.

REINO DE DEUS. A expressão e o exercício da soberania universal de Deus para com Suas criaturas, ou o meio ou instrumento utilizado por ele para este propósito. (Sal 103:19) Esta frase é usada especialmente para a expressão da soberania de Deus mediante um governo régio encabeçado por seu Filho, Cristo Jesus.

A palavra traduzida "reino" nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs é ba·si·lei·a, que significa "um reino, domínio, a região ou o país governado por um rei; poder, autoridade, domínio, reinado régios; dignidade real, o título e a honra de rei". (The Analytical Greek Lexicon [O Analítico Léxico Grego], 1908, p. 67) A frase "o reino de Deus" é empregada com frequência por Marcos e Lucas, e, no relato de Mateus, a frase paralela "o reino dos céus" aparece umas 30 vezes. — Compare Mr 10:23 e Lu 18:24 com Mt 19:23, 24; veja CÉU, I (Céus Espirituais); REINO.

O governo de Deus, em estrutura e função, é teocracia pura (do gr. the·ós, deus, e krá·tos, um governo), um governo de Deus. O termo "teocracia" é atribuído ao historiador judeu Josefo, do primeiro século EC, que evidentemente cunhou-o ao escrever seu Against Apion (Contra Apião, II, 164, 165 [17]). Concernente ao governo estabelecido sobre Israel no Sinai, Josefo escreveu: "Alguns povos confiaram o supremo poder político a monarquias, outros a oligarquias, ainda outros às massas. Nosso legislador, porém, não se deixou atrair por nenhuma de tais formas de governo, mas deu à sua constituição a forma do que — caso se permita uma expressão forçada — pode ser chamada de 'teocracia [gr.: the·o·kra·tí·an]', colocando toda soberania e autoridade nas mãos de Deus." Naturalmente, para ser teocracia pura, o governo não poderia ser instituído por nenhum legislador humano, tal como o homem Moisés, mas precisaria ser instituído e estabelecido por Deus. O registro bíblico indica que foi assim que se deu.

Origem do Termo. O termo "rei" (hebr.: mé·lekh) evidentemente entrou em uso no idioma humano após o Dilúvio global. O primeiro reino terrestre foi o de Ninrode, "poderoso caçador em oposição a Jeová". (Gên 10:8-12) Após isso, no período até o tempo de Abraão, desenvolveram-se cidades-estados e nações, e os reis humanos se multiplicaram. Com exceção do reino de Melquisedeque, rei-sacerdote de Salém (que tipificou profeticamente o Messias [Gên 14:17-20; He 7:1-17]), nenhum desses reinos terrestres representou o governo de Deus ou foi estabelecido por ele. Os homens também fizeram reis dos deuses falsos que adoravam, atribuindo-lhes a capacidade de conceder a humanos poder para reinar. A aplicação que Jeová faz a si mesmo do título "Rei [Mé·lekh]", conforme encontrado nos escritos pós-diluvianos das Escrituras Hebraicas, significou, portanto, que Deus usou o título que os homens haviam desenvolvido e empregado. O uso desse termo por Deus indicou que ele, e não presunçosos governantes humanos ou deuses feitos pelo homem, devia ser encarado e obedecido como "Rei". — Je 10:10-12.

Naturalmente, Jeová fora Governante Soberano muito antes de surgirem reinos humanos, de fato antes mesmo de os humanos existirem. Como verdadeiro Deus e seu Criador, ele era respeitado e obedecido por filhos angélicos que somavam milhões. (Jó 38:4-7; 2Cr 18:18; Sal 103:20-22; Da 7:10) Seja qual for o título, desde o início da criação ele foi reconhecido como Aquele cuja vontade era de direito suprema.

O Governo de Deus nos Primórdios da História Humana. As primeiras criaturas humanas, Adão e Eva, igualmente conheciam a Jeová como Deus, o Criador do céu e da terra. Reconheciam a Sua autoridade e Seu direito de expedir ordens, de exigir que pessoas executassem certos deveres ou se refreassem de certos atos, de designar terras para moradia e cultivo, bem como de delegar autoridade sobre outras de suas criaturas. (Gên 1:26-30; 2:15-17) Embora Adão tivesse a capacidade de cunhar palavras (Gên 2:19, 20), não existe evidência de que ele tivesse criado o título de "rei [mé·lekh]", a fim de aplicá-lo ao seu Deus e Criador, embora reconhecesse a autoridade suprema de Jeová.

Conforme revelado nos capítulos iniciais de Gênesis, o exercício da soberania de Deus para com o homem no Éden era benévolo e não indevidamente restritivo. O relacionamento existente entre Deus e o homem exigia obediência, tal como a obediência que um filho presta ao seu pai. (Veja Lu 3:38.) O homem não tinha um extensivo código de leis para acatar (veja 1Ti 1:8-11); os requisitos de Deus eram simples e objetivos. Tampouco existe algo que indique que se fez com que Adão se sentisse inibido por uma supervisão constante e crítica de cada ação sua; antes, a comunicação de Deus com o homem perfeito parece ter sido periódica, segundo a necessidade. — Gên caps. 1-3.

Proposta duma nova expressão do governo de Deus. A franca violação da ordem de Deus por parte do primeiro casal humano, instigada por um dos filhos espirituais de Deus, constituiu realmente rebelião contra a autoridade divina. (Gên 3:17-19; veja ÁRVORES [Uso Figurativo].) A posição assumida pelo Adversário espiritual de Deus (hebr.: sa·tán) constituía um desafio que exigia um teste, a questão em litígio sendo a legitimidade da soberania universal de Jeová. (Veja JEOVÁ [A questão suprema é de moral].) A Terra, onde a questão foi suscitada, é apropriadamente o local onde será resolvida. — Re 12:7-12.

Na ocasião do pronunciamento do julgamento sobre os primeiros rebeldes, Jeová Deus enunciou uma profecia, expressa em fraseologia simbólica, delineando seu propósito de utilizar um instrumento, um "descendente [lit.: semente]", para realizar o derradeiro esmagamento das forças rebeldes. (Gên 3:15) Assim, o governo de Jeová, a expressão de sua soberania, assumiria um novo aspecto ou expressão em resposta à insurreição que surgira. A revelação progressiva dos "segredos sagrados do reino" (Mt 13:11) mostrava que este novo aspecto envolvia a formação de um governo subsidiário, um corpo de governantes encabeçado por um vice-governante. A promessa da 'semente' tem seu cumprimento no reino de Cristo Jesus, em união com seus associados escolhidos. (Re 17:14; veja JESUS CRISTO [Seu Lugar Vital no Propósito de Deus].) Do tempo da promessa edênica em diante, o desenvolvimento progressivo do propósito de Deus de produzir esta 'semente' do Reino se torna o tema básico da Bíblia e a chave para o entendimento das ações de Jeová para com seus servos e para com a humanidade em geral.

Delegar Deus deste modo ampla autoridade e poder a criaturas (Mt 28:18; Re 2:26, 27; 3:21) é digno de nota visto que a questão da integridade de todas as criaturas de Deus, isto é, sua devoção de todo o coração a ele e lealdade à chefia dele, era parte vital da questão suscitada pelo Adversário de Deus. (Veja INTEGRIDADE [Envolvida na questão suprema].) Poder Deus, sem receio, confiar a criaturas suas tal autoridade e poder notáveis seria, em si mesmo, um esplêndido testemunho da força moral do seu governo, contribuindo assim para a vindicação da soberania de Jeová, e expondo a falsidade das alegações de seu adversário.

Manifestada a necessidade dum governo divino. As condições que se desenvolveram a partir do início da rebelião humana até o tempo do Dilúvio ilustraram claramente a necessidade que a humanidade tinha duma chefia divina. A sociedade humana logo teve de contender com a desunião, a agressão física e o assassinato. (Gên 4:2-9, 23, 24) Não se revela até que ponto o pecador Adão, durante seus 930 anos de vida, exerceu autoridade patriarcal sobre seus descendentes, que se multiplicavam. Mas por volta da sétima geração, chocante impiedade evidentemente existia (Ju 14, 15), e por ocasião dos dias de Noé (que nasceu uns 120 anos após a morte de Adão) as condições se haviam deteriorado ao ponto de 'a terra vir a estar cheia de violência'. (Gên 6:1-13) O que contribuiu para essa condição foi a interferência não autorizada de criaturas espirituais na sociedade humana, contrário à vontade e ao propósito de Deus. — Gên 6:1-4; Ju 6; 2Pe 2:4, 5; veja NEFILINS.

Embora a Terra se tornasse um foco de rebelião, Jeová não renunciou ao Seu domínio sobre ela. O Dilúvio global evidenciou que Deus ainda tinha o poder e a capacidade de fazer vigorar Sua vontade na Terra, assim como em qualquer outra parte do universo. Durante o período antediluviano, Ele igualmente demonstrou sua disposição de guiar e governar as ações daqueles que o buscavam, tais como Abel, Enoque e Noé. O caso de Noé, em especial, ilustra o exercício do governo de Deus para com um súdito terrestre disposto, dando-lhe ordens e orientações, protegendo-o e abençoando-o, bem como a família dele, além de evidenciar o controle de Deus sobre as demais criações terrestres: os animais e as aves. (Gên 6:9–7:16) Jeová deixou igualmente claro que não permitiria que a sociedade humana alienada corrompesse infindavelmente a terra; que ele não se havia restringido de executar seu julgamento justo contra os malfeitores quando e como Ele achasse apropriado. Além disso, demonstrou sua habilidade soberana de controlar os diversos elementos da Terra, inclusive sua atmosfera. — Gên 6:3, 5-7; 7:17–8:22.

A primitiva sociedade pós-diluviana e seus problemas. Após o Dilúvio, o arranjo patriarcal evidentemente constituía a estrutura básica da sociedade humana, proporcionando certa medida de estabilidade e ordem. A humanidade devia 'encher a Terra', o que exigia, não só a procriação, mas a contínua expansão da área de habitação humana em todo o globo. (Gên 9:1, 7) Tais fatores, em si, teriam razoavelmente um efeito limitador sobre quaisquer problemas sociais, mantendo-os, em geral, dentro do círculo familiar, e tornando improvável a fricção que com frequência ocorre quando há grande densidade demográfica ou condições apinhadas. O projeto não autorizado de Babel, contudo, exigia um procedimento inverso, uma concentração de pessoas, evitando-se que fossem 'espalhadas por toda a superfície da terra'. (Gên 11:1-4; veja IDIOMA, LÍNGUA.) Daí, também, Ninrode desviou-se do governo patriarcal e estabeleceu o primeiro "reino" (hebr.: mam·la·khắh). Sendo cusita da linhagem familiar de Cã, ele invadiu território semita, a terra de Assur (Assíria), e construiu ali cidades como parte do seu domínio. — Gên 10:8-12.

A confusão da linguagem humana, que Deus causou, desfez a concentração de pessoas nas planícies de Sinear, mas o padrão de governo iniciado por Ninrode foi geralmente seguido nas terras para onde migraram as várias famílias da humanidade. Nos dias de Abraão (2018-1843 AEC), havia reinos ativos desde a Mesopotâmia asiática até o Egito, onde o rei se intitulava "Faraó", em vez de Mé·lekh. Mas tais realezas não produziram segurança. Logo os reis formavam alianças militares, empreendendo extensivas campanhas de agressão, saque e rapto. (Gên 14:1-12) Em algumas cidades, os estranhos ficavam sujeitos a ser atacados por homossexuais. — Gên 19:4-9.

Assim, ao passo que os homens sem dúvida se juntavam em comunidades concentradas em busca de segurança (veja Gên 4:14-17), logo acharam necessário murar suas cidades, e, por fim, fortificá-las contra ataques armados. Os mais antigos registros seculares de que se tem conhecimento, muitos deles da região mesopotâmica, onde originalmente operara o reino de Ninrode, estão repletos de narrativas de conflitos, ganância, intriga e derramamento de sangue entre humanos. Os mais antigos registros não bíblicos de leis encontrados, tais como os de Lipit-Ishtar, Eshnunna e Hamurábi, indicam que a vida humana se tornara bem complexa, o atrito social produzindo problemas de roubo, fraude, dificuldades comerciais, disputas de propriedade e pagamento de aluguel, questões concernentes a empréstimos e juros, infidelidade marital, honorários e fracassos médicos, casos de lesão corporal, e muitos outros assuntos. Embora Hamurábi se intitulasse "o rei eficiente" e "o rei perfeito", seu governo e legislação, igual ao de outros antigos reinos políticos, foi incapaz de solucionar os problemas da humanidade pecaminosa. (Ancient Near Eastern Texts [Textos Antigos do Oriente Próximo], editado por J. B. Pritchard, 1974, pp. 159-180; veja Pr 28:5.) Em todos esses reinos destacava-se a religião, mas não a adoração do verdadeiro Deus. Embora o sacerdócio colaborasse de perto com a classe governante e desfrutasse do favor real, isso não resultou na melhora da moral do povo. As inscrições cuneiformes dos antigos escritos religiosos são destituídos de enaltecimento espiritual ou orientação moral; revelam os deuses adorados como briguentos, violentos, lascivos, não governados por normas ou objetivos justos. Os homens necessitavam do reino de Jeová Deus para poderem usufruir a vida em paz e felicidade.

Para com Abraão e Seus Descendentes. É verdade que aqueles que se voltavam para Jeová Deus como seu Cabeça não deixavam de ter seus problemas e atritos pessoais. Todavia, eram ajudados a resolvê-los ou a suportá-los em harmonia com os padrões justos de Deus, e sem ficar degradados. Foi-lhes concedido proteção e força divinas. (Gên 13:5-11; 14:18-24; 19:15-24; 21:9-13, 22-33) Assim, depois de salientar que as "decisões judiciais [de Jeová] estão em toda a terra", o salmista diz a respeito de Abraão, Isaque e Jacó: "Vieram a ser poucos em número, sim, muito poucos, e residentes forasteiros [em Canaã]. E andavam de nação em nação, de um reino a outro povo. [Jeová] não permitiu que algum homem os defraudasse, mas por causa deles repreendeu reis, dizendo: 'Não toqueis nos meus ungidos e não façais nada de mal aos meus profetas.' " (Sal 105:7-15; compare isso com Gên 12:10-20; 20:1-18; 31:22-24, 36-55.) Isto também constituía prova de que a soberania de Deus sobre a terra ainda vigorava, executável por ele em harmonia com o desenrolar de seu propósito.

Os fiéis patriarcas não se vincularam a nenhuma das cidades-estados ou reinos de Canaã, ou de outras terras. Em vez de buscarem segurança em alguma cidade sob o governo político dum rei humano, eles moravam em tendas como estrangeiros, "estranhos e residentes temporários no país", em fé 'aguardando a cidade que tem verdadeiros alicerces, cujo construtor e fazedor é Deus'. Aceitavam a Deus como seu Governante, aguardavam seu futuro arranjo ou instrumento celestial para governar a terra, solidamente alicerçado em Sua autoridade e vontade soberanas, embora a realização desta esperança estivesse então bem "longe". (He 11:8-10, 13-16) Assim, Jesus, já ungido por Deus para ser rei, podia dizer mais tarde: "Abraão . . . alegrou-se grandemente na perspectiva de ver o meu dia, e ele o viu e se alegrou." — Jo 8:56.

Jeová deu mais um passo no desenvolvimento de sua promessa a respeito da 'semente' do Reino (Gên 3:15), por firmar um pacto com Abraão. (Gên 12:1-3; 22:15-18) Relacionado com isso, ele predisse que 'reinos procederiam' de Abraão (Abrão) e sua esposa. (Gên 17:1-6, 15, 16) Embora os descendentes de Esaú, neto de Abraão, formassem principados de xeques e reinos, foi ao outro neto de Abraão, Jacó, que a promessa profética de Deus sobre descendentes régios foi repetida. — Gên 35:11, 12; 36:9, 15-43.

A formação da nação israelita. Séculos mais tarde, no tempo devido (Gên 15:13-16), Jeová Deus agiu em favor dos descendentes de Jacó, que então somavam milhões (veja ÊXODO [O Número Envolvido no Êxodo]), protegendo-os durante uma campanha de genocídio promovida pelo governo egípcio (Êx 1:15-22), e, por fim, libertando-os da dura escravidão ao regime do Egito. (Êx 2:23-25) A ordem de Deus a Faraó, transmitida por meio de seus representantes Moisés e Arão, foi desprezada pelo governante egípcio como se emanasse duma fonte sem nenhuma autoridade sobre os assuntos egípcios. A repetida recusa de Faraó, de reconhecer a soberania de Jeová, resultou em demonstrações do poder divino em forma de pragas. (Êx 7 a 12) Dessa forma, Deus provou que seu domínio sobre os elementos e as criaturas da Terra era superior ao de qualquer rei em toda a Terra. (Êx 9:13-16) Ele culminou esta demonstração de poder soberano destruindo as forças de Faraó de forma tal que nenhum dos jactanciosos reis guerreiros das nações jamais poderia repetir. (Êx 14:26-31) Foi com reais motivos que Moisés e os israelitas cantaram: "Jeová reinará por tempo indefinido, para todo o sempre." — Êx 15:1-19.

Depois disso, Jeová forneceu prova adicional do seu domínio sobre a Terra, as vitais reservas de água e as aves existentes, e mostrou sua capacidade de guardar e sustentar sua nação, mesmo em ambientes áridos e hostis. (Êx 15:22–17:15) Tendo feito tudo isto, ele disse ao povo libertado que, por obediência à Sua autoridade e ao Seu pacto, eles poderiam tornar-se sua propriedade especial dentre todos os demais povos, "pois minha é toda a terra". Poderiam tornar-se "um reino de sacerdotes e uma nação santa". (Êx 19:3-6) Quando declararam publicamente ser súditos dispostos de Sua soberania, Jeová atuou qual Legislador Régio dando-lhes decretos reais num grande conjunto de leis, junto com evidência dinâmica e atemorizante de Seu poder e glória. (Êx 19:7–24:18) Um tabernáculo, ou tenda de reunião, e em especial a Arca do Pacto, deviam simbolizar a presença do invisível Chefe de Estado celestial. (Êx 25:8, 21, 22; 33:7-11; compare isso com Re 21:3.) Embora Moisés e outros homens designados julgassem a maioria dos casos, guiados pela Lei de Deus, às vezes Jeová intervinha pessoalmente para expressar julgamentos e aplicar sanções contra os violadores da lei. (Êx 18:13-16, 24-26; 32:25-35) O sacerdócio ordenado atuava para manter boas relações entre a nação e seu Governante celestial, ajudando o povo em seus esforços de enquadrar-se nos elevados padrões do pacto da Lei. (Veja SACERDOTE.) Assim, o governo sobre Israel era uma genuína teocracia. — De 33:2, 5.

Como Deus e Criador, tendo o direito do "domínio eminente" sobre toda a terra, sendo também "o Juiz de toda a terra" (Gên 18:25), Jeová designara a terra de Canaã à semente de Abraão. (Gên 12:5-7; 15:17-21) Como o Executivo Principal, ordenou então que os israelitas executassem a desapropriação compulsória do território ocupado pelos condenados cananeus, bem como a sentença de morte que Ele pronunciara contra estes. — De 9:1-5; veja CANAÃ, CANANEU N.º 2 (Conquista de Canaã por Israel).

O período dos juízes. Durante três séculos e meio após a conquista dos muitos reinos de Canaã por Israel, Jeová Deus era o único rei desta nação. Durante períodos variáveis, juízes escolhidos por Deus conduziram a nação, ou partes dela, na batalha e na paz. A derrota de Midiã pelo juiz Gideão resultou numa solicitação popular para que ele se tornasse o governante daquela nação, mas ele se recusou, reconhecendo a Jeová como o verdadeiro governante. (Jz 8:22, 23) Abimeleque, o ambicioso filho dele, estabeleceu brevemente a realeza sobre pequeno segmento da nação, mas isto acabou em desastre para ele. — Jz 9:1, 6, 22, 53-56.

Faz-se o seguinte comentário sobre esse período geral dos juízes: "Naqueles dias não havia rei em Israel. No que se referia a cada um, fazia o que era direito aos seus próprios olhos." (Jz 17:6; 21:25) Isto não quer dizer que não houvesse restrição judicial alguma. Toda cidade tinha juízes, anciãos, para tratar de questões e problemas legais, e para executar a justiça. (De 16:18-20; veja TRIBUNAL DE JUSTIÇA.) O sacerdócio levítico funcionava como força orientadora superior, instruindo o povo na lei de Deus, sendo que o sumo sacerdote possuía o Urim e o Tumim para por meio deles consultar a Deus no caso de assuntos difíceis. (Veja SACERDOTE; SUMO SACERDOTE; URIM E TUMIM.) Portanto, a pessoa que se aproveitava de tais provisões, que adquiria conhecimento da lei de Deus e a aplicava, possuía um sólido guia para sua consciência. Fazer ela "o que era direito aos seus próprios olhos", nesse caso não resultava em mal. Jeová permitiu que o povo manifestasse uma atitude e um proceder quer disposto, quer de má vontade. Não havia nenhum monarca humano sobre a nação, supervisionando o trabalho dos juízes das cidades ou ordenando os cidadãos a empenhar-se em projetos específicos, ou organizando-os para defender a nação. (Veja Jz 5:1-18.) Portanto, as más condições que se desenvolveram eram atribuíveis à relutância por parte da maioria em acatar a palavra e a lei de seu Rei celestial, e em aproveitar-se de Suas provisões. — Jz 2:11-23.

Solicitado um Rei Humano. Aproximadamente 400 anos a contar do tempo do Êxodo, e mais de 800 anos após o pacto de Deus com Abraão, os israelitas solicitaram um rei humano para os liderar, assim como as outras nações tinham monarcas humanos. A solicitação deles constituía uma rejeição do próprio reinado de Jeová sobre eles. (1Sa 8:4-8) É verdade que o povo esperava corretamente que Deus estabelecesse um reino, em conformidade com Sua promessa a Abraão e a Jacó, já citada. Tinham base adicional para tal esperança na profecia de Jacó, no leito de morte, concernente a Judá (Gên 49:8-10), nas palavras de Jeová a Israel após o Êxodo (Êx 19:3-6), nos termos do pacto da Lei (De 17:14, 15), e até mesmo em parte da mensagem que Deus induziu o profeta Balaão a proferir (Núm 24:2-7, 17). Ana, a fiel mãe de Samuel, expressou em oração esta esperança. (1Sa 2:7-10) Todavia, Jeová não revelara plenamente seu "segredo sagrado" no tocante ao Reino, não havia indicado quando chegaria Seu tempo devido para o estabelecimento do Reino, ou qual seria a estrutura e a composição desse governo — se seria terrestre ou celestial. Por conseguinte, foi presunçoso da parte do povo, naquela ocasião, exigir um rei humano.

A ameaça de agressão por parte dos filisteus e dos amonitas evidentemente contribuiu para os israelitas desejarem ter um comandante-chefe régio, visível. Mostraram assim falta de fé na capacidade de Deus protegê-los, guiá-los e fazer-lhes provisões, como nação ou individualmente. (1Sa 8:4-8) A motivação do povo era errada; todavia, Jeová Deus atendeu-lhes o pedido, não primariamente por causa deles, mas para realizar o seu próprio bom propósito na revelação progressiva do "segredo sagrado" de seu futuro Reino, por meio da 'semente'. O reinado humano, porém, traria seus próprios problemas e seus custos para Israel, e Jeová expôs os fatos ao povo. — 1Sa 8:9-22.

Os reis nomeados depois por Jeová deviam atuar como instrumentos terrestres de Deus, não diminuindo, no mínimo que fosse, a soberania do próprio Jeová sobre a nação. Na verdade, o trono era de Jeová, e eles se sentavam nele como reis representantes. (1Cr 29:23) Jeová orientou a unção do primeiro rei, Saul (1Sa 9:15-17), e ao mesmo tempo expôs a falta de fé que a nação havia demonstrado. — 1Sa 10:17-25.

Para que o reinado produzisse benefícios, tanto o rei como a nação precisavam então respeitar a autoridade de Deus. Caso recorressem irrealisticamente a outras fontes de orientação e proteção, eles e seu rei seriam exterminados. (De 28:36; 1Sa 12:13-15, 20-25) O rei devia evitar confiar na força militar, evitar multiplicar esposas para si, e evitar ser dominado pela cobiça de riquezas. Seu reinado devia operar inteiramente dentro da estrutura do pacto da Lei. Ele tinha ordens divinas de fazer para si, a próprio punho, uma cópia da Lei e lê-la diariamente, a fim de manter o devido temor da Autoridade Soberana, permanecer humilde e se apegar a um proceder justo. (De 17:16-20) Ao ponto em que ele fizesse isso, amando a Deus de todo o coração e amando ao próximo como a si mesmo, seu governo produziria bênçãos, sem verdadeira causa para queixa devido a opressão ou dificuldades. Mas, assim como no caso do povo, o mesmo se deu então com os reis: Jeová permitiu que os governantes manifestassem o que tinham no coração, a disposição ou a relutância em reconhecer a autoridade e a vontade do próprio Deus.

O Governo Exemplar de Davi. O desrespeito do benjamita Saul pela autoridade superior e pelos arranjos da "Excelência de Israel" resultou no desfavor divino e custou à sua linhagem familiar o trono. (1Sa 13:10-14; 15:17-29; 1Cr 10:13, 14) Com a regência do sucessor de Saul, Davi, de Judá, a profecia de Jacó no leito de morte teve um cumprimento adicional. (Gên 49:8-10) Embora Davi cometesse erros devido à fraqueza humana, seu governo foi exemplar devido à sua devoção de coração a Jeová Deus, e à sua humilde submissão à autoridade divina. (Sal 51:1-4; 1Sa 24:10-14; compare isso com 1Rs 11:4; 15:11, 14.) Por ocasião do recebimento das contribuições para a construção do templo, Davi orou a Deus perante o povo congregado, dizendo: "Tuas, ó Jeová, são a grandeza, e a potência, e a beleza, e a excelência, e a dignidade; pois teu é tudo nos céus e na terra. Teu é o reino, ó Jeová, que te ergues como cabeça sobre todos. As riquezas e a glória existem por tua causa e tu dominas sobre tudo; e na tua mão há poder e potência, e na tua mão há a capacidade para engrandecer e para dar força a todos. E agora, ó nosso Deus, te agradecemos e louvamos o teu belo nome.” (1Cr 29:10-13) Seu último conselho ao filho Salomão também ilustra o excelente conceito que Davi tinha sobre a relação entre o reinado terrestre e sua Fonte divina. — 1Rs 2:1-4.

Na ocasião de se trazer a Arca do Pacto, associada com a presença de Jeová, para a capital, Jerusalém, Davi entoou: “Alegrem-se os céus, e jubile a terra, e digam entre as nações: ‘O próprio Jeová se tornou rei!’ ” (1Cr 16:1, 7, 23-31) Isto ilustra que, embora o governo de Jeová date do início da criação, ele pode fazer expressões específicas de seu governo ou estabelecer certas agências para representá-Lo, que permitam que Ele seja mencionado como ‘tornando-se rei’ em determinada época ou ocasião.

O pacto para um reino. Jeová fez com Davi um pacto para um reino a ser estabelecido eternamente na sua linhagem familiar, dizendo: “Hei de suscitar o teu descendente depois de ti, . . . e deveras estabelecerei firmemente o seu reino. . . . E tua casa e teu reino hão de ficar firmes por tempo indefinido diante de ti; teu próprio trono ficará firmemente estabelecido por tempo indefinido.” (2Sa 7:12-16; 1Cr 17:11-14) Este pacto, que vigorava para com a dinastia davídica, fornecia evidência adicional do desenrolar da promessa edênica de Deus para o seu Reino por meio da predita ‘semente’ (Gên 3:15), e fornecia outro meio para a identificação daquela ‘semente’, quando ela viesse. (Veja Is 9:6, 7; 1 Pe 1:11.) Os reis nomeados por Deus eram ungidos para o seu cargo, assim, o termo “messias”, que significa “ungido”, aplicava-se a eles. (1Sa 16:1; Sal 132:13, 17) É evidente, então, que o reino terrestre que Jeová estabeleceu sobre Israel servia como tipo ou representação em pequena escala do vindouro Reino do Messias, Jesus Cristo, “filho de Davi”. — Mt 1:1.

Declínio e Queda dos Reinos Israelitas. Por deixarem de aderir aos caminhos justos de Jeová, as condições prevalecentes no fim de apenas três reinados e no começo do quarto produziram forte descontentamento que levou à revolta e a uma divisão da nação (997 AEC). O resultado foi um reino setentrional e um reino meridional. Entrementes, o pacto de Jeová com Davi continuava em vigor para com os reis do reino meridional de Judá. No decorrer dos séculos, foram raros os reis fiéis em Judá, e inexistiram por completo no reino setentrional de Israel. A história do reino setentrional foi de idolatria, intriga e assassínios, os reis muitas vezes se sucedendo um ao outro em intervalos bem pequenos. O povo sofria injustiça e opressão. Uns 250 anos depois do seu início, Jeová permitiu que o rei da Assíria esmagasse o reino setentrional (740 AEC), devido a seu proceder de rebelião contra Deus. — Os 4:1, 2; Am 2:6-8.

Embora o reino de Judá gozasse de maior estabilidade, graças à dinastia de Davi, por fim o reino meridional ultrapassou em corrupção moral o reino setentrional, apesar dos esforços de reis tementes a Deus, tais como Ezequias e Josias, de inverter o declínio para a idolatria e a rejeição da palavra e da autoridade de Jeová. (Is 1:1-4; Ez 23:1-4, 11) A injustiça social, a tirania, a ganância, a desonestidade, os subornos, a perversão sexual, os ataques criminosos e o derramamento de sangue, bem como a hipocrisia religiosa que transformava o templo de Deus num “covil de salteadores” — era contra tudo isso que clamavam os profetas de Jeová em suas mensagens de aviso dirigidas aos governantes e ao povo. (Is 1:15-17, 21-23; 3:14, 15; Je 5:1, 2, 7, 8, 26-28, 31; 6:6, 7; 7:8-11) Nem o apoio dos sacerdotes apóstatas, nem qualquer aliança política feita com outras nações, podiam evitar o vindouro colapso daquele reino infiel. (Je 6:13-15; 37:7-10) A capital, Jerusalém, foi destruída e Judá foi desolada pelos babilônios em 607 AEC. — 2Rs 25:1-26.

A posição régia de Jeová permanece imperturbável. A destruição dos reinos de Israel e de Judá de forma alguma refletiu na qualidade da regência do próprio Jeová Deus; de forma alguma indicava fraqueza de sua parte. No decorrer de toda a história da nação israelita, Jeová deixou claro que Seu interesse era no serviço e na obediência voluntários. (De 10:12-21; 30:6, 15-20; Is 1:18-20; Ez 18:25-32) Ele os instruiu, repreendeu, disciplinou, avisou e puniu. Mas não utilizou Seu poder para obrigar quer o rei, quer o povo, a seguir um proceder justo. As condições ruins que se desenvolveram, os sofrimentos que passaram, o desastre que lhes sobreveio, tudo fora causado por eles mesmos, por obstinadamente endurecerem o coração e insistirem em seguir um proceder independente, um proceder que era tolamente prejudicial aos seus melhores interesses. — La 1:8, 9; Ne 9:26-31, 34-37; Is 1:2-7; Je 8:5-9; Os 7:10, 11.

Jeová demonstrou seu poder soberano mantendo sob restrição as potências agressivas e rapinantes da Assíria e de Babilônia até o Seu próprio tempo devido, até mesmo manobrando-as de modo a atuarem em cumprimento de Suas profecias. (Ez 21:18-23; Is 10:5-7) Quando Jeová, por fim, removeu sua proteção daquela nação, isso foi uma expressão de Seu julgamento justo qual Governante Soberano. (Je 35:17) A desolação de Israel e de Judá não foi uma surpresa chocante para os servos obedientes de Deus, pois tinham sido avisados de antemão por Suas profecias. O rebaixamento dos governantes orgulhosos exaltou a própria “esplên-dida superioridade" de Jeová. (Is 2:1, 10-17) Mais do que tudo isso, porém, ele demonstrara Sua capacidade de proteger e preservar pessoas que se voltavam para ele como seu Rei, mesmo quando estes estavam cercados por condições de fome, doença e desenfreada matança, bem como quando eram perseguidos por aqueles que odiavam a justiça. — Je 34:17-21; 20:10, 11; 35:18, 19; 36:26; 37:18-21; 38:7-13; 39:11–40:5.

O último rei de Israel foi avisado da vindoura remoção de sua coroa, que representava o reinado ungido como representante régio de Jeová. Esse reinado davídico ungido não mais seria exercido 'até que viesse aquele que tem o direito legal, e a ele é que Jeová teria de dá-lo'. (Ez 21:25-27) Assim, o reino típico, então em ruínas, deixou de operar, e as atenções se dirigiram novamente para o futuro, para a vindoura 'semente', o Messias.

Nações políticas, tais como a Assíria e Babilônia, devastaram os reinos apóstatas de Israel e Judá. Embora Deus fale de si mesmo como 'suscitando' ou 'trazendo' a estes contra aqueles reinos condenados (De 28:49; Je 5:15; 25:8, 9; Ez 7:24; Am 6:14), isto evidentemente se deu de forma similar ao modo em que Deus 'endureceu' o coração do Faraó. (Veja PRESCIÊNCIA, PREDETERMINAÇÃO [Com relação a pessoas].) Isto é, Deus 'trouxe' tais forças atacantes por permitir que realizassem o desejo já existente em seu coração (Is 10:7; La 2:16; Miq 4:11), removendo sua 'mão' protetora dos objetos de sua ganância ambiciosa. (De 31:17, 18; compare Esd 8:31 com Esd 5:12; Ne 9:28-31; Je 34:2.) Por os israelitas apóstatas se recusarem obstinadamente a sujeitar-se à lei e à vontade de Jeová, foi-lhes assim proclamada 'liberdade para a espada, a pestilência, e a fome'. (Je 34:17) Mas as nações pagãs atacantes não se tornaram por isso aprovadas por Deus, tampouco tinham 'mãos limpas' perante ele ao destruírem cruelmente os reinos setentrional e meridional, a capital Jerusalém, e seu templo sagrado. Por esta razão, Jeová, o Juiz de toda a terra, podia corretamente denunciá-las por 'rapinarem sua herança' e podia condená-las a sofrer a mesma desolação que elas haviam infligido ao seu povo pactuado. — Is 10:12-14; 13:1, 17-22; 14:4-6, 12-14, 26, 27; 47:5-11; Je 50:11, 14, 17-19, 23-29.

As Visões do Reino de Deus nos Dias de Daniel. A profecia de Daniel, em sua inteireza, sublinha de maneira enfática o tema da Soberania Universal de Deus, esclarecendo ainda mais o propósito de Jeová. Vivendo em exílio na capital da potência mundial que derrubou Judá, Daniel foi usado por Deus para revelar o significado duma visão tida pelo monarca babilônio, uma visão que predisse a marcha das potências mundiais e sua derradeira demolição por parte do Reino eterno estabelecido pelo próprio Jeová. Sem dúvida, para a surpresa de sua corte real, Nabucodonosor, o próprio conquistador de Jerusalém, viu-se então induzido a prostrar-se em homenagem a Daniel, o exilado, e a reconhecer o Deus de Daniel como "Senhor de reis". (Da 2:36-47) Novamente, através da visão do sonho de Nabucodonosor sobre a 'árvore derrubada', Jeová deu a conhecer de modo enfático que "o Altíssimo é Governante no reino da humanidade e que ele o dá a quem quiser, e estabelece nele até mesmo o mais humilde da humanidade". (Da 4; veja a consideração desta visão sob TEMPOS DESIGNADOS DAS NAÇÕES.) Através do cumprimento do sonho, conforme se relacionava com ele, o governante imperial Nabucodonosor mais uma vez foi levado a reconhecer o Deus de Daniel como "o Rei dos céus", Aquele que "age segundo a sua própria vontade entre o exército dos céus e os habitantes da Terra. E não há quem lhe possa deter a mão ou quem lhe possa dizer: 'Que estás fazendo?' " — Da 4:34-37.

Perto do fim do domínio internacional de Babilônia, Daniel teve visões proféticas de impérios sucessivos, de características animalescas, viu também a majestosa Corte celestial de Jeová em sessão, julgando as potências mundiais, decretando que eram indignas de governar; e viu "alguém semelhante a um filho de homem . . . [sendo-lhe] dado domínio, e dignidade, e um reino, para que todos os povos, grupos nacionais e línguas o servissem" em seu "domínio de duração indefinida, que não passará". Presenciou também a guerra travada contra os "santos" pela última potência mundial, o que exigia a aniquilação desta, e a entrega do "reino, e o domínio, e a grandiosidade dos reinos debaixo de todos os céus . . . ao povo que são os santos do Supremo", Jeová Deus. (Da 7, 8) Assim, tornou-se evidente que a 'semente' prometida envolveria um corpo governamental, não só com um cabeça régio, o "filho do homem", mas também governantes associados, os "santos do Supremo".

Para com a Babilônia e a Medo-Pérsia. O decreto inexorável de Deus contra a poderosa Babilônia foi executado repentina e inesperadamente; os dias dela foram contados e chegaram ao fim. (Da 5:17-30) Durante a regência medo-persa que se seguiu, Jeová revelou ainda mais a respeito do Reino messiânico, apontando o tempo do aparecimento do Messias, predizendo seu 'decepamento' na morte, bem como uma segunda destruição da cidade de Jerusalém e de seu lugar santo. (Da 9:1, 24-27; veja SETENTA SEMANAS.) E, assim como tinha feito durante a regência babilônica, Jeová Deus demonstrou novamente sua capacidade de proteger os que reconhecem Sua soberania em face da ira oficial e da ameaça de morte, demonstrando seu poder tanto sobre os elementos terrestres como sobre os animais selvagens. (Da 3:13-29; 6:12-27) Ele fez com que os portões de Babilônia se abrissem completamente, conforme programado, permitindo que seu povo pactuado tivesse a liberdade de retornar à sua própria terra e reconstruir Jerusalém e a casa de Jeová ali. (2Cr 36:20-23) Graças a seu ato de libertação de seu povo, podia-se fazer o anúncio a Sião: "Teu Deus tornou-se rei!" (Is 52:7-11) Depois disso, frustraram-se as conspirações tramadas contra Seu povo, venceram-se as acusações falsas apresentadas por oficiais subordinados e os decretos governamentais adversos, à medida que Jeová induzia vários reis persas a cooperar na execução de Sua própria vontade soberana. — Esd 4-7; Ne 2, 4, 6; Est 3-9.

Assim, por milhares de anos, o propósito imutável e irresistível de Jeová Deus avançou. Independentemente de qual fosse o desenrolar dos eventos na Terra, Ele mostrou sempre estar no comando da situação, sempre à frente do homem e do diabo opositores. Não permitia que nada interferisse no perfeito desenrolar de seu propósito, de sua vontade. A nação de Israel e sua história, ao passo que serviam para constituir tipos e previsões proféticos do modo como Deus lidaria com os homens no futuro, também ilustravam que, sem o reconhecimento e a submissão de todo coração à chefia divina, não pode haver harmonia, paz e felicidade duradouras. Os israelitas usufruíam os benefícios de ter em comum coisas tais como a ancestralidade, a língua e o país. Também enfrentavam inimigos comuns. Mas somente enquanto eles adoravam e serviam leal e fielmente a Jeová Deus é que gozavam de união, força, justiça e genuíno usufruto da vida. Quando os vínculos de sua relação com Jeová Deus se enfraqueciam, a nação se deteriorava rapidamente.

O Reino de Deus 'Se Aproxima'. Visto que o Messias havia de ser descendente de Abraão, Isaque e Jacó, e membro da tribo de Judá, e "filho de Davi", tinha de ter um nascimento humano; tinha de ser, como declarou a profecia de Daniel, "um filho de homem". Quando chegou o "pleno limite do tempo", Jeová Deus enviou Seu Filho, que nasceu duma mulher e cumpriu todas as exigências legais para herdar "o trono de Davi, seu pai". (Gál 4:4; Lu 1:26-33; veja GENEALOGIA DE JESUS CRISTO.) Seis meses antes de seu nascimento, nasceu João, que se tornou o Batizador, e que seria o precursor de Jesus. (Lu 1:13-17, 36) As expressões feitas pelos pais destes filhos mostravam que eles tinham a viva expectativa de atos divinos de governo. (Lu 1:41-55, 68-79) Quando Jesus nasceu, as palavras da delegação angélica enviada para anunciar o significado daquele evento também indicavam atos gloriosos da parte de Deus. (Lu 2:9-14) Assim, também, as palavras de Simeão e de Ana, no templo, expressaram esperança nos atos salvadores e na libertação. (Lu 2:25-38) A evidência tanto bíblica como secular revelam que prevalecia um sentimento geral de expectativa entre os judeus, de que se aproximava a vinda do Messias. Para muitos, contudo, o interesse focalizava primariamente obter a liberdade do pesado jugo da dominação romana. — Veja MESSIAS.

A comissão de João era 'fazer o coração das pessoas retornar' a Jeová, para seus pactos, para o 'privilégio de lhe prestarem destemidamente serviço sagrado, com lealdade e justiça', aprontando assim para Jeová "um povo preparado". (Lu 1:16, 17, 72-75) Ele mencionou ao povo, em termos nada incertos, que eles confrontavam uma época de julgamento da parte de Deus, que 'o reino dos céus se tinha aproximado', tornando urgente que se desviassem, arrependidos de seu proceder de desobediência à vontade e à lei de Deus. Isto de novo destacava a norma de Jeová de só ter súditos dispostos, pessoas que tanto reconhecem como apreciam a justeza de Seus caminhos e de Suas leis. — Mt 3:1, 2, 7-12.

O Messias veio quando Jesus se apresentou a João para o batismo, e foi então ungido pelo espírito santo de Deus. (Mt 3:13-17) Desta forma, ele se tornou o Rei-Designado, Aquele que era reconhecido pela Corte de Jeová como tendo o direito legal ao trono davídico, direito este que não havia sido exercido nos seis séculos precedentes. (Veja JESUS CRISTO [Seu Batismo].) Jeová, porém, introduziu adicionalmente este Filho aprovado num pacto para um Reino celestial, no qual Jesus seria tanto Rei como Sacerdote, como fora Melquisedeque, da antiga Salém. (Sal 110:1-4; Lu 22:29; He 5:4-6; 7:1-3; 8:1; veja PACTO.) Como a prometida 'semente de Abraão', este Rei-Sacerdote celestial seria o Agente Principal de Deus para abençoar pessoas de todas as nações. — Gên 22:15-18; Gál 3:14; At 3:15.

No início da vida terrestre de seu Filho, Jeová manifestara seu poder régio a favor de Jesus. Deus desviou os astrólogos orientais que iriam informar o tirânico Rei Herodes do paradeiro da criancinha, e induziu os pais de Jesus a fugir para o Egito antes que os agentes de Herodes realizassem o massacre de crianças em Belém. (Mt 2:1-16) Uma vez que a profecia original no Éden predissera uma inimizade entre a 'semente' prometida e a 'semente da serpente', este atentado à vida de Jesus só podia significar que o Adversário de Deus, Satanás, o Diabo, tentava, embora inutilmente, frustrar o propósito de Jeová. — Gên 3:15.

Depois de cerca de 40 dias no ermo de Judá, o batizado Jesus viu-se confrontado com Satanás, o Diabo, o principal oponente da soberania de Jeová. Por algum meio, este Adversário espiritual transmitiu a Jesus certas sugestões sutis que visavam induzi-lo a cometer atos que violariam a vontade e a palavra expressas de Jeová. Satanás chegou até a oferecer ao ungido Jesus o domínio sobre todos os reinos terrestres, sem luta e sem nenhuma necessidade de sofrimento da parte de Jesus — em troca de um único ato de adoração para com ele mesmo. Quando Jesus se recusou, reconhecendo a Jeová como o único e verdadeiro Soberano de quem a autoridade emana corretamente, e para quem deve ser prestada a adoração, o Adversário de Deus passou a planejar outras estratégias de guerra contra o Representante de Jeová, recorrendo ao emprego de agentes humanos de vários modos, assim como fizera muito tempo antes no caso de Jó. — Jó 1:8-18; Mt 4:1-11; Lu 4:1-13; compare isso com Re 13:1, 2.

Em que sentido estava o Reino de Deus 'no meio' daqueles a quem Jesus pregava?

Jesus, confiando no poder de Jeová de protegê-lo e de lhe conceder êxito, empreendeu seu ministério público, anunciando ao povo pactuado de Jeová que "tem-se cumprido o tempo designado", resultando na aproximação do Reino de Deus. (Mr 1:14, 15) Para se determinar em que sentido o Reino estava 'próximo', podem-se observar as palavras dele a certos fariseus, a saber, de que "o reino de Deus está no vosso meio". (Lu 17:21) Comentando este texto, The Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible (O Dicionário Bíblico do Intérprete) observa: "Embora citada com frequência como exemplo do 'misticismo' ou da 'introversão' de Jesus, tal interpretação se respalda principalmente na velha tradução, 'em vós' [KJ, Dy] entendida no infeliz sentido moderno do pronome 'you' como singular ['ti']; o pronome 'you' ([hy·món; 'vós']) é plural (Jesus está se dirigindo aos fariseus — v 20), . . . A teoria de que o reino de Deus é uma condição interior da mente, ou de salvação pessoal, colide com o contexto deste versículo, e também com a inteira apresentação do NT sobre a ideia." (Editado por G. A. Buttrick, 1962, Vol. 2, p. 883) Uma vez que "reino [ba·si·lei·a]" pode referir-se à "dignidade régia", é evidente que Jesus queria dizer que ele, o representante real de Deus, o ungido por Deus para a realeza, estava no meio deles. Ele não só estava presente nesta qualidade, mas também dispunha de autoridade para realizar obras que manifestavam o poder régio de Deus, e para preparar candidatos a posições dentro daquele vindouro governo do Reino. Assim se explica a 'aproximação' do Reino; tratava-se duma época de extraordinárias oportunidades.

Governo com poder e autoridade. Os discípulos de Jesus entendiam o Reino como um genuíno governo da parte de Deus, embora não compreendessem o alcance de seu domínio. Natanael disse a Jesus: "Rabi, tu és o Filho de Deus, tu és o Rei de Israel." (Jo 1:49) Eles conheciam as coisas preditas a respeito dos "santos", na profecia de Daniel. (Da 7:18, 27) Jesus prometera diretamente a seus seguidores apostólicos que eles ocupariam "tronos". (Mt 19:28) Tiago e João buscaram certas posições privilegiadas no governo messiânico, e Jesus admitiu que haveria tais posições privilegiadas, mas declarou que a concessão delas dependia de seu Pai, o Governante Soberano. (Mt 20:20-23; Mr 10:35-40) Assim, ao passo que seus discípulos restringiam erroneamente o governo régio do Messias à Terra, e especificamente ao Israel carnal, fazendo isto até mesmo no dia da ascensão do ressuscitado Jesus (At 1:6), eles entendiam corretamente que se referia a um arranjo governamental. — Veja Mt 21:5; Mr 11:7-10.

O poder régio de Jeová para com sua criação terrestre foi visivelmente demonstrado de muitas maneiras por seu Representante régio. Por meio do espírito ou força ativa de Deus, seu Filho exerceu o controle sobre o vento e o mar, a vegetação, os peixes, e até sobre os elementos orgânicos contidos nos alimentos, fazendo com que o alimento se multiplicasse. Tais obras poderosas induziram os discípulos a criar profundo respeito pela autoridade que ele possuía. (Mt 14:23-33; Mr 4:36-41; 11:12-14, 20-23; Lu 5:4-11; Jo 6:5-15) Seu exercício do poder de Deus sobre corpos humanos, curando males que iam desde a cegueira até a lepra, e trazendo os mortos à vida, eram ainda mais impressionantes. (Mt 9:35; 20:30-34; Lu 5:12, 13; 7:11-17; Jo 11:39-47) Ele mandava que os leprosos curados se apresentassem ao sacerdócio divinamente autorizado, mas geralmente descrente, "em testemunho para eles". (Lu 5:14; 17:14) Por fim, mostrou o poder de Deus sobre os espíritos sobre-humanos. Os demônios reconheciam a autoridade de que Jesus estava investido, e, em vez de arriscarem-se a uma prova decisiva do poder que apoiava Jesus, acatavam suas ordens de libertar pessoas possuídas por eles. (Mt 8:28-32; 9:32, 33; compare isso com Tg 2:19.) Visto que esta poderosa expulsão de demônios era feita pelo espírito de Deus, isto significava que o Reino de Deus realmente já havia "alcançado" seus ouvintes. — Mt 12:25-29; compare isso com Lu 9:42, 43.

Tudo isso constituía sólida prova de que Jesus possuía autoridade régia e que essa autoridade não provinha de nenhuma fonte terrena, humana ou política. (Veja Jo 18:36; Is 9:6, 7.) Os mensageiros do encarcerado João, o Batizador, quais testemunhas de tais obras poderosas, foram instruídos por Jesus a retornar a João e contar-lhe o que tinham visto e ouvido em confirmação de que Jesus realmente era "Aquele Que Vem". (Mt 11:2-6; Lu 7:18-23; compare isso com Jo 5:36.) Os discípulos de Jesus estavam vendo e ouvindo a evidência da autoridade do Reino que os profetas haviam almejado testemunhar. (Mt 13:16, 17) Ademais, Jesus pôde delegar autoridade aos seus discípulos, de modo que eles puderam exercer poderes similares quais representantes designados seus, dando assim força e peso à proclamação deles: "O reino dos céus se tem aproximado." — Mt 10:1, 7, 8; Lu 4:36; 10:8-12, 17.

A Entrada no Reino. Jesus ressaltou o período especial de oportunidade que havia assim chegado. A respeito de seu precursor, João, o Batizador, Jesus disse: "Entre os nascidos de mulheres não se levantou ninguém maior do que João Batista; mas aquele que é menor no reino dos céus é maior do que ele. Mas, desde os dias de João Batista até agora, o reino dos céus é o alvo para o qual os homens avançam impetuosamente [bi·á·ze·tai], e os que avançam impetuosamente [bi·a·staí] se apoderam dele. [Veja ALA; também Zürcher Bibel (em alemão).] Pois todos, os Profetas e a Lei, profetizaram até João." (Mt 11:10-13) Assim, os dias do ministério de João, que logo findariam com a execução dele, assinalavam o término de um período, e o início de outro. Sobre o verbo grego bi·á·zo·mai empregado neste texto, o Vine's Expository Dictionary of Old and New Testament Words (Dicionário Expositivo de Palavras do Velho e do Novo Testamento, de Vine) diz: "O verbo sugere um esforço vigoroso." (1981, Vol. 3, p. 208) A respeito de Mateus 11:12, o perito alemão Heinrich Meyer declara: "Deste modo, descreve-se aquele esforço e aquela luta entusiásticos, irresistíveis, para alcançar o reino messiânico que se acercava . . . Tão entusiástico e enérgico (não mais calmo e expectante) é o interesse no que tange ao reino. Os [bi·a·staí] são, por conseguinte, crentes [e não atacantes inimigos] que se empenham arduamente para possuí-lo." — Critical and Exegetical Hand-Book to the Gospel of Matthew (Manual Crítico e Exegético do Evangelho de Mateus), de Meyer, 1884, p. 225.

Portanto, a condição de membro do Reino de Deus não seria fácil de obter, não seria como aproximar-se de uma cidade aberta, com pouco ou nada para dificultar a entrada. Antes, o Soberano, Jeová Deus, havia colocado barreiras para impedir a entrada de quaisquer pessoas indignas. (Veja Jo 6:44; 1Co 6:9-11; Gál 5:19-21; Ef 5:5.) Os que desejassem entrar teriam de percorrer uma estrada estreita, encontrar o portão estreito, persistir em pedir, persistir em buscar, persistir em bater, e o caminho lhes seria então aberto. Achariam o caminho "estreito" no sentido de que restringe os que o percorrem de fazer coisas que prejudicariam a si mesmos ou a outros. (Mt 7:7, 8, 13, 14; compare isso com 2Pe 1:10, 11.) Talvez tivessem de figuradamente perder um olho ou uma das mãos para conseguir entrar. (Mr 9:43-47) O Reino não seria uma plutocracia em que se pudesse comprar o favor do Rei; seria difícil um rico (gr.: ploú·si·os) entrar nele. (Lu 18:24, 25) Não seria uma aristocracia mundanal; não se levaria em conta a posição destacada entre os homens. (Mt 23:1, 2, 6-12, 33; Lu 16:14-16) Aqueles que pareciam ser os "primeiros", dotados de impressionante formação e folha de serviços religiosas, seriam os "últimos", e os 'últimos seriam os primeiros' a obter os privilégios favorecidos relacionados com tal Reino. (Mt 19:30–20:16) Os proeminentes, porém hipócritas, fariseus, confiantes em sua posição vantajosa, observariam meretrizes e cobradores de impostos regenerados entrarem no Reino antes deles. (Mt 21:31, 32; 23:13) Embora chamassem Jesus de "Senhor, Senhor", todos os hipócritas que desrespeitassem a palavra e a vontade de Deus, conforme reveladas por meio de Jesus, seriam rejeitados com as palavras: "Nunca vos conheci! Afastai-vos de mim, vós obreiros do que é contra a lei." — Mt 7:15-23.

Os que conseguem entrar são os que colocam os interesses materiais em segundo plano e buscam primeiro o Reino e a justiça de Deus. (Mt 6:31-34) Iguais ao Rei ungido de Deus, Cristo Jesus, amariam a justiça e odiariam a iniquidade. (He 1:8, 9) As pessoas de mentalidade espiritual, misericordiosas, puras de coração e pacíficas, embora fossem alvos de vitupério e de perseguição da parte dos homens, tornar-se-iam prospectivos membros do Reino. (Mt 5:3-10; Lu 6:23) O "jugo" que Jesus convidava tais pessoas a tomar sobre si significava a submissão delas à sua autoridade régia. Todavia, tratava-se de um jugo benévolo, com uma carga leve para aqueles que fossem 'de temperamento brando e humildes de coração' como era o Rei. (Mt 11:28-30; compare isso com 1Rs 12:12-14; Je 27:1-7.) Isto devia ter um efeito acalentador sobre o coração de seus ouvintes, assegurando-lhes de que seu governo não teria nenhuma das qualidades indesejáveis de muitos governantes anteriores, tanto israelitas como não israelitas. Forneciam-lhes razões para crer que seu governo não traria nenhuma tributação pesada, servidão forçada ou quaisquer formas de exploração. (Veja 1Sa 8:10-18; De 17:15-17, 20; Ef 5:5.) Como mostraram as palavras posteriores de Jesus, não só o Cabeça do vindouro governo do Reino provaria seu altruísmo ao ponto de dar a vida pelo seu povo, mas todos os associados com ele naquele governo também seriam pessoas que procuravam servir, em vez de serem servidas. — Mt 20:25-28; veja JESUS CRISTO (Suas Obras e Suas Qualidades Pessoais).

É vital a submissão voluntária. O próprio Jesus tinha o mais profundo respeito pela vontade e pela autoridade soberanas de seu Pai. (Jo 5:30; 6:38; Mt 26:39) Enquanto o pacto da Lei vigorava, seus seguidores judeus deviam praticar e advogar a obediência a este; quem tomasse posição contrária seria rejeitado no tocante ao seu Reino. Este respeito e esta obediência, contudo, precisavam emanar do coração, não sendo simples observação formal ou unilateral da Lei, com ênfase a atos específicos exigidos, mas a observância de princípios básicos nela inerentes, envolvendo a justiça, a misericórdia e a fidelidade. (Mt 5:17-20; 23:23, 24) Ao escriba que reconheceu a posição ímpar de Jeová, e que admitiu que "amá-lo de todo o coração e de todo o entendimento, e de toda a força, e este amar o próximo como a si mesmo, vale muito mais do que todos os holocaustos e sacrifícios", Jesus disse: "Não estás longe do reino de Deus." (Mr 12:28-34) Assim, em todos os sentidos, Jesus deixou claro que Jeová Deus procura apenas súditos voluntários, aqueles que preferem Seus modos justos de agir e desejam fervorosamente viver sob a Sua autoridade soberana.

Relação pactuada. Na última noite com os discípulos, Jesus falou-lhes sobre um "novo pacto" que passaria a vigorar para seus seguidores em resultado de seu sacrifício de resgate (Lu 22:19, 20; compare isso com 12:32); ele mesmo serviria qual Mediador deste pacto entre Jeová, o Soberano, e os seguidores de Jesus. (1Ti 2:5; He 12:24) Adicionalmente, Jesus fez um pacto pessoal com seus seguidores "para um reino", para que eles pudessem participar com ele dos seus privilégios régios. — Lu 22:28-30; veja PACTO.

Vencer o mundo. Embora a prisão, os julgamentos e a execução subsequentes de Jesus fizessem com que sua posição régia parecesse frágil, na realidade marcaram um poderoso cumprimento das profecias de Deus, e por essa razão foram permitidos por Ele. (Jo 19:10, 11; Lu 24:19-27, 44) Jesus, mediante sua lealdade e integridade até a morte, provou que "o governante do mundo", o Adversário de Deus, Satanás, não tinha "nenhum poder" sobre ele, e que ele havia realmente 'vencido o mundo'. (Jo 14:29-31; 16:33) Ademais, mesmo enquanto seu Filho estava pregado na estaca, Jeová forneceu evidência de seu poder superior: a luz do Sol foi obscurecida durante algum tempo; houve também um forte terremoto, e a grande cortina no templo rasgou-se em dois. (Mt 27:51-54; Lu 23:44, 45) No terceiro dia após isso, ele forneceu uma evidência muito maior de sua Soberania ao ressuscitar seu Filho para a vida espiritual, apesar dos esforços mesquinhos dos homens de impedir a ressurreição por colocarem guardas na frente do túmulo selado de Jesus. — Mt 28:1-7.

"O Reino do Filho do Seu Amor." Dez dias após a ascensão de Jesus ao céu, em Pentecostes do ano 33 EC, seus discípulos tiveram evidência de que ele fora "enaltecido à direita de Deus" quando derramou espírito santo sobre eles. (At 1:8, 9; 2:1-4, 29-33) O "novo pacto" tornou-se assim operante neles, e eles se tornaram o núcleo de uma nova "nação santa", o Israel espiritual. — He 12:22-24; 1Pe 2:9, 10; Gál 6:16.

Cristo sentava-se então à direita de seu Pai, e era a Cabeça desta congregação. (Ef 5:23; He 1:3; Fil 2:9-11) As Escrituras mostram que a partir de Pentecostes de 33 EC, estabeleceu-se um reino espiritual sobre seus discípulos. O apóstolo Paulo, ao escrever aos cristãos do primeiro século em Colossos, mencionou a Jesus Cristo como já tendo um reino: "[Deus] nos livrou da autoridade da escuridão e nos transferiu para o reino do Filho do seu amor". — Col 1:13; compare isso com At 17:6, 7.

O reino de Cristo, a partir de Pentecostes de 33 EC, tem sido espiritual, governando sobre o Israel espiritual, cristãos que foram gerados pelo espírito de Deus para tornar-se filhos espirituais de Deus. (Jo 3:3, 5, 6) Quando tais cristãos gerados pelo espírito receberem sua recompensa celestial, não mais serão súditos terrestres do reino espiritual de Cristo, mas serão reis no céu junto com Cristo. — Re 5:9, 10.

"O Reino de Nosso Senhor e do Seu Cristo." O apóstolo João, escrevendo perto do fim do primeiro século EC, previu por meio duma revelação divina o tempo futuro em que Jeová Deus, mediante seu Filho, faria uma nova expressão do reinado divino. Naquele tempo, como no tempo em que Davi trouxe a Arca para Jerusalém, dir-se-ia que Jeová 'assumiu o seu grande poder e começou a reinar'. Este seria o tempo para vozes altas no céu proclamarem: "O reino do mundo tornou-se o reino de nosso Senhor e do seu Cristo, e ele reinará para todo o sempre." — Re 11:15, 17; 1Cr 16:1, 31.

É o "nosso Senhor", o Soberano Senhor Jeová, que faz valer sua autoridade sobre "o reino do mundo", estabelecendo uma nova expressão de sua soberania para com a nossa terra. Ele concede ao seu Filho, Jesus Cristo, uma participação subsidiária nesse Reino, de modo que é chamado de "o reino de nosso Senhor e do seu Cristo”. Este Reino é de proporções e dimensões maiores do que “o reino do Filho do seu amor”, mencionado em Colossenses 1:13. “O reino do Filho do seu amor” teve início em Pentecostes de 33 EC e tem dominado sobre os discípulos ungidos de Cristo; “o reino de nosso Senhor e do seu Cristo” é estabelecido no fim dos “tempos designados das nações” e domina sobre toda a humanidade na terra. — Lu 21:24.

Ao receber uma participação no “reino do mundo”, Jesus Cristo toma as necessárias medidas para remover a oposição à soberania de Deus. A medida inicial ocorre no domínio celestial; Satanás e seus demônios são derrotados e lançados para baixo, para o domínio terrestre. Isto resulta na proclamação: “Agora se realizou a salvação, e o poder, e o reino de nosso Deus, e a autoridade do seu Cristo.” (Re 12:1-10) Durante o curto período de tempo que resta para ele, este principal Adversário de Deus, Satanás, continua a cumprir a profecia de Gênesis 3:15, por guerrear contra os “remanescentes” da “semente” da mulher, “os santos” que irão governar junto com Cristo. (Re 12:13-17; compare com Re 13:4-7; Da 7:21-27.) Todavia, os “justos decretos” de Jeová se tornam manifestos e Suas expressões de julgamento sobrevêm como pragas aos opositores dele, resultando na destruição da mística Babilônia, a Grande, a principal perseguidora na terra dos servos de Deus. — Re 15:4; 16:1–19:6.

Depois disso, “o reino de nosso Senhor e do seu Cristo” envia seus exércitos celestiais contra os governantes de todos os reinos terrestres e seus exércitos na luta do Armagedom, levando-os ao fim. (Re 16:14-16; 19:11-21) Trata-se da resposta ao pedido feito a Deus: “Venha o teu reino. Realize-se a tua vontade, como no céu, assim também na terra.” (Mt 6:10) Satanás é então lançado no abismo, e inicia-se um período de mil anos em que Cristo Jesus e seus associados governam quais reis e sacerdotes sobre os habitantes da terra. — Re 20:1, 6.

Cristo “entrega o reino”. O apóstolo Paulo também descreve o governo de Cristo durante Sua presença. Depois que Cristo ressuscita seus seguidores da morte, ele passa a ‘reduzir a nada todo governo, e toda autoridade e poder’ (referindo-se logicamente a todo governo, toda autoridade e todo poder em oposição à vontade soberana de Deus). Então, no fim do seu Reinado Milenar, ele ‘entrega o reino ao seu Deus e Pai’, sujeitando-se “Àquele que lhe sujeitou todas as coisas, para que Deus seja todas as coisas para com todos”. — 1Co 15:21-28.

Uma vez que Cristo ‘entrega o reino ao seu Deus e Pai’, em que sentido é seu Reino “eterno”, como se declara repetidas vezes nas Escrituras? (2Pe 1:11; Is 9:7; Da 7:14; Lu 1:33; Re 11:15) Seu Reino “jamais será arruinado”, suas realizações durarão para sempre; ele será honrado eternamente por seu papel qual Rei messiânico. — Da 2:44.

Durante o Reinado Milenar, o papel de Cristo para com a terra envolve ação sacerdotal para com a humanidade obediente. (Re 5:9, 10; 20:6; 21:1-3) Por meio disso o reinado do pecado e da morte sobre a humanidade obediente, sujeita à sua “lei”, termina; a benignidade imerecida e a justiça são os fatores predominantes. (Ro 5:14, 17, 21) Uma vez que o pecado e a morte hão de ser completamente removidos dos habitantes da Terra, isto também põe fim à necessidade de Jesus servir qual “ajudador junto ao Pai”, no sentido de fornecer uma propiciação pelos pecados de humanos imperfeitos. (1Jo 2:1, 2) Isso leva a humanidade de volta à condição original desfrutada quando o homem perfeito Adão estava no Éden. Adão, enquanto perfeito, não necessitava de nenhum intermediário entre ele e Deus para fazer propiciação. Do mesmo modo, também, ao término do Governo Milenar de Jesus, os habitantes da terra estarão tanto em condições como sob a responsabilidade de responder por seu modo de agir perante Jeová Deus qual Juiz Supremo, sem o recurso de ter alguém como intermediário legal, ou ajudador. Jeová, o Poder Soberano, torna-se assim “todas as coisas para com todos”. Isto significa que o propósito de Deus de “ajuntar novamente todas as coisas no Cristo, as coisas nos céus e as coisas na terra”, terá sido realizado plenamente. — 1Co 15:28; Ef 1:9, 10.

O Governo Milenar de Jesus terá cumprido plenamente seu objetivo. A Terra, outrora um foco de rebelião, terá sido restabelecida a uma posição plena, limpa e incontestável no domínio do Soberano Universal. Não restará nenhum reino subsidiário entre Jeová e a humanidade obediente.

Todavia, depois disso realiza-se uma prova final da integridade e da devoção de todos os súditos terrestres. Satanás é solto de sua restrição no abismo. Os que cedem à sedução dele, fazem-no com base na mesma questão suscitada no Éden: a legitimidade da soberania de Deus. Pode-se depreender isto de seu ataque contra o “acampamento dos santos e a cidade amada”. Uma vez que aquela questão já foi judicialmente resolvida e declarada encerrada pelo Tribunal do céu, não se permite nenhuma rebelião prolongada neste caso. Os que deixam de permanecer lealmente do lado de Deus não poderão apelar para Cristo Jesus como ‘ajudador propiciatório’, mas Jeová Deus será “todas as coisas” para com eles, não sendo possível nenhum apelo ou mediação. Todos os rebeldes, sejam espirituais, sejam humanos, receberão a sentença divina de destruição na “segunda morte”. — Re 20:7-15.

REIS, LIVROS DOS. Livros das Escrituras Sagradas que narram a história de Israel, desde os últimos dias do Rei Davi até a libertação do Rei Joaquim da prisão em Babilônia.

Os dois livros dos Reis constituíam originalmente um só rolo, chamado "Reis" (hebr.: Mela·khím), e, na Bíblia em hebraico da atualidade, ainda são contados como um só livro, o quarto na seção conhecida como Profetas Anteriores. Na Septuaginta grega, os Livros dos Reis foram chamados de Terceiro e Quarto Reinos, tendo os Livros de Samuel sido chamados de Primeiro e Segundo Reinos. Na Vulgata latina, estes livros eram juntos conhecidos como os quatro livros dos Reis, porque Jerônimo preferiu o nome Regum (Reis), em harmonia com o título hebraico, à tradução literal do título da Septuaginta, Regnorum (Reinos). A divisão em dois livros, na Septuaginta, tornou-se prática porque a tradução para o grego, com vogais, exigia quase que o dobro do espaço do hebraico, em que não se empregavam vogais até a segunda metade do primeiro milênio da Era Comum. A divisão entre Segundo Samuel e Primeiro Reis nem sempre tem sido feita no mesmo lugar nas versões gregas. Luciano, de sua parte, em sua recensão da Septuaginta, fez essa divisão de modo que Primeiro Reis começasse com o que é 1 Reis 2:12 em nossas Bíblias atuais.

A Escrita dos Livros. Embora o nome do escritor dos livros dos Reis não seja fornecido nos dois relatos, indícios bíblicos e a tradição judaica apontam para Jeremias. Muitas palavras e expressões hebraicas encontradas nesses dois livros só aparecem depois, na Bíblia, na profecia de Jeremias. Os livros dos Reis e o livro de Jeremias se complementam; eventos, tais como um governo, são mencionados apenas brevemente num deles, se são descritos de forma plena no outro. A ausência de qualquer menção de Jeremias nos livros dos Reis, embora ele fosse um profeta de grande destaque, já era de esperar caso Jeremias fosse o escritor, porque suas atividades foram pormenorizadas no livro que leva seu nome. Os livros dos Reis contam as condições existentes em Jerusalém após o início do exílio, indicando que o escritor, assim como se deu com Jeremias, não fora levado para Babilônia. — Je 40:5, 6.

Alguns peritos veem nos livros dos Reis o que consideram ser evidência do trabalho de mais de um escritor ou compilador. No entanto, excetuando-se as variações devido às fontes empregadas, deve-se observar que a linguagem, o estilo, o vocabulário e a gramática são uniformes do princípio ao fim.

Primeiro Reis abrange um período de cerca de 129 anos, a contar dos dias finais do Rei Davi, cerca de 1040 AEC, e indo até a morte do Rei Jeosafá, de Judá, por volta de 911 AEC. (1Rs 22:50) Segundo Reis começa com o reinado de Acazias (cerca de 920 AEC), e prossegue até o fim do 37.º ano do exílio de Joaquim, 580 AEC, um período de cerca de 340 anos. (2Rs 1:1, 2; 25:27-30) Por isso, os relatos conjugados dos livros dos Reis abrangem cerca de quatro séculos e meio da história dos hebreus. Visto que os eventos neles registrados incluem os que chegam até 580 AEC, tais livros não poderiam ter sido concluídos antes dessa data, e, visto não haver menção do término do exílio babilônico, tais livros, como um só rolo, sem dúvida foram concluídos antes desse evento.

O lugar da escrita de ambos os livros parece ter sido, na maior parte, Judá, porque a maioria das fontes de matéria estaria disponível ali. No entanto, Segundo Reis foi logicamente concluído no Egito, para onde Jeremias foi levado depois do assassínio de Gedalias, em Mispá. — Je 41:1-3; 43:5-8.

Os livros dos Reis sempre fizeram parte do cânon judaico, e são aceitos como canônicos. Há boas razões para isso, porque esses livros dão prosseguimento ao desenvolvimento do principal tema da Bíblia, a vindicação da soberania de Jeová e o derradeiro cumprimento do seu propósito para com a Terra, por meio de seu Reino sob Cristo, a Semente prometida. Ademais, três importantes profetas, Elias, Eliseu e Isaías, recebem destaque, e mostra-se que as profecias deles tiveram infalível cumprimento. Os eventos registrados nos livros dos Reis são mencionados e elucidados em outras partes das Escrituras. Jesus se refere três vezes a coisas escritas nestes livros — menciona Salomão (Mt 6:29), a rainha do sul (Mt 12:42; compare isso com 1Rs 10:1-9), a viúva de Sarefá e Naamã (Lu 4:25-27; compare isso com 1Rs 17:8-10; 2Rs 5:8-14). Paulo menciona o relato sobre Elias e os 7.000 homens que não dobraram o joelho diante de Baal. (Ro 11:2-4; compare isso com 1Rs 19:14, 18.) Tiago fala das orações de Elias, pedindo seca e chuva. (Tg 5:17, 18; compare com 1Rs 17:1; 18:45.) Tais referências às ações de pessoas descritas nos livros dos Reis atestam a canonicidade desses escritos.

Os livros dos Reis foram em grande parte compilados à base de fontes escritas, e o escritor indica claramente que consultou tais fontes externas para obter algumas informações. Refere-se ao "livro dos assuntos de Salomão" (1Rs 11:41), ao "livro dos assuntos dos dias dos reis de Judá" (1Rs 15:7, 23), e ao "livro dos assuntos dos dias dos reis de Israel" (1Rs 14:19; 16:14).

Um dos mais antigos manuscritos hebraicos ainda existentes que contém os livros dos Reis na íntegra data de 1008 EC. O Manuscrito Vaticano

N.º 1209 e o Manuscrito Alexandrino contêm os livros dos Reis (em grego), mas o Manuscrito Sinaítico não os contém. Fragmentos dos livros dos Reis, datando evidentemente do período AEC, foram encontrados nas cavernas de Qumran.

A estrutura desses livros indica que o escritor ou compilador forneceu fatos pertinentes a cada rei para fins cronológicos e para revelar a avaliação de Deus, favorável ou desfavorável, de cada rei. A relação do reinado deles com a adoração de Jeová sobressai como o fator mais importante. Depois de considerar o reinado de Salomão, há, com algumas exceções, um padrão geral estabelecido para descrever cada reinado, ao passo que duas linhas históricas paralelas se entrelaçam. No caso dos reis de Judá, fornece-se em geral primeiro um sincronismo introdutório com o contemporâneo rei de Israel, daí a idade do rei, a duração do seu reinado, o local do gover-

DESTAQUES DE PRIMEIRO REIS

Resumo conciso da história tanto do reino de Judá como do reino de Israel, desde os últimos dias de Davi até a morte de Jeosafá.

Originalmente, o primeiro livro dos Reis fazia parte de um só rolo junto com Segundo Reis.

Salomão é conhecido pela notável sabedoria no início de seu governo, mas acaba apostatando.

Natã, numa ação decisiva, frustra a tentativa de Adonias de se tornar rei de Israel; Salomão é entronizado. (1:5–2:12)

Quando Jeová lhe pergunta o que deseja, Salomão pede sabedoria; concede-se-lhe adicionalmente riquezas e glória. (3:5-15)

A sabedoria divinamente concedida se evidencia na maneira em que Salomão lida com o caso de duas prostitutas, ambas afirmando ser a mãe dum mesmo bebê do sexo masculino. (3:16-28)

O Rei Salomão e Israel sob seu governo prosperam; a sabedoria sem paralelo do rei fica mundialmente famosa. (4:1-34; 10:14-29)

Salomão constrói o templo de Jeová, e, mais tarde, um conjunto palacial; depois todos os anciãos de Israel se reúnem para a inauguração. (5:1–8:66)

Jeová santifica o templo, assegura Salomão da permanência da linhagem real, mas adverte contra a infidelidade. (9:1-9)

A rainha de Sabá vem ver pessoalmente a sabedoria e a prosperidade de Salomão. (10:1-13)

Na velhice, Salomão é influenciado por suas muitas esposas estrangeiras e vai atrás de deuses estrangeiros. (11:1-8)

A nação se divide em dois; institui-se a adoração de bezerros para impedir que os habitantes do reino setentrional subam a Jerusalém.

Devido à apostasia de Salomão, Jeová prediz a divisão da nação. (11:11-13)

Após a morte de Salomão, seu filho Roboão ameaça impor um jugo mais pesado ao povo; dez tribos se revoltam e fazem de Jeroboão rei. (12:1-20)

Jeroboão estabelece a adoração de bezerros de ouro no reino setentrional para impedir seus súditos de ir a Jerusalém para adorar e assim talvez passarem a desejar a reunificação do reino. (12:26-33)

O reino meridional, Judá, tem reis tanto bons como maus.

Roboão e Abijão, depois dele, permitem a detestável adoração falsa. (14:21-24; 15:1-3)

Asa, filho de Abijão, e seu filho Jeosafá, promovem ativamente a adoração verdadeira. (15:9-15; 22:41-43)

O reino setentrional, Israel, é maculado por lutas pelo poder, assassinatos e idolatria.

Nadabe, filho de Jeroboão, torna-se rei; Baasa o assassina e apodera-se do trono. (15:25-30)

Elá, filho de Baasa, sucede ao trono e é assassinado por Zinri; Zinri comete suicídio ao ver-se derrotado por Onri. (16:6-20)

A vitória de Onri leva à guerra civil; Onri finalmente triunfa, torna-se rei, e mais tarde constrói Samaria; seus pecados são ainda piores do que os de reis anteriores. (16:21-28)

Acabe torna-se rei e se casa com a filha de Etbaal, rei dos sidônios; ele introduz a adoração de Baal em Israel. (16:29-33)

Guerras entre Judá e Israel terminam em aliança.

Jeroboão trava guerras tanto contra Roboão como contra Abijão; Baasa luta contra Asa. (15:6, 7, 16-22)

Jeosafá faz aliança com Acabe. (22:1-4, 44)

Jeosafá e Acabe batalham juntos contra Ramote-Gileade; Acabe é morto. (22:29-40)

Atividade profética em Israel e Judá.

Aijá prediz que dez tribos serão tiradas da casa de Davi; mais tarde, ele proclama o julgamento de Jeová contra Jeroboão. (11:29-39; 14:7-16)

Semaías transmite a palavra de Jeová de que Roboão e seus súditos não devem lutar contra as dez tribos que se rebelaram. (12:22-24)

Um homem de Deus anuncia o julgamento de Jeová contra o altar para a adoração do bezerro em Betel. (13:1-3)

Jeú, filho de Hanani, pronuncia o julgamento de Jeová contra Baasa. (16:1-4)

Elias prediz uma longa seca em Israel; durante a seca, ele aumenta milagrosamente o suprimento de alimentos duma viúva e ressuscita o filho dela. (17:1-24)

Elias propõe uma prova no monte Carmelo para determinar quem é o Deus verdadeiro; quando Jeová é provado verdadeiro, os profetas de Baal são mortos; Elias foge para não ser morto por Jezabel, esposa de Acabe, mas Jeová envia Elias para ungir Hazael, Jeú e Eliseu. (18:17–19:21)

Micaías prediz a derrota de Acabe em batalha. (22:13-28)

no, e o nome e o lugar de origem de sua mãe, sendo este último item de interesse e importância porque pelo menos alguns dos reis de Judá eram polígamos. Ao concluir a narrativa sobre cada rei, cita-se a fonte das informações, o sepultamento do rei e o nome de seu sucessor. Alguns dos mesmos pormenores são fornecidos para cada rei de Israel, mas a idade do rei por ocasião de sua ascensão, e o nome e o local de origem de sua mãe não são fornecidos. As informações fornecidas em Primeiro e Segundo Reis têm sido muito úteis no estudo da cronologia bíblica. — Veja CRONOLOGIA.

Os livros dos Reis são mais do que simples anais ou uma narração de eventos, como acontece numa crônica. Relatam fatos históricos com uma explicação de seu significado. Pelo visto, foi eliminado do relato tudo o que não tinha que ver diretamente com o desenrolar do propósito de Deus, e o que não ilustrava os princípios pelos quais Jeová lida com seu povo. As falhas de Salomão e de outros reis de Judá e de Israel não são ocultadas, mas são relatadas com a máxima candura.

Evidência Arqueológica. A descoberta de numerosos artefatos supriu certa confirmação de que os livros dos Reis são histórica e geograficamente exatos. A arqueologia, bem como as provas vivas da atualidade, confirmam a existência das florestas de cedro no Líbano, das quais Salomão

DESTAQUES DE SEGUNDO REIS

Continuação da história de Judá e de Israel iniciada em Primeiro Reis; vai até a destruição de Samaria e depois a de Jerusalém, devido à infidelidade.

A escrita foi provavelmente concluída no Egito uns 27 anos após a destruição de Jerusalém por Babilônia.

Depois de Elias, Eliseu serve qual profeta de Jeová.

Elias prediz a morte de Acazias; também invoca fogo dos céus sobre dois chefes militares desrespeitosos junto com suas companhias de 50 homens, enviados para buscar o profeta. (1:2-17)

Elias é arrebatado num vendaval; Eliseu recebe seu manto oficial. (2:1-13)

Eliseu divide as águas do Jordão e cura a água de Jericó; seu conselho inspirado salva os exércitos aliados de Israel, Judá e Edom de perecerem por falta de água, e resulta na derrota dos moabitas; ele faz aumentar o suprimento de óleo duma viúva, ressuscita o filho duma sunamita, torna inofensivo um cozido venenoso, multiplica uma dádiva de pão e cereal, cura a lepra de Naamã, anuncia que a lepra de Naamã sobrevirá ao ganancioso Geazi e a seus descendentes, e faz flutuar o ferro dum machado emprestado. (2:14–6:7)

Eliseu avisa de antemão o rei de Israel sobre ataques de surpresa por parte dos sírios; uma força síria chega para apoderar-se dele, mas é acometida de cegueira mental temporária; os sírios sitiam Samaria, e Eliseu é culpado pela fome resultante; ele prediz o fim da fome. (6:8–7:2)

A comissão dada a Elias é completada quando Eliseu diz a Hazael que este se tornará rei da Síria, e envia um mensageiro para ungir Jeú como rei sobre Israel. (8:7-13; 9:1-13)

Jeú age contra a casa de Acabe, erradicando de Israel a adoração de Baal. (9:14–10:28)

Eliseu, em seu leito de morte, é visitado por Jeoás, neto de Jeú; ele prediz três vitórias sobre a Síria. (13:14-19)

O desrespeito de Israel para com Jeová leva ao exílio na Assíria.

A adoração de bezerros iniciada por Jeroboão prossegue durante os reinados de Jeú e seus descendentes — Jeoacaz, Jeoás, Jeroboão II e Zacarias. (10:29, 31; 13:6, 10, 11; 14:23, 24; 15:8, 9)

Nos dias finais de Israel, o Rei Zacarias é assassinado por Salum, Salum por Menaém, o filho de Menaém, Pecaías, por Peca, e Peca por Oseias. (15:8-30)

Durante o reinado de Peca, Tiglate-Pileser III, rei da Assíria, leva muitos israelitas para o exílio; no nono ano de Oseias, Samaria é destruída e Israel é levado para o exílio por ter desrespeitado a Jeová; o território de Israel é povoado por outros povos. (15:29; 17:1-41)

Reformas religiosas em Judá não produzem nenhuma mudança duradoura; Babilônia destrói Jerusalém e leva o povo de Deus para o exílio.

Jeorão, de Judá, casa-se com Atalia, filha de Acabe e Jezabel; Jeorão apostata, bem como seu filho Acazias depois dele. (8:16-27)

Quando Acazias morre, Atalia tenta exterminar a descendência de Davi, para que ela mesma possa reinar; Jeoás, filho de Acazias, é salvo pela tia e por fim é feito rei; Atalia é morta. (11:1-16)

Enquanto o sumo sacerdote Jeoiada está vivo e o aconselha, Jeoás restabelece a adoração verdadeira, mas os 'sacrifícios nos altos' persistem durante seu reinado e o de seus sucessores — Amazias, Azarias (Uzias) e Jotão. (12:1-16; 14:1-4; 15:1-4, 32-35)

Acaz, filho de Jotão, pratica idolatria; Ezequias, filho de Acaz, realiza boas reformas, mas estas são desfeitas pelos subsequentes maus reinados de Manassés e Amom. (16:1-4; 18:1-6; 21:1-22)

Josias, filho de Amom, toma medidas firmes para livrar o país da idolatria; ele é morto numa batalha contra o Faraó Neco. (22:1–23:30)

Os últimos quatro reis de Judá são infiéis: Jeoacaz, filho de Josias, morre cativo no Egito; Jeoiaquim, irmão de Jeoacaz, reina depois dele; Joaquim, filho e sucessor de Jeoiaquim, é levado para o exílio babilônico; Zedequias, irmão de Jeoiaquim, reina até Jerusalém ser conquistada pelos babilônios, e a maioria dos sobreviventes da conquista é levada para o exílio. (23:31–25:21)

obteve madeira para suas construções em Jerusalém. (1Rs 5:6; 7:2) Evidência de atividade industrial tem sido encontrada na bacia do Jordão onde certa vez se erguiam Sucote e Zaretã. — 1Rs 7:45, 46.

A invasão de Judá por parte de Sisaque, nos dias de Roboão, (1Rs 14:25, 26) é confirmada pelo próprio registro do Faraó, constante das paredes do templo de Karnak, no Egito. Um obelisco de calcário negro, do Rei Salmaneser III, da Assíria, encontrado em Nimrud, em 1846, retrata talvez um emissário de Jeú curvando-se perante Salmaneser, um incidente que, embora não seja citado nos livros dos Reis, se soma ao testemunho da historicidade do Rei Jeú, de Israel. As extensivas obras de construção de Acabe, incluindo "a casa de marfim que construiu" (1Rs 22:39), são bem atestadas pelas ruínas encontradas em Samaria.

A Pedra Moabita narra alguns dos eventos envolvidos na revolta do Rei Mesa contra Israel, fornecendo a versão do monarca moabita sobre o ocorrido. (2Rs 3:4, 5) Esta inscrição alfabética também contém o Tetragrama.

O nome Peca é encontrado num texto analístico atribuído a Tiglate-Pileser III. (2Rs 15:27) A campanha de Tiglate-Pileser III contra Israel é mencionada em seus anais reais e numa inscrição dum prédio assírio. (2Rs 15:29) O nome Oseias também foi decifrado à base de inscrições da campanha de Tiglate-Pileser. — 2Rs 15:30; Ancient Near Eastern Texts (Textos Antigos do Oriente Próximo), editado por J. Pritchard, 1974, pp. 282-284.

Ao passo que algumas das campanhas do Rei Senaqueribe, da Assíria, são mencionadas em seus anais, a destruição angélica de seu exército de 185.000 homens, ao ameaçar Jerusalém, não é mencionada (2Rs 19:35), nem esperaríamos encontrar nos seus jactanciosos registros um relato deste tremendo revés. Encontrou-se notável confirmação arqueológica da última declaração dos livros dos Reis em tábuas cuneiformes escavadas em Babilônia. Estas indicam que Ja'ukinu (Joaquim) estava preso em Babilônia, e mencionam que lhe eram fornecidas provisões tiradas do tesouro real. — 2Rs 25:30; Ancient Near Eastern Texts, p. 308.

Cumprimentos de Profecias. Os livros dos Reis contêm várias profecias e apontam para notáveis cumprimentos. Por exemplo, 1 Reis 2:27 mostra o cumprimento da palavra de Jeová contra a casa de Eli. (1Sa 2:31-36; 3:11-14) Profecias sobre Acabe e sua casa foram cumpridas. (Compare 1Rs 21:19-21 com 1Rs 22:38 e 2Rs 10:17.) O que foi predito a respeito de Jezabel e de seus restos mortais provou-se verídico. (Compare 1Rs 21:23 com 2Rs 9:30-36.) E os fatos históricos confirmam a veracidade da profetizada destruição de Jerusalém. — 2Rs 21:13.

Entre os muitos pontos ressaltados nos livros dos Reis acha-se a importância de apegar-se aos requisitos de Jeová, e as nefastas consequências de se desconsiderar Suas leis justas. Os dois livros dos Reis comprovam vigorosamente as consequências preditas tanto da obediência como da desobediência a Jeová Deus.

RELÂMPAGO. Brilhantes lampejos de luz resultantes da descarga de eletricidade atmosférica entre nuvens, ou entre nuvens e a terra. Este fenômeno que acompanha uma tempestade com trovões é comum em Israel durante os períodos chuvosos da primavera e do outono, alcançando um auge especialmente nos meses mais frios de novembro e dezembro.

Jeová, qual Criador dos elementos necessários para a produção do relâmpago, é sua fonte. (Jó 37:3, 11) Ele também pode controlá-lo, e, pelo visto, empregou o relâmpago e meios semelhantes para livrar Seus servos dos inimigos deles e para executar Seus julgamentos. (2Sa 22:1, 15; Sal 18:14; 77:16-20; Za 9:14; compare isso com Jó 36:32; Sal 97:4; 144:6.) Apropriadamente, pois, os relâmpagos estão associados ao trono de Deus (Re 4:5; compare isso com Re 11:19), bem como a expressões da ira divina (Re 8:5; 16:18), e são figuradamente representados como relatando a realização de tarefas. (Jó 38:35) No monte Sinai, lampejos de relâmpagos acompanharam as atemorizantes manifestações físicas da presença de Deus. — Êx 19:16; 20:18.

O relâmpago (hebr.: ba·ráq) é usado figuradamente para representar o lampejo do metal polido. (De 32:41 n; Ez 21:10 n; Na 3:3; Hab 3:11) Em Naum 2:4, com as palavras: "Estão correndo como os relâmpagos", tem-se presente ou o brilho ou a grande velocidade dos carros inimigos nas ruas de Nínive. E os rostos ou a aparência radiantes das criaturas angélicas, são comparados com o relâmpago. — Da 10:5, 6; Mt 28:2, 3; veja também Ez 1:14.

Cristo Jesus mostrou que sua presença não seria mantida em sigilo, assim como é impossível ocultar o relâmpago que "sai das regiões orientais e brilha sobre as regiões ocidentais". (Mt 24:23-27; Lu 17:20-24) Anteriormente, quando os 70 discípulos que ele enviara retornaram com um relatório de que até mesmo os demônios lhes ficavam sujeitos pelo emprego do seu nome, Jesus fez alusão à futura expulsão de Satanás do céu como sendo certa, dizendo: "Comecei a observar Satanás já caído como relâmpago do céu." — Lu 10:1, 17, 18.

Em Lucas 11:36, a palavra grega para relâmpago (a·stra·pé) refere-se à luz ou ao lampejo duma lâmpada.

RELVA. Veja GRAMA.

REMALIAS. Pai do Rei Peca, de Israel. — 2Rs 15:25; 2Cr 28:6; Is 7:4, 5.

REMETE. Cidade limítrofe de Issacar. (Jos 19:17, 18, 21) Parece ser o mesmo que JARMUTE N.º 2 e RAMOTE N.º 1.

REMO. Veja NAVIO.

REMUNERAÇÃO. Veja COMPENSAÇÃO; SALÁRIO, REMUNERAÇÃO.

RENOVO. Veja RAMO, RENOVO.

REOBE [Praça Pública; Lugar Amplo].

1. Pai de Hadadezer, o rei de Zobá, contra quem Davi guerreou vitoriosamente. — 2Sa 8:3-12.

2. Um dos levitas ou o antepassado de um dos que atestaram com selo um pacto no tempo de Neemias e Esdras. — Ne 10:1, 9, 11.

3. Lugar ou cidade mencionada no reconhecimento de Canaã efetuado pelos 12 espias hebreus enviados por Moisés. (Núm 13:21) É provavelmente o mesmo lugar que "Reobe" e "Bete-Reobe" mencionado em 2 Samuel 10:6, 8. — Veja BETE-REOBE.

4. O nome de pelo menos uma e talvez duas cidades no território de Aser. (Jos 19:24, 28, 30) Ao passo que alguns peritos consideram ambas as referências como indicando a mesma cidade, outros textos relacionados parecem referir-se a locais distintos. Assim, Juízes 1:31, 32 diz que "Aser não desalojou os habitantes de . . . Reobe", de modo que os aseritas foram obrigados a residir entre os cananeus do país, ao passo que Josué 21:27, 31 e 1 Crônicas 6:71, 75 declaram que Reobe foi dada aos filhos de Gersom (Gérson) qual cidade levita. Os que favorecem apenas um local encaram tais textos como significando que a tarefa de expulsar os cananeus de Reobe foi originalmente impedida, mas foi levada a cabo posteriormente, permitindo assim que fosse ocupada pelos levitas. Aqueles que favorecem dois locais sugerem que uma cidade permaneceu no poder dos cananeus, e que a outra estava entre as inicialmente capturadas por Aser e dada aos levitas. Para os dois locais, alguns sugerem uma identificação com Khirbet el-ʽAmri, a uns 4 km ao NE de Aczibe, para a Reobe de Josué 19:28; e para a dos outros textos, sugerem Tell el-Bir el-Gharbi (Tel Bira), cerca de 10 km ao ESE de Aco. Este último local é o preferido por aqueles que consideram que o nome se refere a apenas uma cidade.

REOBOTE [Lugares Amplos].

1. Nome que Isaque deu a um poço que cavou. (Gên 26:22) Alguns peritos têm tentado identificar Reobote com Ruheibeh (Horvat Rehovot [ba-Negev]), a uns 35 km ao SO de Berseba. Os nomes têm certa similaridade. Ao dar nome ao poço, Isaque disse que então Deus havia dado amplo espaço. Ele e seus pastores podiam ser produtivos sem interferir ou sofrer interferência de outros.

2. Cidade de localização desconhecida, da qual veio Saul, primitivo rei edomita. (Gên 36:31, 37; 1Cr 1:43, 48) Em ambas as referências a ela, o lugar é chamado de "Reobote, junto ao Rio". Na Bíblia, em geral, a denominação "o Rio" se refere ao Eufrates. (Sal 72:8; 2Cr 9:26; compare isso com Êx 23:31 e De 11:24.) Assim, alguns geógrafos têm sugerido um dos dois locais próximos à junção dos rios Cabur e Eufrates. Isto significaria, porém, que Saul era oriundo duma cidade bem distante do território edomita. Todavia, certos geógrafos modernos creem que nessas duas ocorrências 'o Rio' se refere a um rio em Edom ou próximo a uma de suas fronteiras, tais como o Zerede (uádi el-Hasa'), que deságua na extremidade sul do Mar Morto. O geógrafo J. Simons propõe um local a uns 37 km ao SE da ponta do Mar Morto.

REOBOTE-IR [Lugares Amplos (ou, Praças Públicas) da Cidade]. Possivelmente um subúrbio da antiga Nínive. Foi construído por Ninrode. A localização exata não é conhecida hoje. — Gên 10:10, 11.

REPREENSÃO. Aquilo que se destina a convencer outros de que erraram, a fim de induzi-los a admitir os erros e a corrigi-los. A censura, diferente da repreensão, pode ser uma reprovação sem qualquer exposição da falta mediante a apresentação de evidências. (Veja CENSURA, CENSURAR.) O verbo hebraico ya·kháhh (repreender) é um termo legal também vertido 'chamar às contas' (Is 37:4) e 'resolver as questões' (Is 1:18; 2:4). O termo grego correspondente é e·lég·kho. Ambos os termos transmitem com frequência a ideia de declarar alguém culpado de pecado e induzi-lo ao arrependimento. Quanto ao emprego de e·lég·kho na Septuaginta grega para traduzir muitas ocorrências de ya·kháhh, o Theological Dictionary of the New Testament (Dicionário Teológico do Novo Testamento) declara: "Denota a disciplina e a educação dada por Deus ao homem em resultado de Sua atividade judicial. Isto abrange todos os aspectos da educação, desde a condenação do pecador até o castigo e a punição, desde a instrução do justo mediante testes severos até sua orientação por meio de ensino e admoestação." — Editado por G. Kittel, 1964, Vol. II, p. 473.

Quando É Necessária. Na lei que Deus deu a Israel, as vítimas de transgressão eram exortadas: “Não deves odiar teu irmão no teu coração. Decerto deves repreender o teu colega, para que não leves o pecado junto com ele.” (Le 19:17) Não se devia nutrir ressentimentos contra o irmão que errou. Ele devia ser repreendido com vistas a recuperá-lo do pecado. Deixar de cumprir tal responsabilidade moral poderia contribuir para pecado adicional, e a pessoa que se refreou de repreender o amigo partilharia a responsabilidade por tal pecado. — Veja Mt 18:15.

Às vezes os anciãos, quais representantes da congregação, precisam repreender graves transgressores, fazendo-o até mesmo na presença de outros que estejam a par do proceder pecaminoso. Tal repreensão não se destina apenas aos que se mostram receptivos a ela. Os anciãos também são exortados a “repreender os que contradizem” e a ‘repreender com severidade’ os que são “indisciplinados” e “conversadores improfícuos”. — 1Ti 5:20; Tit 1:9, 10, 13.

Embora a repreensão possa beneficiar aqueles que a recebem, os esforços do repreendedor nem sempre são apreciados. Assim, Provérbios 9:7, 8 adverte: “Quem corrige ao zombador toma para si desonra, e quem dá repreensão a um iníquo — defeito nele. Não repreendas ao zombador, para que não te odeie. Dá repreensão ao sábio e ele te amará.”

Atitude Correta. Uma vez que as Escrituras são inspiradas por Deus, toda repreensão baseada solidamente nelas é realmente repreensão provinda dele. (2Ti 3:16) A repreensão da parte de Jeová é uma expressão de amor que não deve ser abominada ou rejeitada. (Pr 3:11, 12) Jesus Cristo, qual cabeça da congregação cristã, por afeição aos seus membros, cuida de que a necessária repreensão seja dada por meio de homens espiritualmente qualificados. (Re 3:14, 19) Os sábios reconhecem que “as repreensões da disciplina são o caminho da vida”. — Pr 6:23.

A tendência pecaminosa, humana, é ressentir-se da repreensão e do servo humano mediante quem esta talvez seja dada. Mas ceder a tal tendência degrada a pessoa ao nível dum animal irracional, destituído de discriminação moral; como o expressa o provérbio inspirado: “Quem odeia a repreensão é irracional.” (Pr 12:1) Em contraste com isso, o salmista Davi, que foi repetidas vezes repreendido, escreveu: “Se o justo me surrasse, seria benevolência; e se me repreendesse, seria óleo sobre a cabeça, que minha cabeça não desejaria recusar.” — Sal 141:5.

RÉPTEIS. O réptil é um animal de sangue frio, vertebrado e de respiração pulmonar. O termo hebraico para répteis deriva do verbo za·hhál, que significa “deslizar”. Conforme declarado em Deuteronômio 32:24, entre as coisas que trariam dificuldades ao Israel idólatra achava-se a “peçonha de répteis do pó”, evidentemente referindo-se ali a cobras venenosas. (Veja Je 8:17.) Em Miqueias 7:17, as nações que são sobrepujadas pelo poder de Deus são mencionadas como saindo de suas posições defensivas como se fossem répteis agitados.

Além de serpentes, outros répteis mencionados na Bíblia são o camaleão, o geco e outros lagartos. — Veja os comentários nos artigos sob os respectivos nomes.

REPUGNANTE, COISA. Os substantivos hebraicos shé·qets e shiq·qúts (coisa repugnante) derivam da raiz sha·qáts, empregada no sentido de “ter repugnância” (Le 11:11, 13) e, na forma causativa, ‘fazer repugnante’. (Le 11:43; 20:25) Tais termos hebraicos referem-se àquilo que é repugnante do ponto de vista da adoração verdadeira de Jeová. São comumente traduzidos por palavras tais como “abominar”, “abominável”, ou “abominação” em muitas versões. Isto resultou na bem conhecida expressão “abominação da desolação”. (Da 11:31; 12:11, So) Os escritores evangélicos Mateus e Marcos empregaram o grego bdé·lyg·ma para traduzir o hebraico shiq·qúts (plural: shiq·qu·tsím). (Da 9:27; Mt 24:15; Mr 13:14) Este termo grego subentende basicamente aquilo que causa repugnância. — Veja DETESTÁVEL, ALGO (COISA).

A Lei mosaica proibia o consumo de certos animais, declarando-os “impuros” para tal fim (bem como para sacrifícios). Portanto, nesse sentido um animal assim devia ser encarado como “algo repugnante”, e qualquer pessoa que o comesse (ou o usasse para sacrifício) se tornaria “repugnante”, visto que estaria desse modo mostrando desprezo para com as ordens de Deus. (Le 7:21; 11:10-13, 20-23, 41, 42; 20:25; Is 66:17) Entretanto, outros textos indicam que os animais proscritos não deviam ser abominados de modo geral. Por exemplo, embora o jumento fosse “impuro” para alimento ou sacrifício, era comumente usado pelos israelitas como meio de transporte e para levar fardos (Êx 23:4, 5; Mt 21:2-5); o Rei Davi possuía manadas de camelos, e pelos de camelo eram usados na fabricação de roupas (1Cr 27:30, 31; Mt 3:4); e a águia foi usada como metáfora e símile apropriados para representar o cuidado protetor de Deus com Israel durante o Êxodo. (Êx 19:4; De 32:9-12) Com a remoção do pacto da Lei, teve fim a injunção de encarar quaisquer de tais criaturas como “repugnantes” para alimento. — At 10:9-15; 1Ti 4:1-5; veja ANIMAIS.

Ao passo que a palavra hebraica shé·qets é empregada exclusivamente com respeito a animais “impuros”, a palavra shiq·qúts é usada principalmente com respeito a ídolos e práticas idólatras.

Por ocasião do Êxodo, Jeová instruiu os israelitas a lançar fora "as coisas repugnantes" e "os ídolos sórdidos do Egito", mas alguns deixaram de obedecer, profanando assim o nome de Deus. (Ez 20:6-9) Quando Israel estava a caminho da Terra da Promessa, o povo passou entre nações pagãs e viu "suas coisas repugnantes e seus ídolos sórdidos, madeira e pedra, prata e ouro". Ordenou-se-lhe "ter completa repugnância" de tais imagens religiosas como "algo devotado à destruição", recusando-se a trazê-las para dentro de suas casas. (De 29:16-18; 7:26) Os deuses e deusas falsos dessas nações, inclusive Milcom, ou Moloque, bem como Quemós e Astorete, eram eles mesmos 'coisas repugnantes'. (1Rs 11:5, 7; 2Rs 23:13) Quando Israel praticou tal idolatria, ele também se tornou repugnante aos olhos de Deus, e a profanação posterior do templo com objetos idólatras trouxe a fúria de Deus sobre a nação, o que por fim resultou em sua desolação. (Je 32:34, 35; Ez 7:20-22; Os 9:10) Por assim 'ministrarem à madeira e à pedra', empenhavam-se em "relações imorais", fornicação espiritual, desligando-se da comunicação com Deus. — Ez 20:30-32; compare isso com Je 13:27.

Apenas por meio de ação vigorosa e corajosa visando eliminar a idolatria do país é que certos reis trouxeram períodos de bênção para a nação. (2Rs 23:24; 2Cr 15:8-15) Deus deixou claro que apenas se se purificassem cabalmente de tais práticas é que os israelitas assegurariam seu restabelecimento do vindouro cativeiro e usufruiriam a readmissão como seu povo. (Ez 11:17-21) Numa profecia similar, as menções feitas a Davi como rei deste povo purificado, e seu "um só pastor" e "maioral por tempo indefinido" apontam claramente para um cumprimento maior na nação do Israel espiritual, a congregação cristã, sob o Herdeiro ungido do trono de Davi, Cristo Jesus. — Ez 37:21-25; compare isso com Lu 1:32; Jo 10:16.

Em Naum 3:6, a profecia contra Nínive, a capital da Assíria, prediz o fim de suas prostituições políticas e internacionais, e que Jeová lançaria "coisas repugnantes [hebr.: shiq·qu·tsím]" sobre ela. Tais coisas repugnantes evidentemente se referem, não a objetos idólatras, mas a coisas geralmente impuras ou repulsivas, como sujeira e imundície, tornando assim a rapace cidade desprezível aos olhos de todos. (Na 3:4-7) As coisas manchadas de sangue e repugnantes a serem removidas de entre os dentes dos filisteus (Za 9:6, 7) provavelmente se relacionam com a prática pagã de comer animais oferecidos em sacrifício junto com seu sangue. — Veja Ez 33:25.

Ao passo que os judeus, especialmente seus líderes religiosos nos dias quando Jesus estava na Terra, eram evidentemente escrupulosos em evitar qualquer coisa relacionada com ídolos literais, eram, no entanto, culpados de práticas repugnantes de autoidolatria, desobediência, hipocrisia, ganância e falsidade, e Jesus disse que, iguais aos antepassados deles, eles haviam transformado o templo num "covil de salteadores". (Mt 23:1-15, 23-28; Lu 16:14, 15; compare isso com Mt 21:13 e Je 7:11, 30.) Tal condição e atitude de coração más levaram ao seu monumental ato de rebelião ao rejeitarem o próprio Filho de Deus, e Jesus mostrou que isso traria a destruição certa sobre eles. — Mt 21:33-41; Lu 19:41-44.

'Coisas Repugnantes Que Levam à Desolação.' A profecia de Daniel predisse "coisas repugnantes" associadas com desolação. (Da 9:27) O conceito popular geralmente segue a primitiva tradição judaica em aplicar esta expressão à profanação do templo de Jeová em Jerusalém, no ano 168 AEC, por parte de Antíoco IV (Epifânio), rei da Síria. Tentando eliminar a adoração de Jeová, Antíoco construiu um altar sobre o grande altar de Jeová e sacrificou nele um porco ao olímpico Zeus (Júpiter). Uma expressão parecida à de Daniel (associando coisas repugnantes com desolação) aparece no livro apócrifo de 1 Macabeus (1:54) como se aplicando a este evento.

Mas esta era apenas a interpretação judaica dos assuntos, não uma revelação inspirada. Cristo Jesus mostrou que tal conceito estava errado quando deu o seguinte aviso aos seus discípulos: "Portanto, quando avistardes a coisa repugnante que causa desolação, conforme falado por intermédio de Daniel, o profeta, estar em pé num lugar santo, (que o leitor use de discernimento,) então, os que estiverem na Judeia comecem a fugir para os montes." (Mt 24:15, 16) Tais palavras mostram que "a coisa repugnante que causa desolação" não era algo passado, mas sim futuro.

A dessacração pagã do altar do templo feita por Antíoco, não obstante quão repugnante parecesse à vista de Deus, não resultou em desolação — nem para Jerusalém, nem para o templo, nem para a nação judaica. Mas 33 anos após a morte de Jesus, os cristãos deveras 'avistaram a coisa repugnante que causa desolação em pé, num lugar santo'. (Mt 24:15) Em 66 EC, os exércitos romanos pagãos cercaram a "cidade santa", Jerusalém, então o foco da revolta judaica contra Roma. Assim, era iminente a "desolação" a ser causada pela coisa repugnante, de modo que este era o último sinal para que os cristãos discernidores 'fugissem para os montes'. (Mt 4:5; 27:53; 24:15, 16; Lu 19:43, 44; 21:20-22) Após a fuga deles, ocorreu a desolação da cidade e da nação; Jerusalém foi destruída no ano 70 EC e a última fortaleza judaica, Massada, caiu diante dos romanos em 73 EC. — Veja Da 9:25-27.

Profecias adicionais duma coisa repugnante. Deve-se notar, porém, que Daniel 11:31-35 e 12:9, 11, ligam uma "coisa repugnante que causa desolação" com "o tempo do fim". É razoável que o desenvolvimento desta última expressão da "coisa repugnante que causa desolação" no tempo do fim siga o padrão geral daquela do primeiro século EC, embora não fique restrita à terra de Israel.

A desolação de Jerusalém em 70 EC trouxe o fim do "lugar santo", Jerusalém, "a cidade santa". (Mt 27:53) Entretanto, as Escrituras dirigem nossa atenção a uma "Jerusalém celestial", o Reino messiânico, representado na terra por cristãos ungidos. (He 12:22) Há também outros que falsamente afirmam representar esse Reino, e Revelação (Apocalipse), capítulo 17, indica que seu campo religioso de operações será desolado pelos "dez chifres" (reis) duma "fera" simbólica.

As Coisas Repugnantes de Babilônia, a Grande. Na visão profética de Revelação 17, representa-se a simbólica mulher imoral, Babilônia, a Grande. Ela é chamada de "a mãe das meretrizes e das coisas repugnantes da terra". Ela segura um copo de ouro 'cheio das coisas repugnantes da sua fornicação com os reis da terra'. Embora procure granjear o favor dos reinos terrestres, montada numa fera simbólica composta de tais reinos, chega a hora em que tal "fera" se recusa a carregá-la, volta-se contra ela e a desola completamente. — Veja BABILÔNIA, A GRANDE.

Qualquer possibilidade de que pessoas que continuam a praticar uma "coisa repugnante" consigam entrar na "Nova Jerusalém", a casta classe "noiva" do Cordeiro, é descartada em Revelação 21:9, 10, 27.

REQUÉM [possivelmente: Tecelão].

1. Rei de Midiã, um dos cinco que foram mortos quando Midiã foi punido por ter seduzido Israel com imoralidade. Os cinco, presumivelmente vassalos dos amorreus, também eram chamados de "caudilhos de Síon". — Núm 31:8; Jos 13:21.

2. Descendente de Manassés. — 1Cr 7:14, 16.

3. Descendente de Judá por meio de Calebe, filho de Esrom. — 1Cr 2:4, 5, 9, 42-44.

4. Cidade do lote territorial dado a Benjamim, cuja localização é desconhecida. — Jos 18:21, 27, 28.

RESA. Filho, isto é, descendente, de Zorobabel e antepassado de Jesus Cristo. — Lu 3:23, 27.

RESEFE. Efraimita; um dos antepassados de Josué. — 1Cr 7:22-27.

RESERVATÓRIO DE ÁGUA. Grande tanque aberto para coleta e armazenagem de água. Reservatórios artificiais eram escavados no solo ou na rocha. Às vezes, ficavam dentro das cidades e eram ligados a fontes por meio de condutos. Isto assegurava aos habitantes um suprimento de água mesmo em tempos de sítio. Alguns reservatórios eram ampliações ou adaptações de acidentes naturais já existentes, tais como cavernas.

Entre os vários reservatórios mencionados nas Escrituras acham-se os de Gibeão (2Sa 2:13; veja GIBEÃO, GIBEONITAS), Hébron (2Sa 4:12), Hésbon (Cân 7:4; veja BATE-RABIM), Samaria (1Rs 22:38) e Jerusalém. Tem-se sugerido que os reservatórios de água construídos pelo congregante (Rei Salomão) para fins de irrigação talvez possam ser identificados com os reservatórios encontrados ao S de Belém. (Ec 2:6) A água de fontes próximas era conservada nestes reservatórios.

Os Reservatórios de Jerusalém. A localização aproximada do reservatório do Rei Ezequias junto ao conduto que ele construiu para trazer as águas da fonte de Giom para Jerusalém é o Reservatório de Siloé, atual Birket Silwan, logo ao SO da Cidade de Davi. (2Rs 20:20; 2Cr 32:30) Parece que o Reservatório de Siloé do primeiro século (Jo 9:7) foi encontrado ali perto, uns 100 m ao SSE de Birket Silwan.

As referências bíblicas ao "reservatório antigo" (Is 22:11), ao "reservatório superior" (2Rs 18:17; Is 7:3; 36:2) e ao "reservatório inferior" (Is 22:9) não fornecem indício algum sobre sua posição exata em relação à cidade de Jerusalém. Peritos geralmente creem que o "reservatório inferior" (talvez o mesmo que o "Reservatório do Canal" mencionado em Ne 3:15) pode ser identificado com Birket el-Hamra, na extremidade sul do vale de Tiropeom. Mas as opiniões variam consideravelmente quanto à localização do "reservatório superior". — Veja RESERVATÓRIO DO CANAL.

O "Reservatório de Água do Rei" estava evidentemente situado entre o Portão dos Montes de Cinzas e o Portão da Fonte. (Ne 2:13-15) Talvez se trate do mesmo reservatório mencionado em Neemias 3:16.

A respeito do reservatório de Betsata, veja BETSATA.

Banhados de Juncos. Ao passo que o termo hebraico bere·kháh significa "reservatório" (tal como um reservatório artificial de água), a palavra 'agh·hám significa "banhado de juncos", provavelmente o acúmulo natural de água numa depressão. (Êx 7:19; 8:5; Sal 107:35; 114:8; Is 35:7; 41:18) A profecia de que Deus transformaria Babilônia em "banhados de juncos" indicava de forma vívida quão desolada ela se tornaria. — Is 14:23.

RESERVATÓRIO DO CANAL. Reservatório ou tanque de água, pelo visto situado ao S da Cidade de Davi, onde o vale de Hinom e o vale Central (Tiropeom) se encontram. (Ne 3:15) Parece que este reservatório também era chamado de "reservatório inferior". — Is 22:9.

Em Neemias 3:15, o texto massorético chama-o de "Reservatório de Selá". Alguns peritos creem que "Selá" deva ser corrigido para "Siloé", que significa "Remetente" e se aplica a um canal que deságua num reservatório. (Is 8:6) Assim, ao passo que algumas versões da Bíblia deixam "Selá" sem traduzir, A Bíblia de Jerusalém, em inglês, verte a expressão por "cisterna do conduto", e a Tradução do Novo Mundo reza "Reservatório do Canal".

Encontraram-se ruínas de um canal ou canalização que partia da fonte de Giom em direção ao S, acompanhando o contorno da encosta do Cédron, e terminando num antigo reservatório hoje chamado de Birket el-Hamra. Trechos do canal eram cobertos de lajes de pedra, mas parece que havia aberturas, de modo que se podia retirar água para irrigar partes do vale. O declive gradual deste canal talvez seja mencionado nas palavras "as águas de Siloé, que correm suavemente". (Is 8:6) A localização de Birket el-Hamra se enquadra na colocação, feita por Neemias, do Reservatório do Canal como estando próximo do Jardim do Rei e da Escadaria que desce da extremidade S da Cidade de Davi.

RESGATAR, RESGATADOR. O verbo hebraico ga·'ál, que aparece pela primeira vez em Gênesis 48:16 ('recuperar'), também tem o significado de "resgatar ou remir", isto é, recuperar, redimir ou recomprar a pessoa, a propriedade ou a herança do parente mais próximo; era também empregado com referência a um vingador de sangue. (Sal 74:2; Is 43:1) O parente mais próximo que tinha a obrigação de ser resgatador (hebr.: go'él) evidentemente seguia a seguinte ordem: (1) irmão, (2) tio, (3) filho dum tio, (4) qualquer outro varão que fosse parente consanguíneo da família. — Le 25:48, 49; compare isso com a sequência em Núm 27:5-11; veja VINGADOR DO SANGUE.

Sob a Lei mosaica, caso um israelita, devido a circunstâncias financeiras, se vendesse como escravo, o resgatador podia recomprá-lo da escravidão. (Le 25:47-54) Ou, caso vendesse sua herança de terras, o resgatador podia recomprar tal propriedade, e o israelita podia retornar a ela. (Le 25:25-27) No entanto, não se podia resgatar nenhuma coisa "devotada", "devotada à destruição", nem mesmo a vida dum homem. — Le 27:21, 28, 29; veja DEVOTADA, COISA.

Há no livro de Rute um exemplo da transação de resgate por um go'él. Quando Rute relatou ter respigado no campo de Boaz, sua sogra, Noemi, exclamou: "O homem é aparentado conosco. Ele é um dos nossos resgatadores." (Ru 2:20) Boaz aceitou esta obrigação e concluiu um pacto de resgate perante juízes e testemunhas, mas somente depois que outro parente mais próximo do que Boaz recusou este privilégio. — Ru 3:9, 12, 13; 4:1-17.

Jeová Como Resgatador. Pelo sacrifício de seu Filho unigênito, Jeová, como Resgatador, providenciou a recuperação da humanidade do pecado e da morte, e do poder da sepultura. Este Filho teve de vir à Terra, tornando-se "igual aos seus 'irmãos' em todos os sentidos", participando de sangue e carne, desta forma sendo um parente próximo da humanidade. (He 2:11-17) O apóstolo Paulo escreve aos cristãos: "Mediante ele temos o livramento por meio de resgate, por intermédio do sangue desse." — Ef 1:7; compare isso com Re 5:9; 14:3, 4; para mais detalhes veja RESGATE.

RESGATE. Preço pago para recomprar ou livrar de alguma obrigação ou circunstância indesejável. A ideia básica de "resgate" é um preço que cobre (como na indenização por danos ou para satisfazer a justiça), ao passo que "redenção" salienta o livramento proporcionado em resultado do resgate pago. O preço de resgate mais notável foi o sangue derramado de Jesus Cristo, que tornou possível para a descendência de Adão o livramento do pecado e da morte.

Nos diversos termos hebraicos e gregos traduzidos "resgate" e "remir", a similaridade inerente reside na ideia de um preço, ou coisa valiosa, fornecido para efetuar o resgate ou a redenção. A ideia de troca, bem como a de correspondência, equivalência ou substituição, é, por conseguinte, comum a todos. Isto é, uma coisa é dada em troca de outra, satisfazendo as exigências da justiça e resultando numa conciliação dos assuntos. — Veja RECONCILIAÇÃO.

Um Preço Que Cobre. O substantivo hebraico kó·fer provém do verbo ka·fár, que basicamente significa "cobrir", como quando Noé cobriu a arca com alcatrão. (Gên 6:14) Ka·fár, contudo, é empregado quase que exclusivamente para descrever a satisfação da justiça por meio da cobertura ou expiação de pecados. O substantivo kó·fer refere-se à coisa dada para realizar isto, o preço de resgate. (Sal 65:3; 78:38; 79:8, 9) A cobertura corresponde à coisa que ela cobre, quer em seu formato (como no caso duma tampa material, tal como a "tampa [kap·pó·reth]" da Arca do Pacto; Êx 25:17-22), quer em seu valor (como no caso dum preço pago para cobrir os danos causados por um ferimento).

Como meio de conciliar a justiça e resolver os assuntos com seu povo Israel, Jeová, no pacto da Lei, prescreveu vários sacrifícios e ofertas para expiar ou cobrir pecados, incluindo os dos sacerdotes e dos levitas (Êx 29:33-37; Le 16:6, 11), de outros indivíduos, ou da nação como um todo (Le 1:4; 4:20, 26, 31, 35), bem como para purificar o altar e o tabernáculo, fazendo expiação pelos pecados do povo que os cercava. (Le 16:16-20) Com efeito, a vida do animal sacrificado era dada em lugar da vida do pecador, o sangue do animal fazendo expiação sobre o altar de Deus, isto é, até onde podia. (Le 17:11; compare isso com He 9:13, 14; 10:1-4.) O "dia da expiação [yohm hak·kip·pu·rím]" podia com igual propriedade ser chamado de "dia dos resgates". (Le 23:26-28) Estes sacrifícios eram exigidos se é que a nação e sua adoração haviam de obter e manter a aceitação e a aprovação do Deus justo.

Algo que ilustra bem o sentido de uma troca redentora é a lei referente ao proprietário de um touro de que se sabia que era escornador. Se o proprietário permitisse que o touro andasse solto, e este chegasse a matar alguém, o proprietário devia ser morto, pagando a vida da pessoa morta com sua própria vida. No entanto, visto que ele não matara de forma deliberada ou direta uma outra pessoa, se os juízes julgassem apropriado impor-lhe um "resgate [kó·fer]", em vez de executá-lo, então ele precisava pagar tal preço de redenção. A soma avaliada e paga era encarada como tomando o lugar de sua própria vida, e compensando a vida que fora perdida. (Êx 21:28-32; compare isso com De 19:21.) Por outro lado, não se podia aceitar nenhum resgate para o assassino deliberado; apenas a própria vida dele podia cobrir a morte da vítima. (Núm 35:31-33) Evidentemente, porque um recenseamento envolvia vidas, na ocasião em que este era feito, todo varão com mais de 20 anos tinha de dar a Jeová, por sua alma, um resgate [kó·fer] de meio siclo (US$ 1,10), o mesmo preço se aplicando quer a pessoa fosse rica, quer pobre. — Êx 30:11-16.

Visto que qualquer desequilíbrio da justiça desagrada a Deus, bem como aos humanos, o resgate ou a cobertura podia ter o efeito adicional de prevenir ou aplacar a ira. (Veja Je 18:23; também Gên 32:20, onde 'aplacar' traduz ka·fár.) O marido enraivecido com o homem que tenha cometido adultério com sua esposa, porém, recusa qualquer "resgate [kó·fer]". (Pr 6:35) O termo pode também ser usado com respeito aos que deviam exercer a justiça, mas que, em vez disso, aceitam um suborno ou presente como "peita [kó·fer]" para fechar os olhos ao erro. — 1Sa 12:3; Am 5:12.

A Redenção, ou Livramento. O verbo hebraico pa·dháh significa "remir", e o substantivo aparentado pidh·yóhn significa "preço de redenção". (Êx 21:30) Esses termos evidentemente destacam o livramento realizado pelo preço de redenção, ao passo que ka·fár dá ênfase à qualidade ou ao conteúdo do preço, e à sua eficácia em equilibrar a balança da justiça. O livramento ou redenção (pa·dháh) pode ser da escravidão (Le 19:20; De 7:8), de outras condições aflitivas ou opressivas (2Sa 4:9; Jó 6:23; Sal 55:18), ou da morte e da sepultura. (Jó 38:28; Sal 49:15) Faz-se frequente referência a Jeová remir do Egito os da nação de Israel, para serem sua "propriedade particular" (De 9:26; Sal 78:42), e a remi-los do exílio na Assíria e em Babilônia, muitos séculos depois. (Is 35:10; 51:11; Je 31:11, 12; Za 10:8-10) Também neste caso, a redenção envolvia um preço, uma troca. Ao remir Israel do Egito, Jeová evidentemente fez com que o preço fosse pago pelo Egito. Israel era, efetivamente, o "primogênito" de Deus, e Jeová avisou a Faraó de que a obstinada recusa deste em livrar Israel demandaria a vida dos primogênitos do Faraó e de todo o Egito, quer humano, quer animal. (Êx 4:21-23; 11:4-8) Similarmente, por Ciro ter derrubado Babilônia e libertado os judeus de sua condição de exilados, Jeová lhe deu em troca o "Egito como resgate [forma de kó·fer] por [seu povo], a Etiópia e Sebá" em lugar destes. O Império Persa conquistou assim mais tarde aquelas regiões e, desta forma, 'grupos nacionais foram dados em lugar das almas dos israelitas'. (Is 43:1-4) Tais trocas estão em harmonia com a declaração inspirada de que o "iníquo é [ou, serve de] resgate [kó·fer] para o justo; e quem age traiçoeiramente toma o lugar dos retos". — Pr 21:18.

Outro termo hebraico associado com a redenção é ga·'ál, e este transmite primariamente a ideia de recobrar, recuperar ou recomprar. (Je 32:7, 8) Vê-se sua similaridade com pa·dháh pelo emprego paralelo com tal termo em Oseias 13:14: "Da mão do Seol os remirei [forma de pa·dháh]; da morte os recuperarei [forma de ga·'ál]." (Veja Sal 69:18.) Ga·'ál ressalta o direito de recobrar ou de recomprar, quer através dum parente próximo da pessoa cuja propriedade ou cuja própria pessoa precisasse ser recomprada ou recobrada, quer pelo seu proprietário original ou pelo próprio vendedor. Um parente próximo, chamado go·'él, era assim um "resgatador" (Ru 2:20; 3:9, 13), ou, em casos em que estava envolvido um assassínio, um "vingador de sangue". — Núm 35:12.

No caso de um israelita pobre cujas circunstâncias o obrigassem a vender suas terras hereditárias, sua casa na cidade, ou até a si mesmo em servidão, a Lei fazia provisão para que "um resgatador, intimamente aparentado com ele", ou go·'él, tivesse o direito de "comprar de volta [ga·'ál] o que seu irmão vendeu", ou para que o vendedor mesmo pudesse fazê-lo se dispusesse de recursos. (Le 25:23-27, 29-34, 47-49; compare isso com Ru 4:1-15.) Se um homem fizesse uma oferta votiva a Deus de uma casa ou dum campo, e depois desejasse recomprá-la, teria de pagar a importância avaliada da propriedade, acrescida de um quinto do valor calculado. (Le 27:14-19) No entanto, nenhuma troca podia ser feita de algo 'devotado à destruição'. — Le 27:28, 29.

No caso de assassínio, não se concedia proteção ao assassino nas designadas cidades de refúgio, mas, depois da audiência judicativa, ele era entregue pelos juízes ao "vingador [go·'él] de sangue", um parente próximo da vítima, que então matava o assassino. Visto que não se permitia nenhum "resgate [kó·fer]" para o assassino, e visto que o parente próximo, com direito de resgate, não podia recobrar ou recuperar a vida do parente morto, ele legitimamente reivindicava a vida daquele que tinha tirado a vida de seu parente pelo assassínio. — Núm 35:9-32; De 19:1-13.

Nem Sempre Era um Preço Tangível. Conforme se mostrou, Jeová "remiu" (pa·dháh) ou 'reivindicou' (ga·'ál) Israel do Egito. (Êx 6:6; Is 51:10, 11) Mais tarde, visto que os israelitas continuavam a "vender-se para fazer o que era mau" (2Rs 17:16, 17), Jeová, em várias oportunidades, 'vendeu-os às mãos de seus inimigos'. (De 32:30; Jz 2:14; 3:8; 10:7; 1Sa 12:9) O arrependimento deles o movia a recomprá-los, ou reivindicá-los, da aflição ou do exílio (Sal 107:2, 3; Is 35:9, 10; Miq 4:10), desta forma realizando o trabalho dum Go·'él, um Resgatador aparentado com eles, uma vez que havia desposado a nação. (Is 43:1, 14; 48:20; 49:26; 50:1, 2; 54:5-7) Quando Jeová os 'vendia', as nações pagãs não lhe pagavam nenhuma compensação material. Seu pagamento era ver satisfeita sua justiça e ver cumprido seu propósito de corrigi-los e discipliná-los devido à rebelião e ao desrespeito. — Veja Is 48:17, 18.

Da mesma forma, o 'resgate' da parte de Deus não precisava envolver o pagamento de algo tangível. Quando Jeová resgatou os israelitas exilados em Babilônia, Ciro libertou-os voluntariamente, sem receber uma compensação tangível durante sua vida. No entanto, ao remir Seu povo de nações opressoras que haviam agido com malícia contra Israel, Jeová exigiu o preço dos próprios opressores, fazendo-os pagar com a vida. (Veja Sal 106:10, 11; Is 41:11-14; 49:26.) Quando o povo do reino de Judá foi "vendido", ou entregue, aos babilônios, Jeová não recebeu nenhuma compensação. E os judeus que foram exilados não pagaram nada em troca de sua liberdade nem para os babilônios nem para Jeová. Eles foram vendidos "por nada" e resgatados "sem dinheiro". Sendo assim, Jeová não tinha de pagar nada aos captores deles para conciliar os assuntos. Antes, efetuou o resgate por meio do poder de "seu santo braço". — Is 52:3-10; Sal 77:14, 15.

O papel de Jeová como Go·'él abrangia assim a vingança dos erros cometidos contra seus servos, e resultou em limpar seu nome das acusações levantadas por aqueles que usaram a aflição de Israel como desculpa para vituperá-lo. (Sal 78:35; Is 59:15-20; 63:3-6, 9) Como Grande Parente e Redentor tanto da nação como de seus indivíduos, Ele conduziu a "causa jurídica" deles para fazer justiça. — Sal 119:153, 154; Je 50:33, 34; La 3:58-60; compare isso com Pr 23:10, 11.

Embora vivesse antes de a nação de Israel existir, e não fizesse parte dela, Jó, afligido pela doença, disse: "Eu mesmo bem sei que meu redentor está vivo, e que, vindo depois de mim, levantar-se-á sobre o pó." (Jó 19:25; compare isso com Sal 69:18; 103:4.) Seguindo o próprio exemplo de Deus, o rei de Israel devia atuar como redentor a favor dos humildes e dos pobres da nação. — Sal 72:1, 2, 14.

O Papel de Cristo Jesus Como Resgatador. As informações precedentes lançam a base para se entender o resgate fornecido à humanidade por meio do Filho de Deus, Cristo Jesus. A necessidade de a humanidade ter um resgate surgiu da rebelião no Éden. Adão se vendeu para fazer o mal pelo prazer egoísta de continuar gozando da companhia de sua esposa, então uma transgressora pecaminosa, de modo que partilhou a mesma posição condenada perante Deus. Desta forma, vendeu a si mesmo e a seus descendentes à escravidão ao pecado e à morte, o preço exigido pela justiça de Deus. (Ro 5:12-19; compare isso com Ro 7:14-25.) Tendo possuído a perfeição humana, Adão perdeu este valioso bem para si mesmo e para toda a sua descendência.

A Lei, que tinha uma "sombra das boas coisas vindouras", fazia provisão para sacrifícios animais como cobertura para os pecados. Isto, contudo, era apenas uma cobertura simbólica ou figurada, uma vez que tais animais eram inferiores ao homem; assim, 'não era possível que o sangue de touros e de bodes tirasse [realmente] pecados', conforme indica o apóstolo. (He 10:1-4) Aqueles sacrifícios animais representativos tinham de ser de espécimes sem mácula, perfeitos. (Le 22:21) O verdadeiro sacrifício de resgate, um humano realmente capaz de remover os pecados, portanto, também tinha de ser perfeito, isento de mácula. Teria de corresponder ao perfeito Adão, e possuir a perfeição humana, se é que havia de pagar o preço de redenção que livraria a descendência de Adão da dívida, da incapacidade e da escravização a que foi vendida pelo seu pai original, Adão. (Veja Ro 7:14; Sal 51:5.) Somente assim ele poderia satisfazer a perfeita justiça de Deus, que exige igual por igual, "alma por alma". — Êx 21:23-25; De 19:21.

A qualidade estrita da justiça de Deus tornava impossível que a humanidade fornecesse seu próprio redentor. (Sal 49:6-9) No entanto, isto resulta na magnificação do amor e da misericórdia do próprio Deus, no sentido de que ele satisfez seus próprios requisitos a um tremendo custo para si mesmo, dando a vida de seu próprio Filho para fornecer o preço de redenção. (Ro 5:6-8) Isto requereu que seu Filho se tornasse humano para corresponder ao perfeito Adão. Deus realizou isso por transferir a vida de seu Filho desde o céu para o útero da virgem judia, Maria. (Lu 1:26-37; Jo 1:14) Visto que Jesus não devia sua vida a nenhum pai humano que tivesse descendido do pecador Adão, e visto que o espírito santo de Deus 'encobriu com sua sombra' a Maria, evidentemente desde que ela concebeu até o nascimento de Jesus, Jesus nasceu isento de qualquer herança do pecado ou da imperfeição, sendo, por assim dizer, "um cordeiro sem mácula nem mancha", cujo sangue podia revelar-se um sacrifício aceitável. (Lu 1:35; Jo 1:29; 1Pe 1:18, 19) Ele manteve esse estado isento de pecados por toda a vida, e, assim, não se desqualificou. (He 4:15; 7:26; 1Pe 2:22) Como 'partícipe de sangue e carne', ele era um parente próximo da humanidade, e possuía a coisa de valor, sua própria vida perfeita, conservada pura através de provas de integridade, com a qual podia resgatar a humanidade, emancipando-a. — He 2:14, 15.

As Escrituras Gregas Cristãs tornam claro que o livramento do pecado e da morte é, deveras, efetuado mediante o pagamento dum preço. Diz-se que os cristãos foram "comprados por um preço" (1Co 6:20; 7:23), tendo um "dono que os comprou" (2Pe 2:1), e Jesus é apresentado como o Cordeiro que 'foi morto e que com o seu sangue comprou pessoas para Deus, dentre toda tribo, e língua, e povo, e nação'. (Re 5:9) Nestes textos, emprega-se o verbo a·go·rá·zo, significando simplesmente "comprar no mercado [a·go·rá]". O termo aparentado, e·xa·go·rá·zo (libertação pela compra), é empregado por Paulo ao mostrar que Cristo libertou "por meio duma compra os debaixo de lei", mediante sua morte na estaca. (Gál 4:5; 3:13) Mas a ideia de redenção ou de resgate é mais frequente e mais plenamente expressa pelo termo grego lý·tron e outros termos aparentados.

Lý·tron (do verbo lý·o, que significa "livrar") era empregado especialmente pelos escritores gregos para referir-se a um preço pago para resgatar prisioneiros de guerra ou para livrar os que estivessem em servidão ou em escravidão. (Veja He 11:35.) Em suas duas ocorrências bíblicas, descreve o dar Cristo "a sua alma como resgate em troca de muitos". (Mt 20:28; Mr 10:45) A palavra aparentada an·tí·ly·tron aparece em 1 Timóteo 2:6. A obra Greek and English Lexicon to the New Testament (Léxico Grego e Inglês do Novo Testamento), de Parkhurst, diz que significa: "um resgate, preço de redenção, ou, antes, um resgate correspondente". Ele cita Hyperius como dizendo: "Significa corretamente um preço com o qual se redimem do inimigo os cativos; e aquela espécie de troca em que a vida de um é remida pela vida de outro." Ele conclui por dizer: "Por isso, Aristóteles usa o verbo [an·ti·ly·tró·o] para remir vida com vida." (Londres, 1845, p. 47) Destarte, Cristo "se entregou como resgate correspondente por todos". (1Ti 2:5, 6) Outras palavras aparentadas são ly·tró·o·mai, "livrar por resgate" (Tit 2:14; 1Pe 1:18, 19), e a·po·lý·tro·sis, "livramento por meio de resgate". (Ef 1:7, 14; Col 1:14) É evidente a similaridade do emprego destas palavras com o dos termos hebraicos considerados. Eles descrevem, não uma compra ou um livramento comum, mas uma redenção ou um resgate, uma libertação efetuada pelo pagamento de um preço correspondente.

Embora disponível a todos, o sacrifício de resgate de Cristo não é aceito por todos, e "o furor de Deus permanece" sobre os que não o aceitam, assim como também sobrevém aos que de início aceitam tal provisão, e depois a repudiam. (Jo 3:36; He 10:26-29; contraste isso com Ro 5:9, 10.) Eles não obtêm nenhum livramento da escravização aos Reis Pecado e Morte. (Ro 5:21) Sob a Lei, o assassino deliberado não podia ser resgatado. Adão, por seu proceder deliberado, trouxe a morte sobre toda a humanidade, sendo por isso um assassino. (Ro 5:12) Assim, a vida de Jesus, oferecida em sacrifício, não é aceitável a Deus como resgate para o pecador Adão.

Mas Deus se agrada de aprovar a aplicação do resgate para remir aqueles que, dentre a descendência de Adão, valem-se de tal livramento. Conforme Paulo expressa: "Assim como pela desobediência de um só homem muitos foram constituídos pecadores, do mesmo modo também pela obediência de um só muitos serão constituídos justos." (Ro 5:18, 19) Por ocasião do pecado de Adão e de ser ele sentenciado à morte, a descendência ou raça dele estava toda por nascer, em seus lombos, e, assim, todos morreram junto com ele. (Veja He 7:4-10.) Jesus, como homem perfeito, "o último Adão" (1Co 15:45), era o único humano capaz de dar o preço de resgate pela descendência de Adão que ainda iria nascer. Ele voluntariamente se ofereceu para morrer, mesmo não tendo pecado, como um sacrifício humano perfeito, de acordo com a vontade de Jeová. (He 10:5) Jesus usará a autoridade que Jeová lhe deu com base no resgate para dar vida a todos os que aceitam esta provisão. — 1Co 15:45; compare isso com Ro 5:15-17.

Assim, Jesus era, deveras, um "resgate correspondente", não para a redenção do pecador Adão, mas para a redenção de toda a humanidade que descendia de Adão. Ele a resgatou, de modo que se tornasse sua família, fazendo isto por apresentar o pleno valor de seu sacrifício de resgate ao Deus de absoluta justiça, no céu. (He 9:24) Desta forma, ele obtém uma Noiva, uma congregação celestial composta de seus seguidores. (Veja Ef 5:23-27; Re 1:5, 6; 5:9, 10; 14:3, 4.) As profecias messiânicas também mostram que ele terá uma "descendência" como "Pai Eterno". (Is 53:10-12; 9:6, 7) Para isso, o seu resgate precisa abranger mais do que aqueles incluídos em sua "Noiva". Portanto, além dos "comprados dentre a humanidade como primícias" para formar essa congregação celestial, outros devem beneficiar-se de seu sacrifício de resgate e obter a vida eterna mediante a remoção de seus pecados e da acompanhante imperfeição. (Re 14:4; 1Jo 2:1, 2) Uma vez que os da congregação celestial servem junto com Cristo como sacerdotes e 'reis sobre a terra', estes outros beneficiários do resgate devem ser súditos terrestres do Reino de Cristo, e, como filhos dum "Pai Eterno", alcançam a vida eterna. (Re 5:10; 20:6; 21:2-4, 9, 10; 22:17; compare isso com Sal 103:2-5.) O inteiro arranjo manifesta a sabedoria de Jeová, e sua justiça, ao equilibrar perfeitamente a balança da justiça, enquanto demonstra benignidade imerecida e perdoa os pecados. — Ro 3:21-26.

RESIDENTE. Veja RESIDENTE FORASTEIRO.

RESIDENTE ESTRANGEIRO. Veja RESIDENTE FORASTEIRO.

RESIDENTE FORASTEIRO. No seu significado geral, o substantivo hebraico ger se refere a qualquer pessoa que esteja residindo como forasteiro, fora de sua terra natal, e cujos direitos civis são restritos. Pode ter ou não ligações religiosas com os naturais do país em que reside. Abraão, Isaque, Jacó e seus descendentes foram mencionados como tais, antes de receberem o título de propriedade legal da Terra da Promessa. — Gên 15:13; 17:8; De 23:7.

Quando a Bíblia se refere a uma pessoa de origem não israelita em relação à comunidade israelita, a designação "residente forasteiro" se aplica às vezes a uma pessoa que se tornou prosélito ou adorador pleno de Jeová. Às vezes se refere a um colono na terra da Palestina, que estava disposto a viver entre os israelitas, obedecendo às leis fundamentais do país, mas que não aceitava plenamente a adoração de Jeová. O contexto determina a que classe se aplica o termo.

A Septuaginta grega traduz ger como prosélito (gr.: pro·sé·ly·tos) mais de 70 vezes. Alguns sugerem que com frequência o residente forasteiro se agregava a uma família hebreia em busca de proteção, e era como que um dependente, mas ainda assim se diferençava dum escravo. Infere-se isto da expressão "teu residente forasteiro". — De 5:14; compare isso com De 1:16; também com Le 22:10, onde se usa o termo toh·sháv, que significa "colono".

Quando o pacto da Lei foi transmitido no monte Sinai, incorporou-se nele uma legislação especial, num espírito mui amoroso, que governava o relacionamento entre o residente forasteiro e o israelita natural. Por estar o residente forasteiro em desvantagem por não ser israelita de nascença, o pacto da Lei o favorecia com consideração e proteção especiais, pois continha muitos dispositivos a favor dos fracos e vulneráveis. Com regularidade, Jeová trazia à atenção dos de Israel que eles próprios conheciam as aflições enfrentadas por um residente forasteiro numa terra que não fosse dele, e, por isso, deviam demonstrar para com os residentes forasteiros entre eles o espírito generoso e protetor que não haviam usufruído. (Êx 22:21; 23:9; De 10:18) Basicamente, o residente forasteiro, especialmente o prosélito, devia ser tratado como irmão. — Le 19:33, 34.

Embora os termos do pacto da Lei permitissem que pessoas de todas as formações nacionais se tornassem membros da congregação de Israel, por aceitarem a verdadeira adoração de Jeová e se tornarem circuncisas, havia exceções e restrições. Os egípcios e os edomitas não podiam entrar na congregação senão na terceira geração, isto é, a terceira geração que vivesse na terra de Israel. (De 23:7, 8) Os filhos ilegítimos e seus descendentes eram impedidos de entrar na congregação "até a décima geração". (De 23:2) Os amonitas e os moabitas eram proibidos "até a décima geração . . . por tempo indefinido . . . Não lhes deves buscar a paz e a prosperidade em todos os teus dias, por tempo indefinido". (De 23:3-6) Todas estas restrições se aplicavam aos varões dessas nações. Também, nenhum varão cujas partes genitais tivessem sido mutiladas jamais poderia tornar-se membro da congregação. — De 23:1.

O residente forasteiro que se tornara adorador circunciso estava sujeito a uma só lei junto com os israelitas, isto é, tinha de obedecer a todos os termos do pacto da Lei. (Le 24:22) Alguns exemplos disso são: exigia-se que ele guardasse o sábado (Êx 20:10; 23:12) e que celebrasse a Páscoa (Núm 9:14; Êx 12:48, 49), a Festividade dos Pães Não Fermentados (Êx 12:19), a Festividade das Semanas (De 16:10, 11), a Festividade das Barracas (De 16:13, 14) e o Dia da Expiação (Le 16:29, 30). Ele podia oferecer sacrifícios (Núm 15:14) e tinha de fazê-lo do mesmo modo prescrito para o israelita natural. (Núm 15:15, 16) Suas ofertas deviam ser sem defeito (Le 22:18-20), e deviam ser levadas à entrada da tenda de reunião, assim como era feito pelo israelita natural. (Le 17:8, 9) Não podia tomar parte em nenhuma adoração falsa. (Le 20:2; Ez 14:7) Exigia-se que sangrasse a caça abatida, e seria "decepado" na morte se a comesse sem antes deixar escorrer o sangue. (Le 17:10-14) Podia obter o perdão, junto com o Israel natural, da responsabilidade comunal por pecados. (Núm 15:26, 29) Tinha de observar os procedimentos de purificação, por exemplo, caso se tornasse impuro por tocar num cadáver humano.

(Núm 19:10, 11) O residente forasteiro, a quem se podia dar o cadáver dum animal que morrera por si, era evidentemente aquele que não se tornara um adorador pleno de Jeová. — De 14:21.

Judicialmente, garantia-se justiça imparcial ao residente forasteiro nos julgamentos que envolvessem um israelita natural. (De 1:16, 17) Não se devia defraudá-lo, nem submetê-lo a um julgamento pervertido. (De 24:14, 17) Lançavam-se maldições sobre aqueles que praticassem injustiça para com os residentes forasteiros. (De 27:19) As cidades de refúgio para o homicida desintencional estavam disponíveis para o residente forasteiro e para o colono, bem como para o israelita natural. — Núm 35:15; Jos 20:9.

Os residentes forasteiros, não possuindo nenhuma herança de terra, podiam ser comerciantes ou trabalhadores contratados. Alguns eram escravos. (Le 25:44-46) Havia a possibilidade de se tornarem abastados. (Le 25:47; De 28:43) Em geral, porém, a Lei os classificava entre os pobres e delineava arranjos para protegê-los e sustentá-los. O residente forasteiro podia compartilhar dos dízimos fornecidos a cada terceiro ano. (De 14:28, 29; 26:12) As respigas do campo e do vinhedo deviam ser deixadas para ele. (Le 19:9, 10; 23:22; De 24:19-21) Podia receber os benefícios do que crescesse por si só nos anos sabáticos. (Le 25:6) Obtinha proteção igual à dum israelita natural, como trabalhador contratado. Um israelita pobre talvez se vendesse a um abastado residente forasteiro, caso em que o israelita devia ser tratado com bondade, como um trabalhador contratado, e podia ser resgatado a qualquer tempo por si mesmo, ou por um parente próximo, ou, no máximo, era libertado no sétimo ano de seu serviço, ou no jubileu. — Le 25:39-54; Êx 21:2; De 15:12.

No período dos reis, os residentes forasteiros continuaram a desfrutar de relações favoráveis. Na época da construção do templo em Jerusalém, tiraram-se dentre eles muitos trabalhadores para essa construção. (1Cr 22:2; 2Cr 2:17, 18) Quando o Rei Asa tomou medidas para restaurar a verdadeira adoração em Judá, residentes forasteiros de toda a Terra da Promessa se congregaram em Jerusalém, junto com os israelitas naturais, para concluir em conjunto um pacto especial, com o objetivo de buscarem a Jeová de todo o coração e de toda a alma. (2Cr 15:8-14) Depois de purificar o templo, o Rei Ezequias proclamou uma celebração da Páscoa em Jerusalém, no segundo mês. Enviou o convite por todo o Israel, convite este que muitos residentes forasteiros aceitaram. — 2Cr 30:25.

Após o restabelecimento do restante dos israelitas do exílio babilônico, encontramos de novo os residentes forasteiros junto com eles, associados na adoração verdadeira no templo, constituídos em grupos tais como os netineus (que significa "os dados"), escravos, cantores e cantoras profissionais, e os filhos dos servos de Salomão. Os netineus incluíam os gibeonitas, os quais tinham sido designados por Josué para servir de forma permanente no templo. (Esd 7:7, 24; 8:17-20; Jos 9:22-27) Até a última menção que se faz deles, tais residentes forasteiros eram adeptos inseparáveis da verdadeira adoração de Jeová, servindo junto com o restante dos fiéis israelitas naturais que voltaram de Babilônia. (Ne 11:3, 21) No período pós-exílico, os profetas de Jeová reiteraram os princípios do pacto da Lei que salvaguardavam os direitos do residente forasteiro. — Za 7:10; Mal 3:5.

O profeta Ezequiel predisse um tempo em que o residente forasteiro receberia uma herança na terra da mesma forma que um natural entre os filhos de Israel. (Ez 47:21-23) Após a vinda de Jesus Cristo, as boas novas do Reino foram pregadas a judeus e a prosélitos, e estes podiam em pé de igualdade tornar-se membros da congregação cristã. Daí, no tempo de Cornélio (36 EC), um gentio incircunciso e sua família foram aceitos por Jeová, recebendo dons do espírito. (At 10) Deste tempo em diante, assim que gentios incircuncisos aceitassem a Cristo, eram admitidos na congregação cristã, onde não há "nem grego nem judeu, circuncisão nem incircuncisão, estrangeiro, cita, escravo, homem livre, mas Cristo é todas as coisas e em todos". (Col 3:11; Gál 3:28) Revelação (Apocalipse) 7:2-8 descreve o Israel espiritual como constituído de 12 tribos de 12.000 membros cada uma. Daí, os versículos de 9 a 17 mencionam uma grande multidão que nenhum homem podia contar, pessoas de todas as nações, tribos, povos e línguas, que saúdam o entronizado Rei e seu Cordeiro, e recebem o favor e a proteção de Deus.

O Colono. Colono era um habitante duma terra, ou país, que não a sua. A palavra hebraica para colono (toh·sháv) deriva da raiz verbal ya·sháv, que significa "morar". (Gên 20:15) Evidentemente, alguns dos colonos em Israel tornaram-se prosélitos; outros dispunham-se a morar junto aos israelitas e a obedecer às leis fundamentais da terra, mas não se tornaram adoradores de Jeová como os prosélitos circuncisos. O colono se diferençava do estrangeiro, que em geral era alguém em trânsito, e ao qual só se estendia a hospitalidade geralmente demonstrada para com os hóspedes, no Oriente.

O colono que fosse morador incircunciso da terra não comia a Páscoa, nem qualquer coisa sagrada. (Êx 12:45; Le 22:10) Derivava benefícios, junto com os residentes forasteiros e os pobres, durante o ano sabático e o ano do jubileu, podendo participar do que a terra produzisse. (Le 25:6, 12) Ele ou sua prole podiam ser comprados como escravos pelos israelitas, e legados como herança permanente, sem direito a resgate ou ao benefício do livramento no jubileu. (Le 25:45, 46) Por outro lado, um israelita talvez se vendesse como escravo a um colono ou aos membros da família do colono, conservando o direito de resgate a qualquer tempo, bem como o de livramento no seu sétimo ano de servidão, ou no jubileu. — Le 25:47-54; Êx 21:2; De 15:12.

Ao passo que somente os israelitas naturais tinham posse hereditária da terra, Jeová era o verdadeiro dono dela, e podia colocá-los na terra, ou retirá-los dela, conforme servisse a seu propósito. Quanto à venda de terras, ele disse: "De modo que a terra não deve ser vendida em perpetuidade, porque a terra é minha. Pois, do meu ponto de vista sois residentes forasteiros e colonos." — Le 25:23.

O Estranho. A palavra hebraica para estranho (zar) provém evidentemente da raiz zur, que significa "alhear-se; tornar-se alienado" (Sal 78:30; 69:8), de modo que significa basicamente "alguém que se distancia ou que se retira". — Theological Dictionary of the Old Testament (Dicionário Teológico do Velho Testamento), editado por G. Botterweck e H. Ringgren, 1980, Vol. 4, p. 53.

Considerar pessoas como estranhas tinha a ver com assuntos pertinentes à família arônica e à tribo de Levi, e dizia respeito tanto ao israelita natural como ao residente forasteiro, bem como a todas as demais pessoas. As funções sacerdotais foram atribuídas, pela Lei, à família de Arão (Êx 28:1-3), e outros assuntos do templo foram confiados à tribo de Levi em geral. (Núm 1:49, 50, 53) Todas as demais pessoas, incluindo os israelitas naturais das 12 tribos não levíticas, eram, em determinados assuntos, comparadas a estranhos com respeito à tribo levítica. (Êx 29:33, NM n: "'não aronita', isto é, um homem que não era da família de Arão"; PIB, nota: "não pertencente à família sacerdotal de Aarão"; Núm 3:38, NM n: "isto é, um não levita"; JB: "leigo". Veja também Le 22:10; Núm 3:10.) Segundo o contexto, "estranho", na maioria das ocorrências no Pentateuco, refere-se a qualquer pessoa que não pertencia à família de Arão, ou que não pertencia à tribo de Levi, pois os privilégios e os deveres sacerdotais ou ministeriais não lhe haviam sido confiados.

O estranho (não aronita) não podia comer do sacrifício de investidura (Êx 29:33), nem ser ungido com o óleo de santa unção (Êx 30:33), nem comer nada que fosse sagrado (Le 22:10). Um estranho, não aronita, não podia cuidar de quaisquer deveres sacerdotais. (Núm 3:10; 16:40; 18:7) Um estranho, não levita, isto é, mesmo alguém de qualquer das outras 12 tribos, não podia aproximar-se do tabernáculo para erguê-lo, ou para qualquer outra finalidade que não fosse a sua vinda para oferecer sacrifícios ou para achegar-se aos sacerdotes, na porta da tenda de reunião. (Le 4:24, 27-29) A filha dum sacerdote que se casasse com um estranho, não aronita, não podia comer da contribuição das coisas sagradas, tampouco podia seu marido "estranho". — Le 22:12, 13.

A palavra "estranho" também se aplicava àqueles que se desviassem do que estava em harmonia com a Lei, estando assim alienados de Jeová. Assim, a prostituta é mencionada como "mulher estranha". (Pr 2:16; 5:17; 7:5) Tanto os adoradores de deuses falsos como as próprias deidades são chamados de "estranhos". — Je 2:25; 3:13.

Estranhos, no sentido de pessoas com as quais não se está familiarizado, ou estrangeiros, são também mencionados nas Escrituras Hebraicas. — 1Rs 3:18; Jó 19:15.

Princípios cristãos a respeito de estranhos. Nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, o amor aos estranhos (gr.: xé·nos) é fortemente enfatizado como qualidade que o cristão precisa exercer. O apóstolo Paulo disse: "Não vos esqueçais da hospitalidade [gr.: fi·lo·xe·ní·as, "afeição a estranhos"], porque por meio dela alguns, sem o saberem, hospedaram anjos." (He 13:2) Jesus mostrou que considera a hospitalidade demonstrada a seus irmãos, estranhos ou desconhecidos que talvez sejam na ocasião, como tendo sido demonstrada a ele. (Mt 25:34-46) O apóstolo João escreveu elogiando Gaio por suas boas obras para com homens cristãos, estranhos a Gaio, enviados para visitar a congregação da qual Gaio era membro, e censurou Diótrefes, que não lhes mostrava respeito. — 3Jo 5-10; 1Ti 5:10.

Os cristãos são chamados de "forasteiros" e de "residentes temporários" no sentido de que não fazem parte deste mundo. (Jo 15:19; 1Pe 1:1) São forasteiros no sentido de que não se ajustam às práticas do mundo hostil a Deus. (1Pe 2:11) Os das nações gentias, outrora "estranhos aos pactos da promessa", sem esperança e "sem Deus no mundo", por intermédio de Cristo 'não são mais estranhos e residentes forasteiros', mas 'concidadãos dos santos e membros da família de Deus'. (Ef 2:11, 12, 19) As "outras ovelhas", que Jesus disse que ajuntaria no "um só rebanho", assumem igualmente uma posição separada do mundo, com o favor de Deus e a esperança de vida. — Jo 10:16; Mt 25:33, 34, 46; compare isso com Re 7:9-17.

Aquele que procura reunir a si seguidores religiosos é chamado por Cristo de "ladrão" e "estranho", alguém perigoso para as "ovelhas" de Cristo, e é considerado falso pastor. As verdadeiras "ovelhas" de Jesus não atenderão à voz dum falso pastor, assim como os fiéis israelitas mantinham-se separados do estrangeiro que defendesse deuses estranhos. — Jo 10:1, 5; veja ESTRANGEIRO.

RESPEITO. Concessão de atenção ou deferência especial a alguém considerado digno de estima; o reconhecimento e a devida consideração para com algo, ou especialmente, para com outra pessoa, suas qualidades, suas consecuções, seu cargo, sua posição, ou sua autoridade. Manifestar respeito é "honrar". Várias palavras das línguas originais transmitem a ideia de render honra, respeito ou temor salutar a outros. — Veja HONRA; TEMOR.

Para com Jeová e Seus Representantes. Por ser o Criador, Jeová Deus é digno de receber a máxima honra de todas as suas criaturas inteligentes. (Re 4:11) Tal honra exige que os indivíduos lhe prestem fiel obediência, obediência esta baseada no amor a Ele e no apreço pelo que tem feito em favor deles. (Mal 1:6; 1Jo 5:3) Inclui também a utilização das coisas valiosas da pessoa a favor da adoração verdadeira. — Pr 3:9.

Aquele que se apropria daquilo que pertence ao Criador mostra desrespeito pelas coisas sagradas. Hofni e Fineias, filhos do sumo sacerdote Eli, faziam isso. Eles se apoderavam do melhor de cada oferta feita a Jeová. E Eli, por deixar de tomar medidas firmes contra seus filhos, por causa disso, honrou mais a eles do que a Jeová. — 1Sa 2:12-17, 27-29.

Ao passo que a honra atribuída pelos homens a Jeová Deus é manifestada pela fiel obediência a Ele e pela promoção dos interesses de sua adoração, Deus honra os humanos por abençoá-los e recompensá-los. (1Sa 2:30) Assim, o Rei Davi, que serviu fielmente a Jeová e desejou construir um templo para abrigar a sagrada Arca do Pacto, foi honrado, ou recompensado, com um pacto para um reino. — 2Sa 7:1-16; 1Cr 17:1-14.

Quais porta-vozes de Jeová, os profetas, especialmente Jesus Cristo, Filho de Deus, mereciam respeito. Mas, os israelitas, em vez de lhes renderem isso, maltrataram-nos verbal e fisicamente, chegando ao ponto de matar alguns. O desrespeito de Israel pelos representantes de Jeová atingiu o clímax quando mataram seu Filho. Por este motivo, Jeová empregou os exércitos romanos para executar sua vingança sobre a infiel Jerusalém em 70 EC. — Mt 21:33-44; Mr 12:1-9; Lu 20:9-16; compare isso com Jo 5:23.

Na congregação cristã. Aqueles a quem se confiaram responsabilidades especiais como instrutores na congregação cristã mereciam o apoio e a cooperação dos concrentes. (He 13:7, 17) Eram "dignos de dupla honra", inclusive de ajuda material voluntária pelo trabalho árduo que prestavam para a congregação. — 1Ti 5:17, 18; veja ANCIÃO.

No entanto, todos os cristãos têm direito a ser honrados pelos concrentes. O apóstolo Paulo aconselhou: "Tomai a dianteira em dar honra uns aos outros." (Ro 12:10) Uma vez que cada cristão conhece suas próprias fraquezas e falhas melhor do que seus concrentes, é somente direito que coloque os outros à frente de si mesmo, honrando ou prezando-os altamente devido ao seu trabalho fiel. (Fil 2:1-4) As viúvas necessitadas e merecedoras eram honradas por receberem ajuda material da congregação. — 1Ti 5:3, 9, 10.

Entre os membros da família. A esposa deve corretamente manifestar temor salutar, ou profundo respeito, para com o marido como chefe da família. (Ef 5:33) Isto se harmoniza com a preeminência dada ao homem no arranjo de Deus. Não foi a mulher, e sim o homem que foi criado primeiro, e ele é "imagem e glória de Deus". (1Co 11:7-9; 1Ti 2:11-13) Sara constituiu notável exemplo duma mulher que demonstrava profundo respeito para com o marido. Seu respeito provinha do coração, pois Sara chamava o marido de "senhor", não só para os outros ouvirem, mas até mesmo "no íntimo". — 1Pe 3:1, 2, 5, 6; compare isso com Gên 18:12.

Por outro lado, admoesta-se aos maridos: "Continuai a morar com [suas esposas] da mesma maneira, segundo o conhecimento, atribuindo-lhes honra como a um vaso mais fraco, o feminino, visto que sois também herdeiros com elas do favor imerecido da vida." (1Pe 3:7) Assim, os maridos cristãos ungidos pelo espírito deviam levar em conta que a esposa tinha uma posição idêntica como co-herdeira de Cristo (veja Ro 8:17; Gál 3:28) e devia ser tratada de forma honrosa, reconhecendo-se que tem menos vigor do que os homens.

Em relação aos filhos, os pais são os representantes de Deus, autorizados para treiná-los, discipliná-los e orientá-los. Por conseguinte, os pais têm direito a honra ou respeito. (Êx 20:12; Ef 6:1-3; He 12:9) Isto não se limitaria à obediência do filho e a ele manifestar alta consideração para com os pais. Quando necessário, incluiria cuidar amorosamente dos pais em idade avançada. (Veja Mt 15:4-6.) Na congregação cristã, alguém que deixasse de fornecer a subsistência a um genitor idoso e carente era encarado como pior do que uma pessoa sem fé. (1Ti 5:8) Conforme o apóstolo Paulo indicou a Timóteo, a congregação não devia assumir a carga de cuidar das viúvas que tivessem filhos ou netos com condições de prestar-lhes ajuda material. — 1Ti 5:4.

Para com Governantes e Outros. Também se deve dar honra, ou respeito, a homens que ocupam altos cargos governamentais. O cristão demonstra tal respeito, não para obter algum favor, mas porque essa é a vontade de Deus. Pessoal-mente, tais homens talvez sejam corruptos. (Veja Lu 18:2-6; At 24:24-27.) Mas mostra-se-lhes respeito em consideração à posição responsável representada pelo cargo deles. (Ro 13:1, 2, 7; 1Pe 2:13, 14) De modo similar, os escravos deviam considerar seus amos como dignos de plena honra, executando o trabalho designado e não dando motivos para se causar vitupério ao nome de Deus. — 1Ti 6:1.

Quando outros exigissem que o cristão fornecesse razão para sua esperança, este devia fazê-lo "com temperamento brando e profundo respeito [literalmente: temor]". Embora talvez se propusessem perguntas de forma insultante, o cristão apresentaria suas razões com calma e gentileza, não respondendo de forma irritada, irada ou ressentida. Ainda que não se intimidasse com o temor dos homens, o cristão manifestaria profundo respeito, ou temor salutar, como se estivesse na presença de Jeová Deus e do Senhor Jesus Cristo. (1Pe 3:14, 15, n) Neste sentido, poderia adotar como exemplo os anjos, que, embora maiores em força e em poder, não apresentam acusações em termos ultrajantes. — 2Pe 2:11.

RESPIGA, REBUSCA. O processo de ajuntar de certa safra o que os ceifeiros tivessem deixado, de modo intencional ou não. A lei dada por Deus a Israel orientava de forma específica a Seu povo que não colhesse cabalmente as beiradas dos campos, que não repassasse os ramos da oliveira, depois de ter colhido a safra, por varejar a árvore, nem ajuntasse as sobras dos vinhedos. Mesmo que um molho de cereal fosse deixado inadvertidamente no campo, não se deveria voltar para recolhê-lo. A respiga era o direito dado por Deus ao pobre do país, ao aflito, ao residente forasteiro, ao menino órfão de pai e à viúva. — Le 19:9, 10; De 24:19-21.

O relato de Rute fornece um exemplo notável da aplicação desta provisão amorosa da lei de Deus. Embora tivesse direito de respigar, Rute solicitou permissão do encarregado dos ceifeiros para fazê-lo, e este talvez fosse o costume geral dos respigadores. Rute foi tratada com bondade, sendo que Boaz até mesmo instruiu seus ceifeiros a arrancar algumas espigas das gavelas e deixá-las, para que ela as respigasse. Embora isso facilitasse as coisas para Rute, ainda assim exigiu esforço da parte dela. Ela persistiu diligentemente em respigar atrás dos ceifeiros de Boaz, desde a manhã até a noitinha, sentando-se só um pouquinho na casa e tomando tempo para comer. — Ru 2:5-7, 14-17.

É evidente que este excelente arranjo para os pobres do país, ao passo que incentivava a generosidade, o altruísmo e a confiança na bênção de Jeová, de forma alguma promovia a preguiça. Elucida a declaração de Davi: "Não vi nenhum justo completamente abandonado, nem a sua descendência procurando pão." (Sal 37:25) Por se aproveitarem da provisão que a Lei fazia para eles, até os pobres, em virtude de seu trabalho árduo, não passariam fome, e nem eles nem seus filhos teriam de mendigar o pão.

Usos Figurados e Ilustrativos. Quando os efraimitas acusaram Gideão de não os chamar para a luta no início da batalha contra Midiã, Gideão lhes disse: "Não são as rebuscas de Efraim melhores do que a vindima de Abiezer [a família a que Gideão pertencia]?" Ele interpretou a ilustração por indicar que a parte de Efraim (embora seguisse a batalha inicial) em capturar os príncipes de Midiã, Orebe e Zeebe, era muito maior do que tudo que o próprio Gideão tinha feito. (Jz 8:1-3; 6:11) As Escrituras também se referem à execução dos remanescentes em combate, depois de terminada a parte principal do conflito, como "uma rebusca". (Jz 20:44, 45) Os que são deixados remanescer após a execução do julgamento por Jeová são comparados "à rebusca quando acabou a vindima", e Miqueias fala sobre o restante da herança de Deus no meio do povo moralmente corrupto como "a rebusca da vindima". — Is 24:13; Miq 7:1-8, 18; compare isso com Je 6:9; 49:9, 10.

RESSURREIÇÃO. A palavra grega a·ná·sta·sis significa literalmente "levantar; erguer". Esta palavra é usada com frequência nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs com referência à ressurreição dos mortos. As Escrituras Hebraicas, em Oseias 13:14, citadas pelo apóstolo Paulo (1Co 15:54, 55), falam da abolição da morte e de tornar impotente o Seol (hebr.: she'óhl; gr.: hai·des). O termo she'óhl é traduzido em várias versões por "sepultura" e "cova". Fala-se de os mortos irem para lá. (Gên 37:35; 1Rs 2:6; Ec 9:10) Seu emprego nas Escrituras, junto com o uso de seu equivalente grego, hai·des, nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, mostra que se refere, não a um túmulo individual, mas à sepultura comum da humanidade, o domínio da sepultura. (Ez 32:21-32; Re 20:13; veja HADES; SEOL.) Tornar impotente o Seol significa soltar os presos nele, o que subentende o esvaziamento do domínio da sepultura. Isto, naturalmente, exige uma ressurreição, um levantamento da condição de morte, destituída de vida, ou a saída da sepultura para os que ali estão.

Mediante Jesus Cristo. O precedente mostra que o ensino da ressurreição ocorre nas Escrituras Hebraicas. Todavia, coube a Jesus Cristo 'lançar luz sobre a vida e a incorrupção por intermédio das boas novas'. (2Ti 1:10) Jesus disse: "Eu sou o caminho, e a verdade, e a vida. Ninguém vem ao Pai senão por mim." (Jo 14:6) A forma exata como se teria a vida eterna, e, mais do que isso, a incorrupção para alguns, foi elucidada por meio das boas novas a respeito de Jesus Cristo. O apóstolo afirma que a ressurreição é uma esperança garantida, argumentando: "Ora, se se prega Cristo, que ele tem sido levantado dentre os mortos, como é que alguns entre vós dizem que não há ressurreição dos mortos? Se, deveras, não há ressurreição dos mortos, tampouco Cristo foi levantado. Mas, se Cristo não foi levantado, a nossa pregação certamente é vã e a nossa fé é vã. Além disso, somos também achados como falsas testemunhas de Deus, porque temos dado testemunho contra Deus, de que ele levantou o Cristo, a quem ele, porém, não levantou, se realmente é que os mortos não hão de ser levantados. . . . Outrossim, se Cristo não foi levantado, a vossa fé é inútil; ainda estais em vossos pecados. . . . No entanto, agora Cristo tem sido levantado dentre os mortos, as primícias dos que adormeceram na morte. Pois, visto que a morte é por intermédio dum homem, também a ressurreição dos mortos é por intermédio dum homem." — 1Co 15:12-21.

O próprio Cristo, quando na Terra, realizou ressurreições. (Lu 7:11-15; 8:49-56; Jo 11:38-44) A ressurreição, seguida de vida eterna, só é possível mediante Jesus Cristo. — Jo 5:26.

Um Propósito Garantido de Deus. Jesus Cristo salientou para os saduceus, uma seita que não acreditava na ressurreição, que os escritos de Moisés nas Escrituras Hebraicas, os quais eles possuíam e nos quais afirmavam crer, provavam que existe ressurreição; Jesus arrazoou que quando Jeová afirmou ser "o Deus de Abraão, e o Deus de Isaque, e o Deus de Jacó" (que na realidade estavam mortos), Ele considerava tais homens como se estivessem vivos por causa da ressurreição que Ele, o "Deus, não de mortos, mas de vivos", visava conceder-lhes. Deus, graças a seu poder, "vivifica os mortos e chama as coisas que não são como se fossem". Paulo inclui este fato quando fala sobre a fé de Abraão. — Mt 22:23, 31-33; Ro 4:17.

A capacidade que Deus tem de ressuscitar. Para Aquele que tem a capacidade e o poder de criar o homem à Sua própria imagem, com um corpo perfeito e com o potencial para a plena expressão das maravilhosas características implantadas na personalidade humana, ressuscitar uma pessoa não representaria nenhum problema intransponível. Se os princípios científicos estabelecidos por Deus podem ser utilizados por cientistas para preservar e mais tarde reconstituir uma cena visível e audível por meio de gravações de vídeo, quão fácil é para o grande Soberano Universal e Criador ressuscitar uma pessoa por reconstituir o padrão da mesma personalidade num novo corpo. Concernente à revitalização de Sara para ter um filho em sua velhice, o anjo disse: "Há alguma coisa que seja extraordinária demais para Jeová?" — Gên 18:14; Je 32:17, 27.

Como Surgiu a Necessidade da Ressurreição. No início não havia necessidade duma ressurreição. Esta não fazia parte do propósito original de Deus para a humanidade, pois a morte não era a coisa natural intencionada para os humanos. Antes, Deus indicou que tencionava que a Terra ficasse cheia de humanos vivos, não duma raça deteriorante e morredoura. Sua obra era perfeita, e por isso isenta de falhas, imperfeições ou doenças. (De 32:4) Jeová abençoou o primeiro casal humano, ordenando-lhes que se multiplicassem e enchessem a Terra. (Gên 1:28) Tal bênção certamente não incluía doenças e a morte; Deus não fixou um limite para a vida do homem, mas disse a Adão que a desobediência é que causaria a morte. Isto subentende que, não ocorrendo isso, o homem viveria para sempre. A desobediência acarretaria o desfavor de Deus e removeria Sua bênção, resultando em maldição. — Gên 2:17; 3:17-19.

Consequentemente, a morte se introduziu na raça humana por causa da transgressão de Adão. (Ro 5:12) Devido à pecaminosidade e à resultante imperfeição de seu pai, a descendência de Adão não podia herdar dele a vida eterna; de fato, nem mesmo uma esperança de viver para sempre. "Nem pode a árvore podre produzir fruto excelente", disse Jesus. (Mt 7:17, 18; Jó 14:1, 2) A ressurreição foi introduzida, ou acrescentada, para superar esta incapacidade dos filhos de Adão que desejassem ser obedientes a Deus.

O Objetivo da Ressurreição. A ressurreição demonstra não só o poder e a sabedoria ilimitados de Jeová, mas também seu amor e sua misericórdia, e o vindica como o Preservador daqueles que o servem. (1Sa 2:6) Possuindo o poder de ressuscitar, Deus pode ir ao ponto de demonstrar que seus servos são fiéis a Ele até a morte. Pode responder à acusação de Satanás, que asseverou que "pele por pele, e tudo o que o homem tem dará pela sua alma". (Jó 2:4) Jeová pode permitir que Satanás vá até o pleno limite, chegando até mesmo a matar alguns, no vão esforço de apoiar as falsas acusações dele. (Mt 24:9; Re 2:10; 6:11) Estarem os servos de Jeová dispostos a perder a própria vida no serviço Dele prova que o seu serviço não é prestado por motivos egoístas, mas por amor. (Re 12:11) Também prova que eles reconhecem a Jeová como o Todo-Poderoso, o Soberano Universal e o Deus de amor, capaz de ressuscitá-

los. Prova que prestam devoção exclusiva a Jeová por causa das maravilhosas qualidades dele, e não por razões egoístas, materiais. (Considere algumas das exclamações de Seus servos, conforme registradas em Ro 11:33-36; Re 4:11; 7:12.) A ressurreição é também um meio pelo qual Jeová se certifica de que seu propósito para com a Terra, conforme declarado a Adão, seja executado. — Gên 1:28.

É essencial à felicidade do homem. A ressurreição dos mortos, uma benignidade imerecida da parte de Deus, é essencial para a felicidade da humanidade, e para desfazer todo o dano, todos os sofrimentos e toda a opressão que sobrevieram à raça humana. Tais coisas aconteceram com o homem em resultado de sua imperfeição e doenças, das guerras que ele travou, dos assassínios cometidos e das desumanidades praticadas por pessoas iníquas, instigadas por Satanás, o Diabo. Nossa felicidade não será completa se não crermos na ressurreição. O apóstolo Paulo exprimiu tal sentimento nas seguintes palavras: "Se somente nesta vida temos esperado em Cristo, somos os mais lastimáveis de todos os homens." — 1Co 15:19.

Desde Quando Existe a Esperança da Ressurreição? Depois de Adão ter pecado e trazido a morte sobre ele mesmo e, desta forma, ter introduzido a morte para os que seriam sua posteridade, Deus, ao falar à serpente, disse: "E porei inimizade entre ti e a mulher, e entre o teu descendente [lit.: "semente"] e o seu descendente [lit.: "semente"]. Ele te machucará a cabeça e tu lhe machucarás o calcanhar." — Gên 3:15.

O causador original da morte há de ser removido. Jesus disse aos judeus religiosos que se lhe opunham: "Vós sois de vosso pai, o Diabo, e quereis fazer os desejos de vosso pai. Esse foi um homicida quando começou, e não permaneceu firme na verdade, porque não há nele verdade." (Jo 8:44) Isto constitui evidência de que foi o Diabo que falou, usando a serpente qual instrumento, e que este já era homicida desde o início de seu proceder mentiroso e diabólico. Na visão que Cristo forneceu posteriormente a João, ele revelou que Satanás, o Diabo, também é chamado de "a serpente original". (Re 12:9) Satanás conseguiu seu domínio sobre a humanidade, obtendo influência sobre os filhos de Adão, induzindo o pai deles, Adão, a rebelar-se contra Deus. Assim, na primeira profecia, a de Gênesis 3:15, Jeová forneceu a esperança de que essa Serpente seria removida do caminho. (Veja Ro 16:20.) Não só a cabeça de Satanás há de ser esmagada, mas também todas as obras dele hão de ser desfeitas ou destruídas. (1Jo 3:8, NM; ALA) O cumprimento desta profecia exige, necessariamente, que se elimine a morte introduzida por Adão, incluindo o retorno, mediante uma ressurreição, dos descendentes de Adão que foram para o Seol (Hades), em resultado do pecado dele, cujos efeitos eles herdaram. — 1Co 15:26.

A esperança de liberdade envolve a ressurreição. O apóstolo Paulo descreve a situação que Deus permitiu existir após a queda do homem no pecado, e Seu objetivo final ao fazer isso: "Porque a criação estava sujeita à futilidade [por haver nascido em pecado e todos terem de encarar a morte], não de sua própria vontade [os filhos de Adão foram trazidos ao mundo já encarando esta situação, embora eles próprios não tivessem nenhum controle sobre o que Adão fizera, nem qualquer opção de escolha], mas por intermédio daquele [Deus, em sua sabedoria,] que a sujeitou, à base da esperança de que a própria criação também será liberta da escravização à corrupção e terá a liberdade gloriosa dos filhos de Deus." (Ro 8:20, 21; Sal 51:5) A fim de experimentar o cumprimento desta esperança de gloriosa liberdade, os que morreram precisam ter uma ressurreição; têm de ser libertados da morte e da sepultura. Assim, mediante a Sua promessa da 'semente' que esmagará a cabeça da serpente, Deus providenciou uma maravilhosa esperança para a humanidade. — Veja SEMENTE (DESCENDENTE).

A base de Abraão para mostrar fé. A evidência do registro da Bíblia revela que quando Abraão tentou oferecer seu filho, Isaque, ele tinha fé na capacidade e no propósito de Deus de ressuscitar os mortos. E, conforme declarado em Hebreus 11:17-19, ele deveras recebeu Isaque de volta dos mortos "em sentido ilustrativo". (Gên 22:1-3, 10-13) Abraão tinha base para ter fé na ressurreição devido à promessa de Deus sobre a 'semente'. (Gên 3:15) Também, ele e Sara já haviam experimentado algo comparável a uma ressurreição, quando suas faculdades reprodutivas foram revitalizadas. (Gên 18:9-11; 21:1, 2, 12; Ro 4:19-21) Jó expressou similar fé, dizendo, enquanto sofria intensamente: "Quem dera que me escondesses no Seol, . . . que me fixasses um limite de tempo e te lembrasses de mim! Morrendo o varão vigoroso, pode ele viver novamente? . . . Tu chamarás e eu mesmo te responderei. Terás saudades do trabalho das tuas mãos." — Jó 14:13-15.

Ressurreições antes de se pagar o resgate. Os profetas Elias e Eliseu realizaram ressurreições, quer direta, quer indiretamente. (1Rs 17:17-24; 2Rs 4:32-37; 13:20, 21) Todavia, tais pessoas ressuscitadas morreram outra vez, assim como se deu com aqueles que foram ressuscitados por Jesus quando esteve na Terra, bem como com os que foram ressuscitados pelos apóstolos. Isto revela que nem sempre a ressurreição é para a vida eterna.

Em virtude de ter sido ressuscitado por seu amigo Jesus, Lázaro provavelmente estava vivo em Pentecostes de 33 EC, quando o espírito santo foi derramado e os primeiros para a chamada celestial (He 3:1) foram ungidos e gerados pelo espírito. (At 2:1-4, 33, 38) A ressurreição de Lázaro foi similar às realizadas por Elias e Eliseu. Todavia, provavelmente proporcionou a Lázaro a oportunidade de receber uma ressurreição semelhante à de Cristo, que de outra forma não teria tido. Que notável ato de amor da parte de Jesus! — Jo 11:38-44.

"Uma ressurreição melhor." Havia pessoas fiéis dos tempos antigos a respeito das quais Paulo diz: "Mulheres receberam os seus mortos pela ressurreição; mas outros homens foram torturados porque não queriam aceitar um livramento por meio de algum resgate, a fim de que pudessem alcançar uma ressurreição melhor." (He 11:35) Estes homens demonstravam fé na esperança de ressurreição, sabendo que a vida naquele tempo não era a coisa toda importante. A ressurreição que eles e outros terão, por meio de Cristo, ocorre após a ressurreição e o comparecimento dele no céu, perante o Pai, com o valor de seu sacrifício resgatador. Naquela ocasião, ele recomprou o direito à vida da raça humana, tornando-se o potencial "Pai Eterno". (He 9:11, 12, 24; Is 9:6) Ele é um "espírito vivificante". (1Co 15:45) Ele tem "as chaves da morte e do Hades [Seol]". (Re 1:18) Possuindo agora autoridade para conceder vida eterna, no devido tempo de Deus, Jesus realiza "uma ressurreição melhor", uma vez que os que são beneficiados por ela poderão viver para sempre; nenhum de tais precisa, inevitavelmente, morrer de novo. Se forem obedientes, continuarão vivendo.

A Ressurreição Celestial. Jesus Cristo é chamado de "o primogênito dentre os mortos". (Col 1:18) Ele foi o primeiro a ser ressuscitado para a vida eterna. E sua ressurreição foi "no espírito", para a vida no céu. (1Pe 3:18) Ademais, foi alçado a uma forma de vida mais elevada e a uma posição mais alta do que a que detinha nos céus antes de vir à terra. Foram-lhe concedidas imortalidade e incorrupção, que nenhuma criatura na carne pode ter, e foi tornado "mais alto do que os céus", estando apenas abaixo de Jeová Deus no universo. (He 7:26; 1Ti 6:14-16; Fil 2:9-11; At 2:34; 1Co 15:27) Sua ressurreição foi realizada pelo próprio Jeová Deus. — At 3:15; 5:30; Ro 4:24; 10:9.

Não obstante, durante 40 dias após sua ressurreição, Jesus apareceu a seus discípulos em diferentes ocasiões, em diferentes corpos carnais, assim como anjos tinham aparecido a homens nos tempos antigos. Igual àqueles anjos, ele tinha o poder de constituir e de desintegrar tais corpos carnais à vontade, com o propósito de provar visivelmente que fora ressuscitado. (Mt 28:8-10, 16-20; Lu 24:13-32, 36-43; Jo 20:14-29; Gên 18:1, 2; 19:1; Jos 5:13-15; Jz 6:11, 12; 13:3, 13) Suas muitas aparições, e especialmente sua manifestação a mais de 500 pessoas em certa ocasião, fornecem forte testemunho da veracidade de sua ressurreição. (1Co 15:3-8) Sua ressurreição, tão bem atestada, fornece "garantia a todos os homens" da certeza dum futuro dia de ajuste de contas ou julgamento. — At 17:31.

A ressurreição dos "irmãos" de Cristo. Àqueles que são "os chamados, e escolhidos, e fiéis", os seguidores das pisadas de Cristo, seus "irmãos", que são gerados espiritualmente como "filhos de Deus", promete-se uma ressurreição semelhante à dele. (Re 17:14; Ro 6:5; 8:15, 16; He 2:11) O apóstolo Pedro escreve a concristãos: "Bendito seja o Deus e Pai de nosso Senhor Jesus Cristo, pois, segundo a sua grande misericórdia, ele nos deu um novo nascimento para uma esperança viva por intermédio da ressurreição de Jesus Cristo dentre os mortos, para uma herança incorruptível, e imaculada, e imarcescível. Ela está reservada nos céus para vós." — 1Pe 1:3, 4.

Pedro também descreve a esperança que tais pessoas têm como "promessas preciosas e mui grandiosas, para que, por intermédio delas, vos tornásseis parceiros na natureza divina". (2Pe 1:4) Elas têm de passar por uma mudança de natureza, renunciando à natureza humana para obter a natureza "divina", participando assim com Cristo em sua glória. Precisam passar por uma morte semelhante à de Cristo — mantendo a integridade e desistindo da vida humana para sempre — e então estes recebem por meio duma ressurreição corpos imortais e incorruptíveis como o de Cristo. (Ro 6:3-5; 1Co 15:50-57; 2Co 5:1-3) O apóstolo Paulo explica que não é o corpo que é ressuscitado, mas, antes, compara a experiência deles ao plantio e à germinação duma semente, no sentido de que "Deus lhe dá um corpo assim como lhe agrada". (1Co 15:35-40) É a alma, a pessoa, que é ressuscitada com um corpo que se ajusta ao ambiente em que Deus a ressuscita.

No caso de Jesus Cristo, ele abriu mão de sua vida humana como sacrifício de resgate para o benefício da humanidade. O Salmo 40 é aplicado a ele pelo inspirado escritor do livro de Hebreus, que apresenta a Jesus como dizendo, quando entrou "no mundo" como o Messias de Deus: "Sacrifício e oferta não quiseste, porém, preparaste-me um corpo." (He 10:5) O próprio Jesus disse: "De fato, o pão que eu hei de dar é a minha carne a favor da vida do mundo." (Jo 6:51) Segue-se que Cristo não podia reassumir seu corpo novamente na ressurreição, desta forma reavendo o sacrifício oferecido a Deus em favor da humanidade. Ademais, Cristo não mais iria morar na Terra. Seu "lar" encontra-se nos céus, junto com seu Pai, que não é carne, e sim espírito. (Jo 14:3; 4:24) Jesus Cristo, por conseguinte, recebeu um glorioso corpo imortal, incorruptível, pois "ele é o reflexo da . . . glória [de Jeová] e a representação exata do seu próprio ser, e sustenta todas as coisas pela palavra do seu poder; e, depois de ter feito uma purificação pelos nossos pecados, assentou-se à direita da Majestade nas alturas. De modo que ele se tornou melhor do que os anjos [que são, eles próprios, poderosas pessoas espirituais], a ponto de ter herdado um nome mais excelente do que o deles". — He 1:3, 4; 10:12, 13.

Os irmãos fiéis de Cristo, que se juntam a ele nos céus, renunciam à vida humana. O apóstolo Paulo mostra que eles têm de ter novos corpos, modificados, ou remodelados, para o seu novo meio ambiente: "Quanto a nós, a nossa cidadania existe nos céus, donde também aguardamos ansiosamente um salvador, o Senhor Jesus Cristo, o qual remodelará o nosso corpo humilhado para ser conforme ao seu corpo glorioso, segundo a operação do poder que ele tem, sim, de sujeitar todas as coisas a si mesmo." — Fil 3:20, 21.

A época da ressurreição celestial. A ressurreição celestial dos co-herdeiros de Cristo começa depois de Jesus Cristo voltar na glória celestial, para dar primeiro atenção a seus irmãos espirituais. O próprio Cristo é chamado de as "primícias dos que adormeceram na morte". Paulo diz então que cada um será ressuscitado em sua própria categoria: "Cristo, as primícias, depois os que pertencem a Cristo durante a sua presença." (1Co 15:20, 23) Estes, como "a casa de Deus", têm estado sob julgamento no decurso de sua vida cristã, começando com os primeiros dentre eles em Pentecostes. (1Pe 4:17) Eles constituem "certas [literalmente: algumas] primícias". (Tg 1:18, Int; Re 14:4) Jesus Cristo pode ser comparado às primícias da cevada oferecidas pelos israelitas em 16 de nisã ("Cristo, as primícias"), e seus irmãos espirituais, como "primícias" ("certas primícias"), podem ser comparados às primícias do trigo oferecidas no dia de Pentecostes, no 50.º dia após 16 de nisã. — Le 23:4-12, 15-20.

Estes têm estado sob julgamento, de modo que, quando Cristo retorna, é hora de dar a recompensa a eles, seus fiéis ungidos, assim como prometeu a seus 11 apóstolos fiéis na noite anterior à sua morte: "Vou embora para vos preparar um lugar. Também, . . . virei novamente e vos acolherei a mim, para que, onde eu estiver, vós também estejais." — Jo 14:2, 3; Lu 19:12-23; compare isso com 2Ti 4:1, 8; Re 11:17, 18..

"O casamento do Cordeiro." Estes, como grupo, são chamados de sua (prospectiva) "noiva" (Re 21:9); acham-se prometidos a ele em casamento, e precisam ser ressuscitados aos céus, a fim de participarem do "casamento do Cordeiro". (2Co 11:2; Re 19:7, 8) O apóstolo Paulo aguardava obter a ressurreição celestial. (2Ti 4:8) Quando ocorre a "presença" de Cristo, há alguns de seus irmãos espirituais ainda vivos na Terra, "convidados à refeição noturna do casamento do Cordeiro", mas os dentre eles que já morreram recebem atenção primeiro, por meio duma ressurreição. (Re 19:9) Isto é explicado em 1 Tessalonicenses 4:15, 16: "Pois, nós vos dizemos pela palavra de Jeová o seguinte: que nós, os viventes, que sobrevivermos até a presença do Senhor, de modo algum precederemos os que adormeceram na morte; porque o próprio Senhor descerá do céu com uma chamada dominante, com voz de arcanjo e com a trombeta de Deus, e os que estão mortos em união com Cristo se levantarão primeiro."

Paulo acrescenta então: "Depois nós, os viventes, que sobrevivermos, seremos juntamente com eles arrebatados em nuvens, para encontrar o Senhor no ar; e assim estaremos sempre com o Senhor." (1Te 4:17) Dessa forma, quando encerram fielmente sua carreira terrestre na morte, os remanescentes que foram convidados à "refeição noturna do casamento do Cordeiro" são imediatamente ressuscitados para juntar-se aos comembros da classe da noiva no céu. Não 'adormecem na morte' no sentido de aguardar durante um longo período de sono, como se deu no caso dos apóstolos, mas, ao morrerem, são "mudados, num momento, num piscar de olhos, durante a última trombeta. Pois a trombeta soará, e os mortos serão levantados incorruptíveis, e nós seremos mudados." (1Co 15:51, 52) Evidentemente, porém, "o casamento do Cordeiro" ocorre só depois de o julgamento ter sido executado sobre "Babilônia, a Grande". (Re 18) Após descrever a destruição desta "grande meretriz", Revelação (Apocalipse) 19:7 diz: "Alegremo-nos e estejamos cheios de alegria, e demos-lhe a glória, porque chegou o casamento do Cordeiro e a sua esposa já se preparou." Quando todos os 144.000 tiverem sido finalmente aprovados e "selados" como fiéis, e tiverem sido ressuscitados aos céus, o casamento poderá ser realizado.

A primeira ressurreição. Revelação 20:5, 6 se refere à ressurreição daqueles que reinarão junto com Cristo como "a primeira ressurreição". O apóstolo Paulo fala desta primeira ressurreição também como "a ressurreição a ocorrer mais cedo dentre os mortos [literalmente: a dentre-ressurreição dentre os mortos]". (Fil 3:11, NM, Ro, Int) Sobre a expressão aqui usada por Paulo, Word Pictures in the New Testament (Quadros Verbais no Novo Testamento, 1931, Vol. IV, p. 454), de Robertson, diz: "Pelo visto, Paulo está pensando aqui somente na ressurreição dos crentes dentre os mortos, e, assim, duplica o ex [dentre] (ten exanastasin ten ek nekron). Paulo, com tal linguagem, não está negando uma ressurreição geral, mas está enfatizando a dos crentes." A obra Commentaries (Comentários), de Charles Ellicott (1865, Vol. II, p. 87), observa sobre Filipenses 3:11: "'A ressurreição dentre os mortos'; i.e., como sugere o contexto, a primeira ressurreição (Rev. xx. 5), quando, na vinda do Senhor, os mortos Nele ressuscitarão primeiro (1Tessalon. iv. 16), e os vivos serão arrebatados para encontrar-se com Ele nas nuvens (1Tess. iv. 17); compare com Lucas xx. 35. A primeira ressurreição incluirá somente os verdadeiros crentes, e, aparentemente, antecederá a segunda, a dos não crentes e dos descrentes, na sequência do tempo . . . Qualquer referência aqui a uma ressurreição meramente ética (Cocceius) é inteiramente fora de propósito." Um dos significados básicos da palavra e·xa·ná·sta·sis é levantar-se da cama pela manhã; assim, bem que pode representar uma ressurreição que ocorra cedo, também chamada de "primeira ressurreição". A tradução, em inglês, de Rotherham, de Filipenses 3:11 reza: "Se, de todo o modo, eu puder avançar até a ressurreição mais cedo, que é de entre os mortos."

A Ressurreição Terrestre. Enquanto Jesus estava pregado na estaca, um dos malfeitores junto com ele, observando que Jesus não merecia castigo, solicitou: "Jesus, lembra-te de mim quando entrares no teu reino." Jesus respondeu: "Deveras, eu te digo hoje: Estarás comigo no Paraíso." (Lu 23:42, 43) Em outras palavras, Jesus disse: 'Neste dia obscuro, quando a minha reivindicação a um reino é altamente improvável, a julgar pelas aparências, tu expressas fé. Deveras, quando eu entrar no meu reino, vou lembrar-me de ti.' (Veja PARAÍSO.) Isto exige uma ressurreição para o malfeitor. Tal homem não era um fiel seguidor de Jesus Cristo. Ele se havia empenhado no erro, na violação da lei, merecendo a pena de morte. (Lu 23:40, 41) Por conseguinte, não podia esperar ser um dos que obteriam a primeira ressurreição. Adicionalmente, morreu 40 dias antes de Jesus ascender ao céu, e, assim, antes de Pentecostes, ou 10 dias depois de tal ascensão, quando Deus, mediante Jesus, ungiu os primeiros membros daqueles que recebem a ressurreição celestial. — At 1:3; 2:1-4, 33.

Jesus disse que o malfeitor estaria no Paraíso. Tal palavra significa "um parque ou lugar aprazível". A Septuaginta traduziu a palavra hebraica para "jardim" (gan), como em Gênesis 2:8, pelo vocábulo grego pa·rá·dei·sos. O paraíso em que o malfeitor estaria não seria o "paraíso de Deus" prometido "àquele que vencer", em Revelação 2:7, pois o malfeitor não era um vencedor do mundo junto com Jesus Cristo. (Jo 16:33) Por conseguinte, o malfeitor não estaria no Reino celestial qual membro deste (Lu 22:28-30), mas seria um súdito do Reino quando aqueles que participassem da "primeira ressurreição", como reis da parte de Deus e de Cristo, se sentassem em tronos, governando junto com Cristo por mil anos. — Re 20:4-6.

'Os justos e os injustos.' O apóstolo Paulo disse a um grupo de judeus, que também nutriam a esperança duma ressurreição, que "há de haver uma ressurreição tanto de justos como de injustos". — At 24:15.

A Bíblia torna claro quem são os "justos". Antes de mais nada, aqueles que irão obter uma ressurreição celestial são declarados justos. — Ro 8:28-30.

Também, a Bíblia chama homens fiéis do passado, tais como Abraão, de justos. (Gên 15:6; Tg 2:21) Muitos desses homens estão alistados em Hebreus, capítulo 11, e sobre eles o escritor diz: "Contudo, embora todos estes recebessem testemunho por intermédio de sua fé, não obtiveram o cumprimento da promessa, visto que Deus previu algo melhor para nós [cristãos gerados pelo espírito e ungidos, iguais a Paulo], a fim de que eles não fossem aperfeiçoados à parte de nós." (He 11:39, 40) Assim, o aperfeiçoamento deles se dará após o daqueles que tomam parte na "primeira ressurreição".

A seguir há os da "grande multidão" descrita em Revelação, capítulo 7, que não são membros dos 144.000 "selados", e que consequentemente não têm o "penhor" do espírito como os gerados pelo espírito. (Ef 1:13, 14; 2Co 5:5) São descritos como 'saindo da grande tribulação' quais sobreviventes dela; isto parece situar o ajuntamento desse grupo nos últimos dias, pouco antes dessa tribulação. Estes são justos por intermédio da fé, trajados de compridas vestes brancas lavadas no sangue do Cordeiro. (Re 7:1, 9-17) Como classe, não precisarão ser ressuscitados, mas os fiéis desse grupo que morrerem antes da grande tribulação serão ressuscitados no tempo devido de Deus.

Também, há muitos "injustos" sepultados no Seol (Hades), a sepultura comum da humanidade, ou no "mar", sepulturas aquosas. O julgamento destes, junto com os "justos" ressuscitados na Terra, é descrito em Revelação 20:12, 13: "E eu vi os mortos, os grandes e os pequenos, em pé diante do trono, e abriram-se rolos. Mas outro rolo foi aberto; é o rolo da vida. E os mortos foram julgados pelas coisas escritas nos rolos, segundo as suas ações. E o mar entregou os mortos nele, e a morte e o Hades entregaram os mortos neles, e foram julgados individualmente segundo as suas ações."

A época da ressurreição terrestre. Notamos que esse julgamento é colocado na Bíblia no relato dos eventos que ocorrem durante o Reinado Milenar de Cristo, junto com seus reis e sacerdotes associados. Estes, disse o apóstolo Paulo, "julgarão o mundo". (1Co 6:2) "Os grandes e os pequenos", de todas as camadas sociais, estarão ali, a fim de serem julgados sem parcialidade. São "julgados pelas coisas escritas nos rolos" que então serão abertos. Isto não se poderia referir aos registros de sua vida passada, nem a um conjunto de regras que os julgassem à base de sua vida anterior. Uma vez que "o salário pago pelo pecado é a morte", estes, por terem morrido, já receberam o salário por seu pecado passado. (Ro 6:7, 23) Eles são então ressuscitados para que possam demonstrar sua atitude para com Deus, e se desejam ou não aceitar o sacrifício resgatador de Jesus Cristo oferecido a favor de todos. (Mt 20:28; Jo 3:16) Embora seus pecados passados não sejam levados em conta, eles necessitam do resgate para soerguê-los à perfeição. Precisam transformar a mente de seu anterior modo de vida e a maneira de pensar em harmonia com a vontade e os regulamentos de Deus para a Terra e seus habitantes. Portanto, os "rolos" evidentemente delineiam a vontade e a lei de Deus para eles durante aquele Dia do Juízo, a fé e a obediência a estas coisas constituindo a base para o julgamento e para que, por fim, seus nomes sejam escritos de forma indelével no "rolo da vida".

Ressurreição para a Vida e para o Julgamento. Jesus forneceu a confortadora garantia à humanidade: "Vem a hora, e agora é, em que os mortos ouvirão a voz do Filho de Deus, e os que tiverem dado ouvidos viverão. . . . Não vos maravilheis disso, porque vem a hora em que todos os que estão nos túmulos memoriais ouvirão a sua voz e sairão, os que fizeram boas coisas, para uma ressurreição de vida, os que praticaram coisas ruins, para uma ressurreição de julgamento." — Jo 5:25-29.

Um julgamento de condenação. Nessas palavras de Jesus, a palavra "julgamento" traduz a palavra grega krí·sis. De acordo com Parkhurst, os significados desta palavra nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs são como segue: "I. Julgamento. . . . II. Julgamento, justiça, Mat. xxiii. 23. Cp. com xii. 20. . . . III. Julgamento de condenação, condenação, perdição. Marcos iii. 29. João v. 24, 29. . . . IV. A causa ou a base da condenação ou da punição. João iii. 19. V. Determinado tribunal de justiça entre os judeus, . . . Mat. v. 21, 22." — A Greek and English Lexicon to the New Testament (Léxico Grego e Inglês do Novo Testamento), Londres, 1845, p. 342.

Se Jesus, ao falar de julgamento, queria dizer um julgamento cujo resultado poderia ser a vida, então não haveria nenhum contraste entre este e a "ressurreição de vida". Portanto, o contexto indica que Jesus, com a expressão "julgamento", se referia a um julgamento condenatório.

Os "mortos" que ouviram Jesus falar na Terra. Ao considerar as palavras de Jesus, notamos que, quando Jesus falava, alguns dos "mortos" ouviam a voz dele. Pedro empregou uma linguagem similar ao dizer: "De fato, com este objetivo se declararam as boas novas também aos mortos, para que fossem julgados quanto à carne, do ponto de vista dos homens, mas vivessem quanto ao espírito, do ponto de vista de Deus." (1Pe 4:6) Isto se dá porque os que ouviam a Cristo estavam 'mortos em suas falhas e pecados' antes de ouvirem, mas começariam a 'viver' em sentido espiritual por causa da fé nas boas novas. — Ef 2:1; compare isso com Mt 8:22; 1Ti 5:6.

João 5:29 se refere ao fim do período de julgamento. Mas, algo muito importante a se observar, algo que nos ajuda a determinar o aspecto da época envolvida nas palavras de Jesus sobre a 'ressurreição de vida e a ressurreição de julgamento', é aquilo que ele disse antes, no mesmo contexto, ao falar dos que então viviam, e que estavam espiritualmente mortos (conforme explicado no subtítulo 'Passar da Morte Para a Vida'): "Vem a hora, e agora é, em que os mortos ouvirão a voz do Filho de Deus, e os que tiverem dado ouvidos [literalmente, palavra por palavra: "os (aqueles) tendo ouvido"] viverão." (Jo 5:25, Int) Isto indica que ele estava falando, não simplesmente de alguém ouvir audivelmente a sua voz, mas, antes, daqueles que, "tendo ouvido", a saber, aqueles que, depois de ouvirem, aceitam como verdade aquilo que ouvem. Os termos "ouvir" e "escutar" são usados com muita frequência na Bíblia com o significado de "dar ouvidos" ou "obedecer". (Veja OBEDIÊNCIA.) Aqueles que se mostrarem obedientes viverão. (Compare o emprego do mesmo termo grego [a·koú·o], "ouvir" ou "escutar", em Jo 6:60; 8:43, 47; 10:3, 27.) Eles são julgados, não pelo que fizeram antes de ouvir a voz dele, mas pelo que fazem depois de ouvi-la.

Por conseguinte, Jesus estava evidentemente adotando uma posição similar, quanto ao tempo, ao falar de "os que fizeram boas coisas" e de "os que praticaram coisas ruins", a saber, uma posição no fim do período de julgamento, como se olhasse em retrospectiva, ou em análise, as ações praticadas por estas pessoas ressuscitadas depois de terem tido a oportunidade de obedecer ou de desobedecer às "coisas escritas nos rolos". Somente no fim do período de julgamento é que ficaria demonstrado quem tinha praticado o bem ou o mal. O resultado para "os que fizeram boas coisas" (segundo as "coisas escritas nos rolos") seria a recompensa de vida; para "os que praticaram coisas ruins", um julgamento condenatório. A ressurreição resultaria ser, quer para a vida, quer para a condenação.

Na Bíblia, é comum o costume de declarar coisas, encarando-as do ponto de vista do resultado, ou de declará-las como já realizadas, considerando-as em retrospectiva. Pois Deus é "Aquele que desde o princípio conta o final e desde outrora as coisas que não se fizeram". (Is 46:10) Judas adota este mesmo ponto de vista ao falar de homens corruptos que se infiltraram na congregação, dizendo a respeito deles: "Ai deles, porque foram pela vereda de Caim e se arremeteram no proceder errôneo de Balaão, para uma recompensa, e pereceram [literalmente: eles se autodestruíram] na conversa rebelde de Corá!" (Ju 11) Algumas profecias empregam linguagem similar. — Veja Is 40:1, 2; 46:1; Je 48:1-4.

Assim sendo, o ponto de vista adotado em João 5:29 não é idêntico ao de Atos 24:15, em que Paulo menciona a "ressurreição tanto de justos como de injustos". Paulo se refere claramente aos que detêm uma posição justa ou injusta perante Deus durante esta vida, e que serão ressuscitados. Eles são "os que estão nos túmulos memoriais". (Jo 5:28; veja TÚMULO MEMORIAL.) Em João 5:29, Jesus considera tais pessoas depois de saírem dos túmulos memoriais, e depois que elas, pelo seu proceder durante o reinado de Jesus Cristo e de seus reis e sacerdotes associados, se mostrarem quer obedientes, com a "vida" eterna por recompensa, quer desobedientes, e portanto merecedoras do "julgamento (condenação)" da parte de Deus.

A Alma É Recuperada do Seol. O Rei Davi, de Israel, escreveu: "Sempre antevi o Senhor diante de minha face; pois ele está à minha mão direita, para que eu não seja movido . . . ademais, também minha carne repousará em esperança: porque não deixarás minha alma no inferno [Seol], nem tampouco permitirás que teu Santo veja a corrupção." (Sal 15:8-10, LXX, Bagster [16:8-11, NM]) No dia de Pentecostes de 33 EC, o apóstolo Pedro aplicou este salmo a Jesus Cristo, ao declarar aos judeus a verdade sobre a ressurreição de Cristo. (At 2:25-31) Portanto, as Escrituras, tanto as Hebraicas como as Gregas, mostram que foi a "alma" de Jesus Cristo que foi ressuscitada. Jesus Cristo foi "morto na carne, mas vivificado no espírito". (1Pe 3:18) "Carne e sangue não podem herdar o reino de Deus", disse o apóstolo Paulo. (1Co 15:50) Isso excluiria também carne e ossos. Carne e ossos não possuem vida a menos que tenham sangue, pois o sangue contém a "alma", ou é a coisa necessária para a vida da criatura constituída de carne. — Gên 9:4.

Por todas as Escrituras torna-se evidente que não existe nenhuma "alma imaterial" separada e distinta do corpo. A alma morre quando o corpo morre. Até mesmo sobre Jesus Cristo está escrito que "esvaziou a sua alma até a própria morte". Sua alma estava no Seol. Durante esse período, ele não existia como alma ou pessoa. (Is 53:12; At 2:27; compare isso com Ez 18:4; veja ALMA.) Por conseguinte, na ressurreição, não há uma nova junção da alma com o corpo. Contudo, quer a pessoa seja espiritual, quer terrestre, precisa ter um corpo ou organismo, pois todas as pessoas, celestiais ou terrestres, possuem corpos. Para voltar a ser uma pessoa, aquele que morreu tem de possuir um corpo, seja físico, seja espiritual. A Bíblia diz: "Se há corpo físico, há também um espiritual." — 1Co 15:44.

Mas será que o velho corpo é rejuntado na ressurreição? Ou trata-se duma réplica precisa do corpo anterior, feita exatamente como era quando a pessoa morreu? As Escrituras respondem negativamente quando tratam da ressurreição dos irmãos ungidos de Cristo para a vida nos céus: "Não obstante, alguém dirá: 'Como hão de ser levantados os mortos? Sim, com que sorte de corpo hão de vir?' Ó desarrazoado! Aquilo que semeias não é vivificado a menos que primeiro morra; e, quanto ao que semeias, semeias, não o corpo que se há de desenvolver, mas o mero grão, seja de trigo, seja de qualquer dos outros; mas Deus lhe dá um corpo assim como lhe agrada, e a cada uma das sementes o seu próprio corpo." — 1Co 15:35-38.

Os celestiais recebem um corpo espiritual, pois apraz a Deus que tenham corpos apropriados para o meio ambiente celestial. Mas, àqueles a quem Jeová se agrada em levantar para uma ressurreição terrestre, que corpo Ele lhes dá? Não poderia ser o mesmo corpo, tendo exatamente os mesmos átomos. Se um homem morre e é sepultado, o seu corpo, mediante o processo de decomposição, converte-se em substâncias que podem ser absorvidas pela vegetação. Pessoas talvez comam tal vegetação. Os elementos, os átomos daquela pessoa original, acham-se agora em muitas outras pessoas. Na ressurreição, é óbvio que os mesmos áto-mos não podem estar na pessoa original e em todas as outras, ao mesmo tempo.

Nem é o corpo ressuscitado, necessariamente, um corpo feito para ser a exata réplica do corpo no instante da morte. Caso uma pessoa tenha sofrido mutilação de seu corpo antes de morrer, voltará da mesma forma? Isso seria desarrazoado, pois tal pessoa talvez não estivesse nem em condições de ouvir e de fazer as "coisas escritas nos rolos". (Re 20:12) Digamos que a pessoa morreu de sangria. Voltaria ela sem sangue? Não, pois não poderia viver num corpo terrestre sem sangue. (Le 17:11, 14) Antes, Deus lhe dará um corpo conforme Lhe agradar. Visto que a vontade e o prazer de Deus são de que a pessoa ressuscitada obedeça às "coisas escritas nos rolos", este corpo teria de ser saudável, com todas as suas faculdades. (Embora o corpo de Lázaro já estivesse parcialmente decomposto, Jesus o ressuscitou com um corpo inteiro, saudável. [Jo 11:39]) Desta forma, a pessoa poderá ser considerada, apropriada e justificadamente, como responsável pelos seus atos durante o período de julgamento. Todavia, tal pessoa não será perfeita ao ser trazida de volta, pois terá de exercer fé no resgate de Cristo e receber as subministrações sacerdotais de Cristo e de seu "sacerdócio real". — 1Pe 2:9; Re 5:10; 20:6.

'Passar da Morte para a Vida.' Jesus falou daqueles que 'têm a vida eterna' porque ouvem as palavras dele com fé e obediência, e então creem no Pai que o enviou. Ele disse a respeito de cada um destes: "Ele não entra em julgamento, mas tem passado da morte para a vida. Digo-vos em toda a verdade: Vem a hora, e agora é, em que os mortos ouvirão a voz do Filho de Deus, e os que tiverem dado ouvidos viverão." — Jo 5:24, 25.

Aqueles que têm 'passado da morte para a vida agora' não seriam aqueles que tinham morrido literalmente e se achavam nos túmulos de verdade. Na ocasião em que Jesus falou, toda a humanidade se achava sob a condenação de morte perante Deus, o Juiz de todos. Assim, aqueles a quem Jesus se referia eram evidentemente pessoas na Terra que haviam estado mortas em sentido espiritual. Jesus deve ter-se referido a pessoas espiritualmente mortas quando disse ao filho judeu que desejava primeiro ir para casa e sepultar seu pai: "Persiste em seguir-me e deixe que os mortos enterrem seus mortos." — Mt 8:21, 22.

Os que se tornam cristãos com verdadeira crença achavam-se outrora entre os espiritualmente mortos do mundo. O apóstolo Paulo lembrou a congregação desse fato, dizendo: "É a vós que Deus vivificou, embora estivésseis mortos nas vossas falhas e pecados, nos quais andastes outrora segundo o sistema de coisas deste mundo . . . Mas Deus, que é rico em misericórdia, pelo seu grande amor com que nos amou, vivificou-nos junto com o Cristo, mesmo quando estávamos mortos nas falhas — por benignidade imerecida é que fostes salvos — e ele nos levantou junto e nos assentou junto nos lugares celestiais, em união com Cristo Jesus." — Ef 2:1, 2, 4-6.

Assim, por não mais andarem nas falhas e nos pecados contra Deus, e por causa de sua fé em Cristo, Jeová retirou a condenação que recaía sobre eles. Ele os ressuscitou da morte espiritual e deu-lhes esperança de vida eterna. (1Pe 4:3-6) O apóstolo João descreve tal transferência da condição morta nas falhas e nos pecados para a vida espiritual nas seguintes palavras: "Não vos maravilheis, irmãos, de que o mundo vos odeie. Nós sabemos que temos passado da morte para a vida porque amamos os irmãos." — 1Jo 3:13, 14.

Uma Benignidade Imerecida de Deus. A provisão de ressurreição para a humanidade é, deveras, uma benignidade imerecida de Jeová Deus, pois ele não tinha a obrigação de providenciar uma ressurreição. O amor pelo mundo da humanidade induziu-o a dar seu Filho unigênito para que milhões, sim, até mesmo bilhões de pessoas que morreram sem ter verdadeiro conhecimento de Deus pudessem ter a oportunidade de conhecê-lo e amá-lo, e para que os que o amam e servem pudessem ter esta esperança e este incentivo à perseverança fiel, mesmo até a morte. (Jo 3:16) O apóstolo Paulo conforta concristãos com a esperança da ressurreição, escrevendo à congregação em Tessalônica sobre membros da congregação que haviam morrido e que tinham a esperança duma ressurreição celestial: "Além disso, irmãos, não queremos que sejais ignorantes no que se refere aos que estão dormindo na morte, para que não estejais pesarosos como os demais que não têm esperança. Pois, se a nossa fé é que Jesus morreu e foi levantado de novo, então, também, Deus trará com ele os que adormeceram na morte por intermédio de Jesus." — 1Te 4:13, 14.

Do mesmo modo, no que se refere aos fiéis a Deus que morreram com a esperança de viver na Terra sob o Reino messiânico de Deus, e também a outros que não chegaram a conhecer a Deus, os cristãos não devem ficar pesarosos como as demais pessoas que não têm esperança. Quando o Seol (Hades) for aberto, os que nele estiverem sairão. A Bíblia menciona muitos que foram para lá, inclusive pessoas dos antigos Egito, Assíria, Elão, Meseque, Tubal, Edom e Sídon. (Ez 32:18-31) Jesus indicou que pelo menos algumas das pessoas anteriormente não arrependidas de Betsaida, Corazim e Cafarnaum estariam presentes no Dia do Juízo. Embora sua atitude anterior tornaria bem difícil seu arrependimento, teriam oportunidade para isso. — Mt 11:20-24; Lu 10:13-15.

O resgate é aplicado a todos para os quais foi fornecido. A grandeza e a expansividade do amor e da benignidade imerecida de Deus em dar Seu Filho para que 'quem exercer fé no Filho tenha vida' não limitariam a aplicação do resgate apenas àqueles a quem Deus escolhe para a chamada celestial. (Jo 3:16) Com efeito, o sacrifício de resgate de Jesus Cristo não seria aplicado por completo se se restringisse aos que se tornam membros do Reino do céu. Deixaria de realizar o pleno propósito para o qual Deus o providenciou, pois o objetivo de Deus era que o Reino tivesse súditos terrestres. Jesus Cristo é sumo sacerdote, não só sobre os subsacerdotes com ele, mas também para o mundo da humanidade que viverá quando seus associados também governarem quais reis e sacerdotes junto com ele. (Re 20:4, 6) Ele foi "provado em todos os sentidos como nós mesmos [seus irmãos espirituais], porém, sem pecado". Por conseguinte, pode condoer-se das fraquezas das pessoas que tentam servir conscienciosamente a Deus; e seus reis e sacerdotes associados têm sido provados da mesma forma. (He 4:15, 16; 1Pe 4:12, 13) A favor de quem seriam sacerdotes, senão a favor da humanidade, incluindo os ressuscitados, durante o Reinado Milenar e o período de julgamento?

Os servos de Deus têm ansiosamente aguardado o dia em que a ressurreição concluirá seu trabalho. No desenrolar de seus propósitos, Deus fixou exatamente o tempo apropriado para isso, quando Sua sabedoria e Sua longanimidade serão plenamente vindicadas. (Ec 3:1-8) Ele e seu Filho, ambos sendo capazes e estando dispostos a realizar a ressurreição, a completarão naquele tempo determinado.

Jeová aguarda alegremente a ressurreição. Jeová e seu Filho devem estar aguardando com grande alegria a realização dessa obra. Jesus indicou esta disposição e este desejo quando um leproso lhe suplicou: "'Se apenas quiseres, podes tornar-me limpo.' Em vista disso, [Jesus se] penalizou, e, estendendo a mão, tocou nele e disse-lhe: 'Eu quero. Torna-te limpo.' E a lepra desapareceu-lhe imediatamente e ele se tornou limpo." Este comovente incidente, que demonstra a benevolência de Cristo para com a humanidade, foi registrado por três dos escritores evangélicos. (Mr 1:40-42; Mt 8:2, 3; Lu 5:12, 13) E quanto ao amor e à disposição de Jeová em ajudar a humanidade, lembramo-nos novamente das palavras do fiel Jó: "Morrendo o varão vigoroso, pode ele viver novamente? . . . Tu chamarás e eu mesmo te responderei. Terás saudades do trabalho das tuas mãos." — Jó 14:14, 15.

Alguns não Serão Ressuscitados. Embora seja verdade que o sacrifício de resgate de Cristo foi fornecido para a humanidade em geral, Jesus indicou, no entanto, que a sua aplicação real seria limitada, ao dizer: "Assim como o Filho do homem não veio para que se lhe ministrasse, mas para ministrar e dar a sua alma como resgate em troca de muitos." (Mt 20:28) Jeová Deus tem o direito de se recusar a aceitar um resgate em favor de qualquer pessoa que ele considere indigna. O resgate de Cristo cobre os pecados que a pessoa tenha por ser filho do pecador Adão, mas ela pode aumentá-los por seu próprio proceder pecaminoso deliberado e voluntário, e, assim, morrer por tal pecado, que não é coberto pelo resgate.

Pecado contra o espírito santo. Jesus Cristo disse que aquele que pecasse contra o espírito santo não seria perdoado no atual sistema de coisas, nem no vindouro. (Mt 12:31, 32) Alguém a quem Deus julgasse ter pecado contra o espírito santo no atual sistema de coisas, por conseguinte, não se beneficiaria duma ressurreição, uma vez que seus pecados jamais seriam perdoados, tornando inútil para ele a ressurreição. Jesus proferiu julgamento contra Judas Iscariotes ao chamá-lo de "filho da destruição". O resgate não se aplicaria a ele, e, visto que a sua destruição já fora judicialmente determinada, ele não seria ressuscitado. — Jo 17:12.

A seus opositores, os líderes religiosos judeus, Jesus disse: "Como haveis de fugir do julgamento da Geena [símbolo da destruição eterna]?" (Mt 23:33; veja GEENA.) Suas palavras indicam que tais pessoas, se não tomassem medidas para voltar-se para Deus antes de morrer, receberiam um julgamento final adverso. Neste caso, uma ressurreição de nada lhes serviria. Isto também parece dar-se no caso do "homem que é contra a lei". — 2Te 2:3, 8; veja HOMEM QUE É CONTRA A LEI.

Paulo menciona os que conheciam a verdade, tinham sido partícipes do espírito santo, e depois se afastaram, como se colocando numa condição em que é impossível 'reanimá-los novamente ao arrependimento, porque eles de novo pregam para si mesmos o Filho de Deus numa estaca e o expõem ao opróbrio público'. O resgate não mais podia ajudá-los; por isso não seriam ressuscitados. O apóstolo prossegue comparando tais pessoas a um campo que só produz espinhos e abrolhos, e que, portanto, é rejeitado e acaba sendo queimado. Isso ilustra o futuro diante deles: o completo aniquilamento. — He 6:4-8.

Também, Paulo fala daqueles que 'praticam o pecado deliberadamente, depois de terem recebido o conhecimento exato da verdade, [que] não há mais nenhum sacrifício pelos pecados, mas há uma certa expectativa terrível de julgamento e há um ciúme ardente que vai consumir os que estão em oposição'. Daí, ele ilustra: "Qualquer homem que tiver desconsiderado a lei de Moisés morre sem compaixão, pelo testemunho de dois ou três. De quanto mais severa punição, achais, será contado digno aquele que tiver pisado o Filho de Deus e que tiver considerado de pouco valor o sangue do pacto com que foi santificado, e que tiver ultrajado com desdém o espírito de benignidade imerecida? . . . Coisa terrível é cair nas mãos do Deus vivente." O julgamento é mais severo no sentido de que tais pessoas não são simplesmente mortas e sepultadas no Seol, como eram os violadores da Lei de Moisés. Tais pessoas vão para a Geena, da qual não existe ressurreição. — He 10:26-31.

Pedro escreve a seus irmãos, salientando que eles, como "casa de Deus", acham-se sob julgamento, e então cita Provérbios 11:31 (LXX), avisando-os do perigo da desobediência. Aqui dá a entender que o presente julgamento deles poderia terminar num julgamento de destruição eterna para eles, assim como Paulo havia escrito. — 1Pe 4:17, 18.

O apóstolo Paulo fala também de alguns que "serão submetidos à punição judicial da destruição eterna de diante do Senhor e da glória da sua força, no tempo em que ele vem para ser glorificado em conexão com os seus santos". (2Te 1:9, 10) Estes, por conseguinte, não sobreviveriam para o Reinado Milenar de Cristo, e, uma vez que a destruição deles é "eterna", não obteriam nenhuma ressurreição.

Ressurreição Durante 1.000 Anos. Não sabemos o número exato de pessoas que já viveram na Terra. Mas, apenas para ilustrar, suponhamos que Jeová ressuscite 20 bilhões (20.000.000.000) de pessoas; ainda assim haveria espaço e alimento suficiente para todos. A superfície seca da Terra é atualmente de cerca de 148.000.000 de quilômetros quadrados, ou de cerca de 14.800.000.000 de hectares. Mesmo que se reservasse metade disso para outros fins, haveria mais de um terço de hectare para cada pessoa. Quanto ao potencial da Terra para produzir alimentos, um terço de hectare pode fornecer muito mais alimento do que uma só pessoa necessita, especialmente quando, como Deus demonstrou no caso da nação de Israel, há abundância de alimentos em resultado da bênção de Deus. — 1Rs 4:20; Ez 34:27.

Na questão da capacidade da Terra de produzir alimentos, a Organização das Nações Unidas Para a Alimentação e a Agricultura sustenta que, com apenas razoáveis melhoras nos métodos agrícolas, mesmo as regiões em desenvolvimento da Terra poderiam alimentar até nove vezes a população projetada pelos cientistas para o ano 2000. — Land, Food and People [Terra, Alimento e Povo], Roma, 1984, pp. 16, 17.

Entretanto, como se poderia cuidar adequadamente dos bilhões de pessoas, uma vez que a maioria delas não conhecia a Deus no passado e precisará aprender a harmonizar-se com Suas leis feitas para elas? Antes de mais nada, a Bíblia declara que o reino do mundo torna-se "o reino de nosso Senhor e do seu Cristo, e ele [reina] para todo o sempre". (Re 11:15) E o princípio bíblico é que "quando há julgamentos teus [i.e., de Jeová] para a terra, os habitantes do solo produtivo certamente aprenderão a justiça". (Is 26:9) No tempo devido de Deus, quando for necessário informar Seus servos, ele revelará como pretende executar tal trabalho. — Am 3:7.

Como seria possível ressuscitar e educar em 1.000 anos os bilhões que se encontram atualmente na sepultura?

Uma ilustração, porém, revela como é simples e prático o que Jeová tem em mente para a humanidade. Não como profecia, mas apenas como ilustração, suponhamos que os que constituem a "grande multidão" de pessoas justas que 'saem vivas da grande tribulação' deste sistema de coisas (Re 7:9, 14) sejam de uns 6.000.000 (cerca de 1⁄1000 da atual população da Terra). Daí, se depois de 100 anos gastos no treinamento deles e em 'subjugar' parte da Terra (Gên 1:28) Deus intencionasse ressuscitar três por cento deste número, isto significaria que cada recém-chegado seria cuidado por 33 pessoas treinadas. Uma vez que a adição anual de três por cento sobre cada novo total dobra o número a cada 24 anos, mais ou menos, todos os 20 bilhões poderiam ser ressuscitados antes de se completarem 400 anos do Reinado Milenar de Cristo, proporcionando tempo suficiente para o treinamento e o julgamento dos ressuscitados, sem interferir na harmonia e na ordem na Terra. Assim, Deus, com poder e sabedoria onipotentes, é capaz de cumprir Seu glorioso propósito plenamente dentro da estrutura das leis e dos arranjos que ele fez para a humanidade desde o início, com a acrescida benignidade imerecida da ressurreição. — Ro 11:33-36.

RESTABELECIMENTO. Retorno à condição anterior. Com relação à volta de Cristo, as Escrituras, de modo notável, fazem menção dos "tempos do restabelecimento [forma do gr.: a·po·ka·tá·sta·sis] de todas as coisas, das quais Deus falou por intermédio da boca dos seus santos profetas". — At 3:20, 21.

A Versão Rei Jaime verte aqui a·po·ka·tá·sta·sis como "restituição". A própria palavra grega deriva de a·pó, que significa "de volta" ou "novamente", e ka·thi·ste·mi, que significa literalmente "estabelecer". A forma verbal correspondente é traduzida 'restabelecer', em Atos 1:6. O Theological Dictionary of the New Testament (Dicionário Teológico do Novo Testamento), editado por G. Kittel, declara que o significado básico do termo é "restituição a uma condição anterior" ou "restabelecimento". (Traduzido para o inglês por G. Bromiley, 1964, Vol. I, p. 389) Foi empregado pelo historiador judeu Josefo ao se referir ao retorno dos judeus do exílio. Nos escritos em papiro, é empregado com referência à reforma de certos prédios, ao restabelecimento de propriedades aos legítimos donos e ao balanço de contas.

O texto em si não especifica quais são as coisas a serem restabelecidas, por isso é preciso determinar o que são "todas as coisas" através do estudo da mensagem de Deus falada por intermédio de Seus profetas.

RESTANTE. Os remanescentes duma família, nação, tribo ou espécie; os sobreviventes de uma matança ou destruição ou de algum evento que marcou época; aqueles que permanecem fiéis a Deus dentre uma nação ou grupo de pessoas que se desviou.

Noé e sua família constituíam um restante do mundo da humanidade que precedeu o Dilúvio. O verbo sha·'ár, "restar", é usado para descrevê-los como os únicos que sobreviveram. (Gên 7:23) Mais tarde, no Egito, José disse a seus irmãos: "Por conseguinte, Deus enviou-me na frente de vós, a fim de pôr para vós um restante [isto é, sobreviventes para preservar a posteridade e a linhagem familiar; compare isso com 2Sa 14:7] na terra e para vos preservar vivos por meio dum grande escape." — Gên 45:4, 7, n.

Um Restante de Israel Retorna do Exílio. As referências mais frequentes na Bíblia a um restante dizem respeito aos que eram o povo de Deus. Deus avisou Israel, mediante seus profetas, de que puniria a desobediência dos israelitas, mas também proveu conforto por predizer que um restante seria preservado, retornaria a Jerusalém e a reconstruiria, e prosperaria e daria frutos. — Is 1:9; 11:11, 16; 37:31, 32; Je 23:3; 31:7-9.

Depois de o Rei Nabucodonosor, de Babilônia, ter levado pessoas cativas, junto com o Rei Joaquim, de Judá, em 617 AEC, Jeová forneceu uma visão ao profeta Jeremias. Os figos bons, na visão, representavam os exilados de Judá que foram levados a Babilônia e a quem Jeová com o tempo restauraria na sua terra. Os figos ruins representavam o Rei Zedequias, seus príncipes e outros iguais a eles que não haviam sido levados naquela época ao exílio (realmente a maior parte dos habitantes de Jerusalém e de Judá), bem como os que viviam no Egito. Em 607 AEC, quase todos os que estavam em Judá foram mortos ou exilados na destruição final de Jerusalém por Nabucodonosor. E, mais tarde, os que estavam no Egito, incluindo aqueles que fugiram para lá depois de 607 AEC, sofreram quando Nabucodonosor fez uma incursão militar naquele país. — Je 24:1-10; 44:14; 46:13-17; La 1:1-6.

Jeová prometeu ao fiel restante, aqueles que se arrependeram de seus pecados, pelos quais permitiu que fossem para o exílio, que Ele os ajuntaria como rebanho no redil. (Miq 2:12) Ele fez isso em 537 AEC, com a volta dum restante dos judeus sob Zorobabel. (Esd 2:1, 2) Antes eles 'manquejavam', mas Jeová os ajuntou, e (apesar de estarem sob o domínio persa), por terem o governador Zorobabel sobre eles e a adoração verdadeira restabelecida no templo, Deus era novamente seu verdadeiro Rei. (Miq 4:6, 7) Tornar-se-iam como "orvalho da parte de Jeová", que traz refrigério e prosperidade, e seriam corajosos e fortes como "o leão entre os animais da floresta". (Miq 5:7-9) Esta última profecia teve, pelo visto, um cumprimento durante o período dos macabeus, resultando na preservação dos judeus em sua terra, e na preservação do templo, até a vinda do Messias.

O nome do filho do profeta Isaías, Sear-Jasube, incorporava o substantivo she'ár (verbo: sha·'ár) e significava "Um Mero Restante (Os Remanescentes) Retornará". Esse nome era sinal de que Jerusalém cairia e de que seus habitantes iriam para o exílio, mas de que Deus teria misericórdia e faria com que um restante retornasse à terra. — Is 7:3.

Nenhum Restante É Deixado para Babilônia. Babilônia foi usada por Deus para punir Seu povo, mas ela foi além do que era necessário e se deleitou em oprimir e maltratar o povo, e tencionava retê-lo em exílio para sempre. Isto aconteceu realmente porque Babilônia era o principal expoente da adoração falsa, e odiava a Jeová e Sua adoração. Por esses motivos, Deus declarou: "Vou decepar de Babilônia o nome, e o restante, e a progênie, e a posteridade." (Is 14:22) Por fim, Babilônia tornou-se uma desolação completa e permanente, sem nenhum restante para voltar para ela, a fim de reconstruí-la.

Um Restante de Israel Aceita a Cristo. Quando Jesus Cristo veio à nação de Israel, a maioria o rejeitou. Apenas um restante expressou fé e se tornou seguidor dele. O apóstolo Paulo aplica certas profecias de Isaías (10:22, 23; 1:9) a este restante judeu ao escrever: "Além disso, Isaías clama acerca de Israel: 'Embora o número dos filhos de Israel seja como a areia do mar, é o restante que será salvo. Pois Jeová fará uma prestação de contas na terra, concluindo-a e abreviando-a.' Também, assim como Isaías dissera outrora: 'Se Jeová dos exércitos não nos tivesse deixado descendente, teríamos ficado assim como Sodoma, e teríamos sido feitos iguais a Gomorra.'" (Ro 9:27-29) Além disso, Paulo usa o exemplo dos 7.000 que restavam, no tempo de Elias, que não se tinham curvado diante de Baal, e diz: "Deste modo, portanto, apresentou-se também na época atual um restante, segundo uma escolha devida à benignidade imerecida." — Ro 11:5.

O Restante Espiritual. Em Revelação (Apocalipse) (12), João registrou a visão duma mulher no céu, e de um dragão, e concluiu essa parte da visão, dizendo: "E o dragão ficou furioso com a mulher e foi travar guerra com os remanescentes [loi·pón] da sua semente, que observam os mandamentos de Deus e têm a obra de dar testemunho de Jesus." Estes "remanescentes", que têm "a obra de dar testemunho de Jesus", são os últimos na terra dentre os irmãos de Jesus Cristo, que vivem na Terra depois que o Diabo foi lançado para a Terra e que se fez o anúncio: "Agora se realizou a salvação, e o poder, e o reino de nosso Deus, e a autoridade do seu Cristo." O Diabo, o dragão, trava guerra contra este restante dos irmãos espirituais de Cristo por meio das 'feras' e da "imagem da fera", descritas em Revelação, capítulo 13. Mas o restante sai vitorioso, como revela o capítulo 14. — Veja SEMENTE (DESCENDENTE).

RESTAURAÇÃO. Veja RESTABELECIMENTO.

RESTOLHO. No uso bíblico, restolho parece referir-se aos restos das hastes de cereais que sobram no campo após a colheita. Restolho é o que os israelitas tiveram de ajuntar quando o Faraó do Egito negou-lhes o fornecimento regular de palha para a fabricação de tijolos. — Êx 5:10-12.

O restolho aparece repetidas vezes em contextos ilustrativos, em alusões feitas ao fato de que ele é leve e frágil (Jó 13:25; 41:1, 28, 29), é facilmente levado pelo vento (Is 40:24; 41:2; Je 13:24) e queima-se pronta e ruidosamente (Is 5:24; Jl 2:5; Ob 18; Na 1:10). Os iníquos, os inimigos de Jeová, bem como as tramas condenadas ao fracasso, são comparados ao restolho. (Êx 15:7; Sal 83:13; Mal 4:1; Is 33:11) O apóstolo Paulo, ao considerar a obra de edificação do cristão, alistou o restolho como o material de menor valor, um que não resistiria à prova de fogo. — 1Co 3:12, 13.

RETRIBUIÇÃO. O ato de dar ou receber uma recompensa ou uma punição, segundo o que a pessoa ou o grupo merece devidamente; aquilo que é dado ou exigido em troca, especialmente pelo mal.

As variantes, ou palavras derivadas, dos radicais verbais hebraicos sha·lám e ga·mál são traduzidas "recompensa", "retribuição", "tratamento devido", "compensar", "saldar", "pagar de volta", e assim por diante. As palavras gregas a·po·di·do·mi, an·ti·mi·sthí·a, mi·stha·po·do·sí·a, e palavras aparentadas, são traduzidas de modo similar.

Às Nações Que Oprimiram Israel. No cântico que Moisés deu a Israel nas planícies de Moabe pouco antes de morrer, ele descreveu Jeová como aquele que 'paga de volta vingança' aos seus adversários e que 'retribui' àqueles que O odeiam intensamente. (De 32:35, 41; He 10:30) A vingança e a retribuição são executadas por Deus em completo autodomínio, em plena harmonia com sua justiça, e nunca sem bom motivo. Por exemplo, ele puniu Israel pela desobediência, usando às vezes nações pagãs tais como a Assíria e Babilônia quais instrumentos seus. (De 28:15-68; 2Rs 17:7-23; 2Cr 21:14-20) Mas, essas nações pagãs, por sua vez, agiram impelidas pelo ódio a Jeová e à sua adoração verdadeira, e foram longe demais ao exultar sobre a derrota de Israel e oprimir Israel. Por conseguinte, Deus proferiu julgamentos de retribuição contra elas. — Is 10:12; 34:1, 2, 8; Je 51:6, 56; Ob 8-16; Za 1:15.

Babilônia, em especial, sofreu retribuição por sua secular inimizade contra Jeová e seu povo. Profetizou-se a queda e a completa desolação dela. Ela foi derrubada por Ciro, o persa, em 539 AEC, mas continuou existindo como cidade durante séculos, terminando finalmente em completa desolação, para nunca mais ser reconstruída. (Je caps. 50, 51) A simbólica Babilônia, a Grande, está para sofrer uma retribuição semelhante, sendo lançada para baixo para 'nunca mais ser achada'. — Re 18:2, 6, 20, 21; veja BABILÔNIA, A GRANDE.

Sob a Lei. A lei que Deus deu a Israel por intermédio de Moisés era retribuição exata, embora estendesse misericórdia ao pecador involuntário e arrependido. (Le 5:4-6, 17-19; 6:1-7; Núm 35:22-29) Mas a lei de retribuição aplicava-se de modo pleno ao violador deliberado e impenitente.

(Núm 15:30) Nos casos em que o homem agisse como testemunha falsa, dando depoimento mentiroso contra seu semelhante perante os juízes, devia receber retribuição, exatamente a punição que ele teria dado ao homem inocente. Jeová disse: "E teu olho não deve ter dó: será alma por alma, olho por olho, dente por dente, mão por mão, pé por pé." — De 19:16-21.

À Nação Judaica do Primeiro Século. Os membros da nação judaica manifestaram um conceito egoísta no que tange a aceitar benignidades imerecidas e favores de Deus para com eles. Jeová permitiu que esse proceder e essa atitude egoístas trouxessem retribuição a eles. Procuravam estabelecer sua própria justiça, em vez de se sujeitarem à justiça de Deus. (Ro 10:1-3) Em resultado disso, a maioria dos da nação tropeçou em Jesus Cristo e o rejeitou, partilhando a culpa de sangue relacionada com a morte dele, trazendo assim destruição à sua cidade e ao seu templo, e ruína à sua nação. (Mt 27:25; Da 9:26) O apóstolo Paulo cita um Salmo (69:22) e o aplica a eles ao escrever: "Também, Davi diz: 'Que a sua mesa se torne para eles laço, e armadilha, e pedra de tropeço, e retribuição.'" — Ro 11:9.

Aos Cristãos Desobedientes. O apóstolo Paulo se reporta à justiça retributiva sob a Lei ao enfatizar a seriedade de os cristãos obedecerem ao Filho de Deus: "Pois, se a palavra falada por intermédio de anjos mostrou-se firme, e toda transgressão e ato desobediente recebeu retribuição [literalmente: remuneração] em harmonia com a justiça, como escaparemos nós, se tivermos negligenciado uma salvação de tal magnitude, sendo que começou a ser anunciada por intermédio do nosso Senhor e nos foi confirmada por aqueles que o ouviram?" (He 2:2, 3, n; compare isso com He 10:28-31.) O julgamento de destruição sobre o apóstata "homem que é contra a lei" fornece um exemplo de tal retribuição. — 2Te 2:3, 9, 10; veja HOMEM QUE É CONTRA A LEI.

REÚ [Companheiro; Amigo]. Filho de Pelegue e pai de Serugue; um elo na genealogia entre Sem e Abraão. (1Cr 1:24-27) Reú, que viveu 239 anos (2239-2000 AEC), também foi ancestral de Jesus Cristo. — Gên 11:18-21; Lu 3:35.

REUEL [Companheiro (Amigo) de Deus].

1. Segundo filho mencionado de Esaú, por meio de Basemate, filha de Ismael. Os quatro filhos de Reuel tornaram-se xeques edomitas. — Gên 36:2-4, 10, 13, 17; 1Cr 1:35, 37.

2. Sogro de Moisés, sacerdote de Midiã. (Êx 2:16-21; Núm 10:29) Chamado de Jetro em outros lugares. — Veja JETRO.

3. Gadita cujo filho Eliasafe era maioral tribal durante a peregrinação no ermo. (Núm 2:14) O nome é grafado Deuel nas demais ocorrências. — Veja DEUEL.

4. Ancestral dum benjamita que viveu em Jerusalém após o exílio em Babilônia. — 1Cr 9:3, 7, 8.

REUM.

1. Um dos alistados no começo do registro dos exilados que retornaram de Babilônia a Jerusalém com Zorobabel e Jesua. (Esd 2:1, 2) Seu nome é grafado Neum, em Neemias 7:7.

2. Sacerdote alistado entre os que retornaram com Zorobabel. (Ne 12:1, 3) Uma simples transposição de caracteres hebraicos o tornaria aquele que é chamado de Harim, em Neemias 12:15 e em outros lugares. — Veja HARIM N.º 1.

3. "O principal funcionário do governo" (do Império Persa) que presumivelmente residia em Samaria e que tomou a dianteira em escrever uma carta ao Rei Artaxerxes, a qual acusava falsamente os judeus a respeito de suas intenções de reconstruir Jerusalém. A resposta imperial ordenava que Reum e seus compatriotas fossem a Jerusalém e parassem à força a obra de reconstrução dos judeus. (Esd 4:8-24) Pouco depois, porém, Ageu e Zacarias incentivaram os judeus a retomar a reconstrução, que por fim foi sancionada pela investigação que os persas fizeram do decreto original de Ciro. — Esd 5:1–6:13.

4. Levita, filho de Bani, que ajudou a fazer reparos no muro de Jerusalém. — Ne 3:17.

5. Cabeça duma família pós-exílica, cujo representante, se não ele próprio, atestou o pacto de fidelidade durante o governo de Neemias. — Ne 10:1, 14, 25.

REUMÁ. Concubina de Naor, irmão de Abraão. Ela deu à luz quatro filhos homens. — Gên 22:20, 24.

REUNIÃO, MONTE DE. Veja MONTE DE REUNIÃO.

REVELAÇÃO. A palavra grega (a·po·ká·ly·psis) assim traduzida indica "uma exibição" ou "um desvendamento", e é amiúde usada com referência a revelações de assuntos espirituais ou da vontade e dos propósitos de Deus. (Lu 2:32; 1Co 14:6, 26; 2Co 12:1, 7; Gál 1:12; 2:2; Ef 1:17; Re 1:1; Int) A operação do espírito de Deus torna possível tais revelações. A respeito da revelação do "segredo sagrado", o apóstolo Paulo escreveu: "Em outras gerações, este segredo não foi dado a conhecer aos filhos dos homens assim como agora tem sido revelado aos seus santos apóstolos e profetas, por espírito, a saber, que os das nações haviam de ser co-herdeiros e membros associados do corpo, e co-participantes conosco da promessa, em união com Cristo Jesus, por intermédio das boas novas." — Ef 3:1-6; Ro 16:25.

O livro de Atos confirma convincentemente que esta revelação do segredo sagrado resultou da operação do espírito de Deus. Fora por orientação do espírito que Pedro, Paulo e Barnabé pregaram aos não judeus. Crentes não judeus, "pessoas das nações", receberam espírito santo enquanto estavam em estado incircunciso, tornando-se assim um povo para o nome de Deus. (At 10:9-48; 13:2-4) O profeta Amós, sob inspiração, predissera isto, e, no primeiro século EC, o cumprimento de sua profecia tornou-se evidente por meio da operação do espírito de Deus. — At 15:7-20; compare com Am 9:11, 12, LXX.

A Bíblia fala também da "revelação do julgamento justo de Deus" (Ro 2:5), da "revelação dos filhos de Deus" (Ro 8:19), bem como da "revelação de Jesus Cristo" e "de sua glória". (1Pe 1:13; 4:13) A consideração do contexto e de textos relacionados ajuda a determinar quando ocorrem tais revelações, ou desvendamentos. Em cada caso, o desvendamento, ou revelação, é ocasião de fazer com que pessoas justas entrem no gozo de determinadas recompensas e bênçãos, ou de trazer destruição sobre os iníquos.

Dos Filhos de Deus. Em sua carta aos romanos, o apóstolo Paulo identificou os "filhos" de Deus como aqueles que receberam um espírito de adoção. Sendo co-herdeiros de Cristo, tais filhos de Deus serão glorificados. (Ro 8:14-18) O Senhor Jesus Cristo remodelará o corpo humilhado deles para ajustar-se ao seu corpo glorioso (Fil 3:20, 21), e reinarão com ele. (2Ti 2:12) Assim, a "revelação dos filhos de Deus" chama atenção para o tempo em que se tornará evidente que eles foram realmente glorificados e estão reinando com Cristo Jesus. A glória que se revelará neles será tão grandiosa que fará com que todo o seu anterior sofrimento na terra pareça nada. (Ro 8:18, 19) Esta revelação é acompanhada por grandiosas bênçãos, pois o apóstolo Paulo escreve: "A própria criação também será liberta da escravização à corrupção e terá a liberdade gloriosa dos filhos de Deus." — Ro 8:21.

Do Julgamento Justo de Deus. Em Romanos 2:5, a "revelação do julgamento justo de Deus" está associada com o 'dia do furor de Deus'. Portanto, o julgamento justo de Deus é revelado quando 'ele dá a cada um segundo as suas obras', vida eterna aos que perseveram em obras excelentes e destruição aos que obedecem à injustiça. — Ro 2:6-8.

De Jesus Cristo. A "revelação de Jesus Cristo" e "de sua glória" é a época de recompensar seus seguidores fiéis e executar vingança sobre os ímpios. Assim, ele é revelado como glorioso Rei, autorizado a recompensar e a punir. As Escrituras mostram que os cristãos ungidos pelo espírito que suportaram fielmente o sofrimento ficariam "cheios de alegria" durante a revelação da glória de Cristo. (1Pe 4:13) A qualidade provada de sua fé seria considerada causa para louvor, glória e honra por ocasião da revelação de Jesus Cristo, e estes cristãos se beneficiariam da benignidade imerecida. (1Pe 1:7, 13) Por outro lado, aqueles que não conhecem a Deus e não obedecem às boas novas a respeito do Senhor Jesus seriam destruídos para sempre, desta forma proporcionando alívio aos que sofreram tribulação às suas mãos. — 2Te 1:6-10.

REVELAÇÃO A JOÃO.

O último livro da Bíblia segundo a disposição da maioria das traduções, embora não tenha sido o último a ser escrito. É também chamado de Apocalipse de João, o Apóstolo.

O Escritor, e Quando e Onde Foi Escrita. O apóstolo João cita a si mesmo como escritor deste livro e indica que o local de escrita foi a ilha de Patmos, onde João estava exilado na época por ser pregador da Palavra de Deus e testemunha de Jesus Cristo. (Re 1:1, 9) A época da escrita foi possivelmente cerca de 96 EC.

Estilo e Por Que É Apropriada. O livro está escrito em forma de carta, pormenorizando uma série de visões apresentadas em ordem apropriada, em progressão regular, atingindo por fim uma visão culminante. Fornece uma conclusão adequada para a Bíblia inteira.

O livro parece estar elaborado à base duma série de grupos de sete. A abertura de sete selos leva ao toque de sete trombetas, daí a sete pragas. Há sete candelabros, sete estrelas, sete trovões, e muitas outras coisas em grupos de sete, evidentemente porque o número sete representa inteireza, e o livro trata da conclusão do segredo sagrado de Deus. — Re 10:7; veja SEGREDO SAGRADO.

Autor e Canal. Jeová Deus, o Todo-Poderoso, é o autor do livro, e o canal de informações é Jesus Cristo, que as enviou e apresentou a João por meio de seu anjo. (Re 1:1) O espírito de Deus é representado como sétuplo, atuando assim em sua capacidade máxima para transmitir esta revelação. João recebeu ordem divina de escrever. — 1:4, 11.

Propósito. Embora algumas das coisas vistas por João em sua visão pareçam aterrorizantes — os animais, os ais, as pragas — o livro não foi escrito para aterrorizar, mas para confortar e

DESTAQUES DE REVELAÇÃO

Um desvendamento do conceito de Deus sobre as condições, bem como uma previsão do que ele permite e do que realizará por meio de Cristo durante o "dia do Senhor".

Uma série de visões registradas pelo apóstolo João por volta de 96 EC.

O glorificado Cristo dá conselhos amorosos a co-herdeiros do Reino. (1:1–3:22)

A congregação em Éfeso tem perseverado mas abandonou o amor do princípio.

A espiritualmente rica congregação em Esmirna é incentivada a permanecer fiel em face de tribulação.

A congregação em Pérgamo tem-se apegado ao nome de Cristo sob perseguição, mas tem tolerado o sectarismo.

A congregação em Tiatira tem um registro de atividade aumentada, mas tem tolerado a influência de Jezabel.

A congregação em Sardes está espiritualmente morta; tem de despertar.

A congregação em Filadélfia, que tem guardado a palavra de Cristo, é instada a continuar apegando-se ao que tem.

A congregação em Laodiceia é morna; que obtenha de Cristo o que é necessário para a cura espiritual.

Visão da presença celestial de Jeová. (4:1–5:14)

Jeová é visto em assombroso esplendor em seu trono, rodeado de 24 anciãos e quatro criaturas viventes; ele segura um rolo selado com sete selos.

O Cordeiro é declarado digno de tomar o rolo e abri-lo.

O Cordeiro abre seis selos do rolo. (6:1-17)

À medida que ele abre o primeiro selo, um cavaleiro num cavalo branco recebe uma coroa e sai vencendo e para completar a sua vitória.

A abertura dos três selos seguintes dá lugar a mais três cavaleiros, resultando em guerra, fome e morte para a humanidade.

O quinto selo é aberto; os martirizados pela causa de Cristo clamam pela vingança do seu sangue; a cada um se dá uma roupa branca.

Na abertura do sexto selo, um grande terremoto anuncia o dia do furor de Deus e do Cordeiro.

Os quatro ventos da terra são segurados. (7:1-17)

João ouve que os quatro ventos serão segurados até que os escravos de Deus sejam selados; o número desses selados é 144.000.

Daí, João vê uma grande multidão, sem número, de todas as nações; estes saem da grande tribulação.

O sétimo selo é aberto. (8:1–11:14)

Há um silêncio de meia hora; lança-se fogo do altar para a terra; sete anjos preparam-se para tocar trombetas.

Os quatro primeiros toques de trombeta anunciam pragas sobre a terra, o mar, as fontes de água, bem como o sol, a lua e as estrelas.

A quinta trombeta convoca uma praga de gafanhotos, e a sexta desencadeia um aterrorizante ataque de cavalaria.

João come um pequeno rolo e fica sabendo que tem de profetizar mais um pouco.

Ele mede o santuário; duas testemunhas profetizam vestidas de saco, são mortas e ressuscitadas.

A sétima trombeta: nasce o Reino. (11:15–12:17)

A sétima trombeta soa e o Reino de Jeová e a autoridade de seu Cristo são anunciados.

Uma mulher dá à luz um filho varão, no céu.

O dragão tenta devorar a criança; ocorre guerra no céu; Miguel lança o dragão e seus anjos para a terra.

O dragão trava guerra contra o restante da semente da mulher.

A fera do mar. (13:1-18)

A fera de sete cabeças e dez chifres emerge do mar.

O dragão dá à fera sua autoridade, e uma fera de dois chifres, semelhante a um cordeiro, faz uma imagem dela; muitos são forçados a adorar a fera e a aceitar sua marca.

Os servos fiéis de Jeová em ação. (14:1-20)

Os 144.000 no monte Sião cantam um novo cântico.

Anjos a voar pelo meio do céu declaram mensagens vitais.

Alguém semelhante a um filho de homem ceifa a colheita da terra.

A videira da terra é pisada no lagar de Deus, com muito derramamento de sangue.

Jeová, do seu santuário celestial, ordena que sete anjos derramem as sete tigelas de Sua ira. (15:1–16:21)

As seis primeiras tigelas são derramadas na terra, no mar e nas fontes de água, e sobre o sol, o trono da fera e no Eufrates.

Os servos de Deus têm de permanecer despertos, ao passo que a propaganda demoníaca ajunta reis humanos para o Har-Magedon.

A sétima tigela é derramada no ar com resultados devastadores.

Visões do fim de Babilônia, a Grande. (17:1–18:24)

Babilônia, a Grande, embriagada com o sangue dos santos, senta-se numa fera cor de escarlate com sete cabeças e dez chifres; os dez chifres voltam-se contra ela e a devastam.

Sua queda é anunciada; o povo de Deus tem de sair dela.

Sua destruição final é panteada por muitos na terra.

O casamento do Cordeiro. (19:1-10)

Vozes celestiais louvam a Jah pela destruição de Babilônia.

Um estrondoso coro de louvor anuncia o casamento do Cordeiro.

O Rei dos reis triunfa sobre as nações. (19:11-21)

A Palavra de Deus vai à guerra contra as nações; a fera e o falso profeta são lançados no lago de fogo; todos os inimigos de Deus são mortos; animais comem a carne do seu corpo.

Satanás é preso num abismo; Cristo governa por 1.000 anos. (20:1–21:8)

Satanás é preso num abismo por 1.000 anos.

Os corregentes de Jesus julgam com ele por 1.000 anos, após o que Satanás é solto; ele sai para desencaminhar a humanidade novamente, mas por fim ele e todos os que o seguem são destruídos.

Todos os que estão na morte, no Hades e no mar são ressuscitados e julgados diante Daquele que está sentado no grande trono branco; a morte e o Hades são lançados no lago de fogo.

João vê um novo céu e uma nova terra.

A Nova Jerusalém. (21:9–22:21)

A gloriosa Nova Jerusalém desce do céu, iluminando as nações; um rio de água da vida flui através dela, com árvores para a cura em cada margem.

Revelação termina com mensagens finais de Jeová e Jesus; o espírito e a noiva convidam todos os sedentos a tomar de graça da água da vida.

encorajar os que o leem com fé. Pode conduzir o leitor a bênçãos. De fato, o escritor do livro declara, logo de início: "Feliz ["abençoado", KJ] é quem lê em voz alta, e os que ouvem as palavras desta profecia e observam as coisas escritas nela." (Re 1:3) João também diz que o propósito do livro é mostrar aos escravos de Deus as coisas que "têm de ocorrer em breve". — 1:1, 2.

Dá Testemunho de Jesus. Em Revelação 19:10, o anjo diz a João: "Dar-se testemunho de Jesus é o que inspira o profetizar [literalmente: "é o espírito da profecia"]." Ou seja, a intenção e o propósito de toda profecia é chamar a atenção para Jesus Cristo. Isto não significa que Jeová Deus seja passado por alto ou ignorado. Pouco antes no versículo 10, o anjo disse a João, que se prostrara diante dele: "Adora a Deus", e o apóstolo Paulo dissera que "Deus o enalteceu [isto é, a Cristo] a uma posição superior e lhe deu bondosamente o nome que está acima de todo outro nome, a fim de que, no nome de Jesus, se dobre todo joelho dos no céu, e dos na terra, e dos debaixo do chão, e toda língua reconheça abertamente que Jesus Cristo é Senhor, para a glória de Deus, o Pai." Portanto, magnificar a Jesus Cristo e familiarizar-se com o conhecimento dele resulta em melhor conhecimento de Deus e dos Seus propósitos, dando-se assim a glória a Deus acima de tudo. — Fil 2:9-11; veja PROFECIA.

O motivo de a profecia dar testemunho de Jesus é que Jesus é aquele por meio de quem Deus realiza seus propósitos no que diz respeito à santificação do Seu nome, à destruição da iniquidade e à bênção da humanidade. "Cuidadosamente ocultos nele [Cristo] se acham todos os tesouros da sabedoria e do conhecimento." (Col 2:3) Ele é a Semente da promessa, Aquele em quem o segredo sagrado é revelado. Desde o começo dos tratos de Deus com os homens depois da rebelião de Adão, Deus fez com que Cristo fosse predito e prefigurado e indicou aos homens o Reino de Deus nas mãos de seu Filho. — Gên 3:15; 22:18; Gál 3:16; 2Sa 7:12-16; Sal 2:6-12; 110:1-7; Ez 21:27; At 2:29, 36; 3:19-26; 1Ti 3:16.

Em linguagem simples, qual é o significado de "Revelação"?

O primeiro capítulo do livro que conclui a Bíblia chama nossa atenção para Aquele que está acima de tudo, o Originador da mensagem de Revelação, Jeová Deus, o Todo-Poderoso, "o Alfa e o Ômega". Fornece uma visão do Canal de comunicação, Jesus Cristo, mostrando-o como tendo morrido, mas agora estando vivo, com grande poder no céu. Os que participam com ele em suas tribulações e no Reino são a seguir postos em cena, e o interesse e a benevolência de Cristo para com eles são manifestados em suas mensagens aos "anjos" das sete congregações. — Re 1-3.

Daí, pelo espírito de inspiração, João é levado para os céus para começar a ver "as coisas que têm de ocorrer". Ele recebe uma visão do trono de Deus e do que o cerca, e descreve Aquele que está sentado no trono como glorioso, supremo, entronizado em perfeita serenidade e calma. — Re 4.

A posição gloriosa do "Cordeiro" de Deus, Jesus Cristo, é retratada como a daquele que ocupa o segundo lugar apenas em relação a Jeová Deus, o único no céu e na terra qualificado para aproximar-se de Deus a fim de desvendar a revelação do propósito de Deus. Dá-se atenção a um rei-guerreiro (pelo visto também Jesus) que cavalga "vencendo e para completar a sua vitória". Mostra-se o resultado disso para a terra, especialmente para os inimigos de Deus, quando esse rei começa a sua cavalgada, bem como o propósito de Deus de vingar de seus inimigos o sangue de seu povo. — Re 5, 6.

Mostra-se como Deus encara seus servos na terra, os que foram escolhidos por ele para participar no Reino celestial, no fato de ele impedir a ação destrutiva até que esses servos sejam 'selados nas testas'. Revela-se que o pleno número dos selados é 144.000. Mostram-se então outros não selados e cujo número é ilimitado, que se tornam servos de Deus e escapam da destruição causada pela "grande tribulação". Relatam-se os julgamentos de Deus contra vários segmentos dos seus inimigos na terra, bem como a batalha que esses inimigos travam contra o povo de Deus. Isto conduz aos esforços do arqui-inimigo, o dragão, Satanás, o Diabo, de frustrar o propósito de Deus de produzir o "filho, um varão, que há de pastorear todas as nações com vara de ferro". A seguir, veem-se feras, que simbolizam instrumentos que esse arqui-inimigo usa para lutar contra os remanescentes da semente da mulher e para tentar impedir a conclusão da obra de selagem. — Re 7-13; veja ANIMAIS SIMBÓLICOS.

Todas essas tentativas de Satanás falham completamente. Os 144.000 são vistos vitoriosos, em pé com o Cordeiro no monte Sião, tendo na testa o nome do Pai e o do Cordeiro e cantando como que um novo cântico perante as criaturas celestiais. Depois de esses e de uma "grande multidão" de associados terrestres serem ajuntados "na colheita da terra", chega o tempo para a grande "videira da terra" ser pisada no lagar. — Re 14.

Os julgamentos finais de Deus são retratados com outro simbolismo. Sete anjos recebem sete tigelas da ira de Deus. Eles saem para executar esta obra final. Um dos principais inimigos de Deus e da "noiva" de Cristo recebe atenção, a saber, "Babilônia, a Grande, a mãe das meretrizes", "a grande cidade que tem um reino sobre os reis da terra". Sua aliança com a fera de sete cabeças rui, e a fera fica furiosa com ela, come sua carne e a queima. O lamento daqueles que lucravam com seus tratos com ela é grande, mas o céu se alegra. — Re 15-18.

Babilônia, a Grande, qual "mãe das meretrizes", logicamente tentaria tudo para seduzir a "noiva" de Cristo a fim de torná-la infiel ao seu prometido marido (2Co 11:2, 3; Ef 5:25-27) e, desta forma, fazer dela outra meretriz. Assim, a alegria celestial é acentuada, porque os esforços corrompedores de Babilônia, a Grande, são frustrados. A grande meretriz acha-se então fora do caminho, e a noiva ganha a vitória. Ela se preparou para seu Noivo. Portanto, é hora de ocorrer o casamento do Cordeiro. Todos os convidados para o casamento se alegram. Jeová dá então início a uma nova fase em seu reinado, tendo a grande meretriz desaparecido como rival da adoração pura. — Re 19:1-10.

Mas os outros inimigos de Deus têm de receber a execução do julgamento. O Noivo sai para completar sua vitória, para tirar da terra todos os inimigos, políticos e outros. A destruição é cabal. Por fim, o próprio Diabo, tendo passado pela derrota de todos os seus agentes e instrumentos, é amarrado durante os mil anos do reinado de Cristo. A visão vai além do Reinado Milenar por um momento para detalhar o julgamento que ocorre no fim dos mil anos; o Diabo é solto temporariamente, daí, com todos os que se juntam ao seu ataque contra "o acampamento dos santos e a cidade amada", é completamente aniquilado. — Re 19:11–20:10.

Voltando a eventos que ocorrem durante os mil anos, a visão retrata a ressurreição e o julgamento que se dão sob o governo de Cristo e sua noiva, a Nova Jerusalém. Descreve-se a beleza e a grandeza dessa "cidade" celestial, com os benefícios de cura e de vida que ela proporciona à humanidade. — Re 20:11–22:5.

Em conclusão, Jeová Deus fala de 'vir depressa com recompensa segundo a obra de cada um'. Como "testemunha fiel e verdadeira", Jesus dá testemunho da conclusão do segredo sagrado a respeito do reino, dizendo: "Eu sou a raiz e a descendência de Davi, e a resplandecente estrela da manhã." Ele é herdeiro permanente de Davi, o eterno no pacto do Reino e aquele predito em Números 24:17. Todos os esforços de Satanás, da fera e de Babilônia, a Grande, (Re 12:1-10; 17:3-14) portanto, foram incapazes de impedir a "estrela" de subir da casa de Davi para sentar-se no trono, nos céus, para sempre. — Re 22:6-16.

O espírito, a força ativa de Deus, junto com a "noiva", fazem o convite a todos os que ouvem a tomar de graça da água da vida. Com a advertência final de que não se acrescente nem se tire nada das palavras da profecia, e uma declaração da proximidade de sua vinda, Jesus encerra a revelação; e João responde: "Amém! Vem, Senhor Jesus." — Re 22:17-21.

O livro de Revelação é de capital importância, no sentido de que supre força e visão espirituais para o povo de Deus. Destaca o interesse de Deus nas congregações do Seu povo e o estrito e amoroso cuidado de Jesus Cristo para com elas, na qualidade de Pastor Excelente. Jesus sabe exatamente que condições prevalecem e o que tem de ser feito. Isto se manifesta especialmente nos três primeiros capítulos deste livro.

Alguns encaram o livro de Revelação como tão altamente simbólico que não pode ser entendido, ou como não sendo prático. Mas Jeová Deus deseja que os do seu povo o entendam, e fez com que a Bíblia fosse escrita para ser entendida e para lhes fornecer orientação. A chave para o entendimento de Revelação é a mesma para o entendi-mento de outras partes da Bíblia. O apóstolo Paulo indica esta chave. Depois de explicar que Deus revela, por meio de Seu espírito, a sabedoria oculta, Paulo diz: "Destas coisas também falamos, não com palavras ensinadas pela sabedoria humana, mas com as ensinadas pelo espírito, ao combinarmos assuntos espirituais com palavras espirituais." (1Co 2:8-13) Quando pesquisamos as Escrituras (e, às vezes, os costumes e as práticas daqueles dias), encontramos nelas muitas das coisas usadas como simbolismos em Revelação. Comparando esses textos das Escrituras, não raro podemos entender o que os símbolos de Revelação significam. Deve-se notar, porém, que um termo ou uma expressão pode referir-se a ou simbolizar diferentes coisas, segundo o contexto em que aparece.

REXE [ר]. A 20.ª letra do alfabeto hebraico. Devido à similaridade na forma entre rehsh [ר] e dáleth [ד], elas eram às vezes confundidas pelos copistas.

No hebraico, esta letra aparece como letra inicial em cada um dos oito versos do Salmo 119:153-160.

REZEFE. Lugar citado na mensagem de Senaqueribe ao Rei Ezequias, na qual se gabava de que os reis assírios haviam arruinado várias "nações". (2Rs 19:8-12; Is 37:12) A localização exata de Rezefe não é conhecida, diversos lugares tendo tido esse nome. Um de tais lugares, que segundo creem alguns fora parte dum antigo distrito, é identificado com a atual Rusa'feh, situada ao O do Eufrates, cerca de 145 km ao S da atual Harã. Assim, ele fica nas vizinhanças do local sugerido de Gozã, com o qual Rezefe é mencionado.

REZIM.

1. Rei da Síria, que reinou em Damasco durante partes dos reinados do Rei Jotão (777-762 AEC), de Judá e de seu filho, o Rei Acaz (cujo reinado terminou em 746 AEC).

Evidentemente perto do fim do reinado de Jotão, Rezim juntou-se a Peca, o rei de Israel, em guerrear contra Judá. (2Rs 15:36-38) Durante a guerra, que prosseguiu no reinado de Acaz, os sírios, evidentemente sob Rezim, capturaram muitos de Judá e os levaram para Damasco. (2Cr 28:5) Também, Rezim tomou de Judá a cidade de Elate, no golfo de ʽAqaba, removendo os judeus e devolvendo a cidade aos edomitas. (2Rs 16:6) As forças coligadas sírio-israelitas sitiaram Jerusalém, tencionando fazer do "filho de Tabeel" o rei dela, mas não conseguiram capturar a cidade. (2Rs 16:5; Is 7:1, 6) A situação assustou muito a Acaz, apesar da garantia de Isaías de que Rezim, da Síria, e Peca, de Israel, não lhe precisavam causar temor. (Is 7:3-12; 8:6, 7) Acaz voltou-se para a Assíria, em busca de ajuda, subornando Tiglate-Pileser III para atacar a Síria. — 2Rs 16:7, 8; 2Cr 28:16, 20.

Tiglate-Pileser III guerreou contra Damasco, capturando-a e matando Rezim. A Síria ficou assim sob o domínio assírio. — 2Rs 16:9.

2. O pai de certa família de netineus, alguns dos quais retornaram a Jerusalém, de Babilônia, em 537 AEC. — Esd 2:1, 43, 48; Ne 7:6, 46, 50.

REZOM [provavelmente: Alto Oficial]. Opositor do Rei Salomão. Este filho de Eliada estivera no serviço de Hadadezer, rei de Zobá, de quem Davi conquistara Damasco. No entanto, Rezom abandonou Hadadezer e organizou um bando de salteadores. Numa ocasião não revelada, o próprio Rezom assumiu o reinado da Síria em Damasco, e, especialmente desde o tempo da apostasia de Salomão até o fim do seu reinado, Rezom deu vazão à sua aversão a Israel. (1Rs 11:23-25; 1Cr 18:3-6) Se, como há quem sugira, ele era a pessoa chamada de Heziom, em 1 Reis 15:18, isto o tornaria fundador da dinastia síria que teve amplos tratos com Israel.

RIBAI [possivelmente uma forma abreviada de Jeribai, que significa "Que Ele Contenda; Ele Pleiteou [Nossa] Causa"]. Benjamita de Gibeá, cujo filho, Itai, era um dos "trinta" guerreiros famosos de Davi. — 2Sa 23:24, 29; 1Cr 11:31.

RIBLA.

1. Lugar não identificado na fronteira leste da "terra de Canaã". — Núm 34:2, 10, 11.

2. Cidade ao N de Israel, "na terra de Hamate". (Je 52:9) O lugar geralmente aceito para Ribla é o das ruínas próximas da atual Ribleh, na margem L do rio Orontes, cerca de 60 km ao NE de Baalbec, no vale situado entre os montes Líbano e Antilíbano. Evidentemente, o Faraó Neco acampou em Ribla depois de derrotar o Rei Josias, por volta de 629 AEC. Naquela ocasião ele marchava para o N a fim de combater os babilônios, que na época já dominavam a Assíria. Jeoacaz sucedeu a Josias, mas, depois de três meses, Neco substituiu Jeoacaz por Eliaquim (Jeoiaquim). Neco fez com que Jeoacaz fosse levado a ele em Ribla, antes de levar este rei como cativo para o Egito. (2Rs 23:29-34) Ribla era um ponto estratégico para um acampamento militar. Dominava uma rota comercial e militar N-S, entre o Egito e o Eufrates. Havia pronta disponibilidade de água, e alimentos e combustível podiam ser obtidos do vale e das florestas circunvizinhas.

As mesmas vantagens militares serviram os babilônios numa época posterior. Em algum ponto depois de se iniciar o cerco de Jerusalém, em fins de 609 AEC, Nabucodonosor pelo visto montou acampamento em Ribla para dali dirigir operações militares. Isto o colocava em posição de atacar Damasco ou de voltar rapidamente a Babilônia, se necessário. Quando Zedequias foi capturado, em 607 AEC, ele foi levado a Nabucodonosor em Ribla, como se deu pouco depois com alguns outros homens importantes da cidade. — 2Rs 25:1, 5-7, 18-21; Je 39:5; 52:9-11, 26, 27.

Muitos peritos concluem que a "Dibla", em Ezequiel 6:14, devia rezar "Ribla", referindo-se à Ribla junto ao Orontes. — Veja DIBLA.

RIFÁ. Filho de Gômer e neto de Jafé. (Gên 10:2, 3; 1Cr 1:6) Em 1 Crônicas 1:6, o texto massorético hebraico reza "Difá"; contudo, a Septuaginta grega, a Vulgata latina e uns 30 manuscritos em hebraico rezam "Rifá". A diferença na grafia talvez se deva ao copista escrever a letra hebraica dá·leth (ד) em vez da letra hebraica rehsh (ר), que são muito parecidas.

Rifá acha-se alistado entre aqueles de quem as várias nações e povos se espalharam pela terra depois do Dilúvio global. (Gên 10:32) A única referência histórica sobre seus descendentes é de Josefo, do primeiro século EC, que diz que os primitivos habitantes de Paflagônia (ao longo da margem S do Mar Negro, no noroeste da Ásia Menor) eram outrora chamados de rifeanos. Alguns peritos também relacionam esse nome com o do rio chamado Rhebas, naquela região, ao passo que outros favorecem uma relação com o distrito de Rhebantia, na região do Bósforo, mais ao O. A menção limitada de Rifá no registro bíblico e a falta de referências a este nome na antiga história secular disponível não permitem uma identificação precisa.

RIFATE. Veja RIFÁ.

RIMOM [Romãzeira].

1. O pai benjamita de Baaná e Recabe, assassinos de Is-Bosete, filho de Saul; de Beerote, ao N de Gibeá. — 2Sa 4:2, 5-7, 9.

2. Cidade da tribo de Simeão na área circundada pela tribo de Judá. (Jos 19:1, 2, 7; "Remon", BV) Está alistada depois da cidade de Aim, e, pelo visto, En-Rimom em Neemias 11:29 é uma forma combinada para indicar estas cidades gêmeas. É mencionada como ponto situado ao sul, em Zacarias 14:10. Pensa-se que as ruínas dum lugar chamado Khirbet Umm er-Ramamin (Horvat Remalya), a uns 15 km ao N de Berseba, seja a antiga localização dessa cidade.

3. Cidade levita encravada, da família de Merari, na fronteira L da terra de Zebulão (Jos 19:10, 13); evidentemente chamada de "Dimna" em Josué 21:35 e de "Rimono" em 1 Crônicas 6:77. É identificada com Rummana (Rimmon), a cerca de 10 km ao N de Nazaré.

4. Rochedo para o qual 600 homens da tribo de Benjamim fugiram como sobreviventes da batalha perto de Gibeá, na qual todo o Israel se levantou contra os benjamitas para vingar o estupro e assassínio da concubina de um levita. (Jz 20:45-47) Ficaram ali até serem procurados com ofertas de paz. (Jz 21:13) Localizada a uns 6 km ao L de Betel e 18 km ao NNE de Jerusalém, a anterior fortaleza é hoje conhecida como Rammun, onde fica um pequeno povoado. Há ali um monte calcário, em forma de cone, protegido nos três lados por ravinas e contendo numerosas cavernas.

5. Um deus sírio. O chefe do exército sírio, Naamã, depois de curado da lepra, reconheceu que Jeová é o verdadeiro Deus, mas expressou preocupação por ter de acompanhar o rei da Síria ao templo de Rimom e de curvar-se ali, com o rei, diante do ídolo de Rimom, uma vez que o rei se apoiava no braço de Naamã. — 2Rs 5:15-18.

Rimom é geralmente identificado com Ramã (que significa "Vociferador, Trovejador"), deus que se sabe era venerado na Assíria e em Babilônia. Tem-se sugerido que a adoração de Rimom (Ramã) foi trazida da Assíria para o O por algumas das tribos que mais tarde se fixaram ao redor de Damasco. Vários peritos acham que Rimom (Ramã) não passa de um título do deus da tempestade, Hadade (Adade). Serem Tab*rimom* e Ben-Hadade nome de reis sírios sugere uma base para se equiparar Rimom com Hadade, uma vez que esses reis provavelmente usavam o nome ou título de seu principal deus. — 1Rs 15:18.

O Rimom venerado na Síria sem dúvida alguma tinha muito em comum com Ramã. Para os assírios, este último era primariamente um deus da tempestade e do trovão. Embora considerado o dador da chuva e, assim, o provisor de água para poços e campos, Ramã está associado mais destacadamente com os aspectos destrutivos da chuva e dos relâmpagos. Nos monumentos assírios, Ramã é retratado repetidas vezes como deus da guerra. Ele foi considerado assim também em Babilônia, onde Ramã, o deus-lua Sin e o deus-sol Xamaxe constituíam uma de numerosas tríades.

RIMOM-PERES [Romãzeira de Peres]. Um dos locais de acampamento de Israel no ermo, mencionado entre Ritmá e Libna. (Núm 33:19, 20) Sua localização ainda não foi determinada com precisão, embora certos geógrafos sugiram Naqb el-Biyar, a uns 25 km ao OSO da extremidade norte do golfo de ‘Aqaba.

RIMONO. Pelo visto é outro nome do lugar chamado de Dimna em Josué 21:35 e de Rimom em Josué 19:13. — 1Cr 6:77; veja DIMNA; RIMOM N.º 3.

RINA [Grito Jubilante; Grito Suplicante]. Um dos “filhos” de Simão, alistado entre os descendentes de Judá. — 1Cr 4:1, 20.

RINS. Órgãos gêmeos localizados na região lombar. Sua função é filtrar as impurezas do sangue. Sobre a palavra hebraica kela·yóhth (rins), J. N. Oswalt escreveu: “Quando usado figurativamente, o termo refere-se aos aspectos mais íntimos da personalidade.” (Theological Wordbook of the Old Testament [Manual Teológico de Termos do Antigo Testamento], editado por R. Laird Harris, 1980, Vol. 1, p. 440; compare isso com Sal 7:9 n.) Dá-se o mesmo com a palavra grega ne·froí (rins). — Re 2:23 n.

Como ocorre com todos os órgãos do corpo, os rins foram projetados diretamente por Jeová Deus, o Criador. (Sal 139:13) Em animais oferecidos como sacrifício, a gordura em torno dos rins era considerada especialmente seleta e foi mencionada de modo específico como algo que se devia fazer fumegar sobre o altar, junto com os rins, nos sacrifícios de participação em comum (Le 3:10, 11; 9:19, 20), nas ofertas pelo pecado (Le 4:8, 9; 8:14, 16; 9:10) e nas ofertas pela culpa (Le 7:1, 4). Na investidura do sacerdócio, os rins do carneiro da investidura foram primeiro movidos e então queimados sobre o altar. (Êx 29:22, 24, 25; Le 8:25, 27, 28) Com o significado de algo seleto, Moisés falou que Jeová alimentava Seu povo, Israel, com a “gordura de rins do trigo”. — De 32:14.

Por se localizar fundo no corpo, os rins estão entre os órgãos mais inacessíveis. É com boa razão, pois, que a Bíblia usa esse termo para representar os pensamentos e as emoções mais profundos da personalidade. Uma ferida nos rins seria muitíssimo profunda, quer em sentido literal, quer figurado. (Jó 16:13; Sal 73:21; La 3:13) Os rins às vezes são mencionados em íntima relação com o coração, que é usado figurativamente para representar a inteira pessoa interior. — Je 11:20; 17:10; 20:12; veja CORAÇÃO.

Nosso Criador conhece a constituição do homem do modo mais cabal e íntimo possível. Portanto, diz-se que Jeová prova “o coração e os rins”, assim como seu Filho também pesquisa “os rins e os corações”. (Sal 7:9; Re 2:23) Assim como se refina prata, Jeová pode ‘refinar’ os rins e o coração da pessoa para que ela se torne reta perante Deus, passando a ser mais sensível aos caminhos de Jeová. — Sal 26:2; 66:10.

No Salmo 16:7, Davi escreveu: “Bendirei a Jeová que me aconselhou. Realmente, durante as noites me corrigiram os meus rins.” O conselho de Deus atingiu os recantos mais íntimos do ser de Davi, como adorador do verdadeiro Deus. Por se ter instalado tão profundamente, o ‘conselho’ foi identificado com os “rins”, de modo que se pôde dizer que os rins corrigiram Davi.

A Palavra de Deus, embora possa estar nos lábios dos iníquos, não atinge os aspectos mais íntimos de sua personalidade. Assim, a respeito dos iníquos, Jeremias 12:2 diz: “Continuam progredindo; também produziram fruto. Estás perto na sua boca, mas longe dos seus rins.” Isto se assemelha ao texto em Isaías 29:13, citado por Jesus em Mateus 15:7, 8, que diz a mesma coisa sobre o coração do iníquo, mostrando assim que às vezes o “coração” e os “rins” são usados de maneira correspondente.

RIO. O termo hebraico na·hár refere-se a um rio, isto é, a um considerável corpo de água que flui de forma bem constante num canal natural. Em contraste com isto, um uádi, ou vale de torrente (hebr.: ná·hhal), não raro é seco, mas às vezes conduz um turbulento corpo de água. Entre os principais rios mencionados na Bíblia acham-se o Hídequel (Tigre), o Eufrates, o Jordão, o Abana e o Farpar. (Gên 2:14; 2Rs 5:10, 12) O Nilo, embora não indicado por este nome, é mencionado como ye’ór (às vezes ye’óhr), que se entende significar também um riacho ou canal (Is 33:21), ou uma vala ou galeria cheia de água. (Jó 28:10) O contexto torna evidente quando os termos ye’ór ou ye’óhr se referem ao Nilo; por conseguinte, o nome Nilo aparece nas traduções da Bíblia. — Gên 41:17, 18.

O “rio do Egito” (Gên 15:18) talvez seja o mesmo que o “vale da torrente do Egito”. — Núm 34:5; veja SIOR.

O Eufrates com frequência é chamado simplesmente de “o Rio”. (Jos 24:2, 3; Esd 8:36; Is 7:20; 27:12; Miq 7:12) Sendo o mais extenso e o mais importante rio do SO da Ásia, o Eufrates era o “grande rio” para os hebreus. (Gên 15:18) Portanto, ser ele chamado de “o Rio” não criava nenhuma ambiguidade.

O Rei Davi, com a ajuda de Jeová, conseguiu estender os limites da Terra da Promessa até o Eufrates. (1Cr 18:3-8) A respeito de seu filho, Salomão, foi declarado: “Terá súditos de mar a mar e desde o Rio [Eufrates] até os confins da terra.” (Sal 72:8) Na profecia de Zacarias, estas palavras são repetidas e apontam para a regência global do Messias. — Za 9:9, 10; compare com Da 2:44; Mt 21:4, 5.

O primeiro rio mencionado na Bíblia é o que, pelo visto, tinha sua nascente no Éden e regava o jardim que Jeová dera qual lar para Adão e Eva. Este rio se dividia em quatro cabeceiras, as quais, por sua vez, resultavam em outros rios, o Píson, o Giom, o Hídequel e o Eufrates. As regiões (Havilá, Cus e Assíria) mencionadas com relação a estes quatro rios existiam no período pós-diluviano. (Gên 2:10-14) Assim, parece que o escritor do relato, Moisés, usou termos comuns em seus dias para indicar a localização do jardim do Éden. Por este motivo, não se pode confirmar com certeza se o que é dito sobre os cursos do Píson, do Giom e do Hídequel se aplicam ao período pós-diluviano ou ao pré-diluviano. Se a descrição se relaciona com a época anterior ao Dilúvio, o próprio Dilúvio pode bem ter contribuído para a alteração dos cursos destes rios. Se se aplica ao período pós-diluviano, outros fenômenos naturais, tais como terremotos, podem desde então ter alterado os seus cursos, impedindo a identificação de alguns.

Uso Figurado. Os rios serviam como barreira ao avanço de forças inimigas e desempenhavam papel vital na defesa de certas cidades, como Babilônia, por exemplo. Jerusalém, porém, não dispunha de nenhum rio qual meio natural de defesa. Todavia, Jeová Deus era descrito como a fonte dum poderoso rio de proteção para aquela cidade. Os inimigos que investissem contra Jerusalém como hostil frota de galeras sofreriam o desastre. — Is 33:21, 22; veja GALERA.

A desastrosa enchente dum rio é usada para representar a invasão de forças inimigas. — Is 8:7.

A água é necessária para a vida, e Jeová é mencionado como a Fonte de águas vivas. (Je 2:13) Mas os israelitas apóstatas voltaram sua atenção para o Egito e para a Assíria. É por isso que Jeová, mediante seu profeta Jeremias, disse: "Que interesse é que terias no caminho do Egito, para beberes as águas de Sior? E que interesse terias no caminho da Assíria, para beberes as águas do Rio? . . . Sabe, pois, e vê que teres abandonado a Jeová, teu Deus, é algo mau e amargo." (Je 2:18, 19) Evidentemente as águas de fontes humanas, que são encaradas como vitais para a existência da pessoa, são indicadas em Revelação (Apocalipse) 8:10 e 16:4.

A respeito do "rio de água da vida" (Re 22:1), veja VIDA (Rio de Água da Vida).

RIO DO EGITO. Jeová prometeu que os descendentes de Abraão receberiam a terra "desde o rio do Egito" até o rio Eufrates. (Gên 15:18) Os comentaristas de modo geral entendem que o "rio do Egito" se refere ao "vale da torrente do Egito", agora identificado com o uádi el-ʽArish, da península do Sinai, que deságua no mar Mediterrâneo a cerca de 150 km ao L de Port Said. (Veja EGITO, VALE DA TORRENTE DO.) Em 1 Crônicas 13:5, certas traduções rezam "rio [shi·hhóhr] do Egito" (NM, BV, La), e esta referência também pode ser ao uádi el-ʽArish. No entanto, outra possibilidade é que ambos os textos se refiram a um braço do Nilo. — Veja SIOR.

RIQUEZAS. Abundância de bens materiais; também, qualidades espirituais, privilégios de serviço e aprovação divina.

De ponta a ponta, nas Escrituras, dá-se ênfase, não à posse de riquezas materiais, mas a uma boa posição perante Jeová Deus, posição esta que é mantida por se continuar a fazer a vontade divina com fé. Cristo Jesus incentivou outros a ser 'ricos para com Deus' (Lu 12:21) e a armazenar "tesouros no céu". (Mt 6:20; Lu 12:33) A folha de serviços de obras excelentes da pessoa seria como riquezas depositadas junto ao Criador, no céu, assegurando bênçãos duradouras ao envolvido. Pessoas que se tornaram seguidores de Jesus Cristo, ungidos pelo espírito, podiam aguardar as "gloriosas riquezas" da herança celestial (Ef 1:18), e, durante sua 'residência como forasteiros' na terra, seriam ricos, ou abundariam, em fé, amor, bondade e outras qualidades divinas. — Compare com Gál 5:22, 23; Tg 2:5; 1Pe 2:11, 12; 2Pe 1:5-8.

Os Patriarcas Abastados. Fiéis servos de Jeová Deus, como os patriarcas Abraão e Jó, não receberam a comissão de ajudar os que não eram de sua família a aceitar a adoração verdadeira. Por este motivo, parece que eles ocupavam o tempo principalmente em suprir as necessidades físicas e espirituais de suas respectivas famílias. Jeová abençoou os esforços diligentes desses servos seus, de modo que eles vieram a possuir muito gado, muitos servos, e muito ouro e prata. — Gên 12:16; 13:2; 14:14; 30:43; 32:10; Jó 1:2, 3; 42:10-12.

Embora abastados, esses homens não eram materialistas. Reconheciam que sua prosperidade material se devia à bênção de Jeová sobre eles, e não se mostravam gananciosos por riquezas. Abraão, depois de derrotar quatro reis coligados e de recuperar todos os bens que estes haviam tomado de Sodoma, podia ter aumentado consideravelmente sua riqueza. Mas ele rejeitou a oferta do rei de Sodoma de apossar-se dos bens recuperados, dizendo: "Ergo deveras minha mão em juramento a Jeová, o Deus Altíssimo, Produtor do céu e da terra, que, desde o fio até o cordão de sandália, não, não tomarei nada daquilo que é teu, para que não digas: 'Fui eu que enriqueci a Abrão.' Nada para mim!" (Gên 14:22-24) Ao perder todo o seu gado e seus filhos, Jó exclamou: "O próprio Jeová deu e o próprio Jeová tirou. Continue a ser abençoado o nome de Jeová." — Jó 1:21.

Abraão, Jó e outros mostraram que se podia confiar riquezas a eles. Eram laboriosos e utilizavam corretamente seus bens materiais. Para exemplificar, Jó estava sempre disposto a ajudar os pobres e os aflitos. (Jó 29:12-16) Em vista da atitude correta desses servos seus, havia boa razão para Jeová Deus protegê-los de serem defraudados por homens egoístas e gananciosos. — Gên 31:5-12; Jó 1:10; Sal 105:14.

Israel Prosperaria, se Fosse Obediente. Como no caso dos fiéis patriarcas, a prosperidade material dos israelitas dependia de manterem uma relação correta com Jeová Deus. Moisés aconselhou-os rigorosamente a lembrar-se de que foi Jeová, o Deus deles, quem lhes dera poder para produzir riquezas. (De 8:18) Sim, Jeová foi Aquele que dera uma herança de terra à nação que se achava numa relação pactuada com Ele. (Núm 34:2-12) Ele podia também cuidar de que eles recebessem a chuva na devida estação e não sofressem perdas devido a safras ruins ou a invasões de forças inimigas. — Le 26:4-7.

O propósito de Deus era que Israel, se obediente, se tornasse uma nação próspera. Moisés disse: "Jeová te abrirá seu bom depósito, os céus, para dar chuva à tua terra na sua estação e para abençoar todo ato da tua mão; e certamente emprestarás a muitas nações, ao passo que tu mesmo não tomarás empréstimo. E Jeová te porá deveras à cabeça e não na cauda; e terás de vir a estar somente em cima e não virás a estar embaixo, por estares obedecendo aos mandamentos de Jeová, teu Deus." (De 28:12, 13) A prosperidade da nação teria dado honra a Jeová, constituindo poderosa prova para as nações circunvizinhas de que Ele era "Quem faz enriquecer" (1Sa 2:7) Seu povo e de que a Lei que lhes dera estava além de comparação no que dizia respeito a garantir o bem-estar de todos os envolvidos.

O caso do Rei Salomão ilustra que a prosperidade de Israel realmente moveu outros povos a glorificar a Jeová. No início de seu reinado, quando lhe foi dada a oportunidade de solicitar o que desejava de Jeová, ele não pediu grandes riquezas, mas solicitou sabedoria e conhecimento para julgar a nação. Jeová concedeu a Salomão seu pedido e também lhe deu "riquezas, e bens materiais, e honra". (2Cr 1:7-12; 9:22-27) Em resultado disso, as notícias sobre a sabedoria e a riqueza de Salomão vieram a ser associadas ao nome de Jeová. A rainha de Sabá, por exemplo, tendo ouvido falar de Salomão, com relação a Jeová, viajou de uma terra distante para comprovar se eram verídicas as notícias sobre sua sabedoria e prosperidade. (1Rs 10:1, 2) O que ela viu moveu-a a reconhecer o amor de Jeová por Israel. Ela disse: "Veraz se mostrou a palavra que ouvi na minha própria terra a respeito dos teus assuntos e sobre a tua sabedoria. E eu não depositava fé nas palavras até que vim ver com os meus próprios olhos; e eis que não se me contou nem a metade. Ultrapassaste em sabedoria e em prosperidade as coisas ouvidas que escutei. Felizes são os teus homens; felizes são estes servos teus que estão constantemente de pé diante de ti, escutando a tua sabedoria! Que Jeová, teu Deus, venha a ser bendito, aquele que se agradou de ti, pondo-te no trono de Israel; porque Jeová ama a Israel por tempo indefinido, de modo que te designou como rei para fazer decisões judiciais e justiça." — 1Rs 10:6-9.

Como nação próspera, os israelitas podiam saborear alimentos e bebidas (1Rs 4:20; Ec 5:18, 19), e suas riquezas serviam para protegê-los dos problemas da pobreza. (Pr 10:15; Ec 7:12) No entanto, embora estivesse em harmonia com o propósito de Jeová que os israelitas usufruíssem a prosperidade resultante de seu trabalho árduo (compare com Pr 6:6-11; 20:13; 24:33, 34), ele também se certificou de que fossem avisados do perigo de se esquecerem de que ele era a Fonte de sua opulência e de começarem a confiar em suas riquezas. (De 8:7-17; Sal 49:6-9; Pr 11:4; 18:10, 11; Je 9:23, 24) Lembrou-se-lhes de que as riquezas eram apenas temporárias (Pr 23:4, 5), não podiam ser dadas a Deus como resgate para livrar a pessoa da morte (Sal 49:6, 7) e não eram de nenhum valor para os mortos (Sal 49:16, 17; Ec 5:15). Mostrou-se-lhes que atribuir indevida importância às riquezas levaria a práticas fraudulentas e ao desfavor de Jeová. (Pr 28:20; compare com Je 5:26-28; 17:9-11.) Foram também incentivados a 'honrar a Jeová com suas coisas valiosas'. — Pr 3:9.

Naturalmente, a prosperidade da nação não significava que todas as pessoas eram abastadas ou que aquelas que tinham poucos recursos incorriam necessariamente na desaprovação divina. Circunstâncias imprevistas podiam levar algumas pessoas à pobreza. (Ec 9:11, 12) A morte podia deixar órfãos e viúvas. Acidentes e doenças podiam, temporária ou permanentemente, impedir alguém de realizar o trabalho necessário. Assim, os israelitas eram incentivados a ser generosos com suas riquezas no sentido de ajudar os pobres e os aflitos em seu meio. — Le 25:35; De 15:7, 8; Sal 112:5, 9; Pr 19:17; veja DÁDIVAS DE MISERICÓRDIA; POBRE.

As Riquezas Entre os Seguidores de Cristo Jesus. Diferente dos patriarcas e da nação de Israel, os seguidores de Jesus Cristo tinham a comissão de 'fazer discípulos de pessoas de todas as nações'. (Mt 28:19, 20) Cumprir tal comissão requeria tempo e esforço que de outra forma poderiam ser corretamente usados em empreendimentos seculares. Portanto, a pessoa que continuasse apegada a suas riquezas, em vez de livrar-se de fardos a fim de poder usar seu tempo e recursos para cumprir essa comissão, não podia ser discípulo de Jesus, com a perspectiva de ganhar vida nos céus. É por isso que o Filho de Deus disse: "Quão difícil será para os que têm dinheiro abrirem caminho para entrar no reino de Deus! De fato, é mais fácil para um camelo passar pelo orifício duma agulha de costura, do que para um rico entrar no reino de Deus." (Lu 18:24, 25) Isto foi dito por causa da reação dum jovem governante rico, quando Jesus lhe disse: "Vende todas as coisas que tens e distribui aos pobres, e terás um tesouro nos céus; e vem ser meu seguidor." (Lu 18:22, 23) Esse jovem governante rico tinha a obrigação de ajudar companheiros israelitas necessitados. (Pr 14:21; 28:27; Is 58:6, 7; Ez 18:7-9) Mas sua falta de disposição de desfazer-se de seus bens materiais a fim de usá-los para ajudar outros e de devotar-se a ser seguidor de Jesus Cristo bloqueou-lhe a entrada no Reino dos céus.

Os seguidores de Cristo, porém, não se deviam reduzir a um estado de pobreza e então depender de outros para o sustento. Antes, deviam trabalhar arduamente de modo a poder cuidar da família e também ter "algo para distribuir a alguém em necessidade". (Ef 4:28; 1Te 4:10-12; 2Te 3:10-12; 1Ti 5:8) Deviam contentar-se com ter sustento e abrigo, sem se empenhar em enriquecer. Quem quer que fizesse de empreendimentos materiais sua principal preocupação na vida corria o perigo de ficar envolvido em práticas desonestas e de perder a fé por negligenciar as coisas espirituais. Isto realmente aconteceu com alguns, como mostram as palavras de Paulo a Timóteo: "Os que estão resolvidos a ficar ricos caem em tentação e em laço, e em muitos desejos insensatos e nocivos, que lançam os homens na destruição e na ruína. Porque o amor ao dinheiro é raiz de toda sorte de coisas prejudiciais, e alguns, por procurarem alcançar este amor, foram desviados da fé e se traspassaram todo com muitas dores." — 1Ti 6:9, 10.

Naturalmente, o que Jesus disse ao jovem governante rico não significa que o cristão não possa ter riquezas materiais. No primeiro século EC, por exemplo, havia cristãos abastados na congregação de Éfeso. O apóstolo Paulo não instruiu Timóteo a aconselhar esses irmãos ricos especificamente a se desfazerem de todas as coisas materiais, mas escreveu: "Dá ordens aos que são ricos no atual sistema de coisas, que não sejam soberbos e que não baseiem a sua esperança nas riquezas incertas, mas em Deus, que nos fornece ricamente todas as coisas para o nosso usufruto; para praticarem o bem, para serem ricos em obras excelentes, para serem liberais, prontos para partilhar, entesourando para si seguramente um alicerce excelente para o futuro, a fim de que se apeguem firmemente à verdadeira vida." (1Ti 6:17-19) Assim, esses cristãos abastados tinham de cuidar de sua atitude, mantendo as riquezas no devido lugar e usando-as generosamente para ajudar outros.

Mamom. Entende-se em geral que o termo da língua original, ma·mo·nás (ou sua forma aportuguesada "mamom"), denota dinheiro ou riquezas. (Mt 6:24; Lu 16:9, 11, 13; compare Al e PIB com NM.) Não há evidência de que a expressão tenha sido alguma vez o nome de uma deidade específica. Jesus usou este termo ao mostrar que a pessoa não pode ser escrava de Deus se as Riquezas são seu amo. (Mt 6:24) Ele instou seus ouvintes: "Fazei para vós amigos por meio das riquezas injustas, para que, quando estas vos falharem, vos recebam nas moradias eternas." (Lu 16:9) Visto que a posse ou o desejo de riquezas materiais pode conduzir a atos contrários à lei, é possível que por este motivo elas tenham sido chamadas de "riquezas injustas", em contraste com as riquezas espirituais. Além disso, as riquezas materiais, especialmente o dinheiro, na verdade pertencem a "César" e estão sob seu controle, pois é ele quem faz a emissão de dinheiro e lhe fixa determinados valores. Tais riquezas são transitórias e podem ser perdidas em resultado de condições econômicas ou outras circunstâncias. Por isso, quem possui tais riquezas não deve depositar nelas sua confiança, nem usá-las como o mundo em geral o faz, para fins egoístas, como amealhar ainda maiores riquezas. (1Co 7:31) Em vez disso, deve estar alerta e ser diligente em tornar-se amigo dos que possuem as moradias eternas.

Os que possuem as "moradias eternas" são Jeová Deus e seu Filho, Cristo Jesus. (Compare com Jo 6:37-40, 44.) As pessoas que não usam suas "riquezas injustas" de forma apropriada (como para ajudar os necessitados e para promover as "boas novas"; Gál 2:10; Fil 4:15) jamais podem ser amigos de Deus e de seu Filho, Cristo Jesus. Sua infidelidade no que diz respeito ao uso das riquezas injustas mostra que são indignos de se lhes confiar riquezas espirituais. (Lu 16:10-12) Tais pessoas jamais poderiam ser mordomos excelentes da be-nignidade imerecida de Deus, distribuindo riquezas espirituais a outros. — 1Pe 4:10, 11.

RIQUEZAS INJUSTAS. Veja RIQUEZAS.

RISO. As palavras hebraicas para riso (tsehhóq e a forma paralela sehhóq) são, segundo Gesenius, onomatopeicas, isto é, imitam o som do riso (como as interjeições portuguesas "ho-ho" e "ah-ah"). O nome Isaque, Yits·hháq, que também significa "Riso", tem esta mesma qualidade onomatopeica.

Tanto Abraão como Sara riram dos anúncios angélicos de que teriam um filho na velhice. Abraão não foi repreendido por rir, mas Sara foi, e ela até tentou negar que tivesse rido. Portanto, parece que o riso de Abraão foi uma expressão da alegria que sentiu diante da surpreendente perspectiva de ter um filho com Sara, na velhice. Mas Sara riu, evidentemente, porque essa mesma perspectiva surpreendente soou-lhe um tanto humorística; a ideia de uma mulher de sua idade, até então estéril, ter um filho pelo visto trouxe a sua mente um quadro um tanto incongruente. (Gên 17:17; 18:9-15) Em nenhum dos casos, porém, o riso representou escárnio ou zombaria deliberada, e registra-se que ambos demonstraram fé na promessa de Deus. (Ro 4:18-22; He 11:1, 8-12) Quando este filho nasceu, os pais sem dúvida se deleitaram, pois este fora por muitos anos o desejo de seu coração. Abraão deu nome ao filho deles, após o que Sara disse: "Deus me preparou riso: todo aquele que ouvir isso há de rir de mim." (Gên 21:1-7) Outros sem dúvida ficaram admirados e deleitados ao ouvirem as boas novas de que Abraão e Sara haviam sido abençoados às mãos de Jeová.

Quando Apropriado. Jeová é o "Deus feliz" e deseja que seus servos sejam felizes. (1Ti 1:11) No entanto, as Escrituras mostram que o riso é apropriado só em certos momentos. Há "tempo para chorar e tempo para rir". (Ec 3:1, 4) O sábio Rei Salomão nos aconselha: "Vai, come o teu alimento com alegria e bebe o teu vinho com um bom coração, porque o verdadeiro Deus já achou prazer nos teus trabalhos." No entanto, não existe verdadeiro motivo de regozijo se a atividade da pessoa demonstra desconsideração pelos caminhos justos de Deus. — Ec 9:7.

Quando Inoportuno. O importante é viver de modo a obter um bom nome perante Jeová. Por conseguinte, neste sistema de coisas, o riso pode às vezes ser muitíssimo inoportuno, até prejudicial. Em sua experiência de 'apoderar-se da estultícia, até que pudesse ver o que havia de bom para os filhos da humanidade naquilo que faziam', Salomão disse no coração: "Vem deveras, deixa-me experimentar-te com alegria. Também, vê o que é bom." Mas descobriu que isto era um empreendimento vão. Descobriu que a hilaridade e o riso, em si, não satisfazem genuinamente, pois deixam de proporcionar real e duradoura felicidade. É mister que haja verdadeiro alicerce para a alegria perene, edificante. Salomão expressou seus sentimentos: "Eu disse ao riso: 'Insânia!' e à alegria: 'Que está fazendo esta?' " — Ec 2:1-3.

Salomão ilustra a sabedoria de não se viver simplesmente em busca de prazeres. Ele diz: "Melhor é ir à casa de luto, do que ir à casa de banquete, porque esse é o fim de toda a humanidade; e quem está vivo deve tomar isso ao coração." Não se trata de recomendar a tristeza como algo superior ao regozijo. Refere-se a uma ocasião específica, àquela em que uma pessoa morreu e a casa está em prantos. Este é o momento de ir até lá para consolar os enlutados, em vez de insensivelmente esquecê-los, e festejar e divertir-se. A visita aos que pranteiam não só conforta os desolados mas também induz o visitante a lembrar-se da brevidade da vida, a reconhecer que a morte que chegou àquela casa virá a todos com bastante rapidez, e que os vivos devem ter isso em mente. É enquanto a pessoa ainda vive que pode fazer um bom nome, não quando está morrendo. E um bom nome perante Deus é a única coisa de real valor para o moribundo. — Ec 7:2; Gên 50:10; Jo 11:31.

Salomão prossegue dizendo: "Melhor o vexame do que o riso, pois pelo aborrecimento da face melhora o coração." (Ec 7:3) O riso é um bom remédio, mas há momentos em que devemos considerar com seriedade a vida e o modo como a levamos. Se notarmos que desperdiçamos tempo demais em frivolidades, e não fazemos um bom nome por meio de boas obras, temos motivos de ficar aborrecidos com nós mesmos, de ficar tristes e de mudar de proceder; isso fará com que nosso coração se sinta melhor. Ajudar-nos-á a fazer um bom nome, para que o dia de nossa morte ou o tempo de nossa inspeção final por parte de Deus e de Cristo seja melhor para nós do que o dia de nosso nascimento. — Ec 7:1.

"O coração dos sábios está na casa de luto, mas o coração dos estúpidos está na casa de alegria", prossegue Salomão. "Melhor é ouvir a censura de um sábio, do que ser o homem que ouve o canto dos estúpidos." (Ec 7:4, 5) Quando está numa casa em que ocorreu uma morte, o coração sábio fica em sintonia com a seriedade condizente com a aflição que decorre da perda de alguém, e isso influencia a pessoa de coração sábio a observar como leva a vida, mas o ambiente despreocupado num lugar de festa atrai a de coração tolo e faz com que a vida seja encarada com espírito frívolo e irresponsável. Caso a pessoa se esteja desviando das veredas retas, a censura de um sábio a colocará de novo no caminho da vida, corrigindo-a e habilitando-a a fazer para si mesma um bom nome. Mas, como pode ser de ajuda ouvir o canto ou vãs lisonjas de um tolo, os quais ocultam falhas e nos tornam obstinados no proceder errado? Isto nos induziria a continuar fazendo um nome ruim, a não nos corrigirmos para andar nas veredas que conduzem a um bom nome perante Jeová.

"Pois, igual ao ruído de espinhos sob a panela é o riso do estúpido; e também isto é vaidade." (Ec 7:6) Espinhos incendeiam-se rápido, mas com igual rapidez se transformam em cinzas. Talvez não durem o bastante para se terminar de cozinhar o que está na panela, neste caso não realizando a tarefa para a qual se acendeu o fogo. Assim, sua crepitação ostentosa, barulhenta e ardente mostra-se fútil e vã. Da mesma forma são as risadinhas e as frivolidades do tolo. Também, o próprio som do riso do tolo irrita os ouvidos, sendo inapropriado para o momento ou para a ocasião, e tende a desanimar, em vez de encorajar. Não ajuda ninguém a progredir na séria tarefa de fazer um bom nome do qual Deus se lembre e, desta forma, a assegurar que 'o dia da morte seja melhor do que o dia do nascimento'.

O Riso Transformado em Pranto. No Sermão do Monte, Jesus Cristo disse: "Felizes sois vós os que agora chorais, porque haveis de rir", e: "Ai de vós que agora rides, porque pranteareis e chorareis." (Lu 6:21, 25) Jesus evidentemente salientava que aqueles que estavam tristes devido às más condições religiosas então predominantes em Israel poderiam, por meio da fé Nele, ter o seu pranto transformado em riso, ao passo que aqueles que se deleitavam em rir e levar uma vida despreocupada quanto ao futuro verificariam que o seu riso se transformaria em pranto. (Compare com Lu 16:19-31.) Ao escrever aos cristãos, Tiago, meio-irmão de Jesus, instou os cristãos de mentalidade mundana: "Entregai-vos à mágoa, e pranteai e chorai. Transforme-se o vosso riso em pranto e a vossa alegria em abatimento. Humilhai-vos aos olhos de Jeová, e ele vos enaltecerá." (Tg 4:4, 9, 10) Tal exaltação resultaria em genuína felicidade.

Expressão de Caçoada. O riso figura destacadamente nas Escrituras como expressão de caçoada. O verbo hebraico tsa·hháq (rir) também tem o significado de "fazer caçoada; fazer de objeto de riso". — Gên 21:9; 39:14.

Até membros da criação animal são retratados rindo em zombaria. A avestruz fêmea é representada rindo diante do cavalo perseguidor e de seu cavaleiro (por causa da velocidade dela), e o cavalo, ao entrar em batalha, rindo do pavor (por causa de sua potência e destemor). (Jó 39:13, 18, 19, 22) Diz-se que o leviatã (o crocodilo) se ri do retinir dum dardo, por causa de sua pesada couraça. — Jó 41:1, 29.

Servos de Deus também tiveram de aguentar muito riso caçoador. Jó disse: "Torno-me alguém que é alvo de riso para o seu próximo." (Jó 12:4; 30:1) Jeremias foi motivo de riso o dia inteiro entre seus contemporâneos. (Je 20:7) Do próprio Jesus Cristo riram zombeteiramente antes de ele ressuscitar a filha de Jairo. (Mt 9:24; Mr 5:40; Lu 8:41-53) No entanto, todos os que conheciam a força e a sabedoria de Deus e foram obedientes a ele tiveram bons motivos para ser felizes. — Mt 5:11, 12.

Jeová Deus é descrito rindo em caçoada das nações, por causa das palavras jactanciosas delas, que dão em nada, e da confusão que resulta de seu proceder tolo contra ele. (Sal 59:8) Ele conhece Seu próprio poder e propósitos, e se ri da oposição insignificante e fútil que elas erguem contra ele e seu povo. (Sal 2:1-4) A pessoa sábia certamente deseja evitar que Jeová se ria dela. (Pr 1:26) Embora não tenha prazer na morte do iníquo (Ez 18:23, 32), Jeová não se preocupa com as tramas deles contra Seu povo e se ri por ver o dia da libertação dos justos, em que falharão os projetos dos iníquos e a iniquidade terminará para sempre. — Sal 37:12, 13, 20.

RISPA [Pedra Aquecida; ou: Brasa Incandescente]. Concubina do Rei Saul; filha de Aiá. (2Sa 3:7; 21:11) Após a morte de Saul, seu filho, Is-Bosete, aborreceu o general Abner ao exigir deste uma satisfação por ter tido relações sexuais com Rispa, ato que, como ele interpretou, subentendia uma tentativa de apoderar-se do trono. Em consequência disso, Abner desertou para o lado de Davi. — 2Sa 3:7-21.

Rispa dera à luz dois filhos a Saul, Armoni e Mefibosete. Muito tempo depois da morte de Saul, Davi tomou estes dois filhos de Rispa, junto com outros cinco descendentes de Saul, e os entregou aos gibeonitas, para que fossem mortos, a fim de remover a culpa de sangue da terra. Os sete ficaram expostos num monte, onde Rispa protegeu seus cadáveres das aves e dos animais selvagens, "desde o início da sega até que caiu água sobre eles desde os céus". (2Sa 21:1-10) Este período indefinido pode ter sido de cinco ou seis meses, a menos que, como alguns sugerem, houvesse uma chuvarada excepcional, fora de época. Tal chuva forte antes de outubro teria sido muitíssimo incomum. (1Sa 12:17, 18; Pr 26:1) Davi, por fim, ficou sabendo do caso e aliviou Rispa de sua vigília, mandando sepultar os cadáveres. — 2Sa 21:11-14.

RISSA [possivelmente: Aspersão]. Local de acampamento israelita no ermo, mencionado entre Libna e Queelata. (Núm 33:21, 22) A localização de Rissa não é certa, embora alguns o tenham relacionado com Kuntilla (Gerasa), a uns 55 km ao NNO da extremidade norte do golfo de ʽAqaba.

RITMÁ [Giesta-das-Vassouras]. Um dos locais de acampamento de Israel no ermo. (Núm 33:18, 19) Sua localização é hoje desconhecida.

RIXA. Altercação, briga, contenda com outra pessoa por causa de inimizade. Certo verbo hebraico traduzido "envolver-se em rixa" também é traduzido "provocar" e "incitar-se". Entre as causas de rixa a que fazem alusão as Escrituras acham-se o ódio (Pr 10:12), o furor (Pr 15:18; 29:22), as intrigas (Pr 16:28), a zombaria (Pr 22:10), beber demais (Pr 23:29, 30), a calúnia (Pr 26:20), a arrogância ou o orgulho, e a falta de ensino correto (Pr 28:25; 1Ti 6:3, 4). A rixa destrói a paz e a felicidade. Seu efeito desagradável e repulsivo sobre outras pessoas é repetidas vezes ressaltado no livro de Provérbios. (Pr 19:13; 21:9, 19; 25:24; 27:15) As contendas entre aqueles que outrora usufruíam um relacionamento fraterno podem representar uma barreira quase intransponível para a reconciliação. "Um irmão contra quem se transgride é mais do que uma vila fortificada; e há contendas que são como a tranca duma torre de habitação." — Pr 18:19.

Como uma das obras da carne que Jeová odeia (Gál 5:19, 20; compare com Pr 6:19; Ro 1:28, 29, 32; Tg 3:14-16), a rixa ou contenda não é cabível na congregação cristã. (Ro 13:13; 1Co 3:3; 2Co 12:20; Fil 2:3; Tit 3:9) Uma das qualificações para o superintendente cristão é de que ele não seja beligerante. (1Ti 3:1, 3) Portanto, quem persiste em contendas ou rixas acha-se entre os que receberão julgamento adverso de Deus. — Ro 2:6, 8.

No primeiro século EC, o apóstolo Paulo teve de lidar com pessoas que eram dadas a rixas. Alguns declaravam as boas novas por briga, provavelmente visando destacar-se e minar a autoridade e influência de Paulo. Mas Paulo não permitiu que isto lhe tirasse a alegria de ver que Cristo estava sendo propalado. — Fil 1:15-18.

RIZIA [duma raiz que significa "agradar-se; aprovar"]. Guerreiro e cabeça de família na tribo de Aser; filho de Ula. — 1Cr 7:39, 40.

ROBOÃO [Ampliar (Tornar Espaçoso) o Povo]. Filho de Salomão com Naamá, sua esposa amonita. Ele sucedeu a seu pai no trono, em 997 AEC, aos 41 anos, e reinou por 17 anos. (1Rs 14:21; 1Cr 3:10; 2Cr 9:31) Roboão gozou da distinção de ser, pelo menos por algum tempo, o último rei da monarquia unida e, daí, o primeiro governante do reino meridional de duas tribos, de Judá e Benjamim, pois logo depois de ser coroado rei em Siquém, por todo o Israel, o reino unido de Davi e Salomão foi dividido. Dez tribos retiraram seu apoio de Roboão e fizeram de Jeroboão o seu rei, como Jeová predissera por intermédio do profeta Aijá. — 1Rs 11:29-31; 12:1; 2Cr 10:1.

Esta separação se deu depois que uma delegação do povo, com Jeroboão como porta-voz, suplicou a Roboão que eliminasse algumas das medidas opressivas que Salomão lhes impusera. Roboão fez consultas sobre o assunto. Primeiramente, consultou os anciãos, que o aconselharam a acatar o clamor do povo e reduzir-lhes as cargas, o que resultaria em ele se mostrar um rei sábio, amado por seu povo. Mas Roboão desprezou este conselho maduro e procurou o dos jovens com os quais crescera. Estes disseram ao rei que ele deveria fazer seu dedo mínimo mais grosso que os quadris de seu pai, aumentando o peso do jugo deles e castigando-os com azorragues, em vez de chicotes. — 1Rs 12:2-15; 2Cr 10:3-15; 13:6, 7.

Esta atitude arrogante e despótica adotada por Roboão, indispôs completamente a maior parte do povo. As únicas tribos que continuaram a apoiar a casa de Davi foram Judá e Benjamim, ao passo que os sacerdotes e os levitas de ambos os reinos, bem como pessoas individuais das dez tribos, também lhe deram apoio. — 1Rs 12:16, 17; 2Cr 10:16, 17; 11:13, 14, 16.

Subsequentemente, quando o Rei Roboão e Adorão (Hadorão), que tinha a seu cargo os recrutados para trabalhos forçados, entraram no território dos separatistas, Adorão foi morto a pedradas, mas o rei conseguiu escapar com vida. (1Rs 12:18; 2Cr 10:18) Roboão juntou então um exército de 180.000 homens de Judá e Benjamim, determinado a sujeitar à força as dez tribos. Mas Jeová, mediante o profeta Semaías, proibiu-os de lutar contra seus irmãos, uma vez que o próprio Deus decretara a divisão do reino. Embora se evitasse assim a luta aberta no campo de batalha, as hostilidades entre as duas facções persistiram durante todos os dias de Roboão. — 1Rs 12:19-24; 15:6; 2Cr 10:19; 11:1-4.

Por certo tempo, Roboão seguiu razoavelmente bem as leis de Jeová, e no início de seu reinado ele construiu e fortificou várias cidades, algumas das quais abasteceu com suprimentos alimentares. (2Cr 11:5-12, 17) No entanto, quando seu reinado ficou firmemente estabelecido, ele abandonou a adoração de Jeová e liderou Judá na prática da detestável adoração do sexo, talvez devido à influência amonita por parte da família de sua mãe. (1Rs 14:22-24; 2Cr 12:1) Isto, por sua vez, provocou a ira de Jeová, que, em expressão dessa ira, suscitou o rei do Egito, Sisaque, que invadiu a terra junto com seus aliados e capturou várias cidades de Judá, no quinto ano do reinado de Roboão. Se não fosse porque Roboão e seus príncipes se humilharam, arrependidos, nem mesmo Jerusalém teria escapado. Do jeito como as coisas ocorreram, os tesouros do templo e da casa do rei, incluindo os escudos de ouro que Salomão tinha feito, foram levados por Sisaque como despojo. Depois Roboão substituiu tais escudos por outros, de cobre. — 1Rs 14:25-28; 2Cr 12:2-12.

Durante sua vida, Roboão teve 18 esposas, incluindo Maalate, neta de Davi, e Maacá, neta do filho de Davi, Absalão. Maacá era sua esposa favorita e mãe de Abias (Abijão), um dos seus 28 filhos e herdeiro legitimário do trono. Outros membros da família de Roboão incluíam 60 concubinas e 60 filhas. — 2Cr 11:18-22.

Antes de sua morte, aos 58 anos, e da ascensão de Abias ao trono, em 980 AEC, Roboão distribuiu muitos presentes entre seus outros filhos, presumivelmente para impedir alguma revolta contra Abias, depois de sua morte. (1Rs 14:31; 2Cr 11:23; 12:16) Como um todo, a vida de Roboão é mais bem resumida pelo seguinte comentário: "Ele fez o que era mau, pois não fixara firmemente seu coração em buscar a Jeová." — 2Cr 12:14.

ROCA DE FIAR. Vara da qual as fibras de linho, lã ou outros materiais, preparadas e frouxamente enroladas, eram estiradas e então presas ao fuso para a fiação. — Pr 31:19; veja FIAÇÃO.

ROCHA, ROCHEDO. As Escrituras em hebraico distinguem entre uma rocha ou grande pedaço de rocha (tsur) e rochedo (sé·la'). Ambos os termos são usados em sentido literal e figurado nas Escrituras. Os dois se encontram em paralelo em 2 Samuel 22:2, 3 e em Salmo 18:2: "Jeová é meu rochedo . . . Meu Deus é minha rocha."

A Bíblia preserva os nomes de certos rochedos e rochas. Por exemplo, o príncipe midianita, Orebe, foi morto pelos homens de Gideão numa rocha chamada Orebe, evidentemente assim denominada por causa desse incidente. (Jz 7:25; Is 10:26) Menciona-se o rochedo de Étão, onde Sansão viveu por algum tempo (Jz 15:8), e os rochedos em forma de dente, de Bozez e de Sené, onde Jonatã e seu escudeiro atacaram um posto avançado dos filisteus. (1Sa 14:4, 5) Foi em Meribá, na vizinhança de Cades (havia outra Meribá perto de Refidim, na região montanhosa de Horebe [Êx 17:7]), que Moisés e Arão ficaram exasperados a ponto de deixarem de santificar a Jeová, ao fazerem sair do rochedo água para a assembleia. — Núm 20:11-13; Sal 106:32, 33; veja MASSÁ; MERIBÁ N.º 1 e 2.

A palavra grega pé·tra (gênero feminino), que designa uma massa de rocha (Mt 7:24, 25; 27:51, 60; Lu 6:48; 8:6, 13; Re 6:15, 16), é traduzida "rocha", e, portanto, difere de pé·tros (do gênero masculino e usado como nome próprio, Pedro), que significa "pedaço de rocha". Esta diferença torna claro que, ao dizer a Pedro: "Tu és Pedro, e sobre esta rocha construirei a minha congregação", Jesus não estava usando sinônimos. (Mt 16:18) Mesmo na versão aramaica (siríaca), essa distinção fica evidente pela diferença de gênero da partícula que precede a palavra ki'fa', usada tanto para "Pedro" como para "rocha". O pronome verbal masculino (hu) precede "Pedro", mas "rocha" é antecedido pelo adjetivo demonstrativo feminino (hade').

Que os apóstolos não concluíram que a declaração de Jesus significava que Pedro era a rocha fica evidente no fato de que eles mais tarde disputaram a respeito de quem parecia ser o maior entre eles. (Mr 9:33-35; Lu 22:24-26) Não haveria nenhuma base para tal disputa caso se tivesse dado a Pedro a primazia como a rocha sobre a qual devia ser edificada a congregação. As Escrituras mostram claramente que, como pedras de alicerce, todos os apóstolos são iguais. Todos eles, incluindo Pedro, repousam sobre Cristo Jesus como a pedra angular de alicerce. (Ef 2:19-22; Re 21:2, 9-14) O próprio Pedro identificou Cristo Jesus como a rocha (pé·tra) sobre a qual a congregação é edificada. (1Pe 2:4-8) Similarmente, o apóstolo Paulo escreveu: "Porque [os israelitas] costumavam beber da rocha espiritual que os seguia, e essa rocha significava o Cristo." (1Co 10:4) Pelo menos em duas ocasiões e em dois locais diferentes, os israelitas obtiveram uma provisão miraculosa de água tirada duma rocha. (Êx 17:5-7; Núm 20:1-11) Portanto, qual fonte de água, a rocha com efeito os seguia. A própria rocha, evidentemente, era um tipo pictórico, ou simbólico, de Cristo Jesus, que disse aos judeus: "Se alguém tiver sede, venha a mim e beba." — Jo 7:37.

É também de interesse que Agostinho (354-430 EC), geralmente chamado de "Santo Agostinho", em certa época cria que Pedro era a rocha, mas depois mudou de conceito. O Commentary on the Holy Scriptures (Comentário sobre as Escrituras Sagradas), de Lange (Mt 16:18 n, p. 296), cita o que Agostinho teria dito: "A rocha não é assim denominada por causa de Pedro, mas Pedro por causa da rocha (non enim a Petro petra, sed Petrus a petra), assim como Cristo não é chamado dessa forma por causa do cristão, mas o cristão por causa de Cristo. Pois a razão pela qual o Senhor diz: 'Sobre esta rocha edificarei a minha igreja', é que Pedro dissera: 'Tu és o Cristo, o Filho do Deus vivente.' Sobre esta rocha, que tu confessaste, diz ele, eu edificarei a minha igreja. Pois Cristo era a rocha (petra enim erat Christus), sobre a qual o próprio Pedro foi edificado; pois outro alicerce nenhum homem pode lançar, além do que já está lançado, que é Jesus Cristo." — Traduzido para o inglês e editado por P. Schaff, 1976.

Uso Figurado. Num sentido figurado, "rocha" descreve as qualidades de Jeová como o Pai de Israel (De 32:18), como um baluarte (2Sa 22:32, 33; Is 17:10), como a altura protetora e refúgio do seu povo (Sal 62:7; 94:22), e como a sua salvação (De 32:15; Sal 95:1). Alguns se voltam para deuses falsos como sua "rocha". (De 32:37) Há outros exemplos em que "rocha" simboliza, em sentido geral, um lugar de segurança, proteção, garantia e refúgio. (Is 2:10, 19, 21) Em Isaías 8:14, faz-se alusão a Cristo Jesus como "rocha" em que "ambas as casas de Israel" tropeçaram. — Compare com Mt 21:42-44.

Na ilustração do semeador, contada por Jesus, o adjetivo grego pe·tró·des (aparentado com o substantivo pé·tros) é usado para descrever os lugares rochosos sobre os quais caíram algumas das sementes. (Mt 13:3-5, 20) Pé·tros é usado como nome próprio, "Pedro". (Jo 1:42) A respeito do significado deste termo, Vine's Expository Dictionary of Old and New Testament Words (Dicionário Expositivo de Palavras do Velho e do Novo Testamento, de Vine; 1981, Vol. 4, p. 76), comenta: "Petros indica um pedaço de rocha, uma pedra ou bloco rochoso que se destacou, em contraste com petra, uma massa de rocha." Word Studies in the New Testament (Estudos de Palavras no Novo Testamento) diz sobre pé·tros: "No grego clássico, a palavra significa um pedaço de rocha, como em Homero, quando Ájax atira uma pedra em Heitor, . . . ou quando Pátroclo apodera-se de uma pedra pontuda e esconde-a na mão." — De M. Vincent, 1957, Vol. I, p. 91.

A palavra grega tra·khýs, que significa "escabroso" (Lu 3:5), refere-se a recifes rochosos, pontudos e irregulares, em Atos 27:29.

Outra palavra grega, spi·lás, evidentemente se refere a uma rocha ou recife que fica oculto debaixo da água. É usada por Judas para ilustrar certos homens que se haviam introduzido furtivamente na congregação cristã com motivações corruptas. Assim como rochedos ocultos são uma ameaça para navios, do mesmo modo tais homens constituíam verdadeiro perigo para outros na congregação. Ele diz sobre tais homens: "Estes são os rochedos ocultos sob a água, nos vossos ágapes, banqueteando-se convosco." — Ju 12.

RODA. Armação circular de material duro, que pode ser maciça ou com raios e que gira ao redor dum eixo. Antigamente, tábuas de madeira eram pregadas juntas, arredondadas e guarnecidas com aro (pina, ou camba) para formar a primitiva roda. O tipo com raios era usado em carros, carroças e outros veículos. (Êx 14:25; Is 5:28; 28:27) Cada um dos dez carrocins de cobre que Salomão fez para serem usados no templo de Jeová tinha um eixo de cobre e quatro rodas de cobre, semelhantes às rodas de carros, de 1,5 côvado (67 cm) de altura, com cubos, raios e aros. — 1Rs 7:27-33.

O oleiro moldava vasos de barro num disco horizontal giratório, chamado de roda de oleiro. (Je 18:3, 4) Podia-se também baixar e erguer um balde numa cisterna com uma corda presa a algum tipo de roda ou sarilho. — Ec 12:6.

Uso Ilustrativo e Figurado. Segundo o texto massorético hebraico, Provérbios 20:26 reza: "O rei sábio dispersa os iníquos e revolve sobre eles uma roda." Isto parece fazer alusão a uma ação tomada por um rei, comparável ao uso da roda para trilhar o cereal. (Compare com Is 28:27, 28.) A metáfora parece indicar que o rei sábio age prontamente para separar os iníquos dos justos e para punir os iníquos. O mal é assim suprimido de seu domínio. (Compare com Pr 20:8.) No entanto, por uma ligeira alteração, este versículo diz que um rei sábio revolve sobre os iníquos "seu próprio prejuízo".

A língua descontrolada é um "fogo" que "incendeia a roda da vida natural". O inteiro círculo ou curso da vida, no qual a pessoa entra ao nascer, pode ser incendiado pela língua, fazendo a vida tornar-se um círculo vicioso, possivelmente até resultando em sua própria destruição como que por fogo. — Tg 3:6.

No quinto ano do exílio do Rei Joaquim, Ezequiel teve uma visão, junto ao rio Quebar, na terra dos caldeus, em que viu Jeová viajando sobre um veículo celestial, de movimentação rápida e semelhante a um carro. Suas quatro rodas tinham cambotas cheias de olhos, e dentro de cada roda havia outra roda, pelo visto em ângulo reto, tornando possível ir adiante ou para qualquer dos lados sem mudar o ângulo das rodas. Ao lado de cada roda havia um querubim, sendo que as criaturas viventes querubínicas e as rodas moviam-se em uníssono, conforme guiadas pelo espírito. (Ez 1:1-3, 15-21; 3:13) No ano seguinte, Ezequiel teve uma visão similar, desta feita sendo transportado, evidentemente pelo espírito de inspiração, para um lugar diante do templo que Salomão construíra em Jerusalém. A visão que ele teve indicava que em breve aquela cidade e o templo seriam destruídos em execução da decisão judicial de Jeová. (Ez 8:1-3; 10:1-19; 11:22) Uns 60 anos depois, Daniel viu, em visão, o Antigo de Dias, Jeová, sentado num trono celestial dotado de rodas. Tanto o trono como as rodas eram chamejantes, sugerindo a aproximação do ardente julgamento divino sobre as potências mundiais. — Da 7:1, 9, 10; Sal 97:1-3.

RODANIM. Alistado como um dos quatro filhos de Javã, em 1 Crônicas 1:7. Não há certeza quanto à correta grafia do nome, visto que o texto massorético de 1 Crônicas 1:7 reza "Rodanim", ao passo que muitos manuscritos hebraicos e a Vulgata latina rezam "Dodanim". "Dodanim" também consta no texto massorético em Gênesis 10:4, onde a Septuaginta grega e o Pentateuco samaritano, porém, rezam "Rodanim". Em hebraico, a letra "r" (ר) e a letra "d" (ד) são muito parecidas e, por isso, podiam ser confundidas por um copista. (Assim, "Rifá", em Gên 10:3 aparece como "Difá", em 1Cr 1:6, no texto massorético.) A maioria das traduções apresentam os dois nomes. Muitos lexicógrafos consideram "Rodanim" a grafia preferível. Os comentaristas que aceitam esta grafia acham provável que o povo que descendeu desse filho de Javã povoou a ilha de Rodes e as ilhas vizinhas do mar Egeu.

RODE [possivelmente: Rosa]. Membro da congregação cristã em Jerusalém na época em que o apóstolo Pedro foi milagrosamente libertado da prisão, por volta de 44 EC. Rode era serva, pelo que se presume, na casa de Maria, mãe de Marcos. Pelo menos era um daqueles que passaram a noite ali orando por Pedro. Ao atender a porta do portão de entrada e reconhecer a voz de Pedro, Rode ficou tão tomada de alegria que, em vez de deixá-lo entrar, correu para dentro, a fim de contar isto aos outros. "Estás louca", disseram, mas ela insistiu. Enquanto isto acontecia, Pedro continuou batendo até que por fim o deixaram entrar. — At 12:3, 5, 12-16.

RODES [Rosa]. Ilha ao largo do canto SO da Turquia e uma das maiores do mar Egeu, com cerca de 75 km de comprimento por 35 km de largura. Sua capital também é chamada de Rodes. O navio em que Paulo viajava foi de Cós para Rodes, perto do término da terceira viagem missionária do apóstolo, por volta de 56 EC. — At 21:1.

Graças a sua localização estratégica e a bons portos, Rodes destacava-se como centro comercial logo no início de sua história. No entanto, parece que, com o tempo, a própria cidade de Rodes tornou-se mais famosa como centro cultural.

O Colosso de Rodes, estátua de bronze do deus-sol Hélios, erguia-se perto do porto da cidade de Rodes. Considerado uma das "sete maravilhas" do mundo antigo, diz-se que tinha uns 70 côvados (31 m) de altura. Embora não mais estivesse de pé nos dias de Paulo, tendo sido derrubado por um terremoto no terceiro século AEC, enormes fragmentos do Colosso continuaram a existir ainda por um bom tempo na Era Comum. A ideia de que as pernas da estátua se abriam sobre a entrada do porto e de que os navios passavam por baixo não pode ser comprovada.

ROGA. Segundo filho alistado de Semer, na genealogia de Aser. — 1Cr 7:30, 34.

ROGELIM. Cidade de Gileade e terra natal de Barzilai, amigo de Davi. (2Sa 17:27-29; 19:31, 32) Alguns geógrafos, tentativamente, situam Rogelim em Bersinya, cerca de 7 km ao OSO de Irbid. O uádi er-Rejeileh, perto dali, possivelmente preserva o nome Rogelim.

ROLA [hebr.: tor, tohr; gr.: try·gón]. Pequena pomba selvagem, geralmente de acentuados hábitos migratórios. O nome hebraico evidentemente imita o melancólico arrulho de "tur-r-r tur-r-r" dessa ave.

As variedades de rolas encontradas com mais frequência na Palestina são a rola-comum (Streptopelia turtur) e a rola-de-colar (Streptopelia decaocto), esta última sendo assim chamada por causa dum estreito colar negro na parte superior do pescoço. Outra variedade, a rola do Senegal (Streptopelia senegalensis), estendeu de modo constante seu habitat em Israel em décadas recentes.

A rola é mencionada em Jeremias 8:7 entre as aves que "observam bem o tempo da entrada de cada um", o que evidentemente indica migração anual. Esta referência deve aplicar-se à rola-comum, visto que as outras rolas encontradas na Palestina não migram, mas permanecem ali o ano todo. A rola-comum era inerrante prenúncio da primavera na Palestina, chegando ali, vinda do S, em princípios de abril, e 'fazendo sua voz ser ouvida na terra'. — Cân 2:12.

Ave tímida e branda, a rola depende de sua velocidade de voo para escapar de seus inimigos. (Sal 74:19) Durante sua época, as rolas são bem numerosas por toda a Palestina; e, visto que se alimentam de cereais, sementes e trevo, são facilmente capturadas por armadilhas no chão. Abraão incluiu uma rola em sua oferta, na ocasião em que Jeová "concluiu um pacto" com ele (Gên 15:9, 10, 17, 18), e depois disso a Lei mosaica ou especificava ou permitia o uso de rolas em certos sacrifícios e ritos de purificação. (Le 1:14; 5:7, 11; 12:6, 8; 14:22, 30; 15:14, 15, 29, 30; Núm 6:10, 11) Maria ofereceu ou duas rolas ou dois pombos novos no templo, depois do nascimento de Jesus. — Lu 2:22-24; veja POMBO(A).

ROLO. Forma comum de livro durante o período de escrita da Bíblia. As Escrituras foram escritas e amiúde copiadas em rolos de couro, de pergaminho ou de papiro. (Je 36:1, 2, 28, 32; Jo 20:30; Gál 3:10; 2Ti 4:13; Re 22:18, 19) Fabricava-se um rolo colando-se vários pedaços de tais materiais, de modo a se obter uma folha comprida, que era então enrolada num pau. Para rolos bem compridos, usava-se um pau em cada extremidade, e o rolo era enrolado em ambos os paus, em direção ao meio. Quando a pessoa ia ler um rolo assim, desenrolava-o com uma mão, enquanto o enrolava com a outra, até encontrar o ponto desejado. Depois da leitura, ela enrolava o rolo novamente. — Para detalhes sobre materiais, tamanhos, e assim por diante, veja LIVRO.

Dá Testemunho de Jesus. Jesus Cristo veio à Terra para fazer a vontade de Deus, conforme predito nas Escrituras Hebraicas, "no rolo do livro". (Sal 40:7, 8; He 10:7-9) Na sinagoga de Nazaré, Jesus abriu o rolo de Isaías e leu as palavras proféticas sobre sua unção pelo espírito de Jeová a fim de pregar. Cristo enrolou então o rolo, entregou-o ao assistente, sentou-se, e explicou a todos os presentes: "Hoje se cumpriu esta escritura que acabais de ouvir." (Lu 4:16-21; Is 61:1, 2) De fato, visto que "dar-se testemunho de Jesus é o que inspira o profetizar", todos os rolos das inteiras Escrituras e a proclamação pública das boas novas contidas nos rolos das Escrituras Cristãs dizem respeito à posição e à obra de Jesus Cristo no propósito de Jeová. — Re 19:10.

Na conclusão do relato do Evangelho de João, ele disse: "Há, de fato, também muitas outras coisas que Jesus fez, as quais, se alguma vez fossem escritas em todos os pormenores, suponho que o próprio mundo não poderia conter os rolos escritos." (Jo 21:25) João, em seu Evangelho, não tentou escrever tudo aquilo, mas apenas o que era suficiente para comprovar o ponto principal, a saber, que Jesus Cristo era o Filho de Deus e o Seu Messias. Deveras, há o suficiente no "rolo" de João, bem como nas outras Escrituras inspiradas, para provar de forma plenamente satisfatória que "Jesus é o Cristo, o Filho de Deus". — Jo 20:30, 31.

Uso Simbólico. Há vários exemplos, na Bíblia, do uso simbólico da palavra "rolo". Tanto Ezequiel como Zacarias viram um rolo escrito de ambos os lados. Visto que apenas uma face dum rolo era comumente usada, a escrita em ambas as faces talvez se refira ao peso, à extensão e à seriedade dos julgamentos escritos nesses rolos. (Ez 2:9–3:3; Za 5:1-4) Na visão de Revelação (Apocalipse), quem estava sentado no trono segurava na mão direita um rolo com sete selos, que impediam que se soubesse o que estava escrito até que o Cordeiro de Deus os abrisse. (Re 5:1, 12; 6:1, 12-14) Mais tarde, na visão, apresentou-se um rolo ao próprio João, e se lhe ordenou que o comesse. O sabor era doce para João, mas fez com que seu ventre ficasse amargo. Visto que o rolo estava aberto, e não selado, era algo que devia ser entendido. Foi "doce" para João obter a mensagem nele contida, mas, pelo visto, abrangia coisas amargas para ele profetizar, como se lhe mandou fazer. (Re 10:1-11) Ezequiel passou por uma experiência similar com o rolo que se lhe apresentou, no qual havia "endechas, e gemidos, e lamúria". — Ez 2:10.

"[O] rolo da vida do Cordeiro." Os adoradores idólatras da "fera" simbólica não são os escolhidos por Deus para serem os associados com o Cordeiro. Por isso, "o nome de nem sequer um deles está inscrito no rolo da vida do Cordeiro que foi morto", e "desde a fundação do mundo" da humanidade estava determinado que seria assim. — Re 13:1-8; 21:27.

Rolos de julgamento e da vida. João também observou que 'se abriram rolos' e os ressuscitados foram "julgados pelas coisas escritas nos rolos, segundo as suas ações". Tais rolos, pelo que parece, contêm as leis e as instruções de Jeová, as quais delineiam a vontade divina para os humanos durante aquele período de julgamento, e as ações de obediência deles, com fé, ou de desobediência ao que se acha escrito nos rolos, revelam se merecem ter seu nome escritos ou retidos no "rolo da vida" de Jeová. — Re 20:11-15; veja VIDA.

'Enrolados como o rolo dum livro.' Em Isaías 34:4, o profeta profere um julgamento sobre as nações, dizendo: "E os céus terão de ser enrolados, como o rolo dum livro." É evidente que ele se refere aqui ao ato de enrolar e guardar um rolo, depois de a pessoa terminar de lê-lo. Assim, a expressão é símbolo de se pôr de lado o que já não é de nenhuma utilidade ou valor.

ROMA. A outrora pequena cidade do Lácio, que se tornou a sede do governo do maior império mundial dos antigos tempos bíblicos; atualmente é a capital da Itália. Roma está afastada da costa, em ambas as margens do rio Tibre, a uns 25 km da foz, aproximadamente no meio do lado O da península itálica de 1.130 km de comprimento.

Exatamente quando e por quem Roma foi fundada acha-se envolto em lenda e mitologia. A tradição diz que foi em 753 AEC, por um certo Rômulo, seu primeiro rei, mas há túmulos e outras evidências que indicam que ela já era habitada numa época muito anterior a essa.

Os primeiros povoados conhecidos foram construídos em sete colinas ao L do rio Tibre. De acordo com a tradição, o monte Palatino foi o local do mais antigo povoado. As outras seis colinas situadas em torno do Palatino (começando no N e seguindo o sentido horário) eram o Quirinal, o Viminal, o Esquilino, o Célio, o Aventino e o Capitólio. Com o tempo, os vales pantanosos entre as colinas foram drenados, e nestas áreas valiosas foram construídas moradias, foros e circos. Segundo Plínio, o Velho, em 73 EC as muralhas que cercavam a cidade tinham uns 21 km de comprimento. Com o tempo, as colinas e os vales do lado O do Tibre foram anexados, incluindo os mais de 40 ha ocupados atualmente pelo Vaticano. Antes do grande incêndio do tempo de Nero, segundo cálculos conservadores, a população da cidade somava bem mais de um milhão de habitantes.

A Imagem Política de Roma. Ao longo dos séculos, Roma experimentou muitos tipos de governo político. Certas instituições foram adaptações de outras nações; algumas foram inovações de sua própria iniciativa. Em seu livro Pocket History of the World (História Mundial de Bolso), H. G. Wells comentou: "Esta nova potência romana, que surgiu para dominar o mundo ocidental no segundo e no primeiro séculos a.C., era em vários sentidos diferente de qualquer dos grandes impérios que até então haviam prevalecido no mundo civilizado." (1943, p. 149) O caráter político de Roma mudava à medida que vários estilos de governo surgiam e desapareciam. Estes incluíam coalizões de chefes patriarcais, reinados, governos concentrados nas mãos de umas poucas famílias de nobre estirpe, ditaduras e diferentes formas de governo republicano, nas quais o poder conferido a senadores, a cônsules e a triunviratos (coalizões governamentais constituídas de três homens) variava, havendo disputas típicas de partidos entre classes e facções. Nos anos posteriores do império, houve uma série de imperadores. Como é comum ocorrer com governos humanos, a história política de Roma foi matizada de ódio, ciúme, intrigas e assassínios, com muitas conspirações e contraconspirações geradas por fricções internas e guerras externas.

O domínio do mundo por Roma aconteceu gradualmente. Primeiro, sua influência disseminou-se pela inteira península itálica e, com o tempo, ao redor do Mediterrâneo e bem mais além. O nome da cidade tornou-se praticamente um sinônimo do nome do império.

Nos assuntos internacionais, Roma atingiu o zênite de sua glória sob os Césares. Júlio César, nomeado ditador por dez anos, em 46 AEC, mas assassinado por conspiradores em 44 AEC, encabeçou esta lista. Depois de um intervalo, em que um triunvirato tentou segurar as rédeas do poder, Otaviano por fim se tornou governante único do Império Romano (31 AEC–14 EC). Em 27 AEC, ele teve êxito em tornar-se imperador, fazendo-se proclamar "Augusto". Foi durante o governo de Augusto que Jesus nasceu, em 2 AEC. (Lu 2:1-7) O sucessor de Augusto, Tibério (14-37 EC), governava durante o ministério de Jesus. (Lu 3:1, 2, 21-23) Em seguida vieram Caio (Calígula) (37-41 EC) e Cláudio (41-54 EC), este último tendo expedido um decreto que expulsava de Roma os judeus. (At 18:1, 2) Seguiu-se o governo de Nero (54-68 EC), e foi perante ele que Paulo interpôs seu recurso. — At 25:11, 12, 21; FOTOS Vol. 2, p. 534.

Os imperadores romanos na ordem de sucessão depois de Nero (no decorrer do primeiro século) foram Galba (68-69 EC); Otão e Vitélio (69 EC); Vespasiano (69-79 EC), em cujo reinado Jerusalém foi destruída; Tito (79-81 EC), que dirigira anteriormente o ataque bem-sucedido contra Jerusalém; Domiciano (81-96 EC), em cujo governo, segundo a tradição, João foi exilado para a ilha penal de Patmos; Nerva (96-98 EC); e Trajano (98-117 EC). Foi sob Trajano que as fronteiras do império atingiram seus mais amplos limites, estendendo-se então para longe em todas as direções — para o Reno e o mar do Norte, o Danúbio, o Eufrates, as cataratas do Nilo, o grande deserto da África e o Atlântico, ao O. — MAPA, Vol. 2, p. 533.

Nos anos de decadência do Império Romano, Constantino, o Grande, foi o imperador (306-337 EC). Depois de apoderar-se do controle, transferiu a capital para Bizâncio (Constantinopla). No século seguinte, Roma caiu, em 476 EC, e o comandante alemão, Odoacro, tornou-se seu primeiro rei "bárbaro".

A Vida e as Condições na Cidade. A administração do governo municipal dividia-se em 14 distritos sob o Augusto, com um magistrado que anualmente era escolhido por sorte, para governar cada distrito. Havia sete brigadas organizadas, de combate a incêndios, chamadas vigiles (vígeis), cada uma responsável por dois distritos. Logo fora dos limites NE da cidade ficava aquartelada uma força especial de cerca de 10.000 homens, conhecida como Guarda Pretoriana, ou Imperial, para a proteção do imperador. Havia também três "coortes urbanas", uma espécie de força policial municipal, para manter a lei e a ordem em Roma.

Os abastados e influentes não raro viviam em palacetes, nas colinas; suas casas eram mantidas por grandes equipes de servos e de escravos, que às vezes somavam centenas. Nos vales, o povo comum se apinhava em enormes insulae, ou casas de cômodos, com vários pavimentos, limitadas em altura por Augusto a 21 metros. Estes blocos de habitação coletiva eram separados por ruas estreitas, sinuosas e sujas, cheias do costumeiro trânsito e da corrupção prevalecentes nas grandes cidades.

Foi nestas áreas pobres que o histórico incêndio de 64 EC causou o maior sofrimento e a maior perda de vidas. Tácito descreve o sofrimento que isso causou, "os alaridos das mulheres assustadas, os muitos velhos e crianças, e a imensa gente, que corria". (Anais, XV, XXXVIII, Clássicos Jackson, Vol. XXV) Só foram poupados 4 dos 14 distritos de Roma.

Pouquíssimas pessoas em Roma podiam ser consideradas da classe média; a riqueza estava nas mãos duma pequena minoria. Quando Paulo chegou pela primeira vez a Roma, talvez a metade da população fosse composta de escravos, levados para lá como prisioneiros de guerra, como criminosos condenados ou como filhos vendidos pelos pais, escravos sem nenhum direito legal. A maior parte da metade livre da população era constituída de indigentes, que praticamente viviam à custa de subsídios governamentais.

Duas coisas — alimentos e diversão — eram fornecidas pelo Estado, a fim de impedir que essas pessoas pobres se revoltassem, daí a frase satírica, panem et circenses (pão e circo), que inferia que isto era tudo o que se precisava para satisfazer os pobres de Roma. A partir de 58 AEC, geralmente se distribuía cereal de graça, bem como água, trazida para a cidade de muitos quilômetros de distância através de aquedutos. O vinho era um item barato. Para o usufruto dos que tinham inclinação para isso, achavam-se disponíveis bibliotecas. Para o divertimento da população em geral havia banhos públicos e ginásios, bem como teatros e circos. As representações teatrais consistiam em peças, danças e pantomimas, tanto gregas como romanas. Nos grandes anfiteatros e circos realizavam-se jogos excitantes, principalmente espetaculares corridas de bigas e desesperadas lutas de gladiadores, em que homens e animais lutavam até a morte. O Circo Máximo podia comportar mais de 150.000 pessoas. Era gratuita a entrada para os jogos.

O elevado custo desses gastos governamentais não era assumido pela população de Roma, uma vez que, depois da conquista da Macedônia, em 168 AEC, os cidadãos romanos ficaram isentos de impostos. Em vez disso, as províncias eram pesadamente oneradas, tanto de modo direto como indireto. — Mt 22:17-21.

Influência Estrangeira. De muitas formas, Roma se mostrou um grande cadinho de raças, línguas, culturas e ideias. Da forja da política romana, gradualmente emergiu o código da lei romana — leis que definiam os direitos e as limitações dos governos, dos tribunais e dos magistrados, e que forneciam instrumentos legais, tais como a cidadania, para a proteção dos direitos humanos. (At 25:16) A cidadania foi estendida às cidades confederadas de Roma e a várias colônias do império. Proporcionava muitas vantagens. (At 16:37-39; 22:25, 26) Se não fosse obtida de nascença, podia ser comprada. (At 22:28) Desta e de outras formas, Roma procurou romanizar os territórios por ela conquistados, fortalecendo assim sua posição como senhora do império.

Um dos melhores exemplos da influência externa em Roma encontra-se em suas ruínas das glórias arquitetônicas de outrora. Em todo lugar, o visitante dessa cidade-museu constata que ela tomou emprestado dos gregos e de outros. O chamado arco romano, usado com grande proveito, não foi sua própria descoberta de engenharia. Os sucessos de Roma como construtora deveram-se também em grande medida ao uso duma forma primitiva de concreto como argamassa e principal ingrediente para a fabricação de pedras artificiais.

O programa de construção de Roma começou a sério no último século da república e depois disto recebeu ímpeto especial dos imperadores. Augusto disse que encontrara Roma como uma cidade de tijolos, mas que a deixava como cidade de mármore. De modo geral, o mármore era uma camada superficial sobre estruturas de tijolo ou de concreto. A cidade foi reconstruída pela segunda vez, depois da conflagração de 64 EC. Entre as mais notáveis estruturas romanas achavam-se os fóruns, os templos, os palácios, os anfiteatros, os banhos, os aquedutos, os esgotos e os monumentos. O grande Coliseu e alguns monumentos, como o Arco de Tito, que retrata a queda de Jerusalém, ainda existem ou estão parcialmente em pé. (FOTOS, Vol. 2, p. 536) Os romanos também fizeram nome como construtores de estradas e de pontes em todo o império.

Houve tão grande influxo de estrangeiros, que os romanos se queixavam de que Roma já não era romana. Sendo atraídos de todos os quadrantes do império, traziam consigo suas profissões, costumes, tradições e religiões. Embora o latim fosse a língua oficial, a língua internacional era o grego comum (coiné). É por isso que o apóstolo Paulo escreveu sua carta aos romanos em grego. A influência grega exerceu impacto também na literatura e nos métodos de educação. Os rapazes, e às vezes as moças, eram formalmente educados segundo o sistema ateniense, sendo instruídos em literatura e oratória gregas, e os filhos homens dos que podiam dar-se a este luxo eram enviados para uma das escolas de filosofia em Atenas.

Religião. Roma também se tornou o vazadouro de toda forma de adoração falsa. Como o descreveu o historiador John Lord: "A superstição atingia o ápice em Roma, pois ali se via os sacerdotes e os devotos de todos os países que ela governava — 'as morenas filhas de Ísis, com tambores, pandeiros e semblante devasso; devotos do Mitra persa; asiáticos emasculados; sacerdotes de Cibele, com suas danças loucas e gritos discordantes; adoradores da grande deusa Diana; cativos bárbaros com os ritos dos sacerdotes teutões; sírios, judeus, astrólogos caldeus, e feiticeiros da Tessália.'" — Beacon Lights of History, (Luminares da História), 1912, Vol. III, pp. 366, 367.

A devoção a tais religiões, e o entregar-se às suas desenfreadas orgias sexuais, abriram a porta para que os romanos, tanto de baixa como de alta categoria, relegassem por inteiro a virtude moral e a justiça. Segundo Tácito, entre os dessa última categoria, Messalina, a esposa adúltera e assassina do imperador Cláudio, é um exemplo. — Anais, XI, I-XXXIV.

Entre as religiões de Roma, destacava-se a adoração do imperador. O governante romano era deificado. A adoração do imperador era reconhecida especialmente nas províncias, onde se construíam templos em que as pessoas ofereciam sacrifícios a ele como se fosse um deus. (FOTO, Vol. 2, p. 536) Em A History of Rome (História de Roma), George Botsford diz: "A adoração do imperador havia de ser a força mais vital da religião do mundo romano, até a adoção do cristianismo."

A Via Ápia, por onde Paulo viajou a caminho de Roma.

Uma inscrição encontrada na Ásia Menor diz a respeito do imperador: "Ele é o paternal Zeus e o salvador da inteira raça humana, quem responde a todas as orações, até mesmo mais do que pedimos. Pois a terra e o mar usufruem a paz; as cidades florescem; em toda a parte existe harmonia, e prosperidade, e felicidade." Este culto resultou ser um dos principais instrumentos da perseguição aos cristãos, a respeito dos quais este escritor diz: "Sua recusa de adorar o Genius, ou espírito-guardião, do imperador, era naturalmente interpretada como impiedade e traição." — 1905, pp. 214, 215, 263.

O Cristianismo Chega a Roma. No dia de Pentecostes de 33 EC, havia "residentes temporários de Roma, tanto judeus como prosélitos", presentes para testemunhar os resultados do derramamento do espírito santo, e alguns deles, sem dúvida, achavam-se entre os 3.000 batizados naquela ocasião. (At 2:1, 10, 41) Ao voltarem a Roma, sem dúvida pregaram, o que resultou na formação de uma congregação cristã muito forte e ativa, cuja fé o apóstolo Paulo mencionou como algo de 'que se falava em todo o mundo'. (Ro 1:7, 8) Tanto Tácito (Anais, XV, XLIV) como Suetônio (The Lives of the Caesars [A Vida dos Césares], Nero, XVI, 2) mencionaram os cristãos em Roma.

Paulo escreveu à congregação cristã em Roma por volta de 56 EC, e uns três anos mais tarde chegou a Roma como prisioneiro. Embora tivesse nutrido desejos de os visitar ali mais cedo e em circunstâncias diferentes (At 19:21; Ro 1:15; 15:22-24), ele conseguiu, mesmo sendo prisioneiro, dar testemunho cabal, providenciando que as pessoas fossem a sua casa. Durante dois anos, nessas condições, ele continuou "pregando-lhes o reino de Deus e ensinando com a maior franqueza no falar as coisas concernentes ao Senhor Jesus Cristo, sem impedimento". (At 28:14-31) Até mesmo a Guarda Pretoriana do imperador ficou familiarizada com a mensagem do Reino. (Fil 1:12, 13) Assim, como se predissera a seu respeito, Paulo 'deu testemunho cabal até mesmo em Roma'. — At 23:11.

Durante sua detenção de dois anos em Roma, Paulo achou tempo de escrever as cartas aos efésios, aos filipenses, aos colossenses e a Filêmon. Evidentemente foi por volta dessa mesma época que Marcos escreveu seu Evangelho em Roma. Pouco antes ou logo depois da libertação de Paulo, ele escreveu sua carta aos hebreus, por volta de 61 EC. (He 13:23, 24) Foi durante seu segundo encarceramento em Roma, por volta de 65 EC, que Onesíforo o visitou e que Paulo escreveu sua segunda carta a Timóteo. — 2Ti 1:15-17.

Embora Paulo, Lucas, Marcos, Timóteo e outros cristãos do primeiro século visitassem Roma (Fil 1:1; Col 4:10, 14), não existem provas conclusivas de que Pedro tenha alguma vez ido a Roma, como algumas tradições dizem que ocorreu. As histórias sobre o martírio de Pedro em Roma são mera tradição. — Veja PEDRO, CARTAS DE.

A cidade de Roma criou péssima reputação por perseguir os cristãos, em especial durante os reinados de Nero e de Domiciano. Essas perseguições foram atribuídas a duas causas: (1) o grande zelo evangelizador dos cristãos para converter outros, e (2) a posição intransigente dos cristãos quanto a dar a Deus as coisas de Deus, em vez de dá-las a César. — Mr 12:17.

ROMÃ [hebr.: rim·móhn]. Fruto que, quando maduro, é castanho-avermelhado, com formato de maçã e uma roseta ou coroa na sua parte inferior. Dentro da casca dura, sua polpa é formada de pequenas cápsulas cheias de sumo, cada uma com uma pequena semente rosada ou vermelha.

A romãzeira (Punica granatum), a que também se refere a palavra hebraica rim·móhn, cresce por todo o Oriente Médio. Raramente ultrapassa 4,5 m de altura. Os amplos ramos são numerosos, apresentam folhas verde-escuras, com formato semelhante ao da ponta de uma lança, e flores que vão do vermelho-coral ao escarlate. — FOTO, Vol. 1, p. 742.

O sumo da romã dá uma bebida refrescante (Cân 8:2), as sementes produzem um xarope chamado granadina, e as flores são utilizadas no preparo dum remédio adstringente usado para disenteria. As têmporas da jovem sulamita, cobertas por um véu, foram comparadas a uma "fatia de romã", e sua pele a "um paraíso de romãs". — Cân 4:3, 13; 6:7.

Por meio de Moisés, Jeová prometeu à nação de Israel que a introduziria numa terra de trigo, cevada, videiras, figos, romãs, azeitonas e mel. (De 8:7-9) Antes disto, os espias, que haviam entrado naquela terra, retornaram com uvas, figos e romãs. (Núm 13:2, 23) Os israelitas conheceram a romã no Egito, conforme indica sua queixa registrada em Números 20:5.

A túnica sem mangas das vestes do sumo sacerdote Arão tinha na bainha uma série de romãs, feitas de linha azul, lã tingida de roxo e fibras carmíneas torcidas juntas, e alternadas com campainhas de ouro. (Êx 28:33, 34; 39:24-26) Mais tarde, quando o templo foi construído, os capitéis das duas colunas de cobre em frente do pórtico da casa foram decorados com correntes de fileiras de romãs. — 1Rs 7:18, 20, 42; 2Rs 25:17; 2Cr 3:16; 4:13; Je 52:22, 23.

A romã era amplamente cultivada nos tempos bíblicos, e os nomes de locais, tais como Rimom, En-Rimom e Gate-Rimom, sem dúvida se derivaram da abundância dessa árvore na região. (Jos 15:32; 19:45; Ne 11:29) A romãzeira era muito apreciada, de modo que não raro é associada com outras importantes fruteiras, tais como a videira e a figueira. — Cân 7:12, 13; Jl 1:12; Ag 2:19.

ROMANO. Originalmente, e no sentido restrito, a pessoa que vivia na cidade de Roma, Itália. (At 2:10; Ro 1:7) Com a expansão do império, esse nome assumiu significados mais amplos. Às vezes, a expressão "os romanos" referia-se à autoridade imperial que governava; "procedimento romano" significava os métodos de governar dessa autoridade. (Jo 11:48; At 25:16; 28:17) Outras vezes, a palavra "romano" significava simplesmente qualquer pessoa que possuísse cidadania romana, sem importar sua nacionalidade ou lugar de nascimento. — At 16:21.

Neste último caso, a pessoa podia tornar-se romana comprando a cidadania, como no caso do comandante militar Cláudio Lísias. Ou talvez nascesse romana, isto é, talvez fosse cidadã romana de nascença. O apóstolo Paulo era uma de tais pessoas, pois, embora fosse de nacionalidade judaica, e tivesse nascido na cidade ciliciana de Tarso, a centenas de quilômetros da Itália, ele era romano desde o berço. — At 21:39; 22:3, 25-28; 23:26, 27; veja CIDADÃO, CIDADANIA.

Ser cidadão romano proporcionava muitos privilégios e garantias. Depois de a Macedônia ser conquistada, em 168 AEC, a maior parte dos cidadãos romanos foi isentada do pagamento de impostos. A Lex Valeria e a Lex Porcia, promulgadas várias vezes entre 509 e 195 AEC, impediam que os cidadãos romanos fossem açoitados. A Lex Valeria proporcionava tal imunidade quando o cidadão apelava para o povo; a Lex Porcia, sem tal apelo. Em data posterior, apelava-se diretamente para o imperador. No caso de certas ofensas que incorriam na pena capital, os cidadãos podiam requerer ser enviados a Roma, para ali serem julgados perante o próprio imperador. (At 25:11, 12) Violar alguém as leis Valéria e Pórcia era uma questão seriíssima, como se demonstrou duas vezes em relação a Paulo. — At 16:37-40; 22:25-29.

ROMANOS, CARTA AOS. Livro das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, escrito pelo apóstolo Paulo aos cristãos em Roma. Jamais se questionou seriamente que Paulo tenha sido seu escritor, e a autenticidade deste livro, como parte do cânon sagrado, é quase universalmente reconhecida pelos peritos bíblicos, excetuando-se alguns que não conseguiram enquadrá-lo em suas próprias crenças doutrinais. Na realidade, a carta se harmoniza plenamente com o restante das Escrituras inspiradas. De fato, Paulo cita de modo profuso as Escrituras Hebraicas e faz numerosas referências a elas, de modo que se pode dizer que essa carta baseia-se mui solidamente nas Escrituras Hebraicas e nos ensinos de Cristo.

Tempo e Local da Escrita. Esta carta foi escrita por volta de 56 EC, de Corinto. Tércio evidentemente foi o secretário de Paulo, e escreveu o que Paulo ditou. (Ro 16:22) É possível que a portadora da carta tenha sido Febe, que morava em Cencreia, a cidade portuária de Corinto, cerca de 11 km dali. (Ro 16:1) Paulo ainda não havia estado em Roma, como fica evidente em suas observações no capítulo 1, versículos de 9 a 15.

O Estabelecimento da Congregação de Roma. A congregação talvez tenha sido estabelecida por alguns dos judeus e prosélitos de Roma que estiveram em Jerusalém no dia de Pentecostes de 33 EC, testemunharam o derramamento miraculoso do espírito santo e ouviram o discurso de Pedro e de outros cristãos ali reunidos. (At 2) Ou outros que se converteram ao cristianismo mais tarde talvez tenham levado a Roma as boas novas sobre o Cristo, pois, visto que esta grande cidade era o centro do Império Romano, muitos se mudaram para lá com o tempo, e eram muitos os viajantes e comerciantes que a visitavam. Paulo envia respeitosos cumprimentos a Andrônico e Júnias, seus 'parentes e companheiros de cativeiro', "homens notáveis entre os apóstolos", que estavam no serviço de Cristo há mais tempo do que Paulo. É bem possível que esses homens tenham tido parte no estabelecimento da congregação cristã em Roma. (Ro 16:7) Na época em que Paulo escreveu, a congregação evidentemente já existia por algum tempo, e era bastante ativa, a ponto de sua fé ser comentada em todo o mundo. — Ro 1:8.

Objetivo da Carta. Fica claro, pela leitura da carta, que ela foi escrita a uma congregação cristã composta tanto de judeus como de gentios. Havia muitos judeus em Roma naquela época; eles retornaram depois da morte do Imperador Cláudio, que os banira de lá algum tempo antes. Embora Paulo não tivesse estado em Roma, para sentir pessoalmente os problemas que a congregação enfrentava, é possível que tenha sido informado da condição e dos assuntos da congregação por seus bons amigos e colaboradores, Priscila e Áquila, e possivelmente também por outros a quem Paulo encontrara. Seus cumprimentos no capítulo 16 indicam que conhecia pessoalmente um bom número de membros daquela congregação.

DESTAQUES DE ROMANOS

Carta que explica que a justiça resulta, não da genealogia ou de obras da Lei mosaica, mas da fé em Jesus Cristo e da benignidade imerecida de Deus.

Escrita por volta de 56 EC, uns 20 anos depois de os primeiros gentios se tornarem cristãos.

A justiça resulta da fé em Cristo e da benignidade imerecida de Deus. (1:1–11:36)

A fé é essencial para a salvação; o texto diz: "O justo — por meio da fé é que viverá."

Os judeus, embora altamente favorecidos por Deus, não conseguiram alcançar a justiça por meio da Lei.

Tanto judeus como não judeus estão sob o pecado; "não há um justo, nem sequer um só".

Pela benignidade imerecida de Deus tanto judeus como não judeus podem ser declarados justos como dádiva gratuita por intermédio da fé, assim como Abraão foi considerado justo em resultado da fé — mesmo antes de ser circuncidado.

Os homens herdam o pecado e a morte de um só homem, Adão; por intermédio de um só homem, Jesus, muitos pecadores são declarados justos.

Isto não abre concessão para o pecado; quem permanece escravo do pecado não é escravo da justiça.

Os que anteriormente estavam debaixo da Lei 'morrem para com a Lei' por intermédio do corpo de Cristo; têm de andar em harmonia com o espírito, entregando à morte as práticas pecaminosas do corpo.

A Lei serviu ao propósito de tornar manifestos os pecados; somente por intermédio de Cristo, porém, há salvação do pecado.

Deus convoca aqueles que vêm a estar em união com Cristo e os declara justos; Seu espírito dá testemunho de que eles são Seus filhos.

O Israel carnal recebeu as promessas, mas a maioria deles procura alcançar a justiça pela Lei, de modo que apenas um restante deles é salvo; é necessário fazer declaração pública da fé em Cristo, para se obter a salvação.

A ilustração da oliveira mostra que, por falta de fé da parte do Israel carnal, não israelitas foram enxertados para que o verdadeiro Israel pudesse ser salvo.

Atitude para com as autoridades superiores, a própria pessoa, e outras pessoas. (12:1–15:13)

Apresentem o corpo como sacrifício aceitável a Deus, reformem a mente, usem seus dons no serviço de Deus, sejam amorosos e fervorosos de espírito, perseverem e continuem a vencer o mal com o bem.

Estejam em sujeição às autoridades superiores.

Amem-se uns aos outros; andem decentemente, não planejando antecipadamente os desejos da carne.

Não julguem os outros em questões de consciência, nem abusem de sua liberdade cristã, deste modo fazendo tropeçar os que têm consciência fraca.

Sejam guiados pelo exemplo de Cristo em não agradar a si mesmos; estejam dispostos a suportar as fraquezas dos outros, fazendo o que é bom para a edificação deles.

O interesse amoroso de Paulo na congregação em Roma. (15:14–16:27)

A razão de Paulo escrever é para cumprir sua comissão como apóstolo para os gentios e a fim de que esses gentios sejam uma oferta aceitável para Deus.

Já não tendo território em que as boas novas ainda não haviam sido proclamadas, Paulo deseja satisfazer seu anseio de visitar Roma e de lá ir à Espanha, depois de primeiro viajar a Jerusalém com uma contribuição, para os santos, enviada pelos irmãos da Macedônia e da Acaia.

Paulo cumprimenta vários crentes por nome, incentivando os irmãos a evitar os que causam divisões e também a ser sábios no que diz respeito ao que é bom.

Em suas cartas, Paulo atacava problemas específicos e lidava com questões que considerava muito vitais para aqueles a quem escrevia. Quanto à oposição judaica, Paulo já havia escrito às congregações da Galácia, refutando-a, mas essa carta tratava mais especificamente dos esforços feitos pelos judeus que professavam o cristianismo, mas que eram "judaizantes" e insistiam que os conversos gentios fossem circuncidados e que em outros sentidos se exigisse deles observarem certos regulamentos da Lei mosaica. Na congregação romana não parecia haver um esforço sério neste sentido, mas, pelo que parece, havia inveja e sentimentos de superioridade da parte tanto dos judeus como dos gentios.

A carta, portanto, não era uma simples carta geral, escrita à congregação romana, sem nenhum objetivo específico, como alguns supõem, mas tratava, evidentemente, das coisas de que eles precisavam, nas circunstâncias existentes. A congregação romana conseguiria captar o pleno significado e a plena força do conselho do apóstolo, pois sem dúvida enfrentava exatamente os problemas de que ele, Paulo, estava tratando. É óbvio que o objetivo dele era solucionar as diferenças de ponto de vista existentes entre os cristãos judeus e os cristãos gentios e conduzi-los em direção à completa união, como um só homem, em Cristo Jesus. No entanto, ao escrever da maneira como o fez, Paulo ilumina e enriquece nossa mente no conhecimento de Deus e exalta a justiça e a benignidade imerecida de Deus, bem como a posição de Cristo com respeito à congregação cristã e a toda a humanidade.

Fervor e Calor Humano. Comentando a autenticidade da carta aos romanos, o Dr. William Paley, perito bíblico, inglês, disse: "Num genuíno escrito de S. Paulo a genuínos conversos, isto é o que a ansiedade de convencê-los da sua crença naturalmente produziria; mas há um fervor e uma personalidade, se posso chamar isto assim, no estilo, que uma fria falsificação, creio eu, nunca teria ideado nem suportado." — Horæ Paulinæ, 1790, p. 50.

Paulo delineou a posição dos judeus de forma muito clara e direta e mostrou que judeus e gentios acham-se no mesmo nível perante Deus. Isto exigiu que ele dissesse algumas coisas que os judeus talvez considerassem ofensivas. Mas o amor de Paulo por seus concidadãos e seu calor humano para com eles foram demonstrados na delicadeza com que tratou destes assuntos. Quando dizia coisas que poderiam parecer depreciativas da Lei, ou dos judeus, ele jeitosamente fazia em seguida uma declaração amainadora.

Por exemplo, quando disse: "Não é judeu aquele que o é por fora, nem é circuncisão aquela que a é por fora, na carne", ele acrescentou: "Qual é então a superioridade do judeu, ou qual é o proveito da circuncisão? Grande, de todo modo. Primeiramente, porque foram incumbidos das proclamações sagradas de Deus." (Ro 2:28; 3:1, 2) Depois de dizer: "O homem é declarado justo pela fé, à parte das obras da lei", ele continuou prontamente: "Abolimos então a lei por meio de nossa fé? Que isso nunca aconteça! Ao contrário, estabelecemos lei." (3:28, 31) Após a declaração: "Mas agora fomos exonerados da Lei", ele perguntou: "É a Lei pecado? Que nunca se torne tal! Realmente, eu não teria chegado a conhecer o pecado, se não fosse a Lei." (7:6, 7) E no capítulo 9, versículos 1 a 3, fez a mais forte expressão possível de afeto por seus irmãos carnais, os judeus: "Digo a verdade em Cristo; não estou mentindo, visto que a minha consciência dá testemunho comigo, em espírito santo, de que tenho grande pesar e incessante dor no meu coração. Pois, poderia desejar que eu mesmo fosse separado do Cristo como amaldiçoado, em favor dos meus irmãos, meus parentes segundo a carne." — Compare também Ro 9:30-32 com 10:1, 2; e 10:20, 21 com 11:1-4.

Por conseguinte, pelo estudo deste livro, comprovamos que não se trata duma consideração desconexa, ou sem objetivo, mas dum discurso com um objetivo e um tema, e que nenhuma parte pode ser plenamente entendida sem o estudo do livro como um todo e o conhecimento de seu objetivo. Paulo destaca a benignidade imerecida de Deus mediante Cristo e ressalta que é somente por tal benignidade imerecida de Deus, conjugada com a fé do crente, que os homens são declarados justos; ele comenta que nem o judeu nem o gentio tem base para jactância ou para elevar-se sobre o outro. Avisa estritamente os cristãos gentios que não devem ficar orgulhosos por se terem beneficiado de os judeus não terem aceitado a Cristo, visto que a queda dos judeus permitiu que os gentios tivessem a oportunidade de ser membros do "corpo" de Cristo. Ele diz: "Eis, portanto, a benignidade e a severidade de Deus. Para com aqueles que caíram, há severidade, mas para contigo há a benignidade de Deus, desde que permaneças na sua benignidade; senão, tu também serás cortado fora." — Ro 11:22.

ROMANTI-EZER. Filho de Hemã, selecionado por sortes durante o reinado de Davi para encabeçar o último dos 24 grupos levíticos de músicos no santuário. — 1Cr 25:1, 4, 5, 9, 31.

RÔS.

1. Filho de Benjamim alistado entre os que foram para o Egito em 1728 AEC com a família de Jacó ou que nasceram pouco depois. (Gên 46:21, 26; veja BENJAMIM N.º 1.) A omissão de seu nome de listas posteriores das famílias benjamitas talvez indique que ele morreu sem filhos ou que seus filhos se misturaram com uma família de tribo diferente.

2. Nome encontrado em algumas traduções de Ezequiel 38:2 e 39:1 (ALA, AS, JB, Le, LXX, Mo, Yg, Ro), que, segundo certos peritos, refere-se a um povo do norte chamado Rus (russo), que se diz ter vivido ao longo do rio Volga. No entanto, em vista do significado do termo e sua aplicação a Gogue, ele é apropriadamente traduzido como parte dum título, em vez de como o nome de um povo ou lugar: assim, "maioral-chefe" (NM); "príncipe e chefe" (Al, IBB, So, Fi); "príncipe supremo" (BV); "príncipe soberano" (MC, CBC); "príncipe e cabeça" (BJ); "chefe principal" (Tr).

RUA. Via pública numa cidade ou num povoado. O termo comum hebraico para rua (hhuts) significa basicamente "lá fora". (Is 42:2 n) Nos antigos povoados e cidades das terras bíblicas parece que a maioria das ruas não era pavimentada. (Sal 18:42; Is 10:6; La 2:21) No entanto, descobriram-se canais para drenagem de água das ruas em Jericó e Gezer.

Em geral, as ruas eram estreitas e sinuosas. Mas havia também "ruas largas". (Lu 14:21; compare com Re 21:21.) As ruas de Nínive eram bastante amplas para permitir a passagem de carros. (Na 2:4) Babilônia e Damasco possuíam amplas avenidas ou vias processionais, e algumas ruas tinham nome. Durante o período romano, a "rua chamada Direita", em Damasco, era uma via de três pistas, com cerca de 26 m de largura. — At 9:11; veja DIREITA.

Uma área livre, a praça pública, provavelmente perto do portão da cidade, talvez servisse como local para as pessoas fazerem negócios ou se reunirem a fim de receber instrução. (Gên 23:10-18; Ne 8:1-3; Je 5:1) Ali brincavam as crianças (Za 8:4, 5); nas ruas, em geral, usualmente havia o burburinho de atividades. (Jó 18:17; Je 33:10, 11; contraste com Is 15:3; 24:11.) Eram locais de comércio, onde lojas de certa categoria ficavam às vezes agrupadas, como na "rua dos padeiros", em Jerusalém. (Je 37:21) As "ruas" que Ben-Hadade ofereceu para serem consignadas a Acabe, em Damasco, destinavam-se evidentemente ao estabelecimento de bazares, ou mercados, para promover os interesses comerciais de Acabe naquela capital síria. (1Rs 20:34) À noite, pelo visto, as ruas de algumas cidades ficavam sob os olhos atentos de vigias. — Cân 3:1-3.

As ruas eram também lugares em que se anunciavam notícias. (2Sa 1:20; Je 11:6) Nelas, Jesus Cristo ensinava, e curava os enfermos, embora não o fizesse altercando e gritando nas ruas largas, o que teria provocado sensacionalismo público, magnificando o seu próprio nome e desviando a atenção de Jeová Deus e das boas novas do Reino. (Lu 8:1; Mt 12:13-19; Is 42:1, 2) Jesus, portanto, não era como os hipócritas, a quem censurou por orarem "nas esquinas das ruas largas, para serem vistos pelos homens". — Mt 6:5.

RUBEM [Eis um Filho!].

1. O primogênito dos 12 filhos de Jacó. Sua mãe era a esposa menos favorecida de Jacó, Leia, que chamou o menino de Rubem, "porque", segundo ela mesma disse, "Jeová tem olhado para a minha miséria, sendo que agora meu esposo começará a amar-me". (Gên 29:30-32; 35:23; 46:8; Êx 1:1, 2; 1Cr 2:1) Em resultado do contínuo favor que Jeová mostrou a sua mãe, Rubem e seus cinco irmãos germanos (Simeão, Levi, Judá, Issacar e Zebulão) constituíram metade dos cabeças tribais originais de Israel; os outros seis (José, Benjamim, Dã, Naftali, Gade e Aser) eram meios-irmãos de Rubem. — Gên 35:23-26.

Algumas das boas qualidades de Rubem revelaram-se quando persuadiu seus nove irmãos a lançar José num poço seco, em vez de matá-lo, sendo o objetivo de Rubem retornar em secreto e tirá-lo do poço. (Gên 37:18-30) Mais de 20 anos depois, quando estes mesmos irmãos arrazoaram que as acusações de espionagem levantadas contra eles, no Egito, se deviam a terem maltratado José, Rubem lembrou aos demais que ele não tinha participado no complô contra a vida de José. (Gên 42:9-14, 21, 22) Também, quando Jacó se recusou a permitir que Benjamim acompanhasse seus irmãos na segunda viagem ao Egito, foi Rubem quem ofereceu os seus próprios dois filhos como garantia, dizendo: "Podem ser mortos por ti se [eu] não to trouxer [isto é, Benjamim] de volta." — Gên 42:37.

Como primogênito de Jacó, Rubem gozava naturalmente dos direitos do filho primogênito da família. Como tal, tinha direito de receber duas parcelas dos bens deixados por Jacó, seu pai. A questão, pouco antes da morte de Jacó, quando ele abençoou seus filhos, era: entraria Rubem no gozo desses direitos de primogênito? Também, o patriarca Jacó, como cabeça da família, havia atuado como sacerdote de Jeová para toda a família e oferecido sacrifícios no altar familiar, bem como tinha liderado em orar e dar instrução religiosa. Como pai, agira também como o governador de toda a família e de todos os seus servos, gado e propriedades. Seriam essas responsabilidades repassadas a Rubem?

Jacó dirigiu-se primeiro a Rubem, dizendo: "Rubem, tu és o meu primogênito, meu vigor e o princípio da minha faculdade de procriação, a excelência da dignidade e a excelência da força. Tendo impetuosidade leviana como as águas, não te sobressaias, pois subiste à cama de teu pai. Naquele tempo profanaste o meu leito conjugal. Subiu nele!" — Gên 49:3, 4.

Jacó recordou algo que desqualificava Rubem, o que influía em seus futuros privilégios. Rubem havia desonrado seu pai. Havia cometido imoralidade incestuosa com Bila, concubina de seu pai, serva de Raquel, a esposa amada de Jacó. Isto aconteceu pouco depois de Raquel morrer, ao dar à luz Benjamim. O relato bíblico não revela se Rubem, o primogênito, violou Bila, a serva, a fim de impedir que esta tomasse o lugar de Raquel nas afeições de Jacó, tornando-se assim mais favorecida do que Leia, a mãe de Rubem, ou se agiu por pura lascívia. O relato diz apenas: "E sucedeu, enquanto Israel residia naquela terra, que Rubem foi uma vez e se deitou com Bila, concubina de seu pai, e Israel soube disso." (Gên 35:22) A Septuaginta grega acrescenta: "E isso pareceu mau aos seus olhos." — Gên 35:21, LXX, Thomson.

Rubem não foi repudiado e expulso por causa disso. Foi muitos anos depois, ao abençoar seus filhos, que Jacó disse a Rubem, por inspiração divina: "Não te sobressaias." Assim, Rubem foi despojado de privilégios que, de outra forma, teria como primogênito. Isto porque agira com "impetuosidade leviana como as águas". Mostrara-se, quer instável como águas, quer turbulento e impetuoso como águas que rebentam uma represa ou que se precipitam num vale de torrente. Rubem devia ter exercido autodomínio. Devia ter mostrado o respeito dum filho pela dignidade do pai e pela honra dos dois filhos de Bila, concubina de seu pai.

2. O nome Rubem também representa a tribo constituída pelos descendentes de Rubem, bem como a terra da sua herança. A tribo de Rubem proveio dos seus quatro filhos, Anoque, Palu, Esrom e Carmi, os cabeças familiares dos rubenitas. — Gên 46:8, 9; Êx 6:14; 1Cr 5:3.

Um ano depois do Êxodo do Egito, Elizur, filho de Sedeur, foi escolhido como maioral para representar a inteira tribo de Rubem. (Núm 1:1, 4, 5; 10:18) A tribo de Rubem foi coerentemente uma das menos numerosas entre as 12. Um censo realizado no segundo ano de peregrinação no ermo enumerou 46.500 rubenitas em condições de prestar serviço militar, com 20 anos de idade ou mais. Cerca de 39 anos depois, essa força, que somava então 43.730, era um pouco menor. — Núm 1:2, 3, 20, 21; 26:5-7.

No acampamento de Israel, os rubenitas, flanqueados pelos descendentes de Simeão e de Gade, situavam-se do lado S do tabernáculo. Quando em marcha, esta divisão de três tribos, encabeçada por Rubem, seguia a divisão de três tribos de Judá, Issacar e Zebulão. (Núm 2:10-16; 10:14-20) Esta também foi a ordem em que as tribos fizeram a apresentação de ofertas no dia da inauguração do tabernáculo. — Núm 7:1, 2, 10-47.

Quando Corá, o levita, rebelou-se contra Moisés, três rubenitas — Om, filho de Pelete, junto com Datã e Abirão, filhos de Eliabe — aderiram à revolta, acusando Moisés de tentar 'desempenhar o papel de príncipe' sobre eles e de não conseguir conduzi-los a uma 'terra que manava leite e mel'. Nemuel, irmão de Datã e de Abirão, pelo visto não participou na revolta. (Núm 16:1, 12-14; 26:8, 9) Jeová mostrou que a revolta era, na verdade, um desrespeito contra Ele; ele fez com que a terra se abrisse e tragasse vivos os rebeldes e suas famílias, junto com todos os seus pertences. — Núm 16:23-33; De 11:6; veja ABIRÃO N.º 1.

Designações de Território. Pouco antes de Israel entrar na Terra Prometida, as tribos de Rubem e de Gade solicitaram que lhes fosse dado território ao L do Jordão. A terra fora conquistada através de vitórias contra os dois reis, Síon e Ogue. Arrazoaram que era ideal para eles por terem grandes rebanhos e manadas. Moisés concedeu-lhes este pedido (e à meia-tribo de Manassés), com uma condição, isto é, que as forças combatentes destas tribos também atravessassem o Jordão e ajudassem as demais tribos na conquista de Canaã, condição esta que as duas tribos e meia satisfizeram de bom grado. — Núm 32:1-38; Jos 1:12-18; 4:12, 13; 12:6; 13:8-10.

Assim, a herança territorial de Rubem foi fixada antes de os israelitas cruzarem o Jordão, o próprio Moisés concedendo a esta tribo a parte sul do reino conquistado de Síon. Ela se estendia do vale da torrente do Árnon, fronteira natural que separava este território do de Moabe, ao S, até logo ao N do Mar Morto; a terra ao N de Rubem foi dada aos gaditas. (Núm 34:13-15; De 3:12, 16; 29:8; Jos 13:15-23; 18:7) O território dos amonitas constituía a fronteira L, tendo o Mar Morto e o rio Jordão ao oeste. (Jos 15:1, 6; 18:11, 17) Uma das seis cidades de refúgio, Bezer, situava-se no território de Rubem. Esta e outras cidades rubenitas foram reservadas para o uso dos levitas. — De 4:41-43; Jos 20:8; 21:7, 36; 1Cr 6:63, 78, 79.

Quando por fim os israelitas chegaram ao coração de Canaã, Moisés orientou que a tribo de Rubem, junto com as de Gade, Aser, Zebulão, Dã e Naftali, fossem representadas no monte Ebal para a leitura das maldições e pragas, estando as demais tribos representadas no monte Gerizim para o pronunciamento das bênçãos. (De 27:11-13) Depois de fazer esses arranjos, Moisés abençoou Rubem junto com as demais tribos. Aos rubenitas, Moisés disse: "Viva Rubem e não morra, e não se tornem poucos os seus homens." — De 33:1, 6.

No fim da campanha de Josué em Canaã, ele convocou as forças armadas de Rubem, de Gade e da meia-tribo de Manassés e, depois de elogiá-las por terem mantido a palavra dada a Moisés, enviou-as para casa com sua bênção. (Jos 22:1-8) Quando chegaram ao Jordão, erigiram um enorme altar na margem ocidental, ato que, tendo sido a princípio mal interpretado pelas outras tribos, quase resultou numa ruptura de relações, e até mesmo em guerra civil. Mas quando se explicou que o altar não era para sacrifícios, mas uma testemunha da fidelidade entre as tribos de ambos os lados do Jordão, o altar recebeu um nome, provavelmente "Testemunha", pois, conforme disseram, "é testemunha entre nós de que Jeová é o verdadeiro Deus". — Jos 22:9-34.

História Posterior. Muitos anos depois, quando Baraque e Débora entoaram um grande cântico de vitória, eles relembraram que os rubenitas não se juntaram a eles na batalha contra Sísera. Em resultado disso, "foram grandes [os] esquadrinhamentos do coração entre as divisões de Rubem". (Jz 5:15, 16) Nos dias de Saul, os rubenitas juntaram forças com seus vizinhos e obtiveram grande vitória sobre os agarenos e seus aliados, "pois clamaram a Deus por socorro na guerra e ele se deixou suplicar a seu favor por confiarem nele". (1Cr 5:10, 18-22) Os rubenitas então participaram na ocupação do território dos agarenos, pelo visto até que a Assíria subjugou Israel, no oitavo século AEC, quando os rubenitas se acharam entre os primeiros a serem conduzidos ao exílio. (1Cr 5:6, 22b, 26) Rubenitas individuais, e a tribo como um todo, são mencionados em relação à história de Davi, tanto antes como depois de ele se tornar rei. — 1Cr 11:26, 42; 12:37, 38; 26:32; 27:16.

Nas Profecias. Nos livros simbólicos de Ezequiel e de Revelação (Apocalipse), Rubem é mencionado em ordem significativa, junto com as demais tribos. Por exemplo, em visão, Ezequiel viu no meio das tribos a "contribuição sagrada" de terra, que continha o templo de Jeová, a cidade chamada "Jeová-Samá", que significa "O Próprio Jeová Está Ali", e o território pertencente aos sacerdotes, aos levitas e ao maioral. Logo adjacente a esta faixa sagrada, ao norte da cidade sagrada, ficava Judá, com Rubem como vizinho ao norte. (Ez 48:6-22, 35) Além disso, o portão chamado Rubem, no lado N da cidade santa, Jeová-Samá, era vizinho do que se chamava Judá. (Ez 48:31) Similarmente, na visão de João sobre a selagem das 12 tribos do Israel espiritual, a tribo de Rubem é mencionada em segundo lugar, depois da de Judá. — Re 7:4, 5.

RUBI. Pedra preciosa transparente, de cor vermelho vivo, que é uma variedade de coríndon. Compõe-se de óxido de alumínio e contém diminutos traços de cromo e de óxido de ferro que lhe dão a cor vermelha. É raríssima, ligeiramente inferior ao diamante em dureza e, quando de excelente qualidade e de tamanho grande, pode ultrapassar, em valor, um diamante do mesmo tamanho. As cores variam do rosa ao altamente apreciado vermelho-azulado forte, cor esta não raro identificada como vermelho "sangue-de-pombo". O termo "rubi", segundo usado na Tradução do Novo Mundo, é a tradução de duas palavras hebraicas ('ó·dhem; kadh·ködh) que evidentemente indicam, ambas, o vermelho brilhante ou o vermelho intenso.

A primeira pedra da primeira fileira de gemas do "peitoral do julgamento" do sumo sacerdote Arão era um rubi, e nela estava gravado o nome de uma das 12 tribos de Israel. (Êx 28:2, 15, 17, 21; 39:10) A "cobertura" do rei de Tiro consistia de rubi e de outras pedras preciosas. (Ez 28:12, 13) Edom era o "mercador" de Tiro para preciosos rubis. A negociadora Tiro ansiosamente trocava suas coisas armazenadas por estes e outros bens. (Ez 27:2, 16) Ao confortar Sião e descrever sua vindoura beleza, Jeová, seu dono marital, disse em parte: "Vou fazer as tuas ameias de rubis e teus portões de pedras fulgurosas." — Is 54:5, 6, 11, 12.

RUFO [Vermelho].

1. Filho do Simão que foi obrigado a levar a estaca de tortura de Jesus; irmão de certo Alexandre. — Mr 15:21; Lu 23:26.

2. Cristão em Roma, "o escolhido no Senhor", a quem Paulo cumprimenta em sua carta. Com carinho, Paulo também cumprimenta a mãe de Rufo, referindo-se a ela como "sua mãe e minha". — Ro 16:13.

RUÍNA, MONTE DA. Veja o artigo OLIVEIRAS, MONTE DAS.

RUMA [Altura; Lugar Exaltado]. Cidade natal de Zebida (e de seu pai, Pedaías), que era esposa do Rei Josias, de Judá, e mãe de Jeoiaquim. (2Rs 23:34, 36) Sua localização é incerta. É identificada a título especulativo com Khirbet er-Rumeh, que leva um nome similar. Atualmente é chamada de Horvat Ruma e se situa a cerca de 10 km ao N de Nazaré. Mas há quem relacione Ruma com a cidade bíblica de Arumá, mencionada em Juízes 9:41 e que se pensa se localizava perto de Siquém. — Veja ARUMÁ.

RUMINANTE. Sob a Lei mosaica, os animais ruminantes que tinham casco partido ou fendido eram considerados puros para consumo. Os animais "puros", ruminantes, incluíam o veado, a gazela, o corço, o antílope, a camurça, o gado doméstico ou o selvático, a ovelha e o cabrito. Esta classificação excluía o camelo, o procávia, e a lebre ou coelho, porque, embora sejam ruminantes, não têm casco partido. (Le 11:1-8, 26; De 14:4-8) Alguns comentaristas dizem que os animais sem garras e ruminantes em geral são mais limpos em seus hábitos alimentares e que o alimento duas vezes mastigado por eles é digerido mais cabalmente, de modo que, se ingerirem plantas venenosas, grande parte do veneno é neutralizado ou removido pela complexa química envolvida nesse processo digestivo mais demorado.

O processo de ruminação é uma das interessantes maravilhas da criação. A maioria dos animais ruminantes tem três ou quatro compartimentos no estômago, e, em geral, seu ciclo de alimentação segue um padrão similar. A maior parte do alimento que ingerem passa apenas parcialmente mastigado para a primeira cavidade, e dali para a segunda, onde é amaciada e moldada em bolos arredondados. Quando o animal para de pastar e fica em repouso, contrações musculares forçam os bolos alimentares a voltar para a boca para uma remastigação e para serem mais uma vez misturados com a saliva. Quando engolido pela segunda vez, o alimento passa pelo primeiro e pelo segundo compartimentos e vai para o terceiro, e por fim para o quarto para a digestão completa.

Por que é a lebre classificada na Bíblia como ruminante?

A referência da Bíblia à lebre como ruminante tem sido frequentemente posta em dúvida por alguns críticos da Bíblia. (Le 11:4, 6; De 14:7) Não se deve desconsiderar, porém, que a classificação moderna, científica, do que constitui um ruminante não fornece base alguma para julgar o que a Bíblia diz, visto que tal classificação não existia no tempo de Moisés. Mesmo no século 18, o poeta inglês William Cowper, que observara longamente suas lebres domésticas, comentou que elas "ruminavam o dia todo até à noitinha". Linaeus, famoso naturalista do mesmo século, cria que os coelhos ruminavam. Mas coube a outros fornecer mais dados científicos. O Sr. Morot, francês, descobriu em 1882 que os coelhos reingerem até 90 por cento do seu consumo diário. A respeito da lebre, Ivan T. Sanderson, numa recente publicação, comenta: "Um dos mais extraordinários [hábitos], ao nosso ver, é seu método de digestão. Não é peculiar aos leporídeos [lebres, coelhos], e agora se sabe que ocorre em muitos roedores. Quando se acha disponível alimento fresco, o oposto de forragem dessecada (seca) do inverno, os animais o comem com voracidade e então o excretam em torno de sua toca em forma semidigerida. Depois de algum tempo, ele é comido de novo, e esse processo pode repetir-se mais de uma vez. No coelho comum, parece que apenas os adultos plenamente desenvolvidos participam nesta prática." — Living Mammals of the World (Mamíferos Vivos do Mundo), 1955, p. 114.

Certos cientistas britânicos fizeram detidas observações dos hábitos dos coelhos sob cuidadosos controles, e os resultados obtidos foram publicados em Proceedings of the Zoological Society of London (Procedimentos da Sociedade Zoológica de Londres), 1940, Vol. 110, pp. 159-163. Em poucas palavras, é assim que a lebre reingere o alimento: se de manhã o coelho come alimento fresco, este passa pelo estômago e vai para o intestino delgado, deixando na extremidade cárdia do estômago uns 40 ou 50 gramas de bolotas já presentes quando o alimento fresco foi comido. Do intestino delgado, a refeição matinal entra no ceco ou extremidade fechada do intestino grosso e ali permanece por algum tempo. Durante o dia as bolotas descem, e nos intestinos as proteínas bacterianas neles são digeridas. Quando chegam ao intestino grosso, contornam a matéria que está no ceco e passam para o cólon, onde o excesso de umidade é absorvido para produzir as conhecidas pelotinhas secas ou excrementos que são expelidos. Completada esta fase do ciclo, a matéria armazenada na extremidade fechada do ceco entra a seguir no cólon, mas, em vez de toda a umidade ser absorvida, a matéria chega ao ânus num estado um tanto mole. Isto se dá na forma de bolotas, cada uma revestida duma resistente camada de muco para impedir que grudem umas nas outras. Então, quando essas bolotas chegam ao ânus, em vez de serem expelidas, o coelho se dobra e as recebe na boca, e as armazena na extremidade cárdia do estômago até que coma outra refeição. É assim que se completa o ciclo rítmico especial e a maior parte do alimento já passou uma segunda vez pelo aparelho digestivo.

O Dr. Waldo L. Schmitt, Curador-Chefe do Departamento de Zoologia do Instituto Smithsoniano, Washington, DC, EUA, ao comentar sobre essas descobertas, escreveu: "Parece não haver motivo algum para se duvidar da autenticidade dos relatórios de vários pesquisadores no sentido de que os coelhos costumeiramente armazenam alimento semidigerido no ceco e de que este é mais tarde reingerido e passa uma segunda vez pelo aparelho digestivo." Comentou também que esta é uma explicação para "o ceco fenomenalmente grande dos coelhos em comparação com a maioria dos outros mamíferos".

RUTE. Moabita que se casou com Malom depois da morte do pai dele, Elimeleque, e enquanto Malom, a mãe dele, Noemi, e seu irmão, Quiliom, viviam em Moabe. Uma fome fizera a família partir de sua cidade natal, Belém, em Judá. O cunhado de Rute, Quiliom, casara-se com a moabita Orpa. Com o tempo, os dois irmãos morreram, deixando viúvas sem filhos. Ao saber que o favor de Jeová novamente se manifestava em Israel, Noemi, acompanhada de suas duas noras, passou a voltar a Judá. — Ru 1:1-7; 4:9, 10.

Seu Amor Leal. Ao passo que Orpa por fim voltou para seu povo, por recomendação de Noemi, Rute apegou-se à sua sogra. O profundo amor a Noemi e o desejo sincero de servir a Jeová em associação com o Seu povo moveram Rute a deixar os pais e sua terra natal, com pouca perspectiva de obter a segurança que o casamento poderia proporcionar-lhe. (Ru 1:8-17; 2:11) Tal era seu amor pela sogra, que mais tarde outros puderam dizer que ela era melhor para Noemi do que sete filhos. — Ru 4:15.

Chegando a Belém no início da colheita da cevada, Rute foi aos campos à procura de alimento para Noemi e para si mesma. Por acaso, ela foi parar no campo que pertencia a Boaz, parente de Elimeleque, e solicitou ao supervisor dos ceifeiros que lhe desse permissão de respigar. Sua diligência em respigar deve ter sido notável, como se evidencia de o supervisor ter comentado seu trabalho com Boaz. — Ru 1:22–2:7.

Quando Boaz lhe demonstrou bondade, Rute reagiu com apreço e reconheceu humildemente ser inferior a qualquer das servas dele. Na hora da refeição, ele lhe deu grãos torrados com tanta fartura que ela teve sobras para dar a Noemi. (Ru 2:8-14, 18) Embora Boaz tivesse providenciado facilitar-lhe a respiga, Rute não parou cedo de trabalhar, mas continuou a respigar até a noitinha, "malhando depois o que tinha respigado, e veio a ser aproximadamente um efa [22 l] de cevada". Visto que Boaz pediu-lhe que continuasse a respigar em seu campo, Rute fez isto durante o restante da colheita da cevada, bem como na colheita do trigo. — Ru 2:15-23.

Solicita Que Boaz Aja Como Resgatador. Desejando encontrar um "lugar de descanso", ou lar, para sua nora, Noemi instruiu Rute a solicitar a Boaz que a resgatasse. Concordemente, Rute desceu à eira de Boaz. Depois de Boaz se deitar, Rute aproximou-se quietamente, descobriu-lhe os pés e deitou-se. À meia-noite, tremendo, ele acordou e inclinou-se para a frente. Não a reconhecendo na escuridão, ele perguntou: "Quem és?" Ela respondeu: "Sou Rute, tua escrava, e tens de estender a tua aba sobre a tua escrava, visto que és [um] resgatador". — Ru 3:1-9.

As ações de Rute, em obediência às instruções de Noemi, devem ter ocorrido segundo o proceder costumeiro seguido pelas mulheres quando reivindicavam seu direito ao casamento de cunhado. No Commentary on the Holy Scriptures (Comentário sobre as Escrituras Sagradas), de Lange, Paulus Cassel tece a seguinte observação sobre Rute 3:9: "Sem dúvida, este método simbólico de reivindicar o mais delicado de todos os direitos pressupõe maneiras de simplicidade e virtude patriarcais. A confiança da mulher repousa na honra do homem. O método, porém, era tal, que não podia ser executado com facilidade. Pois qualquer conhecimento ou indício prévio disto teria rompido o véu do silêncio e do sigilo da modéstia da reivindicante. Mas, uma vez posto em operação, o pedido apresentado não poderia ser negado sem que houvesse desonra, quer para a mulher, quer para o homem. Assim, podemos estar certos de que Noemi não enviou sua nora nesta missão sem ter plena certeza de que seria um sucesso. Pois é certo que, a todas as demais dificuldades, adicionou-se a seguinte, específica no presente caso: Boaz, como a própria Rute diz, era mesmo um goel [um resgatador], mas não o goel. A resposta de Boaz, também, sugere a possibilidade de que tal reivindicação não era totalmente inesperada por ele. Não que ele tivesse um acordo com Noemi, e por isso ele estaria sozinho na eira; pois ter ele sido subitamente despertado do sono mostra que a visita daquela noite era completamente inesperada. Mas a ideia de que um dia a reivindicação de Rute aos direitos de parentesco consanguíneo pudesse ser dirigida a ele mesmo talvez não lhe fosse alheia. Porém, mesmo esta conjectura, do que talvez ou provavelmente poderia ocorrer, não poderia ser usada para isentar Rute da necessidade de manifestar sua própria vontade mediante o procedimento simbólico." — Traduzido para o inglês e editado por P. Schaff, 1976, p. 42.

Que Boaz encarou as ações de Rute como inteiramente virtuosas fica evidente em sua reação: "Que Jeová te abençoe, minha filha. Expressaste a tua benevolência melhor no último caso do que no primeiro, não indo atrás dos jovens, quer o de condição humilde, quer o rico." Rute altruistamente escolheu Boaz, um homem bem mais velho, por ser um resgatador, a fim de suscitar um nome para seu falecido marido e para sua sogra. Uma vez que teria sido algo natural uma mulher jovem como Rute preferir um homem mais jovem, Boaz considerou isto como uma expressão ainda melhor da benevolência dela do que a escolha que ela havia feito de apegar-se a sua idosa sogra. — Ru 3:10.

A voz de Rute sem dúvida deve ter refletido certa ansiedade, motivando Boaz a tranquilizá-la: "Agora, minha filha, não tenhas medo. Farei para ti tudo o que disseres, pois todos no portão do meu povo se apercebem de que és uma mulher de bem." Devido ao adiantado da hora, Boaz disse a Rute que se deitasse. No entanto, ambos se levantaram quando ainda estava escuro, evidentemente para evitarem rumores que refletissem mal sobre qualquer um dos dois. Ademais, Boaz deu a Rute seis medidas de cevada. Isto pode ter significado que, assim como seis dias de trabalho eram seguidos por um dia de descanso, o dia de descanso de Rute estava às portas, pois ele se certificaria de que ela tivesse um "lugar de descanso". — Ru 3:1, 11-15, 17, 18.

Com a chegada de Rute, Noemi, talvez não reconhecendo a mulher que procurava entrar em meio à escuridão, perguntou: "Quem és, minha filha?" Ou, pode ser que esta pergunta dissesse respeito à possível nova identidade de Rute, em relação a seu resgatador. — Ru 3:16.

Mais tarde, quando o parente mais próximo se recusou a realizar o casamento de cunhado, Boaz prontamente o fez. Dessa maneira, Rute se tornou a mãe de Obede, filho de Boaz, e ancestral do Rei Davi e também de Jesus Cristo. — Ru 4:1-21; Mt 1:5, 16.

RUTE, LIVRO DE. Este livro da Bíblia deriva seu nome de um dos seus personagens principais, Rute, a moabita. A narrativa mostra como Rute se tornou uma ancestral de Davi por meio do casamento de cunhado com Boaz, em favor de sua sogra, Noemi. O apreço, a lealdade e a confiança em Jeová que Boaz, Noemi e Rute demonstraram permeiam o relato. — Ru 1:8, 9, 16, 17; 2:4, 10-13, 19, 20; 3:9-13; 4:10.

Excetuando-se a lista genealógica (Ru 4:18-22), os eventos relatados no livro de Rute abrangem um período de cerca de 11 anos no tempo dos juízes, embora não se declare exatamente quando é que ocorreram durante esse período. — Ru 1:1, 4, 22; 2:23; 4:13.

A tradição judaica atribui a Samuel a escrita deste livro, e isto não discordaria da evidência interna. O fato de que o relato conclui com a genealogia de Davi sugere que o escritor estava a par do propósito de Deus com respeito a Davi. Isto se ajustaria a Samuel, pois foi ele quem ungiu a Davi para ser rei. Por isso, teria sido também apropriado que Samuel fizesse um registro dos ancestrais de Davi. — 1Sa 16:1, 13.

Autenticidade e Valor. Que o livro de Rute é histórico fica confirmado pela genealogia de Jesus Cristo, apresentada por Mateus, a qual alista Boaz, Rute e Obede na linhagem de ascendentes. (Mt 1:5; compare com Ru 4:18-22; 1Cr 2:5, 9-15.) Ademais, é inconcebível que um escritor hebreu tivesse inventado deliberadamente um ancestral materno estrangeiro para Davi, o primeiro rei da linhagem real de Judá.

O registro histórico fornece matéria de fundo que ilustra e esclarece outras partes da Bíblia. Apresenta-se de forma vívida a aplicação das leis referentes à respiga (Le 19:9, 10; De 24:19-22; Ru 2:1, 3, 7, 15-17, 23) e ao casamento de cunhado. (De 25:5-10; Ru 3:7-13; 4:1-13) Há evidência da orientação de Jeová na preservação da linhagem que levava ao Messias, bem como na escolha dos indivíduos para essa linhagem. Às mulheres israelitas casadas com um homem da tribo de Judá apresentava-se a possível perspectiva de contribuir para a linhagem terrestre do Messias. (Gên 49:10) O fato de Rute, uma moabita, ter sido assim favorecida ilustra o princípio declarado pelo apóstolo Paulo: "Depende, . . . não daquele que deseja, nem daquele que corre, mas de Deus, que tem misericórdia." (Ro 9:16) Rute escolhera a Jeová como seu Deus e a Israel como seu povo, e Jeová, em sua grande misericórdia, concedeu-lhe um "salário perfeito", ao permitir que ela se tornasse um elo na mais importante linhagem. — Ru 2:12; 4:13-17.

DESTAQUES DE RUTE

Narrativa que mostra como Rute, moabita que temia a Jeová Deus, foi abençoada por Ele, tornando-se parte da ininterrupta linhagem messiânica que conduzia ao Rei Davi.

Transcorre nos dias dos juízes; a escrita foi terminada provavelmente por volta de 1090 AEC.

Rute decide permanecer com Noemi e seu Deus, Jeová. (1:1-22)

- Sem filhos e viúvas, Rute e Orpa acompanham Noemi, sua sogra, viúva de Elimeleque, quando esta parte de Moabe para retornar a Judá.
- Dissuadida pelas palavras de Noemi sobre as desalentadoras perspectivas de um novo casamento, Orpa volta.
- Rute é resoluta; declara que o povo de Noemi será seu povo e que o Deus de Noemi será seu Deus.
- Por fim, Rute e Noemi chegam a Belém.

Rute respiga no campo de Boaz. (2:1–3:18)

- Por acaso, Rute passa a respigar no campo de Boaz, parente de Elimeleque, e granjeia sua atenção favorável.
- Rute continua a respigar no campo de Boaz até o fim das colheitas de cevada e de trigo.
- Daí, acatando as instruções de Noemi, Rute solicita a Boaz que aja como resgatador; Boaz está disposto, mas há um homem de parentesco mais próximo a Noemi do que ele.

Boaz, como resgatador, casa-se com Rute. (4:1-22)

- Perante dez anciãos de Belém, Boaz oferece ao parente mais próximo a oportunidade de resgatar o campo de Elimeleque e suscitar descendência para o falecido, realizando com Rute o casamento de cunhado.
- Diante da recusa do parente, Boaz age como resgatador.
- A união de Boaz e Rute é abençoada com o nascimento dum filho, Obede, avô do Rei Davi.

S

SAAFE.

1. Filho de Calebe (filho de Esrom) e sua concubina Maacá. Saafe foi o fundador ou "pai" daqueles que se estabeleceram em Madmana. — 1Cr 2:9, 42, 48, 49.

2. Último mencionado dos seis filhos de Jadai alistados entre os descendentes de Calebe, filho de Esrom, na tribo de Judá. — 1Cr 2:9, 42, 47.

SAALABIM. Veja SAALBIM.

SAALBIM. Cidade cujos habitantes amorreus a casa de José sujeitou a trabalhos forçados. (Jz 1:35) Mais tarde, Saalbim foi incluída num dos distritos que fornecia anualmente alimentos para a casa de Salomão. (1Rs 4:7-9) Entende-se, em geral, tratar-se de Saalabim, cidade fronteiriça de Dã. (Jos 19:40-42) A única diferença na grafia hebraica do nome é a consoante final dos dois nomes. Saalbom talvez seja um nome alternativo de Saalbim. — 2Sa 23:32; 1Cr 11:33.

Saalbim é identificada com a abandonada aldeia de Selbit (Tel Shaʽalvim), que parece preservar o nome bíblico. Fica a uns 25 km ao ONO de Jerusalém e relativamente perto dos sítios sugeridos de outros lugares mencionados nas Escrituras junto com Saalbim.

SAALBONITA. Designação de Eliaba, um dos guerreiros de Davi, presumivelmente indicando que ele era da cidade de Saalbim. — 2Sa 23:8, 32; 1Cr 11:26, 33.

SAALIM [Punhados; Concavidades da Mão]. "Terra" atravessada por Saul quando procurava as jumentas perdidas de seu pai Quis. (1Sa 9:3, 4) Por causa da dificuldade de se determinar a rota exata de Saul, não se conhece com certeza a localização de Saalim. Alguns peritos equipararam "a terra de Saalim" com "a terra de Sual", de 1 Samuel 13:17. De qualquer modo, sua localização em Efraim parece ajustar-se melhor ao contexto.

SAARAIM [Portão Duplo].

1. Cidade de Judá na Sefelá. (Jos 15:20, 33, 36) Depois de Davi derrotar Golias e por causa da perseguição movida pelos israelitas, os filisteus mortos ficaram espalhados 'desde Saaraim até Gate e Ecrom'. (1Sa 17:52) Saaraim ficava na vizinhança da "baixada de Elá" (a es-Sant [ʽEmeq ha-'Ela]) e de Azeca (Tell Zakariyeh [Tel ʽAzeqa]). (Jos 15:35; 1Sa 17:1, 2) Não se fez uma identificação específica.

2. Cidade de Simeão. (1Cr 4:24, 31) Parece ser a mesma que Silhim (Jos 15:32) e Saruem. (Jos 19:6) É provisoriamente identificada com Tell el-Farʽah (Tel Sharuhen), a uns 35 km ao O de Berseba.

SAASGAZ. Guardião das concubinas do Rei Assuero; seu eunuco encarregado da segunda casa das mulheres. — Est 2:14.

SAAZIMA. Veja SAAZUMA.

SAAZUMA [Lugar Majestoso]. Lugar fronteiriço não identificado de Issacar. (Jos 19:17, 22) Fica situado em algum ponto entre Bete-Semes e o monte Tabor.

SABÁ.

1. Primeiro filho alistado de Raamá, filho de Cus. — Gên 10:7; 1Cr 1:9.

2. Filho de Joctã, da linhagem de Sem (Gên 10:21-30; 1Cr 1:17-23); progenitor de uma das 13 tribos árabes. Pode ser que os homens desta tribo nômade tenham sido os "sabeus" incursores que fizeram o assalto descrito em Jó 1:14, 15.

3. Um dos dois filhos de Jocsã, filho de Abraão com Quetura. (Gên 25:1-3; 1Cr 1:32) Enquanto Abraão ainda vivia, ele mandou seus descendentes que teve com Quetura "para o leste, para a terra do Oriente". (Gên 25:6) De modo que parece que este Sabá se fixou em alguma parte de Arábia.

4. Reino abastado, com toda a probabilidade situado no SO da Arábia. Era especialmente conhecido por seu ouro, seus perfumes e seu incenso. (1Rs 10:1, 2; Is 60:6; Je 6:20; Ez 27:22) A origem deste povo de Sabá, ou sabeus, como são frequentemente chamados em fontes seculares, não pode ser determinada com certeza. Havia dois Sabás na linhagem de Sem (SABÁ N.º 2 e 3) que evidentemente se estabeleceram na Arábia. Todavia, alguns peritos atuais acreditam que o povo deste reino era semítico, da linhagem de Joctã, descendentes de Sem através de Éber. (Gên 10:26-28) O próprio nome de Sabá e de alguns dos seus irmãos estão ligados a lugares no S da Arábia. — Veja HAVILÁ N.º 4; HAZARMAVETE.

O reino de Sabá, segundo algumas fontes, ficava na parte do que atualmente é a República do Iêmen. Sua capital, evidentemente, era Marib, a uns 100 km ao L de Sanʽa.

Antes de aperfeiçoamentos náuticos tornarem a navegação no Mar Vermelho menos perigosa, o comércio do S da Arábia, e possivelmente do L da África e da Índia, era na maior parte realizado por meio de caravanas de camelos através da Arábia. Sabá dominava as rotas de caravana e ficou famosa por seus negociantes de olíbano, mirra, ouro, pedras preciosas e marfim. A Bíblia indica que estes negociantes chegavam até Tiro. (Ez 27:2, 22-24; Sal 72:15; Is 60:6) Um selo de argila desenterrado em Betel fornece confirmação material do comércio entre a Palestina e o S da Arábia. Descobertas feitas em escavações em Marib sugerem que os sabeus eram um povo relativamente pacífico, de mentalidade voltada para o comércio. Na sua capital havia um enorme templo dedicado ao deus-lua.

Rainha de Sabá. Algum tempo depois de Salomão ter concluído muitas edificações, ele foi visitado pela "rainha de Sabá", que ouvira "as notícias a respeito de Salomão em conexão com o nome de Jeová". Esta rainha, cujo nome não se dá na Bíblia, foi a Jerusalém "com um séquito bem impressionante, camelos carregando óleo de bálsamo, e muitíssimo ouro e pedras preciosas". (1Rs 10:1, 2) Seu modo de viajar e o tipo de presentes que trouxe indicam que ela procedia do reino de Sabá, no SO da Arábia. Isto é também indicado pelo comentário de Jesus, de que ela era "a rainha do sul" e que ela "veio dos confins da terra". (Mt 12:42) Do ponto de vista das pessoas em Jerusalém, ela realmente veio duma parte distante do mundo então conhecido. (Sal 72:10; Jl 3:8) Marib fica a uns 1.900 km de Eziom-Géber, que está situada no litoral N do Mar Vermelho.

Jesus disse a respeito da rainha de Sabá que ela "veio . . . para ouvir a sabedoria de Salomão". (Lu 11:31) Ela ficou impressionada com o que Salomão disse, com o que viu a respeito da prosperidade do seu reino e da organização sábia do seu pessoal. Declarou felizes os servos do rei por poderem ouvir a sabedoria dele, e bendisse a Jeová por colocá-lo no trono. (1Rs 10:2-9; 2Cr 9:1-9) A rainha deu a Salomão 120 talentos de ouro (no valor atual de uns US$ 46.242.000), bem como óleo de bálsamo e pedras preciosas. Salomão, pelo visto, deu-lhe presentes que excederam o valor dos tesouros que ela trouxera, e ela voltou então para a sua própria terra. — 2Cr 9:12, BLH, PIB.

Cristo declarou que esta mulher ressuscitaria no dia do julgamento e condenaria os homens da geração do primeiro século. (Mt 12:42; Lu 11:31) Ela fizera uma viagem estafante para ouvir a sabedoria de Salomão, mas os judeus descrentes, que afirmavam ser servos de Jeová, tinham em Jesus algo mais do que Salomão e não lhe davam atenção.

SÁBADO. Dia reservado por Deus para descanso dos trabalhos rotineiros; o sábado foi dado por Jeová como sinal entre ele e os filhos de Israel. (Êx 31:16, 17) A expressão hebraica yohm hash-shab·báth (dia de sábado) deriva do verbo sha·váth, que significa "repousar, cessar". (Gên 2:2; 8:22) Em grego, he he·mé·ra tou sab·bá·tou significa "dia de sábado".

A história da guarda de um sábado semanal de 24 horas começa com a nação de Israel no ermo, no segundo mês depois do seu Êxodo do Egito, em 1513 AEC. (Êx 16:1) Jeová dissera a Moisés que a provisão milagrosa do maná seria duplicada no sexto dia. Quando isto ocorreu, os maiorais da assembleia relataram o assunto a Moisés e depois se anunciou o arranjo do sábado semanal. (Êx 16:22, 23) Que Israel tinha esta obrigação daquele tempo em diante é mostrado pelas palavras de Jeová em Êxodo 16:28, 29.

O sábado semanal tornou-se parte integrante dum sistema de sábados quando o pacto da Lei pouco depois foi formalmente inaugurado no monte Sinai. (Êx 19:1; 20:8-10; 24:5-8) Este sistema sabático se compunha de muitos tipos de sábados: o 7.° dia, o 7.° ano, o 50.° ano (ano do jubileu), 14 de nisã (Páscoa), 15 de nisã, 21 de nisã, 6 de sivã (Pentecostes), 1.° de etanim, 10 de etanim (Dia da Expiação), 15 de etanim e 22 de etanim.

Que o sábado só foi imposto aos servos de Deus depois do Êxodo é evidente no testemunho de Deuteronômio 5:2, 3, e Êxodo 31:16, 17: "Não foi com os nossos antepassados que Jeová concluiu este pacto, mas conosco." "Os filhos de Israel têm de guardar o sábado . . . nas suas gerações. . . . É um sinal entre mim e os filhos de Israel por tempo indefinido." Se Israel já estivesse guardando o sábado, este não poderia ter servido de lembrete da sua libertação do Egito por Jeová, conforme mostra Deuteronômio 5:15. Saírem alguns israelitas para apanhar maná no sétimo dia, apesar da instrução direta ao contrário, indica que a observância do sábado era algo novo. (Êx 16:11-30) Que havia incerteza de como tratar o primeiro caso registrado de um violador do sábado, depois de se ter dado a Lei no Sinai, também mostra que o sábado só fora instituído pouco antes. (Núm 15:32-36) Enquanto no Egito, os israelitas, como escravos, não podiam guardar o sábado, mesmo que tivessem estado sob tal lei naquele tempo. Faraó queixou-se que Moisés interferia mesmo já quando pediu um período de três dias para oferecer sacrifícios a Deus. Quanto mais se os israelitas tivessem tentado descansar num dia em cada sete. (Êx 5:1-5) Embora seja verdade que os patriarcas parecem ter medido o tempo em semanas de sete dias, não há nenhuma evidência de que diferenciassem o sétimo dia. O número sete tinha destaque, porém, por muitas vezes denotar inteireza. (Gên 4:15, 23, 24; 21:28-32) A palavra hebraica para "jurar" (sha·vá') evidentemente deriva da mesma raiz que a palavra que significa "sete".

O sábado era celebrado como dia sagrado (De 5:12), dia de descanso e de regozijo de todos — israelitas, servos, residentes forasteiros, e animais — em que cessavam de todos os seus trabalhos. (Is 58:13, 14; Os 2:11; Êx 20:10; 34:21; De 5:12-15; Je 17:21, 24) Fazia-se uma oferta queimada especial, junto com ofertas de cereais e de bebida, além da regular e diária "contínua oferta queimada". (Núm 28:9, 10) Os pães da proposição eram trocados no santuário, e uma nova turma de sacerdotes assumia seus deveres. (Le 24:5-9; 1Cr 9:32; 2Cr 23:4) Os deveres sacerdotais não eram reduzidos no sábado (Mt 12:5), e até mesmo se circuncidavam meninos no sábado, se este era o seu oitavo dia de vida. Em tempos posteriores, os judeus tinham um ditado: "Não existe sábado para o santuário", querendo dizer que os deveres sacerdotais prosseguiam. — Jo 7:22; Le 12:2, 3; The Temple (O Templo), de A. Edersheim, 1874, p. 152.

Segundo fontes rabínicas, na época em que Jesus estava na terra, três toques de trombeta por volta da nona hora, ou 15 horas, na tarde de sexta-feira, anunciavam a aproximação do sábado. Diante disso, todos os trabalhos e negócios deviam cessar, acendia-se a lâmpada do sábado e trajavam-se vestes festivas. Daí, mais três toques indicavam que o sábado havia realmente começado. A turma de sacerdotes que estava de saída oferecia o sacrifício matutino no sábado, e a turma entrante oferecia o sacrifício da noitinha, ambas passando o sábado no santuário. Cada uma das turmas dava ao sumo sacerdote metade da sua porção de pão. Este era consumido durante o sábado no próprio templo pelos sacerdotes que estavam em condições de pureza. Os cabeças das famílias da turma entrante determinavam por sortes que família serviria em cada dia especial da sua semana de ministério, e quem desincumbiria as funções sacerdotais no sábado. — Le 24:8, 9; Mr 2:26, 27; The Temple, pp. 151, 152, 156-158.

Havia uma distinção nos requisitos para o sábado semanal regular e os sábados ou "santos congressos" relacionados com as festividades. (Le 23:2) De modo geral, o sábado semanal era mais restritivo; não se podia fazer nenhum trabalho, pesado ou outro (exceto no santuário). Até mesmo ajuntar lenha ou acender fogo era proibido. (Núm 15:32-36; Êx 35:3) Também se restringiam as viagens, o que parece ter sido baseado em Êxodo 16:29. O Dia da Expiação também era um tempo de repouso de toda sorte de obra. (Le 16:29-31; 23:28-31) Todavia, nos dias de santos congressos das festividades não podia haver trabalho laborioso, negócios ou atividades comerciais, mas, permitia-se cozinhar, fazer preparativos para as festividades, e assim por diante. — Êx 12:16; Le 23:7, 8, 21, 35, 36.

Às vezes, dois sábados legais coincidiam no mesmo período de 24 horas, e este sábado era chamado de "grande", tal como quando o 15 de nisã (dia sabático) coincidia com o sábado regular. — Jo 19:31.

Benefícios e Importância do Sábado. A desistência de toda a labuta e a observância de outros requisitos sabáticos, dados por Deus, não somente davam repouso ao corpo, mas, o que era mais importante, ofereciam a oportunidade de a pessoa demonstrar sua fé e obediência por meio da observância do sábado. Dava aos pais a oportunidade de inculcar as leis e os mandamentos de Deus na mente e no coração dos seus filhos. (De 6:4-9) O sábado costumava ser usado para assimilar conhecimento de Deus e para cuidar das necessidades espirituais, conforme indicado pela resposta do marido da mulher sunamita, quando ela pediu permissão para ir consultar Eliseu, o homem de Deus: "Por que vais a ele hoje? Não é lua nova nem sábado." (2Rs 4:22, 23) E os levitas espalhados pelo país, sem dúvida, aproveitavam o sábado para ensinar a Lei ao povo de Israel. — De 33:8, 10; Le 10:11.

Era importante que os israelitas individuais se lembrassem de guardar o sábado, porque a violação dele era considerado rebelião contra Jeová e era punido com a morte. (Êx 31:14, 15; Núm 15:32-36) O mesmo princípio aplicava-se à nação. Observar ela de todo o coração o inteiro sistema sabático, dias e anos, era um fator vital para a sua contínua existência como nação na terra que lhe fora dada por Deus. Deixarem de honrar o sábado contribuiu grandemente para a sua queda e para a desolação da terra de Judá durante 70 anos, para compensar os sábados violados. — Le 26:31-35; 2Cr 36:20, 21.

Restrições Sabáticas, Rabínicas. Intencionava-se originalmente que o sábado fosse uma ocasião alegre, espiritualmente edificante. Mas os líderes religiosos judaicos, no seu zelo de se diferenciarem tanto quanto possível dos gentios, especialmente depois do retorno do exílio babilônico, aos poucos o tornaram penoso por aumentarem grandemente as restrições sabáticas para 39, com inúmeras restrições menores. Estas, quando compiladas, enchiam dois grandes volumes. Por exemplo, pegar uma pulga era proibido como caça. O sofredor não podia obter alívio a menos que estivesse ameaçado de morte. Não se podia encanar um osso fraturado, nem enfaixar uma entorse. Estes líderes religiosos judaicos invalidaram o verdadeiro objetivo do sábado, porque tornaram o povo escravo de tradições, em vez de o sábado servir aos homens para a honra de Deus. (Mt 15:3, 6; 23:2-4; Mr 2:27) Quando os discípulos de Jesus apanharam grãos e os esfregaram nas mãos para comer, eles evidentemente foram acusados por dois motivos, a saber, fazerem colheita e fazerem debulha no sábado. (Lu 6:1, 2) Os rabinos tinham um ditado: "Os pecados de todo aquele que observa estritamente todas as leis do sábado, embora ele seja adorador de ídolos, são perdoados."

Não Obrigatório para os Cristãos. Jesus, que era judeu sob a Lei, observava o sábado assim como a Palavra de Deus (não dos fariseus) mandava. Sabia que era lícito fazer coisas excelentes no sábado. (Mt 12:12) Todavia, as inspiradas escrituras cristãs declaram que "Cristo é o fim da Lei" (Ro 10:4), o que resulta em os cristãos estarem "exonerados da Lei". (Ro 7:6) Nem Jesus nem seus discípulos faziam uma distinção entre as leis chamadas morais e cerimoniais. Citavam outras partes da Lei, bem como os Dez Mandamentos, e consideravam toda a Lei de igual obrigação para os que estavam sob ela. (Mt 5:21-48; 22:37-40; Ro 13:8-10; Tg 2:10, 11) As Escrituras declaram especificamente que o sacrifício de Cristo "aboliu . . . a Lei de mandamentos, consistindo em decretos", e que Deus "apagou o documento manuscrito que era contra nós, que consistia em decretos . . . e Ele o tirou do caminho por pregá-lo na estaca de tortura". O que foi 'abolido', 'apagado' e 'tirado do caminho' era a inteira Lei mosaica. (Ef 2:13-15; Col 2:13, 14) Por conseguinte, o inteiro sistema de sábados, quer dias, quer anos, junto com o restante da Lei, foi terminado pelo sacrifício de Cristo Jesus. Isto explica por que os cristãos podem considerar "um dia como todos os outros", quer seja um sábado, quer qualquer outro dia, sem temerem ser julgados por outrem. (Ro 14:4-6; Col 2:16) Paulo fez a seguinte declaração a respeito daqueles que escrupulosamente observavam "dias, e meses, e épocas, e anos": "Temo por vós, que de algum modo eu tenha labutado em vão com respeito a vós." — Gál 4:10, 11.

Depois da morte de Jesus, seus apóstolos nunca ordenaram a guarda do sábado. O sábado não foi incluído como requisito cristão em Atos 15:28, 29, nem mais tarde. Tampouco instituíram eles um novo sábado, ou "dia do Senhor". Embora Jesus fosse ressuscitado no dia agora chamado domingo, em parte alguma indica a Bíblia que este dia da sua ressurreição devesse ser comemorado como um "novo" sábado, ou de outro modo. Alguns têm recorrido a 1 Coríntios 16:2 e Atos 20:7 como base para a observância do domingo como um sábado. No entanto, o primeiro texto apenas indica que Paulo instruiu os cristãos no sentido de que, no primeiro dia da semana, pusessem de lado certa quantia, nos seus lares, para os irmãos necessitados em Jerusalém. O dinheiro não devia ser entregue no seu lugar de reunião, mas devia ser guardado até a chegada de Paulo. Quanto ao último texto, era apenas lógico que Paulo se reunisse com os irmãos em Trôade no primeiro dia da semana, visto que partia logo no dia seguinte.

À base do precedente, torna-se evidente que a guarda literal de dias e anos sabáticos não era parte do cristianismo do primeiro século. Foi só em 321 EC que Constantino decretou que o domingo (em latim: dies Solis [dia do sol], antigo título associado com a astrologia e a adoração do sol, não Sabattum [sábado] ou dies Domini [dia do Senhor]) fosse o dia de descanso de todos, exceto os lavradores.

Entrada no Descanso de Deus. Segundo Gênesis 2:2, 3, depois do sexto dia ou período criativo, Deus "passou a repousar no sétimo dia", parando suas obras criativas com respeito à terra, conforme descritas no capítulo 1 de Gênesis.

O apóstolo Paulo mostra em Hebreus, capítulos 3 e 4, que os judeus, no ermo, deixaram de entrar no descanso, ou sábado, de Deus por sua desobediência e falta de fé. (He 3:18, 19; Sal 95:7-11; Núm 14:28-35) Aqueles que realmente entraram na Terra da Promessa, sob Josué, tiveram um descanso, mas não o pleno descanso a ser usufruído sob o Messias. Era apenas típico, uma sombra da realidade. (Jos 21:44; He 4:8; 10:1) No entanto, Paulo explica, "resta um descanso sabático para o povo de Deus". (He 4:9) Aqueles que são obedientes e exercem fé em Cristo usufruem assim "um descanso sabático" das suas "próprias obras", obras por meio das quais anteriormente procuravam mostrar-se justos. (Veja Ro 10:3.) Paulo mostra assim que o sábado, ou descanso, de Deus ainda continuava nos seus dias e que os cristãos entravam nele, indicando que o dia de descanso de Deus é de milhares de anos. — He 4:3, 6, 10.

"Senhor do Sábado." Enquanto na terra, Jesus Cristo chamou a si mesmo de "Senhor do sábado". (Mt 12:8) O sábado literal, que se destinava a aliviar os israelitas da sua labuta, era "sombra das coisas vindouras, mas a realidade pertence ao Cristo". (Col 2:16, 17) Relacionado com essas "coisas vindouras", há um sábado do qual Jesus há de ser o Senhor. Como Senhor dos senhores, Cristo governará toda a terra por mil anos. (Re 19:16; 20:6) Durante seu ministério terrestre, Jesus realizou algumas das suas mais notáveis obras milagrosas no sábado. (Lu 13:10-13; Jo 5:5-9; 9:1-14) Evidentemente, isto mostra que tipo de alívio ele trará ao soerguer a humanidade para a perfeição espiritual e física durante o seu vindouro Governo Milenar, o qual será assim como um período de descanso sabático para a terra e a humanidade. — Re 21:1-4.

SÁBADO, JORNADA DE UM. Veja JORNADA.

SABÁTICO, ANO. O sétimo em cada ciclo de sete anos; durante este ano, no antigo Israel, a terra ficava de pousio, sem ser cultivada, e os hebreus não pressionavam seus patrícios a pagarem as dívidas.

Contado a partir de 1473 AEC, ano em que Israel entrou na Terra da Promessa, o ano sabático devia ser celebrado "ao fim de cada sete anos", realmente, todo sétimo ano. (De 15:1, 2, 12; compare isso com De 14:28.) Evidentemente, o ano sabático começava com o toque de trombeta em 10 de etanim (tisri), o Dia da Expiação. Todavia, alguns sustentam que, embora o ano do jubileu começasse com o Dia da Expiação, o ano sabático começava em 1.º de tisri.

Não devia haver nenhum cultivo do solo, nem semeadura ou poda, nem qualquer colheita dos produtos, mas o que crescia por si mesmo era deixado no campo, à disposição para consumo pelo dono do campo, bem como por seus escravos, pelos trabalhadores contratados e pelos residentes forasteiros. Tratava-se duma provisão misericordiosa para os pobres, e, adicionalmente, para os animais domésticos e os animais selvagens, visto que estes também teriam acesso aos produtos da terra durante o ano sabático. — Le 25:1-7.

O ano sabático era chamado de "o ano da remissão [hash·shemit·táh]". (De 15:9; 31:10) Durante este ano, a terra usufruía um completo repouso, ou remissão, permanecendo sem cultivo. (Êx 23:11) Devia haver também um repouso, ou remissão, das dívidas contraídas. Era "uma remissão para Jeová", em honra dele. Embora outros considerem isso de forma diferente, alguns comentadores sustentam que as dívidas não eram realmente canceladas, mas, antes, que o credor não devia pressionar o patrício hebreu a pagar a dívida, porque naquele ano o lavrador não teria renda; no entanto, o credor podia pressionar o estrangeiro a pagar-lhe. (De 15:1-3) Alguns rabinos sustentam o conceito de que as dívidas de empréstimos de caridade, para ajudar um irmão pobre, eram canceladas, mas que as dívidas contraídas em negócios eram de categoria diferente. Eles dizem que, no primeiro século da Era Comum, Hillel instituiu um procedimento pelo qual o credor podia ir ao tribunal e garantir a dívida contra o cancelamento por fazer certa declaração. — The Pentateuch and Haftorahs (O Pentateuco e as Haftorás), editado por J. Hertz, Londres, 1972, pp. 811, 812.

Este ano de livramento, ou de não se ser pressionado para pagar dívidas, não se aplicava ao livramento de escravos, muitos dos quais estavam em escravidão por causa de dívidas. Antes, o escravo hebreu era libertado no sétimo ano da sua servidão, ou no jubileu, qualquer quer ocorresse primeiro. — De 15:12; Le 25:10, 54.

Exigia fé guardar os anos sabáticos como parte do pacto de Jeová com Israel, mas o pleno cumprimento do pacto resultava em grandes bênçãos. (Le 26:3-13) Deus prometera fornecer o suficiente na colheita do sexto ano para prover alimento para partes de três anos, desde o sexto ano até a colheita do oitavo. Visto que não se podia fazer semeadura no sétimo ano, só se podia fazer colheita no oitavo ano. (Veja Le 25:20-22.) Quando Israel entrou na Terra da Promessa, sob Josué, seis anos foram ocupados em subjugar as nações de Canaã e em alocar as heranças de terras. Naturalmente, durante este tempo, Israel não podia fazer muitas semeaduras, se é que podia, mas havia alimentos provenientes das safras dos cananeus. (De 6:10, 11) O sétimo ano era sabático, de modo que eles tinham de demonstrar fé e obediência por esperar até a colheita do oitavo ano, e, com a bênção de Deus, sobreviveram.

Em cada ano de remissão, durante a Festividade das Barracas, todo o povo devia reunir-se, homens e mulheres, pequeninos e residentes forasteiros, para ouvir a leitura da Lei. — De 31:10-13.

A terra teria usufruído 121 anos sabáticos, além de 17 anos de jubileu, antes do exílio, se Israel tivesse guardado corretamente a Lei. Mas os anos sabáticos foram guardados apenas em parte. Quando o povo foi ao exílio em Babilônia, a terra permaneceu desolada por 70 anos, "até que a terra tivesse saldado os seus sábados". (2Cr 36:20, 21; Le 26:34, 35, 43) Em parte alguma dizem as Escrituras que os judeus haviam deixado de guardar exatamente 70 anos sabáticos; mas, Jeová deixou que 70 anos de desolação obrigatória da terra compensassem todos os anos sabáticos que não haviam sido guardados.

SABEDORIA. O sentido bíblico de sabedoria dá ênfase ao bom critério, baseado em conhecimento e entendimento; a faculdade de usar o conhecimento e o entendimento com bom êxito para solucionar problemas, evitar ou prevenir perigos, atingir certos objetivos ou aconselhar outros neste sentido. Ela é o oposto da tolice, da estupidez e da estultícia, com que frequentemente é contrastada. — De 32:6; Pr 11:29; Ec 6:8.

Os termos básicos com o sentido de sabedoria são o hebraico hhokh·máh (verbo: hha·khám) e o grego so·fí·a, com suas formas aparentadas. Existe também a palavra hebraica tu·shi·yáh, que pode ser traduzida por "trabalho eficiente" ou "sabedoria prática", e as gregas fró·ni·mos e fró·ne·sis (de fren, a "mente"), relacionadas com "sensatez", "discrição" ou "sabedoria prática".

Sabedoria subentende assim uma amplitude de conhecimento e uma profundeza de entendimento, ou compreensão, que lhe dão o acerto e a clareza de critério característicos da sabedoria. O sábio 'entesoura conhecimento', possui uma reserva dele ao qual pode recorrer. (Pr 10:14) Ao passo que a "sabedoria é a coisa principal", o conselho é no sentido de que "com tudo o que adquirires, adquire compreensão". (Pr 4:5-7) O entendimento, ou compreensão (termos amplos que frequentemente abrangem o discernimento), dá força à sabedoria, contribuindo grandemente para a discrição e a previdência, que também são características notáveis da sabedoria. A discrição subentende prudência e pode expressar-se em cautela, autodomínio, moderação ou comedimento. O "homem discreto [forma de fró·ni·mos]" constrói sua casa sobre a rocha, prevendo a possibilidade de temporais; o homem tolo constrói a sua sobre areia e sofre desastre. — Mt 7:24-27.

O entendimento fortalece a sabedoria de outras maneiras. Por exemplo, alguém talvez obedeça a certa ordem de Deus por reconhecer a justeza de tal obediência, e isto é sabedoria da sua parte. Mas, se ele obtiver verdadeiro entendimento da razão dessa ordem, o seu bom objetivo e os benefícios decorrentes disso, reforça-se grandemente a determinação do seu coração, de prosseguir neste proceder sábio. (Pr 14:33) Provérbios 21:11 diz que, "por se dar perspicácia ao sábio, ele obtém conhecimento". O sábio se sente feliz de obter qualquer informação que lhe forneça uma visão mais clara das circunstâncias e condições subjacentes, e das causas de problemas. Assim ele "obtém conhecimento" sobre o que fazer na questão e sabe que conclusões tirar, o que é necessário para solucionar o problema existente. — Compare isso com Pr 9:9; Ec 7:25; 8:1; Ez 28:3; veja PERSPICÁCIA.

Sabedoria Divina. A sabedoria, em sentido absoluto, é encontrada em Jeová Deus, que é o "único sábio" neste sentido. (Ro 16:27; Re 7:12) O conhecimento é familiaridade com fatos, e, visto que Jeová é o Criador, que é "de tempo indefinido a tempo indefinido" (Sal 90:1, 2), ele sabe tudo o que há para saber a respeito do universo, sua composição e seu conteúdo, sua história até o presente. As leis, os ciclos e os padrões físicos em que os homens baseiam suas pesquisas e suas invenções, e sem os quais seriam incapazes e não teriam base estável em que edificar, são todos da Sua criação. (Jó 38:34-38; Sal 104:24; Pr 3:19; Je 10:12, 13) Logicamente, suas normas de moral são ainda mais vitais para a estabilidade, o bom critério e a vida humana bem-sucedida. (De 32:4-6; veja JEOVÁ [Deus de normas de moral].) Nada está além da sua compreensão. (Is 40:13, 14) Embora ele possa permitir que coisas contrárias às suas normas justas se desenvolvam ou até mesmo temporariamente prosperem, o futuro, em última análise, cabe a ele e se harmonizará com exatidão com a sua vontade, e as coisas faladas por ele 'terão êxito certo'. — Is 55:8-11; 46:9-11.

Por todos estes motivos, é evidente que "o temor de Jeová é o início da sabedoria". (Pr 9:10) "Quem não te temeria, ó Rei das nações, pois isto é próprio para contigo; porque entre todos os sábios das nações e entre todos os seus reinados, de modo algum há alguém igual a ti." (Je 10:7) "Ele é sábio de coração e forte em poder. Quem pode ser obstinado com ele e sair ileso?" (Jó 9:4; Pr 14:16) Com o seu poder, ele pode interferir à vontade nos assuntos humanos, manobrar governantes ou eliminá-los, mostrando que suas revelações proféticas são infalíveis. (Da 2:20-23) A história bíblica relata os esforços fúteis de poderosos reis com seus conselheiros astutos de confrontarem a sua sabedoria contra Deus, e ela salienta o modo em que Ele vindicou triunfantemente seus servos que lealmente proclamavam a sua mensagem. — Is 31:2; 44:25-28; compare isso com Jó 12:12, 13.

"A sabedoria de Deus em segredo sagrado." A rebelião que irrompeu no Éden apresentou um desafio para a sabedoria de Deus. Seus meios sábios para acabar com esta rebelião — eliminar seus efeitos e restabelecer a paz, a harmonia e a ordem correta na sua família universal — constituíram um "segredo sagrado, a sabedoria escondida, que Deus predeterminou antes dos sistemas de coisas", isto é, os sistemas que se haviam desenvolvido durante a história do homem fora do Éden. (1Co 2:7) Suas linhas gerais estavam contidas nos tratos de Deus com os seus servos fiéis, e suas promessas a eles, durante muitos séculos; foi prefigurado e simbolizado no pacto da Lei com Israel, inclusive o sacerdócio e os sacrifícios deste, e foi indicado em inúmeras profecias e visões.

Por fim, depois de mais de 4.000 anos, a sabedoria deste segredo sagrado foi revelada em Jesus Cristo (Col 1:26-28), por meio de quem Deus se propôs ter "uma administração no pleno limite dos tempos designados, a saber, ajuntar novamente todas as coisas no Cristo, as coisas nos céus e as coisas na terra". (Ef 1:8-11) Foram revelados a provisão do resgate para a salvação da humanidade obediente, feita por Deus, e seu propósito de ter o governo dum Reino, chefiado por seu Filho e capaz de acabar com toda a iniquidade. Visto que o grandioso propósito de Deus se alicerça e centraliza em seu Filho, Cristo Jesus "se tornou para nós [cristãos] sabedoria de Deus". (1Co 1:30) "Cuidadosamente ocultos nele se acham todos os tesouros da sabedoria e do conhecimento." (Col 2:3) Somente por meio dele e pela fé nele, o "Agente Principal da Vida" da parte de Deus, pode-se obter a salvação e a vida. (At 3:15; Jo 14:6; 2Ti 3:15) Portanto, não há sabedoria verdadeira em se desconsiderar a Jesus Cristo, em não basear o critério e as decisões solidamente no propósito de Deus conforme revelado nele. — Veja JESUS CRISTO (Seu Lugar Vital no Propósito de Deus).

Sabedoria Humana. A sabedoria é personalizada no livro de Provérbios, retratada ali como mulher que convida as pessoas a receberem o que ela tem para oferecer. Estes relatos e os textos relacionados mostram que a sabedoria deveras é um conjunto de muitas coisas: conhecimento, entendimento (que inclui discernimento), faculdade de raciocínio, experiência, diligência, argúcia (o contrário de credulidade e ingenuidade [Pr 14:15, 18]) e critério correto. Mas, visto que a verdadeira sabedoria começa com o temor de Jeová Deus (Sal 111:10; Pr 9:10), esta sabedoria superior vai além da sabedoria comum e inclui apegar-se a normas elevadas, manifestar justiça e retidão, bem como aderência à verdade. (Pr 1:2, 3, 20-22; 2:2-11; 6:6; 8:1, 5-12) Nem toda sabedoria está à altura desta sabedoria superior.

A sabedoria humana nunca é absoluta, mas é relativa. O homem consegue sabedoria em escala limitada pelos seus próprios esforços, embora de qualquer modo tenha de usar a inteligência de que Deus (que até mesmo deu aos animais uma sabedoria instintiva [Jó 35:11; Pr 30:24-28]) inicialmente dotou o homem. O homem aprende por observar os materiais criados por Deus, e por trabalhar com eles. Esta sabedoria pode variar em tipo e alcance. A palavra grega so·fí·a frequentemente é aplicada à perícia em certos ofícios ou artes, à habilidade e ao sólido critério administrativo nos campos governamental e comercial, ou ao amplo conhecimento de determinado campo da ciência ou pesquisa humana. De modo similar, as palavras hebraicas hhokh·máh e hha·khám são usadas para descrever a 'habilidade' de marinheiros ou calafates de navios (Ez 27:8, 9; compare isso com Sal 107:23, 27) e de trabalhadores em pedra e em madeira (1Cr 22:15), bem como a sabedoria e a perícia de outros artífices, dos quais alguns tinham muito talento em uma variedade de ofícios. (1Rs 7:14; 2Cr 2:7, 13, 14) Até mesmo os hábeis escultores de imagens ou fabricantes de ídolos são descritos por esses termos. (Is 40:20; Je 10:3-9) As práticas astutas do mundo comercial são uma forma de sabedoria. — Ez 28:4, 5.

Pode-se obter toda essa sabedoria sem se possuir a sabedoria espiritual advogada especialmente pelas Escrituras. No entanto, o espírito de Deus pode acentuar alguns destes tipos de sabedoria quando são úteis para a realização de Seu propósito. Seu espírito ativou os que construíram o tabernáculo e seu equipamento, bem como os que teceram as vestimentas sacerdotais, tanto homens como mulheres, enchendo-os de 'sabedoria e entendimento'. Assim eles não somente entenderam o que era desejado e os meios para realizar o trabalho, mas também demonstraram ter o talento, a arte, a visão e o critério necessários para projetar e produzir obras superlativas. — Êx 28:3; 31:3-6; 35:10, 25, 26, 31, 35; 36:1, 2, 4, 8.

Sábios da antiguidade. Homens famosos por sua sabedoria e seu conselho eram antigamente prezados por reis e por outros, assim como o são em tempos modernos. O Egito, a Pérsia, a Caldeia, o Edom e outras nações tinham seus corpos de "sábios". (Êx 7:11; Est 1:13; Je 10:7; 50:35; Ob 8) Esses corpos evidentemente incluíam os sacerdotes e funcionários governamentais, mas não se restringiam a tais; provavelmente incluíam todos aqueles 'anciãos' das nações especialmente conhecidos pela sua sabedoria e que moravam perto da capital, a fim de estarem disponíveis para dar conselho. (Veja Gên 41:8; Sal 105:17-22; Is 19:11, 12; Je 51:57.) Os monarcas da Pérsia tinham um conselho privativo de sete sábios para pronta consulta (Est 1:13-15), e oficiais persas inferiores talvez tivessem sua própria equipe de sábios. — Est 6:13.

José, com a ajuda do espírito de Deus, demonstrou ter tal discrição e sabedoria, que o Faraó do Egito fez dele seu primeiro-ministro. (Gên 41:38-41; At 7:9, 10) "Moisés [era] instruído em toda a sabedoria dos egípcios" e "era poderoso nas suas palavras e ações" mesmo já antes de Deus o constituir em seu porta-voz. Mas, esta sabedoria e habilidade humanas não qualificaram Moisés para o objetivo de Deus. Depois da sua primeira tentativa (à idade de cerca de 40 anos) de dar alívio aos seus irmãos israelitas, Moisés teve de esperar mais 40 anos antes de Deus enviá-lo, como homem espiritualmente sábio, a fim de conduzir Israel para fora do Egito. — At 7:22-36; veja De 34:9.

Salomão já era sábio antes de entrar no pleno reinado (1Rs 2:1, 6, 9), mas ele, em oração a Jeová, humildemente reconheceu que era "apenas um rapazinho" e procurou obter a ajuda de Deus para julgar o povo Dele. Foi recompensado com "um coração sábio e entendido" sem igual entre os reis de Judá. (1Rs 3:7-12) Sua sabedoria excedia a famosa sabedoria dos orientais e do Egito, tornando Jerusalém o lugar para o qual monarcas ou seus representantes viajavam para aprender do rei de Judá. (1Rs 4:29-34; 10:1-9, 23-25) Certas mulheres da antiguidade também eram notáveis pela sua sabedoria. — 2Sa 14:1-20; 20:16-22; compare isso com Jz 5:28, 29.

Nem sempre usada para o bem. A sabedoria humana pode ser usada para o bem ou para o mal. Neste último caso, ela definitivamente mostra ser apenas sabedoria carnal, não espiritual, não de Deus. Jonadabe era "um homem muito sábio", mas o seu conselho a Amnom, filho de Davi, baseava-se em esperta estratégia e manipulação de pessoas por meio de engano, causando um êxito duvidoso e consequências desastrosas. (2Sa 13:1-31) Absalão fez uma campanha astuta para destronar seu régio pai Davi (2Sa 14:28-33; 15:1-6), e, ao ocupar Jerusalém, pediu o conselho de dois dos conselheiros do seu pai, Aitofel e Husai, a respeito das medidas adicionais que ele poderia astutamente tomar. O conselho sábio de Aitofel era constantemente de tal exatidão, que parecia vir de Deus. No entanto, ele se tornara traidor do ungido de Deus, e Jeová fez com que o seu sábio plano de batalha fosse rejeitado em favor do plano do fiel Husai, que habilmente aproveitou a vaidade e as fraquezas humanas de Absalão para causar a sua queda. (2Sa 16:15-23; 17:1-14) Conforme Paulo escreveu a respeito de Deus: "'Ele apanha os sábios na sua própria astúcia.' E novamente: 'Jeová sabe que os raciocínios dos sábios são fúteis.'" — 1Co 3:19, 20; compare isso com Êx 1:9, 10, 20, 21; Lu 20:19-26.

Apóstatas sacerdotes, profetas e sábios da nação israelita com o tempo induziram o povo a se opor ao conselho e às ordens de Deus, conforme expressos pelos Seus servos leais. (Je 18:18) Em resultado disso, Jeová fez 'perecer a sabedoria dos seus sábios e se esconder a própria compreensão dos seus homens discretos' (Is 29:13, 14; Je 8:8, 9), causando a ruína do reino de 500 anos (assim como ele fez mais tarde com o orgulhoso destruidor de Jerusalém, Babilônia, e com a jactanciosa dinastia de Tiro). (Is 47:10-15; Ez 28:2-17) Rejeitaram a sabedoria espiritual em favor da sabedoria carnal.

A vaidade de grande parte da sabedoria humana. O Rei Salomão, ao investigar "a ocupação calamitosa" que o pecado e a imperfeição causaram à humanidade, pesou o valor da sabedoria em geral desenvolvida e alcançada pelos homens, e achou que ela é "um esforço para alcançar o vento". A desordem, a perversão e as deficiências existentes na imperfeita sociedade humana estão tanto além da capacidade humana de endireitá-las ou compensá-las, que aqueles que têm "abundância de sabedoria" sentem-se cada vez mais frustrados e irritados, porque estão vivamente cônscios de quão pouco podem fazer pessoalmente para melhorar a situação. — Ec 1:13-18; 7:29; veja Ro 8:19-22, onde o apóstolo mostra a provisão de Deus para acabar com a escravização da humanidade à corrupção e com a sujeição à futilidade.

Salomão verificou também que, embora tal sabedoria humana produzisse diversos prazeres e a proficiência que resultava em riqueza material, não podia trazer verdadeira felicidade ou duradoura satisfação. O sábio morre assim como o estúpido, sem saber o que acontecerá com os seus bens, e sua sabedoria humana cessa na sepultura. (Ec 2:3-11, 16, 18-21; 4:4; 9:10; compare isso com Sal 49:10.) Mesmo na vida, "o tempo e o imprevisto" podem causar uma repentina calamidade, deixando o sábio até mesmo sem as necessidades básicas tais como o alimento. (Ec 9:11, 12) O homem, com a sua própria sabedoria, nunca poderia descobrir "o trabalho do verdadeiro Deus", nunca poderia obter um sólido conhecimento de como solucionar os maiores problemas do homem. — Ec 8:16, 17; veja o cap. 28 de Jó.

Salomão não diz que a sabedoria humana não tem valor algum. Comparada com a mera estultícia, que ele também investigou, a vantagem da sabedoria sobre a estultícia é como a da 'luz sobre a escuridão'. Porque o sábio "tem os olhos na cabeça", servindo as suas faculdades intelectuais, ao passo que os olhos do estúpido não enxergam com discernimento refletido. (Ec 2:12-14; compare isso com Pr 17:24; Mt 6:22, 23.) A sabedoria é uma proteção de valor maior do que o dinheiro. (Ec 7:11, 12) Mas, Salomão mostrou que seu valor é de todo relativo, dependendo inteiramente da sua conformidade com a sabedoria e o propósito de Deus. (Ec 2:24; 3:11-15, 17; 8:12, 13; 9:1) Alguém talvez se empenhe excessivamente em demonstrar sabedoria, esforçando-se além dos limites da sua capacidade imperfeita, num proceder autodestrutivo. (Ec 7:16; compare isso com 12:12.) Mas, por servir obedientemente ao seu Criador e se contentar com alimento, bebida e o bom que seu trabalho árduo lhe pode proporcionar, Deus lhe dará a necessária “sabedoria, e conhecimento, e alegria”. — Ec 2:24-26; 12:13.

Contrastada com o segredo sagrado de Deus. O mundo da humanidade, no decorrer dos séculos, tem desenvolvido um acervo de sabedoria — grande parte ensinada nas escolas e por outros meios de instrução, ao passo que parte dela é adquirida pelas pessoas por sua associação com outros ou por experiência. O cristão tem necessidade de saber qual a atitude correta a adotar para com tal sabedoria. Jesus, numa ilustração dum mordomo injusto que manipulou as contas do seu amo com certos devedores para se garantir um futuro seguro, descreveu o mordomo como ‘agindo com sabedoria prática [fro·ní·mos, “discretamente”]’. Esta previsão arguciosa, porém, era a sabedoria prática dos “filhos deste sistema de coisas”, não a dos “filhos da luz”. (Lu 16:1-8, Int) Anteriormente, Jesus louvara seu Pai celestial por esconder certas verdades “dos sábios e dos intelectuais”, ao passo que as revelava aos seus discípulos, os quais, em comparação, eram como “pequeninos”. (Lu 10:21-24) Os escribas e os fariseus, educados em escolas rabínicas, estavam entre tais sábios e intelectuais. — Veja Mt 13:54-57; Jo 7:15.

Naquele primeiro século, os gregos eram especialmente famosos por sua cultura e seu conhecimento acumulado, suas escolas e seus grupos filosóficos. Foi provavelmente por este motivo que Paulo equiparou ‘gregos e bárbaros’ com ‘sábios e insensatos’. (Ro 1:14) Paulo enfatizou fortemente para os cristãos em Corinto, na Grécia, que o cristianismo não depende da “sabedoria [so·fí·an] do mundo”, isto é, do mundo da humanidade alienada de Deus, nem é caracterizado por ela. (1Co 1:20; veja MUNDO [O mundo alienado de Deus].) Não é o caso de não haver nada de útil ou proveitoso entre os aspectos múltiplos da sabedoria do mundo, porque Paulo às vezes recorria à habilidade aprendida de fabricar tendas e também citava ocasionalmente obras literárias de autores do mundo para ilustrar certos pontos de verdade. (At 18:2, 3; 17:28, 29; Tit 1:12) Mas as perspectivas, os métodos, as normas e os objetivos gerais do mundo — sua filosofia — não estavam em harmonia com a verdade, mas eram contrários à “sabedoria de Deus em segredo sagrado”.

De modo que o mundo, na sua sabedoria, rejeitou como tolice a provisão de Deus por meio de Cristo; seus governantes, embora talvez fossem administradores hábeis e judiciosos, até mesmo tinham “pregado o glorioso Senhor numa estaca”. (1Co 1:18; 2:7, 8) Mas Deus, por sua vez, provava que então a sabedoria dos sábios do mundo era tolice, envergonhando os sábios deles por usar o que eles consideravam ser “uma coisa tola de Deus”, bem como pessoas que eles achavam ‘tolas, fracas e ignóbeis’, para realizar Seu invencível propósito. (1Co 1:19-28) Paulo lembrou aos cristãos coríntios que “a sabedoria deste sistema de coisas, [e] a dos governantes deste sistema de coisas” ficariam reduzidas a nada; portanto, esta sabedoria não fazia parte da mensagem espiritual do apóstolo. (1Co 2:6, 13) Ele avisou os cristãos em Colossos para não serem enlaçados pela ‘filosofia [fi·lo·so·fí·as, literalmente: amor à sabedoria] e pelo vão engano, segundo a tradição de homens’. — Col 2:8; veja os vv 20-23.

Apesar dos benefícios e êxitos temporários da sabedoria do mundo, esta estava condenada ao fracasso. Mas a congregação cristã dos ungidos de Deus tinha sabedoria espiritual que levava às “riquezas insondáveis do Cristo”. Visto que esta congregação constituía parte do segredo sagrado de Deus, por seus tratos com ela e seus propósitos cumpridos nela, ele dava a conhecer ou revelava “a grandemente diversificada sabedoria de Deus” por meio da congregação, mesmo “aos governos e às autoridades nos lugares celestiais”. (Ef 3:8-11; 1:17, 18; compare isso com 1Pe 1:12.) Os membros dela, possuindo “a mente de Cristo” (veja Fil 2:5-8), tinham conhecimento e entendimento muitíssimo superiores aos do mundo, podendo assim falar, “não com palavras ensinadas pela sabedoria humana, mas com as ensinadas pelo espírito”, com “uma boca e sabedoria” que os opositores não podiam refutar, embora tais cristãos talvez fossem menosprezados como “indoutos e comuns” segundo normas do mundo. — 1Co 2:11-16; Lu 21:15; At 4:13; 6:9, 10.

Travar a guerra espiritual. O apóstolo Paulo estribava-se na sabedoria piedosa ao travar a guerra espiritual contra aqueles que ameaçavam perverter as congregações cristãs, tais como a de Corinto. (1Co 5:6, 7, 13; 2Co 10:3-6; compare isso com 2Co 6:7.) Ele sabia que “a sabedoria é melhor do que os apetrechos para a peleja, e um único pecador pode destruir a muito bem”. (Ec 9:18; 7:19) Referir-se ele a “demolir as coisas fortemente entrincheiradas” (2Co 10:4) corresponde em ideia com a maneira de a Septuaginta grega verter Provérbios 21:22. Paulo conhecia a tendência humana de dar atenção primária àqueles que têm maneiras impressionantes, talentos óbvios, ou uma forte personalidade e modo de falar; sabia que ‘as palavras tranquilas dum sábio de poucos meios’ são muitas vezes desconsideradas em favor das daqueles que se dão maior aparência de poder. (Veja Ec 9:13-17.) Até mesmo Jesus, que não possuía as riquezas e a posição terrenas de Salomão, mas que tinha uma sabedoria enormemente superior, recebia pouco respeito e atenção dos governantes e do povo. — Veja Mt 12:42; 13:54-58; Is 52:13-15; 53:1-3.

Para alguns dos que se jactavam de habilidades carnais (contraste isso com Je 9:23, 24), mas não do coração, a aparência pessoal de Paulo era encarada como "fraca e a sua palavra, desprezível". (2Co 5:12; 10:10) Ainda assim, ele evitava linguagem extravagante ou a ostentação de sabedoria humana e o poder de persuasão desta, a fim de que a fé dos seus ouvintes fosse edificada por meio do espírito e do poder de Deus, e alicerçada em Cristo, em vez de na "sabedoria de homens". (1Co 1:17; 2:1-5; 2Co 5:12) Com previsão espiritual, Paulo era "diretor sábio de obras", não duma construção material, mas sim espiritual, colaborando com Deus para produzir discípulos que manifestassem verdadeiras qualidades cristãs. — 1Co 3:9-16.

Portanto, não importa quanta sabedoria mundana alguém tenha, em virtude de perícia em ofícios, argúcia no comércio, habilidades administrativas, ou erudição científica ou filosófica, a regra é: "Se alguém entre vós pensa que é sábio neste sistema de coisas, torne-se ele tolo, para que se torne sábio." (1Co 3:18) Deve orgulhar-se apenas 'de ter perspicácia e de ter conhecimento de Jeová, Aquele que usa de benevolência, de juízo e de justiça na terra', porque é disso que Jeová se agrada. — Je 9:23, 24; 1Co 1:31; 3:19-23.

Administração sábia. Conforme declara a sabedoria personificada: "Tenho conselho e sabedoria prática. Eu — compreensão; tenho potência. Por mim é que reinam os próprios reis e os próprios dignitários continuam a decretar justiça. Por mim é que os próprios príncipes governam como príncipes e todos os nobres estão julgando em justiça. Eu mesma amo os que me amam, e os que estão à minha procura são os que me acham." (Pr 8:12, 14-17) O Rei messiânico demonstra ter tal sabedoria superior da parte de Deus. (Is 11:1-5; compare isso com Re 5:12.) Esta ultrapassa a capacidade que homens talvez tenham ou desenvolvam naturalmente, tornando a pessoa sábia nos princípios da lei de Deus, e, com a ajuda do Seu espírito, habilita-a a fazer decisões judiciais corretas e livres de parcialidade. (Esd 7:25; 1Rs 3:28; Pr 24:23; veja De 16:18, 19; Tg 2:1-9.) Tal sabedoria não é apática para com a iniquidade, mas guerreia contra ela. — Pr 20:26.

Homens escolhidos para cargos de responsabilidade na congregação cristã não se qualificavam à base de sucesso no mundo, de sabedoria carnal ou de habilidades naturais, mas por estarem "cheios de espírito e de sabedoria" piedosa. (At 6:1-5; veja 1Ti 3:1-13; Tit 1:5-9.) Havia tais entre os "profetas, e sábios, e instrutores públicos" que Jesus prometera enviar, e eles podiam também servir quais juízes e conselheiros na congregação, assim como o Israel carnal tivera seus sábios, que serviram de modo similar. (Mt 23:34; 1Co 6:5) Reconheciam o valor de se consultarem mutuamente. — Pr 13:10; 24:5, 6; veja At 15:1-22.

Adquirir Verdadeira Sabedoria. O provérbio aconselha: "Compra a própria verdade e não a vendas — sabedoria, e disciplina, e compreensão." (Pr 23:23) Jeová, a Fonte da verdadeira sabedoria, concede-a generosamente aos que sinceramente a buscam e a pedem em fé, mostrando ter temor sadio e reverente dele. (Pr 2:1-7; Tg 1:5-8) Mas, quem a busca tem de gastar tempo no estudo da Palavra de Deus; tem de aprender as Suas ordens, leis, advertências e conselhos; tem de considerar a história dos atos e das realizações de Deus; daí, tem de aplicá-los na sua vida. (De 4:5, 6; Sal 19:7; 107:43; 119:98-101; Pr 10:8; veja 2Ti 3:15-17.) Ele compra sabiamente o tempo oportuno, não agindo de modo desarrazoado numa época iníqua, mas "percebendo qual é a vontade de Jeová". (Ef 5:15-20; Col 4:5, 6) Tem de desenvolver firme fé e inabalável convicção de que o poder de Deus é invencível, que Sua vontade terá êxito certo, e que Sua capacidade e promessa de recompensar a fidelidade são seguras. — He 11:1, 6; 1Co 15:13, 14, 19.

Só assim pode a pessoa tomar decisões certas sobre seu proceder na vida e não ser influenciada por medo, ganância, desejo imoral e outras emoções prejudiciais. (Pr 2:6-16; 3:21-26; Is 33:2, 6) Conforme diz a sabedoria personificada: "Feliz o homem que me está escutando por ficar alerta às minhas portas dia a dia, vigiando junto às ombreiras das minhas entradas. Pois, quem me achar, há de achar a vida, e ele obterá boa vontade da parte de Jeová. Mas aquele que não acerta comigo faz violência à sua alma; todos os que me odeiam intensamente são os que amam a morte." — Pr 8:34-36; 13:14; 24:13, 14.

Sabedoria e o coração. A inteligência, obviamente, é um fator principal na sabedoria, todavia o coração, que não se relaciona apenas com o raciocínio, mas também com a motivação e o afeto, claramente é o fator mais importante para se obter verdadeira sabedoria. (Sal 49:3, 4; Pr 14:33; veja CORAÇÃO.) O servo de Deus deseja obter "pura sabedoria" no seu "segredo do íntimo", ter motivação sábia no planejamento do seu proceder na vida. (Veja Sal 51:6, 10; 90:12.) "O coração do sábio está à sua direita [isto é, pronto para ajudá-lo e protegê-lo nos momentos críticos (veja Sal 16:8; 109:31)], mas o coração do estúpido está à sua esquerda [não o orientando no proceder sábio]." (Ec 10:2, 3; compare isso com Pr 17:16; Ro 1:21, 22.) O verdadeiramente sábio treinou e disciplinou seu coração no caminho da sabedoria (Pr 23:15, 16, 19; 28:26); é como se tivesse escrito mandamentos e leis justas 'na tábua do seu coração'. — Pr 7:1-3; 2:2, 10.

Experiência e associações corretas. A experiência contribui grandemente para a sabedoria. Até mesmo Jesus aumentou em sabedoria durante a infância. (Lu 2:52) Moisés designou como maiorais os homens que eram "sábios, e discretos, e experientes". (De 1:13-15) Embora certa medida de sabedoria seja aprendida por se sofrer punição ou por se observar outros recebê-la (Pr 21:11), um modo superior e que poupa tempo para se obter sabedoria é aproveitar e aprender da experiência dos que já são sábios, preferindo a companhia deles à dos "inexperientes". (Pr 9:1-6; 13:20; 22:17, 18; compare isso com 2Cr 9:7.) É mais provável que os mais idosos tenham tal sabedoria, especialmente os que evidenciam ter o espírito de Deus. (Jó 32:7-9) Isto foi notavelmente ilustrado na época do reinado de Roboão. (1Rs 12:5-16) Todavia, "melhor é o filho necessitado, mas [relativamente] sábio, do que um rei velho, mas estúpido, que não veio saber o bastante para ser ainda avisado." — Ec 4:13-15.

Os portões da cidade (que muitas vezes tinham praças públicas adjacentes) eram lugares onde os anciãos davam sábios conselhos e decisões judiciais. (Veja Pr 1:20, 21; 8:1-3.) Usualmente não se ouvia a voz de tolos neste ambiente (quer pedindo sabedoria, quer oferecendo-a), visto que parolavam em outros lugares. (Pr 24:7) Mesmo que a associação com os sábios resulte em disciplina e em ocasional repreensão, é muito melhor do que o canto e o riso dos estúpidos. (Ec 7:5, 6) Quem se isola, seguindo seu próprio estreito conceito sobre a vida e seus próprios desejos egoístas, por fim sai numa tangente, contrário a toda a sabedoria prática. — Pr 18:1.

Revelada na conduta e conversa da pessoa. Provérbios 11:2 declara que "a sabedoria está com os modestos"; Tiago fala da "brandura que pertence à sabedoria". (Tg 3:13) Se a pessoa tiver ciúme, contenda, jactância ou obstinação, isso indica que lhe falta verdadeira sabedoria e que ela se guia mais pela sabedoria "terrena, animalesca, demoníaca". A verdadeira sabedoria é "pacífica, razoável, pronta para obedecer". (Tg 3:13-18) "A verga da altivez está na boca do tolo, mas os próprios lábios dos sábios os guardarão." Eles se refreiam sabiamente de conversa presunçosa, dura ou irrefletida. (Pr 14:3; 17:27, 28; Ec 10:12-14) Da língua e dos lábios do sábio procedem palavras bem pensadas, curativas, agradáveis e proveitosas (Pr 12:18; 16:21; Ec 12:9-11; Col 3:15, 16), e em vez de criar dificuldades, procuram proporcionar tranquilidade e 'ganhar almas' por meio de sábia persuasão. — Pr 11:30; 15:1-7; 16:21-23; 29:8.

Os que se tornam 'sábios aos seus próprios olhos', elevando-se acima dos outros (até mesmo acima de Deus), são piores do que aquele que é estúpido, mas não finge ser outra coisa. (Pr 26:5, 12; 12:15) Tais presunçosos são orgulhosos demais para aceitar correção. (Pr 3:7; 15:12; Is 5:20, 21) Paradoxalmente, tanto o preguiçoso como o homem que obtém riquezas tendem para esta atitude. (Pr 26:16; 28:11; compare isso com 1Ti 6:17.) Mas "arrecada de ouro e ornamento de ouro especial é o sábio repreendedor sobre o ouvido atento" (Pr 25:12); sim, "dá repreensão ao sábio e ele te amará". — Pr 9:8; 15:31-33.

Sabedoria na família. A sabedoria edifica uma casa, não meramente o prédio, mas a família e sua vida bem-sucedida como unidade. (Pr 24:3, 4; compare isso com Pr 3:19, 20; Sal 104:5-24.) Os pais sábios não refreiam a vara e a repreensão, mas, por meio de disciplina e conselho, protegem os filhos da delinquência. (Pr 29:15) A esposa sábia contribui muito para o bom êxito e a felicidade da família. (Pr 14:1; 31:26) Os filhos que se sujeitam sabiamente à disciplina parental dão alegria e honra à família, defendendo a reputação contra calúnias e acusações, e dão aos outros prova da sabedoria do pai e do treinamento que deu. — Pr 10:1; 13:1; 15:20; 23:24, 25; 27:11.

SABETAI [[Nascido no] Sábado]. Levita pós-exílico. O texto de Esdras 10:15 reza: "No entanto, o próprio Jonatã, filho de Asael, e Jazeías, filho de Ticvá, levantaram-se contra isso, e Mesulão e Sabetai, os levitas, foram os que os ajudaram." Este versículo pode ser entendido como significando que Sabetai ajudou os que se opunham à proposta de Esdras, de que os que tinham tomado esposa estrangeira a despedissem. Ou poderia significar que se juntou à oposição ao procedimento recomendado pela congregação para resolver o assunto. Outro possível entendimento indicaria que ajudou os que agiram de forma representativa pelo povo para lidar com a situação. Este último ponto de vista talvez encontre apoio se o Sabetai mencionado aqui for o mesmo mencionado em Neemias 8:5-7; 11:1, 2, 15, 16, como ajudando Esdras na leitura pública da Lei e morando em Jerusalém depois da reconstrução da muralha.

SABEUS.

1. Designação de um bando de incursores que atacou a propriedade de Jó na terra de Uz. Esses sabeus levaram embora o gado bovino e as jumentas de Jó, e mataram seus ajudantes. (Jó 1:14, 15)

Jó menciona também "a companhia viajante de sabeus", em Jó 6:19.

É difícil identificar esses sabeus com certeza, visto que podem ter sido descendentes de diversos homens chamados Sabá, ou Sebá. Jocsã, filho de Abraão, tinha um filho chamado Sabá (Gên 25:1-3), e a possibilidade de os incursores sabeus serem desta linhagem não pode ser descartada. Todavia, é mais comum os peritos sugerirem que os sabeus procederam de Sebá, que descendeu de Cã através de Cus (Gên 10:6, 7), ou de Sabá, filho de Joctã, da linhagem de Sem. — Gên 10:21-29.

2. Povo alto, relacionado em Isaías 45:14 com os labutadores do Egito e os mercadores da Etiópia, como aqueles que reconheceriam a Jeová e seu povo. Isaías 43:3 também os associa com o Egito e a Etiópia, mas, em vez de "sabeus" usa "Sebá", indicando que os homens de Sebá eram chamados de sabeus. — Veja SEBÁ N.º 2.

3. Descendentes de Sabá (se da linhagem de Sem ou da linhagem de Cã é incerto) que evidentemente constituíram um reino perto da ponta da península Arábica. É provável que a rainha de Sabá, que visitou Salomão, fosse desta terra. (1Rs 10:1) Fontes seculares frequentemente se referem a este reino como sabeu, e a Bíblia talvez também o faça. — Veja SABÁ N.º 4.

Certas traduções rezam "sabeus" em Ezequiel 23:42 (KJ, Yg, Da), interpretando assim a versão marginal da Bíblia hebraica. Todavia, o texto principal reza "beberrões", ou "bêbados", e é assim que traduções modernas frequentemente vertem este versículo. — Al, ALA, BJ, CBC, IBB, NM.

SABIÁ. Veja BULBUL.

SABTÁ. Filho de Cus e irmão de Ninrode; progenitor de uma das 70 famílias pós-diluvianas. (Gên 10:7, 8, 32; 1Cr 1:9, 10) Os descendentes de Sabtá parecem ter-se estabelecido na Arábia meridional, talvez num dos lugares que mais tarde levou um nome similar ao seu. Sugeriu-se Sabota, antiga capital de Hadramaute, e Ptolomeu menciona uma cidade chamada Saptha, perto do golfo Pérsico, mas qualquer ligação destes lugares com Sabtá continua incerta.

SABTECA. Quinto filho mencionado de Cus e pai de uma das 70 famílias pós-diluvianas. (Gên 10:7, 32; 1Cr 1:9) É provável que seus descendentes se tenham estabelecido na Arábia meridional ou talvez na Etiópia, desconhecendo-se seu lugar exato.

SACA. As sacas da antiguidade, feitas de diversos tipos de peles, panos e materiais tecidos, eram usadas para conter cereais e alimentos, pesos de pedra, objetos de valor, peças de ouro e de prata, e, em períodos posteriores, moedas cunhadas. Sacas usadas como odres para água e para vinho usualmente eram de pele curtida de animal. — Jos 9:4; Mt 9:17.

A palavra "saco" deriva da hebraica saq, e, embora usada na Bíblia primariamente com referência à serapilheira (Le 11:32), esta palavra hebraica é também usada assim como hoje, para se referir a recipientes para alimentos e cereais. (Gên 42:25, 27, 35) A palavra hebraica 'am·tá·hhath ("saca", NM; "saco", Al; derivada dum verbo que significa "esticar" [Is 40:22]), é usada no relato referente à visita dos irmãos de José ao Egito e parece ser mais ou menos sinônima de saq, talvez descrevendo mais o formato do que o material de que era feita. — Gên 42:27, 28; 43:18-23.

Quando Davi se preparou para o seu encontro com Golias, ele colocou cinco pedras na sua "sacola" de pastor (hebr.: kelí), que sugere ter sido uma espécie de bornal carregado ao ombro e usualmente feito de pele não tratada de animal. (1Sa 17:40, 49) A palavra hebraica usada aqui tem sentido muito generalizado e com mais frequência se refere simplesmente a um receptáculo, a um vaso ou a um utensílio de argila, madeira, metal ou pele. — Le 6:28; 11:32, 33; Núm 31:20; 1Rs 10:21.

O oficial do exército sírio, Naamã, deu ao ganancioso Geazi "dois talentos de prata em duas bolsas [hebr.: hhari·tím], com duas mudas de roupa, e deu-os a dois ajudantes seus para que os carregassem". Visto que um talento equivalia a uns 34 kg, é evidente que tal recipiente (hha·rít) deve ter sido de tamanho e força suficientes para conter um talento, além de uma muda de roupa, e, portanto, quando cheio, era tanto quanto um homem podia carregar. (2Rs 5:23) Todavia, a mesma palavra é também usada com referência a "bolsas" menores, usadas como artigos de adorno luxuoso pelas soberbas filhas de Sião. — Is 3:16, 22.

Havia também a bolsa (hebr.: kis) carregada pelos mercadores, sem dúvida bem semelhante à que continuava a ser usada em países orientais até tempos recentes. A julgar por estes últimos tipos, era provavelmente de algodão tecido, de caniços flexíveis ou de couro. Essas bolsas eram usadas por comerciantes, ou mercadores, para carregar os pesos necessários nas transações comerciais em que se precisavam pesar produtos, cereais ou metais preciosos. Referindo-se ao kis, declarou-se na Lei mosaica um aviso contra práticas comerciais fraudulentas: "Não deves vir a ter na tua bolsa dois tipos de pesos." (De 25:13) Jeová perguntou por intermédio do seu profeta: "Acaso posso ser moralmente puro com balança iníqua e com uma bolsa de enganosos pesos de pedra?" (Miq 6:11; Pr 16:11) O kis podia ser usado também como "bolsa" para carregar dinheiro ou objetos de valor. — Pr 1:13, 14; Is 46:6.

A palavra hebraica tseróhr deriva dum verbo que significa "embrulhar" (Êx 12:34) e descreve uma forma comum de recipiente amarrado com uma corda ou cordão, quer como "trouxinha" (Gên 42:35), quer como "bolsa" cuja boca é fechada e amarrada. (Pr 7:20; Cân 1:13) Parece que o dinheiro recebido do cofre das contribuições do templo era amarrado em trouxas assim, sem dúvida com quantias uniformes. (2Rs 12:10) Nos tempos antigos, em transações comerciais que envolviam grandes somas de dinheiro, as peças dele eram às vezes pesadas e então colocadas em tais trouxas ou sacas, lacrando-se depois o nó. Conforme desejado, a saca podia então ser passada de uma pessoa para outra com a garantia de conter a quantia estipulada. O lacre inviolado garantia assim a quantia de prata, ouro ou outro metal que ela continha. Parece que Jó usou isso como figura de linguagem em Jó 14:17, dizendo a Deus: "Minha revolta está selada numa bolsa, e passas cola sobre o meu erro." Abigail expressou confiança na proteção de Davi por Jeová, declarando que, quando um inimigo perseguisse Davi, a alma dele 'mostraria estar embrulhada na bolsa da vida junto a Jeová, seu Deus'. — 1Sa 25:29.

Nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs faz-se referência ao "alforje" (NM) ou "sacola" (BLH, MH, NTP). (Mt 10:10; Lu 9:3) A palavra grega pé·ra é descrita em Vine's Expository Dictionary of Old and New Testament Words (Dicionário Expositivo de Palavras do Velho e do Novo Testamento, de Vine; 1981, Vol. 4, p. 196) como "saca ou bolsa de couro, de viajante, para levar provisões". — Veja ALFORJE.

Em João 12:6; 13:29, na versão Almeida, fala-se de Judas como levando uma "bolsa"; no entanto, muitas traduções modernas vertem a palavra grega glos·só·ko·mon como "caixa" ou "caixa de dinheiro". Usada originalmente para se referir à caixinha em que se guardava o bocal dum instrumento de sopro, a palavra grega passou a referir-se a uma caixinha usada para qualquer fim, inclusive para guardar dinheiro. Os tradutores da Septuaginta grega usaram esta palavra para se referir ao cofre mencionado em 2 Crônicas 24:8, 10. Quanto a "bolsa" (Lu 10:4) ou "bolsos do cinto" (Mt 10:9), veja BOLSA.

SACAR [Salário].

1. Pai hararita de Aião, guerreiro de Davi. (1Cr 11:26, 35) Sacar é chamado de Sarar em 2 Samuel 23:33.

2. Quarto filho de Obede-Edom e um dos porteiros durante o reinado de Davi. — 1Cr 26:1, 4.

SACERDOTE. Entre os verdadeiros adoradores de Jeová, antes da formação da congregação cristã, os sacerdotes representavam oficialmente a Deus perante o povo que serviam, instruindo este a respeito de Deus e suas leis. Em contrapartida, representavam o povo perante Deus, oferecendo sacrifícios, bem como intercedendo e rogando pelo povo. Hebreus 5:1 explica: "Todo sumo sacerdote tomado dentre os homens é designado a favor dos homens sobre as coisas referentes a Deus, a fim de oferecer dádivas e sacrifícios pelos pecados." O termo hebraico traduzido por "sacerdote" é ko·hén; o grego, hie·e·reús.

Nos Tempos Primitivos. Nos tempos patriarcais, o cabeça da família servia como sacerdote para ela, passando este dever para o filho primogênito no caso da morte do pai. Assim, nos tempos bem primitivos, verificamos que Noé representava sua família na qualidade de sacerdote. (Gên 8:20, 21) O cabeça de família Abraão tinha uma casa numerosa com que viajava de lugar em lugar, construindo altares e oferecendo sacrifícios a Jeová nos diversos acampamentos. (Gên 14:14; 12:7, 8; 13:4) Deus disse a respeito de Abraão: "Fui familiarizar-me com ele, para que ordenasse aos seus filhos e aos da sua casa depois dele que guardassem o caminho de Jeová para fazer a justiça e o juízo." (Gên 18:19) Isaque e Jacó seguiram o mesmo padrão (Gên 26:25; 31:54; 35:1-7, 14), e Jó, que não era israelita, mas provavelmente era parente distante de Abraão, oferecia regularmente sacrifícios a Jeová a favor dos seus filhos, dizendo: "Meus filhos talvez tenham pecado e amaldiçoado a Deus no seu coração." (Jó 1:4, 5; veja também 42:8.) Todavia, a Bíblia não chama estes homens especificamente de ko·hén ou de hi·e·reús. Por outro lado, Jetro, cabeça de família e sogro de Moisés, é chamado de "sacerdote [ko·hén] de Midiã". — Êx 2:16; 3:1; 18:1.

Melquisedeque, rei de Salém, era sacerdote (ko·hén) extraordinário. A Bíblia não fornece nenhum registro dos seus antepassados, do seu nascimento ou da sua morte. Seu sacerdócio não era por herança, e ele não teve predecessores nem sucessores neste cargo. Melquisedeque ocupava tanto o cargo de rei como de sacerdote. Seu sacerdócio era maior do que o sacerdócio levítico, porque Levi, na realidade, pagou dízimos a Melquisedeque, visto que ainda estava nos lombos de Abraão quando este ofereceu dízimos a Melquisedeque e foi abençoado por ele. (Gên 14:18-20; He 7:4-10) Neste respeito, Melquisedeque prefigurava Jesus Cristo, o "sacerdote para sempre à maneira de Melquisedeque". — He 7:17.

Evidentemente, os cabeças de família agiam como sacerdotes entre os descendentes de Jacó

(Israel) até que Deus estabeleceu o sacerdócio levítico. Por isso, quando Deus conduziu o povo ao monte Sinai, ele ordenou: "Santifiquem-se também os sacerdotes que regularmente se aproximam de Jeová, para que Jeová não irrompa sobre eles." (Êx 19:22) Isto foi antes de se estabelecer o sacerdócio levítico. Mas permitiu-se que Arão, embora ainda não designado sacerdote, subisse ao monte parte do caminho com Moisés. Esta situação harmoniza-se com a posterior designação de Arão e da sua descendência como sacerdotes. (Êx 19:24) Visto em retrospectiva, esta era uma indicação inicial de que Deus pensava em substituir o arranjo antigo (de o cabeça da família ser sacerdote) por um sacerdócio da casa de Arão.

Sob o Pacto da Lei. Quando os israelitas estavam em escravidão no Egito, Jeová santificou para si todos os primogênitos do sexo masculino de Israel na ocasião em que destruiu os primogênitos do Egito na décima praga. (Êx 12:29; Núm 3:13) Concordemente, estes primogênitos pertenciam a Jeová, para serem usados exclusivamente num serviço especial dele. Deus poderia ter designado todos os varões primogênitos de Israel como sacerdotes e guardiães do santuário. Em vez disso, era do seu propósito tomar todos os varões da tribo de Levi para este serviço. Por isso, ele permitiu que os varões levitas substituíssem os primogênitos das outras 12 tribos (contando-se os descendentes dos filhos de José, a saber, Efraim e Manassés, como duas tribos). Um censo feito ali mostrou que havia 273 primogênitos não levitas, de um mês de idade para cima, a mais do que varões levitas, de modo que Deus exigiu um resgate de cinco siclos (US$ 11) para cada um dos 273, sendo o dinheiro entregue a Arão e seus filhos. (Núm 3:11-16, 40-51) Antes desta transação, Jeová já separara os varões da família de Arão, da tribo de Levi, para constituir o sacerdócio de Israel. — Núm 1:1; 3:6-10.

Por um longo tempo, Israel teve a oportunidade exclusiva de fornecer os membros de "um reino de sacerdotes e uma nação santa". (Êx 19:6) Mas, esta oportunidade deixou de ser exclusivamente deles porque a nação rejeitou o Filho de Deus. — Veja Mt 21:43; 1Pe 2:7-10.

Inicialmente, o Rei de Israel era Jeová. Mais tarde, Jeová mandou que a linhagem de Davi fosse investida do reinado. Jeová ainda era o Rei invisível, mas usava os da linhagem de Davi como Seus representantes referente ao governo secular. Dizia-se que estes reis terrestres, como tais, sentavam-se no "trono de Jeová". (1Cr 29:23) Mas o sacerdócio ainda era mantido separado, na linhagem de Arão. Portanto, somente àquela nação pertencia tanto o reino como o sacerdócio de Jeová Deus, com o "serviço sagrado" desse. — Ro 9:3, 4.

Inauguração do sacerdócio. A designação de sacerdote tem de ser feita por Deus; nenhum homem assume o cargo por conta própria. (He 5:4) Concordemente, o próprio Jeová designou Arão e sua casa para o sacerdócio "por tempo indefinido", separando-os da família dos coatitas, uma das três principais divisões da tribo de Levi. (Êx 6:16; 28:43) Primeiro, porém, Moisés, o levita, como mediador do pacto da Lei, representou a Deus na santificação de Arão e seus filhos, e encheu-lhes as mãos de poder para servirem quais sacerdotes, procedimento descrito em Êxodo, capítulo 29, e em Levítico, capítulo 8. Sua investidura parece ter levado sete dias, de 1.º a 7 de nisã de 1512 AEC. (Veja INVESTIDURA.) O sacerdócio recém-investido iniciou seus serviços para com Israel no dia seguinte, 8 de nisã.

Habilitações. Jeová Deus especificou as habilitações necessárias para os da linhagem de Arão que serviriam junto ao altar Dele. O homem, para ser sacerdote, tinha de ser fisicamente saudável e ter aparência normal. Do contrário, não podia chegar-se ao altar com oferendas e não podia chegar perto da cortina entre os compartimentos do Santo e do Santíssimo do tabernáculo. No entanto, tal homem tinha o direito de receber sustento dos dízimos e podia comer das "coisas sagradas" fornecidas como alimento para o sacerdócio. — Le 21:16-23.

Não se declara especificamente a idade de se ingressar no sacerdócio, embora o censo dos coatitas, feito junto ao monte Sinai, incluísse os de 30 a 50 anos de idade. (Núm 4:3) O serviço dos levitas no santuário começava à idade de 25 anos (reduzido no tempo do Rei Davi para 20 anos). (Núm 8:24; 1Cr 23:24) A aposentadoria dos levitas não sacerdotais do serviço obrigatório era à idade de 50 anos, mas não havia aposentadoria para os sacerdotes. — Núm 8:25, 26; veja APOSENTADORIA.

Sustento. Não se deram à tribo de Levi terras como herança, mas ela foi 'espalhada em Israel', recebendo 48 cidades para morar com suas famílias e seu gado. Treze destas cidades foram dadas aos sacerdotes. (Gên 49:5, 7; Jos 21:1-11) Uma das cidades de refúgio, Hébron, era cidade sacerdotal. (Jos 21:13) Os levitas não receberam uma região como herança tribal, porque, conforme Jeová dissera: "Eu sou teu quinhão e tua herança no meio dos filhos de Israel." (Núm 18:20) Os levitas executavam as tarefas designadas do seu ministério, e conservavam suas casas e os pastios das cidades que lhes foram concedidas. Cuidavam também de outros terrenos que os israelitas talvez devotassem ao uso do santuário. (Le 27:21, 28) Jeová fazia provisões para os levitas por providenciar que recebessem o dízimo de todos os produtos agrícolas das outras 12 tribos. (Núm 18:21-24) Deste dízimo, ou décimo, os levitas, por sua vez, deviam dar um décimo do melhor como dízimo para o sacerdócio. (Núm 18:25-29; Ne 10:38, 39) O sacerdócio recebia assim 1 por cento do produto nacional, habilitando-o a devotar todo o seu tempo ao seu designado serviço de Deus.

Esta provisão para o sacerdócio, embora abundante, contrastava com o luxo e o poder financeiro alcançado pelo sacerdócio de nações pagãs. No Egito, por exemplo, os sacerdotes eram proprietários de terras (Gên 47:22, 26), e, por manobras astutas, por fim se tornaram os homens mais ricos e mais poderosos do Egito. James H. Breasted, em A History of the Ancient Egyptians (História dos Antigos Egípcios, 1908, pp. 355, 356, 431, 432), registra que, durante a chamada Vigésima Dinastia, o Faraó ficou reduzido a mero títere. O sacerdócio estava de posse das terras auríferas da Núbia e da grande província do Alto Nilo. O sumo sacerdote era o mais importante funcionário do fisco do Estado, logo depois do próprio tesoureiro-chefe. Ele comandava todos os exércitos e o tesouro estava na sua mão. É representado com mais destaque nos monumentos do que o Faraó.

Era só quando Israel ficava relapso na sua adoração e negligente no pagamento dos seus dízimos que o sacerdócio sofria junto com os levitas não sacerdotais, que tinham de procurar outro trabalho para sustentar a si mesmos e suas famílias. Esta má atitude para com o santuário e sustento dele, por sua vez, fazia a nação sofrer ainda mais por falta de espiritualidade e de conhecimento de Jeová. — Ne 13:10-13; veja também Mal 3:8-10.

O sacerdócio recebia: (1) O dízimo regular. (2) O dinheiro de redenção do primogênito do gênero humano ou dos animais. No caso do touro, do cordeiro ou do caprídeo primogênitos, eles recebiam a carne como alimento. (Núm 18:14-19) (3) O dinheiro de redenção por homens e coisas santificadas como sagrados, e também por coisas devotadas a Jeová. (Le 27) (4) Certas porções das diversas ofertas trazidas pelo povo, bem como os pães da proposição. (Le 6:25, 26, 29; 7:6-10; Núm 18:8-14) (5) Benefícios derivados das ofertas do melhor dos primeiros frutos maduros dos cereais, do vinho e do azeite. (Êx 23:19; Le 2:14-16; 22:10 ["estranho", neste último texto, refere-se a alguém que não era sacerdote]; De 14:22-27; 26:1-10) Exceto por certas porções específicas que só os sacerdotes podiam comer (Le 6:29), seus filhos e suas filhas, e, em alguns casos, os da casa do sacerdote — até mesmo escravos — podiam legitimamente participar. (Le 10:14; 22:10-13) (6) Sem dúvida, uma participação no dízimo do terceiro ano para levitas e para os pobres. (De 14:28, 29; 26:12) (7) A presa de guerra. — Núm 31:26-30.

Vestimenta. No desempenho das suas funções oficiais, os sacerdotes serviam descalços, em harmonia com o fato de que o santuário era solo sagrado. (Veja Êx 3:5.) Nas instruções para a fabricação das vestes especiais para os sacerdotes não se mencionam sandálias. (Êx 28:1-43) Eles usavam calções de linho, que iam desde os quadris até às coxas, por questão de decoro, "para cobrir a carne nua . . . a fim de que não incorram em erro e certamente morram". (Êx 28:42, 43) Sobre este, usavam uma veste comprida de linho fino, amarrada ao corpo por uma faixa de linho. Sua cobertura para a cabeça era 'enrolada' sobre eles. (Le 8:13; Êx 28:40; 39:27-29) Esta cobertura para a cabeça parece ter sido um pouco diferente do turbante do sumo sacerdote, que talvez fosse costurado num estilo enrolado e colocado assim na cabeça do sumo sacerdote. (Le 8:9) Parece que foi em tempos posteriores que os subsacerdotes ocasionalmente usavam éfodes de linho, embora estes não fossem ricamente bordados como o éfode do sumo sacerdote. — Veja 1Sa 2:18.

Regulamentos e funções. Exigia-se que os sacerdotes mantivessem asseio pessoal e elevadas normas de moral. Ao entrarem na tenda de reunião e antes de apresentarem uma oferta no altar, tinham de lavar as mãos e os pés na bacia no pátio, 'para que não morressem'. (Êx 30:17-21; 40:30-32) Ordenou-se-lhes, com um aviso similar, não tomar vinho ou bebida inebriante ao servirem no santuário. (Le 10:8-11) Não podiam aviltar-se por tocar num cadáver ou por prantear os mortos; isto os tornaria temporariamente impuros para o serviço. Os subsacerdotes (mas não o sumo sacerdote) podiam fazer isso, porém, para um parente muito achegado: mãe, pai, filho, filha, irmão, ou irmã virgem que lhe fosse achegada (evidentemente, morando com ele ou perto dele); também a esposa possivelmente estava incluída nos achegados a ele. (Le 21:1-4) O sacerdote que se tornasse impuro por motivo de lepra, de um fluxo, ou de um cadáver ou outra coisa impura, não podia comer das coisas sagradas nem realizar serviço no santuário até ser purificado, senão tinha de morrer. — Le 22:1-9.

Ordenou-se aos sacerdotes não rapar a cabeça ou aparar a extremidade da barba, nem fazer incisões em si mesmos, prática comum entre os sacerdotes pagãos. (Le 21:5, 6; 19:28; 1Rs 18:28) Ao passo que o sumo sacerdote só podia casar-se com uma virgem, os subsacerdotes podiam casar-se com uma viúva, mas não com uma divorciada ou uma prostituta. (Le 21:7, 8; compare isso com

Le 21:10, 13, 14.) Evidentemente, todos os membros da família do sumo sacerdote deviam manter a elevada norma de moral e a dignidade atribuída ao cargo do sacerdote. Assim, a filha de sacerdote que se tornasse prostituta devia ser morta, sendo depois queimada como algo detestável para Deus. — Le 21:9.

Enquanto estavam no ermo, por ocasião das mudanças de acampamento, era dever de Arão e dos seus filhos cobrir a mobília e os utensílios sagrados na tenda de reunião, antes de se permitir que outros coatitas os carregassem, para que os coatitas não morressem. Eles também descobriam e armavam estas coisas na tenda no novo local. (Núm 4:5-15) Quando em marcha, os sacerdotes carregavam a Arca do Pacto. — Jos 3:3, 13, 15, 17; 1Rs 8:3-6.

Os sacerdotes eram responsáveis pelo toque das trombetas sagradas, provendo assim liderança definida ao povo, quando se armava ou se levantava o acampamento, nas convocações, quando se entrava em batalha ou se celebrava alguma festividade para Jeová. (Núm 10:1-10) Os sacerdotes e os levitas estavam eximidos do recrutamento militar, embora servissem como tocadores de trombeta e cantores diante do exército. — Núm 1:47-49; 2:33; Jos 6:4; 2Cr 13:12.

Quando os sacerdotes estavam de serviço no santuário, seus deveres incluíam o abate dos sacrifícios trazidos pelo povo, aspergir o sangue sobre o altar, retalhar os sacrifícios, manter aceso o fogo no altar, cozinhar a carne e aceitar todas as outras ofertas, tais como as ofertas de cereais. Deviam cuidar dos assuntos relacionados com impurezas contraídas por pessoas, bem como os votos especiais delas, e assim por diante. (Le caps. 1-7; 12:6; caps. 13-15; Núm 6:1-21; Lu 2:22-24) Cuidavam das ofertas queimadas da manhã e da noitinha, e de todos os outros sacrifícios oferecidos regularmente no santuário, exceto aqueles que cabiam ao sumo sacerdote ofertar; queimavam incenso no altar de ouro. (Êx 29:38-42; Núm 28:1-10; 2Cr 13:10, 11) Aparavam as mechas das lâmpadas e mantinham estas supridas de óleo (Êx 27:20, 21) e cuidavam do óleo sagrado e do incenso. (Núm 4:16) Abençoavam o povo nas assembleias solenes na maneira delineada em Números 6:22-27. Mas nenhum outro sacerdote podia estar no santuário quando o sumo sacerdote entrava no Santíssimo para fazer expiação. — Le 16:17.

Os sacerdotes eram primariamente os privilegiados em explicar a lei de Deus, e eles desempenhavam um importante papel no judiciário de Israel. Nas cidades concedidas aos sacerdotes, eles estavam disponíveis para ajudar os juízes, e também serviam junto com os juízes em casos extraordinariamente difíceis, além da capacidade de decisão dos tribunais locais. (De 17:8, 9) Exigia-se que estivessem presentes com os anciãos da cidade nos casos de assassinato não solucionado, a fim de assegurar que se seguisse o procedimento correto para remover da cidade a culpa de sangue. (De 21:1, 2, 5) Quando um marido ciumento acusava a esposa de adultério secreto, ela tinha de ser levada ao santuário, onde o sacerdote realizava a cerimônia prescrita, na qual se apelava para o conhecimento de Jeová sobre a verdade da inocência ou da culpa da mulher, em busca do Seu julgamento direto. (Núm 5:11-31) Em todos os casos, o julgamento feito pelos sacerdotes ou pelos juízes designados tinha de ser respeitado; o desrespeito deliberado ou a desobediência incorria na pena de morte. — Núm 15:30; De 17:10-13.

Os sacerdotes eram instrutores da Lei para o povo, lendo-a e explicando-a aos que vinham ao santuário para adoração. Também, quando não estavam em serviço designado, tinham ampla oportunidade de dar tal ensino, quer na área do santuário, quer em outras partes do país. (De 33:10; 2Cr 15:3; 17:7-9; Mal 2:7) Ao retornar de Babilônia a Jerusalém, Esdras, o sacerdote, ajudado por outros sacerdotes, junto com os levitas, reuniu o povo e gastou horas lendo e explicando a Lei para eles. — Ne 8:1-15.

A administração sacerdotal serviu para salvaguardar a nação em pureza religiosa, bem como em saúde física. O sacerdote devia julgar entre o puro e o impuro em caso de lepra dum homem, duma vestimenta ou duma casa. Ele cuidava de que se cumprissem os regulamentos legais de quarentena. Oficiava também na purificação daqueles que tinham sido aviltados por um cadáver ou que eram impuros por causa dum fluxo doentio, e assim por diante. — Le 13-15.

Como eram determinadas as designações de serviço no templo para os sacerdotes em Israel?

Das 24 turmas, ou revezamentos, de sacerdotes estabelecidas pelo Rei Davi, 16 procediam da casa de Eleazar e 8 da casa de Itamar. (1Cr 24:1-19) Todavia, pelo menos inicialmente, os sacerdotes de apenas quatro turmas retornaram do exílio babilônico. (Esd 2:36-39) Alguns sugerem que, para continuar com o anterior arranjo organizacional, as quatro famílias que retornaram foram divididas para que houvesse de novo 24 turmas. Alfred Edersheim, em The Temple (O Templo; 1874, p. 63), sugere que foi realizado por se deixar cada família tirar cinco sortes referentes àqueles que não haviam retornado, formando assim dos seus grupos mais 20 turmas, às quais deram os nomes originais. Zacarias, pai de João, o Batizador, era sacerdote da oitava turma, a de Abias. Todavia, se o conceito acima for o caso, ele talvez não fosse descendente de Abias — pode ter apenas pertencido à turma que levava este nome. (1Cr 24:10; Lu 1:5) A falta de plenas informações não permite conclusões firmes sobre estes pontos.

No serviço do templo, os sacerdotes estavam organizados sob diversos oficiais. Lançavam-se sortes na designação de certas tarefas. Cada uma das 24 turmas servia uma semana por vez, estando de serviço duas vezes por ano. Evidentemente, todo o sacerdócio servia nas épocas festivas, quando milhares de sacrifícios eram oferecidos pelo povo, assim como fizeram na dedicação do templo. (1Cr 24:1-18, 31; 2Cr 5:11; compare isso com 2Cr 29:31-35; 30:23-25; 35:10-19.) O sacerdote talvez servisse em outras ocasiões, desde que isso não interferisse nas tarefas dos sacerdotes nos serviços designados. Segundo tradições rabínicas, no tempo da vida terrestre de Jesus, os sacerdotes eram numerosos, de modo que o serviço da semana era subdividido entre as diversas famílias que compunham a turma, cada família servindo um ou mais dias, segundo o seu número.

O que provavelmente era considerado o serviço diário mais honroso era queimar o incenso no altar de ouro. Isto era feito depois da oferta do sacrifício. Durante a queima do incenso, o povo ficava reunido em oração, fora do santuário. A tradição rabínica diz que se lançavam sortes para este serviço, mas que aquele que já oficiara nisso não tinha permissão de participar, a menos que todos os presentes já tivessem realizado este serviço antes. (The Temple, pp. 135, 137, 138) Neste caso, o sacerdote usualmente tinha esta honra apenas uma vez na vida. Era este o serviço que Zacarias realizava quando o anjo Gabriel lhe apareceu para anunciar que Zacarias e sua esposa Elisabete teriam um filho. Quando Zacarias saiu do santuário, a multidão reunida ali podia ver pela aparência dele e pela sua incapacidade de falar que Zacarias tivera uma visão sobrenatural no santuário; assim, este evento se tornou de conhecimento público. — Lu 1:8-23.

Parece que, todo sábado, os sacerdotes tinham o privilégio de trocar o pão da proposição. Era também no sábado que a turma sacerdotal daquela semana completava o seu serviço e a nova turma começava a servir para a semana seguinte. Estas e outras tarefas necessárias eram realizadas pelos sacerdotes sem que isso constituísse uma violação do sábado. — Mt 12:2-5; compare isso com 1Sa 21:6; 2Rs 11:5-7; 2Cr 23:8.

Lealdade. Quando as dez tribos se separaram do reino sob Roboão e estabeleceram o reino setentrional sob Jeroboão, a tribo de Levi permaneceu leal e se apegou ao reino de duas tribos, de Judá e Benjamim. Jeroboão designou homens que não eram levitas para serem sacerdotes a serviço da adoração dos bezerros de ouro, e ele expulsou os sacerdotes de Jeová, os filhos de Arão. (1Rs 12:31, 32; 13:33; 2Cr 11:14; 13:9) Mais tarde, em Judá, embora muitos sacerdotes se tornassem infiéis a Deus, o sacerdócio às vezes exercia forte influência para manter Israel fiel a Jeová. (2Cr 23:1, 16; 24:2, 16; 26:17-20; 34:14, 15; Za 3:1; 6:11) Por volta da época do ministério de Jesus e dos apóstolos, o sumo sacerdócio se tinha tornado muito corrupto, mas havia muitos sacerdotes de bom coração para com Jeová, conforme se evidenciava em que, pouco depois da morte de Jesus, "uma grande multidão de sacerdotes começou a ser obediente à fé". — At 6:7.

Outras aplicações de "sacerdote". Moisés, no Salmo 99:6, foi chamado de sacerdote por ser mediador e por ter sido designado para realizar o serviço de santificação no santuário, no qual Arão e seus filhos foram empossados no sacerdócio. Moisés intercedeu por Israel, invocando o nome de Jeová. (Núm 14:13-20) A palavra "sacerdote" ocasionalmente também era usada para denotar um "lugar-tenente" ou "ministro ou oficial principal". Na lista de oficiais principais sob o Rei Davi, o registro reza: "Quanto aos filhos de Davi, tornaram-se sacerdotes." — 2Sa 8:18; compare isso com 2Sa 20:26; 1Rs 4:5; 1Cr 18:17.

O Sacerdócio Cristão. Jeová prometera que Israel, se guardasse o Seu pacto, tornar-se-ia para Ele "um reino de sacerdotes e uma nação santa". (Êx 19:6) Todavia, o sacerdócio da linhagem de Arão continuaria apenas até a vinda do sacerdócio maior que prefigurava. (He 8:4, 5) Duraria até a terminação do pacto da Lei e a inauguração do novo pacto. (He 7:11-14; 8:6, 7, 13) A oferta foi primeiro feita exclusivamente aos de Israel, para que se tornassem sacerdotes de Jeová, servindo no arranjo do Reino prometido por Deus; com o tempo, esta oferta foi estendida aos gentios. — At 10:34, 35; 15:14; Ro 10:21.

Apenas um restante de judeus aceitou Cristo, deixando assim a nação de prover os membros do verdadeiro reino de sacerdotes e nação santa. (Ro 11:7, 20) Por causa da infidelidade de Israel, Deus o avisara disso com séculos de antecedência pelo seu profeta Oseias, dizendo: "Visto que tu rejeitaste o conhecimento, também eu te rejeitarei para que não me sirvas como sacerdote; e visto que te estás esquecendo da lei de teu Deus, eu me esquecerei dos teus filhos, sim, eu." (Os 4:6) De modo correspondente, Jesus disse aos líderes judeus: "O reino de Deus vos será tirado e será dado a uma nação que produza os seus frutos." (Mt 21:43) Todavia, Jesus Cristo, por estar sob a Lei enquanto na terra, reconheceu que vigorava o sacerdócio arônico, e ele mandou que os que ele havia curado da lepra fossem ao sacerdote e fizessem a oferta exigida. — Mt 8:4; Mr 1:44; Lu 17:14.

No dia de Pentecostes do ano 33 EC, o pacto da Lei teve fim e se inaugurou o 'pacto melhor', o novo pacto. (He 8:6-9) Naquele dia, Deus tornou manifesta esta mudança pelo derramamento do espírito santo. O apóstolo Pedro explicou então aos judeus presentes, vindos de muitas nações, que sua única salvação estava então no arrependimento e na aceitação de Jesus Cristo. (At 2; He 2:1-4) Mais tarde, Pedro falou de construtores judeus rejeitarem Jesus Cristo como pedra angular e então disse aos cristãos: "Mas vós sois 'raça escolhida, sacerdócio real, nação santa, povo para propriedade especial.'" — 1Pe 2:7-9.

Pedro explicou também que o novo sacerdócio é uma 'casa espiritual, tendo por objetivo um sacerdócio santo, para oferecer sacrifícios espirituais, aceitáveis a Deus, por intermédio de Jesus Cristo'. (1Pe 2:5) Jesus Cristo é seu grande Sumo Sacerdote, e eles, iguais aos filhos de Arão, constituem o subsacerdócio. (He 3:1; 8:1) Todavia, diferentes do sacerdócio arônico, que não tinha parte no reinado, o reinado e o sacerdócio estão conjugados neste "sacerdócio real" de Cristo e dos seus co-herdeiros. No livro bíblico de Revelação (Apocalipse), o apóstolo João fala dos seguidores de Jesus Cristo como 'soltos dos nossos pecados por meio de seu próprio sangue', e diz que "ele fez de nós um reino, sacerdotes para seu Deus e Pai". — Re 1:5, 6.

Este último livro da Bíblia revela também o número dos que constituem o corpo de subsacerdotes. Mostra-se que estes, que Jesus Cristo constituiu em "um reino e sacerdotes para o nosso Deus", cantam um novo cântico, no qual dizem que foram comprados pelo sangue de Cristo. (Re 5:9, 10) Mais adiante, os que cantam o novo cântico são enumerados como 144.000 "comprados dentre a humanidade como primícias para Deus e para o Cordeiro". (Re 14:1-5) Por fim, mostra-se que este subsacerdócio é ressuscitado para o céu e junta-se a Jesus Cristo no seu governo, tornando-se "sacerdotes de Deus e do Cristo" e 'reinando' com Cristo durante o seu Reinado de Mil Anos. — Re 20:4, 6.

Pela comparação do sacerdócio de Israel, bem como das suas funções e dos seus benefícios para o povo daquela nação (He 8:5), podemos obter uma ideia dos benefícios e das bênçãos que as pessoas da terra derivarão do perfeito e eterno sacerdócio de Jesus Cristo e do seu corpo de subsacerdotes, durante o seu reinado conjunto sobre a terra, durante mil anos. Terão o privilégio de ensinar ao povo a lei de Deus (Mal 2:7), conseguindo o completo perdão dos pecados à base do sacrifício resgatador do grande Sumo Sacerdote (administrando os benefícios do sacrifício de Cristo) e realizando a cura de todas as enfermidades (Mr 2:9-12; He 9:12-14; 10:1-4, 10), diferenciando o que é puro e o que é impuro aos olhos de Deus, e removendo toda a impureza (Le 13-15), julgando o povo em justiça e cuidando de fazer vigorar a lei justa de Jeová em toda a terra (De 17:8-13).

Assim como a antiga tenda de reunião, no ermo, era o lugar de morada de Deus com os homens, um santuário no qual podiam chegar-se a ele, assim durante os mil anos a tenda de Deus estará novamente com a humanidade em sentido muito mais achegado, mais duradouro e mais benéfico, ao passo que ele lida com eles de modo representativo por intermédio do seu grande Sumo Sacerdote, Jesus Cristo, e os 144.000 que servem com Cristo quais subsacerdotes no grande templo espiritual, prefigurado por aquele tabernáculo sagrado. (Êx 25:8; He 4:14; Re 1:6; 21:3) Com tal sacerdócio real, o povo certamente será feliz, assim como era Israel quando o reino e o sacerdócio eram fiéis a Deus, no tempo em que "Judá e Israel eram muitos, em multidão, iguais aos grãos de areia junto ao mar, comendo e bebendo, e alegrando-se" e morando "em segurança, cada um debaixo da sua própria videira e debaixo da sua própria figueira". — 1Rs 4:20, 25.

Sacerdotes Pagãos. As nações antigas possuíam sacerdotes por meio dos quais se dirigiam aos seus deuses. Esses homens eram reverenciados pelo povo e sempre exerciam grande influência, geralmente fazendo parte da classe governante, ou sendo conselheiros íntimos dos governantes. Os sacerdotes eram a classe mais instruída e em geral mantinham o povo em ignorância. Assim podiam aproveitar-se das superstições do povo e do seu temor do desconhecido. Por exemplo, no Egito, o povo era levado a adorar o rio Nilo como deus, encarando os seus sacerdotes como exercendo controle divino sobre o fluxo sazonal dele, do qual dependiam suas safras.

Este incentivo dado à ignorância supersticiosa estava em contraste direto com os sacerdotes de Israel, que constantemente liam e ensinavam a Lei à nação inteira. Todo homem devia conhecer a Deus e Sua lei. (De 6:1-3) As próprias pessoas sabiam ler e escrever, tendo-lhes Jeová ordenado que lessem e ensinassem a lei aos seus filhos. — De 6:4-9.

Não o padrão para o sacerdócio de Israel. Apesar disso, há alguns que afirmam que o sacerdócio de Israel e a formulação de muitos dos seus regulamentos foram modelados segundo os do Egito. Eles argumentam que Moisés, o mediador do pacto da Lei, fora profundamente influenciado pela sua vida no Egito, pelo seu treinamento na corte de Faraó e por ter sido instruído "em toda a sabedoria dos egípcios". (At 7:22) Seu argumento, porém, desconsidera que Moisés, embora usado para transmitir a Lei a Israel, em nenhum sentido era o legislador. O Legislador de Israel era Jeová Deus (Is 33:22), que usou anjos para transmitir a Lei pela mão do mediador Moisés. — Gál 3:19.

Cada pormenor da adoração por parte de Israel foi delineado por Deus. Os planos para a tenda de reunião foram dados a Moisés (Êx 26:30), e está escrito que se lhe ordenou: "Cuida de que faças todas as coisas segundo o seu modelo que te foi mostrado no monte." (He 8:5; Êx 25:40) Todo o serviço no santuário tinha origem e direção de Jeová. O relato assegura-nos isso repetidas vezes por dizer que Moisés e os filhos de Israel "faziam segundo tudo o que Jeová mandara a Moisés. Fizeram exatamente assim". "Segundo tudo o que Jeová mandara a Moisés, assim fizeram os filhos de Israel todo o serviço. E Moisés chegou a ver toda a obra, e eis que a tinham feito assim como Jeová mandara. Foi assim que fizeram." "E Moisés passou a fazer segundo tudo o que Jeová lhe mandara. Fez exatamente assim." — Êx 39:32, 42, 43; 40:16.

De acordo com os egiptólogos, em algumas coisas a vestimenta dos sacerdotes egípcios eram similares à dos sacerdotes de Israel, tais como o uso de linho; os sacerdotes egípcios rapavam o corpo, assim como faziam os levitas (embora não o fizessem os sacerdotes de Israel; Núm 8:7); havia lavagens. Mas, será que estas poucas similaridades provam que tinham a mesma origem, ou que um procedeu do outro? Materiais e métodos similares são usados no mundo inteiro na confecção de roupa, na construção de casas e edifícios, e no cumprimento de deveres diários, tais como as lavagens, mas há também grandes divergências em estilo e método. Nós não dizemos que um derivou do outro, ou que a vestimenta ou o ato tinham o mesmo significado religioso ou simbólico.

Na maioria dos aspectos da sua vestimenta e das suas funções não havia nenhuma similaridade entre os sacerdotes israelitas e os egípcios. Por exemplo, ao passo que os sacerdotes israelitas serviam descalços, os sacerdotes egípcios usavam sandálias. As vestes compridas dos sacerdotes egípcios tinham feitio inteiramente diferente, e suas vestes e acessórios traziam símbolos da adoração dos seus deuses falsos. Rapavam a cabeça, o que os sacerdotes israelitas não faziam (Le 21:5), e usavam peruca, ou então uma cobertura para a cabeça totalmente diferente daquela dos sacerdotes de Israel, segundo inscrições encontradas em monumentos do Egito. Além disso, Jeová tornara claro que Israel não devia adotar nenhuma das práticas do Egito nem das outras nações, quer na adoração, quer na prática judiciária. — Le 18:1-4; De 6:14; 7:1-6.

O argumento dos apoiadores da teoria de que o sacerdócio de Israel copiou o do Egito, portanto, não tem nenhum fundamento. Temos de lembrar-nos de que a ideia de sacrifícios e de sacerdotes originou-se de Deus, e, desde o começo, foi expressa por homens fiéis tais como Abel e Noé; na sociedade patriarcal, a função foi executada por Abraão e por outros. Todas as nações, portanto, herdaram este conhecimento, embora fosse distorcido em muitas formas por abandonarem o verdadeiro Deus e a adoração pura. As nações pagãs, embora tivessem o desejo inato de adorar, mas faltando-lhes a orientação de Jeová, desenvolveram muitos ritos injustos e mesmo degradantes, os quais as levaram à oposição à adoração verdadeira.

Práticas repugnantes dos sacerdotes pagãos. Os sacerdotes egípcios dos dias de Moisés se opuseram a ele perante Faraó, tentando desacreditar a ele e seu Deus, Jeová, pela prática da magia. (Êx 7:11-13, 22; 8:7; 2Ti 3:8) Mas, viram-se obrigados a curvar-se em derrota e humilhação. (Êx 8:18, 19; 9:11) Os amonitas adoradores de Moloque sacrificavam seus filhos e suas filhas por queimá-los. (1Rs 11:5; 2Rs 23:10; Le 18:21; 20:2-5) Os cananeus adoradores de Baal seguiam a mesma prática detestável, praticando também a autolaceração e ritos lascivos, repugnantes e imorais. (Núm 25:1-3; 1Rs 18:25-28; Je 19:5) Os sacerdotes do deus filisteu Dagom e os sacerdotes babilônios de Marduque, Bel e Istar praticavam a magia e a adivinhação. (1Sa 6:2-9; Ez 21:21; Da 2:2, 27; 4:7, 9) Todos eles adoravam imagens de madeira, de pedra e de metal. Até mesmo o Rei Jeroboão, do reino de dez tribos de Israel, constituiu sacerdotes para dirigir a adoração de bezerros de ouro e de "demônios caprinos", a fim de impedir que o povo se empenhasse na verdadeira adoração em Jerusalém. — 2Cr 11:15; 13:9; veja também MICÁ N.º 1.

Sacerdócios não autorizados condenados por Deus. Jeová se opunha inalteravelmente a todas estas formas e práticas, que na realidade constituíam adoração de demônios. (1Co 10:20; De 18:9-13; Is 8:19; Re 22:15) Sempre que esses deuses ou o sacerdócio que os representava desafiavam abertamente a Jeová, eles eram humilhados.

(1Sa 5:1-5; Da 2:2, 7-12, 29, 30; 5:15) Frequentemente, seus sacerdotes e profetas eram mortos. (1Rs 18:40; 2Rs 10:19, 25-28; 11:18; 2Cr 23:17) E visto que Jeová não reconhecia nenhum sacerdócio além do da casa de Arão, durante a existência do pacto da Lei, segue-se que aquilo que o cargo de Arão prefigurava, a saber, o sacerdócio de Jesus Cristo, que é também o Sumo Sacerdote maior à maneira de Melquisedeque, é a única via de acesso a Jeová. (At 4:12; He 4:14; 1Jo 2:1, 2) Qualquer sacerdócio que se opõe a este Rei-Sacerdote ordenado por Deus e ao seu subsacerdócio deve ser evitado pelos verdadeiros adoradores de Deus. — De 18:18, 19; At 3:22, 23; Re 18:4, 24.

SACO. Veja SACA.

SACO, SERAPILHEIRA. Pano grosseiro usado para fabricar sacos, ou sacas, tais como os usados para cereais. Usualmente, era de tecido de pelos de cabra, de cor escura. (Re 6:12; Is 50:3) A palavra hebraica para saco ou serapilheira (saq) é também usada para designar os sacos ou as sacas fabricados deste material. — Gên 42:25; Jos 9:4.

Serapilheira era a vestimenta tradicional de luto, e lemos pela primeira vez sobre o seu uso quando Jacó pranteou a suposta morte de seu filho José, cingindo os lombos de serapilheira. (Gên 37:34; 2Sa 3:31) Em alguns casos, os pranteadores a usavam para sentar-se ou dormir sobre ela. (2Sa 21:10; Is 58:5; Jl 1:13) Os servos de Ben-Hadade, rogando pela vida do seu rei perante Acabe, foram a ele vestidos de serapilheira sobre o lombo e corda na cabeça. (1Rs 20:31, 32) Às vezes era usada diretamente sobre a pele, com outra vestimenta por cima (Jó 16:15; Is 32:11; 1Rs 21:27; 2Rs 6:30), ao passo que em outros casos talvez simplesmente fosse "cingida" sobre outras vestes. — Ez 7:18; Jl 1:8.

Em resultado da pregação de Jonas, o rei de Nínive emitiu um decreto no sentido de que não somente todo o povo da cidade devia seguir seu exemplo, de vestir serapilheira, mas até mesmo os 'animais domésticos' deviam ser cobertos com ela. — Jon 3:6-8.

Os profetas hebreus ocasionalmente usavam serapilheira. Faziam isso em harmonia com mensagens de aviso e convocações ao arrependimento, que foram comissionados a proclamar, ou quando oravam com expressões de arrependimento a favor do povo. (Is 20:2; Da 9:3; compare isso com Re 11:3.) Era usada pelo rei e pelo povo em ocasiões de grande crise ou ao receberem notícias calamitosas. — 2Rs 19:1; Is 15:3; 22:12.

SACRIFÍCIO. Veja OFERTAS; RESGATE.

SACUTE. Possivelmente uma deidade astral, conforme sugerido por "Sacute" ser posto em paralelo com a frase "a estrela de vosso deus". (Am 5:26) Este nome foi supostamente vocalizado no texto massorético hebraico para corresponder a shiq·qúts, que significa "coisa repugnante". Talvez Sacute deva ser identificado com "Sakkut", nome babilônico de Saturno (deus-estrela). Todavia, na Septuaginta grega, a expressão "Sacute, vosso rei", reza "a tenda de Moloque", e Estêvão, que provavelmente citou a Septuaginta, também usou as palavras "a tenda de Moloque". (At 7:43) Isto sugere que "Sacute" talvez fosse um santuário portátil, uma tenda ou barraca, em que se guardava a imagem-ídolo de Moloque. — Veja ASTRÓLOGOS (Moloque e a Astrologia em Israel).

SADOQUE. Veja ZADOQUE N.º 7.

SADRAQUE. Nome babilônico de um judeu exilado elevado a um alto cargo no governo de Babilônia. Sadraque, Mesaque e Abednego — os três companheiros de Daniel — são sempre mencionados juntos, e Sadraque é sempre alistado primeiro, talvez porque seus nomes hebraicos correspondentes — Hananias, Misael e Azarias — sempre aparecem em ordem alfabética segundo os caracteres hebraicos. Receberam os nomes babilônicos depois de terem sido levados para Babilônia. Ali receberam treinamento, visto que se observara que eram jovens sem defeito, de boa aparência e inteligentes. Ao fim de três anos de estudo, Sadraque, Mesaque e Abednego foram achados dez vezes melhores do que os sábios de Babilônia. Eles certamente tinham a bênção de Jeová, o que, por sua vez, se devia parcialmente à sua firme recusa de se poluírem com as iguarias babilônicas. (Da 1:3-20) Sua próxima designação registrada foi a administração do distrito jurisdicional de Babilônia. (Da 2:49) Perderam temporariamente o favor do rei quando se negaram a se curvar diante da sua grande imagem, mas, depois de Jeová os ter tirado incólumes da fornalha ardente, foram recolocados no seu cargo anterior. — Da 3.

SADUCEUS. Destacada seita religiosa do judaísmo, associada com o sacerdócio. (At 5:17) Eles não criam nem na ressurreição, nem em anjos. — At 23:8.

O tempo exato do aparecimento dos saduceus como seita religiosa não é conhecido. A primeira menção histórica deles por nome ocorre nos escritos de Josefo, indicando que se opunham aos fariseus na última metade do segundo século AEC.

(Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], XIII, 293 [x, 6]) Josefo fornece também informações sobre os ensinos deles. Todavia, há dúvida quanto a se a apresentação dele é inteiramente segundo os fatos. Dessemelhantes dos fariseus, diz Josefo, os saduceus negavam os caprichos do destino, sustentando que a própria pessoa, pelas suas ações, era a única responsável pelo que lhe sobrevinha. (Jewish Antiquities, XIII, 172, 173 [v, 9]) Rejeitavam as muitas tradições orais observadas pelos fariseus e também a crença farisaica na imortalidade da alma e em punições ou recompensas após a morte. Nos seus tratos entre si, os saduceus eram um tanto rudes. Dizia-se que eram litigiosos. Segundo Josefo, seus ensinos agradavam aos ricos. — Jewish Antiquities, XIII, 298 (x, 6); XVIII, 16, 17 (i, 4); The Jewish War (A Guerra Judaica), II, 162-166 (viii, 14).

Conforme salientado por João, o Batizador, os saduceus precisavam produzir frutos próprios do arrependimento. O motivo era que eles, assim como os fariseus, não guardavam a lei de Deus. (Mt 3:7, 8) O próprio Cristo Jesus comparou o ensino corrupto deles a fermento. — Mt 16:6, 11, 12.

Com respeito às crenças religiosas deles, Atos 23:8 declara: "Os saduceus dizem não haver nem ressurreição, nem anjo, nem espírito, mas os fariseus declaram publicamente todos estes." Foi com relação à ressurreição e ao casamento de cunhado que um grupo de saduceus tentou confundir Cristo Jesus. Mas ele os calou. Citando os escritos de Moisés, que os saduceus professavam aceitar, Jesus refutou a alegação deles de que não há ressurreição. (Mt 22:23-34; Mr 12:18-27; Lu 20:27-40) Mais tarde, o apóstolo Paulo, diante do Sinédrio, dividiu esta mais alta corte judaica por jogar os fariseus contra os saduceus. Isto era possível por causa das diferenças religiosas entre eles. — At 23:6-10.

Embora divididos em questão de religião, os saduceus juntaram-se aos fariseus em procurar tentar Jesus por pedir-lhe um sinal (Mt 16:1), e os dois grupos estavam unidos na sua oposição a ele. A evidência bíblica indica que os saduceus tinham um papel destacado em procurar a morte de Jesus. Saduceus eram membros do Sinédrio, corte que tramou contra Jesus e que, mais tarde, o condenou à morte. A corte incluía Caifás, o saduceu e sumo sacerdote, e evidentemente também outros sacerdotes de destaque. (Mt 26:59-66; Jo 11:47-53; At 5:17, 21) Portanto, sempre que as Escrituras Gregas Cristãs falam de certa ação tomada pelos principais sacerdotes, evidentemente havia saduceus envolvidos nisso. (Mt 21:45, 46; 26:3, 4, 62-64; 28:11, 12; Jo 7:32) Saduceus parecem ter tomado a dianteira em tentar impedir a divulgação do cristianismo após a morte e ressurreição de Jesus. — At 4:1-23; 5:17-42; 9:14.

SAFÃ [Procávia]. Filho de Azalias e secretário da corte. O Rei Josias, em 642 AEC, enviou Safã e mais dois oficiais ao sumo sacerdote Hilquias com instruções para consertos do templo. Nesta ocasião, Hilquias entregou a Safã "o próprio livro da lei", provavelmente até mesmo o original, que fora pouco antes encontrado no templo. Assim que Safã leu uma parte da Lei para Josias, ele e seu filho Aicão, junto com outros, foram mandados por Josias como delegação para indagar a respeito do propósito de Jeová para com Judá. Eles se dirigiram à profetisa Hulda e relataram depois ao rei a profecia de Jeová, de que viria uma destruição, mas não durante o reinado de Josias. — 2Rs 22:3-20; 2Cr 34:8-28.

Aicão, (Je 26:24), Elasá (Je 29:1-3) e Gemarias (Je 36:10-12, 25), filhos de Safã, também parecem ter sido aderentes da verdadeira adoração. No entanto, seu filho Jaazanias não era. (Ez 8:10, 11) Gedalias, neto de Safã, foi o governador, temente a Deus, designado após a queda de Jerusalém. — 2Rs 25:22; Je 39:14.

SAFÃO. O segundo encarregado da tribo de Gade em Basã, algum tempo antes do reinado de Jeroboão II, no nono século AEC. — 1Cr 5:11, 12, 17.

SAFATE [forma abreviada de Sefatias, que significa "Jeová Julgou"].

1. Maioral que representou a tribo de Simeão como um dos espias que passaram 40 dias na Terra da Promessa; filho de Hori. — Núm 13:2, 5, 25; veja ESPIÕES.

2. Um dos encarregados das manadas do Rei Davi; filho de Adlai. As manadas cuidadas por Safate encontravam-se nas baixadas. — 1Cr 27:29.

3. Pai do profeta Eliseu. — 1Rs 19:16, 19; 2Rs 3:11; 6:31.

4. Descendente de Gade que morava em Basã. — 1Cr 5:11, 12.

5. Descendente pós-exílico do Rei Davi. — 1Cr 3:22.

SAFE. Um de quatro refains gigantescos que lutaram ao lado dos filisteus contra Israel, sendo mortos pelos poderosos de Davi. Safe, ou Sipai, foi morto por Sibecai. — 2Sa 21:18, 22; 1Cr 20:4.

SAFIR [Elegante; Refinada; Agradável]. Uma localidade, evidentemente em Judá, cujos habitantes foram incluídos na profecia de Miqueias a respeito do julgamento que sobreviria a Judá e a Jerusalém. (Miq 1:11) Nesta parte da profecia, Miqueias faz frequentes jogos de palavras no seu uso de nomes de lugares. (Veja BETE-EZEL.) Uma identificação provisória de Safir é com Khirbet el-Kaum, a uns 15 km ao O de Hébron.

SAFIRA, I [do aramaico, que significa "Bela"]. Esposa de Ananias. Ela entrou com seu marido numa conspiração que resultou na morte deles. Venderam um campo de sua propriedade e hipocritamente fingiram levar aos apóstolos o pleno montante obtido por ele, assim como faziam outros cristãos em Jerusalém para sanar a emergência que surgira depois de Pentecostes de 33 EC.

O pecado de Ananias e Safira não era deixarem de entregar a quantia inteira recebida pela propriedade vendida, mas que mentiram afirmando fazer isso, evidentemente para receber louvor de homens em vez de honrar a Deus e fazer o bem para com a congregação dele. Sua fraude foi exposta por Pedro, sob a inspiração do espírito santo. Ele disse: "Ananias, por que te afoitou Satanás a trapacear o espírito santo e a reter secretamente parte do preço do campo? Enquanto permanecia contigo, não permanecia teu, e depois de ter sido vendido, não continuou a estar sob o teu controle? Por que é que propuseste uma ação dessas no teu coração? Trapaceaste, não homens, mas a Deus." Ao ouvir as palavras de Pedro, Ananias caiu e expirou.

Cerca de três horas depois, entrou Safira e repetiu a mentira. Pedro perguntou-lhe então: "Por que concordastes entre vós dois fazer uma prova com o espírito de Jeová?" Safira também caiu e expirou. Este incidente serviu como disciplina para a congregação, induzindo-a a ter grande temor, e, sem dúvida, muito respeito e apreço pelo fato de que Jeová deveras morava na congregação por espírito. — At 4:34, 35; 5:1-11; 1Co 3:16, 17; Ef 2:22; compare isso com 1Ti 1:20.

SAFIRA, II. Pedra preciosa transparente ou translúcida; uma variedade de coríndon. Embora haja safiras em muitas cores, as de matizes azul-escuras são as mais apreciadas. Parece que as safiras mencionadas na Bíblia eram azuis.

A safira era uma das pedras no "peitoral do julgamento" do sumo sacerdote. — Êx 28:15-18; 39:11.

Jó, que viveu aproximadamente no século 17 AEC, descreveu os esforços dos homens em escavar fundo a terra para minerar ouro e pedras preciosas, e ele mencionou a safira como estando entre as pedras raras encontradas assim. No entanto, Jó diz que, embora a safira seja valiosa e difícil de obter, a sabedoria é muito superior e não pode ser comprada com tais pedras. — Jó 28:4-6, 12, 16.

Uso Figurado. A beleza lustrosa, bem como o efeito agradável, cativante e fascinante das pedras preciosas, foi usado de modo figurado em relação com visões da glória de Deus. Depois de se instituir o pacto da Lei, Moisés, Arão, Nadabe, Abiú e 70 anciãos de Israel receberam uma visão de Jeová, e sob os pés dele "havia o que se parecia a um trabalho de lajes de safira e aos próprios céus quanto à pureza". (Êx 24:8-11) Ezequiel, em visões da glória de Jeová, observou duas vezes "a semelhança dum trono" que era "da aparência de pedra de safira". — Ez 1:1, 26-28; 10:1-4.

Quando Jeová, como Dono marital de Sião, falou da restauração e do embelezamento dela, ele disse: "Vou lançar teu alicerce com safiras." (Is 54:5, 11) De modo similar, a visão do apóstolo João, da Nova Jerusalém celestial, revelou que a safira fazia parte dos seus alicerces. — Re 21:2, 19.

SAGE. Hararita, cujo filho Jonatã era um dos poderosos de Davi. (1Cr 11:26, 34) A passagem paralela em 2 Samuel 23:32, 33, reza: "Jonatã, Samá, o hararita." Usualmente concorda-se que as palavras "filho de" de alguma forma se perderam, sendo que, inseridas, fariam o texto rezar "Jonatã, [filho de] Samá, o hararita", sendo Samá evidentemente nome alternativo de Sage.

SAL. Composto cristalino, branco, de cloreto de sódio (NaCl), conhecido como sal comum. Há na terra amplas jazidas subterrâneas de sal-gema, algumas das quais de centenas de metros de espessura. Os oceanos do mundo contêm cerca de 3,5 por cento de sais, na maior parte cloreto de sódio. Isto talvez pareça muito pouco, mas, cada quilômetro cúbico de água do mar contém quase 27 milhões de toneladas de sal. O Mar Morto (Mar Salgado), na Palestina, é cerca de nove vezes mais salgado. (Gên 14:3) Os israelitas dispunham de fácil acesso ao sal. A evaporação das águas do Mar Morto fornecia um amplo suprimento, embora de qualidade inferior. Havia morros salinos perto da extremidade S do Mar Morto, não muito longe de onde a esposa de Ló tornou-se uma coluna de sal. (Gên 19:26; Sof 2:9) Os suprimentos de sal no N da Palestina talvez procedessem, pelo menos em parte, dos fenícios, os quais, conforme se diz, o obtinham do Mediterrâneo por meio de evaporação.

Apesar de tais reservas virtualmente inesgotáveis, o sal nem sempre estava facilmente disponível ao homem. Por causa do sal, foram travadas guerras e revoluções. Na antiga China, o sal só era ultrapassado em valor pelo ouro. Esposas e filhos foram vendidos como escravos em troca do sal comum. Os soldados de César recebiam dinheiro para comprar sal, a importância sendo chamada de salarium, de que deriva a palavra portuguesa "salário". — Veja Esd 4:14.

A Bíblia menciona o sal como parte essencial da alimentação do homem, como tempero para a comida. (Jó 6:6) Sob a Lei mosaica, tudo o que era oferecido no altar a Jeová tinha de ser salgado, não por causa do sabor, mas, sem dúvida, porque o sal representava ausência de corrupção ou decomposição. (Le 2:11, 13; Ez 43:24) Evidentemente, para este fim armazenavam-se nos terrenos do templo grandes quantidades de sal. Esdras cuidou de que houvesse suficiente dele à disposição para os sacrifícios. (Esd 6:9; 7:21, 22) Relata-se que Antíoco III (c. 198 AEC), forneceu 375 medimnos (c. 20 kl) de sal para o serviço no templo.

Atribuem-se ao sal certos valores curativos, medicinais e antissépticos. Os bebês eram às vezes esfregados com sal ao nascerem. (Ez 16:4) Em quantidades limitadas, o sal é benéfico em certos solos ácidos ou quando misturado com esterco, mas, quando se permite que se acumule no solo, então mata a vegetação e a terra torna-se estéril e infrutífera, como no caso do antigamente fértil vale do Eufrates. Uma cidade condenada à destruição total era às vezes deliberadamente semeada com sal, ato que expressava o desejo de que o lugar ficasse perpetuamente infrutífero e estéril. — De 29:22, 23; Jz 9:45; Jó 39:5, 6; Je 17:6.

Uso Figurado. O sal é muitas vezes usado em sentido figurado na Bíblia. Jesus disse aos seus discípulos: "Vós sois o sal da terra", uma influência preservativa que impede a putrefação espiritual e a decadência moral dos outros. As boas novas que levavam preservariam a vida. Todavia, ele prosseguiu, dizendo-lhes: "Mas, se o sal perder a sua força, como se lhe restabelecerá a sua salinidade? Não presta mais para nada, senão para ser lançado fora, a fim de ser pisado pelos homens." (Mt 5:13; Mr 9:50; Lu 14:34, 35) Um comentador bíblico observa sobre Mateus 5:13: "O sal empregado neste país [Estados Unidos] é um composto químico — muriato de sódio — e se a sua salinidade fosse perdida, ou se ele perdesse seu sabor, nada restaria dele. Penetra na própria natureza da substância. Nos países orientais, porém, o sal usado era impuro, misturado com substâncias vegetais e outras do solo; de modo que poderia perder toda a sua salinidade, e ainda restaria considerável quantidade de matéria do solo. Isto não prestava para nada, exceto que era usado, como se diz, para ser colocado em trilhas, ou caminhos, como nós usamos cascalho. Esta espécie de sal ainda é comum naquele país. É encontrado na terra em veios ou camadas, e, quando exposto ao sol e à chuva, perde inteiramente sua salinidade." — Barnes' Notes on the New Testament (Notas sobre o Novo Testamento, de Barnes), 1974.

Visto que o sal impede a decomposição, tornou-se símbolo de estabilidade e permanência. Frequentemente, quando se celebravam pactos, os participantes comiam juntos — consumindo sal juntos — denotando perpétua lealdade e fidelidade mútua na relação pactuada. "Um pacto de sal", portanto, era considerado de muita obrigação. (Núm 18:19) Concordemente, a declaração do Rei Abias, de Judá, de que Jeová fizera "um pacto de sal" com Davi e seus filhos, significava que o pacto com a linhagem de Davi, para o reinado, era permanente. Jesus Cristo, o "filho de Davi" e "a raiz de Davi", mostra ser aquele que detém o Reino e administra seus assuntos para sempre. — 2Cr 13:4, 5; Sal 18:50; Mt 1:1; Re 5:5; Is 9:6, 7.

Jesus disse: "Porque cada um tem de ser salgado com fogo." O contexto aqui indica uma salgadura com o fogo da Geena, no caso de todos os que tropeçam, caindo numa vida de pecado, ou que são responsáveis por fazer outros tropeçar assim. — Mr 9:42-49.

Usando esta expressão para transmitir um sentido diferente, Jesus disse depois: "Tende sal em vós mesmos e mantende a paz entre vós." (Mr 9:50) O apóstolo Paulo usou sal de modo similar, dizendo: "Vossa pronunciação seja sempre com graça, temperada com sal, para que saibais como responder a cada um." (Col 4:6) A conduta e a conversa da pessoa sempre devem ser de bom gosto, atenciosas, sadias, e visar preservar a vida dos outros.

SAL, CIDADE DO. Cidade de Judá, no ermo. (Jos 15:61, 62) Ela é identificada com Khirbet Qumran (Horvat Qumeran), a uns 20 km ao L de Jerusalém, na margem NO do Mar Morto.

SAL, VALE DO. Vale onde, em duas ocasiões, os israelitas derrotaram os edomitas. (2Sa 8:13; 2Rs 14:7) Não há certeza da sua localização exata, mas os peritos, em geral, têm recomendado uma ou outra de duas localidades, uma perto de Berseba e a outra ao S do Mar Salgado.

Ao L de Berseba, no Negebe, há um vale cujo nome árabe (uádi el-Milh) significa Vale do Sal. Este é um lugar em que os de Judá, procedentes do N, e os edomitas, procedentes do SE, poderiam enfrentar-se em combate. Todavia, alguns peritos, preferindo a localização no território de Edom, identificam o bíblico Vale do Sal com uma planície ao SSO do Mar Salgado. Atualmente, a baixada ao S do Mar Salgado é bastante pantanosa e dificilmente seria um lugar escolhido para uma batalha. Mas, visto que o nível do Mar Salgado subiu, esta planície talvez fosse mais firme na época das batalhas, ou a luta talvez começasse numa parte não tão pantanosa do vale. Depois do segundo conflito, 10.000 edomitas foram mortos por serem lançados do cume dum rochedo, mas não se diz onde este se encontrava. — 2Cr 25:11, 12.

Na primeira batalha, Davi e Joabe (evidentemente tendo a Abisai como encarregado pelo menos de algumas tropas) abateram 18.000 edomitas no Vale do Sal. (2Sa 8:13; 1Rs 11:15; 1Cr 18:12; Sal 60:cab) Mais tarde, o Rei Amazias (858-830 AEC) atacou e matou 10.000 edomitas no mesmo vale, a que se seguiu a execução de 10.000 edomitas capturados, bem como a captura de Sela, a fortaleza edomita. — 2Rs 14:7; 2Cr 25:11, 12; veja EDOM, EDOMITAS.

SALA DE SOBRADO. Veja CASA.

SALAI.

1. Nome que consta na lista de benjamitas que moravam em Jerusalém depois do exílio babilônico. — Ne 11:4, 7, 8.

2. Casa paterna sacerdotal nos dias de Joiaquim, sucessor do sumo sacerdote Jesua. (Ne 12:12, 20) Presumivelmente, o nome é grafado Salu em Neemias 12:7.

SALAMANDRA [hebr.: leta·'áh]. Trata-se dum pequeno anfíbio de cauda, parecido a uma lagartixa, mas sem escamas e revestido de pele macia, úmida e fina. É aparentada com a rã e está alistada entre as criaturas impuras da Lei mosaica. (Le 11:29, 30) O tritão (Triturus vittatus) da Ásia Menor e da Síria se distingue por uma lista preta em ambos os lados do corpo. Reproduzido na água, passa a viver em terra por dois ou três anos depois de perder as guelras, daí retorna à água para o resto da sua vida.

SALAMINA. Importante cidade de Chipre. Paulo, Barnabé e João Marcos 'publicaram a palavra de Deus' ali, logo no início da primeira viagem missionária de Paulo, por volta de 47 EC. Não se declara quanto tempo ficaram na cidade. Parece que havia uma grande população judaica em Salamina, visto que possuía mais de uma sinagoga. — At 13:2-5.

Salamina é usualmente identificada com as ruínas encontradas a uns 5 km ao N da atual cidade de Famagusta. Isto a colocaria na ponta L duma grande planície fértil, logo ao N do rio Pedias (Pediaeus). Salamina ficava assim, através do mar Mediterrâneo, a uns 200 km ao OSO de Selêucia, de onde Paulo havia partido da Síria. Embora a Bíblia não diga especificamente que o navio em que Paulo viajava ancorasse num porto em Salamina, a cidade tinha antigamente um bom porto, que agora é assoreado.

Parece que Salamina estava ligada pelo menos por uma estrada com Pafos, na outra ponta da ilha. Isto pode ter facilitado a viagem de Paulo e seus associados ao pregarem através de "toda a ilha até Pafos". — At 13:4-6.

Barnabé e João Marcos provavelmente visitaram Salamina de novo por volta de 49 EC. — At 15:36-39.

SALÁRIO, REMUNERAÇÃO. Em geral, a compensação paga aos trabalhadores pelo seu trabalho ou serviço. (Le 19:13) O verbo "contratar" significa empregar alguém (Mt 20:1) ou alugar algo. (Êx 22:14, 15; At 28:30) "Salário" pode ser sinônimo de "recompensa". Por exemplo, o salário ou a recompensa do Rei Nabucodorosor (Nabucodonosor) pelo serviço que prestou como executor da parte de Jeová na destruição de Tiro foi a conquista do Egito e toda a sua riqueza a ser saqueada por ele. (Ez 29:18, 19; veja também Ru 2:12; Is 61:8; 62:11.) Em cumprimento de Zacarias 11:12, Judas Iscariotes recebeu dos sacerdotes 30 moedas de prata (se foram siclos, US$ 66) como "salário" para trair Jesus Cristo. (Mt 26:14-16; 27:3-10; At 1:18; veja SUBORNO.) Também, "salário" às vezes denota "recompensa". "O salário pago pelo pecado é a morte." — Ro 6:23; veja também Sal 109:20; Is 65:6, 7.

O salário não era pago só em forma de dinheiro ou de prata (2Cr 24:11, 12; 25:6), mas também em animais domésticos, produtos agrícolas, e assim por diante. O salário de Jacó, por 14 anos de trabalho, foram suas duas esposas, Leia e Raquel. Além disso, ele serviu seis anos por uma parte estipulada do rebanho de Labão. (Gên 29:15, 18, 27; 31:41) Leia, ao dar a Raquel as mandrágoras do seu filho, 'contratou' Jacó para ter relações sexuais com ela, e por este motivo chamou o filho que deu à luz de "salário dum contratado". (Gên 30:14-18) Na época do ministério terrestre de Jesus, a costumeira diária paga aos trabalhadores agrícolas evidentemente era um denário (US$ 0,74). — Mt 20:2.

A lei de Deus para Israel exigia que os trabalhadores contratados fossem pagos no fim do dia de trabalho. (Le 19:13; De 24:14, 15) As Escrituras censuram severamente aqueles que lidam desonestamente com o salário dos trabalhadores contratados. — Je 22:13; Mal 3:5; Tg 5:4.

É preciso ter cuidado ao contratar alguém, para ter certeza de que o contratado seja competente.

Daí o provérbio: "Como o arqueiro que traspassa tudo é aquele que contrata alguém estúpido ou aquele que contrata transeuntes." — Pr 26:10.

A hospitalidade e ajuda material dada aos devotados exclusivamente aos interesses da adoração pura podem ser chamadas de salário devido a eles, segundo o princípio: "O trabalhador é digno de seu salário." (Lu 10:7; 1Ti 5:17, 18) Os dízimos dos israelitas constituíam o salário dos levitas pelos serviços que prestavam no santuário. (Núm 18:26, 30, 31) Por outro lado, uma posição justa perante Deus, e a vida eterna, não são concedidas como salário aos que servem a Deus, mas são dádivas resultantes da benignidade imerecida de Deus, por meio de Jesus Cristo, porque Seus servos exercem fé no sacrifício resgatador de Cristo. — Ro 4:2-8; 6:23.

Negligenciarem o santuário nos dias do profeta Ageu resultou em Jeová reter sua bênção, de modo que os que se assalariavam faziam isso por "uma bolsa furada", isto é, o salário recebido era pouco e rapidamente gasto. (Ag 1:3-6) Daí, com respeito aos dias antes da restauração do templo, Jeová disse por meio de Zacarias: "Pois antes daqueles dias não se fizera existir salário para o gênero humano; e quanto ao salário dos animais domésticos, não havia tal coisa." — Za 8:9, 10; veja DÁDIVAS, PRESENTES; DONS DADOS POR DEUS; TRABALHADOR CONTRATADO.

Em contraste com a palavra hebraica sa·khár (que usualmente significa salário no sentido de remuneração paga por trabalho ou serviços prestados), a palavra hebraica 'eth·nán, da raiz na·thán (dar), é usada nas Escrituras exclusivamente com respeito à paga obtida com a prostituição, literal ou figurada. Esta última é assim encarada como presente, em vez de como salário ganho por trabalho, e em geral é usada em sentido pejorativo. A Lei proibia levar ao santuário, para um voto, "a paga duma meretriz" ou "o preço dum cão", referindo-se esta última expressão provavelmente à paga recebida por um homossexual masculino. (De 23:18) Em vista disso, a menção de a paga de Tiro, pela prostituição com as nações, tornar-se algo sagrado para Jeová evidentemente significa que o Altíssimo santificaria o ganho material que Tiro derivou dela no sentido de ele cuidar de que fosse usado segundo a Sua vontade, fazendo-o resultar em benefício dos Seus servos. (Is 23:17, 18; compare isso com Ne 13:16.) Tanto Judá como Israel eram culpados de se prostituírem com outras nações. (Ez 23:1-16; Os 9:1; Miq 1:6, 7) Mas Deus denunciou especificamente Jerusalém por algo incomum neste respeito. Dessemelhante das meretrizes que são pagas, Jerusalém até mesmo pagava às nações que cometiam prostituição com ela. — Ez 16:26-34, 41.

SALECÁ. Cidade nos limites orientais de Basã e parte do domínio de Ogue. Tomada por Israel sob Moisés, Salecá passou a ser habitada por gaditas. (De 3:8, 10; Jos 12:4, 5; 13:8, 11; 1Cr 5:11) Costuma ser identificada com Salkhad, situada numa extensão meridional de Jebel ed Druz (Jebel Hauran), a uns 100 km ao ESE da extremidade S do mar da Galileia.

SALÉM [Paz]. Cidade antiga em que Melquisedeque era rei e sacerdote. (Gên 14:18) A grafia hebraica de "Salém", incorporada no nome Jerusalém, sugere uma forma dual, e, portanto, a palavra pode ser definida como "Paz Dupla". Que o nome significa "Paz" é confirmado pelas palavras inspiradas de Hebreus 7:2.

A antiga tradição judaica identifica Salém com Jerusalém, e a evidência bíblica apoia isso. Abraão se encontrou com o rei de Sodoma e Melquisedeque na "Baixada do rei". Visto que Absalão, filho do Rei Davi, erigiu ali mais tarde um monumento, esta baixada deve ter estado perto de Jerusalém, a capital do reino. (Gên 14:17, 18; 2Sa 18:18) A palavra "Salém", na realidade, está incorporada no nome "Jeru*salém*", e o salmista o usa em paralelo com "Sião". (Sal 76:2) Também, era apropriado Melquisedeque ser rei e sacerdote no mesmíssimo lugar em que, mais tarde, os reis da linhagem davídica e o sacerdócio levítico serviram, e onde Jesus Cristo, o escolhido para ser rei e sacerdote "à maneira de Melquisedeque", foi oferecido em sacrifício. — He 3:1; 7:1-3, 15-17.

SALEQUETE. Portão situado ao O do santuário em Jerusalém. — 1Cr 26:16.

SALGADO, MAR. Veja MAR SALGADO.

SALGUEIRO [hebr.: tsaf·tsa·fáh]. O nome desta árvore em hebraico corresponde ao árabe safsaf, aplicado ao salgueiro. Há dois tipos de salgueiro crescendo em Israel; um é chamado pelo termo botânico de Salix alba, mas o mais comum é o Salix acmophylla.

A palavra hebraica ocorre apenas uma vez, em Ezequiel 17:5, onde a simbólica "semente da terra", evidentemente referindo-se a Zedequias, é figuradamente plantada pelo rei de Babilônia como "salgueiro junto a vastas águas". Os salgueiros são encontrados ao longo das margens de rios e de riachos, e em outros lugares úmidos, onde as mudinhas brotam rapidamente e se desenvolvem depressa. Eles nunca atingem a altura dos choupos, mas crescem como arbustos ou pequenas árvores, e frequentemente formam moitas ao longo dos cursos de água. Sua beleza consiste nas longas folhas delgadas, graciosamente pendentes de galhos e ramos finos.

SALIM. Nome dum lugar, em João 3:23, mencionado para ajudar localizar Enom, onde João, o Batizador, imergia pessoas. Portanto, Salim deve ter sido bem conhecido naquele tempo. Atualmente, sua localização é incerta, mas sugeriu-se Tell Ridgha (Tel Shalem), a uns 12 km ao S de Bete-Seã, como possível identificação. — Veja ENOM.

SALISA. "Terra" ou distrito percorrido por Saul na busca das jumentas de seu pai (1Sa 9:3, 4), provavelmente a região em que ficava Baal-Salisa. (2Rs 4:42) Este último lugar é identificado com Kafr Thulth, a uns 20 km ao NO de Gilgal. — Veja BAAL-SALISA.

SALIVA (CUSPIDA, ESCARRO). Cuspir é lançar saliva da boca. Cuspir em alguém, ou na face dele, era um ato de extremo desprezo, inimizade ou indignação, humilhando a vítima. (Núm 12:14) Jó, na sua adversidade, foi alvo de tal demonstração de desprezo. (Jó 17:6; 30:10) Em humilhação pública do homem, em Israel, que se negasse a realizar o casamento de cunhado, sob a Lei mosaica, a viúva rejeitada devia tirar a sandália do pé do homem e cuspir-lhe na face, na presença dos anciãos da cidade dele. — De 25:7-10.

Cuspiram em Jesus Cristo quando esteve perante o Sinédrio (Mt 26:59-68; Mr 14:65) e também os soldados romanos o fizeram após o julgamento dele por Pilatos. (Mt 27:27-30; Mr 15:19) Jesus predissera que sofreria tal tratamento de desprezo (Mr 10:32-34; Lu 18:31, 32), e isso cumpriu as palavras proféticas: "Não escondi a minha face de coisas humilhantes e do escarro." — Is 50:6.

Em contraste, o registro bíblico menciona três ocasiões em que Jesus Cristo usou a sua saliva para curar milagrosamente pessoas. (Mr 7:31-37; 8:22-26; Jo 9:1-7) Visto que o resultado era milagroso e os milagres de Jesus foram realizados sob o poder do espírito de Deus, usar Cristo nestes casos a sua própria saliva não era simplesmente a aplicação eficaz de um agente curativo natural.

SALMA.

1. Descendente de Judá e antepassado de Davi. (1Cr 2:3-5, 9-15) Ele é também chamado Salmom. — Ru 4:12, 18-22; Lu 3:32; veja SALMOM.

2. Antepassado daqueles que se estabeleceram em lugares tais como Belém, Netofa e Atrote-Bete-Joabe. (1Cr 2:51, 54) Salma era filho de Hur, no ramo calebita da genealogia de Judá. — 1Cr 2:4, 5, 9, 18, 19, 50, 51.

SALMÃ [duma raiz que significa "fazer paz; compensar, retribuir"]. O assolador da casa de Arbel, mencionado por Oseias ao profetizar contra o reino setentrional, sem fé, de Israel. Embora não se mencionem mais nem Salmã nem Arbel na Bíblia, a menção incidental, mas enfática, deles por Oseias sugere que o incidente estava bem fresco na memória de seus ouvintes. — Os 10:14.

A inscrição de Tiglate-Pileser III, num prédio, menciona um príncipe de Moabe chamado Salamanu, mas não há nenhuma base histórica para associá-lo com uma assolação em Israel. — Ancient Near Eastern Texts (Textos Antigos do Oriente Próximo), editado por J. Pritchard, 1974, p. 282.

Por isso, acha-se em geral que Salmã seja uma forma abreviada de "Salmaneser", nome de cinco reis assírios. Salmaneser V emerge como o mais provável mencionado aqui, pois, perto do fim do período de profetizar de Oseias, Salmaneser V invadiu Israel e sitiou Samaria.

SALMAI. Um dos netineus cujos descendentes retornaram a Jerusalém em 537 AEC. — Esd 2:1, 2, 43, 46; Ne 7:48.

SALMANESER [ou: Salmanasar; do acadiano, significando: "Sulmã [deus assírio] É Superior"]. Cinco diferentes monarcas assírios levavam este nome; no entanto, apenas dois deles parecem ter tido contato direto com Israel: Salmaneser III e Salmaneser V. Só este último é realmente mencionado no relato bíblico.

1. Salmaneser III sucedeu ao pai Assurnasirpal II no trono assírio. Numa inscrição, ele chama a si mesmo de "o rei do mundo, o rei sem rival, o 'Grande Dragão', o (único) poder dentro dos (quatro) cantos (da terra)". (Ancient Near Eastern Texts [Textos Antigos do Oriente Próximo], editado por J. Pritchard, 1974, p. 276) Acredita-se que ele governou por cerca de 35 anos. Trinta e um desses anos parecem ter sido gastos em campanhas de guerra para manter e estender o domínio assírio. Salmaneser III fez repetidos avanços ao O contra os reinos arameus na Síria.

Sua Inscrição Supostamente Envolve Acabe. Na Inscrição Monolítica de Salmaneser III fornece-se uma descrição da batalha de Carcar (perto de Hamate, no vale do Orontes), travada no sexto ano do reinado de Salmaneser. Os assírios combateram ali uma coalizão inimiga de 12 reis, principalmente sírios. Todavia, na lista consta um chamado A-ha-ab-bu matSir-'i-la-a-a. Este nome é traduzido regularmente por "Acabe, o israelita", em atuais obras de referência. (Veja Ancient Near Eastern Texts, p. 279.) A participação de Acabe na batalha como aliado dos sírios é popularmente aceita como fato. Todavia, a Bíblia não faz nenhuma menção deste evento, e apesar da aparente similaridade de nomes, há sérios motivos para se duvidar da identificação de A-ha-ab-bu matSir-'i-la-a-a com o Acabe de Israel. A Encyclopædia Biblica (Enciclopédia Bíblica; Londres, 1899, Vol. I, col. 91) diz: "O nome de Ahabbu Sir'lai, o qual, conforme a maioria dos peritos concorda agora, só pode significar Acabe de Israel (ou, conforme Hommel acha, de Jezreel)." (O grifo é nosso.) Isto mostra que essa identificação nem sempre foi tão geralmente aceita como hoje, e mostra também que a tradução de matSir-'i-la-a-a como "israelita" também estivera sujeita a dúvidas. Pode-se notar que matSir-'i-la-a-a não é o termo usado em outras inscrições assírias para se referir ao reino setentrional de Israel. Em outras inscrições assírias da época, a terra ou é chamada pelo nome da sua capital, Samaria (Sa-me-ri-na, nas inscrições) ou por Bit Hu-um-ri-ia (terra de Onri), expressão ainda usada um século depois da morte de Onri. — Ancient Near Eastern Texts, pp. 284, 285.

Inscrições de Salmaneser mostram que ele, no 18.º ano do seu domínio, ou 12 anos depois da batalha de Carcar, lutou contra Hazael, de Damasco, e também que: "Naquela época recebi o tributo dos habitantes de Tiro, de Sídon, e de Jeú, filho de Onri." (Ancient Near Eastern Texts, p. 280) De modo que a identificação de A-ha-ab-bu com o Rei Acabe cria uma contradição na cronologia bíblica, que mostra que entre a morte de Acabe e o reinado de Jeú houve um período intermediário de aproximadamente 14 anos, abrangendo os reinados de Acazias e de Jeorão. (1Rs 22:51; 2Rs 3:1) Embora a maioria dos comentadores colocaria a suposta participação de Acabe na aliança síria perto do fim do seu reinado, isto ainda não se enquadra na estrutura da cronologia da Bíblia. Reconhecendo este problema, os peritos Kamphausen e Kittel ofereceram a sugestão de que o nome de Acabe foi confundido com o de Jeorão, nos registros assírios. (Dictionary of the Bible [Dicionário da Bíblia], de Hastings, 1904, Vol. I, p. 53) No entanto, não há na Bíblia nenhum registro de tal participação de Jeorão na batalha de Carcar.

É também difícil de explicar por que Acabe se uniria aos empedernidos inimigos de Israel em tal coalizão. Neste respeito, The Encyclopedia Americana (A Enciclopédia Americana; 1956, Vol. I, p. 269) diz: "Encontramos [Acabe] estranhamente aliado ao seu antigo inimigo Benadade contra Salmaneser (q.v.) da Assíria, embora fosse de supor que ele ficaria contente de ver Benadade esmagado, e a Assíria não constituía um perigo imediato." Acabe, pouco tempo antes, travara duas guerras com os sírios, e embora houvesse um breve período de não agressão entre Israel e a Síria, no terceiro ano daquele período Acabe teve um conflito final com eles, perdendo a vida. (1Rs 22:1-4, 34-37) Os esforços para explicar seu suposto ingresso na coalizão síria, quer como aliado voluntário, quer sob compulsão, não são convincentes.

Por fim, a grande força atribuída a A-ha-ab-bu na inscrição de Salmaneser não combina com as indicações bíblicas do equipamento de guerra de Israel. A-ha-ab-bu é alistado como trazendo consigo "2.000 carros de guerra", mais do que qualquer outro rei na aliança. Reconhecendo esta dificuldade, os defensores da identificação de A-ha-ab-bu com o Rei Acabe só aumentam o problema por sugerir uma adicional união estranha de contingentes judeus, tírios, edomitas e até mesmo moabitas com as forças de Acabe, para preencher o número necessário de carros. (Encyclopædia Biblica, Vol. I, col. 92; The Encyclopædia Britannica [A Enciclopédia Britânica], 1910, Vol. I, p. 429) Deve-se notar que mesmo o poderoso Rei Salomão, no seu reinado, só possuía 1.400 carros de guerra. — 1Rs 10:26.

Obelisco de Salmaneser, mostrando Jeú (ou mais provavelmente seu emissário) pagando tributo ao rei assírio.

Em vista de todos os pontos já mencionados, parece inteiramente possível que a tradução de A-ha-ab-bu matSir-'i-la-a-a por "Acabe, o israelita", não é a tradução correta, e que os decifradores da inscrição talvez estivessem ansiosos demais para ver no nome uma associação com uma figura conhecida da história. Deve-se notar que, na mesma inscrição, faz-se menção de "Musri", e embora este termo, em outros lugares, é usado para se referir ao Egito, os tradutores rejeitam tal ligação como ilógica e sugerem que o nome "provavelmente se refere a um país no sul da Ásia Menor". (Ancient Near Eastern Texts, p 279, n 9) Parece haver motivos igualmente bons para se encarar a relação de matSir-'i-la-a-a com Israel como ilógica. O tempo talvez comprove isso.

Os principais líderes da coalizão síria que Salmaneser III enfrentou em Carcar parecem ter sido o Rei Adad-idri, de Damasco, e o Rei Irhuleni, de Hamate. Salmaneser afirma ter obtido uma grande vitória na batalha, mas o resultado pelo visto não foi suficientemente decisivo para permitir um avanço assírio adicional no O. De modo que se alistam batalhas adicionais contra Adad-idri, de Damasco, em anos seguintes.

Inscrições a Respeito de Hazael e Jeú. Em cumprimento da profecia de Jeová dada por meio de Eliseu, Hazael, camarista do Rei Ben-Hadade, de Damasco, matou seu amo e tornou-se rei, provavelmente perto do fim do reinado do Rei Jeorão (c. 917-905 AEC). (2Rs 8:7-15) Uma inscrição de Salmaneser III confirma isso, declarando: "(O próprio) Hadadezer [Adad-idri, evidentemente Ben-Hadade II, de Damasco] pereceu. Hazael, um plebeu (lit.: filho de ninguém), apoderou-se do trono." Mencionam-se conflitos com Hazael no 18.º e no 21.º ano de Salmaneser, nos quais os assírios obtiveram vitórias, mas nunca conseguiram tomar Damasco. — Ancient Near Eastern Texts, p. 280.

O nome do Rei Jeú, de Israel (c. 904-877 AEC) consta também no Obelisco Negro de Salmaneser (agora no Museu Britânico), acompanhando um relevo que retrata o que parece ser um embaixador de Jeú ajoelhado diante do rei assírio e trazendo-lhe presentes. A inscrição declara: "O tributo de Jeú (Ia-ú-a), filho de Onri (Hu-um-ri) [querendo dizer sucessor de Onri]; dele recebi prata, ouro, uma tigela-saplu de ouro, um vaso de ouro com fundo pontiagudo, taças sem pé, de ouro, baldes de ouro, estanho, um bastão para o rei." (Ancient Near Eastern Texts, p. 281) Este tributo não é mencionado no relato bíblico a respeito de Jeú, e embora tal ação bem possivelmente fosse tomada pelo rei israelita, em vista das condições descritas em 2 Reis 10:31-33, nunca se deve presumir que os egotísticos monarcas assírios estivessem acima de expressarem grandes exageros, tanto nas suas inscrições como nos seus relevos entalhados.

2. Salmaneser V foi o sucessor de Tiglate-Pileser III. No que se refere aos registros seculares, seu reinado é obscuro. Ele parece estar alistado como rei de Babilônia por cinco anos, sob o nome de Ululaia. (Ancient Near Eastern Texts, p. 272, n 4) Josefo também cita o historiador Menandro como descrevendo um sítio de Tiro por Salmaneser V. (Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], IX, 283-287 [xiv, 2]) Fora disso, a Bíblia é a principal fonte de informações sobre este rei.

Dominação de Israel. Durante o reinado do Rei Oseias, de Israel (c. 758-740 AEC), Salmaneser V invadiu a Palestina e Oseias tornou-se seu vassalo sob a imposição de um tributo anual. (2Rs 17:1-3) Todavia, numa época posterior, Oseias deixou de pagar o tributo e foi descoberto conspirando com o Rei Sô, do Egito. (Veja Sô.) Por causa disso, Salmaneser pôs Oseias em detenção e depois sitiou Samaria por três anos, após o que a cidade bem fortificada por fim caiu, e os israelitas foram levados ao exílio. — 2Rs 17:4-6; 18:9-12; compare isso com Os 7:11; Ez 23:4-10.

O registro bíblico não menciona especificamente o nome do rei assírio que por fim capturou Samaria. — Veja SARGÃO.

Com a queda de Samaria, em 740 AEC, o domínio de 257 anos do reino de dez tribos de Israel terminou.

SALMOM. Filho do maioral Nasom, de Judá, nascido provavelmente durante a peregrinação de 40 anos no ermo. Salmom casou-se com Raabe, de Jericó, com quem gerou Boaz. Portanto, ele foi um elo na genealogia que levou a Davi e a Jesus. (Núm 2:3; Ru 4:20-22; Mt 1:4, 5; Lu 3:32) Em 1 Crônicas 2:11, ele é chamado de Salma. Todavia, este Salmom, descendente de Rão, cuja progênie morava em Belém, não deve ser confundido com o Salma mencionado em 1 Crônicas 2:51, 54, como "pai" ou construtor de Belém, porque este último era descendente do irmão de Rão, Calebe. — Veja 1Cr 2:9, 18.

SALMONE. Promontório de Creta, geralmente identificado com o cabo Sidero, na extremidade L da ilha. Paulo navegou ao longo de Salmone, por volta de 58 EC, em caminho para Roma, para ser julgado. Todavia, fortes ventos aparentemente impediam que o navio, vindo de Cnido, seguisse pelo N de Creta, passando pela ponta meridional da Grécia e daí para Roma. Obrigados a seguir pelo sul, o navio passou por Salmone e então ob-teve alguma proteção contra o vento, enquanto navegava ao longo do litoral meridional de Creta. — At 27:7.

SALMOS, LIVRO DE. Livro que parece consistir em cinco coleções de cânticos sagrados — (1) Sal 1-41; (2) 42-72; (3) 73-89; (4) 90-106; (5) 107-150 — cada coleção terminando com uma bênção proferida sobre Jeová. Segundo o seu lugar no livro, os respectivos salmos, desde tempos antigos, evidentemente eram conhecidos por número. Por exemplo, o que é agora chamado de "segundo salmo" também era chamado assim no primeiro século EC. — At 13:33.

Estilo. A poesia do livro dos Salmos consiste em ideias ou expressões paralelas. (Veja HEBRAICO [Poesia Hebraica].) Característicos são os salmos acrósticos, ou alfabéticos. (Sal 9, 10, 25, 34, 37, 111, 112, 119, 145) Nestes salmos, o versículo ou versículos iniciais da primeira estrofe começam com a letra hebraica 'á·lef (álefe), o(s) versículo(s) seguinte(s) com behth (bete), e assim por diante, passando por todas ou quase todas as letras do alfabeto hebraico. Este arranjo talvez servisse de auxílio para a memória. Sobre a terminologia encontrada no livro dos Salmos, veja ALAMOTE; GITITE; HIGAIOM; MAALATE, II; MASQUIL; MICTÃO; MUTE-LABÉM; NEILOTE; SELÁ, I; SEMINITE; SUBIDAS.

Cabeçalhos. Os cabeçalhos, ou epígrafes, que se encontram no início de muitos dos salmos identificam o escritor, fornecem matéria de fundo, dão instruções musicais, ou indicam o uso ou o objetivo do salmo. (Veja os cabeçalhos do Sal 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 30, 38, 60, 92, 102.) Ocasionalmente, os cabeçalhos fornecem as informações necessárias para se acharem outros textos que esclarecem determinado salmo. (Compare o Sal 51 com 2Sa 11:2-15; 12:1-14.) Visto que outras partes poéticas da Bíblia muitas vezes são introduzidas de modo similar (Êx 15:1; De 31:30; 33:1; Jz 5:1; compare 2Sa 22:1 com o cabeçalho do Sal 18), isto sugere que os cabeçalhos foram originados quer pelos escritores, quer pelos colecionadores dos salmos. O que dá apoio a isso é que, já no tempo da escrita dos Rolos do Mar Morto dos Salmos (entre 30 e 50 EC), os cabeçalhos faziam parte do texto principal.

Escritores. Dentre os 150 salmos, os cabeçalhos atribuem 73 a Davi, 11 aos filhos de Corá (um deles [Sal 88] também menciona Hemã), 12 a Asafe (evidentemente referindo-se à família de Asafe; veja ASAFE N.º 1), um a Moisés, um a Salomão e um a Etã, o ezraíta. Além disso, o Salmo 72 é "referente a Salomão" e parece ter sido escrito por Davi. (Veja Sal 72:20.) À base de Atos 4:25 e Hebreus 4:7, é evidente que os Salmos 2 e 95 foram escritos por Davi. Os Salmos 10, 43, 71 e 91 parecem ser continuações dos Salmos 9, 42, 70 e 90 respectivamente. Portanto, os Salmos 10 e 71 podem ser atribuídos a Davi, o Salmo 43, aos filhos de Corá, e o Salmo 91, a Moisés. Há indícios de que o Salmo 119 talvez fosse escrito pelo jovem príncipe Ezequias. (Note Sal 119:9, 10, 23, 46, 99, 100.) Isto deixa mais de 40 salmos sem menção ou indicação dum compositor específico.

Os salmos individuais foram escritos durante um período de cerca de 1.000 anos, desde o tempo de Moisés até depois do retorno do exílio babilônico. — Sal 90:cab.; 126:1, 2; 137:1, 8.

Compilação. Visto que Davi compôs muitos deles e organizou os músicos levitas em 24 grupos de serviço, é razoável concluir que ele tenha começado uma coleção desses cânticos a serem usados no santuário. (2Sa 23:1; 1Cr 25:1-31; 2Cr 29:25-30) Depois disso, devem ter sido feitas outras coleções, conforme se pode deduzir das repetições encontradas no livro. (Compare Sal 14 com 53; 40:13-17 com 70; 57:7-11 com 108:1-5.) Diversos peritos acreditam que Esdras foi responsável pelo arranjo do livro dos Salmos na forma final.

Há evidência de que o conteúdo do livro dos Salmos já estava estabelecido bem cedo. A ordem e o conteúdo do livro na Septuaginta grega concorda basicamente com o texto hebraico. Portanto, é razoável que o livro dos Salmos já estivesse completo no terceiro século AEC, quando se iniciou o trabalho nesta tradução grega. Um fragmento do texto hebraico, em uso no terceiro quarto do primeiro século EC, que contém o Salmo 150:1-6, é logo seguido por uma coluna em branco. Isto parece indicar que este antigo manuscrito hebraico terminava o livro dos Salmos neste ponto, e assim também corresponde ao texto massorético.

Preservação Exata do Texto. O Rolo do Mar Morto dos Salmos oferece evidência da preservação exata do texto hebraico. Embora seja uns 900 anos mais antigo do que o geralmente aceito texto massorético, o conteúdo deste rolo (41 salmos canônicos, inteiros ou em parte) corresponde basicamente ao texto em que se baseia a maioria das traduções. O Professor J. A. Sanders observou: "A maioria [das variações] são ortográficas, e só importam para os peritos interessados em indícios quanto à pronúncia do hebraico na antiguidade, e em assuntos deste tipo. . . . Algumas variações se recomendam, de imediato, como aprimoramentos do texto, em especial as que oferecem um texto hebraico mais claro, porém, fazem pouca ou nenhuma diferença quanto à tradução ou à interpretação." — The Dead Sea Psalms Scroll (O Rolo do Mar Morto dos Salmos), 1967, p. 15.

Inspirado por Deus. Não pode haver dúvida de que o livro dos Salmos faz parte da Palavra inspirada de Deus. Está em plena harmonia com o restante das Escrituras. Ideias comparáveis são muitas vezes encontradas em outras partes da Bíblia. (Compare o Sal 1 com Je 17:5-8; Sal 49:12 com Ec 3:19 e 2Pe 2:12; Sal 49:17 com Lu 12:20, 21.) Também, muitas são as citações dos Salmos encontradas nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs. — Sal 5:9 (Ro 3:13); 8:6 (1Co 15:27; Ef 1:22); 10:7 (Ro 3:14); 14:1-3; 53:1-3 (Ro 3:10-12); 19:4 (Ro 10:18); 24:1 (1Co 10:26); 32:1, 2 (Ro 4:7, 8); 36:1 (Ro 3:18); 44:22 (Ro 8:36); 50:14 (Mt 5:33); 51:4 (Ro 3:4); 56:4, 11; 118:6 (He 13:6); 62:12 (Ro 2:6); 69:22, 23 (Ro 11:9, 10); 78:24 (Jo 6:31); 94:11 (1Co 3:20); 95:7-11 (He 3:7-11, 15; 4:3-7); 102:25-27 (He 1:10-12); 104:4 (He 1:7); 112:9 (2Co 9:9); 116:10 (2Co 4:13); 144:3 (He 2:6), e outros.

Davi escreveu a respeito de si mesmo: "Foi o espírito de Jeová que falou por meu intermédio, e a sua palavra estava na minha língua." (2Sa 23:2) Esta inspiração é confirmada pelo apóstolo Pedro (At 1:15, 16), pelo escritor da carta aos hebreus (He 3:7, 8; 4:7) e por outros cristãos do primeiro século (At 4:23-25). O mais notável testemunho é o do Filho de Deus. (Lu 20:41-44) Depois da sua ressurreição, ele disse aos seus discípulos: "Estas são as minhas palavras que vos falei enquanto ainda estava convosco, que todas as coisas escritas na lei de Moisés, e nos Profetas, e nos Salmos [o primeiro livro dos Hagiógrafos, ou Escritos Sagrados, que assim dá seu nome a toda esta seção], a respeito de mim, têm de se cumprir." — Lu 24:44.

Preditas as experiências e atividades do Messias. Um exame das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs revela que grande parte das atividades e experiências do Messias foi predita nos Salmos, conforme os seguintes exemplos demonstrarão:

Quando Jesus se apresentou para o batismo, ele indicou que viera para fazer a "vontade" do seu Pai relacionada com o sacrifício do seu próprio corpo 'preparado' e com respeito à eliminação dos sacrifícios de animais oferecidos segundo a Lei, conforme está escrito no Salmo 40:6-8. (He 10:5-10) Jeová aceitou a apresentação que Jesus fez de si mesmo, derramando sobre ele Seu espírito e reconhecendo-o como Seu Filho, conforme predito no Salmo 2:7. (Mr 1:9-11; He 1:5; 5:5) Também, conforme predito no Salmo 8:4-6, o homem Jesus era "um pouco menor que os anjos". — He 2:6-8.

No decorrer do seu ministério, ele ajuntou e treinou discípulos. Não se envergonhava de chamá-los de "irmãos", conforme se escrevera no Salmo 22:22. (He 2:11, 12; compare isso com Mt 12:46-50; Jo 20:17.) De acordo com o que se predissera nos Salmos, Jesus falava com ilustrações (Sal 78:2; Mt 13:35), mostrou ter zelo pela casa de Jeová por limpá-la do comercialismo, e não agradou a si mesmo. (Sal 69:9; Jo 2:13-17; Ro 15:3) No entanto, foi odiado sem causa. (Sal 35:19; 69:4; Jo 15:25) O ministério de Cristo Jesus a favor dos judeus circuncisos serviu para confirmar as promessas feitas aos antepassados deles, e, mais tarde, induziu pessoas das nações a glorificar e louvar a Jeová. Isto também fora predito. — Sal 18:49; 117:1; Ro 15:9, 11.

Quando Jesus entrou em Jerusalém montado num jumentinho, multidões o aclamaram com as palavras do Salmo 118:26. (Mt 21:9) Quando os principais sacerdotes e os escribas objetaram ao que meninos no templo diziam em reconhecimento de Jesus como "o Filho de Davi", Jesus silenciou os opositores religiosos por citar o Salmo 8:2. — Mt 21:15, 16.

O livro dos Salmos indicava que Jesus seria traído por um associado íntimo (Sal 41:9; Jo 13:18), o qual, conforme predito, seria substituído. (Sal 69:25; 109:8; At 1:20) Até mesmo fora predito que os governantes (Herodes e Pôncio Pilatos) se alinhariam contra Jesus com homens das nações (tais como os soldados romanos), e com povos de Israel (Sal 2:1, 2; At 4:24-28), assim como também fora predito que ele seria rejeitado pelos construtores religiosos, judeus. (Sal 118:22, 23; Mt 21:42; Mr 12:10, 11; At 4:11) E testemunhas falsas testificaram contra ele, conforme predisse o Salmo 27:12. — Mt 26:59-61.

Ao chegar ao lugar em que seria pregado na estaca, ofereceram a Jesus vinho misturado com fel. (Sal 69:21; Mt 27:34) Fazendo uma alusão profética ao próprio ato de Jesus ser pregado na estaca, o salmista escreveu: "Cercaram-me cães; rodeou-me a assembleia dos próprios malfeitores. Iguais a um leão atacam as minhas mãos e os meus pés." (Sal 22:16) Os soldados romanos repartiram a roupa de Jesus por lançar sortes. (Sal 22:18; Mt 27:35; Lu 23:34; Jo 19:24) Seus inimigos religiosos caçoaram dele com as palavras registradas pelo salmista. (Sal 22:8; Mt 27:41-43) Sofrendo sede intensa, Jesus pediu algo para beber. (Sal 22:15; Jo 19:28) Novamente ofereceram-lhe vinho acre. (Sal 69:21; Mt 27:48; Jo 19:29, 30) Pouco antes de morrer, Jesus clamou, citando o Salmo 22:1: "Deus meu, Deus meu, por que me abandonaste?" (Mt 27:46; Mr 15:34) Com o último suspiro, ele usou o Salmo 31:5 ao dizer: "Pai, às tuas mãos confio o meu espírito." (Lu 23:46) Conforme o salmista predissera adicionalmente, não se lhe quebrou nenhum osso. — Sal 34:20; Jo 19:33, 36.

Embora fosse deitado num túmulo, Jesus não foi abandonado no Hades, nem viu a sua carne a corrupção, mas ele foi levantado dentre os mortos. (Sal 16:8-10; At 2:25-31; 13:35-37) Quando ascendeu ao céu, foi assentado à mão direita de Deus, aguardando que seus inimigos fossem postos como escabelo para os seus pés. (Sal 110:1; At 2:34, 35) Ele tornou-se também sacerdote à

DESTAQUES DOS SALMOS

Compilação de 150 cânticos sagrados, muitos deles baseados nas experiências pessoais de Davi e de outros servos de Jeová.

Compostos durante um período de uns 1.000 anos, começando no tempo de Moisés e estendendo-se além do retorno do exílio babilônico.

Expressões de agradecimento e de louvor a Jeová.

Pela grandiosidade do seu nome. (99:3; 113; 148:13, 14)

Por suas grandiosas obras criativas. (33:1-9; 148:1-12)

Por ele ser o Grandioso Pastor. (23)

Por ele atender orações. (21:1-7; 28; 116; 118:21)

Por ele ser o que é. (50; 95:1-7; 96:4-13; 97; 150)

Por libertar de inimigos e de circunstâncias aflitivas. (18; 30; 107; 140; 149)

Por seus julgamentos justos. (67:3, 4; 98)

Por suas qualidades pessoais. (57:9-11; 92; 100; 108:1-4; 117; 138:1, 2)

Por suas abundantes provisões. (37:25; 67:5-7; 145:15, 16)

Induzidas por seus tratos passados com o seu povo. (66; 81; 105; 106; 126; 136:10-24; 147)

Petições de misericórdia e ajuda dirigidas a Deus.

De libertação de inimigos. (3-5; 7; 12; 13; 17; 31; 59)

De orientação na conduta. (119:124, 125; 143:8, 10)

De amparo em doença e aflição. (41:1-4)

De favor ao sofrer aflição. (6:2, 9; 9:13, 14; 123)

Profecias cumpridas no Messias.

Ele era da linhagem real de Davi. (89:3, 4, 29, 36, 37; 132:11)

Consumia-o o zelo pela casa de Jeová. (69:9)

Falava usando ilustrações. (78:2)

Foi traído por um associado íntimo. (41:9; 55:12-14)

Indicou-se a maneira em que seria executado. (22:16, n)

Foi vituperado e injuriado. (22:6-8; 69:9)

Lançaram-se sortes sobre a sua vestimenta. (22:18)

Deram-lhe vinagre para beber. (69:21)

Nenhum osso seu foi quebrado. (34:20)

Foi levantado do Seol. (16:10)

A pedra rejeitada pelos construtores tornou-se a principal do ângulo. (118:22)

Ascendeu ao alto, provendo dádivas em forma de homens. (68:18)

Foi glorificado e recebeu domínio sobre tudo. (8:5-8)

Recebeu o reinado. (2:6; 110)

Destruirá as nações que se lhe opõem. (2:8, 9; 45:3-5)

Tem um casamento real; designará príncipes na Terra. (45:2, 6-17)

Seu domínio sobre a terra será justo e compassivo. (72)

Doutrinas bíblicas, básicas, que constam no livro dos Salmos.

Identidade e qualidades do verdadeiro Deus. (78:38, 39; 83:18; 86:15; 90:1-4; 102:24-27; 103; 139)

Soberania de Jeová. (11:4-7; 24:1; 29; 44; 47; 48; 76; 93)

Santificação do nome de Deus. (79; 83)

Todos os homens são pecadores. (14:1-3; 51:5; 53:1-3)

A tolice da idolatria. (115:4-8; 135:15-18)

A condição dos mortos. (6:5; 88:10-12; 115:17; 146:4)

A Terra será o lar duradouro dos justos. (37:9-11, 29; 104:5; 115:16)

Conselho inspirado para nos ajudar a obter a aprovação de Jeová.

Temer a Jeová e obedecer a seus mandamentos. (112:1-4; 128)

Cultivar alta estima pelas pronunciações de Deus, por sua lei. (1:2; 19:7-11; 119)

Confiar em Jeová. (9:10; 115:9-11; 125; 146:5-7)

Esperar pacientemente que ele aja. (42; 43)

Empenhar-se pela paz e pela justiça. (34:14, 15)

Ter vivo apreço por estar com o povo de Deus, estar na Sua casa. (84; 122; 133)

Evitar más associações. (1:1; 26:4, 5; 101:3-8)

Ensinar aos filhos as maneiras de agir de Jeová. (78:3-8)

Falar a verdade; evitar a calúnia e os juramentos falsos. (15:2, 3; 24:3-5; 34:13)

Manter a palavra, mesmo quando isso mostra ser mau para a própria pessoa. (15:4)

Evitar o mau uso do dinheiro. (15:5)

A generosidade resulta em bênçãos para o dador. (112:5-10)

Louvar a Jeová publicamente. (26:7, 12; 40:9)

maneira de Melquisedeque (Sal 110:4; He 5:6, 10; 6:20; 7:17, 21) e deu dádivas em forma de homens. (Sal 68:18; Ef 4:8-11) Todos estes pormenores foram profetizados nos Salmos. Ainda é futura a vinda de Jesus no papel de executor da parte de Deus para espatifar as nações. (Sal 2:9; Re 2:27; 19:14, 15) Depois disso, Cristo, como Rei, trará bênçãos eternas para os seus súditos leais. Embora o Salmo 72 fosse originalmente escrito referente a Salomão, a descrição do seu governo ali aplica-se em grau ainda maior ao Messias. Isto é atestado pela profecia de Zacarias (9:9, 10), que ecoa o Salmo 72:8 e é aplicada a Cristo Jesus. — Mt 21:5.

Quanto a outros cumprimentos do livro dos Salmos, compare o Salmo 45 com Hebreus 1:8, 9; Revelação (Apocalipse) 19:7-9, 11-15; 21:2, 9-11.

Mais do Que Apenas Bela Poesia. Além de indicar eventos futuros, os Salmos contêm muita coisa de que a pessoa pode derivar encorajamento e que lhe pode servir de guia. Os Salmos são mais do que apenas bela poesia. Retratam a vida como ela realmente é — as alegrias, as tristezas, os temores e os desapontamentos. Em todos eles há evidência da relação íntima dos salmistas com Jeová Deus. E as atividades e as qualidades de Deus são postas em nítido foco, motivando expressões de louvor e de agradecimento.

Mostra-se que a verdadeira felicidade deriva de se evitar a associação com os iníquos, de se agradar da lei de Jeová (Sal 1:1, 2), de se refugiar no Seu ungido (2:11, 12), de confiar em Jeová (40:4), de ter consideração com os de condição humilde (41:1, 2), de receber correção de Jeová (94:12, 13), de obedecer às Suas ordens (112:1; 119:1, 2), e de tê-lo como Deus e Ajudador (146:5, 6).

Admoesta-se a ter confiança em Jeová. "Lança teu fardo sobre o próprio Jeová, e ele mesmo te susterá. Nunca permitirá que o justo seja abalado." (Sal 55:22; 37:5) Tal confiança exclui o temor de homem. — 56:4, 11.

Incentiva-se a esperar por Deus (Sal 42:5, 11; 43:5), bem como recorrer a palavras e ações corretas, para se obter a aprovação divina. (1:1-6; 15:1-5; 24:3-5; 34:13, 14; 37:3, 4, 8, 27; 39:1; 100:2) Dá-se ênfase no valor das boas associações. (18:25, 26; 26:4, 5) E aconselha-se a não invejar a prosperidade ou o sucesso dos iníquos, porque eles perecerão. — 37:1, 2, 7-11.

Os Salmos indicam que os servos de Deus podem orar corretamente por coisas tais como a salvação ou a libertação (Sal 3:7, 8; 6:4; 35:1-8; 71:1-6), favor (4:1; 9:13), orientação (5:8; 19:12-14; 25:4, 5; 27:11; 43:3), proteção (17:8), perdão de pecados (25:7, 11, 18; 32:5, 6; 41:4; 51:1-9), um coração puro, um espírito novo e firme (51:10), e a glorificação do nome de Deus (115:1). Podem também orar para ser examinados, refinados (26:2) e julgados (35:24; 43:1), bem como para que se lhes ensine bondade, sensatez, conhecimento e regulamentos de Deus. — 119:66, 68, 73, 124, 125, 135.

Destacam as atividades e as qualidades de Deus. Os Salmos realçam o apreço por Jeová Deus, cuja existência apenas o insensato negaria. (Sal 14:1; 19:7-11; 53:1) Jeová é revelado como Aquele que "ama a justiça e o juízo" (33:5), que "é para nós refúgio e força, uma ajuda encontrada prontamente durante aflições". (46:1) Ele é justo Juiz (7:11; 9:4, 8), o Criador (8:3; 19:1; 33:6), Rei (10:16; 24:8-10), Pastor (23:1-6) e Instrutor (25:9, 12), o Provisor tanto para os homens como para os animais (34:10; 147:9), o Salvador ou Libertador (35:10; 37:39, 40; 40:17; 54:7), e a Fonte da vida (36:9) e de consolo (86:17), bênção e força. — 29:11.

Jeová 'não se esquece do clamor dos atribulados' (Sal 9:12; 10:14), mas responde às orações dos seus servos (3:4; 30:1, 2; 34:4, 6, 17, 18), recompensando-os e protegendo-os. (3:3, 5, 6; 4:3, 8; 9:9, 10; 10:17, 18; 18:2, 20-24; 33:18-20; 34:22; veja 34:7 a respeito de proteção angélica.) Ele odeia a iniquidade e toma ação contra os transgressores. — 5:4-6, 9, 10; 9:5, 6, 17, 18; 21:8-12; 99:8.

Mostra-se que Jeová é atemorizante (Sal 76:7) e grande (77:13), contudo, humilde (18:35); ele é santo (99:5), e abundante em bondade (31:19) e em poder. (147:5) Ele é "um Deus misericordioso e clemente, vagaroso em irar-se e abundante em benevolência e veracidade". (86:15) Seu entendimento está além de ser narrado (147:5) e suas obras criativas atestam a sua sabedoria. (104:24) Ele conta o número das estrelas e chama a todas elas por nome. (147:4) É capaz de ver até mesmo o embrião humano. (139:16) Pode curar todas as enfermidades. (103:3) Ele pode fazer cessar guerras por destroçar o equipamento de guerra dos inimigos. (46:9) Tem estado ativamente envolvido em muitos eventos da história na promoção do seu justo propósito. (44:1-3; 78:1-72; 81:5-7; 105:8-45; 106:7-46; 114:1-8; 135:8-12; 136:4-26) Tal Deus, deveras, merece louvor e agradecimentos. (92:1; 96:1-4; 146-150) Confiar em homens (60:11; 62:9), riquezas (49:6-12, 17) ou ídolos (115:4-8; 135:15-18) seria tolice.

Consideram o valor da palavra de Deus. Os Salmos também ensinam a ter apreço pela palavra de Deus. Mostram que as declarações de Jeová são puras (Sal 12:6) e refinadas. (18:30) Sua lei é preciosa (119:72) e é verdade. (119:142) Benefícios duradouros resultam de se observar a Sua lei perfeita, suas advertências fidedignas, suas ordens retas, seus mandamentos limpos e suas decisões judiciais justas. (19:7-11) A palavra de Deus serve para iluminar a senda da pessoa (119:105), e seus mandamentos a tornam sábia, dando-lhe perspicácia e entendimento. — 119:98-100, 104.

Esclarecem e suplementam outros textos. Às vezes, o livro dos Salmos esclarece ou suplementa outras partes da Bíblia. Mostra que 'atribular a alma', como os israelitas faziam no Dia da Expiação (Le 16:29; 23:27; Núm 29:7), refere-se a jejuar. (Sal 35:13) Só o salmista relata o tratamento severo dado a José, pelo menos inicialmente, enquanto estava preso no Egito: "Atribularam-lhe os pés com grilhetas, sua alma entrou em ferros." (105:18) Dos Salmos aprendemos que "delegações de anjos" estavam envolvidas em causar as pragas no Egito (78:44-51) e que, no ermo, as águas milagrosamente providas "foram através das regiões áridas como um rio" (105:41), fornecendo assim um amplo e prontamente acessível suprimento de água para a nação de Israel e seus muitos animais domésticos. Os Salmos fornecem evidência de que o próprio Faraó morreu no Mar Vermelho. — 136:15.

Os Salmos indicam que os israelitas sofreram reveses e grandes dificuldades antes da derrota dos edomitas no Vale do Sal. (Sal 60:cab., 1, 3, 9) Isto sugere que os edomitas invadiram Judá enquanto a nação estava guerreando no norte com as forças de Arã-Naaraim e Arã-Zobá.

O Salmo 101 revela a maneira em que Davi administrava os assuntos de estado. Como seus servos, Davi escolhia apenas pessoas fiéis. Não suportava pessoas arrogantes e não tolerava calúnias. Preocupava-se diariamente com levar os iníquos às barras da justiça.

SALOMÃO [duma raiz que significa "paz"]. Filho do Rei Davi na linhagem de Judá; rei de Israel de 1037 a 998 AEC. O registro bíblico, depois de relatar a morte do filho nascido a Davi por meio das suas relações ilícitas com Bate-Seba, prossegue: "E Davi começou a consolar Bate-Seba, sua esposa. Além disso, entrou a ela e deitou-se com ela. Com o tempo ela lhe deu à luz um filho, e ele veio a ser chamado pelo nome de Salomão. E o próprio Jeová o amava. De modo que, por meio de Natã, o profeta, mandou chamá-lo pelo nome de Jedidias, por causa de Jeová." (2Sa 12:24, 25) Mais tarde, Salomão teve três irmãos germanos, filhos de Davi e Bate-Seba: Simeia, Sobabe e Natã. — 1Cr 3:5.

A Promessa de Jeová a Davi. Jeová declarara a Davi, antes do nascimento de Salomão, que lhe nasceria um filho e que o nome deste seria Salomão, e que este edificaria uma casa para o Seu nome. O nome Jedidias (que significa "Amado de Jah") parece ter sido dado como indicação a Davi de que Jeová tinha então abençoado seu casamento com Bate-Seba e que Ele aprovava o fruto assim produzido. Mas não era por este nome que o menino costumava ser conhecido. Sem dúvida, o nome Salomão (duma raiz que significa "paz") se aplicava com relação ao pacto que Jeová fizera com Davi, no qual ele dissera que Davi, homem que havia derramado muito sangue em guerra, não construiria uma casa para Jeová, assim como Davi tinha no coração fazer. (1Cr 22:6-10) Não que as guerras travadas por Davi fossem erradas. Mas, o reino típico de Jeová era essencialmente de natureza pacífica e objetiva; suas guerras deviam eliminar a iniquidade e os que se opunham à soberania de Jeová, para estender o domínio de Israel às fronteiras delineadas por Deus, e estabelecer a justiça e a paz. Davi alcançou para Israel esses objetivos das guerras. O domínio de Salomão era essencialmente um reinado de paz.

A Tentativa de Adonias de Tomar o Trono. Depois do seu nascimento, Salomão só ressurge no registro bíblico na época da velhice de Davi. Davi, sem dúvida por causa da promessa de Jeová, jurara anteriormente a Bate-Seba que Salomão lhe sucederia no trono. Isto era do conhecimento do profeta Natã. (1Rs 1:11-13, 17) Não se declara se Adonias, meio-irmão de Salomão, sabia deste juramento ou da intenção de Davi. De qualquer modo, Adonias tentou conseguir o trono dum modo similar ao empregado por Absalão. Talvez por causa da fragilidade do rei e por Adonias ter o apoio de Joabe, o chefe do exército, e de Abiatar, o sacerdote, ele confiava em ser bem-sucedido. Não obstante, era um ato de traição, um esforço de se apoderar do trono enquanto Davi ainda vivia, e sem a aprovação de Davi ou de Jeová. Também, Adonias revelou sua ardileza ao providenciar um sacrifício em En-Rogel, onde pretendia ser proclamado rei, mas convidou apenas os outros filhos do rei e homens de Judá, os servos do rei, não convidando Salomão, Natã, o profeta, e Zadoque, o sacerdote, e os poderosos que haviam lutado ao lado de Davi, inclusive Benaia, líder deles. Isto indica que Adonias considerava Salomão rival e obstáculo para as suas ambições. — 1Rs 1:5-10.

Salomão Entronizado. O profeta Natã, sempre fiel a Jeová e a Davi, estava atento. Enviando primeiro Bate-Seba com instruções de informar o rei sobre a trama, ele mesmo veio então para perguntar a Davi se esta proclamação de Adonias como rei tinha sido autorizada por ele. Davi agiu pronta e decisivamente, mandando que Zadoque, o sacerdote, e Natã levassem Salomão a Giom, sob a proteção de Benaia e seus homens. Deviam fazer Salomão montar a mula do próprio rei (denotando a elevada honra dada àquele que a montava, e que, neste caso, era o sucessor no reinado). (Veja Est 6:8, 9.) As instruções de Davi foram cumpridas, e Salomão foi ungido e aclamado rei. — 1Rs 1:11-40.

Ao ouvir o som da música procedente de Giom, que não ficava muito longe, e a aclamação do povo: "Viva o Rei Salomão", Adonias e seus coconspiradores fugiram, tomados de medo e de confusão. Salomão proveu um vislumbre da paz que assinalaria o seu governo por se negar a macular sua ascensão ao trono com uma vingança. Se prevalecesse o contrário, Salomão mui provavelmente teria perdido a vida. Adonias fugiu para o santuário em busca de asilo, de modo que Salomão mandou que Adonias lhe fosse trazido de lá. Informando Adonias de que continuaria vivo, a menos que se achasse algum mal nele, Salomão o mandou então para casa. — 1Rs 1:41-53.

A Incumbência Que Davi Deu a Salomão. Davi, antes de morrer, deu a Salomão a solene incumbência de "cumprir a obrigação para com Jeová, teu Deus, andando nos seus caminhos, guardando os seus estatutos, seus mandamentos e suas decisões judiciais, e seus testemunhos". Mandou adicionalmente que não deixasse Joabe e Simei 'descer em paz ao Seol'; também que tivesse benevolência para com os filhos de Barzilai, o gileadita. (1Rs 2:1-9) Provavelmente fora antes disso que Davi dera instruções a Salomão a respeito da construção do templo, dando-lhe o plano arquitetônico "que viera a estar com ele por inspiração". (1Cr 28:11, 12, 19) Davi deu ordens aos príncipes de Israel presentes ali para ajudarem Salomão, seu filho, e para participarem na construção do santuário de Jeová. Nesta ocasião, o povo ungiu novamente a Salomão como rei e a Zadoque como sacerdote. (1Cr 22:6-19; cap. 28; 29:1-22) A bênção de Jeová sobre Salomão manifestou-se logo cedo no seu reinado, quando ele passou a sentar-se "no trono de Jeová como rei em lugar de Davi, seu pai, e para ser bem-sucedido" no reinado e para se tornar forte nele. — 1Cr 29:23; 2Cr 1:1.

O Pedido Sedicioso de Adonias. Não demorou muito até que Salomão teve de executar as instruções de Davi a respeito de Joabe. Isto foi provocado pela ação de Adonias, que ainda mostrou ser ambicioso, apesar da misericórdia que Salomão tivera com ele. Adonias chegou-se à mãe de Salomão com as palavras: "Tu mesma bem sabes que o reinado ia tornar-se meu e que foi em mim que todo o Israel fixou a sua face para eu me tornar rei; mas o reinado mudou de rumo e veio a ser de meu irmão, porque era da parte de Jeová que se tornou seu." Adonias admitiu assim que Jeová estivera por detrás da entronização de Salomão, mas a solicitação que fez depois destas palavras foi mais uma tentativa astuciosa de usurpar o reinado. Ele disse a Bate-Seba: "Por favor, dize a Salomão, o rei, . . . que me dê Abisague, a sunamita, por esposa." Adonias talvez achasse que tinha seguidores suficientes, além de ter o apoio de Joabe e de Abiatar, de modo que, por tomar por esposa a enfermeira de Davi, considerada ter sido a concubina de Davi, embora este não tivesse tido relações sexuais com ela, ele poderia iniciar um levante que derrubaria Salomão. Por costume, as esposas e as concubinas dum rei só podiam pertencer ao sucessor legítimo dele, de modo que tomar essas esposas era considerado como reivindicação do trono. (Veja 2Sa 16:21, 22.) Quando Bate-Seba, sem se aperceber da duplicidade de Adonias, transmitiu a solicitação dele a Salomão, este a interpretou imediatamente como pretensão ao trono e mandou imediatamente Benaia matar Adonias. — 1Rs 2:13-25.

Abiatar é deposto; Joabe é morto. Salomão deu então atenção aos que haviam conspirado com Adonias. Abiatar foi dispensado do sacerdócio, em cumprimento da palavra de Jeová contra a casa de Eli (1Sa 2:30-36), mas ele não foi morto, por ter carregado a Arca diante de Davi e ter sofrido aflição com ele. Zadoque substituiu Abiatar. No ínterim, Joabe, sabendo da ação de Salomão, fugiu para se segurar nos chifres do altar, mas foi ali morto por Benaia, às ordens de Salomão. — 1Rs 2:26-35.

Simei é executado. Salomão colocou também Simei sob juramento para observar certas restrições, porque este homem havia invocado o mal sobre o seu pai, Davi. Quando Simei, uns três anos mais tarde, violou esta restrição, Salomão mandou matá-lo. Assim se cumpriu plenamente a injunção que Davi deu a Salomão. — 1Rs 2:36-46.

O Pedido Sábio de Salomão. Na parte inicial do reinado de Salomão, o povo sacrificava em muitos "altos", porque não havia casa de Jeová, embora o tabernáculo estivesse em Gibeão e a Arca do Pacto estivesse numa tenda em Sião. Mesmo Jeová tendo dito que seu nome devia ser colocado sobre Jerusalém, evidentemente ele tolerou esta prática até que se construísse o templo. (1Rs 3:2, 3) Em Gibeão, conhecida como "o grande alto", Salomão ofereceu mil sacrifícios queimados. Jeová apareceu-lhe ali num sonho, dizendo: "Pede o que te devo dar." Em vez de pedir riquezas, glória e vitória, Salomão pediu um coração sábio, entendido e obediente, para poder julgar Israel. O pedido hu-milde de Salomão agradou tanto a Jeová, que não só lhe deu o que pediu, mas também riquezas e glória, "de modo que não virá a haver entre os reis nenhum igual a ti, em todos os teus dias". Jeová, porém, acrescentou a admoestação: "E se andares nos meus caminhos, guardando os meus regulamentos e os meus mandamentos, assim como andou Davi, teu pai, também vou prolongar os teus dias." — 1Rs 3:4-14.

Pouco depois, quando duas prostitutas apresentaram um problema difícil de identificação de maternidade, Salomão demonstrou que Deus deveras o dotara de sabedoria judicativa. Isto reforçou grandemente a autoridade de Salomão aos olhos do povo. — 1Rs 3:16-28.

Projetos de Construção. (ILUSTRAÇÕES, Vol. 1, pp. 748, 750, 751). No quarto ano do seu reinado, no segundo mês do ano (o mês zive [abril-maio]), em 1034 AEC, Salomão começou a construir a casa de Jeová no monte Moriá. (1Rs 6:1) A construção do templo era pacificamente silenciosa; as pedras eram ajustadas antes de serem levadas ao local, de modo que não se ouvia o som de martelo ou machado, nem de qualquer outra ferramenta. (1Rs 6:7) O Rei Hirão, de Tiro, cooperava por suprir madeiras de cedro e de junípero em troca de trigo e de azeite. (1Rs 5:10-12; 2Cr 2:11-16) Fornecia também trabalhadores, inclusive um artífice perito chamado Hirão, filho dum homem de Tiro e duma mulher hebreia. (1Rs 7:13, 14) Salomão recrutou para trabalhos forçados 30.000 homens, mandando-os ao Líbano em turnos de 10.000 por mês. Cada grupo voltava para casa por períodos de dois meses. Além destes, havia 70.000 carregadores e 80.000 talhadores. Estes últimos grupos mencionados não eram de israelitas. — 1Rs 5:13-18; 2Cr 2:17, 18.

Inauguração do templo. A enorme obra de construção durou sete anos e meio, sendo concluída no oitavo mês, bul, em 1027 AEC. (1Rs 6:37, 38) Parece que depois levou mais algum tempo para trazer os utensílios e para pôr tudo em ordem, porque foi no sétimo mês, etanim, na época da Festividade das Barracas, que Salomão realizou a santificação e inauguração do templo. (1Rs 8:2; 2Cr 7:8-10) Portanto, isso deve ter ocorrido no sétimo mês de 1026 AEC, 11 meses depois de terminada a construção, em vez de um mês antes de o prédio estar terminado (em 1027 AEC), conforme alguns pensavam.

Outro ponto de vista adotado por alguns é que os serviços de inauguração ocorreram no 24.º ano de Salomão (1014 AEC), depois de ele ter também construído sua própria casa e outros edifícios governamentais, o que levou mais 13 anos, ou ao todo 20 anos de construção. Este ponto de vista é apoiado pela Septuaginta grega, que interpola certas palavras não encontradas no texto massorético, em 1 Reis 8:1 (3 Reis 8:1 na LXX, Bagster), rezando: "E aconteceu quando Salomão tinha terminado a construção da casa do Senhor e da sua própria casa, depois de vinte anos, então o rei Salomão reuniu todos os anciãos de Israel em Sião, para trazer a Arca do Pacto do Senhor da cidade de Davi, isto é Sião, no mês de atanim." Todavia, uma comparação dos relatos em Reis e em Crônicas indica que esta conclusão é incorreta.

O registro em 1 Reis, capítulos 6 a 8, descreve a construção do templo e sua terminação; a seguir, menciona o programa de construção de 13 anos, de Salomão, de prédios governamentais; e então, depois de falar de novo extensivamente sobre a construção do templo e de se levarem para dentro "as coisas tornadas sagradas por Davi, seu pai", o relato passa a descrever a inauguração. Isto parece indicar que a descrição do programa de construção dos prédios governamentais (1Rs 7:1-8) foi inserida como que parenteticamente, para rematar e completar a consideração das operações de construção. Mas o registro em 2 Crônicas 5:1-3 parece indicar de forma mais direta que a inauguração ocorreu assim que o templo e sua mobília estavam prontos, porque reza: "Finalmente estava terminada toda a obra que Salomão tinha de fazer para a casa de Jeová e Salomão começou a levar para dentro as coisas tornadas sagradas por Davi, seu pai; e a prata, e o ouro, e todos os utensílios ele pôs nos tesouros da casa do verdadeiro Deus. Foi então que Salomão passou a congregar os anciãos de Israel e todos os cabeças das tribos." Depois de pormenorizar a instalação da Arca do Pacto no templo pelos sacerdotes, que a carregaram desde a Cidade de Davi para o morro do templo, o relato passa a descrever a inauguração. — 2Cr 5:4-14; caps. 6, 7.

Alguns têm questionado o ponto de vista acima, de que a inauguração ocorreu no ano depois de completado o templo, porque 1 Reis 9:1-9 diz que Jeová apareceu a Salomão depois da construção da "casa do rei", dizendo que ouvira a oração de Salomão. (Veja 2Cr 7:11-22.) Isto foi no seu 24.º ano, após as suas obras de construção que levaram 20 anos. Demorou Deus 12 anos para responder à oração que Salomão proferiu na inauguração do templo? Não, porque naquela inauguração, no fim da oração de Salomão, "desceu dos céus o próprio fogo e passou a consumir a oferta queimada e os sacrifícios, e a própria glória de Jeová encheu a casa". Isto foi uma poderosa manifestação de que Jeová ouvira a oração, dando resposta por ação, reconhecida como tal pelo povo. (2Cr 7:1-3) O posterior aparecimento de Deus a Salomão mostrava que não se esquecera da oração feita 12 anos antes, e que então respondia verbalmente a ela por assegurar a Salomão a sua resposta a ela. Deus, neste segundo aparecimento, deu também a Salomão admoestação adicional, para continuar fiel assim como Davi, seu pai.

Oração de Salomão. Na oração que Salomão fez na inauguração do templo ele se referiu a Jeová como o Deus acima de todos, Deus de benevolência e de lealdade, Cumpridor de suas promessas. Embora o templo fosse uma casa para Jeová, Salomão reconheceu que "os próprios céus, sim, o céu dos céus" não O podiam conter. Ele é o Ouvinte de orações e Aquele que responde a elas, o Deus da justiça, que recompensa os justos e retribui aos iníquos, mas que perdoa ao pecador arrependido que retorna a Ele. Ele não é 'deus da natureza', mas exerce controle sobre as forças da natureza, sobre a vida animal e mesmo sobre as nações da terra. Não é mero Deus nacional dos hebreus, mas é o Deus de todos os homens que o buscam. Salomão manifestou na sua oração o desejo de ver o nome de Jeová engrandecido em toda a terra; Salomão expressou seu próprio amor à justiça e ao juízo, amor a Israel, o povo de Deus, e aos estrangeiros que buscassem a Jeová. — 1Rs 8:22-53; 2Cr 6:12-42.

Na inauguração, todos os sacerdotes oficiaram; nesta ocasião, não havia necessidade de observar a ordem das turmas providenciadas por Davi. (2Cr 5:11) A necessidade do serviço de todos pode ser visto em que, além das ofertas de cereais apresentadas, ofereceram-se 22.000 cabeças de gado e 120.000 ovelhas como oferta queimada e como sacrifício de participação em comum durante aquele período festivo de sete dias, que foi encerrado com uma assembleia solene no oitavo dia. O número dos sacrifícios era tão enorme, que o grande altar de cobre mostrou ser pequeno demais; para realizá-los, Salomão teve de santificar parte do pátio para este fim. — 1Rs 8:63, 64; 2Cr 7:5, 7.

Mais tarde, Salomão empossou as turmas dos sacerdotes nos seus serviços e os levitas nos seus postos de dever, conforme tinham sido delineados por Davi. O templo tornou-se então o lugar em que todos os israelitas deviam reunir-se para suas festividades sazonais e seus sacrifícios a Jeová.

Edifícios governamentais. Nos 13 anos depois da terminação do templo, Salomão construiu um novo palácio real no monte Moriá, logo ao S do templo, de modo que ficava perto do pátio externo do templo, mas num terreno mais baixo. Perto dali ele construiu o Pórtico do Trono, o Pórtico das Colunas e a Casa da Floresta do Líbano. Todos estes edifícios encontravam-se num declive entre o cume do morro do templo e o espigão baixo da Cidade de Davi. Construiu também uma casa para sua esposa egípcia; não se permitia a ela "morar na casa de Davi, o rei de Israel, porque", conforme disse Salomão, "os lugares aos quais chegou a arca de Jeová são algo sagrado". — 1Rs 7:1-8; 3:1; 9:24; 11:1; 2Cr 8:11.

Construções em escala nacional. Depois de completar seus projetos de edifícios governamentais, Salomão empreendeu um programa de construção em escala nacional. Usou em trabalhos forçados os descendentes dos cananeus que Israel não havia devotado à destruição na sua conquista de Canaã, mas não rebaixou nenhum israelita a esta condição de escravo. (1Rs 9:20-22; 2Cr 8:7-10) Edificou e fortificou Gezer (que Faraó tirara dos cananeus e dera de presente à sua filha, esposa de Salomão), bem como Bete-Horom Alta e Bete-Horom Baixa, Baalate e Tamar; construiu também cidades-armazéns, cidades para carros e cidades para cavaleiros. Todo o domínio, inclusive o território ao L do Jordão, beneficiou-se com suas construções. Ele fortificou adicionalmente o Aterro. Fechou "a brecha da Cidade de Davi". (1Rs 11:27) Isto talvez se refira a ele construir ou estender "a muralha de Jerusalém, em toda a volta". (1Rs 3:1) Fortificou muito Hazor e Megido; os arqueólogos descobriram partes de fortes muralhas e portões fortificados, que eles acreditam ser restos das obras de Salomão nessas cidades agora em ruínas. — 1Rs 9:15-19; 2Cr 8:1-6.

Sua Riqueza e Sua Glória. Salomão empenhou-se extensamente em comércio. Sua frota, em cooperação com a de Hirão, trazia grandes quantidades de ouro de Ofir, bem como madeira "algum" e pedras preciosas. (1Rs 9:26-28; 10:11; 2Cr 8:17, 18; 9:10, 11) Cavalos e carros eram importados do Egito, e negociantes de todo o mundo daquele tempo traziam mercadorias em abundância. A renda anual de Salomão em ouro chegava a 666 talentos (c. US$ 256.643.000), além da prata, do ouro e de outros itens trazidos pelos mercadores. (1Rs 10:14, 15; 2Cr 9:13, 14) Além disso, "todos os reis da terra" traziam anualmente presentes das suas terras: objetos de ouro e de prata, óleo de bálsamo, armamentos, cavalos, mulos e outras riquezas. (1Rs 10:24, 25, 28, 29; 2Cr 9:23-28) Até mesmo macacos e pavões eram importados em navios de Társis. (1Rs 10:22; 2Cr 9:21) Salomão veio a ter 4.000 baias para cavalos e carros (1Rs 10:26 diz 1.400 carros), e 12.000 corcéis (ou, possivelmente, cavaleiros). — 2Cr 9:25.

Não havia em toda a terra rei que possuísse tantas riquezas como Salomão. (1Rs 10:23; 2Cr 9:22) A via de acesso ao seu trono excedia em magnificência a tudo o que havia em outros reinos. O pró-prio trono era de marfim recoberto de ouro refinado. Tinha por detrás um dossel redondo; seis degraus, com seis leões em cada lado, levavam a ele, e dois leões estavam em pé ao lado dos braços do trono. (1Rs 10:18-20; 2Cr 9:17-19) Para os seus vasos para beber só se usava ouro; declara-se especificamente que "não havia nada de prata; nos dias de Salomão não se lhe dava nenhuma importância". (2Cr 9:20) Na casa de Salomão e no templo havia harpas e instrumentos de cordas feitos de madeira de algum tal como nunca se vira antes em Judá. — 1Rs 10:12; 2Cr 9:11.

O suprimento alimentar para sua casa. As provisões diárias de alimento para a casa real de Salomão eram de "trinta coros [6.600 l] de flor de farinha e sessenta coros [13.200 l] de farinha, dez cabeças de gado vacum cevado e vinte cabeças de gado vacum de pasto, e cem ovelhas, além de alguns veados, e gazelas, e corços, e cucos cevados". (1Rs 4:22, 23) Doze prepostos supervisionavam o fornecimento de alimentos, um preposto para cada mês do ano. Cada um deles supervisionava uma parte daquela terra; para este fim, ela não era dividida segundo os termos tribais, mas segundo regiões agrícolas. Estes suprimentos incluíam provisões para os muitos cavalos de Salomão. — 1Rs 4:1-19, 27, 28.

A rainha de Sabá visita Salomão. Uma das pessoas visitantes mais distintas procedente duma terra estrangeira para ver a glória e as riquezas de Salomão foi a rainha de Sabá. A fama de Salomão atingira "todas as pessoas da terra", de modo que ela fez a viagem de seu longínquo domínio "para pô-lo à prova com perguntas difíceis". Ela falou-lhe "sobre tudo o que lhe veio a ser achegado ao coração", e "não se mostrava haver nenhum assunto oculto ao rei, que ele não lhe comunicasse". — 1Rs 10:1-3, 24; 2Cr 9:1, 2.

Depois de a rainha ter observado também o esplendor do templo e da casa de Salomão, o serviço à mesa e as bebidas, bem como o vestuário dos garçons, e os regulares sacrifícios queimados no templo, "então se mostrou não haver mais espírito nela", de modo que exclamou: "Eis que não se me contou nem a metade. Ultrapassaste em sabedoria e em prosperidade as coisas ouvidas que escutei." Daí, ela passou a declarar felizes os servos que serviam tal rei. Tudo isso a levou a dar louvor a Jeová, a bendizer a Jeová Deus, que expressara seu amor a Israel por designar Salomão como rei, a fim de fazer decisões judiciais e justiça. — 1Rs 10:4-9; 2Cr 9:3-8.

Ela deu então a Salomão o magnífico presente de 120 talentos de ouro (US$ 46.242.000), e grande número de pedras preciosas e óleo de bálsamo em quantidade extraordinariamente grande. Salomão, por sua vez, deu à rainha tudo o que ela pediu, além do que deu da sua própria generosidade, possivelmente mais do que ela lhe trouxera. — 1Rs 10:10, 13; 2Cr 9:9, 12.

A prosperidade do seu governo. Jeová abençoou Salomão com sabedoria, glória e riqueza enquanto permanecia firme na adoração verdadeira, e a nação de Israel também usufruía o favor de Deus. Davi havia sido usado para subjugar os inimigos de Israel e para estabelecer o reino firmemente até os seus limites máximos. O relato narra: "Quanto a Salomão, mostrou ser o governante sobre todos os reinos, desde o Rio [Eufrates] até a terra dos filisteus e até o termo do Egito. Traziam presentes e serviam a Salomão todos os dias da sua vida." (1Rs 4:21) Durante o reinado de Salomão havia paz, e "Judá e Israel eram muitos, em multidão, iguais aos grãos de areia junto ao mar, comendo e bebendo, e alegrando-se". "E Judá e Israel continuaram a morar em segurança, cada um debaixo da sua própria videira e debaixo da sua própria figueira, desde Dã até Berseba, todos os dias de Salomão." — 1Rs 4:20, 25; MAPA, Vol. 1, p. 748.

A Sabedoria de Salomão. "E Deus continuou a dar a Salomão sabedoria e entendimento em medida muito grande, bem como largueza de coração, igual à areia que há à beira do mar. E a sabedoria de Salomão era mais vasta do que a sabedoria de todos os orientais e do que toda a sabedoria do Egito." Mencionam-se então outros homens de sabedoria incomum: Etã, o ezraíta (evidentemente cantor do tempo de Davi e escritor do Salmo 89) e mais três sábios de Israel. Salomão era mais sábio do que estes, na realidade, "veio a ter fama em todas as nações ao redor. E ele podia falar três mil provérbios, e seus cânticos vieram a ser mil e cinco". A extensão do seu conhecimento abrangia as plantas e os animais da terra, e seus provérbios, junto com seus escritos nos livros de Eclesiastes e de O Cântico de Salomão, revelam que ele tinha profundo conhecimento da natureza humana. (1Rs 4:29-34) Em Eclesiastes aprendemos que ele meditou muito para "achar palavras deleitosas e a escrita de palavras corretas de verdade". (Ec 12:10) Experimentou muitas coisas, passando entre os de condição humilde e entre os enaltecidos, observando atentamente sua vida, suas obras, suas esperanças e seus objetivos, e as vicissitudes da humanidade. Enalteceu o conhecimento de Deus e a Sua lei, e enfatizou acima de tudo que 'o temor de Jeová é o princípio do conhecimento e da sabedoria', e que toda a obrigação do homem é 'temer o verdadeiro Deus e guardar os seus mandamentos'. — Pr 1:7; 9:10; Ec 12:13; veja ECLESIASTES.

Seu Desvio da Justiça. Enquanto Salomão permanecia fiel à adoração de Jeová, ele prosperava. É evidente que seus provérbios foram proferidos e os livros de Eclesiastes e O Cântico de Salomão, bem como pelo menos um dos Salmos (Sal 127), foram escritos durante o seu período de serviço fiel a Deus. No entanto, Salomão começou a desconsiderar a lei de Deus. Lemos: "E o próprio Rei Salomão amava muitas mulheres estrangeiras além da filha de Faraó, mulheres moabitas, amonitas, edomitas, sidônias e hititas, das nações de que Jeová havia dito aos filhos de Israel: 'Não deveis entrar no meio delas e elas mesmas não devem entrar no vosso meio; decerto inclinarão o vosso coração a seguir os seus deuses.' Foi a elas que Salomão se apegou para as amar. E ele veio a ter setecentas esposas, princesas, e trezentas concubinas; e suas esposas gradualmente lhe inclinaram o coração. E sucedeu, no tempo da velhice de Salomão, que as próprias esposas dele lhe haviam inclinado o coração para seguir outros deuses; e seu coração não se mostrou pleno para com Jeová, seu Deus, como o coração de Davi, seu pai. E Salomão começou a ir atrás de Astorete, deusa dos sidônios, e atrás de Milcom, a coisa repugnante dos amonitas. E Salomão começou a fazer o que era mau aos olhos de Jeová e não seguiu plenamente a Jeová como Davi, seu pai. Foi então que Salomão passou a construir um alto a Quemós, a coisa repugnante de Moabe, no monte que estava defronte de Jerusalém, e a Moloque, a coisa repugnante dos filhos de Amom. E foi assim que ele fez para todas as suas esposas estrangeiras que faziam fumaça sacrificial e ofereciam sacrifícios aos seus deuses." — 1Rs 11:1-8.

Embora isso acontecesse "no tempo da velhice de Salomão", não devemos presumir que seu desvio era por motivo de senilidade, porque Salomão era relativamente jovem quando assumiu o trono, e seu reinado durou 40 anos. (1Cr 29:1; 2Cr 9:30) O relato não diz que Salomão abandonou completamente a adoração no templo e as ofertas de sacrifícios ali. Ele parece ter tentado praticar uma espécie de ecumenismo para agradar a suas esposas estrangeiras. Por isso, "Jeová ficou irado com Salomão, porque seu coração se tinha inclinado para longe de Jeová, o Deus de Israel, aquele que lhe aparecera duas vezes". Jeová informou Salomão que, em consequência, Ele arrancaria dele parte do reino, mas não nos dias de Salomão, por respeito a Davi e por causa de Jerusalém. Mas o faria nos dias do filho de Salomão, deixando a este filho apenas uma tribo (além de Judá), tribo que mostrou ser Benjamim. — 1Rs 11:9-13.

Opositores de Salomão. Daquele tempo em diante, Jeová começou a suscitar opositores a Salomão, principalmente Jeroboão, da tribo de Efraim, que finalmente arrancou dez tribos de serem leais ao trono no tempo de Roboão, e que estabeleceu o reino setentrional que passou a ser chamado de Israel. Jeroboão, como jovem, por ser diligente, fora colocado por Salomão sobre todo o serviço compulsório da casa de José. Quem causava também dificuldades a Salomão eram Hadade, o edomita, e Rezom, inimigo de Davi que se tornou rei da Síria. — 1Rs 11:14-40; 12:12-15.

Desviar-se o Rei Salomão de Deus teve mau efeito sobre o governo de Salomão. Este se tornou opressivo, sem dúvida em virtude do desgaste econômico por causa do alto custo do seu governo, que deve ter aumentado excessivamente. Havia também descontentamento entre os recrutados para trabalhos forçados, e, sem dúvida, também entre os seus supervisores israelitas. Tendo Salomão deixado de seguir a Jeová de pleno coração, ele não mais recebia Dele a bênção e a prosperidade, ou a contínua sabedoria para governar em justiça e juízo, e para solucionar os problemas que surgiam. Conforme o próprio Salomão havia declarado: "Quando os justos se tornam muitos, o povo se alegra; mas quando um iníquo está dominando, o povo suspira." — Pr 29:2.

Que esta situação surgiu é demonstrado pelo registro daquilo que aconteceu pouco depois da morte de Salomão, no governo de Roboão. Deus, por meio do profeta Aijá, mandou uma mensagem a Jeroboão, dizendo-lhe que Deus lhe daria dez tribos e que, se guardasse os Seus estatutos, Deus lhe edificaria uma casa duradoura, assim como fizera para Davi. Depois disso, Salomão procurou matar Jeroboão, que fugiu para o Egito, onde governava então um sucessor do pai da esposa egípcia de Salomão. Jeroboão permaneceu ali até a morte de Salomão. Então liderou o povo numa queixa a Roboão e finalmente numa rebelião. — 1Rs 11:26-40; 12:12-20.

Embora Salomão tivesse afastado seu coração de Jeová, ele 'deitou-se com os seus antepassados e foi enterrado na Cidade de Davi, seu pai'. — 1Rs 11:43; 2Cr 9:31.

Jesus, Herdeiro Legítimo de Salomão. Mateus traça os descendentes de Salomão até José, pai adotivo de Jesus, demonstrando assim que Jesus tinha o direito legal ao trono de Davi através da linhagem régia. (Mt 1:7, 16) Lucas traça a linhagem de Jesus até Eli (aparentemente o pai de Maria) através de Natã, outro filho de Davi e Bate-Seba, e, portanto, irmão germano de Salomão. (Lu 3:23, 31) Ambas as linhagens convergem em Zorobabel e Sealtiel, e novamente se ramificam em duas linhagens. (Mt 1:12, 13; Lu 3:27)

Maria, mãe de Jesus, era descendente através de Natã, e José, seu pai adotivo, descendia através de Salomão, de modo que Jesus era descendente tanto natural como legal de Davi, com plenos direitos ao trono. — Veja GENEALOGIA DE JESUS CRISTO.

A Necessidade de Resguardar o Coração. Enquanto Salomão manteve um "coração obediente", algo com que se preocupava no começo, ele teve o favor de Jeová e prosperou. Mas as consequências más para ele demonstram que o conhecimento, a grande capacidade, ou o poder, a riqueza e a fama, não são as coisas mais importantes, e que desviar-se de Jeová significa abandonar a sabedoria. O conselho do próprio Salomão mostrou ser veraz: "Mais do que qualquer outra coisa a ser guardada, resguarda teu coração, pois dele procedem as fontes da vida." (1Rs 3:9; Pr 4:23) O caso dele ilustra quão traiçoeiro e desesperado é o coração do homem pecaminoso, mas, além disso, mostra que o melhor dos corações pode ser engodado, se não mantiver constante vigilância. Amar o que Jeová ama e odiar o que ele odeia, procurando constantemente a sua orientação e fazer o que lhe agrada, é uma proteção segura. — Je 17:9; Pr 8:13; He 1:9; Jo 8:29.

Profecias Messiânicas. Há muitas similaridades entre o reinado de Salomão e o do grande Rei Jesus Cristo, conforme profetizado nas Escrituras. Em muitos sentidos, o governo de Salomão, enquanto ele era obediente a Jeová, é um modelo em pequena escala do Reino messiânico. Jesus Cristo, "algo maior do que Salomão", veio como homem de paz, e mostra ter executado uma obra de edificação espiritual especialmente relacionada com a restauração da adoração verdadeira entre os seus seguidores ungidos no grande templo espiritual de Jeová. (Mt 12:42; 2Co 6:16; Jo 14:27; 16:33; Ro 14:17; Tg 3:18) Salomão era da linhagem de Davi, assim como Jesus era. O nome de Salomão (derivado duma raiz que significa "paz") ajusta-se ao glorificado Jesus Cristo como o "Príncipe da Paz". (Is 9:6) Seu nome Jedidias (que significa "Amado de Jah") harmoniza-se com a declaração do próprio Deus a respeito do seu Filho, na ocasião do batismo de Jesus: "Este é meu Filho, o amado, a quem tenho aprovado." — Mt 3:17.

O Salmo 72 é uma expressão de oração a favor do governo de Salomão: "Que os montes levem a paz ao povo . . . Nos seus dias florescerá o justo e a abundância de paz até que não haja mais lua. E terá súditos de mar a mar [evidentemente o Mediterrâneo e o Mar Vermelho (Êx 23:31)] e desde o Rio [Eufrates] até os confins da terra." — Sal 72:3-8.

Sobre o Salmo 72:7 ("até que não haja mais lua"), o Commentary (Comentário) de Cook diz: "Este trecho é importante, mostrando que a ideia de um Rei cujo reinado duraria até os fins dos tempos se achava presente de forma nítida na mente do Salmista. Determina o caráter messiânico de toda a composição." E sobre o versículo 8 ele observa: "O reino seria universal, estendendo-se aos confins da terra. A extensão do domínio israelita sob Davi e Salomão era suficiente para sugerir a esperança, e poderia ser considerado pelo Salmista como um penhor de sua realização, mas, tomada em conjunto com os versículos precedentes, esta declaração é estritamente messiânica."

O profeta Miqueias, numa profecia quase que universalmente aceita como messiânica, aproveitou as circunstâncias descritas como existentes no reinado de Salomão, no sentido de que "Judá e Israel continuaram a morar em segurança, cada um debaixo da sua própria videira e debaixo da sua própria figueira, . . . todos os dias de Salomão." (1Rs 4:25; Miq 4:4) A profecia de Zacarias (Za 9:9, 10) cita o Salmo 72:8, e Mateus aplica a profecia de Zacarias a Jesus Cristo. — Mt 21:4, 5.

SALOMÉ [provavelmente duma raiz hebr. que significa "paz"].

1. Uma comparação de Mateus 27:56 com Marcos 15:40 talvez indique que Salomé era a mãe dos filhos de Zebedeu — Tiago e João, que eram apóstolos de Jesus Cristo. O primeiro texto menciona duas Marias, a saber, Maria Madalena e Maria, a mãe de Tiago (o Menor) e de Josés; e junto com elas menciona também a mãe dos filhos de Zebedeu como presente quando Jesus foi pregado na estaca; ao passo que o último texto menciona a mulher que estava com as duas Marias como Salomé.

Em bases similares conjectura-se que Salomé era também irmã carnal de Maria, mãe de Jesus. Isto foi sugerido porque o texto de João 19:25 menciona as mesmas duas Marias, Maria Madalena e a "esposa de Clopas" (que se entende, em geral, ser a mãe de Tiago, o Menor, e de Josés), e diz também: "Junto à estaca de tortura de Jesus, porém, estavam paradas a sua mãe e a irmã de sua mãe." Se este texto (além de mencionar a mãe de Jesus) estiver falando das mesmas três pessoas mencionadas por Mateus e por Marcos, isto indicaria que Salomé era a irmã da mãe de Jesus. Por outro lado, Mateus 27:55 e Marcos 15:40, 41, declaram que estavam presentes muitas outras mulheres que haviam acompanhado Jesus, e, portanto, Salomé pode ter estado entre estas.

Salomé era discípula do Senhor Jesus Cristo, estando entre as mulheres que o acompanhavam e lhe ministravam dos seus bens, conforme Mateus, Marcos e Lucas (8:3) dão a entender.

Se a identificação dela como mãe dos filhos de Zebedeu for correta, então foi ela quem se chegou a Jesus com o pedido de que se concedesse aos filhos dela sentar-se à direita e à esquerda de Jesus no seu Reino. Mateus retrata a mãe como fazendo o pedido, ao passo que Marcos indica que Tiago e João o fizeram. Pelo visto, os filhos tinham este desejo e induziram a mãe a fazer a solicitação. Isto é apoiado pelo relato de Mateus, no sentido de que os outros discípulos, ao saberem deste pedido, ficaram indignados, não com a mãe, mas com os dois irmãos. — Mt 20:20-24; Mr 10:35-41.

Ao romper da alva, no terceiro dia depois da morte de Jesus, Salomé estava entre as mulheres que foram ao túmulo de Jesus para untar o corpo dele com aromas, mas encontraram a pedra rolada de frente do túmulo e dentro dele um anjo que lhes anunciou: "Ele foi levantado, não está aqui. Eis o lugar onde o deitaram." — Mr 16:1-8.

2. Filha de Herodes Filipe e filha única de sua mãe Herodias. Com o tempo, Herodes Ântipas casou-se com a mãe de Salomé, tendo-a tomado de forma adúltera de seu meio-irmão Filipe. Pouco antes da Páscoa de 32 EC, Ântipas ofereceu uma refeição noturna em Tiberíades, em celebração de seu aniversário natalício. Ele convidou a princesa Salomé, então sua enteada, a dançar perante os presentes, que consistiam em 'seus dignitários e comandantes militares, e os principais da Galileia'. Herodes agradou-se tanto da apresentação de Salomé, que prometeu dar-lhe tudo o que pedisse — até a metade do seu reino. Seguindo o conselho de sua iníqua mãe, Salomé pediu a cabeça de João, o Batizador. Herodes, embora contristado, "em respeito pelos seus juramentos e pelos que se recostavam com ele, ordenou que lhe fosse entregue; e mandou e fez que João fosse decapitado na prisão. E a cabeça dele foi trazida numa travessa e entregue à donzela, e ela a levou à sua mãe". — Mt 14:1-11; Mr 6:17-28.

Embora o nome dela não seja mencionado nas Escrituras, é preservado nos escritos de Josefo. Ele fala também do casamento dela, sem terem filhos, com o governante distrital Filipe, outro meio-irmão de Herodes Ântipas. Após a morte de Filipe, diz o relato de Josefo, ela casou-se com o seu primo Aristóbulo e deu-lhe três filhos homens.

SALTÃO. Veja GAFANHOTO COMUM.

SALU.

1. Morador benjamita, pós-exílico, de Jerusalém; filho de Mesulão. — 1Cr 9:3, 7; Ne 11:7.

2. Cabeça de família sacerdotal que retornou a Jerusalém junto com Zorobabel. (Ne 12:1, 7) Em Neemias 12:20, na lista de posteriores casas paternas, ocorre o nome Salai no lugar respectivo.

3. Simeonita cujo filho Zinri foi executado por imoralidade nas planícies de Moabe. — Núm 25:14.

SALUM [duma raiz que significa "fazer paz; compensar; retribuir"].

1. Último filho mencionado de Naftali. (1Cr 7:13) Grafado Silém em outros textos. — Gên 46:24; Núm 26:49; veja SILÉM.

2. Filho de certo Saul, neto de Simeão, e pai de Mibsão. — 1Cr 4:24, 25.

3. Filho de Sismai e pai de Jecamias na genealogia da divisão jerameelita em Judá. — 1Cr 2:4, 5, 9, 25, 40, 41.

4. Chefe dos porteiros do santuário, que em certa ocasião foi postado junto ao portão do rei, ao L; descendente de Corá. Embora o nome apareça principalmente nas listas dos que retornaram de Babilônia e moravam em Jerusalém (1Cr 9:2, 3, 17-19, 31, 34; Esd 2:1, 42; Ne 7:45), menções tais como o "refeitório de Maaseias, filho de Salum, guarda da porta", no tempo de Jeremias (Je 35:4), talvez indiquem que o nome que consta nas listas pós-exílicas se refira a uma casa paterna, ou família, de porteiros descendentes de um Salum anterior. Confirmação adicional seria ele ser o Selemias e o Meselemias mencionados em 1 Crônicas 26:1, 2, 9, 14, como o porteiro do L do santuário durante o reinado de Davi.

5. Décimo sexto rei do reino das dez tribos; filho de Jabes. Numa conspiração, Salum matou Zacarias, o último dos descendentes governantes de Jeú, e tornou-se rei em Samaria por um mês lunar, por volta de 791 AEC, sendo assassinado por Menaém. — 2Rs 15:8, 10-15.

6. Efraimita cujo filho Jeisquias foi um dos líderes tribais que objetaram a tornar cativos seus irmãos de Judá. — 2Cr 28:12, 13.

7. Descendente de Arão na linhagem sumo-sacerdotal. O filho ou descendente de Salum, Hilquias, oficiava durante o reinado de Josias. (1Cr 6:12, 13; 2Cr 34:9) Esdras também descendia dele. (Esd 7:1, 2) Em outros lugares, ele é chamado Mesulão. — 1Cr 9:11; Ne 11:11; veja MESULÃO N.º 4.

8. Marido de Hulda, a profetisa, visitada por uma delegação do Rei Josias; filho de Ticvá. Ele era presumivelmente "o guarda-roupa", quer dos sacerdotes, quer do rei. (2Rs 22:14; 2Cr 34:22) Possivelmente é o N.º 10.

9. Filho de Josias; rei de Judá durante três meses, antes de ser exilado por Faraó Neco. (1Cr 3:15; 2Rs 23:30-34; Je 22:11, 12) Em outros lugares ele é chamado Jeoacaz. — Veja JEOACAZ N.º 3.

10. Tio paterno de Jeremias. Em 608 AEC, Jeremias comprou um campo de Hanamel, filho de Salum. (Je 32:1, 7-9) A época admitiria ser ele o N.º 8.

11. Um dos porteiros que concordaram em despedir as esposas estrangeiras e os filhos, depois do retorno de Esdras a Jerusalém. (Esd 10:24, 44) Ele provavelmente era de algum modo aparentado com o N.º 4.

12. Um dos filhos de Binui, que também despediram as esposas estrangeiras e os filhos. — Esd 10:38-42, 44.

13. Príncipe sobre metade do distrito de Jerusalém, que, junto com suas filhas, participou nos reparos da muralha de Jerusalém; filho ou descendente de Haloés. — Ne 3:12; veja também SALUNE.

SALUNE [Livre de Cuidados; Despreocupado; Tranquilo]. Príncipe do distrito de Mispá; filho de Colozé. Salune ajudou Neemias a reconstruir um setor da muralha de Jerusalém e reparou o Portão da Fonte. — Ne 3:15.

SALVAÇÃO. Veja RESGATE; SALVADOR.

SALVADOR. Alguém que preserva ou livra de perigo ou de destruição. Jeová é identificado como o principal Salvador, a única Fonte de libertação. (Is 43:11; 45:21) Ele foi vez após vez o Salvador e Libertador de Israel. (Sal 106:8, 10, 21; Is 43:3; 45:15; Je 14:8) Não somente salvou a nação, mas também pessoas que o serviam. (2Sa 22:1-3) Frequentemente, salvava por meio de homens suscitados por ele como salvadores. (Ne 9:27) Durante o período dos juízes, estes salvadores especiais foram escolhidos e habilitados por Deus para libertar Israel da opressão estrangeira. (Jz 2:16; 3:9, 15) Enquanto o juiz vivia, ele servia também para manter Israel no caminho certo, e isto os livrava dos seus inimigos. (Jz 2:18) Quando Jesus esteve na Terra, Jeová era seu Salvador, apoiando-o e fortalecendo-o para manter a integridade em estrênuas provações. — He 5:7; Sal 28:8.

Junto com seu Papel de Salvador, Jeová é também o "Resgatador". (Is 49:26; 60:16) No passado, ele remiu seu povo Israel do cativeiro. Ao libertar os cristãos da servidão ao pecado, ele realiza o resgate por meio do seu Filho Jesus Cristo (1Jo 4:14), a provisão de salvação feita por Jeová, sendo Jesus por isso enaltecido como "Agente Principal e Salvador". (At 5:31) Concordemente, Jesus Cristo pode de direito ser chamado "nosso Salvador", embora realize a salvação como agente de Jeová. (Tit 1:4; 2Pe 1:11) O nome Jesus, dado sob direção angélica ao Filho de Deus, significa "Jeová É Salvação", pois, conforme disse o anjo, "ele salvará o seu povo dos pecados deles". (Mt 1:21; Lu 1:31) Este nome destaca que Jeová é a Fonte da salvação, realizada por meio de Jesus. Por este motivo, constatamos que se fala do Pai e do Filho juntos com relação à salvação. — Tit 2:11-13; 3:4-6.

Jeová provê a salvação por meio de Jesus Cristo para "toda sorte de homens". (1Ti 4:10) Salva-os do pecado e da morte (Ro 8:2), de Babilônia, a Grande (Re 18:2, 4), deste mundo que está sob o controle de Satanás (Jo 17:16; Col 1:13), e da destruição e da morte eterna (Re 7:14-17; 21:3, 4). Em Revelação (Apocalipse) 7:9, 10, apresenta-se "uma grande multidão" atribuindo a salvação a Deus e ao Cordeiro.

O sacrifício resgatador é a base da salvação, e Cristo Jesus, como Rei e eterno Sumo Sacerdote, tem a autoridade e o poder "de salvar completamente os que se aproximam de Deus por intermédio dele". (He 7:23-25; Re 19:16) Ele é "salvador deste corpo", a congregação dos seus seguidores ungidos, e também de todos os que exercem fé nele. — Ef 5:23; 1Jo 4:14; Jo 3:16, 17.

SAMA, I [possivelmente uma forma abreviada de Semaías, que significa "Jeová Ouviu (Escutou)"]. Um dos poderosos de Davi; irmão de Jeiel e filho de Hotão, o aroerita. — 1Cr 11:26, 44.

SAMA, II. Destacado membro da tribo de Aser; filho ou descendente de Zofa. — 1Cr 7:36, 37, 40.

SAMÁ.

1. Xeque edomita; neto de Esaú através de Reuel. — Gên 36:10, 13, 17; 1Cr 1:37.

2. Um irmão mais velho do Rei Davi, também chamado Simeia, Simeá e Simei. (1Cr 2:13; 2Sa 13:3; 21:21) Samá, como terceiro filho de Jessé, foi a terceira possível escolha rejeitada de ser ungido como rei por Samuel. (1Sa 16:6-9) Ele estava no exército de Saul, que estava sendo escarnecido por Golias na ocasião em que Davi trazia provisões. (1Sa 17:13, 14, 20, 23) Um dos filhos de Samá, Jonatã, matou um gigante filisteu. (2Sa 21:20, 21; 1Cr 20:6, 7) Alguns sugerem que Jonatã, filho de Samá, chamava-se também Jonadabe e era o ardiloso conselheiro de Amnom. — 2Sa 13:3, 32.

3. Um dos três principais guerreiros de Davi; filho de Agé, o hararita. Em certa ocasião, Samá defendeu todo um campo contra os filisteus, abatendo muitos deles. (2Sa 23:11, 12) Ele e os outros dois principais poderosos foram até a cisterna de Belém (na ocasião ocupada pelos filisteus), a fim de tirar água para Davi, que se negou a bebê-la.

(2Sa 23:13-17) A comparação de listas similares em 1 Crônicas 11:33, 34, e 2 Samuel 23:32, 33 (visto que neste último texto a leitura geralmente sugerida é: "Jonatã, filho de Samá, o hararita") indicaria que Sage é um nome alternativo de Samá, e que Samá tinha um filho chamado Jonatã, que também se distinguiu como guerreiro de Davi.

4. Um dos 30 poderosos de Davi; era harodita. (2Sa 23:8, 25) Parece haver uma variação na grafia do seu nome em 1 Crônicas 11:27 (Samote) e em 1 Crônicas 27:8 (Samute), sendo que este último texto o identifica como chefe da turma de serviço do quinto mês.

SAMAI. [duma raiz que significa "ouvir; escutar"].

1. Homem do ramo jerameelita da genealogia de Judá; filho de Onão, e pai de Nadabe e Abisur. — 1Cr 2:4, 5, 9, 26, 28, 32.

2. Homem do ramo calebita da genealogia de Judá; filho de Requém e pai de Maom. — 1Cr 2:4, 5, 9, 42-45.

3. Nome de uma pessoa da tribo de Judá. — 1Cr 4:17.

SAMARIA [Pertencente ao Clã Semer].

1. Cidade que o Rei Onri começou a construir por volta dos meados do décimo século AEC; ela serviu como capital do reino setentrional de Israel durante mais de 200 anos. Onri comprou de Semer o monte, em cujo cume foi construída a cidade, por dois talentos de prata, preço equivalente a US$ 13.212. (1Rs 16:23, 24) Tanto o monte como a cidade continuaram a ser chamados pelo nome do seu anterior dono. — Am 4:1; 6:1.

Localização. Samaria é identificada com ruínas chamadas Shomeron, adjacentes à aldeia árabe de Sabastiya (Sebástie), a uns 55 km ao N de Jerusalém e 11 km ao NO de Siquém. Encontrava-se no território de Manassés. Quando Samaria foi descrita como "a cabeça" de Efraim, isso se referia à sua posição qual capital do reino de dez tribos, visto que Efraim era a tribo dominante daquele reino. (Is 7:9) Samaria ficava perto, se não no mesmo lugar, de "Samir, na região montanhosa de Efraim", cidade do juiz Tola, que serviu durante o período dos juízes. — Jz 10:1, 2.

O cume um tanto achatado, de uns 2 km de extensão de L a O, da colina de Samaria, era o lugar ideal para uma cidade. A elevação abrupta de uns 90 m acima do nível da planície tornava fácil defender o lugar. Também a vista era magnífica, pois, para o N, o L e o S havia picos mais elevados, ao passo que para o O a terra descia aos poucos duma altitude de 463 m para o Mediterrâneo azul, distante 34 km.

Ruínas romanas da antiga Samaria.

Grande parte da história de Samaria está ligada ao proceder obstinado dos 14 reis de Israel, desde Onri até Oseias. — 1Rs 16:28, 29; 22:51, 52; 2Rs 3:1, 2; 10:35, 36; 13:1, 10; 14:23; 15:8, 13, 14, 17, 23, 25, 27; 17:1.

No Tempo de Acabe. Após a morte de Onri, seu filho Acabe continuou com a construção da cidade durante o seu reinado de 22 anos. Esta incluiu a construção de um templo de Baal, a instalação de um altar de Baal e do "poste sagrado" de adoração — tudo isso em evidência, nesta recém-criada cidade, da religião cananeia patrocinada pela esposa fenícia de Acabe, Jezabel. (1Rs 16:28-33; 18:18, 19; 2Rs 13:6) Acabe embelezou Samaria também com uma linda "casa de marfim", possivelmente mobiliada com "leitos de marfim", similares aos mencionados pelo profeta Amós cem anos mais tarde. (1Rs 22:39; Am 3:12, 15; 6:1, 4) Arqueólogos encontraram nas ruínas de Samaria mais de 500 fragmentos de marfim, muitos deles artisticamente trabalhados.

Na última parte do reinado de Acabe, o rei sírio Ben-Hadade II sitiou Samaria, jurando despojá-la tão completamente, que não haveria pó suficiente para encher as mãos dos soldados do seu exército. Todavia, concedeu-se aos israelitas a vitória, a fim de que Acabe soubesse que Jeová é Deus Todo-Poderoso. (1Rs 20:1-21) Num segundo embate, menos de um ano depois, quando Ben-Hadade foi obrigado a render-se, Acabe libertou-o sob a promessa de que se devolveriam cidades a Israel e que se 'designariam ruas em Damasco' a Acabe, assim como o pai de Ben-Hadade se havia designado ruas em Samaria. (1Rs 20:26-34) Estas "ruas" evidentemente se destinavam ao estabelecimento de bazares, ou mercados, para promover os interesses comerciais do pai de Ben-Hadade. Todavia, Acabe retornou a Samaria triste e abatido, porque, visto que poupara a vida de Ben-Hadade, Jeová lhe disse que ele perderia a sua própria. — 1Rs 20:35-43.

Acabe perdeu-a no terceiro ano depois disso, quando ele convidou o Rei Jeosafá, de Judá, para ajudá-lo a recuperar da Síria a cidade de Ramote-Gileade. Os dois reis realizaram uma reunião formal na entrada de Samaria, e, depois de não fazer caso do profeta de Jeová e de escutar o conselho enganoso de falsos profetas, decidiram empreender a batalha. (1Rs 22:1-28; 2Cr 18:2, 9) Acabe disfarçou-se, mas foi atingido por uma flecha, embora o arqueiro inimigo não o tivesse reconhecido como o rei. Acabe sangrou até morrer no seu carro. Foi levado de volta à sua capital para ser sepultado, e o carro foi lavado junto ao reservatório de Samaria. (1Rs 22:29-38) Este reservatório talvez seja o tanque retangular, bastante raso, mas grande, descoberto ali pelos arqueólogos.

O ajuste de contas final com a casa de Acabe se deu pela mão de Jeú, ungido por Jeová para esta obra de execução. (2Rs 9:6-10) Depois de matar o filho de Acabe, Jeorão, neto de Acabe, Acazias, e a viúva de Acabe, Jezabel (2Rs 9:22-37), daí Jeú, numa troca de cartas com os príncipes e os anciãos que moravam em Samaria, providenciou a decapitação dos 70 filhos restantes de Acabe. "Sabei, portanto", declarou Jeú, "que nada da palavra de Jeová, que Jeová falou contra a casa de Acabe, cairá sem cumprimento por terra; e o próprio Jeová tem feito o que falou por intermédio de seu servo Elias". — 2Rs 10:1-12, 17.

Outras pronunciações de Jeová, por meio de seus profetas Elias e Eliseu, bem como os eventos relacionados com elas, ocorreram em Samaria e vizinhança. Por exemplo, Acazias, filho de Acabe, caiu pela gelosia do seu quarto de terraço no palácio, em Samaria (2Rs 1:2-17), o leproso sírio, Naamã, veio a Samaria em busca de cura (2Rs 5:1-14), e a força militar síria, enviada para capturar Eliseu, foi mentalmente cegada e conduzida a Samaria, onde os homens foram alimentados e mandados para casa (2Rs 6:13-23). Durante o reinado de Jeorão, filho de Acabe, os sírios sitiaram Samaria, causando uma fome tão grande, que alguns comeram seus próprios filhos. Mas então, em cumprimento da profecia de Eliseu, a fome foi interrompida numa só noite, quando Jeová fez com que os sírios fugissem em pânico e deixassem para trás os seus mantimentos. — 2Rs 6:24-29; 7:1-20.

Rival de Jerusalém. De tempos em tempos, a rivalidade e hostilidade entre Samaria e Jerusalém, as respectivas capitais dos reinos setentrional e meridional, eclodia em guerra aberta. Numa ocasião, o rei de Judá, quando prestes a atacar Edom, enviou 100.000 mercenários de Israel de volta para casa, às ordens de Jeová. E embora fossem pagos 100 talentos de prata (US$ 660.600), esses israelitas ficaram tão furiosos, que atacaram e saquearam cidades de Judá "desde Samaria até Bete-Horom". (2Cr 25:5-13) O rei de Judá, orgulhoso da vitória sobre Edom, procurou então uma briga com o rei de Samaria, briga que só foi resolvida quando todo o ouro e a prata da casa de Jeová, e o tesouro do rei, em Jerusalém, haviam sido levados a Samaria. (2Rs 14:8-14; 2Cr 25:17-24) Anos mais tarde, porém, depois duma derrota do Rei Acaz de Judá, os homens de Israel, a fim de escaparem da ira de Jeová, devolveram certos cativos e despojos que haviam sido levados a Samaria. — 2Cr 28:5-15.

A cidade de Samaria foi por fim destruída por causa da sua idolatria, sua corrupção moral, e sua contínua desconsideração das leis e dos princípios de Deus. (2Rs 17:7-18) Jeová advertiu repetidas vezes seus governantes e os súditos deles pela boca de profetas tais como Isaías (8:4; 9:9), Oseias (7:1; 8:5, 6; 10:5, 7; 13:16), Amós (3:9; 8:14), Miqueias (1:1, 5, 6) e outros (1Rs 20:13, 28, 35-42; 22:8), assim como Elias e Eliseu. Mais tarde, depois da destruição dela, outros profetas citaram Samaria como exemplo de aviso para aqueles que rejeitavam as instruções de Jeová. — 2Rs 21:10-13; Je 23:13; Ez 16:46, 51, 53, 55; 23:4, 33.

História Posterior. Em 742 AEC, Salmaneser V, rei da Assíria, sitiou Samaria, mas a cidade conseguiu resistir por quase três anos. Quando finalmente caiu, em 740 AEC, muitos dos destacados habitantes foram deportados ao exílio e estabelecidos na Mesopotâmia e na Média. Se o crédito pela derradeira captura da cidade deve ser atribuído a Salmaneser V ou ao seu sucessor, Sargão II, não é uma questão resolvida. — 2Rs 17:1-6, 22, 23; 18:9-12; veja SARGÃO.

Com a queda de Samaria diante dos assírios, termina a história pormenorizada da Bíblia a respeito da cidade. Depois disso, muitas vezes, embora nem sempre, faz-se menção da cidade (2Rs 23:18; At 8:5) como lembrete do que sobrevém àqueles que se rebelam contra Jeová. (2Rs 18:34; 21:13; Is 10:9-11; 36:19) A Bíblia relata que, depois da destruição de Jerusalém e do subsequente assassinato de Gedalias, 80 homens de Siquém, Silo e Samaria desceram em direção a Mispá e encontraram Ismael, o assassino. Ismael matou a muitos destes homens, poupando deles alguns que prometeram mostrar-lhe onde tinham tesouros de trigo, cevada, azeite e mel escondidos. — Je 41:1-9.

Registros seculares relatam parte da história de Samaria a partir dos dias de Alexandre, o Grande. Nos tempos romanos, o esplendor dela devia-se às construções de Herodes, o Grande, que deu à cidade o novo nome de Sebaste (forma feminina, grega, do nome latino Augustus), em homenagem a Augusto, primeiro imperador. Atualmente, o nome árabe de Sabastiya (Sebástie) preserva o que Herodes lhe deu. Portanto, não surpreende que as escavações neste sítio tenham trazido à tona restos de diversos períodos diferentes da sua história; alguns destes restos são dos dias dos reis de Israel.

2. Território do reino setentrional de dez tribos de Israel. O nome da sua capital, Samaria, foi às vezes aplicado a esta região inteira. Por exemplo, quando Acabe era chamado "rei de Samaria", não tinha o sentido restrito de ele ser apenas rei da cidade, mas tinha o sentido mais amplo de rei das dez tribos. (1Rs 21:1) Assim, também, as "cidades de Samaria" referiam-se às espalhadas nas dez tribos, não a cidadezinhas em torno da capital. (2Rs 23:19; esta mesma expressão registrada em 1Rs 13:32, como que usada antes de se construir a cidade de Samaria, se não foi profética, talvez fosse inserida pelo compilador do relato de Reis.) A fome "em Samaria", nos dias de Acabe, estendia-se por todo o reino de Samaria, e, realmente, abrangia até mesmo a Fenícia, estendendo-se pelo menos desde o vale da torrente de Querite, ao L do Jordão, até Sarefá, no Mediterrâneo. (1Rs 17:1-12; 18:2, 5, 6) De modo similar, a prometida restauração dos "montes de Samaria" deve ter abrangido todo o domínio de Samaria. — Je 31:5.

Tiglate-Pileser III parece ter sido o primeiro a retirar os israelitas do território de Samaria, encontrando-se entre os levados para a Assíria homens destacados dos rubenitas, dos gaditas e dos manassitas da região ao L do Jordão. (1Cr 5:6, 26) Quando o reino setentrional por fim caiu, outros foram levados ao exílio. (2Rs 17:6) Mas, esta vez, o rei da Assíria substituiu esses israelitas com pessoas de outras partes do seu domínio, uma política de transplante continuada por Esar-Hadom e Asenapar (Assurbanipal). — 2Rs 17:24; Esd 4:2, 10.

Leões começaram a multiplicar-se no país, provavelmente porque essa terra, ou grande parte dela, jazera desolada por um tempo. (Veja Êx 23:29.) Os colonos, sem dúvida por superstição, achavam que isso se dava por não entenderem como adorar o deus do país. De modo que o rei da Assíria mandou de volta do exílio um sacerdote israelita, adorador do bezerro. Ele ensinou aos colonos algo sobre Jeová, mas da mesma maneira que Jeroboão fizera, de modo que aprenderam alguma coisa sobre Jeová, mas, na realidade, continuaram a adorar seus próprios deuses falsos. — 2Rs 17:24-41.

3. Distrito ocasionalmente atravessado por Jesus e ao qual os apóstolos mais tarde levaram a mensagem do cristianismo. Não se sabe hoje quais eram os seus limites, mas, de modo geral, ficava entre a Galileia, no N, e a Judeia, no S, e se estendia para o O, desde o Jordão até as planícies costeiras do Mediterrâneo. Na maior parte, o distrito abrangia os territórios antes pertencentes à tribo de Efraim e à meia tribo de Manassés (ao O do Jordão).

Ocasionalmente, em caminho para Jerusalém e no retorno de lá, Jesus passava por Samaria, situada entre os distritos da Judeia e da Galileia. (Lu 17:11; Jo 4:3-6) Mas, em geral, ele se refreou de pregar neste território, até mesmo dizendo aos 12 que enviou que evitassem as cidades samaritanas, e, em vez disso, fossem "continuamente às ovelhas perdidas da casa de Israel", isto é, aos judeus. — Mt 10:5, 6.

No entanto, esta restrição valia apenas por um tempo limitado, porque, pouco antes da sua ascensão ao céu, Jesus disse aos seus discípulos que levassem as boas novas não só a Samaria, mas até as partes mais distantes da terra. (At 1:8, 9) De modo que, quando em Jerusalém irrompeu uma perseguição, os discípulos, especialmente Filipe, empreenderam o ministério em Samaria. Mais tarde foram enviados para lá Pedro e João, o que resultou em maior expansão do cristianismo. — At 8:1-17, 25; 9:31; 15:3.

SAMARITANO [provavelmente: De (Pertencente a) Samaria]. O termo "samaritanos" aparece pela primeira vez nas Escrituras depois da conquista do reino de Samaria, de dez tribos, em 740 AEC; foi aplicado aos que viviam no reino setentrional antes desta conquista, para diferenciá-los dos estrangeiros levados mais tarde para lá de outras partes do Império Assírio. (2Rs 17:29) Parece que os assírios não retiraram dali todos os habitantes israelitas, porque o relato de 2 Crônicas 34:6-9 (compare isso com 2Rs 23:19, 20) dá a entender que, durante o reinado do Rei Josias, ainda havia israelitas naquela terra. Com o tempo, "samaritanos" passou a referir-se aos descendentes dos que foram deixados em Samaria e dos levados para lá pelos assírios. Portanto, sem dúvida, alguns eram o resultado de casamentos mistos. Num período posterior, o nome tinha uma conotação mais religiosa do que racial ou política. O termo "samaritano" referia-se a alguém que pertencia à seita religiosa que florescia na vizinhança das antigas Siquém e Samaria, e que sustentava certos conceitos nitidamente diferentes do judaísmo. — Jo 4:9.

A Religião Samaritana. O desenvolvimento da religião samaritana deveu-se a diversos fatores, não se podendo desconsiderar nisso os esforços de Jeroboão, de alienar as dez tribos da adoração de Jeová com centro em Jerusalém. Durante cerca de 250 anos depois que a nação se dividira em dois reinos, os sacerdotes levíticos, ordenados por Deus, foram substituídos por um sacerdócio designado por homem, o que, por sua vez, levou o reino de Israel a praticar uma desmoralizante idolatria. (1Rs 12:28-33; 2Rs 17:7-17; 2Cr 11:13-15; 13:8, 9) Sobreveio então a queda do reino setentrional. Os imigrantes pagãos trazidos de Babilônia, Cuta, Ava, Hamate e Sefarvaim eram adoradores de muitas deidades — Sucote-Benote, Nergal, Asima, Nibaz, Tartaque, Adrameleque e Anameleque. Embora aprendessem algo sobre Jeová pela instrução dada por um membro do sacerdócio de Jeroboão, ainda assim, tal como Samaria fizera com os bezerros de ouro, eles continuaram a adorar seus deuses falsos, geração após geração. (2Rs 17:24-41) Os extensos esforços de Josias, de livrar essas comunidades setentrionais da sua adoração idólatra, quase cem anos depois da queda de Samaria, não tiveram maior efeito duradouro do que reformas similares feitas por ele no reino meridional de Judá. — 2Rs 23:4-20; 2Cr 34:6, 7.

Em 537 AEC, retornou do exílio babilônico um restante das 12 tribos, preparado para reconstruir o templo de Jeová em Jerusalém. (Esd 1:3; 2:1, 70) Foi então que os "samaritanos", que já se encontravam no país quando os israelitas chegaram, e que foram descritos como "adversários de Judá e de Benjamim", dirigiram-se a Zorobabel e aos anciãos, dizendo: "Deixai-nos construir convosco; pois, assim como vós, buscamos o vosso Deus e a ele oferecemos sacrifícios desde os dias de Esar-Hadom, rei da Assíria, que nos trouxe para cá." (Esd 4:1, 2) Esta alegação de devoção a Jeová, porém, mostrava ser apenas da boca para fora, pois, quando Zorobabel não aceitou a oferta deles, os samaritanos fizeram todo o possível para impedir a construção do templo. Depois de fracassarem todos os seus esforços concentrados de hostilização e intimidação, numa carta dirigida ao imperador persa fizeram acusações falsas e conseguiram que se emitisse um decreto governamental que impediu a construção durante vários anos. — Esd 4:3-24.

Em meados do quinto século AEC, quando Neemias começou a reparar as muralhas de Jerusalém, Sambalá (governador de Samaria, segundo um dos Papiros Elefantinos) fez diversos esforços estrênuos, mas infrutíferos, de fazer parar a obra. (Ne 2:19, 20; 4:1-12; 6:1-15) Mais tarde, depois duma prolongada ausência, Neemias retornou a Jerusalém e verificou que o neto do sumo sacerdote Eliasibe se tinha casado com a filha de Sambalá. Imediatamente, Neemias o 'enxotou' dali. — Ne 13:6, 7, 28.

A construção do templo samaritano no monte Gerizim, talvez no quarto século AEC, em competição com o de Jerusalém, é considerada por alguns como sinal da separação definitiva entre judeus e samaritanos, embora alguns achem que o corte de relações tenha ocorrido mais de um século depois. Quando Jesus iniciou seu ministério, o rompimento entre os dois ainda não havia sido sanado, embora o templo no Gerizim tivesse sido destruído cerca de um século e meio antes disso. (Jo 4:9) Os samaritanos ainda adoravam no monte Gerizim (Jo 4:20-23), e os judeus tinham pouco respeito por eles. (Jo 8:48) Esta existente atitude de desprezo permitiu que Jesus apresentasse um forte argumento com a sua ilustração do prestimoso samaritano. — Lu 10:29-37.

O Pentateuco Samaritano. Desde tempos primitivos, as Escrituras dos samaritanos consistiam apenas nos primeiros cinco livros da Bíblia, e assim mesmo apenas na sua própria recensão, escritos nos seus próprios caracteres e conhecidos como o Pentateuco Samaritano. Eles rejeitavam as demais Escrituras Hebraicas, com a possível exceção do livro de Josué. O Pentateuco Samaritano difere do texto massorético em uns 6.000 pontos, a maioria dos quais são menores. Todavia, há alguns maiores, como, por exemplo, a leitura de Deuteronômio 27:4, onde Gerizim foi colocado em lugar de Ebal, lugar em que as leis de Moisés deviam ser inscritas em pedras caiadas. (De 27:8) O motivo óbvio desta mudança era dar credibilidade à sua crença de que o Gerizim era o monte santo de Deus.

Mas, de modo geral, a sua aceitação do Pentateuco deu aos samaritanos a base para a crença na vinda dum profeta maior do que Moisés. (De 18:18, 19) No primeiro século, os samaritanos aguardavam a vinda de Cristo, o Messias, e alguns o aceitaram; outros o rejeitaram. (Lu 17:16-19; Jo 4:9-43; Lu 9:52-56) Mais tarde, devido à pregação feita pelos primitivos cristãos, muitos samaritanos aceitaram de bom grado o cristianismo. — At 8:1-17, 25; 9:31; 15:3.

SAMBALÁ [do acadiano, significando "Sin [o deus-lua] Salvou"]. Horonita (significando que era morador de Bete-Horom ou de Horonaim) que se opunha aos esforços de Neemias de reparar a muralha de Jerusalém. (Ne 2:10) Acha-se tratar-se do Sambalá mencionado num papiro encontrado em Elefantina, no Egito, que identifica um homem deste nome como governador de Samaria e pai de Delaías e de Selemias.

Sambalá, junto com Tobias e Gesém, ridicularizou os judeus e acusou-os de se rebelarem contra o rei da Pérsia. (Ne 2:19; 4:1) Ao passo que os reparos progrediam, ele e outros opositores conspiravam para lutar contra Jerusalém. Mas todos os esforços deles neste sentido foram ineficazes, porque os judeus confiavam em Jeová e postavam guardas. (Ne 4:7-9) Depois de se fecharem as brechas na muralha de Jerusalém, Sambalá e outros repetidas vezes tentaram atrair Neemias para fora da cidade. Quando isto falhou, ele e Tobias contrataram um judeu para amedrontar Neemias para fazê-lo esconder-se indevidamente no templo. Mas não tiveram êxito. — Ne 6:1-14.

Mais tarde, ao retornar depois duma ausência de Jerusalém, Neemias verificou que um neto do sumo sacerdote Eliasibe se tornara genro de Sambalá. Portanto, Neemias expulsou este neto. — Ne 13:6, 7, 28.

SÂMEQUE [ס] (sá·mekh). Décima quinta letra do alfabeto hebraico. Sá·mekh representa o som usado pelos efraimitas quando tentavam pronunciar a palavra "xibolete", que começa com a letra shin (שׁ = chim), em vez de com sá·mekh. (Jz 12:6; veja também SIM, CHIM.) No hebraico, sá·mekh é a letra inicial de cada um dos oito versículos do Salmo 119:113-120.

SAMIR.

1. Levita que era filho de Micá. — 1Cr 24:20, 24.

2. Cidade na região montanhosa de Judá. (Jos 15:20, 48) O antigo nome parece ser preservado em Khirbet Somerah, embora se ache que o lugar propriamente dito tenha ficado perto de el-Bireh, a uns 20 km ao SO de Hébron.

3. Residência e lugar de sepultamento do juiz Tola, na região montanhosa de Efraim. (Jz 10:1, 2) Samir pode ter estado situada em Samaria ou perto da posterior localização desta. Este conceito é de certo modo apoiado pelo Códice Alexandrino (LXX), que reza Sa·ma·rei·ai (Samaria) em Juízes 10:1.

SAMLÁ. Quinto rei mencionado de Edom, que reinou antes de haver rei governando Israel. Samlá era de Masreca. — Gên 36:31-37; 1Cr 1:47, 48.

SAMOS [Altura]. Ilha do mar Egeu perto da costa O da Ásia Menor. Parece que Paulo fez breve escala em Samos no retorno da sua terceira viagem missionária. — At 20:15.

Um estreito de cerca de 1,5 km de extensão separa esta ilha montanhosa do promontório asiático chamado Samsun Dagi. Samos encontrava-se ao SO de Éfeso e ao NO de Mileto. Tem cerca de 43 km de comprimento e 23 km de largura. Na época das viagens missionárias de Paulo, era um estado livre. Sua principal cidade e porto também se chamava Samos. A ilha era famosa pelo culto a Hera (Juno, deusa romana do casamento e da maternidade) e possuía um templo dedicado a ela, que competia em esplendor e celebridade com o templo de Ártemis em Éfeso.

Segundo o relato bíblico, o navio em que Paulo viajava ao retornar a Jerusalém parou na altura de Quios, navegou uns 105 km pela costa da Ásia Menor e 'tocou em Samos, e no dia seguinte chegou a Mileto'. (At 20:15) Certos manuscritos acrescentam uma expressão que resulta na tradução de "nos aproximamos de Samos e, depois de uma breve permanência em Trigílio, no outro dia chegamos a Mileto". (LEB; TEB) Tem-se entendido que isto significa que o navio não ficou no porto de Samos, mas, antes, atravessou o estreito e ancorou sob a proteção do elevado promontório. Todavia, os manuscritos mais antigos e mais fidedignos omitem a expressão sobre "Trigílio", e ela foi rejeitada por Westcott e Hort, bem como por Nestle e Aland, na preparação dos seus textos-mestre. O navio em que Paulo viajava evidentemente aportou brevemente em Samos e depois seguiu para Mileto.

SAMOTE. Um dos poderosos de Davi; harorita. — 1Cr 11:26, 27; veja SAMÁ N.º 4.

SAMOTRÁCIA [possivelmente: Samos de Trácia]. Ilha montanhosa situada no NE do mar Egeu, com uma cidade do mesmo nome no lado N. Foi provavelmente na primavera (setentrional) de 50 EC, durante a segunda viagem missionária de Paulo, que o navio em que viajava foi "diretamente" à ilha de Samotrácia, procedente de Trôade, no NO da Ásia Menor. No entanto, não há nenhum indício de que ele tenha desembarcado ali. (At 16:11) A atual ilha (Samothraki) não tem um bom porto, embora ofereça diversos lugares para uma ancoragem segura.

SAMUA [forma abreviada de Semaías, que significa "Jeová Ouviu (Escutou)"].

1. Cabeça que representava a tribo de Rubem e que Moisés enviou à Terra da Promessa como espia; filho de Zacur. Ele se juntou a outros nove espias em desanimar os israelitas quanto a terem fé em que Jeová limparia Canaã dos inimigos deles. — Núm 13:2-4, 28, 29.

2. Filho de Davi entre os dados à luz por Bate-Seba, portanto, irmão germano do Rei Salomão. (2Sa 5:13, 14; 1Cr 14:3, 4) Uma vez ele é chamado de Simeia. — 1Cr 3:5.

3. Levita da linhagem de Jedutum, cujo filho ou descendente Abda morava em Jerusalém após o exílio babilônico. (Ne 11:17) Ele é chamado de Semaías em 1 Crônicas 9:16.

4. Sacerdote que era cabeça da casa paterna de Bilga, nos dias de Joiaquim, sucessor de Jesua. — Ne 12:12, 18.

SAMUEL [Nome de Deus]. Destacado profeta (At 3:24; 13:20), a quem tradicionalmente se atribui a escrita dos livros bíblicos de Juízes, Rute e parte de Primeiro Samuel. (Veja 1Sa 10:25; 1Cr 29:29.) Seu pai Elcana era levita dos coatitas não sacerdotais. (1Cr 6:27, 28, 33-38) Samuel veio a ter três irmãos e duas irmãs germanos. — 1Sa 2:21.

Visto que sua mãe Ana o prometera ao serviço de Jeová como nazireu mesmo antes de ele ser concebido (1Sa 1:11), Samuel foi levado ao tabernáculo em Silo assim que foi desmamado (talvez à idade de pelo menos três anos; veja 2Cr 31:16) e foi deixado entregue aos cuidados do sumo sacerdote Eli. (1Sa 1:24-28) Assim, Samuel, cingido dum éfode de linho, 'ministrava a Jeová' ainda menino. Sua mãe visitava-o anualmente e trazia-lhe uma nova túnica sem mangas. (1Sa 2:18, 19) À medida que crescia, Samuel tornou-se "mais benquisto, tanto do ponto de vista de Jeová como do dos homens". — 1Sa 2:26.

Torna-se Profeta bem Cedo na Vida. À noite, Samuel dormia "no templo de Jeová onde se achava a arca de Deus", e sua primeira tarefa de manhã parece ter sido a de abrir "as portas da casa de Jeová". (1Sa 3:3, 15) Evidentemente, as palavras "onde se achava a arca de Deus" aplicam-se à área do tabernáculo, e não devem ser entendidas como indicando que Samuel dormia no Santíssimo. Ele, como levita coatita, não sacerdotal, não tinha direito de ver a Arca ou qualquer outra mobília sagrada dentro do santuário. (Núm 4:17-20) A única parte da casa de Jeová a que Samuel tinha acesso era o pátio do tabernáculo. Portanto, as portas que abria devem ter sido as que davam acesso ao pátio, e deve ter sido ali que ele dormia. Durante o período em que o tabernáculo tinha permanência em Silo, provavelmente fizeram-se várias construções, e uma delas pode ter servido de dormitório para Samuel.

Certa noite, depois de se ter recolhido, Samuel ouviu uma voz chamá-lo pelo nome. Imaginando que era o sumo sacerdote Eli, ele correu para vê-lo. Depois de isso ocorrer três vezes, Eli discerniu que Jeová chamava Samuel e o instruiu concordemente. Jeová revelou então a Samuel Seu julgamento contra a casa de Eli. Temeroso, Samuel não deu espontaneamente quaisquer informações sobre a palavra de Jeová, até ser solicitado por Eli a fazê-lo. Assim começou a obra profética de Samuel, e com o tempo todo o Israel apercebeu-se de que ele deveras era profeta de Jeová. — 1Sa 3:2-21.

Lidera Israel na Adoração Verdadeira. Mais de 20 anos depois, por exortação de Samuel, os israelitas abandonaram a adoração idólatra e começaram a servir somente a Jeová. Subsequentemente, Samuel mandou os israelitas reunir-se em Mispá. Aproveitando-se desta situação, os filisteus fizeram uma invasão. Ficando temerosos, os filhos de Israel pediram que Samuel pedisse a ajuda de Jeová. Ele fez isso e também ofereceu em sacrifício um cordeirinho que ainda mamava. (1Sa 7:2-9) Naturalmente, como levita coatita não sacerdotal, Samuel não estava autorizado a oficiar no altar do santuário (Núm 18:2, 3, 6, 7), e não há registro de que ele o tenha feito alguma vez. Todavia, como representante e profeta de Jeová, ele podia oferecer sacrifícios em outros lugares, sob direção divina, assim como fizeram Gideão (Jz 6:25-28) e Elias. (1Rs 18:36-38) Jeová respondeu à oração de Samuel, lançando os filisteus em confusão e assim habilitando os israelitas a obter uma vitória decisiva. Para comemorar isso, Samuel erigiu uma pedra entre Mispá e Jesana, chamando-a de Ebenezer (que significa "Pedra de Ajuda"). (1Sa 7:10-12) Sem dúvida, Samuel reservou como algo santo parte dos despojos desta guerra, e de outras, para a manutenção do tabernáculo. — 1Cr 26:27, 28.

Os dias de Samuel trouxeram reveses adicionais aos filisteus (1Sa 7:13, 14) e mostraram ser um período assinalado por notáveis celebrações da Páscoa. (2Cr 35:18) Samuel parece também ter elaborado um arranjo para haver porteiros levitas, e seu arranjo talvez servisse de base para a organização posta em vigor por Davi. (1Cr 9:22) Da sua cidade de Ramá, na região montanhosa de Efraim, Samuel percorria anualmente um circuito de Betel, Gilgal e Mispá, julgando Israel em todos estes lugares. (1Sa 7:15-17) Nunca abusou da sua posição. Sua atuação foi imaculada. (1Sa 12:2-5) Mas os seus filhos, Joel e Abias, pervertiam a justiça. — 1Sa 8:2, 3.

Unge Saul para Ser Rei. A infidelidade dos filhos de Samuel, bem como a ameaça duma guerra com os amonitas, induziu os anciãos de Israel a pedir que Samuel designasse sobre eles um rei. (1Sa 8:4, 5; 12:12) A resposta de Jeová à oração de Samuel sobre isso foi que, embora o pedido do povo mostrasse falta de fé na realeza de Jeová, não obstante, o profeta devia acolhê-lo e avisar o povo sobre o que os direitos legítimos do rei envolviam. Embora informados por Samuel de que a monarquia resultaria na perda de certas liberdades, o povo ainda assim insistiu em ter um rei. Depois de Samuel ter despedido os homens de Israel, Jeová dirigiu a questão de modo tal, que Samuel ungisse o benjamita Saul para ser rei. (1Sa 8:6–10:1) Após isso, Samuel providenciou que os israelitas se reunissem em Mispá, e ali Saul foi designado rei por sortes. (1Sa 10:17-24) De novo Samuel falou sobre os direitos legítimos da realeza, e fez também um registro escrito disso. — 1Sa 10:25.

Após a vitória de Saul sobre os amonitas, Samuel mandou que os israelitas viessem a Gilgal para confirmar de novo a realeza. Nesta ocasião, Samuel recapitulou sua própria atuação, bem como a história passada de Israel, e mostrou que, para conservar a aprovação divina, era necessário a obediência do rei e do povo a Jeová. Para inculcar neles a seriedade de terem rejeitado a Jeová como Rei, Samuel orou pedindo um temporal fora de época. A resposta de Jeová a esta petição motivou o povo a reconhecer a seriedade da sua transgressão. — 1Sa 11:14–12:25.

Em duas ocasiões posteriores, Samuel teve de censurar Saul pela desobediência à orientação divina. No primeiro caso, Samuel anunciou que o reinado de Saul não duraria, porque este se havia presunçosamente adiantado em oferecer um sacrifício, em vez de esperar conforme se lhe ordenara. (1Sa 13:10-14) A rejeição do próprio Saul como rei, por parte de Jeová, foi a segunda mensagem condenatória que Samuel transmitiu a Saul, porque este desobedientemente manteve vivo o Rei Agague, bem como o melhor dos rebanhos e das manadas dos amalequitas. Em resposta ao rogo de Saul, Samuel compareceu com ele perante os anciãos de Israel e o povo. A seguir, Samuel mandou que Agague fosse trazido perante ele e então "foi retalhar Agague perante Jeová em Gilgal". — 1Sa 15:10-33.

Unge Davi. Depois de os dois homens se separarem, nunca mais tiveram associação entre si. Samuel, porém, passou a prantear por Saul. No entanto, Jeová interrompeu seu pranto, comissionando-o a ir a Belém, a fim de ungir um dos filhos de Jessé como futuro rei de Israel. A fim de evitar suspeita por parte de Saul, que pudesse resultar na morte de Samuel, Jeová mandou que Samuel levasse consigo uma novilha como sacrifício. Talvez temendo que Samuel tivesse vindo para repreendê-los ou para punir alguma transgressão, os anciãos de Belém tremeram. Mas, ele assegurou-lhes que sua vinda significava paz e providenciou então que Jessé e seus filhos participassem duma refeição sacrificial. Impressionado pela aparência do primogênito de Jessé, Eliabe, Samuel raciocinou que este filho tinha de ser mesmo a escolha de Jeová para a realeza. Mas, nem Eliabe, nem os outros seis filhos de Jessé presentes haviam sido escolhidos por Jeová. Por isso, à insistência de Samuel, o filho mais novo, Davi, foi chamado do pastoreio das ovelhas, e, então, sob a direção de Jeová, Samuel ungiu Davi no meio dos seus irmãos. — 1Sa 15:34–16:13.

Mais tarde, depois de o Rei Saul ter feito vários atentados contra a vida de Davi, este fugiu para Samuel em Ramá. Os dois homens foram então a Naiote, e Davi permaneceu ali até que o próprio Saul veio à procura dele. (1Sa 19:18–20:1) Durante o tempo em que Davi ainda estava sob restrição por causa de Saul, "morreu Samuel; e todo o Israel passou a reunir-se e a lamentá-lo, e foram enterrá-lo em sua casa, em Ramá". (1Sa 25:1) De modo que Samuel morreu como servo aprovado de Jeová Deus após uma vida de serviço fiel. (Sal 99:6; Je 15:1; He 11:32) Ele havia demonstrado persistência em cumprir a sua comissão (1Sa 16:6, 11), devoção à adoração verdadeira (1Sa 7:3-6), honestidade nos seus tratos (1Sa 12:3), e coragem e firmeza em anunciar e sustentar os julgamentos e as decisões de Jeová (1Sa 10:24; 13:13; 15:32, 33).

Quanto ao relato sobre Saul pedir que uma médium espírita em En-Dor lhe fizesse subir Samuel, veja SAUL N.º 1.

SAMUEL, LIVROS DE. Dois livros das Escrituras Hebraicas que aparentemente não estavam separados no cânon hebraico original. Isto é indicado por uma nota na Massorá, que mostra que as palavras em Primeiro Samuel, capítulo 28 (um dos capítulos finais de Primeiro Samuel) encontravam-se no meio do livro.

Escritores e Tempo Abrangido. A antiga tradição judaica atribui a Samuel a escrita da primeira parte do livro, e a Natã e Gade a da parte restante. Que estes três profetas realmente escreveram é confirmado em 1 Crônicas 29:29. O próprio livro relata: "Samuel falou então ao povo sobre a prerrogativa legítima do reinado, e escreveu-a num livro e depositou-o perante Jeová." (1Sa 10:25) Todavia, à base de 1 Samuel 27:6, onde se faz menção dos "reis de Judá", diversos peritos situam a compilação final dos livros de Samuel algum tempo depois de ter vindo à existência o reino de dez tribos de Israel. Se a expressão "reis de Judá” indica apenas os reis de Judá, do reino de duas tribos, isto mostra que os escritos de Samuel, Natã e Gade devem ter sido colocados na forma final por outra pessoa. Por outro lado, se “reis de Judá” simplesmente significa reis da tribo de Judá, essas palavras podem ter sido registradas por Natã, visto que ele viveu sob o domínio de dois reis de Judá, Davi e Salomão. — 1Rs 1:32-34; 2Cr 9:29.

Terem Ana e um “homem de Deus”, cujo nome não se menciona, usado as expressões “rei” e “ungido” anos antes mesmo de um rei governar Israel não dá apoio ao argumento de alguns, de que estas passagens datam dum período posterior ao indicado no livro. (1Sa 2:10, 35) A ideia de no futuro haver um rei de modo algum era alheia aos hebreus. A promessa de Deus referente a Sara, antepassada dos israelitas, fora de que “reis de povos”

DESTAQUES DE PRIMEIRO SAMUEL

Registro dos primórdios do reinado em Israel, salientando a obediência a Jeová.

Escrito por Samuel, Natã e Gade; Primeiro Samuel abrange o tempo desde o nascimento de Samuel até a morte do primeiro rei de Israel, Saul.

Jeová suscita Samuel como profeta em Israel. (1:1–7:17)

Samuel nasce em resposta à oração de sua mãe Ana; depois de desmamado, ele é apresentado para o serviço no santuário, em cumprimento do voto de Ana.

Jeová fala a Samuel, proferindo julgamento contra a casa de Eli, porque os filhos deste, Hofni e Fineias, agem iniquamente e Eli não os censura.

À medida que Samuel cresce, ele é reconhecido como profeta de Jeová.

A palavra de Jeová contra Eli passa a cumprir-se; os filisteus capturam a Arca e matam os filhos de Eli; Eli morre ao ouvir a notícia.

Anos mais tarde, Samuel exorta os israelitas a abandonarem a idolatria e a servirem somente a Jeová; Jeová lhes dá a vitória sobre os filisteus.

Saul torna-se o primeiro rei de Israel. (8:1–15:35)

Os anciãos de Israel se chegam ao idoso Samuel, pedindo um rei humano; Jeová lhe manda escutar a voz deles.

Jeová manda Samuel ungir como rei a Saul, um benjaminita.

Samuel apresenta Saul a uma assembleia de israelitas em Mispá; nem todos o aceitam.

Saul derrota os amonitas; seu reinado é reconfirmado em Gilgal; Samuel admoesta o povo a permanecer obediente a Jeová.

Confrontado com uma agressão dos filisteus, Saul deixa de obedecer a Jeová e de esperar pela chegada de Samuel, oferecendo ele mesmo sacrifícios; Samuel lhe diz que, por causa disso, seu reino não durará.

Saul derrota os amalequitas, mas em desobediência preserva vivo o Rei Agague e os melhores animais; Samuel diz a Saul que Jeová o rejeita como rei e que a obediência é mais importante do que um sacrifício.

Davi obtém destaque, e isto ira a Saul. (16:1–20:42)

Samuel unge Davi, e o espírito de Jeová abandona Saul; Davi torna-se harpista de Saul para acalmá-lo quando perturbado.

Davi mata o campeão filisteu Golias, e desenvolve-se uma profunda amizade entre Davi e Jonatã, filho de Saul.

Encarregado dos guerreiros de Saul, Davi obtém repetidas vitórias e é celebrado em cântico mais do que Saul; Saul fica com ciúme.

Duas tentativas de Saul, de matar Davi, fracassam, assim como também sua trama de fazer Davi morrer às mãos dos filisteus ao procurar obter o preço de noiva pela filha de Saul, Mical.

Apesar da promessa que Saul fez a Jonatã, ele tenta pela terceira vez matar Davi, e este foge para Samuel, em Ramá.

Jonatã não é bem-sucedido ao interceder por Davi perante seu pai; ele avisa Davi, e faz com Davi um pacto.

A vida de Davi como fugitivo. (21:1–27:12)

Em Nobe, o sumo sacerdote Aimeleque dá a Davi comida e a espada de Golias; Davi foge então para Gate, onde escapa de dano por se fingir de louco.

Refugia-se na caverna de Adulão e depois na floresta de Herete; Saul manda matar Aimeleque e todos os outros em Nobe; Abiatar, filho de Aimeleque, sobrevive e se chega a Davi.

Davi salva Queila diante dos filisteus, mas depois deixa a cidade para evitar ser entregue a Saul.

Os homens de Zife revelam o paradeiro de Davi; ele mal escapa de ser capturado.

Davi tem a oportunidade de matar Saul, mas poupa-lhe a vida.

Samuel morre.

A intervenção sábia de Abigail impede que Davi derrame sangue num acesso de ira.

Davi poupa a vida de Saul pela segunda vez e se refugia em território filisteu.

O fim do reinado de Saul. (28:1–31:13)

Saul reúne um exército contra invasores filisteus.

Jeová não responde às indagações de Saul por causa da desobediência deste, de modo que Saul consulta uma médium espírita em En-Dor.

Na batalha contra os filisteus, Saul é gravemente ferido e se suicida; seus filhos Jonatã, Abinadabe e Malquisua são mortos.

procederiam dela. (Gên 17:16) Também, a profecia no leito de morte feita por Jacó (Gên 49:10), as palavras proféticas de Balaão (Núm 24:17) e a Lei mosaica (De 17:14-18) indicavam um tempo em que os israelitas teriam um rei.

A narrativa histórica nos dois livros de Samuel começa na época do sumo sacerdote Eli e termina com eventos do reinado de Davi. Portanto, abrange um período de aproximadamente 140 anos (c. 1180-c. 1040 AEC). Visto que o registro não menciona a morte de Davi, o relato (com a possível exceção de acréscimos editoriais) foi provavelmente completado por volta de 1040 AEC.

Autenticidade. A autenticidade do relato nos livros de Samuel é bem confirmada. O próprio Cristo Jesus, ao refutar uma objeção levantada pelos fariseus, citou o incidente registrado em 1 Samuel 21:3-6, de Davi receber do sacerdote Aimeleque pães da apresentação. (Mt 12:1-4) Na sinagoga de Antioquia da Pisídia, o apóstolo Paulo citou 1 Samuel 13:14, ao recapitular brevemente eventos da história de Israel. (At 13:20-22) Este apóstolo, na sua carta aos romanos, usou palavras do salmo de Davi, trecho encontrado tanto em 2 Samuel 22:50 como no Salmo 18:49, para provar que o ministério de Cristo para os judeus confirmava as promessas de Deus e fornecia uma base para não judeus 'glorificarem a Deus pela sua misericórdia'. (Ro 15:8, 9) As palavras de Jeová, dirigidas a Davi, em 2 Samuel 7:14, são citadas e aplicadas a Cristo Jesus em Hebreus 1:5.

Notável também é a candura do registro. Expõe os erros da casa sacerdotal de Eli (1Sa 2:12-17, 22-25), a corrupção dos filhos de Samuel (1Sa 8:1-3), e os pecados e dificuldades familiares do Rei Davi (2Sa 11:2-15; 13:1-22; 15:13, 14; 24:10).

Outra evidência da autenticidade do relato é o cumprimento de profecias. Estas relacionam-se com o pedido de Israel de ter um rei (De 17:14; 1Sa 8:5), a rejeição da casa de Eli por Jeová (1Sa 2:31; 3:12-14; 1Rs 2:27) e a continuação do reinado na linhagem de Davi (2Sa 7:16; Je 33:17; Ez 21:25-27; Mt 1:1; Lu 1:32, 33).

O registro está em completa harmonia com o restante das Escrituras. Isto é especialmente notável ao se examinar os salmos, muitos deles sendo esclarecidos pelo conteúdo dos livros de Samuel. Enviar o Rei Saul mensageiros para vigiar a casa de Davi, a fim de matá-lo, fornece o fundo para o Salmo 59. (1Sa 19:11) O que se deu com Davi em Gate, onde ele disfarçou sua sanidade para escapar da morte, recebe alusão nos Salmos 34 e 56. (1Sa 21:10-15; evidentemente, o nome Abimeleque que ocorre no cabeçalho do Salmo 34 deve ser encarado como título do Rei Aquis.) O Salmo 142 talvez reflita os pensamentos de Davi enquanto se escondia de Saul na caverna de Adulão (1Sa 22:1) ou na caverna no ermo de En-Gedi. (1Sa 24:1, 3) Este talvez seja também o caso com o Salmo 57. No entanto, uma comparação do Salmo 57:6 com 1 Samuel 24:2-4 parece favorecer a caverna no ermo de En-Gedi, porque ali Saul como que caiu no fojo que escavara para Davi. O Salmo 52 refere-se a Doegue informar Saul sobre o tratos de Davi com Aimeleque. (1Sa 22:9, 10) A ação dos zifitas em revelarem o esconderijo de Davi ao Rei Saul fornece a base para o Salmo 54. (1Sa 23:19) O Salmo 2 parece aludir às tentativas dos filisteus de destronar Davi, depois de ele ter capturado a fortaleza de Sião. (2Sa 5:17-25) As dificuldades com os edomitas durante a guerra com Hadadezer são o fundo para o Salmo 60. (2Sa 8:3, 13, 14) O Salmo 51 é uma oração de Davi, implorando perdão pelo seu pecado com Bate-Seba. (2Sa 11:2-15; 12:1-14) A fuga de Davi diante de Absalão fornece a base para o Salmo 3. (2Sa 15:12-17, 30) É possível que o Salmo 7 tenha seu fundo histórico nas maldições que Simei lançou contra Davi. (2Sa 16:5-8) O Salmo 30 talvez aluda a eventos relacionados com a construção dum altar por Davi, na eira de Araúna. (2Sa 24:15-25) O Salmo 18 equipara-se a 2 Samuel 22 e trata de Jeová libertar Davi de Saul e de outros inimigos.

Trechos Que Faltam na "Septuaginta" Grega. Primeiro Samuel 17:12-31; 55–18:6a não consta na Septuaginta grega conforme o Manuscrito Vaticano N.º 1209. Por isso, diversos peritos têm concluído que essas partes omitidas são acréscimos posteriores ao texto hebraico. Ao argumentar contra este conceito, C. F. Keil e F. Delitzsch comentam: "A ideia de que as partes em questão sejam interpolações introduzidas no texto não pode ser sustentada à base da mera autoridade da versão Septuaginta, visto que a maneira arbitrária em que os tradutores desta versão fizeram omissões e acréscimos à vontade é óbvia para qualquer pessoa." — Commentary on the Old Testament (Comentário sobre o Velho Testamento), 1973, Vol. II, 1 Samuel, p. 177, n.

Se pudesse ser definitivamente confirmado que existem realmente discrepâncias entre as partes omitidas e o restante do livro, haveria uma razoável dúvida sobre a autenticidade de 1 Samuel 17:12-31; 55–18:6a. Uma comparação de 1 Samuel 16:18-23 com 1 Samuel 17:55-58 revela o que parece ser uma contradição, pois, nesta última passagem, Saul é retratado como perguntando sobre a identidade do seu próprio músico da corte e escudeiro, Davi. No entanto, deve-se notar que, ser Davi descrito anteriormente como "homem poderoso, valente, e homem de guerra" pode ter-se ba-seado nos seus atos corajosos de sozinho matar um leão e um urso para salvar as ovelhas de seu pai. (1Sa 16:18; 17:34-36) As Escrituras tampouco declaram que Davi realmente servisse em batalhas como escudeiro de Saul antes de matar Golias. Saul solicitara a Jessé: "Por favor, deixa Davi assistir diante de mim, pois achou favor aos meus olhos." (1Sa 16:22) Esta solicitação não exclui a possibilidade de Saul mais tarde ter permitido que Davi retornasse a Belém, de modo que, quando irrompeu a guerra com os filisteus, Davi estava então pastoreando o rebanho de seu pai.

A respeito da pergunta de Saul: "Filho de quem é o rapaz, Abner?" o já citado comentário observa (p. 178, n): "Mesmo que Abner não se tivesse preocupado em saber da linhagem do harpista de Saul, o próprio Saul não pode ter-se esquecido de que Davi era filho do belemita Jessé. Mas a pergunta de Saul implicava em muito mais. Ele não queria saber apenas o nome do pai de Davi, mas que espécie de homem realmente era o pai dum jovem que tinha a coragem de realizar tal façanha heroica, maravilhosa; e a pergunta não foi feita somente para que ele lhe concedesse a eximição da sua casa de impostos, em recompensa prometida por vencer Golias (ver. 25), mas também com toda a probabilidade para que ligasse tal homem à sua corte, visto que inferia da coragem e bravura do filho a existência de qualidades similares no pai. É verdade que Davi apenas respondeu: 'O filho do teu servo Jessé, de Belém'; mas é bem evidente da expressão no cap. xviii. 1, 'assim que acabou de falar a Saul', que Saul conversou mais com ele sobre os seus assuntos de família, visto que as

DESTAQUES DE SEGUNDO SAMUEL

Registro do reinado de Davi — as bênçãos que este obteve, bem como a disciplina que recebeu ao pecar.

Era originalmente parte dum único rolo junto com Primeiro Samuel; a parte de Segundo Samuel foi completada por Gade e Natã por volta do fim da vida de Davi, aproximadamente em 1040 AEC.

Davi torna-se rei e governa em Hébron. (1:1–4:12)

- Davi lamenta a morte de Saul e de Jonatã; passa a morar em Hébron e é ungido rei pelos homens de Judá.
- Abner constitui Is-Bosete, filho de Saul, rei sobre o restante de Israel; irrompe luta entre os reinos rivais.
- Abner bandeia-se para Davi, mas é morto por Joabe.
- Is-Bosete é assassinado; Davi ordena a execução dos assassinos.

Davi reina sobre todas as tribos de Israel. (5:1–10:19)

- Davi é ungido rei sobre todo o Israel; ele captura a fortaleza de Sião e torna Jerusalém sua capital.
- Os filisteus fazem duas invasões, mas são derrotados ambas as vezes.
- Davi tenta levar a Arca a Jerusalém; a tentativa é abandonada quando Uzá morre ao procurar impedir que a Arca caia.
- Sua segunda tentativa é bem-sucedida quando a Arca é transportada de modo correto.
- Davi expressa a Natã seu desejo de construir um templo para Jeová; Jeová conclui com ele um pacto para um reino.

Davi peca com Bate-Seba; sobrevém-lhe calamidade da sua própria casa. (11:1–20:26)

- Os israelitas travam guerra contra Amom; Davi comete adultério com Bate-Seba, cujo marido Urias serve no exército; quando os esforços de ocultar seu pecado falham, Davi providencia que Urias morra em batalha, e então se casa com a enviuvada Bate-Seba.
- Com o hábil uso duma ilustração, Natã repreende Davi pelo seu pecado e anuncia o julgamento de Jeová: Da sua própria casa sairá calamidade, suas próprias esposas serão violentadas, seu filho com Bate-Seba morrerá.
- O filho morre; Bate-Seba, novamente grávida, dá à luz Salomão.
- Amnom, filho de Davi, estupra sua meia-irmã Tamar; Absalão, filho de Davi, irmão germano de Tamar, vinga-a por mandar matar Amnom; depois foge para Gesur.
- Depois de ter obtido o pleno perdão de Davi, Absalão começa a tramar contra seu pai; por fim, ele se faz proclamar rei em Hébron.
- Davi e seus apoiadores fogem de Jerusalém para escapar de Absalão e seus partidários; em Jerusalém, Absalão tem relações sexuais com dez concubinas de Davi; as forças de Absalão perseguem Davi e sofrem derrota. O próprio Absalão é morto, contrário a ordens específicas de Davi.
- Davi é restabelecido como rei; o benjaminita Seba revolta-se, e Davi entrega o comando do exército a Amasa, para sufocar a rebelião; Joabe mata Amasa e assume o controle; Seba é morto.

Os últimos eventos do reinado de Davi. (21:1–24:25)

- Davi entrega sete filhos de Saul aos gibeonitas para serem executados, a fim de que se possa vingar a culpa de sangue da casa de Saul.
- Davi compõe cânticos de louvor a Jeová, reconhecendo-o como fonte de inspiração.
- Davi peca ao ordenar um censo, o que resulta na morte de cerca de 70.000 por uma pestilência.
- Davi compra a eira de Araúna, o jebuseu, como lugar para um altar para Jeová.

próprias palavras dão a entender que houve uma longa conversa." (Para ver outros exemplos em que "quem" envolve mais do que apenas saber o nome de alguém, veja Êx 5:2; 1Sa 25:10.)

De modo que há sólidos motivos para se considerar 1 Samuel 17:12-31; 55–18:6a como parte do texto original.

SAMUTE. Chefe izraíta designado para o quinto mês na reorganização do serviço rotativo de Davi. — 1Cr 27:8; veja SAMÁ N.º 4.

SANDÁLIA. Sola chata de couro, de madeira ou de outro material fibroso, presa ao pé com cordões que usualmente são tiras de couro passadas entre o dedo grande do pé e o segundo dedo, contornando o calcanhar e passando sobre o peito do pé. Em alguns casos, o cordão talvez chegasse a envolver o tornozelo.

As sandálias egípcias usualmente tinham a ponta levantada. Algumas sandálias assírias consistiam apenas num envoltório para o calcanhar e os lados do pé, preso ao pé por cordões e sem sola na parte dianteira dele. Os romanos usavam sandálias e se diz que usavam também sapatos similares aos atuais. A aristocracia e a realeza dos assírios, dos romanos e de outros, usavam sandálias mais suntuosas ou sapatos tipo bota. Alguns beduínos em torno do monte Sinai usam sandálias feitas duma espécie de dugongo (animal marinho parecido à foca). Jeová fala figurativamente de calçar Jerusalém com "pele de foca" (hebr.: tá-hhash). — Ez 16:10.

Diz-se que os sacerdotes em Israel serviam descalços no tabernáculo e no templo. (Veja Êx 3:5; Jos 5:15; At 7:33.) Mas, andar descalço ao ar livre era sinal de pesar ou de humilhação. — 2Sa 15:30; Is 20:2-5; contraste isso com a ordem dada a Ezequiel (24:17, 23).

Em longas viagens, era costume levar um par extra de sandálias, visto que a sola podia gastar-se ou os cordões podiam romper-se. Jesus, ao enviar os apóstolos, e também os 70 discípulos, ordenou-lhes que não levassem dois pares, mas que confiassem na hospitalidade dos que aceitavam as boas novas. — Mt 10:5, 9, 10; Mr 6:7-9; Lu 10:1, 4.

Uso Figurado. Sob a Lei, a viúva tirava a sandália daquele que se negava a realizar o casamento de cunhado com ela, e, em vitupério, ele era chamado: "A casa daquele a quem se tirou a sandália." (De 25:9, 10) A transferência de propriedade ou do direito de resgate era representada por um dar a sandália ao outro. — Ru 4:7-10; veja CASAMENTO DE CUNHADO.

Com a expressão "sobre Edom lançarei a minha sandália" (Sal 60:8; 108:9) Jeová talvez quisesse dizer que Edom passaria a estar em sujeição. Isso possivelmente se refira ao costume de indicar a tomada de posse dum terreno por se lançar a sandália nele. Ou talvez indicasse desprezo para com Edom, visto que Moabe é chamado de "minha panela de lavagem" no mesmo texto. Atualmente, no Oriente Médio, jogar a sandália é um gesto de desprezo.

Davi mandou que Salomão punisse Joabe, o qual em tempo de paz "pôs sangue de guerra . . . nas suas sandálias" — declaração figurativa que representava a culpa de sangue de Joabe por ter matado os generais Abner e Amasa. (1Rs 2:5, 6) Isto, junto com o fato de que alguém que punha as suas sandálias estava prestes a empreender algum negócio longe de casa (ou de onde estava hospedado; veja At 12:8), esclarece a admoestação do apóstolo Paulo dada aos cristãos, de que tivessem os pés "calçados do equipamento das boas novas de paz". — Ef 6:14, 15.

Desatar os cordões das sandálias de outra pessoa ou levar as sandálias dela era considerado tarefa servil, usualmente executada por escravos. João usou esta símile para indicar sua inferioridade a Cristo. — Mt 3:11; Mr 1:7.

SANGAR. Libertador de Israel entre os juizados de Eúde e de Baraque. Registra-se apenas uma façanha heroica de Sangar, a matança de 600 filisteus com uma aguilhada de gado, mas com isso se lhe atribui "salvar Israel". (Jz 3:31) Segundo Josefo, Sangar morreu no seu primeiro ano de juizado. (Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], V, 197 [iv, 3]) Ser ele "filho de Anate" talvez se refira à cidade Bete-Anate, de Naftali. — Jz 1:33.

SANGAR-NEBO. Nome ou título de um dos príncipes babilônios que entraram em Jerusalém logo depois de se abrir uma brecha nas muralhas dela, no verão (setentrional) de 607 AEC. — Je 39:3.

SANGUE. Líquido realmente maravilhoso que circula no sistema vascular dos humanos e da maioria dos animais multicelulares; em hebraico dam, e em grego hai·ma. O sangue supre nutrientes e oxigênio a todas as parte do organismo, levando embora resíduos, e desempenha um importante papel em protegê-lo contra infecções. A composição química do sangue é tão extremamente complexa, que há muita coisa que os cientistas ainda desconhecem.

Na Bíblia, diz-se que a alma está no sangue, porque o sangue está tão intimamente envolvido nos processos vitais. A Palavra de Deus diz: "A alma da carne está no sangue, e eu mesmo o pus para vós sobre o altar para fazer expiação pelas vossas al-mas, porque é o sangue que faz expiação pela alma nele." (Le 17:11) Por razões similares, mas numa relação ainda mais direta, a Bíblia diz: "Pois a alma de todo tipo de carne é seu sangue." (Le 17:14) É evidente que a Palavra de Deus trata tanto a vida como o sangue como sagrados.

Tirar a Vida. Com Jeová está a fonte da vida. (Sal 36:9) O homem não pode devolver a vida que ele tira. "Todas as almas — a mim me pertencem", diz Jeová. (Ez 18:4) Portanto, tirar uma vida é tirar uma propriedade de Jeová. Toda coisa vivente tem um objetivo e um lugar na criação de Deus. Nenhum homem tem o direito de tirar uma vida, exceto quando Deus o permite e do modo que ele manda.

Após o Dilúvio, ordenou-se a Noé e a seus filhos, os progenitores de todos os que hoje vivem, que respeitassem a vida, o sangue, dos seus semelhantes. (Gên 9:1, 5, 6) Também, Deus lhes permitiu bondosamente acrescentar carne animal à sua alimentação. Todavia, eles tinham de reconhecer que a vida de qualquer animal abatido como alimento pertencia a Deus, fazendo isso por derramarem o sangue do animal qual água sobre o solo. Isto era como devolver a vida a Deus, sem usá-la para alguns fins da própria pessoa. — De 12:15, 16.

O homem tinha o direito de usufruir a vida que Deus lhe concedeu, e todo aquele que o privasse desta vida tinha de responder por isso a Deus. Isto foi mostrado quando Deus disse ao assassino Caim: "O sangue de teu irmão está clamando a mim desde o solo." (Gên 4:10) Mesmo alguém que odiasse seu irmão e que o quisesse ver morto, ou que o caluniasse ou que desse falso testemunho contra ele e assim pusesse em perigo a vida dele, traria sobre si mesmo uma culpa relacionada com o sangue do seu semelhante. — Le 19:16; De 19:18-21; 1Jo 3:15.

Por causa do conceito de Deus sobre o valor da vida, diz-se que o sangue de alguém assassinado polui a terra, e essa poluição só pode ser eliminada pelo derramamento do sangue do assassino. Nesta base, a Bíblia autoriza a pena capital por assassinato, aplicada pela autoridade devidamente constituída. (Núm 35:33; Gên 9:5, 6) No antigo Israel, não se podia aceitar um resgate do assassino deliberado para livrá-lo da pena de morte. — Núm 35:19-21, 31.

Mesmo nos casos em que não se podia achar o homicida pela investigação, a cidade mais próxima do lugar onde se encontrou o cadáver era considerada culpada de sangue. Para eliminar a culpa de sangue, os anciãos responsáveis da cidade tinham de seguir o procedimento exigido por Deus, tinham de negar qualquer culpa ou conhecimento do assassinato, e tinham de orar a Deus pedindo misericórdia. (De 21:1-9) Quando um homicida acidental não se preocupava muito de ter tirado uma vida e não seguia o arranjo de Deus para a sua proteção por fugir para a cidade de refúgio e permanecer ali, o parente mais próximo do morto era o vingador autorizado e obrigado a matá-lo, para eliminar da terra a culpa de sangue. — Núm 35:26, 27; veja VINGADOR DO SANGUE.

Uso Correto do Sangue. Havia apenas um uso do sangue aprovado por Deus, a saber, para sacrifícios. Ele mandou que os que estavam sob a Lei mosaica oferecessem sacrifícios de animais para expiar pecados. (Le 17:10, 11) Estava também em harmonia com a Sua vontade que Seu Filho, Jesus Cristo, oferecesse sua perfeita vida humana em sacrifício pelos pecados. — He 10:5, 10.

A aplicação do sangue de Cristo, para salvar vidas, foi prefigurada de diversas maneiras nas Escrituras Hebraicas. Por ocasião da primeira Páscoa, no Egito, o sangue na parte superior das portas e nas ombreiras das casas israelitas protegeu o primogênito lá dentro de ser morto pela mão do anjo de Deus. (Êx 12:7, 22, 23; 1Co 5:7) O pacto da Lei, que tinha uma particularidade típica para a remoção de pecados, foi validado pelo sangue de animais. (Êx 24:5-8) Os numerosos sacrifícios de sangue, especialmente os oferecidos no Dia da Expiação, eram para a típica expiação de pecados, apontando para a verdadeira remoção dos pecados por meio do sacrifício de Cristo. — Le 16:11, 15-18.

O poder jurídico do sangue aos olhos de Deus, conforme aceito por ele para fins de expiação, foi ilustrado pelo derramamento de sangue à base, ou junto ao alicerce, do altar e de ser posto nos chifres do altar. O arranjo de expiação tinha como base, ou alicerce, o sangue, e o poder (representado pelos chifres) do arranjo sacrificial fundava-se no sangue. — Le 9:9; He 9:22; 1Co 1:18.

Sob o arranjo cristão, a santidade do sangue foi enfatizada com vigor ainda maior. Não mais se devia oferecer sangue animal, porque aquelas ofertas de animais só eram sombra da realidade, Jesus Cristo. (Col 2:17; He 10:1-4, 8-10) O sumo sacerdote em Israel costumava levar uma porção simbólica do sangue ao Santíssimo do santuário terrestre. (Le 16:14) Jesus Cristo, como o verdadeiro Sumo Sacerdote, entrou no próprio céu, não com o seu sangue, que fora derramado no chão (Jo 19:34), mas com o valor da sua perfeita vida humana conforme representada pelo sangue. Ele nunca perdeu seu direito à vida por algum pecado, mas o reteve para ser usado para a expiação de pecados. (He 7:26; 8:3; 9:11, 12) Por causa disso, o sangue de Cristo clama por coisas melhores do que o sangue do justo Abel. Somente o sangue do sacrifício perfeito do Filho de Deus pode clamar por misericórdia, ao passo que o sangue de Abel, bem como o sangue dos seguidores martirizados de Cristo, clama por vingança. — He 12:24; Re 6:9-11.

A quem se aplica a proibição de comer sangue?

Jeová permitiu a Noé e seus filhos acrescentar carne animal à sua alimentação após o Dilúvio, mas ordenou-se-lhes estritamente a não comer sangue. (Gên 9:1, 3, 4) Deus estabeleceu ali um regulamento que não se aplicava apenas a Noé e à sua família imediata, mas a toda a humanidade daquele tempo em diante, porque todos os que nasceram depois do Dilúvio são descendentes da família de Noé.

Sobre a duração desta proibição, Joseph Benson mencionou: "Deve-se notar que esta proibição de comer sangue, dada a Noé e a toda a sua posteridade, e repetida aos israelitas, de maneira mui solene, sob a dispensação mosaica, nunca foi revogada, mas, ao contrário, foi confirmada sob o Novo Testamento, Atos xv.; e, por isso, se tornou uma obrigação perpétua." — Notes (Notas) de Benson, 1839, Vol. I, p. 43.

Sob a Lei mosaica. No pacto da Lei feito por Jeová com a nação de Israel, ele incorporou a lei dada a Noé. Tornou claro que todo aquele que desconsiderasse o procedimento estabelecido pela lei de Deus, mesmo ao abater um animal, tinha "culpa de sangue". (Le 17:3, 4) O sangue do animal a ser usado como alimento devia ser derramado no chão e coberto com pó. (Le 17:13, 14) Quem comesse sangue de qualquer espécie de carne devia ser 'decepado dentre seu povo'. A violação deliberada desta lei referente à santidade do sangue significava ser 'decepado' na morte. — Le 17:10; 7:26, 27; Núm 15:30, 31.

Comentando Levítico 17:11, 12, a Cyclopædia (Ciclopédia) de M'Clintock e Strong (1882, Vol. I, p. 834) diz: "Esta injunção estrita não se aplicava apenas aos israelitas, mas até mesmo aos estrangeiros que moravam entre eles. A penalidade aplicada à sua transgressão era a de ser 'decepado do povo', o que parece indicar a pena de morte (comp. Heb. x, 28), embora seja difícil de determinar se era aplicada pela espada ou por apedrejamento."

Em Deuteronômio 14:21 fez-se a concessão de se vender ao residente forasteiro ou ao estrangeiro o animal que morresse por si mesmo ou que fosse dilacerado por uma fera. Fazia-se assim uma distinção entre o sangue de animais assim e o de animais abatidos para alimento. (Veja Le 17:14-16.) Os israelitas, bem como os residentes forasteiros que adotaram a adoração verdadeira e passaram a estar sob o pacto da Lei, eram obrigados a cumprir todos os elevados requisitos desta Lei. Pessoas de todas as nações estavam sob a obrigação do requisito de Gênesis 9:3, 4, mas os que estavam sob a Lei eram obrigados por Deus a seguir uma norma mais elevada na aderência a este requisito do que os estrangeiros e os residentes forasteiros que não se tornaram adoradores de Jeová.

Sob o arranjo cristão. O corpo governante da congregação cristã do primeiro século, sob a direção do espírito santo, regulou a questão do sangue. Seu decreto declara: "Pois, pareceu bem ao espírito santo e a nós mesmos não vos acrescentar nenhum fardo adicional, exceto as seguintes coisas necessárias: de persistirdes em abster-vos de coisas sacrificadas a ídolos, e de sangue, e de coisas estranguladas, e de fornicação. Se vos guardardes cuidadosamente destas coisas, prosperareis. Boa saúde para vós!" (At 15:22, 28, 29) A proibição incluía a carne com o sangue ainda nela ("coisas estranguladas").

Este decreto baseia-se, em última análise, na ordem de Deus de não comer sangue, conforme dada a Noé e seus filhos, e, portanto, a toda a humanidade. Neste respeito, encontra-se o seguinte em The Chronology of Antient Kingdoms Amended (A Cronologia Emendada dos Reinos Antigos), de Sir Isaac Newton (Dublim, 1728, p. 184): "Esta lei [de abster-se do sangue] era mais antiga do que os dias de Moisés, sendo dada a Noé e seus filhos, muito antes dos dias de Abraão: e, assim, quando os Apóstolos e Anciãos no Conselho de Jerusalém declararam que os gentios não eram obrigados a ser circuncidados e a guardar a lei de Moisés, eles excetuaram esta lei de abster-se do sangue e de coisas estranguladas, como sendo uma lei anterior de Deus, imposta, não apenas aos filhos de Abraão, mas a todas as nações, enquanto viviam juntos em Sinear, sob o domínio de Noé: e do mesmo gênero é a lei de abster-se de carnes oferecidas a Ídolos ou falsos Deuses, e da fornicação." — O grifo é dele.

Acatada desde tempos apostólicos. O conselho de Jerusalém enviou às congregações cristãs sua decisão para ser acatada. (At 16:4) Cerca de sete anos depois de o conselho de Jerusalém ter emitido o decreto, os cristãos continuaram a acatar a "decisão, de que se guardem do que é sacrificado a ídolos, bem como do sangue e do estrangulado, e da fornicação". (At 21:25) E mais de cem anos depois, em 177 EC, em Lyon (agora na França), quando inimigos religiosos acusaram falsamente os cristãos de comer crianças, uma mulher chamada Biblis disse: "Como é que tais homens iam comer crianças, quando nem se lhes permite comer o sangue sequer de animais irracionais?" — The Ecclesiastical History (A História Eclesiástica), de Eusébio, V, I, 26.

Os primitivos cristãos abstinham-se de comer qualquer tipo de sangue. Neste respeito, Tertuliano (c. 155-d. 220 EC) salientou na sua obra Apology (Apologia; IX, 13, 14): "Envergonhai-vos do vosso erro perante os cristãos, pois nós não incluímos nem mesmo sangue de animal em nossa alimentação natural. Pois que nos abstemos das coisas estranguladas ou que morrem por si, para que não sejamos, de algum modo, poluídos pelo sangue, mesmo que esteja contido na carne. Finalmente, quando provais os cristãos lhes ofereceis chouriços cheios de sangue; estais perfeitamente cônscios, de fato, de que entre eles isto é proibido; mas quereis fazê-los transgredir." Minúcio Félix, advogado romano que viveu até cerca de 250 EC, salientou o mesmo ponto, escrevendo: "Não nos é permissível nem ver matança humana nem ouvir dela; abstemo-nos tanto do sangue humano que, em nossas refeições, evitamos até o sangue de animais utilizados como alimento." — Octavius (Otávio), XXX, 6.

Envolve a Integridade. Desde o tempo da inauguração do novo pacto à base do sangue de Jesus Cristo, os cristãos têm reconhecido o valor vitalizador deste sangue através do arranjo de Jeová e através de Jesus, como o grande Sumo Sacerdote, que "entrou no lugar santo, não, não com o sangue de bodes e de novilhos, mas com o seu próprio sangue, de uma vez para sempre, e obteve para nós um livramento eterno". Os cristãos, pela fé no sangue de Cristo, têm sua consciência purificada de obras mortas, para prestar serviço sagrado ao Deus vivente. Preocupam-se com a sua saúde física, mas estão primária e muito mais seriamente interessados na sua saúde espiritual e na sua posição perante o Criador. Querem manter a sua integridade para com o Deus vivente, não negar o sacrifício de Jesus, nem considerá-lo de pouco valor e nem pisá-lo. Porque não procuram uma vida transitória, mas a vida eterna. — He 9:12, 14, 15; 10:28, 29.

SANGUE, CULPA DE. Veja CULPA DE SANGUE.

SANGUESSUGA [hebr.: ʽalu·qáh]. Verme que suga o sangue e que tem um corpo achatado, segmentário, que se afila em ambas as extremidades, mas é mais largo na parte posterior. As sanguessugas têm o comprimento de 1 a até mais de 10 cm. Estas criaturas têm um disco, ou ventosa, em cada extremidade do corpo, estando a ventosa na extremidade da cabeça equipada com maxilas denticuladas.

As sanguessugas são encontradas em grande número em muitas correntes e rios do Oriente Médio. As crias de certa variedade (Limnatis nilotica), quando engolidas junto com a água, prendem-se às cavidades nasais, à laringe ou à epiglote do hospedeiro. Elas crescem rapidamente e não podem ser facilmente removidas. Sua presença pode impedir a respiração, e isto, junto com a perda de sangue, às vezes se mostra fatal para a vítima.

A única menção da sanguessuga (hebr.: ʽalu·qáh) ocorre em Provérbios 30:15, onde se faz referência à ganância insaciável, declarando-se que "as sanguessugas têm duas filhas que clamam: 'Dá! Dá!'" O Commentary (Comentário) de F. C. Cook sugere que a gula da sanguessuga é considerada aqui como 'sua filha' mencionada no plural para expressar intensidade. Outros consideram que as "duas filhas" são referência aos dois lábios da ventosa que suga sangue. A sanguessuga pode consumir uma quantidade de sangue três vezes superior ao seu peso, um forte anticoagulante na sua saliva garantindo um fluxo contínuo do sangue da vítima.

SANSANA [possivelmente: Pedúnculo de Tâmara]. Cidade na parte meridional do território da tribo de Judá. (Jos 15:21, 31) Ela é identificada com Khirbet esh-Shamsaniyat (Horvat Sansanna), a uns 12 km ao NNE de Berseba. Uma comparação de Josué 15:31 com as listas paralelas de cidades em Josué 19:5 e 1 Crônicas 4:31 indica que talvez se trate de Hazar-Susa (ou Hazar-Susim). — Veja HAZAR-SUSA.

SANSÃO [duma raiz que significa "sol"]. Um dos notáveis juízes de Israel; filho de Manoá, danita de Zorá. Antes do nascimento de Sansão, apareceu à sua mãe um anjo e anunciou que ela daria à luz um filho que desde o nascimento havia de ser nazireu e alguém que "tomará a dianteira em salvar Israel da mão dos filisteus". (Jz 13:1-5, 24; 16:17) Sansão, como futuro líder na luta contra os filisteus, teria de chegar perto dos cadáveres dos mortos em batalha. Portanto, a própria natureza da sua comissão mostrava que ele não estava sob a lei que determinava que os nazireus não tocassem em cadáveres. (Núm 6:2-9) Deve-se notar também que esta lei se aplicava a pessoas que voluntariamente faziam o voto de nazireu; mas, no caso de Sansão, os requisitos que se aplicavam eram os especificamente declarados à mãe dele pelo anjo de Jeová.

Quando já tinha idade para se casar, Sansão pediu que seus pais conseguissem para ele como esposa certa moça filisteia de Timná. Isto estava em harmonia com a direção do espírito de Deus, visto que deu a Sansão a oportunidade de lutar contra os filisteus. (Jz 13:25–14:4) Subsequentemente, perto de Timná, Sansão confrontou-se com um leão novo jubado. Dotado de poder pelo espírito de Deus, rasgou o animal em dois, só com as mãos. Seguiu então caminho até Timná e ali falou com a moça filisteia, que ele queria como esposa. — Jz 14:5-7.

Algum tempo depois, Sansão, acompanhado pelos pais, foi a Timná para trazer sua noiva para casa. Em caminho, desviou-se da estrada para ver o cadáver do leão que matara anteriormente, e encontrou dentro dele um enxame de abelhas e também mel. Sansão comeu um pouco do mel, e, juntando-se aos pais, ofereceu-lhes mel. No banquete de casamento, fez deste incidente um enigma e o propôs aos 30 padrinhos filisteus. A sequência em torno deste enigma ofereceu a Sansão a oportunidade de matar 30 filisteus em Ascalom. — Jz 14:8-19.

Quando o pai da sua noiva a deu a outro homem e não lhe permitiu vê-la, Sansão teve mais uma oportunidade de atuar contra os filisteus. Usando 300 raposas, incendiou os campos de cereais, os vinhedos e os olivais dos filisteus. Os filisteus enfurecidos, portanto, queimaram a noiva de Sansão e o pai dela, porque a perda dos filisteus resultara do tratamento que este dispensara a Sansão. Com este ato, os filisteus deram a Sansão mais um motivo para se vingar deles. Ele matou a muitos deles, "empilhando pernas sobre coxas". — Jz 14:20–15:8.

Procurando vingar-se de Sansão, os filisteus foram a Leí. Três mil homens temerosos de Judá convenceram então Sansão no rochedo de Étão a se entregar, amarrando-o depois com duas cordas novas e levando-o aos filisteus. Os filisteus, exultantes, prepararam-se para receber Sansão. Mas "o espírito de Jeová tornou-se ativo nele e as cordas que havia sobre os seus braços vieram a ser como fios de linho quando abrasados pelo fogo, de modo que seus grilhões se derreteram de cima das suas mãos". Tomando uma queixada fresca de jumento, Sansão golpeou mil homens, atribuindo depois esta vitória a Jeová. Naquela ocasião, Jeová, em resposta ao pedido de Sansão, proveu-lhe milagrosamente água para saciar-lhe a sede. — Jz 15:9-19.

Em outra ocasião, Sansão dirigiu-se à casa duma prostituta na cidade filisteia de Gaza. Sabendo disso, os filisteus ficaram de emboscada, pretendendo matá-lo de manhã. Mas, à meia-noite, Sansão se levantou e arrancou do muro de Gaza o portão da cidade, bem como suas ombreiras e tranca, e carregou-os "para cima ao cume do monte que está defronte de Hébron". (Jz 16:1-3; veja GAZA N.º 1.) Isto foi uma grande humilhação para os filisteus, visto que deixou Gaza fraca e desprotegida contra intrusos. Poder Sansão realizar esta espantosa façanha indica que ele ainda tinha o espírito de Deus. Isto argumenta contra ele ter ido à casa da prostituta para fins imorais. No Commentary on the Holy Scriptures (Comentário sobre as Escrituras Sagradas; Jz 16:1, p. 212), de Lange, o comentador Paulus Cassel diz sobre este ponto: "Sansão não foi a Gaza com o objetivo de visitar uma meretriz: pois diz-se que 'foi para lá e viu ali uma [prostituta]'. Mas, quando ele desejou pernoitar ali [em Gaza], não lhe restava nada a fazer, como o inimigo nacional, senão pousar com a [prostituta]. . . . Sua permanência não é mencionada numa linguagem diferente da empregada com referência à pousada dos espias na casa de Raabe. As palavras, 'ele a viu', apenas indicam que, quando ele viu uma mulher do tipo dela, sabia onde podia abrigar-se naquela noite." (Segundo a tradução em inglês, editada por P. Schaff, 1976.) Deve-se notar também que o relato diz que "Sansão ficou deitado até à meia-noite", não que 'Sansão ficou deitado com ela até à meia-noite'.

Por entrar em território inimigo, Sansão mostrou seu destemor. Talvez fosse a Gaza "procurando uma oportunidade contra os filisteus", assim como fizera anteriormente, quando procurou entre eles uma esposa. (Jz 14:4) Neste caso, parece que Sansão pretendia transformar qualquer ação contra ele numa oportunidade para infligir dano aos filisteus.

Traído por Dalila. Foi depois disso que Sansão se enamorou de Dalila. (Veja DALILA.) Ela, para obter lucro material, procurou saber o segredo da força de Sansão. Três vezes ele lhe deu respostas enganosas. Mas, por causa das persistentes importunações dela, ele finalmente cedeu e lhe revelou que sua força consistia em ser nazireu desde o nascimento. Ela entrou então em contato com os filisteus para obter a recompensa por entregá-lo a eles. Enquanto Sansão dormia sobre os joelhos dela, Dalila fez que lhe rapassem o cabelo. Ao acordar, ele não tinha mais o espírito de Jeová, porque se deixara levar a uma situação que resultou no término do seu nazireado. A fonte da sua força não era o próprio cabelo, mas o que este representava, a saber, a relação especial de Sansão com Jeová qual nazireu. Acabada esta relação, Sansão não era em nada diferente dos outros homens. Por isso, os filisteus puderam cegá-lo, prendê-lo com grilhões de cobre e fazê-lo trabalhar como moedor na casa dos presos. — Jz 16:4-21.

Enquanto Sansão estava na prisão, os filisteus providenciaram um grande sacrifício ao seu deus Dagom, a quem atribuíram seu êxito em capturar Sansão. Muita gente, inclusive todos os senhores do eixo, reuniram-se na casa usada para a adoração de Dagom. Somente no terraço havia 3.000 homens e mulheres. Os alegres filisteus mandaram trazer da prisão Sansão, cujo cabelo no ínterim crescera abundantemente, para que lhes servisse de diversão. Ao chegar, Sansão pediu que o menino que o guiava o deixasse tocar as colunas de sustentação da estrutura. Orou então a Jeová: "Por favor, lembra-te de mim e fortalece-me só esta vez, por favor, ó tu, o verdadeiro Deus, e vingue-me eu dos filisteus com vingança por um dos meus dois olhos." (Jz 16:22-28) Talvez orasse para vingar-se apenas de um dos seus olhos por reconhecer que a perda deles fora parcialmente culpa sua. Ou, pode ser que achava ser impossível vingar-se completamente como representante de Jeová.

Sansão segurou então as duas colunas de sustentação e "se encurvou com poder", fazendo a casa desabar. Isto resultou na sua própria morte e na de mais filisteus do que havia matado em toda a sua vida. Parentes o enterraram "entre Zorá e Estaol, na sepultura de Manoá, seu pai". Sansão morreu assim fiel a Jeová, depois de ter julgado Israel por 20 anos. Portanto, seu nome consta justificadamente entre os homens que, pela fé, foram feitos poderosos. — Jz 15:20; 16:26-31; He 11:32-34.

SANSERAI. Cabeça duma casa ancestral, que morava em Jerusalém; filho de Jeroão da tribo de Benjamim. — 1Cr 8:1, 26-28.

SANTIDADE. Estado ou caráter de ser santo. Santidade significa "limpeza ou pureza religiosa; a qualidade de sagrado". A palavra original hebraica qó·dhesh transmite também a ideia de separação, exclusividade ou santificação para Deus, que é santo; o estado de ser separado para o serviço de Deus. Nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, as palavras traduzidas "santo" (há·gi·os) e "santidade" (ha·gi·a·smós) [também: "santificação"]; ha·gi·ó·tes; ha·gi·o·sý·ne) igualmente denotam separação para Deus; são também usadas para se referir à santidade como qualidade de Deus, e à pureza ou perfeição na conduta pessoal.

Jeová. A Jeová pertence a qualidade da santidade. (Êx 39:30; Za 14:20) Cristo Jesus dirigiu-se a ele como "Santo Pai". (Jo 17:11) Mostra-se os no céu como declarando: "Santo, santo, santo é Jeová dos exércitos", atribuindo-lhe santidade, pureza em grau superlativo. (Is 6:3; Re 4:8; compare isso com He 12:14.) Ele é o Santíssimo, superior a todos os outros em santidade. (Pr 30:3; aqui, o plural da palavra hebraica traduzida por "Santíssimo" é usado para denotar excelência e majestade.) Os israelitas foram frequentemente lembrados de que Jeová é a Fonte de toda a santidade por observarem as palavras "A santidade pertence a Jeová" gravadas na lustrosa lâmina de ouro no turbante do sumo sacerdote. Esta lâmina era chamada de "sinal sagrado de dedicação", mostrando que o sumo sacerdote estava posto à parte para um serviço de santidade especial. (Êx 28:36; 29:6) No cântico de vitória de Moisés, entoado após a libertação através do Mar Vermelho, Israel cantou: "Quem entre os deuses é semelhante a ti, ó Jeová? Quem é semelhante a ti, mostrando-se poderoso em santidade?" (Êx 15:11; 1Sa 2:2) Como garantia adicional de ele cumprir a sua palavra, Jeová até mesmo tem jurado pela sua santidade. — Am 4:2.

O nome de Deus é sagrado, posto à parte de todo o aviltamento. (1Cr 16:10; Sal 111:9) Seu nome Jeová deve ser mantido santo, santificado, acima de todos os outros. (Mt 6:9) Desrespeito para com o seu nome é passível de punição com a morte. — Le 24:10-16, 23; Núm 15:30.

Uma vez que Jeová Deus é o Originador de todos os justos princípios e leis (Tg 4:12) e é a base de toda a santidade, a pessoa ou a coisa que é santa tornou-se assim por causa da relação com Jeová e com Sua adoração. Não se pode ter entendimento e sabedoria a menos que se tenha conhecimento do Santíssimo. (Pr 9:10) Jeová só pode ser adorado em santidade. Quem afirma adorá-lo mas pratica impureza é detestável aos olhos dele. (Pr 21:27) Quando Jeová predisse que prepararia a estrada para seu povo retornar do exílio babilônico a Jerusalém, ele disse: "Chamar-se-á Caminho de Santidade. O impuro não passará por ela." (Is 35:8) O pequeno restante que retornou em 537 AEC fez isso de todo o coração para restabelecer a adoração verdadeira, com motivação justa e santa, não por considerações políticas ou egoístas. — Compare isso com a profecia de Za 14:20, 21.

Espírito santo. A força ativa, ou espírito, de Jeová está sob o Seu controle e sempre cumpre Seu propósito. É limpo, puro, sagrado e posto à parte para bom uso por Deus. Por isso é chamado de "espírito santo" e de "o espírito de santidade". (Sal 51:11; Lu 11:13; Ro 1:4; Ef 1:13) O espírito santo que opera na pessoa é uma força a favor da santidade ou pureza. Toda prática impura ou errada implica em resistir a este espírito ou em 'contristá-lo'. (Ef 4:30) Embora o espírito santo, em si mesmo, seja impessoal, expressa a personalidade santa de Deus e por isso pode ser 'contristado'. A prática de qualquer tipo de transgressão tende a 'extinguir o fogo do espírito'. (1Te 5:19) A continuação de tal prática, com efeito, fará com que o espírito santo de Deus 'se sinta magoado', e isto pode resultar em Deus transformar-se em inimigo de quem é rebelde. (Is 63:10) Quem contristar o espírito santo talvez chegue até a blasfemá-lo, pecado que Jesus Cristo disse que não será perdoado, nem no atual sistema de coisas, nem no que há de vir. — Mt 12:31, 32; Mr 3:28-30; veja ESPÍRITO.

Jesus Cristo. Jesus Cristo, em sentido especial, é o Santo de Deus. (At 3:14; Mr 1:24; Lu 4:34) Sua santidade procedeu de seu Pai quando Jeová o criou como seu Filho unigênito. Manteve a sua santidade como o mais íntimo do seu Pai nos céus. (Jo 1:1; 8:29; Mt 11:27) Quando a sua vida foi transferida para o ventre da virgem Maria, nasceu como santo Filho humano de Deus. (Lu 1:35) Ele é o único que, como humano, manteve uma santidade perfeita, sem pecado, e que no fim da sua vida terrestre ainda era "leal, cândido, imaculado, separado dos pecadores". (He 7:26) Foi 'declarado justo' por seu próprio mérito. (Ro 5:18) Outros humanos obtêm a condição de santo perante Deus somente à base da santidade de Cristo, e ela é obtida pela fé no sacrifício resgatador dele. É uma 'santa fé' que, quando conservada, mantém a pessoa no amor de Deus. — Ju 20, 21.

Outras Pessoas. A inteira nação de Israel foi considerada santa por ter sido escolhida e santificada por Deus, o que levou o povo com exclusividade a uma relação pactuada com Ele qual sua propriedade especial. Ele lhes disse que, se lhe obedecessem, se tornariam "um reino de sacerdotes e uma nação santa". (Êx 19:5, 6) Por serem obedientes, eles 'deveras mostrariam ser santos para com o seu Deus'. Deus os admoestou: "Deveis mostrar-vos santos, porque eu, Jeová, vosso Deus, sou santo." (Núm 15:40; Le 19:2) As leis dietéticas, sanitárias e morais que Deus lhes deu serviam-lhes de constantes lembretes de sua condição apartada e de sua santidade para com Deus. As restrições que estas leis lhes impunham constituíam uma vigorosa força que limitava grandemente sua associação com seus vizinhos pagãos, mostrando ser uma proteção para manter Israel santo. Por outro lado, a nação perderia sua condição santa perante Deus se desobedecesse às leis dele. — De 28:15-19.

Embora Israel, como nação, fosse santo, certas pessoas que compunham a nação eram consideradas santas em sentido especial. Os sacerdotes, especialmente o sumo sacerdote, eram separados para o serviço no santuário e representavam o povo perante Deus. Nesta qualidade, eram santos e tinham de manter a santificação para poderem executar seu serviço e continuar a ser encarados por Deus como santos. (Le 21; 2Cr 29:34) Os profetas e outros escritores inspirados da Bíblia eram homens santos. (2Pe 1:21) Mulheres da antiguidade, que eram fiéis a Deus, são chamadas de "santas" pelo apóstolo Pedro. (1Pe 3:5) Os soldados de Israel em campanha militar eram considerados santos, porque as guerras que travavam eram as guerras de Jeová. (Núm 21:14; 1Sa 21:5, 6) Todo varão primogênito de Israel era santo para Jeová, visto que, na época da Páscoa no Egito, os primogênitos foram por Jeová poupados à morte; pertenciam a ele. (Núm 3:12, 13; 8:17) Por isso, todo filho primogênito tinha de ser remido no santuário. (Êx 13:1, 2; Núm 18:15, 16; Lu 2:22, 23) A pessoa (homem ou mulher) que fizesse o voto de viver como nazireu era santa durante o período do voto. Este período era posto à parte como totalmente devotado a algum serviço especial de Jeová. O nazireu tinha de observar certos requisitos legais; a violação deles o tornava impuro. Neste caso, ele tinha de fazer um sacrifício especial para restabelecer sua condição santa. Os dias anteriores a quando ele se tornou impuro não contavam para o cumprimento do seu nazireado; ele tinha de começar de novo a cumprir seu voto. — Núm 6:1-12.

Lugares. Um lugar é tornado santo pela presença de Jeová. (Quando aparecia a homens, ele manifestava a sua presença por meio de anjos que o representavam; Gál 3:19.) Moisés encontrava-se em solo sagrado quando, em pé, observava o arbusto ardendo, do qual um anjo representando a Jeová lhe falou. (Êx 3:2-5) Lembrou-se a Josué que ele se encontrava em solo sagrado quando um anjo, o príncipe do exército de Jeová, se materializou e ficou em pé diante dele. (Jos 5:13-15) Pedro, referindo-se à transfiguração de Cristo e a Jeová falar naquela ocasião, chamou o lugar de "monte santo". — 2Pe 1:17, 18; Lu 9:28-36.

O pátio do tabernáculo era solo sagrado. Segundo a tradição, os sacerdotes serviam ali descalços, porque serviam no santuário, que estava associado com a presença de Jeová. Os dois compartimentos do santuário eram chamados de "Santo" e "Santíssimo", conforme sua proximidade à Arca do Pacto. (He 9:1-3) O templo, mais tarde erigido em Jerusalém, também era santo. (Sal 11:4) Santidade se aplicava ao monte Sião e a Jerusalém por se encontrarem ali o santuário e o "trono de Jeová". — 1Cr 29:23; Sal 2:6; Is 27:13; 48:2; 52:1; Da 9:24; Mt 4:5.

Lembrava-se ao exército de Israel que mantivesse o acampamento livre de excrementos humanos ou de outra contaminação, porque "Jeová, teu Deus, está andando pelo teu acampamento . . . e teu acampamento tem de mostrar-se santo, para que ele não veja nada indecente em ti, e certamente deixe de acompanhar-te". (De 23:9-14) A limpeza física é aqui relacionada com a santidade.

Períodos de Tempo. Certos dias ou períodos foram reservados como santos para Israel. Isto não se devia a alguma santidade intrínseca, ou inerente, dos próprios períodos de tempo. Era porque deviam ser épocas de observância especial na adoração de Jeová. Ao reservar tais períodos, Deus teve em mente o bem-estar e a edificação espiritual do povo. Havia os sábados semanais. (Êx 20:8-11) Nestes dias, o povo podia concentrar sua atenção na lei de Deus e em ensiná-la aos filhos. Outros dias de santo congresso ou sábado eram: o primeiro dia do sétimo mês (Le 23:24) e o Dia da Expiação no dia dez do sétimo mês. (Le 23:26-32) Os períodos festivos, e especialmente certos dias deles, eram observados como "santos congressos". (Le 23:37, 38) Estas festividades eram a Páscoa e a Festividade dos Pães não Fermentados (Le 23:4-8); o Pentecostes, ou a Festividade das Semanas (Le 23:15-21); e a Festividade das Barracas, ou do Recolhimento. — Le 23:33-36, 39-43; veja CONGRESSO.

Além disso, todo sétimo ano era um ano sabático, um ano inteiro de santidade. Durante o ano sabático, a terra devia ficar sem cultivo; esta provisão, igual ao sábado semanal, dava aos israelitas ainda mais tempo para estudar a lei de Jeová, para meditar nela e para ensiná-la aos filhos. (Êx 23:10, 11; Le 25:2-7) Por fim, todo 50.º ano era chamado de jubileu, também considerado santo. Este também era um ano sabático, mas, além disso, restaurava a nação em sentido econômico na condição teocrática estabelecida na ocasião em que a terra foi repartida. Era um ano santo de liberdade, descanso e revigoramento. — Le 25:8-12.

Jeová ordenou que seu povo 'atribulasse a alma' no Dia da Expiação, um dia de "santo congresso".

Isto significava que deviam jejuar, e que deviam admitir e confessar seus pecados, bem como sentir pesar piedoso por causa deles. (Le 16:29-31; 23:26-32) Mas, nenhum dia santo para Jeová devia ser um dia de choro e de tristeza para seu povo. Antes, esses dias deviam ser dias de regozijo e de louvor a Jeová pelas suas maravilhosas provisões devidas à sua benevolência. — Ne 8:9-12.

O santo dia de descanso de Jeová. A Bíblia nos mostra que Deus passou a repousar das suas obras criativas uns 6.000 anos atrás, declarando o sétimo "dia" sagrado, ou santo. (Gên 2:2, 3) O apóstolo Paulo mostra que o grande dia de descanso de Jeová é um período longo de tempo, ao falar deste dia como ainda vigente, de modo que os cristãos, por meio de fé e obediência, podem entrar no descanso desse dia. Sendo um dia santo, é um tempo de alívio e de regozijo para os cristãos, mesmo no meio de um mundo fatigado e afligido pelo pecado. — He 4:3-10; veja DIA.

Objetos. Certas coisas eram reservadas para uso na adoração. Neste respeito, também, recebiam a santidade em razão da sua santificação para o serviço de Jeová; não que possuíssem santidade em si mesmas, para serem usadas como amuletos ou fetiches. Por exemplo, um dos principais objetos santos, a Arca do Pacto, não mostrou ser nenhuma espécie de amuleto quando os dois filhos iníquos de Eli a acompanharam à batalha contra os filisteus. (1Sa 4:3-11) As coisas tornadas sagradas por decreto de Deus incluíam o altar de sacrifícios (Êx 29:37), o óleo de unção (Êx 30:25), o incenso especial (Êx 30:35, 37), as vestes do sacerdócio (Êx 28:2; Le 16:4), os pães da proposição (Êx 25:30; 1Sa 21:4, 6) e toda a mobília do santuário. Estes últimos objetos incluíam o altar dourado de incenso, a mesa dos pães da proposição e os candelabros, junto com seus utensílios. Muitos destes objetos estão alistados em 1 Reis 7:47-51. Eles eram santos também em sentido maior por serem modelos de coisas celestiais e servirem em sentido típico em benefício dos que hão de herdar a salvação. — He 8:4, 5; 9:23-28.

A Palavra escrita de Deus é chamada de "Escrituras sagradas", ou de "escritos sagrados". Foi escrita sob a influência do espírito santo e tem o poder de santificar, ou tornar santo, os que obedecem às suas ordens. — Ro 1:2; 2Ti 3:15.

Animais e Produtos da Terra. Os machos primogênitos do gado, dos cordeiros e dos bodes eram considerados santos para Jeová e não deviam ser remidos. Deviam ser oferecidos como sacrifícios, e uma parte cabia aos sacerdotes oficiantes. (Núm 18:17-19) As primícias e os dízimos eram santos, assim como também todos os sacrifícios e todas as dádivas santificadas para o serviço do santuário. (Êx 28:38) Todas as coisas santas para Jeová eram sagradas e não podiam ser encaradas levianamente ou usadas de modo comum, profano. Um exemplo disso é a lei a respeito do dízimo. Se um homem reservasse como dízimo uma parte, digamos, da sua safra de trigo, e depois ele ou um dos da sua família inadvertidamente tomasse parte dele para uso doméstico, tal como para cozinhá-lo, o homem era culpado de violar a lei de Deus a respeito de coisas sagradas. A Lei exigia que desse ao santuário uma compensação de quantidade igual, mais 20 por cento, além de oferecer como sacrifício um carneiro sadio do rebanho. Assim se gerava grande respeito pelas coisas sagradas pertencentes a Jeová. — Le 5:14-16.

Santidade Cristã. O Líder dos cristãos, o Filho de Deus, ao nascer como humano, era santo (Lu 1:35), e ele manteve esta santificação, ou santidade, durante toda a sua vida terrestre. (Jo 17:19; At 4:27; He 7:26) Esta santidade era cabal, perfeita, ocupando todos os seus pensamentos, palavras e ações. Por manter a sua santidade mesmo até a morte sacrificial, ele tornou possível que outros alcançassem a santidade. Por conseguinte, os chamados para serem seguidores dos seus passos são chamados com "uma chamada santa". (2Ti 1:9) Tornam-se os ungidos de Jeová, os irmãos espirituais de Jesus Cristo, e são chamados de "santos". (Ro 15:26; Ef 1:1; Fil 4:21) Obtêm a santidade por meio da fé no sacrifício resgatador de Cristo. (Fil 3:8, 9; 1Jo 1:7) Portanto, não têm a santidade inerente neles, ou pertencente a eles, pelo seu próprio mérito, mas a obtêm por meio de Jesus Cristo. — Ro 3.23-26.

As muitas referências bíblicas a membros vivos da congregação como "santos" torna claro que ninguém é constituído santo por homens ou por uma organização, nem precisa esperar até depois da morte para ser feito "santo". Ele é "santo" em virtude da chamada de Deus para ser co-herdeiro com Cristo. É santo aos olhos de Deus enquanto está na Terra, tendo a esperança de vida celestial no domínio espiritual, habitado por Jeová Deus e seu Filho, junto com os santos anjos. — 1Pe 1:3, 4; 2Cr 6:30; Mr 12:25; At 7:56.

A conduta pura é essencial. Os que possuem esta condição santa perante Jeová esforçam-se, com a ajuda do espírito de Deus, a alcançar a santidade de Deus e de Cristo. (1Te 3:12, 13) Isto exige o estudo da Palavra de verdade de Deus e a aplicação dela na sua vida. (1Pe 1:22) Requer que se acate a disciplina de Jeová. (He 12:9-11) Segue-se que, se alguém for genuinamente santo, ele seguirá um proceder de santidade, pureza e retidão moral. Os cristãos são admoestados a apresentarem seu corpo a Deus como sacrifício santo, assim como os sacrifícios aceitáveis apresentados no antigo santuário eram santos. (Ro 12:1) Santidade de conduta é uma ordem: "De acordo com o Santo que vos chamou, vós, também, tornai-vos santos em toda a vossa conduta, porque está escrito: 'Tendes de ser santos, porque eu sou santo.'" — 1Pe 1:15, 16.

Aqueles que se tornam membros do corpo de Cristo são "concidadãos dos santos e . . . membros da família de Deus". (Ef 2:19) São comparados a um santo templo de pedras viventes para Jeová e são "sacerdócio real, nação santa, povo para propriedade especial". (1Pe 2:5, 9) Têm de purificar-se "de toda imundície da carne e do espírito, aperfeiçoando a santidade em temor de Deus". (2Co 7:1) Se o cristão tiver hábitos que aviltam ou prejudicam seu corpo carnal, ou que tornam este imundo ou impuro, ou se ele contrariar a Bíblia em doutrina ou moral, ele não ama nem teme a Deus e se desvia da santidade. Não se pode praticar impureza e ainda continuar santo.

Coisas santas devem ser tratadas com respeito. Se um membro da classe do templo usar seu corpo de modo impuro, ele aviltará e derrubará não só a si mesmo, mas também o templo de Deus, e "se alguém destruir o templo de Deus, Deus o destruirá; pois o templo de Deus é santo, templo esse que sois vós". (1Co 3:17) Ele fora remido pelo sangue do Santo de Deus. (1Pe 1:18, 19) Se alguém usar mal o que é santo para Jeová, quer seu próprio corpo, quer outra coisa dedicada, ou se prejudicar ou cometer ofensas contra outro que é santo para Deus, ele sofrerá punição da parte de Deus. — 2Te 1:6-9.

Deus revelou a Israel sua atitude para com tal uso profano de suas santas possessões. Vê-se isso na sua lei que proibia o uso comum, ou profano, de coisas separadas como santas para os que estavam sob a Lei mosaica, por exemplo, as primícias e o dízimo. (Je 2:3; Re 16:5, 6; Lu 18:7; 1Te 4:3-8; Sal 105:15; Za 2:8) Considere também a punição que Deus trouxe sobre Babilônia pelo maldoso uso indevido que fez dos vasos do Seu templo e do povo da Sua santa nação. (Da 5:1-4, 22-31; Je 50:9-13) Em vista desta atitude de Deus, os cristãos são repetidas vezes elogiados pelo tratamento amoroso, bondoso, dado aos santos de Jeová, os irmãos espirituais de Jesus Cristo, e são lembrados da necessidade de fazerem isso. — Ro 15:25-27; Ef 1:15, 16; Col 1:3, 4; 1Ti 5:9, 10; Flm 5-7; He 6:10; compare isso com Mt 25:40, 45.

Considerados santos aos olhos de Deus. Antes de Jesus vir à Terra e se tornar o precursor e aquele que abriria o caminho para a vida celestial, homens e mulheres fiéis eram considerados santos. (He 6:19, 20; 10:19, 20; 1Pe 3:5) De modo que também "uma grande multidão", não incluída nos 144.000 "selados", pode ter a condição de santidade perante Deus. Tais pessoas são encaradas como usando vestes limpas, lavadas no sangue de Cristo. (Re 7:2-4, 9, 10, 14; veja GRANDE MULTIDÃO.) No tempo devido, todos os que viverem no céu e na Terra serão santos, porque "a própria criação também será liberta da escravização à corrupção e terá a liberdade gloriosa dos filhos de Deus". — Ro 8:20, 21.

Santidade abençoada por Jeová. A santidade por parte da pessoa traz consigo o mérito de Deus na relação familiar dela. Assim, se alguém casado for cristão (ou cristã), santo para Deus, seu cônjuge e os filhos desta união, se estes mesmos não forem servos dedicados de Deus, beneficiam-se com o mérito daquele que é santo. Por este motivo, o apóstolo recomenda: "Se algum irmão tiver esposa incrédula, e ela, contudo, estiver disposta a morar com ele, que ele não a deixe; e a mulher que tiver marido incrédulo, e ele, contudo, estiver disposto a morar com ela, não deixe seu marido. Pois o marido incrédulo está santificado em relação à sua esposa, e a esposa incrédula está santificada em relação ao irmão; de outro modo, os vossos filhos seriam realmente impuros, mas agora são santos." (1Co 7:12-14) O cônjuge puro, crente, portanto, não é impuro pela sua relação com o cônjuge incrédulo, e a família, como unidade, não é considerada por Deus como impura. Além disso, a associação do crente com a família dá a quaisquer incrédulos nela a melhor oportunidade de se tornarem crentes, de transformarem sua personalidade e de apresentarem seu corpo "como sacrifício vivo, santo e aceitável a Deus". (Ro 12:1; Col 3:9, 10) A família é abençoada no ambiente puro, santo, que o crente que serve a Deus pode promover. — Veja SANTIFICAÇÃO (No Casamento).

SANTIFICAÇÃO. Ato ou processo de tornar santo, de separar ou pôr à parte para o serviço ou uso de Jeová Deus; estado de ser santo, santificado ou purificado. "Santificação" traz à atenção a ação pela qual se produz, se manifesta ou se mantém a santidade. (Veja SANTIDADE.) Palavras derivadas do verbo hebraico qa·dhásh, e palavras aparentadas com o adjetivo grego há·gi·os, são traduzidas "santo", "santificado", "tornar [fazer] sagrado" e "separar".

Pode-se obter melhor entendimento do assunto por se considerar o uso das palavras nas línguas originais. Elas são aplicadas nas Escrituras a (1) Jeová Deus, (2) Jesus Cristo, (3) anjos, (4) homens e animais, (5) coisas, (6) períodos de tempo ou ocasiões, e (7) propriedades de terra. Às vezes, a palavra hebraica para "santificar" era usada no sentido de preparar-se ou aprontar-se de modo apropriado. Jeová ordenou a Moisés que dissesse aos israelitas queixosos: "Santificai-vos para amanhã, visto que certamente comereis carne." (Núm 11:18) Antes de Israel atravessar o rio Jordão, Josué ordenou: "Santificai-vos, pois amanhã Jeová fará coisas maravilhosas no vosso meio." (Jos 3:5) Em todos os casos, o termo tem sentido religioso, espiritual e moral. Pode denotar afastar-se de tudo o que desagrada a Jeová ou que parece mau aos seus olhos, inclusive a impureza física. Deus disse a Moisés: "Vai ao povo, e tens de santificá-los hoje e amanhã, e eles terão de lavar as suas capas. . . . porque no terceiro dia Jeová descerá sobre o monte Sinai diante dos olhos de todo o povo." (Êx 19:10, 11) Usa-se a palavra para significar purificar ou limpar, como em 2 Samuel 11:4, que reza: "Ela se santificava da sua impureza."

Jeová disse aos de Israel que deviam manter-se separados das nações do mundo e limpos das práticas delas; ele deu a Israel leis para mantê-los à parte, inclusive leis que definiam o que era puro e o que era impuro como alimento. Daí, apresentou-lhes o motivo disso: "Pois eu sou Jeová, vosso Deus; e tendes de santificar-vos e tendes de mostrar ser santos, porque eu sou santo." — Le 11:44.

Jeová Deus. Jeová Deus é santo e absolutamente puro. Sendo o Criador e Soberano Universal, tem o direito à adoração exclusiva por parte de todas as suas criaturas. Por isso, ele diz que demonstrará sua santidade, atuando para santificar a si mesmo e seu nome perante os olhos de toda a criação: "Eu hei de magnificar-me, e santificar-me, e dar-me a conhecer aos olhos de muitas nações; e terão de saber que eu sou Jeová." (Ez 38:23) Os que desejam ter Seu favor, e a vida, têm de 'santificar' a ele e Seu nome, quer dizer, têm de dar a este nome o devido lugar como separado e mais alto do que todos os outros. (Le 22:32; Is 8:13; 29:23) Jesus ensinou aos seus seguidores a orar em primeiro lugar: "Nosso Pai nos céus, santificado seja [ou: "seja tido por sagrado; seja tratado como santo"] o teu nome." — Mt 6:9, n.

Jesus Cristo. Jeová Deus escolheu seu Filho unigênito e o enviou à Terra para fazer uma obra especial a favor do Seu nome e para dar a vida como resgate para a humanidade. Mas ele não foi acolhido nem respeitado como tal pela nação judaica; antes, repudiaram a filiação e a posição dele junto ao Pai. Ele lhes respondeu: "Dizeis a mim, a quem o Pai santificou e mandou ao mundo: 'Blasfemas', porque eu disse: Sou Filho de Deus?" — Jo 10:36.

O apóstolo Pedro escreve aos cristãos, dizendo-lhes que 'santifiquem o Cristo como Senhor nos seus corações'. Mostra que aquele que fizer isso se desviará do que é mau e fará o que é bom. As pessoas das nações têm no coração um espanto reverente e um temor de homens e de outras coisas. Mas o cristão deve dar a Cristo o devido lugar nas suas afeições e motivações. Isto significa reconhecer a posição de Cristo como Agente Principal da vida, da parte de Deus, como o Rei messiânico, o Sumo Sacerdote de Deus e aquele que deu a sua vida em resgate. Também deve estar atento ao exemplo de boa conduta de Cristo e manter uma boa consciência relacionada com a sua própria conduta como cristão. Caso alguém, mesmo um governante, exija duramente do cristão uma razão da sua esperança, o cristão que assim santifica Cristo no coração apresentará uma boa defesa, mas com temperamento brando e profundo respeito. — 1Pe 3:10-16.

Anjos. Os anjos de Deus são chamados por Jesus de "santos" anjos, santificados, separados para uso santo de Jeová. (Mr 8:38; Lu 9:26; compare isso com Sal 103:20.) Comparecem diante da santa presença de Jeová, observando a sua face. — Mt 18:10; Lu 1:19.

Homens e Animais. Em tempos passados, Deus escolheu certas pessoas, que desejava usar para seu serviço exclusivo, e ele as santificou. Quando determinou usar os varões da tribo de Levi para cuidarem do tabernáculo sagrado e dos seus serviços, ele disse a Moisés: "Quanto a mim, eis que deveras tomo os levitas dentre os filhos de Israel em lugar de todos os primogênitos dos filhos de Israel, que abrem a madre; e os levitas têm de tornar-se meus. Pois todo primogênito é meu. No dia em que golpeei todo primogênito na terra do Egito santifiquei para mim todo primogênito em Israel, desde o homem até o animal. Devem tornar-se meus. Eu sou Jeová." Para liberar os primogênitos das outras 11 tribos, requereu-se que os israelitas dessem em troca todos os varões da tribo de Levi. Daí, tiveram de dar cinco siclos (US$ 11) ao santuário por todo varão primogênito que excedia o total de varões levitas. Isto liberou os primogênitos de serem separados para o serviço exclusivo de Jeová. — Núm 3:12, 13, 46-48.

Depois, todos os varões primogênitos que abrissem a madre deviam ser considerados santificados, mas eram apresentados no templo e remidos pelo pagamento de cinco siclos (US$ 11). (Êx 13:2; Le 12:1-4; Núm 18:15, 16) Os que estavam sob um voto de nazireu estavam santificados durante o período do seu voto. (Núm 6:1-8) O primogênito dos animais domésticos também era santificado, para servir de sacrifício ou, em alguns casos, para ser remido. — De 15:19; veja PRIMOGÊNITO, PRIMEIRO NASCIDO.

O sacerdócio. Jeová decidiu também pôr à parte uma família exclusiva dentro da tribo de Levi, a fim de servir como seus sacerdotes de sacrifícios, a saber, Arão e os filhos e descendentes masculinos dele. (Êx 28:1-3, 41) Eles foram então santificados com sacrifícios apropriados numa série simbólica de atos descritos no capítulo 29 de Êxodo. O Sumo Sacerdote eterno de Jeová, Jesus Cristo, e seus cossacerdotes, ou subsacerdotes, a saber, aqueles que seguem os passos de Cristo e que Deus unge para serem membros do corpo de Cristo, também são santificados. — 2Te 2:13; Re 1:6; 5:10.

O Processo de Santificação. Há certo processo ou procedimento pelo qual tem de passar aquele que há de ser santificado como seguidor dos passos de Cristo. Usando a palavra santificar no sentido de purificar ou limpar de pecados aos olhos de Deus, o apóstolo Paulo escreveu: "Pois, se o sangue de bodes e de touros, e as cinzas duma novilha, aspergidos sobre os aviltados, santifica até à purificação da carne, quanto mais o sangue do Cristo, o qual, por intermédio dum espírito eterno, se ofereceu a Deus sem mácula, purificará as nossas consciências de obras mortas, para que prestemos serviço sagrado ao Deus vivente?" — He 9:13, 14.

"O sangue do Cristo" significa o valor da sua vida humana perfeita; e é isto o que lava a culpa de pecado da pessoa que crê nele. Portanto, santifica realmente (não apenas em sentido típico [veja He 10:1-4]) para a purificação da carne do crente, do ponto de vista de Deus, de modo que o crente tem uma consciência limpa. Também, Deus declara esse crente justo e o torna apto para ser um dos subsacerdotes de Jesus Cristo. (Ro 8:1, 30) Esses são chamados de há·gi·oi, "santos", ou pessoas santificadas para Deus. — Ef 2:19; Col 1:12; compare isso com At 20:32, que menciona "os santificados [tois he·gi·a·smé·nois]".

De modo que o procedimento para com os que se hão de tornar co-herdeiros de Cristo, primeiro, é que são atraídos por Jeová Deus a Jesus Cristo, pela fé na verdade da Palavra de Deus. (Jo 6:44; 17:17; 2Te 2:13) Aceitos por Jeová, são "lavados . . . santificados . . . declarados justos no nome de nosso Senhor Jesus Cristo e com o espírito de nosso Deus". (1Co 6:11) Cristo torna-se assim para eles 'sabedoria, justiça e santificação, e livramento por meio de resgate'. (1Co 1:30) A respeito deles, o apóstolo Paulo disse: "Porque tanto aquele [Cristo] que santifica como os que estão sendo santificados provêm todos de um só, e por esta causa ele não se envergonha de chamá-los 'irmãos'." (He 2:11) Tornam-se 'filhos de Deus' e "irmãos" do principal Filho de Deus por serem gerados pelo espírito. — Ro 8:14-17; Jo 3:5, 8.

Tem de ser mantida. O processo de santificação não é meramente unilateral. A santificação tem de ser mantida, e é nisto que o crente tem parte. Ele pode perder a santificação ou pode retê-la.

Cristo Jesus estabeleceu o modelo para os santificados. (Jo 13:15) Ele disse em oração a Deus: "Santifico-me em seu benefício, para que também sejam santificados por meio da verdade." (Jo 17:19) Jesus manteve-se imaculado e continuou na sua posição de alguém posto à parte a fim de santificar seus seguidores. Estes têm de manter sua santificação até o fim de sua carreira terrestre. Para isso, têm de manter-se livres de coisas desonrosas e daqueles que praticam coisas desonrosas, a fim de serem "vaso para fim honroso, santificado, útil para o seu dono, preparado para toda boa obra". (2Ti 2:20, 21) Precisam dar-se conta de que são comprados com o sangue do próprio Cristo, e que é pela vontade de Deus que eles têm "sido santificados por intermédio da oferta do corpo de Jesus Cristo, uma vez para sempre". (He 10:10) São aconselhados a 'empenhar-se pela santificação sem a qual nenhum homem verá o Senhor'. — He 12:14.

Embora ainda estejam na carne imperfeita, que tende para o pecado, os santificados podem ser bem-sucedidos. Avisando contra o perigo de se perder a santificação, Paulo lembra os santificados de que foi 'o sangue do [novo] pacto com que eles foram santificados'. (He 10:29; Lu 22:20) Cristo, como Mediador do novo pacto, ajuda-os a cumprirem os termos do pacto pela obediência e pelo comportamento limpo, para que mantenha sua santificação. "É por meio de uma só oferta sacrificial que ele aperfeiçoou perpetuamente os que estão sendo santificados." (He 10:14) Cristo, como Mediador e Sumo Sacerdote, "é também capaz de salvar completamente os que se aproximam de Deus por intermédio dele". (He 7:25) Mas, se voltarem a praticar o pecado, não há mais um segundo sacrifício, mas apenas a expectativa de julgamento e de destruição. — He 10:26, 27.

Concordemente, os santificados não são chamados para continuarem assim como antes de ser santificados, ou para voltarem a tal proceder. O apóstolo exorta: "Pois isto é o que Deus quer, a vossa santificação, que vos abstenhais de fornicação; que cada um de vós saiba obter posse do seu próprio vaso em santificação e honra." "Pois Deus nos chamou, não com uma concessão para a impureza, mas em conexão com a santificação." — 1Te 4:3, 4, 7.

A Palavra e o espírito de Deus. A Palavra de Deus desempenha um grande papel na santificação, e tem de ser seguida de perto para se manter esta santificação. (At 20:32) Deus envia também ao crente e santificado o seu espírito santo, que é uma poderosa força operando nele para a purificação. Ajuda o santificado a ser obediente, a manter um proceder limpo na vida. (1Pe 1:2) A orientação do espírito de Deus torna possível que tais sejam oferecidos para ser santificados, puros, aceitáveis a Deus. (Ro 15:16) Qualquer impureza significa uma desconsideração do espírito de Deus e tende a 'con-tristá-lo'. (Ef 4:30; 1Te 4:8; 5:19) Isso pode até levar à blasfêmia contra o espírito santo, o que não será perdoado. — Mt 12:31, 32; Lu 12:8-10.

Santificação de Lugares. O lugar de moradia de Jeová ou qualquer lugar em que ele more de forma representativa é um lugar santificado ou santo, um santuário. O tabernáculo no ermo e os templos mais tarde construídos por Salomão e por Zorobabel (reconstruído e ampliado por Herodes, o Grande) eram chamados de miq·dásh ou qó·dhesh, lugares 'postos à parte' ou 'santos'. Situados no meio dum povo pecaminoso, estes lugares tinham de ser periodicamente purificados (em sentido típico ou pictórico) do aviltamento, por meio da aspersão de sangue de animais sacrificiais. — Le 16:16.

Jerusalém. Do mesmo modo, Jerusalém, a cidade do grandioso Rei (Sal 48:1, 2; 135:21), e o lugar em que ela se encontrava eram considerados santificados. (Is 48:1, 2; 52:1; Ne 11:1; Da 9:24) De modo correspondente, a Nova Jerusalém, a cidade celestial, é um santuário em que se permite a entrada apenas de pessoas santificadas, e não dos que praticam alguma forma de impureza (tal como espiritismo, fornicação, assassinato, idolatria e mentira). — Re 21:2; 22:14, 15, 19.

O jardim do Éden, um santuário. Jeová apareceu representativamente no jardim do Éden para conversar com Adão e Eva e para instruí-los; era um lugar limpo, sem pecado e perfeito, onde o homem estava em paz com Deus. (Gên 1:28; 2:8, 9; 3:8, 9; De 32:4) Portanto, quando Adão e Eva se rebelaram, foram expulsos de lá. Este paraíso era um lugar reservado ou santificado por Deus para ser ocupado por pessoas puras e justas. Já que Adão e Eva eram então pecadores, foram expulsos para que não tomassem da árvore da vida e assim, apesar de serem pecadores, vivessem para sempre. — Gên 3:22-24.

O arbusto ardente e o monte Sinai. Quando Jeová Deus comissionou Moisés para voltar ao Egito, a fim de libertar Seu povo da escravidão, enviando Moisés em Seu próprio nome de recordação, Jeová (Êx 3:15, 16), Ele enviou seu anjo, o qual apareceu a Moisés num arbusto que ardia em chamas. Quando Moisés se aproximou, o anjo, que apareceu em representação de Jeová, ordenou que Moisés tirasse as sandálias, porque, como disse, "o lugar em que estás parado é solo sagrado [qó·dhesh]". — Êx 3:1-5.

Mais tarde, quando o povo se reuniu ao sopé do monte Sinai, na ocasião em que se deu o pacto da Lei, Jeová ordenou a Moisés: "Põe termos ao monte e torna-o sagrado", porque Jeová estava ali representado por seus anjos. (Êx 19:23; Gál 3:19) Todo aquele que ultrapassasse os limites seria morto, porque ninguém pode chegar-se à presença de Jeová sem autorização. (Êx 19:12, 13) No entanto, Moisés, como mediador designado por Deus, podia chegar-se. Neste respeito, Moisés profeticamente prefigurou Jesus Cristo, o grande Mediador para os cristãos ungidos, ao passo que eles se aproximam do celestial Monte Sião. — He 12:22-24.

Cidades de refúgio e acampamentos do exército. Certas cidades em Israel foram separadas para o fim especial de prover um lugar de refúgio para o homicida desintencional. Elas foram santificadas, ou receberam "categoria sagrada". — Jos 20:7-9.

Os acampamentos do exército de Israel eram lugares santificados, porque Deus 'estava andando pelo acampamento'. Por isso, tinha de se manter a pureza moral, espiritual e física. — De 23:9-14; 2Sa 11:6-11.

Santificação de Coisas. Visto que o tabernáculo e o templo eram construções santificadas, as coisas que havia neles igualmente tinham de ser santas, santificadas. O altar de incenso, a Arca do Pacto, a mesa dos pães da proposição, o candelabro, o altar da oferta queimada, a bacia, todos os utensílios, o incenso e o óleo de unção, até mesmo as vestes dos sacerdotes, eram objetos santificados. Deviam ser manejados e transportados apenas por pessoas santificadas — os sacerdotes e os levitas. (Êx 30:25, 32, 35; 40:10, 11; Le 8:10, 11, 15, 30; Núm 4:1-33; 7:1) Os sacerdotes que serviam no tabernáculo prestavam "serviço sagrado numa representação típica e como sombra das coisas celestiais; assim como Moisés, quando estava para completar a tenda, recebeu o mandado divino: Pois ele diz: 'Cuida de que faças todas as coisas segundo o seu modelo que te foi mostrado no monte.'" — He 8:4, 5.

Sacrifícios e alimentos. Os sacrifícios e as ofertas eram santificados por serem oferecidos da maneira prescrita sobre o altar santificado. (Mt 23:19) A porção que os sacerdotes recebiam era santa e não podia ser comida pelos que não eram das famílias sacerdotais, e nem mesmo os sacerdotes podiam comer essas coisas enquanto estavam numa condição "impura". (Le 2:3; 7:6, 32-34; 22:1-13) Os pães da proposição também eram santos, santificados. — 1Sa 21:4; Mr 2:26.

Assim como o alimento provido por Jeová para o seu sacerdócio era santificado, assim também o alimento fornecido por ele aos seus servos cristãos é santificado, assim como devem ser todas as coisas que seus servos santificados comem ou em que se empenham. O apóstolo Paulo adverte contra homens sem consciência que fazem uma ostentação falsa de santificação, "proibindo o casar-se, mandando abster-se de alimentos que Deus criou para serem tomados com agradecimentos pelos que têm fé e que conhecem a verdade de modo exato. A razão disso é que cada criação de Deus é excelente, e nada deve ser rejeitado se for recebido com agradecimento, porque é santificado pela palavra de Deus e pela oração sobre ele". (1Ti 4:1-5) Quando a Palavra de Deus declara uma coisa pura, ela é pura, e o cristão, ao dar graças por ela em oração, aceita-a como santificada, e Deus o considera limpo ao comê-la.

Dízimos. Os dízimos de cereais, frutas e rebanhos, que os israelitas reservavam eram considerados santificados e não podiam ser usados para outros fins. (Le 27:30, 32) Concordemente, ninguém pode usar mal uma coisa santificada, ou prejudicar ou falar mal de pessoas santificadas de Deus, inclusive dos irmãos ungidos de Cristo, sem ficar culpado perante Deus. Jesus mostrou isso aos judeus quando o acusaram de blasfêmia. (Jo 10:36) O apóstolo Pedro avisou a respeito da destruição que sobrevirá a homens iníquos, descritos por ele como "atrevidos, obstinados, [que] não tremem diante dos gloriosos [santificados por Jeová], mas falam de modo ultrajante". — 2Pe 2:9-12; compare isso com Ju 8.

Períodos de Tempo ou Ocasiões. O registro bíblico nos diz o que Deus fez quando completou sua obra criativa para com a terra: "Ao sétimo dia Deus havia acabado sua obra . . . e passou a repousar . . . E Deus passou a abençoar o sétimo dia e a fazê-lo sagrado." (Gên 2:2, 3) Este "dia", portanto, devia ser usado pelos homens como "dia" de serviço sagrado e de obediência a Jeová. Não devia ser profanado por obras do homem em benefício próprio. Adão e Eva, portanto, violaram este "dia" quando empreenderam um programa de autodeterminação, de fazer o que bem entendiam, na Terra, independentes do seu Soberano, Jeová. O 'dia de descanso' de Deus ainda continua, segundo o registro de Hebreus 3:11, 13; 4:1-11. Visto que Deus santificou o "dia", reservando-o para o seu propósito, esse "dia" verá este propósito para com a Terra completamente realizado em justiça. — Veja Is 55:10, 11.

Dias sabáticos e dias festivos especiais eram santificados, assim como outros períodos, tais como o ano de jubileu. — Êx 31:14; Le 23:3, 7, 8, 21, 24, 27, 35, 36; 25:10.

Santificação de Terras. Em Israel, um homem podia santificar para Deus parte da sua herança. Fazia isso por reservá-la de modo que os produtos dessa terra fossem encaminhados ao santuário, ou ele podia pagar ao santuário o valor da terra (isto é, das safras dela) segundo o cálculo do sacerdote. Se decidisse comprá-la de volta, tinha de acrescentar um quinto do valor do campo (determinado pelo número de safras até o ano do jubileu) conforme calculado pelo sacerdote. Naturalmente, o campo retornava ao seu dono no jubileu. — Le 27:16-19.

Os próximos versículos parecem tratar do proprietário que não compra de volta o campo, mas o vende a outro homem, e a lei dizia que o campo se torna neste caso propriedade permanente do santuário na época do jubileu. A respeito desta lei, em Levítico 27:20, 21, o Commentary (Comentário) de Cook diz: "[Tais palavras] podem referir-se a um caso em que um homem talvez tivesse vendido fraudulentamente sua parte num campo e se apropriasse indevidamente do dinheiro, depois de ter votado oferecê-lo ao Santuário." Ou podem referir-se ao caso em que um homem retinha o uso do campo e cumpria seu voto por algum tempo, por pagar como arrendamento anual a devida proporção do preço de redenção, mas que depois se desfazia do que era seu para obter logo algum dinheiro. Tal campo era considerado "devotado", porque ele tratou como se fosse seu aquilo que havia sido santificado para o santuário, desrespeitando sua santidade por transformá-lo em mercadoria.

O princípio talvez fosse similar à lei em Deuteronômio 22:9: "Não deves semear teu vinhedo com duas espécies de semente, para não acontecer que os plenos produtos da semente que semeares e o produto do vinhedo sejam perdidos em proveito do santuário." Essa perda resultaria da violação da lei declarada antes em Levítico 19:19.

A diferença entre coisas "santificadas" e coisas "devotadas" era que a coisa "devotada" não podia ser resgatada. (Veja PROSCRIÇÃO.) As casas eram tratadas da mesma maneira. (Le 27:14, 15) Todavia, quando um homem santificava um campo comprado que era propriedade hereditária de outro, o campo retornava no jubileu ao dono original. — Le 27:22-24.

No Casamento. O apóstolo Paulo diz ao cristão casado: "O marido incrédulo está santificado em relação à sua esposa, e a esposa incrédula está santificada em relação ao irmão; de outro modo, os vossos filhos seriam realmente impuros, mas agora são santos." Em vista da consideração de Jeová com o cristão, a relação marital dele (ou dela) com o cônjuge incrédulo não é considerada profanadora. A pureza do santificado não santifica o cônjuge como um dos santos de Deus, mas a relação deles é pura, honrosa. O cônjuge incrédulo tem uma excelente oportunidade de derivar proveito ao observar o proceder cristão do (ou da) crente e talvez se salve. (1Co 7:14-17) Por causa do 'mérito' do (ou da) crente, os filhos pequenos da união são considerados santos, sob cuidado e proteção divinos — não impuros como os filhos que não têm nem pai nem mãe crente. — Veja SANTIDADE (Santidade abençoada por Jeová).

Congregações de Revelação

PERTO do fim do primeiro século EC, o ressuscitado Jesus Cristo, de modo bem tocante, mostrou vivo interesse nos seus seguidores ungidos ainda na Terra. Como? Por fazer com que o idoso apóstolo João escrevesse cartas "às sete congregações que [estavam] no distrito da Ásia". (Re 1:1-4) Estas cartas continham mui necessários encorajamento, conselhos e alertas.

Atualmente encontram-se apenas ruínas nos lugares da maioria das cidades em que havia tais congregações. Contudo, essas fornecem evidência de que os escritos tratavam de lugares reais, com situações concretas e com pessoas que realmente viveram. De interesse ainda maior, porém, é que essas mensagens indicavam condições que existiriam num tempo futuro na congregação cristã.

Ruínas de Éfeso. Alguns cristãos nesta cidade materialista perderam o amor que no princípio tinham para com Jeová.

Reconstituição do altar de Zeus em Pérgamo. Cristãos em Pérgamo foram testados quanto a prestar adoração exclusivamente a Jeová.

Esmirna (agora chamada Izmir). Os primitivos cristãos aqui, embora lançados na prisão, foram exortados a não terem medo. Aqueles em Filadélfia (à cabeceira dum comprido vale que se estendia ao oeste até Esmirna), embora já tivessem perseverado, também foram exortados a se apegarem ao que tinham.

Tiatira (agora chamada Akhisar), colunas e arcos de uma rua ornada com colunatas. Alguns dos primitivos cristãos em Tiatira, embora participassem em obras boas, tolamente se envolveram em conduta imoral.

Sardes, ruínas do templo de Ártemis. Nem todos os cristãos aqui estavam mesmo vivos em sentido espiritual.

Laodiceia. Cristãos nesta cidade foram repreendidos por serem mornos, iguais à água que chegava à cidade através de seu aqueduto.

JERUSALÉM — antigamente centro da verdadeira adoração de Jeová Deus, mas não mais a cidade que leva o nome de Deus. Jerusalém perdeu sua posição privilegiada depois de apostatar dos ensinos da Palavra de Deus e de rejeitar o Messias, Jesus. (Lu 13:34, 35) Até hoje, porém, Jerusalém é de vivo interesse para os que amam a Bíblia, por causa dos eventos de importância universal que ocorreram ali.

A vista aérea da cidade, desde o sul (tal como a apresentada nesta página), mostra os aspectos de Jerusalém na sua relação entre si. O monte Moriá, onde se encontrava o templo, está em segundo plano. Em primeiro plano está o monte Sião, confinado pelo vale da torrente do Cédron ao leste e pelo vale de Tiropeom ao oeste. A Cidade de Davi foi construída no monte Sião.

Quando se está de pé no Monte das Oliveiras, ao leste de Jerusalém, pode-se olhar por cima do vale do Cédron para o lugar onde antes se encontrava o templo. Agora é dominado por um santuário muçulmano conhecido como o Zimbório da Rocha. Jesus "estava sentado no Monte das Oliveiras, com o templo à vista", quando proferiu a sua famosa profecia sobre a "terminação do sistema de coisas". — Mr 13:3; Mt 24:3.

O lugar do templo conforme visto do Monte das Oliveiras. No primeiro plano estão as sepulturas de judeus que acreditavam que algum dia apareceria aqui o Messias.

A maquete Holyland, em Jerusalém, é um modelo do que muitos acreditam representar o aspecto da Jerusalém do primeiro século.

O Túmulo do Jardim (à direita) e a Igreja do Santo Sepulcro (embaixo, na parte de dentro há sepulturas do primeiro século). Cada um deles é reivindicado por alguns como local do sepultamento de Jesus.

Portão de Damasco, em Jerusalém.

Rua na parte antiga de Jerusalém.

O reservatório de Siloé, alimentado pela fonte de Giom através do Túnel de Ezequias.

O Vale de Hinom, situado ao sul e ao sudoeste da antiga Jerusalém, era chamado de Geena no primeiro século.

Reservatório de Siloé do primeiro século, onde Jesus disse a um homem cego para se lavar e ser curado. (Jo 9:7)

Lugar tradicional do jardim de Getsêmani.

Betânia, no seu aspecto atual.

Galeria de Warren, através da qual talvez se pudesse retirar com baldes a água da fonte de Giom. Pode ter sido por uma galeria assim que os homens de Davi obtiveram acesso à fortaleza jebuseia em Sião. (2Sa 5:8)

Escavações arqueológicas no lado setentrional da antiga Cidade de Davi.

Muro ocidental de Jerusalém, incluindo pedras maciças do primeiro século. Muitos judeus vêm aqui orar.

A Vida Cotidiana no Antigo Israel

COMO era a vida cotidiana lá nos tempos bíblicos? Que espécie de lar tinham as pessoas comuns? Que tipos de trabalho faziam? Quais eram seus costumes? Ter algum conhecimento sobre isso pode ajudá-lo a visualizar os relatos bíblicos. Ocasionalmente, tal informação de fundo é também a chave para se entender o sentido de textos bíblicos.

A maioria das casas, tais como esta, em Jerusalém, tinham terraço em que se podia receber pessoas, andar na noitinha fresca ou mesmo dormir. (Lu 17:31)

Forno caseiro, do tipo que era comum entre os israelitas. (Le 26:26)

Lâmpadas antigas, de cerâmica, em que se queimava óleo. (Mt 25:1-4)

Homens e mulheres hebreus costumavam carregar objetos no ombro. (Gên 24:15; Núm 7:9)

Vasilhas eram de muitos tamanhos e formas, usualmente de cerâmica, às vezes eram de pedra. (1Rs 17:12)

Nos tempos bíblicos, os grãos eram colhidos à mão (esquerda), debulhados com cascos de animais ou com um trenó debulhador a fim de separar o grão e a pragana (abaixo à esquerda) e joeirada (abaixo), o que envolvia jogar os grãos para o alto para que o vento levasse embora as cascas dos grãos.

Uma mó provavelmente usada para triturar olivas, para se extrair o azeite. (Núm 18:27)

Mó manual, usada para moer os grãos para fazer farinha. (Mt 24:41)

O pastoreio era uma ocupação comum nos tempos bíblicos. (Lu 15:4)

Jumentos, ou burros, eram frequentemente usados como animais de carga. (1Cr 12:40)

Os poços eram, e ainda são, uma fonte usual de água nesta terra. (Gên 29:10)

Usando uma vívida ilustração, Jesus disse que seria mais fácil para um camelo passar pelo orifício duma agulha, do que para um rico entrar no Reino. (Lu 18:25)

Cabritos, ou bodes, foram usados para ilustrar qualidades indesejáveis e pessoas iníquas (Za 10:3; Mt 25:33), mas bodes oferecidos em sacrifício também foram usados para prefigurar o sacrifício de Cristo. (He 9:12)

As gazelas foram usadas como símbolos de beleza (Cân 2:9) e de velocidade. (1Cr 12:8)

O jumento selvagem evita os lugares habitados por humanos. Foi entre tais criaturas que Nabucodonosor viveu durante os seus sete anos de loucura. (Da 5:21)

SANTÍSSIMO. Compartimento mais recôndito do tabernáculo, e, mais tarde, do templo; também chamado de o Santo de Santos. (Êx 26:33, n; 1Rs 6:16) Este compartimento do tabernáculo aparentemente era cúbico, cada uma das suas três dimensões sendo de dez côvados (4,5 m); as dimensões do Santíssimo do templo construído por Salomão eram duas vezes maiores do que as do tabernáculo, de modo que seu volume era oito vezes maior. — Êx 26:15, 16, 18, 22, 23; 1Rs 6:16, 17, 20; 2Cr 3:8.

O sumo sacerdote só entrava no Santíssimo no anual Dia da Expiação; nunca podia outra pessoa passar através da cortina suspensa entre este compartimento e o Lugar Santo. (Le 16:2) No Santíssimo, o sumo sacerdote estava cercado por coloridos querubins bordados na cobertura interna do tabernáculo e na cortina. (Êx 26:1, 31, 33) No templo de Salomão, as paredes e o teto eram de cedro recoberto de ouro, e havia entalhadas nas paredes figuras de querubins, palmeiras, ornamentos em forma de bagas e flores. — 1Rs 6:16-18, 29; 2Cr 3:7, 8.

As Escrituras mencionam três entradas do sumo sacerdote no Santíssimo, no Dia da Expiação: a primeira, com o incensário de ouro, de incenso perfumado, alimentado por brasas tiradas do altar; a segunda, com o sangue do novilho, a oferta pelo pecado a favor da tribo sacerdotal; e, finalmente, com o sangue do bode, que era a oferta do pecado a favor do povo. (Le 16:11-15; He 9:6, 7, 25) Ele espargia o sangue dos animais no chão diante da Arca dourada do Pacto, em cuja cobertura havia querubins de ouro e acima dela a presença de Jeová simbolizada por meio duma nuvem. (Êx 25:17-22; Le 16:2, 14, 15) Esta nuvem, evidentemente, brilhava como uma luz forte, sendo a única luz neste compartimento do tabernáculo, pois não tinha candelabro.

Enquanto o tabernáculo estava no ermo, havia acima do Santíssimo uma nuvem de dia e uma coluna de fogo de noite, visíveis em todo o acampamento de Israel. — Êx 13:22; 40:38; Núm 9:15; compare isso com Sal 80:1.

Não Havia Arca nos Templos Posteriores. Exatamente quando e em que circunstâncias a Arca do Pacto desapareceu não é conhecido. Parece que os babilônios não a capturaram quando saquearam e destruíram o templo em 607 AEC, porque a Arca não se acha alistada entre os objetos do templo levados embora. (2Rs 25:13-17; Esd 1:7-11) No segundo templo, construído por Zorobabel, e no templo mais suntuoso de Herodes, não havia Arca no Santíssimo. Por ocasião da morte de Jesus, Deus expressou sua ira por fazer com que a cortina grossa e pesada que separava o Santo do Santíssimo se rasgasse em dois, de alto a baixo. Os sacerdotes que realizavam seu serviço no Santo podiam então olhar dentro do Santíssimo e ficar impressionados com o fato de que este compartimento não continha a Arca representativa da presença de Deus com eles. Esta ação por parte de Deus confirmou que os sacrifícios de expiação, oferecidos pelo sumo sacerdote judeu, não tinham então mais nenhum valor e que não havia mais necessidade dos serviços do sacerdócio levítico. — Mt 27:51; 23:38; He 9:1-15.

Uso Simbólico. O compartimento do Santíssimo na tenda de reunião, ou tabernáculo, continha a Arca do Pacto; a tampa desta Arca, encimada por dois querubins de ouro, representava o trono de Deus. De modo que se usava o Santíssimo, de forma figurativa, para representar a moradia de Jeová Deus, o próprio céu. A inspirada carta enviada aos hebreus fornece-nos esta interpretação do assunto ao comparar a entrada do sumo sacerdote de Israel no Santíssimo, num único dia por ano, no Dia da Expiação, à entrada do grande Sumo Sacerdote, Jesus Cristo, no que o Santíssimo simbolizava, uma vez para sempre, com o seu sacrifício pelos pecados. Explica: "No segundo compartimento [o Santíssimo], só o sumo sacerdote entra, uma vez por ano, não sem sangue, que ele oferece por si mesmo e pelos pecados de ignorância do povo. . . . Esta mesma tenda é uma ilustração para o tempo designado que agora chegou . . . No entanto, quando Cristo veio como sumo sacerdote das boas coisas que se realizaram por intermédio da tenda maior e mais perfeita, não feita por mãos, isto é, não desta criação, ele entrou no lugar santo, não, não com o sangue de bodes e de novilhos, mas com o seu próprio sangue, de uma vez para sempre, e obteve para nós um livramento eterno. Por isso era necessário que as representações típicas das coisas nos céus fossem purificadas por estes meios [o sangue dos sacrifícios de animais espargido sobre elas], mas, as próprias coisas celestiais, com sacrifícios melhores do que tais sacrifícios. Porque Cristo entrou, não num lugar santo feito por mãos, que é uma cópia da realidade, mas no próprio céu, para aparecer agora por nós perante a pessoa de Deus." — He 9:7-12, 23, 24.

De forma que Jesus Cristo, como o grande Sumo Sacerdote à maneira de Melquisedeque, cumpriu o que o sumo sacerdote de Israel, da linhagem de Arão, podia fazer apenas de modo típico ao entrar no Santíssimo terrestre. (He 9:24) Os irmãos espirituais de Cristo, co-herdeiros dele, são fortalecidos pelas palavras da mesma carta aos hebreus, para que "nós, os que fugimos para o refúgio, tenhamos forte encorajamento para nos apegar à esperança que se nos apresenta. Temos esta esperança como âncora para a alma, tanto segura como firme, e ela penetra até o interior da cortina, onde um precursor entrou a nosso favor, Jesus, que se tornou sumo sacerdote para sempre à maneira de Melquisedeque." — He 6:18-20.

Novamente, Paulo incentivou esses cristãos a se sentirem plenamente à vontade e confiantes para se chegar a Deus, e a se apegarem à sua esperança sem vacilação, usando as seguintes palavras: "Portanto, irmãos, visto que temos denodo para com o caminho de entrada no lugar santo, pelo sangue de Jesus, que ele inaugurou para nós como caminho novo e vivente através da cortina, isto é, sua carne, e, visto que temos um grande sacerdote sobre a casa de Deus, aproximemo-nos com corações sinceros na plena certeza da fé, tendo os nossos corações aspergidos eximindo duma consciência iníqua e os nossos corpos banhados com água limpa. Apeguemo-nos à declaração pública da nossa esperança, sem vacilação, pois aquele que prometeu é fiel." — He 10:19-23.

SANTOS. Aqueles que são puros, especialmente em sentido espiritual ou moral; o termo denota também pessoas separadas para o serviço de Deus, no céu ou na Terra.

O próprio Jeová, supremo em pureza e em justiça, é o Santíssimo. (Os 11:12) Ele é frequentemente chamado de "o Santo de Israel". (2Rs 19:22; Sal 71:22; 89:18) O apóstolo João diz aos comembros da congregação cristã: "Vós tendes uma unção do santo." (1Jo 2:20) Jesus Cristo é chamado de "aquele santo e justo", mencionado em Atos 3:14. Os anjos de Jeová no céu são santos, plenamente devotados ao serviço de Deus, puros e justos. — Lu 9:26; At 10:22.

Nos Tempos Antigos. Humanos na Terra, separados para o serviço de Deus, também têm sido chamados de "santos". (Sal 34:9) Israel, introduzido numa relação pactual com Deus, tornou-se sua propriedade especial, e, como nação, era santo para ele. Este é o motivo por que alguns daquela nação, que praticavam impureza ou transgressões, causavam aviltamento e traziam o desfavor de Jeová sobre a nação, a menos que se tomasse ação para eliminá-los. O ganancioso e desobediente Acã é um caso desses; seu pecado trouxe aflição a Israel, até ele ser descoberto e apedrejado para morrer. — Jos 7.

Arão, ungido com santo óleo de unção como sumo sacerdote da nação, era santo em sentido especial, intensificado. (Sal 106:16) Concordemente, os requisitos do seu cargo eram bem exigentes. (Le 21:1-15; note também os fatores desqualificantes para todos os sacerdotes nos versículos 16-23 ; veja SUMO SACERDOTE.) Um pecado por parte do sumo sacerdote (por exemplo, um erro de critério num assunto) podia trazer culpa sobre o povo e tinha de ser expiado pelo sacrifício de um novilho, o mesmo sacrifício que se exigia por um engano da parte da assembleia inteira. — Le 4:3, 13, 14.

Santos Cristãos. Aqueles que são introduzidos numa relação com Deus por meio do novo pacto são santificados, purificados e separados para o serviço exclusivo de Deus pelo "sangue do pacto", o sangue derramado de Jesus Cristo. (He 10:29; 13:20) São assim constituídos "santos". Por conseguinte, não se tornam "santos" pelo decreto dum homem ou duma organização, mas por Deus, o qual os introduz numa relação pactuada consigo por meio do sangue de Jesus Cristo. O termo "santos" aplica-se a todos os assim trazidos à união e co-herança com Cristo, não apenas a uns poucos considerados como tendo santidade excepcional. Na Bíblia é também aplicado a eles desde o início de seu proceder santificado na Terra, não sendo postergado até depois da sua morte. Pedro diz que eles têm de ser santos porque Deus é santo. (1Pe 1:15, 16; Le 11:44) Todos os irmãos espirituais de Cristo, nas congregações, são frequentemente chamados de "santos". — At 9:13; 26:10; Ro 1:7; 12:13; 2Co 1:1; 13:13.

A congregação inteira, como "esposa" de Cristo, é representada usando linho fino, resplandecente e puro, o qual representa "os atos justos dos santos". (Re 19:7, 8) A simbólica "fera" política de Satanás, o Diabo, é observada em visão travando guerra contra tais enquanto estão na Terra. (Re 13:3, 7) Assim se prova severamente a perseverança dos santos, mas eles se saem vencedores por observarem os mandamentos de Deus e a fé que é de Jesus. — Re 13:10; 14:12.

Sua esperança. Numa visão paralela, Daniel observou uma fera travando guerra com os santos de Deus; a isto seguiu-se uma cena de tribunal, em que "o Antigo de Dias" proferiu julgamento a favor dos santos e foi-lhes dado um Reino de duração indefinida, "o reino, e o domínio, e a grandiosidade dos reinos debaixo de todos os céus". — Da 7:21, 22, 27.

Estes "santos" não exercem autoridade régia enquanto na Terra, mas têm de esperar serem unidos com Cristo nos céus. (Ef 1:18-21) Primeiro têm de ser 'vencedores'. (Re 3:21; compare isso com Re 2:26, 27; 3:5, 12.) Hão de atuar como sacerdotes e reinar com Cristo durante o seu Reinado Milenar.

(Re 20:4, 6) O apóstolo Paulo declara que os santos julgarão o mundo, bem como os anjos, evidentemente participando na execução do julgamento nos iníquos. — 1Co 6:2, 3; Re 2:26, 27.

Ataque ao "Acampamento dos Santos". Em Revelação (Apocalipse) 20:7-9 prediz-se que Satanás, o Diabo, liderará as nações numa guerra contra "o acampamento dos santos e a cidade amada", após o fim dos mil anos do reinado de Cristo. Evidentemente, a profecia se refere a uma rebelião terrestre contra a soberania do reino de Deus sobre a terra, o que constitui um ataque contra os "santos". Neste contexto, estes evidentemente são os restabelecidos da humanidade, que mantiveram sua integridade para com Deus e seu Rei messiânico. — Veja SANTIDADE.

SANTUÁRIO. Lugar reservado para a adoração de Deus ou de deuses, um lugar santo; uma habitação divina. (1Cr 22:19; Is 16:12; Ez 28:18; Am 7:9, 13) Um "santuário" não necessariamente precisa ser uma construção especial, porque aquele em Siquém, mencionado em Josué 24:25, 26, talvez fosse simplesmente o lugar em que Abraão séculos antes erigira um altar. (Gên 12:6, 7) Todavia, com frequência, a expressão "santuário" refere-se ou ao tabernáculo (Êx 25:8, 9) ou ao templo em Jerusalém. (1Cr 28:10; 2Cr 36:17; Ez 24:21) Aplicado ao tabernáculo, o termo "santuário" pode referir-se à tenda inteira e ao seu pátio (Êx 25:8, 9; Le 21:12, 23), à mobília e aos utensílios do santuário (Núm 10:21; veja Núm 3:30, 31), ou pode referir-se ao Santíssimo (Le 16:16, 17, 20, 33).

Sendo um lugar santo, o santuário de Deus tinha de ser mantido livre de aviltamento. (Núm 19:20; Ez 5:11) Por isso, os israelitas deviam "ter espanto reverente" daquele lugar especial em que Deus morava de forma representativa. (Le 19:30; 26:2) Quando eles foram retirados da Terra da Promessa e levados ao exílio, eles não mais possuíam um santuário material. Mas, Jeová prometeu que ele mesmo como que se tornaria "um santuário" para eles. — Ez 11:16.

O termo grego na·ós é usado em sentido amplo para representar todo o conjunto do templo (Jo 2:20) ou o edifício central, com seus compartimentos do Santo e do Santíssimo, separados pela cortina. (Mt 27:51) Por exemplo, quando Zacarias entrou "no santuário" para oferecer incenso, ele entrou no Santo, porque era ali que se encontrava o altar de incenso. — Lu 1:9-11.

A morada de Deus nos céus é um santuário, ou lugar santo. É evidentemente neste santuário celestial que o apóstolo João observou em visão a Arca do Pacto após o toque da 'sétima trombeta'. (Re 11:15, 19) Depois, ele viu anjos emergindo deste santuário, e, relacionado com o derramamento das "sete tigelas" da ira de Deus, ouviu uma "voz alta" emanar dele. — Re 14:15, 17; 15:5, 6, 8; 16:1, 17.

Disse-se ao apóstolo João numa visão a respeito do pátio terrestre do grande templo espiritual de Deus: "Levanta-te e mede o santuário do templo de Deus e o altar, e os que nele adoram. Mas, quanto ao pátio que está de fora do santuário do templo, lança-o completamente fora e não o meças, porque foi dado às nações, e elas pisarão a cidade santa por quarenta e dois meses." (Re 11:1, 2) O templo mencionado aqui não pode ser o de Jerusalém, porque aquele edifício fora destruído quase três décadas antes. Às nações, por serem terrestres, só se podia 'dar' um pátio igualmente na terra. De modo que este deve representar uma condição usufruída pelos seguidores ungidos de Jesus enquanto aqui na terra. Ao passo que seria impossível para as nações pisarem um lugar nos céus, podiam tratar vergonhosamente aqueles que foram gerados pelo espírito de Deus para ser Seus filhos e que eram candidatos a receber uma herança celestial junto com Cristo. (Re 3:12) De modo similar, a profecia de Daniel a respeito de se deitar abaixo "o lugar estabelecido do seu santuário" (Da 8:11) e da profanação do santuário (Da 11:31) parece indicar eventos relacionados com os que servem quais subsacerdotes no grande templo espiritual de Deus.

Os membros da congregação cristã, o corpo de Cristo, constituem um templo, ou santuário, em que Deus habita por espírito. — 1Co 3:17; Ef 2:21, 22; 1Pe 2:5, 9; veja TEMPLO (Cristãos Ungidos — Templo Espiritual).

SAQUIA. Cabeça duma casa paterna da tribo de Benjamim; filho de Saraim com sua esposa Hodes. — 1Cr 8:1, 8-10.

SARA [Princesa], SARAI [possivelmente: Contenciosa]. Meia-irmã e esposa de Abraão e mãe de Isaque. (Gên 11:29; 20:12; Is 51:2) Seu nome original era Sarai. (Gên 17:15) Era dez anos mais moça do que Abraão (Gên 17:17) e casou-se com ele enquanto moravam na cidade caldeia de Ur. (Gên 11:28, 29) Continuou estéril até que sua faculdade reprodutiva foi milagrosamente reativada depois de já lhe ter cessado a menstruação. — Gên 18:11; Ro 4:19; He 11:11.

Sara talvez tivesse seus 60 e poucos anos quando partiu de Ur com Abraão e passou a morar em Harã. À idade de 65 anos, acompanhou o marido de Harã à terra de Canaã. (Gên 12:4, 5) Passaram ali algum tempo em Siquém e na região montanhosa ao L de Betel, bem como em vários outros lugares, antes de uma fome os obrigar a ir ao Egito. — Gên 12:6-10.

Embora avançada em anos, Sara era muito bela. Por isso, Abraão anteriormente já solicitara que, quando necessário no decorrer das suas viagens, Sara o identificasse como seu irmão, para que outros não o matassem e depois a tomassem. (Gên 20:13) No Egito, isto resultou em Sara ser levada para a casa de Faraó, à recomendação dos príncipes dele. Mas a intervenção divina impediu que Faraó a violentasse. Ele devolveu depois Sara a Abraão, pedindo que deixassem o país. Providenciou também salvo-conduto para Abraão e seus bens. — Gên 12:11-20.

É digno de nota que um antigo papiro fala de um Faraó que comissionou homens armados a se apoderarem duma mulher atraente e a matarem o marido dela. De modo que o temor de Abraão, de poder ser morto por causa de Sara, não era infundado. Em vez de pôr em perigo sua vida numa tentativa malsucedida de salvar a honra da sua esposa numa terra estrangeira, Abraão adotou o que lhe parecia ser o proceder mais seguro. Deve ser lembrado que Abraão era o dono da sua esposa. Sara tinha prazer em servir a Jeová e a Abraão deste modo. Em parte alguma censuram as Escrituras a Abraão por fazer isso.

Dez anos depois de originalmente terem entrado em Canaã, Sara, de 75 anos, pediu que Abraão tivesse relações sexuais com sua serva egípcia, Agar, a fim de ter filhos por meio dela. (Gên 16:1-3) As dificuldades resultantes tornaram evidente que este não era o modo de Jeová cumprir a promessa anteriormente feita a Abraão a respeito do "descendente [lit.: semente]". (Gên 15:1-16) Quando Agar se apercebeu de que estava grávida, começou a desprezar sua senhora. Quando Sara se queixou disso, Abraão concedeu à esposa plena autoridade para lidar com Agar como serva dela. Humilhada por Sara, Agar fugiu da sua senhora, mas retornou em obediência à orientação divina, dando depois à luz Ismael. — Gên 16:4-16.

Cerca de 13 anos após o nascimento de Ismael, na ocasião em que se ordenou divinamente que Abraão circuncidasse todos os varões da sua casa, mandou-se-lhe também que não chamasse mais a esposa pelo nome de "Sarai", mas de "Sara", que significa "Princesa". Deus disse a respeito de Sara: "Vou abençoá-la e também dar-te dela um filho; e vou abençoá-la e ela se tornará nações; reis de povos procederão dela." (Gên 17:9-27) Pouco depois, em Manre, um dos três visitantes angélicos reafirmou que Sara daria à luz um filho. Ouvindo isso por acaso, "Sara começou a rir-se no íntimo, dizendo: 'Depois de esgotada, terei realmente prazer, sendo velho também meu senhor?'" Repreendida por ter rido, Sara temerosamente negou que o tivesse feito. (Gên 18:1-15; Ro 9:9) Visto que Sara é citada em Hebreus 11:11 como exemplo de fé, seu riso evidentemente não era uma expressão de total descrença, mas apenas indicava que a ideia de ter um filho na sua idade avançada pelo visto lhe parecia um tanto cômica. Reconhecer Sara a Abraão (no íntimo) como seu senhor indicava sua obediência e sujeição ao seu cabeça marital, e o exemplo dela é recomendado às esposas cristãs — 1Pe 3:5, 6.

Sara e seu marido passaram a morar em Gerar. Como anteriormente, Abraão chamava a esposa de irmã. O rei de Gerar, Abimeleque, então tomou Sara. Novamente, a intervenção de Jeová salvou-a de ser violentada. Ao devolver Sara a Abraão, Abimeleque deu a Abraão gado, e servos e servas, talvez em compensação por tê-lo privado temporariamente da esposa. Além disso, ele deu a Abraão mil peças de prata (c. US$ 2.200). Estas peças de prata deviam servir como evidência de que Sara estava isenta de todo o vitupério, sendo uma mulher honrada. — Gên 20.

À idade de 90 anos, Sara teve a alegria de dar à luz Isaque. Ela exclamou então: "Deus me preparou riso: todo aquele que ouvir isso há de rir de mim." Este riso evidentemente seria provocado pelo prazer e espanto com o nascimento do filho. Sara amamentou seu filho por uns cinco anos. Quando Isaque finalmente foi desmamado, Abraão preparou um grande banquete. Nesta ocasião, Sara observou o filho de Agar, Ismael, que então tinha cerca de 19 anos, 'fazer caçoadas' ou brincar com Isaque de modo zombeteiro. Aparentemente, por temer pelo futuro do seu filho Isaque, Sara pediu que Abraão despedisse Agar e Ismael. Abraão fez isso, depois de ter recebido aprovação divina para esta ação. — Gên 21:1-14.

Cerca de 32 anos mais tarde, Sara morreu, à idade de 127 anos, e Abraão a sepultou "na caverna do campo de Macpela". — Gên 23:1, 19, 20.

Figura num Drama Simbólico. O apóstolo Paulo, escrevendo aos gálatas, mostrou que Sara, esposa de Abraão, representava "a Jerusalém de cima", a mãe dos cristãos gerados pelo espírito, a 'semente' espiritual de Abraão. Igual a Sara, "a Jerusalém de cima", a mulher simbólica de Deus, nunca esteve em escravidão, e, portanto, os filhos dela também são livres. Para alguém se tornar filho livre da "Jerusalém de cima", "com a liberdade dela", ele tem de ser livrado da servidão ao pecado pelo Filho de Deus. (Gál 4:22-31; 5:1 n) Conforme Cristo Jesus disse aos descendentes naturais de Abraão: "Digo-vos em toda a verdade: Todo prati-cante do pecado é escravo do pecado. Ainda mais, o escravo não permanece para sempre na família; o filho permanece para sempre. Portanto, se o Filho vos libertar, sereis realmente livres." — Jo 8:34-36; veja AGAR; LIVRE, MULHER.

SARAFE [duma raiz que significa "queimar"]. Descendente de Selá, da tribo de Judá, que tomou para si uma esposa (ou esposas) moabita(s). (BLH, NM) Segundo versões alternativas, Sarafe talvez dominasse sobre (ou em) Moabe. — 1Cr 4:21, 22 Al, ALA, BMD, CBC, IBB, LEB, MC, PIB.

SARAI. Um daqueles filhos de Binui que, após o exílio, despediram suas esposas estrangeiras. — Esd 10:38, 40, 44.

Veja SARA, SARAI.

SARAIM [[Nascido de] Madrugada]. Benjamita que morou por um tempo em Moabe e cujas três esposas mencionadas por nome lhe deram muitos filhos, alguns dos quais se tornaram cabeças de família. — 1Cr 8:8-11.

SARAIVA. Forma de precipitação atmosférica que consiste em pedras de gelo, ou granizo. As referências bíblicas à natureza destrutiva da saraiva são confirmadas por aquilo que tem acontecido em diferentes partes da terra em anos mais recentes. Em 1985, uma saraivada no Brasil matou mais de 20 pessoas e feriu outras 300. Fortes temporais podem gerar pedras de saraiva do tamanho de um ovo ou mesmo de uma toranja. Uma pedra de saraiva excepcionalmente grande, apanhada depois dum temporal em Kansas (EUA), em 3 de setembro de 1970, tinha o diâmetro de uns 15 cm. As pedras grandes caem com uma velocidade de cerca de 160 km/h. A saraiva é especialmente prejudicial para as plantações, e uma única saraivada pode às vezes causar danos no valor de milhões de dólares.

Usada por Jeová. A saraiva é uma das forças que Jeová às vezes tem usado para cumprir a sua palavra e para demonstrar o seu grande poder. (Sal 148:1, 8; Is 30:30) O primeiro caso registrado disso foi a sétima praga sobre o antigo Egito, uma saraivada destrutiva que arruinou a vegetação, destroçou árvores, e matou tanto homens como animais no campo, mas não afetou os israelitas em Gósen. (Êx 9:18-26; Sal 78:47, 48; 105:32, 33) Mais tarde, na Terra da Promessa, quando os israelitas, sob Josué, foram ajudar os gibeonitas, ameaçados por uma aliança de cinco reis dos amorreus, Jeová usou grandes pedras de saraiva contra os amorreus atacantes. Nesta ocasião morreram mais por causa das pedras de saraiva do que na batalha com Israel. — Jos 10:3-7, 11.

Simbólica. No entanto, Jeová não poupou o Israel infiel à saraiva devastadora. (Ag 2:17) Além disso, por meio do seu profeta Isaías, ele predisse a derrubada do reino de dez tribos pelos assírios, comparando as forças conquistadoras assírias a um "temporal trovejante de saraiva". (Is 28:1, 2) De modo similar, os babilônios, iguais à saraiva, haviam de "arrasar o refúgio da mentira" de Judá, isto é, a aliança de Judá com o Egito por ajuda militar. — Is 28:14, 17; 31:1-3.

No livro de Revelação (Apocalipse), faz-se referência à saraiva junto com o toque de trombeta do primeiro dos sete anjos, e relacionado com a abertura do santuário do templo celestial de Deus. (Re 8:2, 7; 11:19) Daí, ao ser derramada a sétima tigela da ira de Deus, simbólicas pedras de saraiva de cerca de um talento (20,4 kg) caem sobre homens iníquos. — Re 16:1, 17, 21.

'Para o dia de guerra.' Falando a Jó de dentro do vendaval, Jeová indicou que ele reservara depósitos de saraiva "para o dia de peleja e de guerra". (Jó 38:1, 22, 23) Apropriadamente, pois, a saraiva é mencionada entre os elementos a serem usados contra as forças atacantes de "Gogue". — Ez 38:18, 22.

SARAR. Pai hararita de Aião, guerreiro de Davi. (2Sa 23:33) Ele é chamado Sacar em 1 Crônicas 11:35.

SARÇA. A sarça é uma planta de caule lenhoso que é espinhoso ou aculeolado, e o nome pode referir-se a diversas plantas deste tipo. Alguns peritos identificam o termo hebraico bar·qaním (sarças) com o chamado pelo nome cognato em árabe, a Centaurea scoparia, uma planta comum do tipo do cardo com capítulos espinhosos. Gideão usou bar·qaním ao punir os homens de Sucote por se negarem a suprir pão aos seus soldados famintos durante a sua luta com os midianitas. — Jz 8:6, 7, 16.

A palavra hebraica hhé·dheq (sarça) tem sido identificada com Solanum coagulans, um tipo de erva-moura, um espinheiro. (Thesaurus of the Language of the Bible [Tesouro da Linguagem da Bíblia], editado em parte por M. Z. Kaddari, Jerusalém, 1968, Vol. 3, p. 88) Usando o termo hhé·dheq, Provérbios 15:19 compara o caminho do preguiçoso a uma sebe de sarça, evidentemente no sentido de ele prever ou imaginar dificuldades e problemas espinhosos em todo empreendimento possível, e nesta base eximir-se de prosseguir. A decadência moral da nação de Israel induziu o profeta Miqueias a dizer a respeito do povo que "o melhor deles é como a sarça [hebr.: kehhé·dheq], o mais reto deles é pior do que uma sebe de espinhos", evidentemente querendo dizer que mesmo o melhor dos israelitas era tão prejudicial para os que tinham tratos com ele como uma sebe de sarça ou de espinhos para quem se aproximasse demais dele. — Miq 7:4.

SARDES. Antiga capital da Lídia (na Ásia Menor ocidental) e centro da adoração duma deusa asiática relacionada com Ártemis ou com Cibele. Situada ao S do rio Gediz (anteriormente Hermo), Sardes ficava a uns 50 km ao S de Tiatira (agora Akhisar) e a uns 75 km ao L de Esmirna (agora Izmir). A acrópole da cidade ocupava um penhasco quase que inacessível. Embora uma cadeia montanhosa limitasse as comunicações com as regiões ao S, Sardes dominava a rota comercial L-O. Suas atividades e intercâmbio comerciais, a grande fertilidade das terras circunvizinhas, e a manufatura de tecidos e tapetes de lã contribuíram muito para tornar Sardes abastada e importante. Em certa época, Sardes pode ter tido uma população de uns 50.000 habitantes.

No sexto século AEC, Ciro, o Grande, derrotou o último rei lídio, Creso, e, durante mais de 200 anos depois disso, Sardes serviu de capital para a parte ocidental do Império Persa. Em 334 AEC, a cidade rendeu-se sem resistência a Alexandre, o Grande. Mais tarde passou a ficar sob o domínio de Pérgamo e depois de Roma. Um grande terremoto quase que nivelou Sardes em 17 EC, mas a cidade foi reconstruída com uma generosa ajuda de Roma.

O historiador judeu Josefo indica que, no primeiro século AEC, havia uma grande comunidade judaica em Sardes. (Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], XIV, 259 [x, 24]) Já na parte final do primeiro século EC, a congregação cristã estabelecida em Sardes precisava 'despertar' espiritualmente. Todavia, com esta congregação associavam-se também aqueles que "não poluíram as suas roupas exteriores". — Re 3:1-6.

Ruínas de destaque no antigo lugar de Sardes incluem os do templo da Ártemis (ou Cibele) efésia, de um teatro e de um estádio romanos, e de uma antiga sinagoga. — FOTO, Vol. 2, p. 946.

SÁRDIO. Variedade translúcida, castanho-avermelhada, de calcedônia, mineral empregado como pedra preciosa. Segundo Plínio, o Velho, recebeu o nome da cidade de Sardes, na Lídia, onde foi inicialmente apresentada naquela parte do mundo. Entretanto, tem-se sugerido que o nome se originou da palavra persa sered, que significa "vermelho-amarelado", e atribuído à pedra desde a sua origem na Pérsia. Sárdio também tem sido chamado por outros nomes similares. Sua beleza, sua dureza, a facilidade com que aceita gravação e pode receber grande polimento o tornaram muito popular entre os artesãos. Os hebreus possivelmente obtiveram suas pedras de sárdio da península Arábica.

O sárdio é mencionado em Revelação (Apocalipse) 4:3, onde O sentado no seu esplendoroso trono celestial "é, em aparência, semelhante . . . a uma pedra preciosa de cor vermelha ["um sárdio", n]". "A cidade santa, Nova Jerusalém", é descrita como tendo uma muralha com alicerces "adornados com toda sorte de pedra preciosa", das quais a sexta era o sárdio. — Re 21:2, 19, 20.

SARDÔNICA. Veja SARDÔNIO.

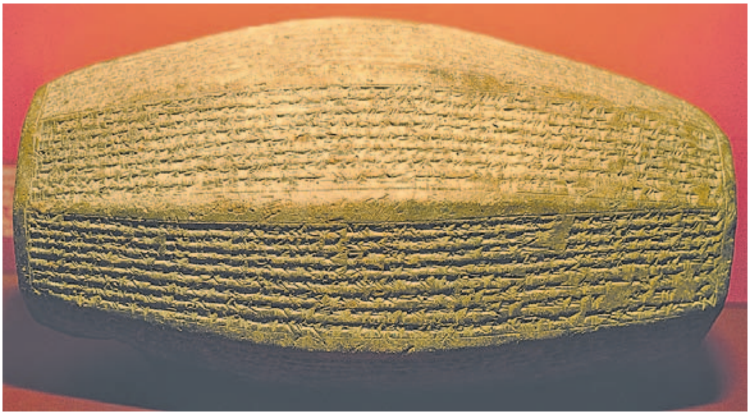
SARDÔNIO. Pedra ornamental que é uma variedade de ágata, uma espécie de calcedônia. É um ônix composto de duas ou mais camadas de calcedônia branco-leitosa e de transparente sárdio vermelho. Todavia, a camada contrastante é às vezes dourada ou castanha. A camada vermelha que transparece através do branco tinha para os gregos um aspecto bem semelhante à cor da unha, que é provavelmente o motivo de eles chamarem a pedra pela palavra grega ó·nyx (que significa "unha"). O sardônio é encontrado em diversos lugares, inclusive na Palestina e na Arábia.

A pedra é mencionada uma vez na Bíblia, em Revelação (Apocalipse) 21:2, 19, 20, onde a quinta pedra de alicerce da "cidade santa, Nova Jerusalém", é uma pedra de sardônio.

SAREFÁ [possivelmente duma raiz que significa "refinar"]. Cidade fenícia, 'pertencente a', ou, pelo visto, dependente de Sídon, nos dias de Elias. Em Sarefá uma viúva pobre se mostrou hospitaleira para com o profeta, conservando-se milagrosamente a farinha e o azeite dela durante uma grande fome, e cujo filho, depois, Elias, no poder de Deus, ressuscitou da morte. (1Rs 17:8-24; Lu 4:25, 26) A cidade posteriormente marcava uma extremidade do anterior território cananeu, de que se predisse que se tornaria propriedade de exilados israelitas. (Ob 20) O nome é preservado em Sarafand, a uns 13 km ao SSO de Sídon, embora o lugar antigo talvez ficasse a pouca distância dali na costa do Mediterrâneo.

SAREZER.

1. Filho do rei assírio Senaqueribe. Algum tempo depois de seu pai ter sido derrotado por Jeová, Sarezer e seu irmão Adrameleque mataram o pai à espada, enquanto ele se curvava diante do seu deus-ídolo, e fugiram depois para a terra de Ararate. (2Rs 19:7, 35-37; Is 37:38) Seu irmão Esar-Hadom, sucessor de Senaqueribe, afirma numa inscrição ter perseguido os assassinos do pai. — Veja ESAR-HADOM.



Prisma de Nimrud, que alardeia as conquistas de Sargão; mas, algumas destas conquistas na realidade podem ter sido feitas pelo seu predecessor.

2. Primeiro mencionado de dois representantes da pós-exílica Betel, enviados cerca de dois anos antes de se completar a reconstrução do templo para "abrandar a face de Jeová" e para indagar se era correto jejuar. — Za 7:1-3; Esd 6:15.

SARGÃO [do acadiano, significando "O Rei É Legítimo"]. Sucessor de Salmaneser V como rei da Assíria. Os historiadores o chamam de Sargão II. Um rei anterior, não da Assíria, mas de Babilônia, é chamado de Sargão I.

Sargão é mencionado apenas uma vez por nome no registro bíblico. (Is 20:1) No começo dos anos 1800, a referência bíblica a ele foi muitas vezes rejeitada pelos críticos como sem valor histórico. Todavia, a partir de 1843, escavações arqueológicas revelaram as ruínas do seu palácio em Corsabade e os registros inscritos dos seus anais reais. — FOTO, Vol. 1, pp. 955, 960.

Nos seus anais, Sargão fez a afirmação: "Cerquei e conquistei Samaria (Sa-me-ri-na)." (Ancient Near Eastern Texts [Textos Antigos do Oriente Próximo], editado por James B. Pritchard, 1974, p. 284.) Todavia, isto parece ser apenas uma simples jactância de Sargão ou daqueles que queriam glorificá-lo, atribuindo a este novo monarca a façanha do governante anterior. Uma crônica babilônica, talvez mais neutra, declara a respeito de Salmaneser V: "Ele devastou Samaria." (Assyrian and Babylonian Chronicles [Crônicas Assírias e Babilônicas], de A. K. Grayson, 1975, p. 73) A Bíblia, em 2 Reis 18:9, 10, declara simplesmente que Salmaneser 'sitiou' Samaria, e que eles "foram capturá-la". Compare isso com 2 Reis 17:1-6, que diz que Salmaneser, rei da Assíria, impôs tributo a Oseias, rei de Samaria, e depois declara que, mais tarde, "o rei da Assíria capturou Samaria".

Inscrições relacionadas com Sargão ilustram a tolice de se depositar muita confiança nos antigos registros seculares, mesmo a ponto de igualá-los em valor ao registro bíblico. Depois da acessão de Sargão ao trono, os babilônios sob Merodaque-Baladã revoltaram-se, com o apoio de Elão. Sargão guerreou contra eles em Der, mas evidentemente não conseguiu esmagar a revolta. As inscrições de Sargão mostram que ele afirma ter obtido uma vitória total na batalha, mas a Crônica Babilônica declara que os elamitas derrotaram os assírios, e um texto de Merodaque-Baladã alardeia que este 'derrubou as hostes assírias e destroçou suas armas'. O livro Ancient Iraq (O Iraque Antigo) observa: "Um detalhe curioso: A inscrição de Merodaque-Baladã foi encontrada em Nimrud, para onde Sargão a levara, de Uruk . . . substituindo-a naquela cidade por um cilindro de argila que trazia sua própria versão, e, naturalmente, radicalmente diferente daquele evento. Isto mostra que a propaganda política e os métodos de 'guerra fria' não constituem um privilégio de nossa época." — De G. Roux, 1964, p. 258.

Sargão teve mais êxito contra a coalizão formada pelos reis de Hamate e de Damasco, e outros aliados, obtendo a vitória sobre eles numa batalha em Carcar, junto ao rio Orontes. Segundo Reis 17:24, 30, alista pessoas de Hamate entre os que "o rei da Assíria" estabeleceu nas cidades de Samaria em lugar dos israelitas exilados.

De acordo com os registros de Sargão, no seu quinto ano ele atacou e conquistou Carquemis, cidade de importância comercial e militar junto à parte superior do rio Eufrates. Seguiu-se o procedimento-padrão dos assírios, de deportar os habitantes da cidade e de substituí-los por elementos estrangeiros. No aviso de Isaías a respeito da ameaça assíria (Is 10:5-11), cita-se Carquemis, junto com Hamate e outras cidades, como exemplo do esmagador poder da Assíria. Mais tarde, Sargão relata ter estabelecido tribos árabes como colonos em Samaria. — Ancient Near Eastern Texts, pp. 285, 286.

Registros assírios relatam que o rei de Asdode, Azuri, empenhou-se numa conspiração rebelde contra o jugo assírio e que Sargão o removeu, colocando em seu lugar o irmão mais novo de Azuri.

Seguiu-se outra revolta, e Sargão lançou um ataque contra a Filístia, e "cercou e conquistou as cidades de Asdode, Gate . . . (e) Asdudimmu". (Ancient Near Eastern Texts, p. 286) É evidentemente neste ponto que o registro bíblico menciona Sargão diretamente por nome, em Isaías 20:1.

A seguir, Sargão obrigou Merodaque-Baladã a sair de Babilônia e conquistou a cidade. O nome de Sargão é alistado numa inscrição como rei de Babilônia durante um período de cinco anos.

O reinado agressivo de Sargão levou o Império Assírio a um novo apogeu de poder e produziu a última grande dinastia assíria. Historiadores atribuem a Sargão um governo de 17 anos. Visto que ele supostamente começou a governar na ocasião, ou logo depois, da queda de Samaria, no sexto ano de Ezequias (2Rs 18:10), e visto que seu filho e sucessor no trono, Senaqueribe, invadiu Judá no 14.º ano de Ezequias (2Rs 18:13), um governo de 17 anos de Sargão só seria possível se Senaqueribe fosse corregente na época em que atacou Judá. Parece igualmente provável que os dados dos historiadores estejam errados. Eles certamente não podem basear-se nas listas de epônimos para determinar estes reinados, conforme se mostra no artigo CRONOLOGIA. A inconsistência geral dos escribas assírios e sua prática de "ajustar" as diferentes edições dos anais para satisfazer o ego do governante também são consideradas nesse artigo.

Sargão, durante o seu reinado, construiu uma nova capital a uns 20 km ao NE de Nínive, perto da atual aldeia de Corsabade. Num lugar virgem, ele projetou a cidade chamada Dur Sharrukin (que se poderia chamar de Sargãosburgo) e edificou um palácio de 200 aposentos, numa plataforma elevada que tinha 7,5 m de altura e abrangia uma área de quase 10 ha. Colossais touros alados, de cabeça humana, guardavam a entrada do palácio, um par deles tendo a altura de cerca de 5 m. As paredes eram adornadas de afrescos, bem como de relevos que retratavam suas campanhas e façanhas, sendo que o espaço total das paredes ocupado por esses relevos iguala a distância de uns 2,5 km. Numa das suas inscrições, Sargão diz: "Para mim, Sargão, que mora neste palácio, decrete ele [isto é, o deus Assur] como meu destino uma vida longa, saúde do corpo, alegria de coração, luminosidade da alma." (Ancient Iraq, p. 262) Todavia, os registros indicam que, mais ou menos um ano depois da inauguração do palácio, Sargão foi morto, não se tendo certeza da maneira em que morreu. Foi substituído pelo seu filho Senaqueribe.

SARIDE. Cidade na fronteira de Zebulão. (Jos 19:10, 12) É identificada com Tell Shadud, a uns 10 km ao NNE de Megido.

SAROM.

1. Planície marítima entre a planície de Dor (ao S do Carmelo) e a planície da Filístia. Desde a sua fronteira setentrional constituída pelo rio Crocodilo (Nahr ez-Zerqa), Sarom estende-se para o sul por uns 60 km até a região de Jope, e varia em largura de uns 16 a 19 km. Ao longo da costa encontram-se extensas dunas de areia. Cruzada por estradas, a região era antigamente de considerável importância militar e comercial.

Sarom era famosa pela sua fertilidade (veja Is 35:2), sendo uma região bem regada, atravessada por diversos rios. Rebanhos e manadas pastavam ali. (1Cr 27:29; compare isso com Is 65:10.) Grandes florestas de carvalho ocupavam outrora a parte setentrional de Sarom, ao passo que a parte sulina, assim como hoje, provavelmente recebia cultivo mais extenso. Parece que grande parte da região foi desolada durante a invasão assíria no oitavo século AEC. — Is 33:9.

Em O Cântico de Salomão, a sulamita é retratada descrevendo a si mesma como "apenas um açafrão da planície costeira", evidentemente querendo dizer que era apenas uma flor comum entre tantas que cresciam em Sarom. — Cân 2:1.

2. De acordo com 1 Crônicas 5:16, a tribo de Gade morava "em Gileade, em Basã e nas suas aldeias dependentes, bem como em todos os pastios de Sarom". Alguns peritos acham que isto significa que os gaditas pastavam seus rebanhos nas planícies costeiras de Sarom. Todavia, Gade recebeu território ao L do Jordão, e tanto Gileade como Basã ficavam daquele lado. De modo que muitos chegam à conclusão de que havia também no território de Gade uma região chamada Sarom.

SARONITA [De (Pertencente a) Sarom]. Alguém originário da planície de Sarom. Sitrai, homem encarregado das manadas de Davi em Sarom, era chamado de saronita. — 1Cr 27:29, 31.

SARSEQUIM [possivelmente: Chefe dos Escravos]. Príncipe babilônio que estava entre os primeiros a entrar em Jerusalém depois de o exército ter brechado as muralhas, no verão setentrional de 607 AEC. (Je 39:2, 3) Não se declaram seu cargo e seus deveres, embora "Sarsequim" possa ter sido um título e seu sentido talvez indique o trabalho dele.

SARUEM. Cidade de Simeão. (Jos 19:1, 6) Parece também ter sido chamada de Silhim (Jos 15:32) e de Saaraim. (1Cr 4:31) Os peritos, em geral, acreditam que seja Tell el-Far'ah (Tel Sharuhen), a uns 35 km ao O de Berseba.

SASAI. Um dos filhos pós-exílicos de Binui que tomaram esposas estrangeiras, mas que, em resposta às instâncias de Esdras, as despediram. — Esd 10:10, 11, 38, 40, 44.

SASAQUE. Benjamita cujos 11 filhos estão alistados entre os cabeças que moravam em Jerusalém. — 1Cr 8:14, 22-25, 28.

SATANÁS [Opositor; Aquele Que Opõe Resistência]. Em muitos lugares das Escrituras Hebraicas, a palavra sa·tán ocorre sem o artigo definido. Usada assim, ela se aplica, na primeira ocorrência, ao anjo que ficou de pé na estrada para se opor ou resistir a Balaão, quando este partiu com o objetivo de amaldiçoar os israelitas. (Núm 22:22, 32) Em outros casos refere-se a pessoas como opositores de outros homens. (1Sa 29:4; 2Sa 19:21, 22; 1Rs 5:4; 11:14, 23, 25) Mas é usada com o artigo definido ha para se referir a Satanás, o Diabo, principal Adversário de Deus. (Jó 1:6, n; 2:1-7; Za 3:1, 2) Nas Escrituras Gregas, a palavra sa·ta·nás aplica-se a Satanás, o Diabo, em quase todas as ocorrências, e usualmente vem acompanhada pelo artigo definido ho.

Origem. As Escrituras indicam que a criatura conhecida como Satanás nem sempre teve este nome. Antes, este nome descritivo foi-lhe dado por ele ter adotado um proceder de oposição e resistência a Deus. Não se fornece o nome que ele tinha antes disso. Deus é o único Criador, e "perfeita é a sua atuação", sem injustiça ou gravame. (De 32:4) Portanto, aquele que se tornou Satanás, quando foi criado era uma criatura perfeita e justa de Deus. É uma pessoa espiritual, pois compareceu na presença de Deus no céu. (Jó caps. 1, 2; Re 12:9) Jesus Cristo disse a respeito dele: "Esse foi um homicida quando começou, e não permaneceu firme na verdade, porque não há nele verdade." (Jo 8:44; 1Jo 3:8) Jesus mostra com isso que Satanás outrora estava na verdade, mas a abandonou. A partir do seu primeiro ato premeditado em desviar Adão e Eva de Deus, ele era homicida, porque causou com isso a morte de Adão e Eva, o que, por sua vez, causou a morte dos descendentes deles. (Ro 5:12) Em toda a Escritura, as qualidades e ações que lhe são atribuídas podiam ser atribuídas apenas a uma pessoa, não a um princípio abstrato do mal. É evidente que os judeus, e Jesus e seus discípulos, sabiam que Satanás existia como pessoa.

Assim, de um começo justo e perfeito, esta pessoa espiritual desviou-se para o pecado e a degradação. O processo que resultou nisso é descrito por Tiago, que escreve: "Cada um é provado por ser provocado e engodado pelo seu próprio desejo. Então o desejo, tendo-se tornado fértil, dá à luz o pecado; o pecado, por sua vez, tendo sido consumado, produz a morte." (Tg 1:14, 15) No proceder adotado por Satanás parece haver, em alguns sentidos, um paralelo com o do rei de Tiro, conforme descrito em Ezequiel 28:11-19. — Veja PERFEIÇÃO (O primeiro pecador e o rei de Tiro).

Portanto o relato bíblico torna claro que foi Satanás quem falou por meio de uma serpente, seduzindo Eva a desobedecer à ordem de Deus. Eva, por sua vez, persuadiu Adão a adotar o mesmo proceder rebelde. (Gên 3:1-7; 2Co 11:3) Em consequência do uso que Satanás fez da serpente, a Bíblia dá a Satanás o título de "Serpente", que passou a significar "enganador"; tornou-se também "o Tentador" (Mt 4:3) e mentiroso, "o pai da mentira". — Jo 8:44; Re 12:9.

Suscitada a Questão da Soberania. Quando Satanás se dirigiu a Eva (através da fala da serpente), ele na realidade desafiou a legitimidade e justiça da soberania de Jeová. Deu a entender que Deus negava injustamente algo à mulher; declarou também que Deus era mentiroso ao dizer que ela morreria se comesse do fruto proibido. Além disso, Satanás induziu-a a crer que ela ficaria livre e independente de Deus, tornando-se como Deus. Por meio disso, esta iníqua criatura espiritual fez-se superior a Deus aos olhos de Eva, e Satanás tornou-se o deus dela, embora Eva, na ocasião, evidentemente não conhecesse a identidade daquele que a desencaminhava. Com esta ação dele, pôs o homem e a mulher sob a sua liderança e controle, erguendo-se como deus rival em oposição a Jeová. — Gên 3:1-7.

A Bíblia, ao levantar o véu para fornecer um vislumbre de assuntos celestiais, revela que Satanás, mais tarde, como deus rival, compareceu perante Jeová no céu, desafiando Jeová na face, dizendo que podia desviar Dele Jó, Seu servo, e assim, por inferência, todos os servos de Deus. Na realidade, acusou Deus de dar injustamente a Jó tudo, junto com plena proteção, para que ele, Satanás, não pudesse testar Jó e mostrar o que este realmente tinha no coração, o qual era mau, segundo Satanás insinuou. Deu a entender que Jó servia a Deus primariamente por motivos egoístas. Satanás tornou claro este ponto do seu argumento ao dizer: "Pele por pele, e tudo o que o homem tem dará pela sua alma. Ao invés disso, estende agora tua mão, por favor, e toca-lhe até o osso e a carne, e vê se não te amaldiçoará na tua própria face." — Jó 1:6-12; 2:1-7; veja SOBERANIA.

Neste caso especial, Jeová permitiu que Satanás causasse calamidade a Jó por não interferir quando Satanás fez realizar uma incursão de assaltantes sabeus, bem como a destruição de rebanhos e pastores por aquilo que o mensageiro de Jó chamou de "o próprio fogo de Deus" desde os céus; não se declara se este era relâmpago ou outro fogo. Satanás causou também uma invasão de três bandos de caldeus, bem como um vendaval. Estas coisas causaram a morte de todos os filhos de Jó e destruíram suas propriedades. Por fim, Satanás infligiu ao próprio Jó uma repugnante doença. — Jó 1:13-19; 2:7, 8.

Essas coisas revelam a potência e o poder dessa criatura espiritual, Satanás, bem como sua atitude feroz e assassina.

É importante notar, porém, que Satanás reconheceu sua impotência em face da ordem expressa de Deus, pois ele não questionou o poder e a autoridade de Deus, quando este o restringiu de tirar a vida de Jó. — Jó 2:6.

Contínua Oposição a Deus. Por desafiar a Deus e acusar os servos de Deus de falta de integridade, Satanás viveu à altura do seu título "Diabo", que significa "Caluniador", título que mereceu por ter caluniado a Jeová Deus no jardim do Éden.

Outros demônios iníquos juntaram-se a ele. Antes do Dilúvio dos dias de Noé, parece que outros anjos de Deus abandonaram a sua própria moradia correta nos céus, bem como suas posições designadas ali. Materializaram corpos humanos, passaram a morar na terra, casaram-se com mulheres e produziram descendentes chamados nefilins. (Gên 6:1-4; 1Pe 3:19, 20; 2Pe 2:4; Ju 6; veja FILHO[S] DE DEUS; NEFILINS.) Estes anjos, tendo abandonado o serviço de Deus, passaram a estar sob o controle de Satanás. Por isso, Satanás é chamado de "o governante dos demônios". Num caso, quando Jesus expulsou demônios dum homem, os fariseus acusaram-no de fazer isso pelo poder de "Belzebu, o governante dos demônios". Que eles se referiam a Satanás é mostrado pela resposta de Jesus: "Se Satanás expulsa a Satanás, ele ficou dividido contra si mesmo." — Mt 12:22-27.

O apóstolo Paulo associa Satanás com "as forças espirituais iníquas nos lugares celestiais" e chama estes de "os governantes mundiais desta escuridão". (Ef 6:11, 12) Satanás, como força governante no domínio invisível logo acima da Terra, é "o governante da autoridade do ar". (Ef 2:2) Revelação (Apocalipse) mostra ser ele quem está "desencaminhando toda a terra habitada". (Re 12:9) O apóstolo João disse que "o mundo inteiro jaz no poder do iníquo". (1Jo 5:19) Portanto, ele é "o governante deste mundo". (Jo 12:31) É por isso que Tiago escreveu que "a amizade com o mundo é inimizade com Deus". — Tg 4:4.

Sua Luta para Destruir a 'Semente'. Satanás fez logo cedo esforços para bloquear a promessa do "descendente (lit.: semente)" a vir através de Abraão. (Gên 12:7) Evidentemente, tentou fazer com que Sara fosse contaminada, a fim de que ficasse imprópria para dar à luz a semente; mas Deus a protegeu. (Gên 20:1-18) Fez todo o possível para destruir aqueles que Deus escolhera como semente de Abraão, a nação de Israel, por induzi-los a pecar e trazer outras nações contra eles, conforme mostra toda a história bíblica. Um ponto alto nas tentativas de Satanás na sua luta contra Deus, e que parecia ter sido coroado de êxito, foi atingido quando o rei da Terceira Potência Mundial da história bíblica, Babilônia, tomou Jerusalém, derrubou o governo do Rei Zedequias, da linhagem de Davi, e destruiu o templo de Jeová, desolando Jerusalém e Judá. — Ez 21:25-27.

A dinastia governante de Babilônia, como instrumento de Satanás, inicialmente encabeçada por Nabucodonosor, manteve Israel no exílio por 68 anos, até Babilônia ser derrubada. Babilônia nunca teve a intenção de soltar seus cativos, e assim refletia as jactanciosas e ambiciosas tentativas do próprio Satanás como deus rival do Soberano Universal, Jeová. Os reis babilônios, que adoravam seu deus-ídolo Marduque, a deusa Istar e uma hoste de outros deuses, na realidade eram adoradores dos demônios, e, fazendo parte do mundo que está afastado de Jeová, estavam sob o domínio de Satanás. — Sal 96:5; 1Co 10:20; Ef 2:12; Col 1:21.

Satanás encheu o rei de Babilônia da ambição de ter domínio completo sobre a Terra, mesmo sobre o "trono de Jeová" (1Cr 29:23) e sobre as "estrelas de Deus", os reis da linhagem de Davi sentados no trono no monte Moriá (por extensão, Sião). Este "rei", quer dizer, a dinastia de Babilônia, 'enalteceu-se' no coração, e era aos seus próprios olhos e aos olhos dos seus admiradores como alguém "brilhante", "filho da alva". (Em algumas traduções reteve-se o termo da Vulgata latina, "Lúcifer". Todavia, este é apenas a tradução da palavra hebraica heh·lél, "brilhante". Heh·lél não é nome, nem título, mas, antes, um termo descritivo da posição jactanciosa adotada pela dinastia de reis de Babilônia da linhagem de Nabucodonosor.) (Is 14:4-21) Visto que Babilônia era instrumento de Satanás, seu "rei" refletia o desejo ambicioso do próprio Satanás. Novamente, Jeová veio salvar seu povo por restabelecê-lo na sua terra, até que viesse a verdadeira Semente prometida. — Esd 1:1-6.

Esforços para fazer Jesus tropeçar. Satanás, sem dúvida, identificando Jesus como o Filho de Deus e aquele de quem se profetizou que lhe ma-chucaria a cabeça (Gên 3:15), fez tudo o que podia para destruir Jesus. Mas quando o anjo Gabriel anunciou a Maria a concepção de Jesus, ele lhe disse: "Espírito santo virá sobre ti e poder do Altíssimo te encobrirá. Por esta razão, também, o nascido será chamado santo, Filho de Deus." (Lu 1:35) Jeová protegeu seu Filho. Os esforços de destruir Jesus ainda criança não foram bem-sucedidos. (Mt 2:1-15) Deus continuou a proteger Jesus durante a juventude deste. Após o batismo de Jesus, Satanás se dirigiu a ele, no ermo, com três fortes tentações diferentes, testando-o cabalmente na questão da devoção a Jeová. Em um dos seus apelos, Satanás mostrou a Jesus todos os reinos do mundo, afirmando que eram seus. Jesus não contradisse esta alegação. Não obstante, Jesus negou-se a pensar mesmo por um só instante a tomar qualquer "atalho" para obter um reinado, nem considerou por um momento fazer algo que agradasse apenas a ele mesmo. Sua resposta imediata a Satanás foi: "Vai-te, Satanás! Pois está escrito: 'É a Jeová, teu Deus, que tens de adorar e é somente a ele que tens de prestar serviço sagrado.'" Nisto, "o Diabo . . . retirou-se dele até outra ocasião conveniente". (Mt 4:1-11; Lu 4:13) Isto ilustra a veracidade das palavras de Tiago escritas mais tarde: "Oponde-vos ao Diabo, e ele fugirá de vós." — Tg 4:7.

Jesus sempre esteve atento ao perigo das maquinações de Satanás e que Satanás queria causar a destruição dele por fazê-lo ter ideias contrárias à vontade de Jeová. Isto foi demonstrado quando Pedro, em certa ocasião, embora com boas intenções, realmente pôs uma tentação no caminho dele. Jesus havia mencionado os sofrimentos e a morte que iria ter. "Em vista disso, Pedro, tomando-o à parte, principiou a censurá-lo, dizendo: 'Sê benigno contigo mesmo, Senhor; não terás absolutamente tal destino.' Mas ele, voltando-lhe as costas, disse a Pedro: 'Para trás de mim, Satanás! Tu és para mim pedra de tropeço, porque não tens os pensamentos de Deus, mas os de homens.'" — Mt 16:21-23.

Durante todo o seu ministério, Jesus esteve em perigo; Satanás usou agentes humanos para se oporem a Jesus, tentando fazê-lo tropeçar ou matá-lo. Em certa ocasião, o povo estava prestes a tomar Jesus e fazê-lo rei. Mas ele nem pensou em tal coisa; aceitaria o reinado apenas no tempo e do modo de Deus. (Jo 6:15) Em outra ocasião, os da sua própria cidade tentaram matá-lo. (Lu 4:22-30) Ele foi constantemente hostilizado por aqueles que Satanás usou para tentar enlaçá-lo. (Mt 22:15) Mas, Satanás fracassou em todos os seus esforços de fazer Jesus pecar mesmo no mínimo pensamento ou ato. Satanás foi provado cabalmente ser mentiroso, e fracassou no seu desafio à soberania de Deus e à integridade dos servos de Deus. Conforme Jesus disse pouco antes da sua morte: "Agora há um julgamento deste mundo; agora será lançado fora o governante deste mundo" — totalmente desacreditado. (Jo 12:31) Satanás, por meio do pecado, dominava toda a humanidade. Mas Jesus, sabendo que Satanás em breve lhe causaria a morte, podia dizer, depois de celebrar sua última Páscoa com os seus discípulos: "O governante do mundo está chegando. E ele não tem nenhum poder sobre mim." — Jo 14:30.

Poucas horas mais tarde, Satanás conseguiu fazer que Jesus fosse morto, primeiro por controlar um dos apóstolos de Jesus, e depois por usar os líderes judeus e a Potência Mundial Romana para executar Jesus de modo doloroso e ignominioso. (Lu 22:3; Jo 13:26, 27; caps. 18, 19) Satanás agiu ali como "aquele que tem os meios de causar a morte, isto é, o Diabo". (He 2:14; Lu 22:53) Mas, neste respeito, Satanás fracassou em promover sua causa; ele involuntariamente apenas cumpriu profecias, que requeriam que Jesus morresse como sacrifício. A morte de Jesus, sem ele ser culpado de algo, forneceu o preço de resgate para a humanidade, e com a sua morte (e subsequente ressurreição por Deus) ele pôde então ajudar a humanidade pecaminosa a escapar das garras de Satanás, pois, conforme está escrito, Jesus tornou-se sangue e carne "para que, pela sua morte, reduzisse a nada aquele que tem os meios de causar a morte, isto é, o Diabo, e para que emancipasse todos os que pelo temor da morte estavam toda a sua vida sujeitos à escravidão". — He 2:14, 15.

Continua a lutar contra os cristãos. Após a morte e ressurreição de Jesus, Satanás continuou a travar uma luta árdua contra os seguidores de Cristo. Os relatos no livro de Atos e nas cartas das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs fornecem numerosas provas disso. Paulo disse que ele recebera "um espinho na carne, um anjo de Satanás, para que [o] estivesse esbofeteando". (2Co 12:7) E, como no caso de Eva, Satanás disfarçava sua verdadeira natureza e objetivo por "transformar-se em anjo de luz", e ele tem agentes que "também persistem em transformar-se em ministros da justiça". (2Co 11:14, 15) Exemplos destes eram os falsos apóstolos que lutaram contra Paulo (2Co 11:13) e aqueles em Esmirna 'que se diziam judeus, e que não eram, mas eram sinagoga de Satanás'. (Re 2:9) Satanás nunca para de lançar "dia e noite" acusações contra os cristãos, questionando a integridade deles, assim como fez com Jó. (Re 12:10; Lu 22:31) Mas os cristãos têm "um ajudador junto ao Pai, Jesus Cristo, um justo", que comparece perante a pessoa de Deus em seu favor. — 1Jo 2:1.

Seu Lançamento no Abismo e Destruição Final. Na ocasião em que Satanás induziu Eva e depois Adão a se rebelarem contra Deus, este disse à serpente (na realidade falando a Satanás, visto que o mero animal não entenderia as questões envolvidas): "Pó é o que comerás todos os dias da tua vida. E porei inimizade entre ti e a mulher, e entre o teu descendente [literalmente: semente] e o seu descendente. Ele te machucará a cabeça e tu lhe machucarás o calcanhar." (Gên 3:14, 15) Deus fez ali saber que Satanás, expulso da organização santa de Deus, não teria nenhuma esperança sustentadora da vida, mas como que 'comeria pó' até morrer. A 'semente' por fim lhe machucaria a cabeça, o que significaria uma ferida mortal. Quando Cristo esteve na terra, os demônios o identificaram como Aquele que os lançaria no "abismo", que evidentemente era uma condição de restrição chamada no relato paralelo de 'tormento'. — Mt 8:29; Lu 8:30, 31; veja TORMENTO.

No livro de Revelação encontramos uma descrição dos últimos dias de Satanás e o fim dele. Revelação relata que, quando Cristo assume o poder do Reino, Satanás é lançado fora do céu para a terra, não mais tendo acesso aos céus, assim como tinha nos dias de Jó e nos séculos que se seguiram. (Re 12:7-12) Depois desta derrota, Satanás tem apenas um "curto período de tempo", durante o qual trava guerra com "os remanescentes da sua semente [i.e., da mulher], que observam os mandamentos de Deus e têm a obra de dar testemunho de Jesus". Nos seus esforços de devorar os remanescentes da semente da mulher, ele é chamado de "o dragão", devorador ou esmagador. (Re 12:16, 17; compare isso com Je 51:34, onde Jeremias fala por Jerusalém e por Judá, dizendo: "Nabucodorosor, rei de Babilônia, . . . tragou-me como cobra grande [ou: "dragão", n].") Na descrição anterior da sua luta contra a mulher e de seus esforços de devorar-lhe o filho varão, ele é retratado como "um grande dragão cor de fogo". — Re 12:3.

O capítulo 20 de Revelação descreve Satanás ser amarrado e lançado no abismo por mil anos, pelas mãos de um grande anjo — sem dúvida Jesus Cristo, que tem a chave do abismo e que é a 'semente' que havia de machucar a cabeça de Satanás. — Compare isso com Re 1:18; veja ABISMO.

O derradeiro esforço de Satanás culmina numa derrota permanente. A profecia diz que ele há de ser solto "por um pouco", assim que terminar o Reinado Milenar de Cristo, e que ele liderará pessoas rebeldes num outro ataque contra a soberania de Deus; mas ele (junto com os demônios) é lançado no lago de fogo e enxofre, a destruição eterna. — Re 20:1-3, 7-10; compare isso com Mt 25:41; veja LAGO DE FOGO.

O que quer dizer 'entregar alguém a Satanás para a destruição da carne'?

Ao instruir a congregação em Corinto sobre como agir para com um membro da congregação, que iniquamente havia cometido incesto com a esposa de seu pai, o apóstolo Paulo escreveu: "[Entregai] tal homem a Satanás, para a destruição da carne." (1Co 5:5) Era a ordem de expulsar o homem da congregação, cortando toda a associação com ele. (1Co 5:13) Entregá-lo a Satanás o colocaria fora da congregação e no mundo do qual Satanás é deus e governante. Este homem, igual a "um pouco de fermento" na "massa toda", era a "carne", ou o elemento carnal na congregação; e por remover este homem incestuoso, a congregação de mentalidade espiritual destruiria a "carne" no meio dela. (1Co 5:6, 7) De modo similar, Paulo entregou Himeneu e Alexandre a Satanás, porque eles haviam deixado de lado a fé e a boa consciência, e haviam sofrido naufrágio no que se referia à sua fé. — 1Ti 1:20.

Mais tarde, o homem incestuoso em Corinto parece ter-se arrependido do seu proceder errado e ter-se endireitado, o que induziu o apóstolo Paulo a recomendar sua readmissão na congregação. Exortando-a ao perdão, apresentou como um dos motivos "que não sejamos sobrepujados por Satanás, pois não desconhecemos os seus desígnios". (2Co 2:11) No primeiro caso, Satanás fizera a congregação ficar numa condição ruim pela qual teve de ser repreendida pelo apóstolo, porque havia sido leniente demais, realmente deixando o homem iníquo continuar com a sua prática sem levar em consideração o vitupério que isso causava, estando 'enfunada' por permitir isso. (1Co 5:2) Por outro lado, se fossem agora ao outro extremo e se negassem a perdoar ao arrependido, Satanás os venceria em outro sentido, a saber, de se aproveitar de ficarem duros e implacáveis. Por meio da Palavra de Deus, os cristãos são esclarecidos para se darem conta da existência de Satanás, do poder, intenção e objetivos dele, e da sua maneira de agir, para que possam combater este adversário espiritual com as armas espirituais providas por Deus. — Ef 6:13-17.

SÁTRAPA. Vice-rei ou governador duma província, nos impérios babilônico e persa nomeados pelo rei como principal governante dum distrito jurisdicional. Daniel mencionou sátrapas servindo sob Nabucodonosor no Império Babilônico. (Da 3:1-3) Depois que os medos e os persas conquistaram Babilônia, Dario, o medo, nomeou 120 sátrapas sobre todo o seu reino. (Da 6:1) Esdras tratava com sátrapas no tempo do Rei Artaxerxes da Pérsia. (Esd 8:36) Nos dias de Ester e de Mordecai, os sátrapas supervisionavam 127 distritos jurisdicionais sob o rei persa Assuero. (Est 1:1) Por serem os representantes oficiais do rei, tinham de prestar contas a ele e tinham acesso bastante livre à sua presença. Por conseguinte, exerciam considerável influência e poder como chefes civis e políticos. Coletavam impostos e enviavam à corte real o tributo estipulado.

Daniel, como um dos três altos oficiais sob Dario que estavam sobre os 120 sátrapas, distinguiu-se tanto mais que eles a ponto de o rei pretender encarregá-lo de todo o reino. Os oficiais e os sátrapas, invejosos, tramaram que Daniel fosse lançado na cova dos leões. A Bíblia não declara quantos sátrapas compareceram pessoalmente perante o rei com a acusação. Mas Jeová mostrou estar com Daniel, enviando seu anjo para fechar a boca dos leões. Daí, Dario mandou que esses oficiais, que caluniaram Daniel, junto com as esposas e os filhos, fossem lançados na cova para serem mortos pelos leões. — Da 6:1-24.

O livro History of the Persian Empire (História do Império Persa) diz a respeito da organização das satrapias sob Ciro, o persa: "Cada [província] era governada por um sátrapa, cujo título significa, literalmente, 'protetor do Reino'. Como sucessor de um rei anterior, governando um território deveras enorme, ele era realmente um monarca, e estava cercado por uma corte em miniatura. Ele não somente tomava conta da administração civil, mas era também um comandante das tropas conscritas da satrapia. Quando seu cargo se tornou hereditário, não se podia ignorar a ameaça que isto representava para a autoridade central. Para enfrentar tal ameaça, certos controles foram estabelecidos; seu secretário, seu principal oficial financeiro, e o general que chefiava a guarnição aquartelada na cidadela de cada uma das capitais das satrapias, recebiam ordens diretas do grande rei em pessoa, e eram diretamente responsáveis a ele. Um controle ainda mais eficaz era exercido pelo 'olheiro do rei' (ou o 'ouvido do rei', ou 'mensageiro do rei'), [um oficial] que todo ano fazia uma cuidadosa inspeção de cada província." — De A. T. Olmstead, 1948, p. 59.

SAUL [Pedido [a Deus]; Indagado [a Deus]].

1. Benjamita descendente de Jeiel (presumivelmente também chamado Abiel), através de Ner e de Quis (1Cr 8:29-33; 9:35-39; veja ABIEL N.º 1); o primeiro rei de Israel por escolha divina. (1Sa 9:15, 16; 10:1) Saul era duma família abastada. Homem bonito, sobressaindo de cabeça e ombro a todos os outros da nação, tinha grande força física e agilidade. (1Sa 9:1, 2; 2Sa 1:23) Sua esposa chamava-se Ainoã. Saul tornou-se pai de pelo menos sete filhos: Jonatã, Isvi, Malquisua, Abinadabe, Is-Bosete (Esbaal), Armoni e Mefibosete, bem como de duas filhas: Merabe e Mical. Abner, evidentemente tio do Rei Saul (veja ABNER), serviu como chefe do exército israelita. — 1Sa 14:49, 50; 2Sa 2:8; 21:8; 1Cr 8:33.

O jovem Saul viveu num período turbulento da história de Israel. A opressão filisteia reduzira a nação a uma condição militarmente incapacitada (1Sa 9:16; 13:19, 20), e os amonitas sob o Rei Naás ameaçavam com agressão. (1Sa 12:12) Ao passo que Samuel julgara Israel de modo fiel, seus filhos eram perversores da justiça. (1Sa 8:1-3) Encarando a situação dum ponto de vista humano, e, portanto, perdendo de vista a capacidade de Jeová para proteger seu povo, os anciãos de Israel dirigiram-se a Samuel com o pedido de que lhes designasse um rei. — 1Sa 8:4, 5.

Ungido Rei. Depois disso, Jeová dirigiu o assunto de modo a propiciar a ocasião de Saul ser ungido rei. Saul, com seu ajudante, procurava as jumentas perdidas de seu pai. Visto que a busca se mostrou infrutífera, ele decidiu voltar para casa. Mas, seu ajudante sugeriu que procurassem obter a ajuda do "homem de Deus", de que se sabia estar numa cidade próxima. Isto resultou em Saul conhecer Samuel. (1Sa 9:3-19) Na sua primeira conversa com Samuel, Saul mostrou ser homem modesto. (1Sa 9:20, 21) Samuel, depois de tomar uma refeição sacrificial com Saul, continuou a conversar com ele. Na manhã seguinte, Samuel ungiu Saul como rei. Para confirmar que Deus estava com Saul, Samuel deu-lhe três sinais proféticos, que todos se cumpriram naquele dia. — 1Sa 9:22–10:16.

Mais tarde, em Mispá, quando Saul foi escolhido rei por sortes (1Sa 10:20, 21, BJ; So), ele, acanhado, escondeu-se entre a bagagem. Quando foi encontrado, foi apresentado como rei, e o povo gritou com aprovação: "Viva o rei!" Escoltado por homens valentes, Saul retornou a Gibeá. Embora homens imprestáveis falassem mal dele e o desprezassem, Saul ficou calado. — 1Sa 10:17-27.

Vitórias Iniciais. Cerca de um mês mais tarde (segundo a versão da Septuaginta grega e do Rolo do Mar Morto 4QSam[a], em 1Sa 11:1), o rei amonita Naás exigiu a rendição de Jabes de Gileade. (Veja NAÁS N.º 1.) Quando mensageiros trouxeram a notícia a Saul, o espírito de Deus tornou-se ativo nele. Ele ajuntou rapidamente um exército de 330.000 homens e o conduziu à vitória. Isto resultou no fortalecimento da posição de Saul como rei, o povo até mesmo demandando que aqueles que haviam falado contra ele fossem mortos. Mas Saul, reconhecendo que foi Jeová quem concedeu a vitória, não consentiu nisso. Subsequentemente, em Gilgal, foi novamente confirmada a realeza de Saul. — 1Sa 11:1-15.

A seguir, Saul tomou medidas para romper o poder dos filisteus sobre Israel. Escolheu 3.000 israelitas, colocando 2.000 sob as suas ordens e os restantes sob as ordens do seu filho Jonatã. Evidentemente atuando sob a direção do pai, "Jonatã golpeou a guarnição dos filisteus que havia em Geba". Em retaliação, os filisteus reuniram uma poderosa força e passaram a acampar-se em Micmás. — 1Sa 13:3, 5.

Peca Presunçosamente. No ínterim, Saul se retirara de Micmás para Gilgal, no vale do Jordão. Ali esperou sete dias por Samuel. Mas Samuel não veio no tempo marcado. Temendo que o inimigo caísse sobre ele quando ainda não havia conseguido a ajuda de Jeová e que uma demora maior resultasse em perder seu exército, Saul 'constrangeu-se' para oferecer o sacrifício queimado. Quando Samuel chegou, condenou a 'atuação néscia' de Saul como pecaminosa. Pelo visto, o pecado de Saul consistia em ele presunçosamente oferecer o sacrifício e em não obedecer ao mandamento de Jeová, dado por meio do Seu representante Samuel, de esperar que Samuel oferecesse o sacrifício. (Veja 1Sa 10:8.) Em consequência deste ato, o reino de Saul não havia de durar. — 1Sa 13:1-14.

No decorrer da campanha contra os filisteus, Saul proferiu uma maldição sobre todo aquele que comesse alimentos antes de se executar a vingança no inimigo. Este juramento precipitado teve consequências adversas. Os israelitas cansaram-se, e, embora triunfassem sobre os filisteus, sua vitória não foi tão grande como poderia ter sido. Famintos, não tomaram tempo para sangrar os animais que depois abateram, violando assim a lei de Deus a respeito da santidade do sangue. Jonatã, não tendo ouvido o juramento do pai, comeu mel. Por isso, Saul proferiu a sentença de morte sobre ele. Mas o povo redimiu Jonatã, porque este contribuíra muito para Israel obter a vitória. — 1Sa 14:1-45.

Rejeitado por Deus. Em todo o reinado de Saul houve repetidas batalhas contra os filisteus e outros povos, inclusive contra os moabitas, os amonitas, os edomitas e os amalequitas. (1Sa 14:47, 48, 52) Na guerra contra os amalequitas, Saul violou a ordem de Jeová por poupar o melhor do rebanho e da manada, bem como o rei deles, Agague. Quando se lhe perguntou por que não obedecera à voz de Jeová, Saul eximiu-se da culpa e a lançou sobre o povo. Só depois de Samuel ter enfatizado a natureza séria do pecado e de ter dito que, por causa deste, Jeová rejeitara Saul como rei é que este admitiu que seu erro se devia a ele temer o povo. Depois de Saul solicitar que Samuel o honrasse diante dos anciãos e diante de Israel por acompanhá-lo, Samuel apresentou-se com ele perante eles. Daí, o próprio Samuel matou Agague. Depois, Samuel afastou-se de Saul e nunca mais tiveram contato entre si. — 1Sa 15:1-35.

Foi após isso e depois da unção de Davi como futuro rei de Israel que o espírito de Jeová se retirou de Saul. A partir de então "terrorizou-o um espírito mau da parte de Jeová". Por retirar seu espírito de Saul, Jeová tornou possível que um espírito mau se apossasse dele, privando Saul de paz mental e incitando seus sentimentos, pensamentos e imaginações de modo errado. O fracasso de Saul, por não obedecer a Jeová, indicava a má inclinação da mente e do coração, contra a qual o espírito de Deus não oferecia a Saul nenhuma proteção ou resistência. Todavia, visto que Jeová permitira que o "espírito mau" substituísse Seu espírito e terrorizasse Saul, ele podia ser chamado de "espírito mau da parte de Jeová", de modo que os servos de Saul o chamavam de "o espírito mau da parte de Deus". À recomendação de um dos seus ajudantes, Saul solicitou que Davi fosse seu músico da corte para acalmá-lo quando fosse afligido pelo "espírito mau". — 1Sa 16:14-23; 17:15.

Relacionamento com Davi. Depois disso, os filisteus ameaçaram a segurança de Israel. Enquanto estavam acampados num lado da baixada de Elá e as forças do Rei Saul no lado oposto, Golias, de manhã e de noite, durante 40 dias, saía do campo filisteu, desafiando Israel a apresentar um homem para lutar com ele em combate só entre os dois. O Rei Saul prometeu enriquecer e formar uma aliança matrimonial com qualquer israelita que abatesse Golias. Também, a casa do pai do vencedor ficaria 'liberta', provavelmente isenta do pagamento de impostos e de serviços compulsórios. (Veja 1Sa 8:11-17.) Quando Davi chegou ao lugar com suprimentos de alimentos para seus irmãos e com certas porções para o chefe de milhares (possivelmente o comandante sob o qual os irmãos de Davi serviam), suas perguntas evidentemente sugeriam que estava disposto a aceitar o desafio. Isto resultou em ele ser levado a Saul e em sua subsequente vitória sobre Golias. — 1Sa 17:1-58.

Cria inimizade com Davi. Saul depois encarregou Davi dos homens de guerra. Isto por fim resultou em Davi ser celebrado em cânticos mais do que o próprio rei. Por isso, Saul passou a encarar Davi com suspeita e com ódio invejoso. Em certa ocasião, quando Davi tocava harpa, Saul 'passou a comportar-se como profeta'. Não era o caso de Saul passar a profetizar, mas ele evidentemente manifestava sentimentos extraordinários e uma perturbação física semelhante à de um profeta pouco antes de profetizar ou enquanto profetizava. Nesta condição incomum, perturbada, Saul duas vezes atirou uma lança contra Davi. Falhando na tentativa de cravar Davi na parede, Saul mais tarde concordou em dar sua filha Mical em casamento a Davi em troca da apresentação de cem prepúcios de filisteus. A intenção de Saul, ao fazer esta oferta, era que Davi morresse às mãos deles. A trama falhou, apresentando Davi não 100, mas 200 prepúcios para formar uma aliança matrimonial com Saul. O medo e o ódio que o rei tinha de Davi, portanto, se intensificaram. Saul falou a seu filho Jonatã e a todos os seus servos sobre o seu desejo de fazer Davi morrer. Quando Jonatã intercedeu, Saul prometeu não matar Davi. Todavia, Davi viu-se obrigado a fugir para salvar a vida, quando Saul pela terceira vez atirou contra ele uma lança. Saul mandou até mesmo mensageiros vigiar a casa de Davi e ordenou que fosse morto pela manhã. — 1Sa 18:1–19:11.

Naquela noite, Davi escapou pela janela da sua casa e correu para Ramá, onde Samuel morava. Junto com Samuel, passou então a morar em Naiote. Quando Saul soube disso, enviou mensageiros para pegarem Davi. Mas, ao chegarem, eles "começaram a comportar-se como profetas". Evidentemente, o espírito de Deus operava neles de modo tal, que se esqueceram completamente do objetivo da sua missão. Quando isso aconteceu também com mais dois grupos de mensageiros despachados por Saul, ele mesmo foi a Ramá. Também ficou sob o controle do espírito de Deus, e isso por um período prolongado, evidentemente dando a Davi tempo suficiente para fugir. — 1Sa 19:12–20:1; veja PROFETA (Como Eram Designados e Inspirados).

Davi poupa a vida de Saul por este ser ungido de Deus. Depois desses fracassos das tentativas de tirar a vida a Davi, Jonatã, pela segunda vez, falou em defesa de Davi. Mas Saul ficou tão enfurecido, que atirou uma lança contra seu próprio filho. (1Sa 20:1-33) Daquele tempo em diante, Saul implacavelmente perseguia Davi. Ao saber que o sumo sacerdote Aimeleque tinha ajudado Davi, Saul ordenou que fosse executado junto com seus sacerdotes associados. (1Sa 22:6-19) Mais tarde, ele planejou atacar a cidade de Queila, de Judá, porque Davi morava ali, mas abandonou o plano quando Davi fugiu. Saul continuou a perseguição, caçando-o nas regiões do ermo. Uma incursão dos filisteus, porém, interrompeu temporariamente a perseguição e possibilitou a Davi buscar refúgio no ermo de En-Gedi. Em duas ocasiões posteriores, Saul ficou numa situação em que Davi poderia tê-lo matado. Mas, Davi negou-se a estender a mão contra o ungido de Jeová. Na segunda vez, Saul, ao saber do refreio de Davi, até mesmo prometeu não ferir Davi. Mas esta foi uma expressão insincera, porque ele abandonou a perseguição somente quando soube que Davi havia fugido para a cidade filisteia de Gate. — 1Sa 23:10–24:22; 26:1–27:1; 27:4.

Saul se volta para o espiritismo. Cerca de um ou dois anos mais tarde (1Sa 29:3), os filisteus vieram contra Saul. Este, sem o espírito e a orientação de Jeová, e deixado entregue a um estado mental reprovado, voltou-se para o espiritismo, uma transgressão passível de morte. (Le 20:6) Disfarçado, Saul foi consultar uma médium espírita em En-Dor, pedindo que ela lhe fizesse subir o falecido Samuel. À base da descrição do que ela via, Saul concluiu que se tratava de Samuel. No entanto, deve-se notar que Jeová não havia respondido às indagações de Saul e obviamente não faria isso por meio duma prática condenada pela Sua lei como passível da pena de morte. (Le 20:27) Portanto, o que a mulher falou deve ter tido origem demoníaca. A mensagem não consolou Saul, mas o encheu de medo. — 1Sa 28:4-25; veja ESPIRITISMO.

A morte de Saul. No conflito subsequente com os filisteus, Saul foi gravemente ferido no monte Gilboa e três filhos dele foram mortos. Visto que seu escudeiro se negou a matá-lo, Saul lançou-se sobre a sua própria espada. (1Sa 31:1-7) Cerca de três dias depois, um jovem amalequita veio a Davi, gabando-se de ter matado o rei ferido. Era evidentemente uma mentira, destinada a granjear o favor de Davi. Davi, porém, ordenou que o homem fosse executado à base da sua afirmação, pois Saul havia sido um ungido de Jeová. — 2Sa 1:1-15.

Entrementes, os filisteus penduraram os cadáveres de Saul e de seus três filhos na muralha de Bete-Sã. Homens corajosos de Jabes-Gileade, porém, retiraram os cadáveres, queimaram-nos e então enterraram os ossos. — 1Sa 31:8-13.

Anos mais tarde, durante o reinado de Davi, a culpa de sangue em que Saul e sua casa haviam incorrido, relacionado com os gibeonitas, foi vingada quando sete dos seus descendentes foram mortos. — 2Sa 21:1-9.

2. Sexto rei do antigo Edom, mencionado por nome; sucessor de Samlá e predecessor de Baal-Hanã. Saul era de "Reobote, junto ao Rio". — Gên 36:31, 37, 38; 1Cr 1:48, 49.

3. Último filho de Simeão, mencionado por nome, dado à luz por uma mulher cananeia. (Gên 46:10; 1Cr 4:24) Saul fundou a família dos saulitas, contada entre os simeonitas. — Êx 6:15; Núm 26:12, 13.

4. Descendente levita de Coate. — 1Cr 6:22-24.

SAULITAS [De (Pertencentes a) Saul]. Família simeonita fundada por Saul. — Núm 26:12, 13.

SAULO. Benjamita da cidade de Tarso, na Ásia Menor, que perseguia os seguidores de Cristo mas depois se tornou apóstolo de Jesus Cristo. (At 9:1, 4, 17; 11:25; 21:39; Fil 3:5) Em todas as suas cartas, ele chama a si mesmo pelo seu nome latino, Paulo. — Veja PAULO, I.

SAVÉ, BAIXADA DE. "Baixada do rei", onde o rei de Sodoma veio ao encontro de Abraão, que fora vitorioso sobre Quedorlaomer e seus aliados, e onde Abraão recebeu uma bênção de Melquisedeque, rei de Salém. (Gên 14:17-24) Séculos mais tarde, Absalão erigiu seu monumento na "Baixada do Rei", pelo que parece o mesmo lugar e provavelmente perto de Jerusalém. (2Sa 18:18) Josefo indicou que o Monumento de Absalão foi erigido "dois estádios [370 m] distante de Jerusalém". (Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], VII, 243 [x, 3]) Todavia, não se pode agora determinar a localização exata da Baixada de Savé.

SAVÉ-QUIRIATAIM [Lugar Aplainado de Quiriataim]. Cena da vitória de Quedorlaomer sobre os emins. (Gên 14:5) Pelo visto era a planície perto ou em torno da cidade de Quiriataim, ao L do Jordão, e mais tarde construída ou reconstruída pelos rubenitas. (Núm 32:37; Jos 13:15, 19) Geógrafos situam tentativamente Quiriataim perto de Quraiyat, a uns 10 km ao ONO de Díbon.

SAVSA. Secretário do Rei Davi. — 1Cr 18:16; veja SERAÍAS N.º 2.

SEÁ. Medida para secos que, segundo fontes rabínicas, corresponde a um terço de um efa. (Gên 18:6; 1Sa 25:18; 1Rs 18:32; 2Rs 7:1, 16, 18) Visto que, à base de evidência arqueológica referente à capacidade do bato, medida correspondente para líquidos (veja Ez 45:11), o efa é calculado em 22l, o seá seria igual a 7,33l.

SEAL. Um de diversos homens na família de Bani que Esdras induziu a despedir suas esposas estrangeiras e seus filhos. — Esd 10:10, 11, 29, 44.

SEALTIEL [Pedido (Indagado) a Deus]. Descendente do Rei Davi e antepassado de Jesus na tribo de Judá. Sealtiel é chamado filho tanto de Joaquim (Jeconias) como de Néri. Tanto Sealtiel como seu irmão Pedaías são chamados de pai do pós-exílico governador Zorobabel.

Quanto ao pai de Sealtiel: Sealtiel é alistado primeiro entre os filhos nascidos a Joaquim durante o seu exílio. (1Cr 3:17; Mt 1:12) Se Sealtiel se tiver casado com uma filha de Néri, da qual não se dá o nome, através de quem Lucas traça a genealogia de Jesus, Sealtiel talvez fosse chamado por Lucas como sendo "de Néri" no sentido de que era o genro dele. Isto seria igual a Lucas referir-se a José, que se casou com Maria (evidentemente filha de Eli), como "de Eli". — Lu 3:23, 27.

Quanto ao pai de Zorobabel: Pedaías é identificado uma vez como tal (1Cr 3:19), mas o irmão de Pedaías, Sealtiel (1Cr 3:17, 18) é chamado assim em todos os outros casos. (Esd 3:2, 8; 5:2; Ne 12:1; Ag 1:1, 12, 14; 2:2, 23; Mt 1:12; Lu 3:27) Se Pedaías morreu quando seu filho Zorobabel era ainda menino, o irmão mais velho de Pedaías, Sealtiel, talvez criasse Zorobabel como se fosse seu próprio filho. Ou, caso Sealtiel tenha morrido sem filhos e Pedaías tenha realizado o casamento levirato por ele, o filho de Pedaías com a esposa de Sealtiel teria sido o herdeiro legal de Sealtiel.

SEARIAS, I. Descendente de Saul e de Jonatã; um dos seis filhos de Azel. — 1Cr 8:33-38; 9:44.

SEARIAS, II [Jah Procurou]. Cabeça duma família benjamita que morava em Jerusalém; filho ou descendente de Jeroão. — 1Cr 8:1, 26-28.

SEAR-JASUBE [Um Mero Restante (Os Remanescentes) Retornará]. Primeiro filho de Isaías. Sear-Jasube acompanhou Isaías quando este transmitiu uma mensagem profética ao Rei Acaz, na época da invasão de Judá pelo Rei Peca, de Israel. (Is 7:1, 3) Isaías e seus filhos deviam servir de sinais e milagres da parte de Jeová em Israel; por isso, o nome de Sear-Jasube predizia que 'um mero restante retornaria' do exílio babilônico. — Is 8:18; 10:21.

SEBA.

1. Filho de Bicri, benjamita, que perdeu a vida numa revolta contra Davi. (2Sa 20:1, 2) Na ocasião em que Davi retornava a Jerusalém depois da rebelião de Absalão, Seba, "homem imprestável", notou o ressentimento de dez das tribos com os homens de Judá, a tribo de Davi. (2Sa 19:40-43) Seba atiçou as chamas desta amargura, dizendo que as outras tribos não tinham "quinhão em Davi" e exortando: "Cada um aos seus deuses." Os homens de Judá apegaram-se ao rei, mas "todos os homens de Israel" abandonaram Davi para seguir Seba. Um motivo atrás desta rebelião talvez fosse querer devolver à tribo de Benjamim um pouco do destaque que tinha quando Saul era rei.

Davi mandou que seu general Amasa reunisse em três dias os homens de Judá para a batalha, a fim de sufocar o levante de Seba. Quando Amasa não apareceu em tempo, o rei enviou Abisai atrás do fugitivo Seba (embora pareça que foi realmente o irmão de Abisai, Joabe, quem se encarregou da perseguição). Seba e seus parentes apoiadores fugiram até o N a Abel-Bete-Maacá, cidade fortificada de Naftali. Os perseguidores sitiaram a cidade e começaram a minar a muralha. Então, uma mulher sábia da cidade falou com Joabe, pedindo paz. Joabe respondeu que o exército se retiraria se a cidade entregasse o rebelde Seba. Ouvindo isso, o povo da cidade decepou a cabeça de Seba e lançou-a sobre a muralha da cidade para Joabe. — 2Sa 20:1-8, 13-22.

2. Gadita que morava em Basã, descendente de Abiail. — 1Cr 5:11, 13.

3. Evidentemente uma das cidades encravadas dadas à tribo de Simeão, na parte S do território de Judá. (Jos 19:2) O nome, porém, não consta na lista paralela de 1 Crônicas 4:28-32, nem entre os relatos das cidades inicialmente designadas a Judá. (Jos 15:26) Visto que Josué 19:2-6 fornece a soma como 13 cidades, mas realmente parece alistar 14 cidades, alguns peritos sugeriram que Seba e Berseba eram duas partes da mesma cidade, sendo Seba a mais velha. Se ela tiver sido um lugar separado, talvez fosse a mesma que Sema, mencionada na lista de Josué 15:26-32.

SEBÁ.

1. Um dos seis filhos de Cus. — Gên 10:7, 8; 1Cr 1:9, 10.

2. Terra ao L da África. Em Isaías 43:3, Sebá é relacionado com o Egito e a Etiópia (Cus), como dados em resgate por Jacó. Numa lista similar, Isaías 45:14 diz "sabeus" em lugar de "Sebá", indicando que o povo de Sebá era chamado de sabeus. Estes versículos sugerem que Sebá fazia fronteira com a Etiópia ou era parte dela. Isto é apoiado por Josefo, que diz que o nome "Sabá" se aplicava à cidade de Méroe, junto ao Nilo, e à grande parte (ilha de Méroe) entre os rios Nilo, Nilo Azul e Atbara. (Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], II, 249 [x, 2]) Serem esses sabeus chamados de "homens altos" (Is 45:14) é confirmado por Heródoto (III, 20), que fala dos etíopes como, "de todos os homens, os de maior estatura e de mais bela compleição física". — Veja CUS N.º 1 e 2.

Méroe já por muito tempo era um lugar de comércio. Entre os lugares distantes mencionados no Salmo 72, na descrição do domínio e da influência daquele que Jeová designaria como Rei, Sebá e Sabá são mencionados como lugares cujos reis apresentariam uma dádiva. — Sal 72:10; Jl 3:8.

SEBANIAS.

1. Sacerdote que tocou trombeta na procissão que acompanhou a Arca do Pacto a Jerusalém, nos dias de Davi. — 1Cr 15:3, 24.

2. Casa paterna sacerdotal representada por José nos dias de Joiaquim, sucessor do sumo sacerdote Jesua. (Ne 12:12, 14) Numa lista em geral similar dos sacerdotes que retornaram com Zorobabel, em 537 AEC, consta o nome Secanias em lugar de Sebanias. (Ne 12:1-7) Durante a governadoria de Neemias, um membro da mesma família, ou um sacerdote individual do mesmo nome, atestou o pacto nacional feito então. — Ne 10:1, 4, 8.

3. Um dos levitas, ou representante duma família levítica do mesmo nome, contemporâneo de Esdras e de Neemias, que liderou os judeus numa oração de confissão, depois da qual eles propuseram e selaram um pacto de fidelidade. — Ne 9:4, 5, 38; 10:1, 9, 10.

4. Outro levita que atestou o mesmo arranjo fidedigno, quer em seu próprio nome, quer no de um antepassado. — Ne 9:38; 10:9, 12.

SEBÃO. Aparentemente um nome alternativo para Sibma. — Núm 32:3, 38; veja SIBMA.

SEBARIM [Pedreiras]. Lugar até o qual os homens de Ai perseguiram os israelitas, quando estes não puderam enfrentar o inimigo depois do pecado de Acã. (Jos 7:5) Desconhece-se o sítio, exceto que ficava perto de Ai. Certos tradutores preferem verter o termo hebraico como "pedreiras", em vez de por "Sebarim". — ALA; BLH.

SEBATE. Nome pós-exílico do 11.º mês lunar judaico do calendário sagrado, mas do quinto mês do calendário secular. (Za 1:7; De 1:3; 1Cr 27:14) Corresponde a parte de janeiro e a parte de fevereiro. Não há certeza do sentido do nome.

Este mês no meio do inverno ocorre um pouco depois do auge das pesadas chuvas, mas ainda é uma época de muita chuva. A temperatura média é de cerca de 7°C em Jerusalém e de uns dez graus mais ao longo da costa do Mediterrâneo. As flores de coloração rosa e branca da amendoeira são as primeiras a alegrar a paisagem hibernal e a proclamar a aproximação da primavera.

No registro bíblico, o sebate não é marcado por alguma estação festiva.

SEBE. Pomares e vinhedos costumavam ser cercados por sebes, grossas fileiras de plantas espinhosas, para proteger a área contra ladrões e as depredações por animais. (Is 5:5) As Escrituras usam a expressão 'pôr uma sebe' em sentido figurado, para indicar que se provia proteção. (Jó 1:10) Por outro lado, 'cercar [com uma sebe]' é usado para representar a criação de obstáculos, ou barreiras, colocando a pessoa ou mesmo a nação numa situação impotente e desamparada, sem saída. (Jó 3:23; Os 2:6; compare isso com Jó 19:8; La 3:7-9.) Com referência à corrupção moral existente entre os israelitas dos seus dias, Miqueias escreveu que "o melhor deles é como a sarça, o mais reto deles é pior do que uma sebe de espinhos", isto é, espinhoso, prejudicial e danoso. — Miq 7:4.

SEBER [possivelmente: Fratura; Quebrantamento; Espatifamento]. Filho de Calebe com Maacá, sua concubina; da tribo de Judá. — 1Cr 2:48.

SEBNA [possivelmente uma forma abreviada de Sebanias]. Oficial do Rei Ezequias. Em certa época, Sebna era o "mordomo . . . sobre a casa", presumivelmente a de Ezequias — um cargo de influência. No entanto, Jeová mandou que Isaías denunciasse Sebna, profetizando que ele seria 'empurrado do seu posto', evidentemente por causa do seu orgulho e da busca de glória, evidenciada por construir para si uma conspícua sepultura. Sua veste, sua faixa e seu domínio, junto com "a chave da casa de Davi", foram então dados a 'Eliaquim, servo de Deus'. — Is 22:15-24.

Todavia, Sebna não foi privado de todos os privilégios, porque quando Senaqueribe ameaçou Jerusalém, em 723 AEC, e Eliaquim já se tornara mordomo, Sebna foi o secretário real enviado junto com Eliaquim e o cronista para falar com Rabsaqué. De vestes rasgadas, relataram a Ezequias o que se falara, e foram então enviados a Isaías para indagar de Jeová. — 2Rs 18:18–19:7; Is 36:3–37:7.

SEBUEL [Ele Retornou a Deus; Cativo de Deus]. Os dois homens chamados Sebuel são alternativamente chamados de Subael.

1. Filho ou descendente levítico de Gersom, filho de Moisés. (1Cr 23:15, 16) A casa paterna de Sebuel (Subael) foi alistada quando Davi reorganizou os serviços levíticos (1Cr 24:20, 30b, 31), recebendo deveres que incluíam cuidar dos armazéns. — 1Cr 26:24.

2. Um dos filhos de Hemã e músico perito escolhido por sortes para encabeçar a 13.ª turma de músicos do santuário. — 1Cr 25:4, 6, 9, 20.

SECACÁ [duma raiz que significa "cobrir; encobrir"]. Cidade de Judá no ermo. (Jos 15:20, 61) Secacá muitas vezes é identificada com Khirbet es-Samrah, num morro a uns 6 km ao O da parte setentrional do Mar Morto. Este é o centro de el Buqeiʽa (Biqʽat Hureqanya), um planalto estéril, na parte setentrional do ermo de Judá.

SECANIAS [Residência de Jeová].

1. Descendente de Arão, cuja casa paterna foi escolhida por sortes como a 10.ª das 24 turmas sacerdotais organizadas por Davi. — 1Cr 24:1-3, 7, 11.

2. Um dos encarregados da distribuição equitativa dos dízimos e de outras contribuições nas cidades dos sacerdotes, durante o reinado de Ezequias. — 2Cr 31:12, 15.

3. Sacerdote que retornou a Jerusalém junto com Zorobabel. — Ne 12:1, 3, 7; veja SEBANIAS N.º 2.

4. Casa paterna representada no grupo que retornou com Esdras em 468 AEC. — Esd 8:1, 3.

5. Cabeça da casa paterna de Zatu, da qual 300 varões retornaram junto com Esdras; filho de Jaaziel. — Esd 8:1, 5.

6. "Filho de Jeiel, dos filhos de Elão", que sugeriu a Esdras o pacto pelo qual aqueles que se encontravam na restabelecida Judá e que tinham esposas estrangeiras voluntariamente as despediram. — Esd 10:2-4.

7. Pai do Semaías que fez reparos na muralha de Jerusalém. — Ne 3:29.

8. Sogro de Tobias, o amonita; filho de Ará. — Ne 4:3; 6:17, 18.

9. Descendente de Davi, que viveu depois do exílio babilônico. — 1Cr 3:5, 9, 10, 21, 22.

SECO. Veja SECU.

SECRETÁRIO. Usualmente um oficial designado, que era hábil em escrever e em manter registros. A palavra hebraica so·fér pode também ser vertida "escriba" e "copista".

Em Israel, pelo menos em certas épocas havia um oficial de confiança da corte, de alto escalão, chamado de "o secretário do rei" ou de "o secretário". (2Cr 24:11; 2Rs 19:2) Não era um simples escriba, empregado para preparar documentos, nem era apenas copista da Lei. (Jz 5:14; Ne 13:13; compare isso com 2Sa 8:15-18; 20:23-26; veja COPISTA; ESCRIBA.) Ocasionalmente, o secretário do rei cuidava de assuntos financeiros (2Rs 12:10, 11) e falava como representante do rei, numa qualidade similar ao de um 'ministro das relações exteriores'. (Is 36:2-4, 22; 37:2, 3) Sob o governo de Salomão, dois dos "príncipes" são chamados de secretários. — 1Rs 4:2, 3; compare isso com 2Cr 26:11; 34:13.

Além de "o secretário do rei", a Bíblia menciona "o secretário do chefe do exército" (2Rs 25:19; Je 52:25) e "o secretário dos levitas". (1Cr 24:6) Baruque era secretário-escriba de Jeremias. — Je 36:32.

SECRETÁRIO, TINTEIRO DE. Veja TINTEIRO DE SECRETÁRIO.

SECU. Aparentemente o nome dum lugar com uma grande cisterna, onde Saul indagou sobre o paradeiro de Davi e de Samuel. (1Sa 19:21, 22) Secu ficava perto de Ramá, mas a sua localização exata é hoje desconhecida. Em vez de o nome próprio "Secu", alguns peritos, seguindo certos manuscritos gregos e latinos, preferem expressões tais como "eira na colina [altura] calva". — JB, AT.

SEDA. A mais forte das fibras naturais, usada desde tempos bíblicos para a confecção de tecido belo e leve. A seda é produzida por várias espécies de lagartas, e especialmente pelo bicho-da-seda, que se alimenta de folhas de amoreira e exsuda um fluido que endurece em finos fios para formar um casulo. Tecidos de seda, que arqueólogos acham ter sido confeccionados há mais de 2.000 anos, foram encontrados em túmulos dum cemitério fenício perto de Sabrata, na Líbia.

A sericultura parece ter tido início na China e ter-se difundido dali para outras terras, tais como a Índia. Os gregos descreviam coisas feitas de seda como si·ri·kós, relacionando assim a seda com os "seres" (geralmente identificados com os chineses). A seda é alistada nas Escrituras entre as mercadorias caras compradas por "Babilônia, a Grande". — Re 18:2, 11, 12.

Algumas traduções da Bíblia, em Ezequiel 16:10, 13, traduzem a palavra hebraica mé·shi por "seda". (Al, ALA, BJ, BLH, BV, CBC, MC, PIB, Tr) Segundo a tradição rabínica, mé·shi refere-se à seda; todavia, existe alguma incerteza a respeito disso. Concordemente, a Tradução do Novo Mundo, com o apoio de atuais lexicógrafos, verte o termo por "tecido suntuoso".

SEDEUR [possivelmente: Luz do Todo-Poderoso]. Rubenita cujo filho Elizur foi designado por Jeová para ser maioral da sua tribo no ermo. — Núm 1:5; 2:10; 7:30, 35; 10:18.

SEDIÇÃO. A palavra grega stá·sis, que basicamente significa 'estar de pé' (He 9:8), passou a ter o sentido de "estar de pé [apartado]" ou "sedição". (Mr 15:7; Lu 23:19, 25, Int) Pode também ser vertido por "dissensão" (At 15:2), e às vezes engloba a ideia de violência. — At 23:7, 10.

Sob a lei romana, era crime capital empenhar-se em sedição, ou promover tumultos ou participar neles. Por isso, o escrivão da cidade alertou a turba amotinada em Éfeso do perigo em que estavam, dizendo: "Nós estamos realmente em perigo de ser acusados de sedição pela questão de hoje, não existindo nem uma única causa que nos permita apresentar uma razão para esta turba desordenada." (At 19:40) E a acusação de Tértulo levantada perante o governador romano Félix, de que Paulo 'atiçava sedições entre todos os judeus', era muito séria. Se Paulo fosse achado culpado, teria sido punido com a morte. — At 24:5.

SEERÁ [duma raiz que significa "restar"]. Filha de Efraim ou do seu filho Berias. Menciona-se que ela construiu ou fundou Bete-Horom baixa e alta, e Uzém-Seerá, embora isso talvez fosse feito por alguns dos seus descendentes. — 1Cr 7:22-24.

SEFÃO. Lugar na fronteira oriental da Terra da Promessa, pelo visto a pouca distância de Ribla. (Núm 34:10, 11) Desconhece-se agora sua localização.

SEFAR. Um termo do território em que moravam descendentes de Joctã. A Bíblia diz: "E seu lugar de morada veio a estender-se desde Mesa até Sefar, a região montanhosa do Oriente." (Gên 10:29, 30) Uma localização sugerida é Zafar (antigamente a capital dos reis himiaritas) no Iêmen, a uns 160 km ao NE da extremidade sul do Mar Vermelho. Outra é uma cidade costeira em Mahra, junto ao mar Arábico. Mas a localização exata da antiga Sefar continua incerta.

SEFARADE. Lugar do qual os exilados de Jerusalém haviam de retornar. (Ob 20) Desconhece-se sua localização exata, mas, dentre as diversas sugestões, uma provável possibilidade é Saparda, mencionada em certos anais assírios como território da Média. Os assírios certa vez exilaram pessoas do reino setentrional de Israel para "cidades dos medos". — 2Rs 17:5, 6.

SEFARVAIM. Cidade da qual o rei da Assíria trouxe pessoas para morar em Samaria, depois de os israelitas terem sido levados ao exílio. (2Rs 17:24) Antes disso, Sefarvaim e seu rei parecem ter sofrido derrota às mãos dos assírios. (2Rs 19:13; Is 37:13) Visto ser ela mencionada junto com lugares na Síria e em Babilônia, Sefarvaim talvez estivesse situada em uma destas regiões.

SEFARVITAS [De (Pertencentes a) Sefarvaim]. Pessoas da cidade de Sefarvaim. Depois de 740 AEC, pelo menos alguns dos habitantes de Sefarvaim foram levados pelos assírios como colonos para Samaria. Os sefarvitas trouxeram consigo a sua religião falsa, que incluía o sacrifício de seus filhos varões aos deuses Adrameleque e Anameleque. — 2Rs 17:24, 31-33; 18:34; Is 36:19.

SEFATIAS [Jeová Julgou].

1. Um dos guerreiros benjamitas que se bandearam de Saul para Davi em Ziclague; harifita. — 1Cr 12:1, 2, 5.

2. Quinto filho nascido a Davi enquanto governava em Hébron (1077-1070 AEC). A mãe de Sefatias era Abital. — 2Sa 3:2, 4; 1Cr 3:1, 3.

3. Príncipe da tribo de Simeão durante o reinado de Davi; filho de Maacá. — 1Cr 27:16, 22.

4. Filho de Jeosafá que recebeu do pai muitas dádivas e cidades fortificadas, posteriormente morto pelo seu irmão mais velho, Jeorão. — 2Cr 21:2-4.

5. Um dos príncipes de Judá que, ao obter permissão do Rei Zedequias para matar Jeremias, mandou que este fosse lançado numa cisterna; filho de Matã. — Je 38:1-6, 10.

6. Fundador em Israel duma família, da qual 372 varões retornaram a Jerusalém junto com Zorobabel, em 537 AEC, e outros 80, encabeçados por Zebadias, junto com Esdras, em 468 AEC. — Esd 2:1, 2, 4; 8:1, 8; Ne 7:9.

7. Família dos "filhos dos servos de Salomão" que também retornou de Babilônia junto com Zorobabel. — Esd 2:1, 2, 55, 57; Ne 7:59.

8. Benjamita, de quem um descendente é alistado como morando em Jerusalém após o exílio babilônico. — 1Cr 9:7, 8.

9. Descendente de Judá através de Peres, e antepassado de um que morava em Jerusalém durante a governadoria de Neemias. — Ne 11:1, 2, 4.

SEFELÁ [Terra Baixa]. Nome que usualmente é dado à região de colinas baixas entre a cordilheira central da Palestina e as planícies costeiras da Filístia. (De 1:7; Jos 9:1; 10:40; 11:2; 12:8; Jz 1:9; 2Cr 28:18; Ob 19; Za 7:7) A Sefelá era uma das regiões do território designado a Judá. (Jos 15:33-44) Embora atingisse a altitude de uns 450 m, é uma "terra baixa" (veja Je 17:26; 32:44; 33:13, onde shefeláh ocorre no texto hebraico) em comparação com a cordilheira central muito mais elevada. A "Sefelá" fazia fronteira com o Negebe no S (Jz 1:9) e com "a região montanhosa de Israel" (além da baixada de Aijalom) ao N. — Jos 11:16.

Os vales que separam os ondulantes contrafortes desta região serviam como rotas naturais para viagens L-O. A Sefelá é fértil, e ali prevalece um clima temperado. Antigamente, esta região era famosa pelos seus muitos sicômoros e olivais. Oferecia também pastos para rebanhos e manadas. — 1Rs 10:27; 1Cr 27:28; 2Cr 1:15; 9:27; 26:10.

A Sefelá associada com "a região montanhosa de Israel" (Jos 11:16) talvez seja a região colinosa entre os montes de Samaria e a planície de Sarom. Esta região é mais estreita e menos distinta do que a Sefelá de Judá. Não há base para se encarar como anacronismo a distinção entre Judá e Israel no capítulo 11 de Josué (veja v 21). Uma nota marginal num comentário feito por C. F. Keil e F. Delitzsch observa: "A distinção . . . pode ser explicada sem dificuldades mesmo à base das circunstâncias existentes no tempo do próprio Josué. Judá e a dupla tribo de José (Efraim e Manassés) receberam por sorte a sua herança, antes de quaisquer das outras. Mas, ao passo que a tribo de Judá se dirigia para o território que lhe fora consignada no S, todas as demais tribos ainda permaneciam em Gilgal; e, mesmo num período posterior, quando Efraim e Manassés se achavam em suas possessões, todo o Israel, com exceção de Judá, ainda se achava acampado em Silo. Ademais, as duas partes daquela nação achavam-se então separadas pelo território que, posteriormente, foi consignado à tribo de Benjamim, mas que, nessa época, não dispunha de nenhum dono; e, além disso, o altar, o tabernáculo e a Arca do Pacto achavam-se no meio de José e das outras tribos que ainda estavam congregadas em Silo." — Biblical Commentary on the Old Testament (Comentário Bíblico sobre o Velho Testamento), 1973, Vol. II, Josué, pp. 124, 125.

SÉFER, MONTE. Monte na península do Sinai, junto ao qual Israel acampou. — Núm 33:23, 24.

SEFÔ. Filho de Sobal, xeque horeu, que morava em Edom. — Gên 36:20, 21, 23; 1Cr 1:40.

SEFUFÃO, SEFUFÃ. Benjamita que fundou a família tribal dos sufamitas. (Núm 26:38, 39; 1Cr 8:5) Em outros lugares são chamados de Mupim (Gên 46:21) e de supins. — 1Cr 7:12.

SEGREDO SAGRADO. Algo que se origina de Deus, que é retido até o Seu tempo devido e é revelado apenas àqueles a quem ele escolhe dá-lo a conhecer.

A palavra grega my·sté·ri·on, traduzida "segredo sagrado", refere-se primariamente àquilo que é conhecido dos iniciados. Nas antigas religiões místicas, que floresciam no tempo da primitiva congregação cristã, aqueles que quisessem participar nas celebrações místicas tinham de passar pela iniciação; aos não iniciados negava-se tanto o acesso às chamadas ações sagradas como o conhecimento delas. Os iniciados ficavam obrigados, por um juramento de silêncio, a não revelar os segre-

dos. No entanto, havia também um uso secular, "cotidiano", dessa palavra, tal como para um segredo particular, um segredo entre amigos, e segredos de família. O apóstolo Paulo usou o passivo de my·é·o neste último sentido ao dizer: "Aprendi o segredo [literalmente: fui iniciado nos segredos] tanto de estar suprido como de ter fome, tanto de ter abundância como de sofrer carência." — Fil 4:12.

Diferente das Religiões Místicas. Referente ao termo grego my·sté·ri·on, Vine's Expository Dictionary of Old and New Testament Words (Dicionário Expositivo de Palavras do Velho e do Novo Testamento, de Vine) explica: "No [Novo Testamento] denota, não o misterioso (como no caso da palavra em ingl.), mas aquilo que, estando fora do âmbito da apreensão natural desassistida, somente pode tornar-se conhecido pela revelação divina, e é dado a conhecer dum modo e num tempo designados por Deus, e somente àqueles que são iluminados pelo Seu Espírito. No sentido comum, um mistério subentende conhecimento retido; seu significado bíblico é a verdade revelada. Por isso, os termos especialmente ligados ao assunto são 'tornar conhecido', 'manifestado', 'revelado', 'pregado', 'entender', 'dispensação'." — 1981, Vol. 3, p. 97.

Os segredos sagrados de Deus e outros "mistérios" da Bíblia, tais como o de Babilônia, a Grande, portanto não são coisas a serem mantidas secretas para sempre, mas a serem reveladas por Jeová Deus ao Seu próprio tempo àqueles que se voltam para ele e a quem ele decide revelá-las. O apóstolo Paulo trata deste aspecto do assunto em 1 Coríntios 2:6-16. Ele fala ali do "segredo sagrado" de Deus como "sabedoria escondida", revelada aos seus servos cristãos por meio do espírito de Deus. É algo que o espírito do mundo ou a sabedoria humana dos homens físicos não podem destrinchar, mas que é falado e entendido por aqueles que 'combinam assuntos espirituais com palavras espirituais'. Anteriormente, Jesus Cristo salientou aos seus discípulos: "A vós tem sido dado o segredo sagrado [gr.: my·sté·ri·on] do reino de Deus, mas, para os de fora, todas as coisas ocorrem em ilustrações, a fim de que, olhando, olhem mas não vejam, e, ouvindo, ouçam mas não compreendam o sentido disso, nem jamais se voltem e se lhes dê perdão." — Mr 4:11, 12; Mt 13:11-13; Lu 8:10.

A grande diferença entre o segredo sagrado de Deus e os segredos de religiões místicas, em primeiro lugar, é o conteúdo: o segredo de Deus são boas novas, não mentira ou engano forjado pelo homem. (Jo 8:31, 32, 44; Col 1:5; 1Jo 2:27) Segundo, os que são escolhidos para entender o segredo sagrado de Deus têm a obrigação, não de mantê-lo secreto, mas de dar-lhe a mais ampla proclamação e divulgação possíveis. Conforme já mencionado, isto é revelado pelo uso bíblico de termos tais como 'pregado', 'tornado conhecido', 'tornado manifesto', e também 'declarar', 'falar' a respeito do "segredo sagrado das boas novas". Os verdadeiros cristãos fazem o maior empenho em proclamar estas boas novas, que contêm o entendimento do segredo sagrado, a "toda a criação debaixo do céu". (1Co 2:1; Ef 6:19; Col 1:23; 4:3, 4) Deus determina quem é indigno e assim lhes nega o entendimento. Ao fazer isso, Deus não é parcial; é por causa da "insensibilidade dos seus corações" que Deus não lhes abre o entendimento do Seu segredo sagrado. — Ef 4:17, 18.

Gira em Torno de Cristo. Visto que "dar-se testemunho de Jesus é o que inspira o profetizar", o "segredo sagrado de Deus" tem de girar em torno de Cristo. (Re 19:10; Col 2:2) Todos "os segredos sagrados" de Deus têm que ver com o seu Reino messiânico. (Mt 13:11) O apóstolo Paulo escreve a concristãos: "Cuidadosamente ocultos nele se acham todos os tesouros da sabedoria e do conhecimento", e "é nele que mora corporalmente toda a plenitude da qualidade divina". — Col 2:2, 3, 9.

Paulo diz que ele mesmo estava incumbido dos "segredos sagrados de Deus". (1Co 4:1) Fala da compreensão que tinha "do segredo sagrado do Cristo". (Ef 3:1-4) Explica que este segredo sagrado é sabedoria escondida, predeterminada por Deus antes dos sistemas de coisas. (1Co 2:7) A declaração do mistério, ou "segredo sagrado de Deus", começou com a profecia do próprio Jeová em Gênesis 3:15. Durante séculos homens de fé aguardavam o "descendente [literalmente: semente]" da promessa para libertar a humanidade do pecado e da morte, mas não se entendia claramente quem é que seria esta 'semente' e como é que esta 'semente' viria e traria libertação. Foi só quando Cristo veio e "lançou luz sobre a vida e a incorrupção por intermédio das boas novas" que isto foi esclarecido. (2Ti 1:10) Então começou a ser obtido o conhecimento do mistério da 'semente da mulher'.

O Reino messiânico. Paulo, nos seus escritos, fornece uma ampla visão da revelação do segredo sagrado do Cristo. Em Efésios 1:9-11, ele fala de Deus fazer saber "o segredo sagrado" da sua vontade, e diz: "É segundo o seu beneplácito, que ele se propôs em si mesmo, para uma administração no pleno limite dos tempos designados, a saber, ajuntar novamente todas as coisas no Cristo, as coisas nos céus e as coisas na terra. Sim, nele, em união com quem também somos designados herdeiros, visto que fomos predeterminados segundo o propósito daquele que opera todas as coisas segundo o modo aconselhado por sua vontade." Este "segredo sagrado" envolve um governo, o Reino messiânico de Deus. "As coisas nos céus", a que Paulo se refere, são os prospectivos herdeiros daquele Reino celestial junto com Cristo. "As coisas na terra" serão os súditos terrestres dele. Jesus salientou aos seus discípulos que o segredo sagrado tinha que ver com o Reino, quando lhes disse: "A vós tem sido dado o segredo sagrado do reino de Deus." — Mr 4:11.

Inclui a Congregação. Há muitos aspectos deste conhecimento do segredo sagrado. O apóstolo forneceu pormenores adicionais ao explicar que o segredo sagrado inclui a congregação, da qual Cristo é Cabeça. (Ef 5:32; Col 1:18; Re 1:20) Os membros dela são seus co-herdeiros, com os quais ele compartilha o Reino. (Lu 22:29, 30) São tirados tanto dentre os judeus como dentre os gentios. (Ro 11:25; Ef 3:3-6; Col 1:26, 27) Este aspecto do "segredo sagrado" só podia ser dado a conhecer com clareza quando Pedro foi mandado visitar o gentio Cornélio e viu os desta casa gentia receber os dons do espírito santo, em 36 EC. (At 10:34, 44-48) Ao escrever a cristãos gentios, Paulo lhes disse: "Estáveis sem Cristo, . . . estranhos aos pactos da promessa, e não tínheis esperança e estáveis sem Deus no mundo. Mas agora, em união com Cristo Jesus, vós, os que outrora estáveis longe, chegastes a estar perto pelo sangue do Cristo." (Ef 2:11-13) Por meio dos tratos de Deus com a congregação, 'os governos e as autoridades nos lugares celestiais' viriam a conhecer "a grandemente diversificada sabedoria de Deus". — Ef 3:10.

Numa visão na Revelação (Apocalipse) dada a João mostra-se que esta congregação é composta de 144.000 pessoas 'compradas dentre a humanidade como primícias para Deus e para o Cordeiro'. Estão em pé junto com o Cordeiro, Jesus Cristo, no Monte Sião, o lugar onde fica a "cidade do Deus vivente, a Jerusalém celestial". Na antiga Jerusalém terrestre encontrava-se o "trono de Jeová", ocupado por reis da linhagem de Davi; também havia ali o templo de Jeová. Jesus Cristo está entronizado na Jerusalém celestial, e seus leais seguidores, ungidos com o espírito, compartilham no seu Reinado. (Re 14:1, 4; He 12:22; 1Cr 29:23; 1Pe 2:4-6) A ressurreição de tais para a imortalidade e incorrupção, no tempo da presença de Cristo, é um dos aspectos dos tratos de Deus com a congregação, o que em si mesmo é um "segredo sagrado". — 1Co 15:51-54.

O Segredo Sagrado da Devoção Piedosa. Paulo escreveu a Timóteo: "Escrevo-te estas coisas, . . . para que saibas como deves comportar-te na família de Deus, que é a congregação do Deus vivente, coluna e amparo da verdade. Deveras, o segredo sagrado desta devoção piedosa é admitidamente grande: 'Ele [Jesus Cristo] foi manifestado em carne, foi declarado justo em espírito, apareceu a anjos, foi pregado entre nações, foi crido no mundo, foi recebido acima em glória.' " — 1Ti 3:14-16.

"A congregação do Deus vivente" tinha a verdade, e conhecia com exatidão o mistério, ou "o segredo sagrado", da verdadeira devoção piedosa, e a congregação não só tinha a forma, mas também o poder desta devoção piedosa. (Contraste isso com 2Ti 3:5.) Por isso podia ser "coluna e amparo da verdade" no meio de um mundo de erro e de religião falsa, constituindo 'mistérios' sagrados para Satanás e para aqueles que ele cegou. (2Co 4:4) O próprio Jesus Cristo é Aquele cuja devoção piedosa foi predita e descrita nas inspiradas Escrituras Hebraicas. Durante séculos, desde que se lançou o desafio contra a soberania de Deus, pondo-se em dúvida a integridade do homem, era um mistério, ou "segredo sagrado", se alguém sobre quem o Diabo pudesse exercer pressão podia manter plenamente uma devoção piedosa plena, inabalável e imaculada. Quem é que podia perseverar sob prova e sair-se plenamente puro, sem pecado e imaculado em devoção exclusiva a Jeová? Relacionado com isso havia a questão referente a quem seria 'a semente da mulher' que machucaria a cabeça da Serpente. Isto seria plenamente revelado quando Cristo fosse 'manifestado em carne, fosse declarado justo em espírito, aparecesse a anjos, fosse pregado entre nações, fosse crido no mundo, fosse recebido acima em glória'. (1Ti 3:16; 6:16) Era admitidamente uma coisa grandiosa. A grande questão da devoção piedosa girava em torno de uma única pessoa, Jesus Cristo. Quão grandioso era o proceder de devoção piedosa de Cristo! Quanto beneficia a humanidade e enaltece o nome de Jeová! — Veja DEVOÇÃO PIEDOSA.

Chega ao Término. Na visão do apóstolo João, ele foi informado: "Nos dias do toque do sétimo anjo, quando estiver para tocar a sua trombeta, então, deveras, terá sido levado a término o segredo sagrado de Deus, segundo as boas novas que ele declarou aos seus próprios escravos, os profetas." (Re 10:7) Este término do segredo sagrado está intimamente relacionado com o toque de trombeta pelo sétimo anjo, após o qual se faz o anúncio no céu: "O reino do mundo tornou-se o reino de nosso Senhor e do seu Cristo, e ele reinará para todo o sempre." (Re 11:15) Concordemente, o segredo sagrado de Deus termina na época em que Jeová inicia seu Reino por meio de seu Messias, ou Cristo. Jesus Cristo falou muito aos seus discípulos, os "escravos" de Deus, sobre o Rei-no de Deus e disse que as "boas novas do reino" continuariam a ser pregadas até o próprio fim (gr.: té·los) do "sistema de coisas". Depois de 'o segredo sagrado de Deus ter sido levado a término', as "boas novas" a serem pregadas, portanto, incluiriam aquilo que as vozes no céu anunciavam: "O reino do mundo tornou-se o reino de nosso Senhor e do seu Cristo." — Mt 24:3, 14.

SEGUBE [Exaltado; Protegido].

1. Filho de Esrom e pai de Jair, da tribo de Judá. — 1Cr 2:21, 22.

2. Filho mais novo de Hiel, o betelita. Em cumprimento da maldição de Josué, Segube perdeu a vida quando seu pai reconstruiu Jericó durante o reinado do Rei Acabe. — Jos 6:26; 1Rs 16:34.

SEGUNDO [do lat. Se·cún·dus]. Cristão tessalonicense que acompanhou Paulo através da Macedônia até a Ásia Menor, no retorno da terceira viagem missionária do apóstolo, provavelmente na primavera setentrional de 56 EC. Não se declara até onde Segundo acompanhou Paulo. — At 20:3-5.

SEIO. Veja PEITO, SEIO.

SEIO, POSIÇÃO JUNTO AO. Numa ilustração, Jesus falou dum mendigo chamado Lázaro, o qual, ao morrer, foi levado "para a posição junto ao seio de Abraão", e João menciona Jesus estando "na posição junto ao seio do Pai". (Lu 16:22, 23; Jo 1:18) A expressão "posição junto ao seio" alude a alguém se recostar no peito de outro, no mesmo leito, numa refeição.

Os convidados recostavam-se sobre o lado esquerdo, com um travesseiro para apoiar o cotovelo esquerdo, ficando a mão direita livre. Usualmente, três pessoas ocupavam o mesmo leito, mas podia haver até cinco pessoas. A cabeça de cada uma ficava perto ou encostada como que no peito, ou seio, da pessoa atrás dela. Quem não tinha ninguém atrás de si era considerado como ocupando a posição mais elevada, e quem estava na frente dele, a segunda posição de honra. Visto que os convidados estavam assim perto uns dos outros, era costume que amigo fosse colocado junto de amigo, o que tornava bastante fácil manter uma conversa confidencial quando desejado. Ocupar tal posição junto ao seio de outro num banquete significava deveras ocupar um lugar de favor especial perto dele. Assim, o apóstolo João, que Jesus amava muito, "recostava-se na frente do seio de Jesus", e nesta posição "se encostou no peito de Jesus" e fez-lhe em particular uma pergunta, na celebração da última Páscoa. — Jo 13:23, 25; 21:20.

Por estes motivos, João, ao descrever a posição bem especial de favor usufruída por Jesus, disse que este estava "na posição junto ao seio" do seu Pai, Jeová. Do mesmo modo, na ilustração de Jesus, Lázaro foi levado para "a posição junto ao seio" de Abraão, indicando que este mendigo, por fim, passou a ocupar uma posição de favor especial junto a alguém que lhe era superior. — Veja REFEIÇÃO.

SEIR [duma raiz que significa "eriçar(-se)", possivelmente referindo-se a morros arborizados; ou possivelmente significando "Eriçar-se (Arrepiar-se) de Horror"].

1. "Horeu" cujos sete "filhos" eram xeques na terra de Seir antes de ela ser ocupada por Esaú (Edom). (Gên 36:20, 21, 29, 30; 1Cr 1:38; compare isso com Gên 14:4-6.) Seir talvez vivesse na região montanhosa ao S do Mar Morto, e esta região talvez fosse chamada pelo nome dele. Não há certeza se os sete "filhos" de Seir eram descendentes imediatos dele ou se incluíam descendentes posteriores. — Veja ANÁ; DISOM.

2. A região montanhosa entre o Mar Morto e o golfo de ʽAqaba. (Gên 36:8, 30; De 2:1, 8) No tempo de Abraão, Seir era habitada por horeus. (Gên 14:6) Mais tarde, Esaú, neto de Abraão, tinha interesses em Seir, ao passo que seu irmão gêmeo, Jacó, morava em Padã-Arã. (Gên 32:3) Mas, parece que Esaú só completou sua mudança para Seir algum tempo depois de Jacó ter retornado a Canaã. (Gên 36:6-9) Por fim, os descendentes de Esaú, os edomitas, desapossaram os horeus (De 2:4, 5, 12; Jos 24:4), e aquela terra passou a ser chamada de Edom. Todavia, o anterior nome Seir também era aplicado aos descendentes de Esaú e à região em que moravam. (Núm 24:18; compare isso com 2Rs 14:7; 2Cr 25:11.) Parece que, durante o reinado do Rei Ezequias, homens da tribo de Simeão foram ao monte Seir, e depois de terem aniquilado os remanescentes dos amalequitas, começaram a morar ali simeonitas. (1Cr 4:41-43) Quanto a pormenores sobre a geografia e a história de Seir, veja EDOM, EDOMITAS.

3. Monte entre Baalá (Quiriate-Jearim) e Quesalom, na fronteira N do território de Judá. (Jos 15:10) Seir costuma ser identificado como a serra existente a uns 15 km ao O de Jerusalém, e que tem no lado meridional a aldeia de Shoresh.

SEIRÁ [duma raiz que significa "eriçar(-se)", possivelmente referindo-se a morros arborizados]. Lugar ao qual Eúde escapou depois de assassinar o rei moabita Eglom. Desconhece-se hoje sua localização exata, que era em algum lugar na região montanhosa de Efraim. — Jz 3:26, 27.

SEIS. Veja NÚMERO, NUMERAL.

SEITA. A palavra grega (hai·re·sis, da qual deriva a palavra "heresia") assim traduzida significa "escolha" (Le 22:18, LXX) ou "aquilo que é escolhido", portanto, "um grupo de homens que se separam de outros e seguem seus próprios princípios [seita ou partido]". (Greek-English Lexicon of the New Testament [Léxico Grego-Inglês do Novo Testamento], de Thayer, 1889, p. 16) Este termo é aplicado a aderentes de dois ramos destacados do judaísmo, os fariseus e os saduceus. (At 5:17; 15:5; 26:5) Os não cristãos também chamavam o cristianismo de "seita" ou de "seita dos nazarenos", possivelmente encarando-o como derivado do judaísmo. — At 24:5, 14; 28:22.

O fundador do cristianismo, Jesus Cristo, orou para que prevalecesse união entre seus seguidores (Jo 17:21), e os apóstolos estavam vitalmente interessados em preservar a unidade da congregação cristã. (1Co 1:10; Ju 17-19) A desunião de crença poderia dar margem a ferrenhas disputas, dissensões e até mesmo inimizades. (Veja At 23:7-10.) De modo que seitas deviam ser evitadas, sendo elas obras da carne. (Gál 5:19-21) Os cristãos foram advertidos contra se tornarem promotores de seitas ou de serem desencaminhados por falsos instrutores. (At 20:28; 2Ti 2:17, 18; 2Pe 2:1) O apóstolo Paulo, na sua carta a Tito, mandou que, depois de duas vezes admoestado, o homem que continuasse a promover uma seita fosse rejeitado, evidentemente significando que devia ser expulso da congregação. (Tit 3:10) Os que se negassem a ficar envolvidos em criar divisões dentro da congregação ou em apoiar determinada facção se destacariam pelo seu proceder fiel e dariam evidência de ter a aprovação de Deus. Aparentemente é isso o que Paulo queria dizer ao falar aos coríntios: "Também tem de haver seitas entre vós, para que os aprovados também se tornem manifestos entre vós." — 1Co 11:19.

SELA, I. Assento para o cavaleiro, preso ao dorso dum animal. Numerosas referências bíblicas mencionam selar jumentos (Gên 22:3; Núm 22:21; 2Sa 17:23; 19:26; 1Rs 2:40; 13:13, 27; 2Rs 4:24), mas não se fornece nenhuma descrição das selas. À base da evidência de antigos monumentos, parece que as primitivas selas para cavalo eram pouco mais do que um acolchoado de pano ou de couro. O verbo hebraico para "selar" significa basicamente "amarrar", indicando que a sela era presa com tiras ao animal. Um antigo relevo retrata uma sela em forma de caixa amarrada ao dorso dum dromedário. Não se pode dizer nada de específico sobre o "cesto das mulheres da sela do camelo", mencionado em Gênesis 31:34. A expressão hebraica kar hag·ga·mál tem sido diversamente traduzida por "albarda do camelo" (PIB), "enxerga dum camelo" (Fi) e "sela do camelo" (BJ).

Sob a Lei, quem tocasse numa sela em que montara alguém com um fluxo tornava-se impuro, assim como quem tocasse num objeto em que se sentara uma mulher menstruada. — Le 15:9, 19-23.

SELA, II [Rochedo].

1. Lugar na fronteira do território amorreu depois que os israelitas tomaram posse da Terra da Promessa. (Jz 1:36) Desconhece-se hoje o local. Alguns identificam este Sela com a cidade de Sela em Edom (2Rs 14:7), mas não há evidência de que o território amorreu alguma vez se estendesse tanto ao S, na região controlada pelos edomitas.

2. Importante cidade edomita capturada pelo Rei Amazias de Judá e que recebeu o novo nome de Jocteel. (2Rs 14:7) Sela talvez seja a "cidade fortificada" mencionada sem nome no Salmo 108:10.

Alguns identificam esta cidade com Umm el-Biyara, que fica a uns 100 km ao NNE da ponta setentrional do golfo de ʽAqaba. Esse planalto rochoso fica uns 300 m acima do canto ocidental da planície em que mais tarde se construiu a cidade nabateia de Petra. Acessível por meio duma garganta estreita, serpenteante, e cercada por penhascos escarpados de arenito, esta planície é bem protegida. As impressionantes ruínas de Petra, incluindo templos, túmulos e moradias escavadas na rocha, não faziam parte da antiga cidade edomita de Sela. Os peritos recentemente preferiram identificar Sela com es-Selaʽ, a uns 4 km ao NNO de Bozra.

3. Lugar mencionado numa pronúncia contra Moabe. (Is 15:1; 16:1) Não há certeza quanto a se é ou não é o mesmo lugar que o N.º 2.

SELÁ, I. Expressão hebraica transliterada, frequentemente encontrada nos Salmos e que aparece também no capítulo 3 de Habacuque. Embora geralmente considerada ser um termo técnico, usado na música ou na recitação, desconhece-se seu significado exato. Alguns acham que significa "pausa, suspensão ou refreio", quer do canto do salmo, para haver um interlúdio musical, quer tanto do canto como da música instrumental, para haver meditação silenciosa. De qualquer modo, a pausa, sem dúvida, era usada para tornar mais impressionante o fato ou o sentimento que se acabava de expressar, a fim de permitir a penetração do pleno impacto da última expressão. A Septuaginta grega verte Selá como di·á·psal·ma, definido como "interlúdio musical". Selá sempre ocorre no fim duma cláusula e geralmente no fim duma estrofe, cada ocorrência constando num cântico que contém alguma espécie de orientação ou expressão musical. No Salmo 9:16 é acompanhada por "Higaiom", ali entendido por alguns como associado com a música de harpa.

SELÁ, II.

1. [hebr.: Shé·lahh, possivelmente: Míssil]. Filho de Arpaxade e neto de Sem, nascido em 2333 AEC e falecido em 1900 AEC, à idade de 433 anos. Selá e um dos seus filhos, Éber, fundaram cada uma das 70 famílias pós-diluvianas; através de Éber seguiu a linhagem genealógica que passou de Sem para Abraão, e finalmente para Jesus. — Gên 10:22, 24; 11:12-15; 1Cr 1:18, 24; Lu 3:35.

2. [hebr.: She·láh, possivelmente: Petição]. Terceiro filho de Judá com sua esposa cananeia. (1Cr 2:3) Tamar devia ter sido dada a Selá em casamento levirato, mas não foi. (Gên 38:1-5, 11-14, 26) Os descendentes de Selá, dos quais alguns, com os lugares em que se fixaram, são alistados por nome, constituíram a família tribal dos selanitas. Alguns destes retornaram do exílio babilônico. — Núm 26:20; 1Cr 4:21-23; 9:5; Ne 11:5.

SELANITAS [De (Pertencentes a) Selá]. Família de Judá fundada por Selá. (Núm 26:20) Alguns peritos acreditam que "selanita" (em vez de "silonita" do texto massorético) deveria constar em Neemias 11:5, na lista dos que moravam em Jerusalém depois do exílio.

SELEDE [possivelmente duma raiz que significa "pular [de alegria]"]. Filho de Nadabe na divisão jerameelita da genealogia de Judá. Selede morreu sem ter filhos. — 1Cr 2:25, 30.

SELEFE. Segundo filho de Joctã mencionado por nome; fundador de uma das primeiras famílias pós-diluvianas. (Gên 10:26; 1Cr 1:20) Equivalentes árabes deste nome são encontrados em inscrições sabeias (que datam de antes do sétimo século AEC), as quais falam dum distrito iemenita de Salaf ou Salif. Outra forma do nome pode ter sobrevivido em Sulaf, um lugar a uns 100 km ao N de Sanʻa, capital do Iêmen. Estas similaridades, porém, apenas sugerem de modo geral onde os descendentes de Selefe se estabeleceram.

SELEMIAS [Jeová É Recompensa; ou: Sacrifício de Participação em Comum, de Jeová].

1. Porteiro levítico designado por sorte para o L do santuário, durante o reinado de Davi. — 1Cr 26:14; veja MESELEMIAS.

2. Avô de Jeudi, oficial de Jeoiaquim; filho de Cusi. — Je 36:14.

3. Pai de Jeucal (Jucal), mensageiro de Zedequias. — Je 37:3; 38:1.

4. Pai de Irijá, encarregado do Portão de Benjamim, de Jerusalém; filho de Hananias. — Je 37:13.

5. Um dos mensageiros do Rei Jeoiaquim enviado para trazer-lhe Jeremias e Baruque; filho de Abdeel. — Je 36:26.

6, 7. Dois homens alistados entre os filhos ou descendentes de Binui, os quais, depois do retorno de Esdras a Jerusalém, em 468 AEC, despediram suas esposas estrangeiras. — Esd 10:38, 39, 41, 44.

8. Pai do Hananias que ajudou nos reparos da muralha de Jerusalém. — Ne 3:30.

9. Sacerdote, e um daqueles que Neemias, na sua segunda visita a Jerusalém, incumbiu dos depósitos e da distribuição dos dízimos aos respectivos destinatários. — Ne 13:6, 7, 12, 13.

SELES [Terço; Três Partes]. Filho aserita de Helém; cabeça duma família e notável guerreiro. — 1Cr 7:30, 35, 40.

SELÊUCIA. Fortificada cidade portuária do Mediterrâneo, que servia a Antioquia da Síria e ficava a uns 20 km ao SO desta cidade. Os dois lugares eram interligados por estrada; e o navegável rio Orontes, que passava por Antioquia, desembocava no mar Mediterrâneo a pouca distância ao S de Selêucia. Paulo, acompanhado por Barnabé, partiu de navio de Selêucia no começo da sua primeira viagem missionária, por volta de 47 EC. (At 13:4) Embora Selêucia depois não seja mais mencionada no relato de Atos, provavelmente figurava nos eventos narrados ali. (At 14:26; 15:30-41) Para distinguir esta cidade de outros lugares de nome similar no antigo Oriente Médio, ela é às vezes chamada de Selêucia Piéria. Ficava logo ao N da atual Süveydiye, ou Samandag, na Turquia. Os sedimentos do Orontes converteram o antigo porto de Selêucia num brejo.

SELO. Objeto usado para fazer uma impressão (usualmente em argila ou cera) que indica proprietário, autenticidade ou acordo. Os antigos selos consistiam numa peça de material duro (pedra, marfim ou madeira) com letras ou desenhos gravados ao contrário. Eram de diversos formatos, incluindo cones, quadrados, cilindros, escaravelhos e cabeças de animais. (A respeito de anéis de sinete ou de selagem, veja ANEL.) Os que eram em forma de cilindro usualmente tinham de 2 a 4 cm de comprimento. Quando o cilindro com superfície gravada era rolado sobre argila úmida, deixava uma impressão contínua em relevo. Frequentemente, os cilíndricos eram furados de ponta a ponta e assim podiam ser suspensos num cordão.

Símbolos religiosos, bem como plantas, animais e cenas simples, se encontram entre as coisas retratadas em selos egípcios e mesopotâmicos. O selo babilônico de "Tentação" (Museu Britânico) mostra uma árvore com um homem sentado num lado dela e uma mulher no outro lado, e atrás da mulher há uma serpente ereta. Muitas vezes, os selos indicavam o nome e o cargo do seu proprietário. Por exemplo, um selo encontrado na Palestina reza: "Pertence a Sema, ministro de Jeroboão." — The Biblical World (O Mundo Bíblico), editado por C. Pfeiffer, 1966, p. 515.

As impressões de selos podiam indicar o proprietário ou a autenticidade, e podiam impedir a alteração de documentos ou de outras coisas seladas, inclusive bolsas, portas e túmulos. (Jó 14:17; Da 6:17; Mt 27:66) Quando o profeta Jeremias comprou um campo, a cópia da escritura com as assinaturas das testemunhas foi selada, mas uma segunda cópia foi deixada aberta. A selagem talvez fosse feita por se dobrar a escritura para fechá-la, atá-la com um cordão e depois pôr um pouco de cera ou outra substância mole no cordão, imprimindo o material mole com um selo. Mais tarde, se surgisse uma questão a respeito da exatidão do documento aberto, podia-se apresentar a escritura selada perante testemunhas. (Je 32:10-14, 44) O incumbido do selo do rei podia emitir decretos oficiais, que eram autenticados pela impressão do selo. (1Rs 21:8; Est 3:10, 12; 8:2, 8, 10) Apor o selo num documento podia indicar a aceitação dos termos contidos nele. (Ne 9:38; 10:1) Encontraram-se diversas asas de jarros antigos com impressões de selo. Algumas dessas impressões de selo identificavam o dono dos jarros e o conteúdo deles; outras indicavam a quantidade ou a qualidade do conteúdo.

Antigo selo cilíndrico, junto com a impressão em argila; retrata adoradores ao lado duma árvore, com aves aquáticas embaixo.

Uso Figurado. O próprio uso de selos forneceu a base para diversas expressões figuradas encontradas na Bíblia. Predisse-se que o Messias iria "apor um selo à visão e ao profeta". Faria isso porque, pelo cumprimento de profecias, o Messias os marcaria como autênticos e inspirados por Deus. (Da 9:24; compare isso com Jo 3:33.) No sentido duma marca de posse ou de propriedade, Abraão recebeu a circuncisão como "selo" da sua justiça. (Ro 4:11) Visto que o apóstolo Paulo ajudara muitos cristãos coríntios a se tornarem crentes, estes serviam de selo, confirmando a genuinidade do apostolado dele. (1Co 9:1, 2) Fala-se dos cristãos do primeiro século como "selados" por meio do espírito santo, o penhor antecipado da sua herança celestial. (Ef 1:13, 14; 4:30) O selo indica que eles pertencem a Deus (2Co 1:21, 22) e mostra que deveras são candidatos à vida celestial. O livro de Revelação (Apocalipse) mostra que o número dos por fim selados é de 144.000. — Re 7:2-4; 9:4.

A Bíblia chama de selado aquilo que é fechado, escondido ou secreto. Mensagens proféticas estavam 'seladas' enquanto não eram entendidas. (Da 12:4, 9; Re 5:1; 22:10; compare isso com Is 8:16; 29:11.) E de Jeová diz-se que ele 'pôs um selo em volta das estrelas', evidentemente querendo dizer que ele as oculta da vista por meio de nuvens. — Jó 9:7.

SELOMI [duma raiz que significa "paz"]. Aserita cujo filho, maioral, foi designado para ajudar a repartir a Terra da Promessa entre as tribos de Israel. — Núm 34:17, 18, 27.

SELOMITE [duma raiz que significa "paz"].

1. Filha danita de Dibri, cujo filho com um egípcio foi morto no ermo por ultrajar o nome de Jeová. — Le 24:10-14, 23.

2. Levita coatita da família de Izar; também chamado Selomote. — 1Cr 23:12, 18; 24:22.

3. Descendente levítico de Eliézer, filho de Moisés; também chamado Selomote. — 1Cr 26:25-28.

4. Filho do Rei Roboão, de Judá, com sua esposa favorita Maacá; irmão do Rei Abias. — 2Cr 11:20-23; 12:16.

5. Filha do governador Zorobabel. — 1Cr 3:19.

6. Filho de Josifias e cabeça da casa paterna de Bani. Selomite, acompanhado por 160 varões, foi a Jerusalém junto com Esdras. — Esd 8:1, 10.

SELOMOTE [duma raiz que significa "paz"].

1. Cabeça duma casa paterna entre os descendentes de Gérson, filho de Levi. — 1Cr 23:6, 7, 9.

2. Levita coatita da família de Izar; também conhecido como Selomite. — 1Cr 23:12, 18; 24:22.

3. Descendente levítico de Moisés através de seu filho Eliézer. Davi incumbiu Selomote e seus irmãos dos tesouros de coisas sagradas, inclusive do santificado despojo de guerra tomado pelos israelitas. (1Cr 26:25-28) Era também chamado Selomite.

SELUMIEL [Paz de Deus]. Maioral simeonita. Selumiel ajudou no censo nacional feito cerca de um ano após o Êxodo do Egito. Era maioral do exército de Simeão; também, apresentou sua oferta na inauguração do tabernáculo. — Núm 1:4, 6; 2:12; 7:36-41; 10:19.

SEM [Nome; Fama]. Um dos três filhos de Noé; destes "se dispersou toda a população da terra" após o Dilúvio global. — Gên 6:10; 9:18, 19.

Embora os três filhos sejam coerentemente alistados como "Sem, Cã e Jafé", há alguma incerteza a respeito das suas posições relativas segundo a idade. Mencionar-se Sem primeiro não constitui em si mesmo nenhum indício definitivo de que Sem era o primogênito de Noé, visto que o próprio primogênito de Sem (Arpaxade) é alistado em terceiro lugar nos registros genealógicos. (Gên 10:22; 1Cr 1:17) No hebraico original, Gênesis 10:21 permite mais do que uma única possível tradução, referindo-se algumas traduções a Sem como "irmão de Jafé, o mais velho ["sênior", KJ]", ao passo que outras o chamam de "irmão mais velho de Jafé". (Al, ALA, BJ, CBC, MC, PIB, So) As versões antigas igualmente divergem — a Septuaginta, a tradução de Símaco e o Targum de Onkelos apresentam Jafé como o mais velho, ao passo que o Pentateuco Samaritano, a Vulgata latina e as versões siríacas colocam Sem como o irmão mais velho de Jafé. O peso da evidência encontrada no restante da Bíblia, porém, indica que Sem provavelmente era o segundo filho de Noé, mais moço do que Jafé.

O registro mostra que Noé começou a gerar filhos depois de chegar aos 500 anos de idade (2470 AEC), ocorrendo o Dilúvio no seu 600.º ano. (Gên 5:32; 7:6) Declara-se que Sem, já casado na época do Dilúvio (Gên 6:18), gerou seu primeiro filho, Arpaxade, dois anos após o Dilúvio (2368 AEC), quando ele, Sem, tinha 100 anos de idade. (Gên 11:10) Isto significaria que Sem nasceu quando Noé tinha 502 anos de idade (2468 AEC); e visto que Cã parece ser mencionado como "filho mais moço" (Gên 9:24), Jafé seria logicamente o primeiro filho nascido a Noé, quando ele tinha 500 anos de idade.

Depois do nascimento de Arpaxade, nasceram a Sem outros filhos (e também filhas), inclusive Elão, Assur, Lude e Arã. (Gên 10:22; 11:11) Depois de Arã, o relato paralelo em 1 Crônicas 1:17 alista também "Uz, e Hul, e Géter, e Más", mas, em Gênesis 10:23, mostra-se que estes eram filhos de Arã. A evidência bíblica e evidências históricas indicam que Sem foi assim o progenitor dos povos semíticos: os elamitas, os assírios, os primitivos caldeus, os hebreus, os arameus (ou sírios), diversas tribos árabes e talvez os lídios da Ásia Menor. Isto significaria que a população descendente de Sem ficou concentrada principalmente no canto sudoeste do continente asiático, estendendo-se através da maior parte do Crescente Fértil e ocupando uma considerável parte da península Arábica. — Veja os artigos sob os nomes dos respectivos filhos de Sem.

Quando Sem e seu irmão Jafé cobriram a nudez de seu pai, na ocasião em que Noé ficou dominado pelo vinho, eles não somente mostraram respeito filial, mas também respeito por aquele que Deus tinha usado para realizar a preservação deles durante o Dilúvio. (Gên 9:20-23) Depois, na bênção proferida por Noé, indicou-se que a linhagem de Sem seria especialmente favorecida por Deus e contribuiria para a santificação do nome de Deus, Noé chamando a Jeová de "Deus de Sem". (Gên 9:26) Foi de Sem, através de seu filho Arpaxade, que Abraão descendeu, e a este foi dada a promessa a respeito da Semente, em que todas as famílias da terra receberiam uma bênção. (1Cr 1:24-27; Gên 12:1-3; 22:15-18) A predição de Noé, de Canaã tornar-se "escravo" de Sem, cumpriu-se quando os semitas subjugaram os cananeus em resultado da conquista da terra de Canaã por Israel. — Gên 9:26.

Sem viveu 500 anos depois de gerar Arpaxade, falecendo à idade de 600 anos. (Gên 11:10, 11) Sua morte ocorreu assim uns 13 anos depois da morte de Sara (1881 AEC) e dez anos depois do casamento de Isaque e Rebeca (1878 AEC). Em vista disso, sugeriu-se que Sem talvez fosse o Melquisedeque (que significa "Rei da Justiça"), o rei-sacerdote a quem Abraão pagou dízimos. (Gên 14:18-20) Todavia, o registro bíblico não diz isso, e o apóstolo Paulo mostra que não se dispõe de nenhum registro genealógico ou de outras estatísticas vitais a respeito de Melquisedeque, de modo que ele se tornou tipo bem próprio de Cristo Jesus, que é perpetuamente Rei-Sacerdote. — He 7:1-3.

SEMA [1-4: Som Melodioso].

1. Filho de Hébron e pai de Raão, na linhagem dos descendentes de Judá através de Calebe. — 1Cr 2:42-44.

2. Descendente de Rubem. — 1Cr 5:3, 8.

3. Cabeça duma casa benjamita que se estabeleceu em Aijalom, e um dos que expulsaram os habitantes de Gate. (1Cr 8:12, 13) Provavelmente o Simei de 1 Crônicas 8:21, identificado ali como pai de nove filhos. — 1Cr 8:19-21.

4. Um dos seis que ficaram à direita de Esdras quando ele leu a Lei para o povo reunido; provavelmente era sacerdote. — Ne 8:4.

5. Cidade dentro do território meridional de Judá (Jos 15:21, 26), talvez a cidade de Seba encravada em Simeão. (Jos 19:1, 2) Alguns sugerem que era a mesma que Jesua e a identificam com Tell es-Saʽweh (Tel Yeshuʽa), a uns 15 km ao ENE de Berseba.

SEMAÁ [duma raiz que significa "ouvir; escutar"]. Benjamita de Gibeá, cujos dois filhos, Aiezer e Joás se bandearam de Saul para Davi em Ziclague. — 1Cr 12:1-3.

SEMAÍAS [que significa "Jeová Ouviu (Escutou)"].

1. Simeonita cujo descendente distante participou da expedição que se apoderou de territórios de pastagens dos cananeus, nos dias de Ezequias. — 1Cr 4:24, 37-41.

2. Filho de Joel da tribo de Rubem. — 1Cr 5:3, 4.

3. Chefe da casa levítica de Elizafã. Semaías e 200 de seus irmãos, depois de se terem santificado, estavam na procissão que levou a Arca do Pacto para Jerusalém. — 1Cr 15:4, 8, 11-16.

4. Secretário dos levitas que registrou as 24 turmas sacerdotais organizadas segundo as instruções de Davi; filho de Netanel. — 1Cr 24:6.

5. Primogênito de Obede-Edom, levita. Semaías e seus filhos foram todos alistados como porteiros incumbidos dos armazéns do santuário. — 1Cr 26:1, 4, 6, 7, 12, 13, 15.

6. Profeta de Jeová durante o reinado de Roboão, filho de Salomão. Depois da revolta das dez tribos setentrionais, em 997 AEC, Semaías proferiu as palavras de Jeová proibindo a tentativa de Roboão de reconquistá-las. (1Rs 12:21-24; 2Cr 11:1-4) No quinto ano de Roboão (993 AEC), o rei egípcio Sisaque invadiu Judá, e Semaías informou Roboão e seus príncipes que Jeová os abandonara, visto que eles O haviam abandonado. Todavia, visto que Roboão e os príncipes se humilharam, Jeová amainou a destrutividade da invasão. (2Cr 12:1-2) Semaías fez também um dos registros escritos do reinado de Roboão. — 2Cr 12:15.

7. Um dos levitas enviados pelo Rei Jeosafá, no seu terceiro ano (934 AEC) para ensinar a Lei nas cidades de Judá. — 2Cr 17:7-9.

8. Descendente levítico de Jedutum, comissionado por Ezequias no seu primeiro ano de governo (745 AEC) a ajudar a limpar o templo. Semaías e os outros levitas levaram as coisas imundas para baixo ao vale do Cédron. (2Cr 29:12, 14-16) Possivelmente é o mesmo que o N.º 9.

9. Um dos levitas que distribuíam os dízimos e as outras contribuições nas cidades dos sacerdotes, durante o reinado de Ezequias. (2Cr 31:6, 12, 14, 15) Possivelmente é o mesmo que o N.º 8.

10. Um dos maiorais levíticos que fizeram uma generosa contribuição de vítimas animais para a grande celebração da Páscoa por Josias. — 2Cr 35:1, 9.

11. Pai de Urijá, profeta contemporâneo de Jeremias; de Quiriate-Jearim. — Je 26:20.

12. Pai de Delaías, príncipe de Judá durante o reinado de Jeoiaquim. — Je 36:12.

13. Falso profeta da cidade de Neelão e opositor de Jeremias, levado cativo a Babilônia junto com Joaquim, em 617 AEC. De lá escreveu ao sacerdote Sofonias e a sacerdotes associados em Jerusalém, condenando Jeremias por predizer um prolongado exílio e por exortar os exilados a se acomodarem em Babilônia. Semaías argumentou que Jeremias devia ser posto no tronco. Jeová, porém, profetizou que, por Semaías tentar fazer os judeus confiar numa falsidade e por falar em franca revolta, nem ele nem sua descendência estariam entre os exilados que retornariam. — Je 29:24-32.

14. Sacerdote, e provavelmente fundador duma família sacerdotal, que retornou a Jerusalém junto com Zorobabel, em 537 AEC. Na geração seguinte, Jeonatã encabeçava a casa paterna de Semaías. (Ne 12:1, 6, 7, 12, 18) Seu representante, ou outro sacerdote do mesmo nome, atestou o pacto nacional feito durante a governadoria de Neemias. — Ne 10:1, 8.

15. Levita descendente de Jedutum, cujo filho ou descendente Obadias morava em Jerusalém depois do exílio. — 1Cr 9:16, 34.

16. Levita dos descendentes de Merari, que também morava em Jerusalém algum tempo depois do exílio babilônico; filho de Hassube. — 1Cr 9:14, 34; Ne 11:15.

17. Líder dos filhos de Adonicão que acompanharam Esdras a Jerusalém, em 468 AEC. Ele possivelmente é um daqueles que Esdras despachara para pedir ministros para o santuário, o que resultou no ajuntamento de alguns levitas e de netineus para a viagem. — Esd 8:1, 13, 16-20.

18. Um dos sacerdotes que Esdras, ao chegar a Jerusalém, incentivou a despedir as esposas estrangeiras que haviam tomado; filho de Harim. — Esd 10:10, 11, 21, 44.

19. Um dos israelitas, filho de outro Harim, que também haviam tomado esposas estrangeiras, mas que as despediram. — Esd 10:25, 31, 44.

20. Um daqueles que ajudaram a reparar a muralha de Jerusalém; filho de Secanias e porteiro, portanto, provavelmente levita. — Ne 3:29.

21. O falso profeta contratado por Tobias e Sambalá para falar a Neemias sobre uma suposta ameaça à sua vida, tentando assim amedrontar Neemias, que não era sacerdote, a cometer o pecado de se esconder no templo. Filho de Delaías. — Ne 6:10-13.

22. Um dos que participaram da marcha inaugural organizada por Neemias depois de a muralha de Jerusalém ter sido reconstruída. — Ne 12:31-34.

23. Sacerdote da família de Asafe, cujo descendente marchou na mesma procissão, evidentemente como trombeteiro. — Ne 12:31, 35.

24. Músico sacerdotal na mesma procissão; pelo visto era parente do N.º 23. — Ne 12:31, 36.

25. Sacerdote que parece ter tocado trombeta quando os dois coros de agradecimento se encontraram na casa de Jeová, por ocasião da inauguração da muralha. — Ne 12:40-42.

26. Descendente distante de Davi. (1Cr 3:9, 10, 22) Alguns peritos acham que as palavras "e os filhos de Semaías", no meio do versículo 22 (seguido por apenas cinco nomes), deviam ser omitidas como erro de escriba, atribuindo assim seis filhos a Secanias. Todavia, outros peritos sugerem que Semaías e seus cinco filhos foram contados como os seis descendentes de Secanias.

SEMANA. A palavra hebraica para "semana" (sha·vú·a') refere-se literalmente a uma unidade ou período sétuplo. A palavra grega sáb·ba·ton, por sua vez, deriva da palavra hebraica para sábado (shab·báth).

A contagem dos dias em ciclos de sete remonta aos primórdios da história do homem. O precedente para tal divisão do tempo foi estabelecido por Jeová Deus ao dividir seu período de obra criativa em seis dias, ou unidades de tempo, coroado por um sétimo dia de repouso. (Gên 2:2, 3) A seguir, a próxima referência a um ciclo de sete dias encontramos no caso de Noé, na época do Dilúvio, mas não se menciona um sétimo dia de descanso. (Gên 7:4, 10; 8:10, 12) Períodos de sete dias eram observados com respeito a casamentos em Padã-Arã e na Filístia. (Gên 29:27, 28; Jz 14:12, 17) Observou-se também um período de sete dias no funeral de Jacó. (Gên 50:10) Todavia, o registro bíblico não mostra que estes primitivos períodos de sete dias se ajustassem a um arranjo semanal com um dia regular para começar, seguido por outros períodos comparáveis de sete dias. Entre alguns povos antigos, os ciclos de sete dias eram governados pelas quatro fases da lua e recomeçados a cada lua nova. Visto que o mês lunar é de 29 ou de 30 dias, isto não permite ciclos inteiramente consecutivos de sete dias.

Uma referência primitiva a um período de dez dias é encontrado em Gênesis 24:55. No antigo Egito, o tempo era dividido em ciclos de dez dias (havendo três deles em cada mês), e os israelitas obviamente ficaram familiarizados com isso durante a sua longa estada no Egito.

Sob a Lei. É primeiro relacionada com as instruções a respeito da Páscoa que encontramos uma ordem divina exigindo a observância de um período específico de sete dias. Este período tornou-se a anual Festividade dos Pães Não Fermentados, que depois era celebrada pelos israelitas após a Páscoa. Tanto o primeiro como o sétimo ou último dia eram dias de descanso. — Êx 12:14-20; 13:6-10.

Instituído o sábado. No entanto, depois da inauguração desta semana especial seguiu-se um período de cerca de um mês, durante o qual os israelitas viajavam no seu Êxodo do Egito, e neste período não se faz nenhuma menção de uma observância semanal por eles que terminasse num sétimo dia de descanso. Depois do 15.º dia do segundo mês após a sua saída da terra do Egito, Jeová começou a dar-lhes o maná, e foi neste tempo que eles foram pela primeira vez instruídos a respeito duma observância regular do sábado, todo sétimo dia. (Êx 16:1, 4, 5, 22-30) Essa observância sabática, necessariamente, resultou numa consecutiva divisão semanal de dias sem vinculação com os períodos lunares mensais. Depois, foi tornado um estatuto legal de Deus no pacto da Lei dado por meio de Moisés à nação de Israel. — Êx 20:8-11; De 5:12-15.

Períodos festivos. Naturalmente, havia certos períodos festivos de sete dias de duração, estabelecidos na Lei e que não necessariamente começavam ou terminavam em harmonia com a semana regular governada pelo sábado. Eles começavam em determinado dia do mês lunar; portanto, cada ano, o dia inicial caía em dia diferente da semana. Era assim com a Festividade dos Pães Não Fermentados, que se seguia à Páscoa e que ocorria em 15-21 de nisã, e com a Festividade das Barracas, em 15-21 de etanim. Também a Festividade das Semanas, ou Pentecostes, baseava-se numa contagem de sete semanas mais um dia, mas as sete semanas começavam a contar a partir de 16 de nisã e assim nem sempre coincidiam com as semanas regulares que terminavam nos sábados regulares. — Êx 12:2, 6, 14-20; Le 23:5-7, 15, 16; De 16:9, 10, 13.

Os dias da semana não recebiam nome, mas eram simplesmente numerados, a exceção sendo o sétimo dia, chamado de "sábado". (Êx 20:8) Isto ocorria também nos dias de Jesus e dos seus apóstolos, embora o dia antes do sábado passasse a ser chamado de "Preparação". — Mt 28:1; At 20:7; Mr 15:42; Jo 19:31.

Períodos de sete dias e de sete anos. Por causa da importância que o pacto da Lei atribuía ao sábado, ou sétimo dia, a palavra "sábado" era costumeiramente usada para representar a semana inteira de sete dias. (Le 23:15, 16) Era igualmente usada para se referir ao sétimo ano, que era um ano sabático de descanso para a terra. E representava também o inteiro período de sete anos, ou semana de anos, terminando num ano sabático. (Le 25:2-8) A Míxena judaica usa repetidas vezes a expressão "semana de anos". — Shevi'it 4:7-9; Sanhedrin 5:1; veja SETENTA SEMANAS (Uma Profecia Messiânica).

SEMANAS, FESTIVIDADE DAS. Veja o artigo PENTECOSTES.

SEMAQUIAS [Jeová Sustentou]. Neto levítico de Obede-Edom, designado como porteiro ao S do santuário, durante o reinado de Davi. Semaquias e seus irmãos carnais são elogiados por sua capacidade. — 1Cr 26:1, 4, 6-8, 15.

SEMARIAS [que significa "Jeová Resguardou"].

1. Um dos guerreiros benjamitas, ambidestros, que se juntaram a Davi enquanto este era fugitivo em Ziclague. — 1Cr 12:1, 2, 5.

2. Filho do Rei Roboão, portanto, bisneto de Davi. — 2Cr 11:18, 19.

3. Um dos filhos de Harim, que despediram suas esposas estrangeiras, e os filhos, quando Esdras voltou a Jerusalém. — Esd 10:31, 32, 44.

4. Um dos filhos de Binui, que também haviam tomado esposas estrangeiras, mas que as despediram. — Esd 10:38, 41, 44.

SEMEADOR, SEMEAR. O método antigo de semeadura, ou de lançar sementes na terra para o plantio, em geral era feito por se espalhar a semente manualmente. O semeador levava as sementes de cereal na dobra da sua veste ou num recipiente. Tirando-as dali, espalhava-as diante de si com a mão num amplo gesto semicircular. Em Israel, a sementeira estendia-se desde por volta de outubro até a primeira parte de março, dependendo da espécie de cereal a ser plantada.

A Bênção de Jeová. É Jeová quem fornece a semente e o processo do crescimento, bem como o sol e a chuva, pelos quais o campo produz múltiplos da quantidade que se plantou. (2Sa 23:3, 4; Is 55:10) Toda a humanidade, quer justa quer iníqua, recebe assim benefícios do Criador. — Mt 5:45; At 14:15-17.

No entanto, Jeová Deus, em geral, não exerce controle específico sobre os fatores que tornam possível o crescimento. Portanto, os iníquos, às vezes, podem usufruir uma colheita abundante, ao passo que os justos, por sofrerem condições adversas, talvez tenham safra ruim. — Veja Jó 21:7-24.

Por outro lado, quando convém ao seu propósito, Jeová pode abençoar o semeador e dar-lhe abundantes safras, ou pode causar escassez de produtos agrícolas, dependendo da fidelidade do semeador e da sua obediência a Ele. Por exemplo, era do propósito de Jeová fazer de Israel uma grande e numerosa nação na Terra da Promessa, de modo que abençoava abundantemente seus servos obedientes. Quando Isaque peregrinava em Canaã, embora fosse hostilizado pelos nativos daquela terra, Jeová o abençoou, de modo que sua semeadura resultou numa colheita na proporção de até cem medidas por uma medida semeada. — Gên 26:12.

A condição espiritual de Israel determinava a espécie de colheita que teria. Jeová disse-lhes antes de entrarem na Terra da Promessa: "Se continuardes a andar nos meus estatutos e a guardar os meus mandamentos, e deveras os cumprirdes, . . . a vossa debulha há de alcançar a vossa vindima e a vindima alcançará a sementeira." As safras seriam tão abundantes, que não se terminaria com a colheita antes da época para a sementeira da próxima safra. (Veja Am 9:13.) Por outro lado, Deus advertiu: "Se não me escutardes, nem cumprirdes todos estes mandamentos, . . . semeareis simplesmente em vão a vossa semente, visto que os vossos inimigos certamente a comerão." E acrescentou: "A vossa terra não dará a sua produção." (Le 26:3-5, 14-16, 20; compare isso com Ag 1:6.) Mais tarde, nos dias do profeta Jeremias, a advertência de Jeová mostrou-se veraz. Descrevendo as péssimas condições deles, Israel disse: "Semearam trigo, mas ceifaram espinhos." — Je 12:13.

A Lei de Israel Referente à Semeadura. Na Lei dada por meio de Moisés, Deus ordenou que a terra fosse semeada por seis anos, mas não se devia fazer nenhuma semeadura nem colheita durante o sétimo ano (o ano sabático), nem no ano de jubileu. (Êx 23:10, 11; Le 25:3, 4, 11) Isto servia de prova para a sua fé e dava-lhes mais tempo para empenhos em coisas espirituais; era também bom para o solo.

Visto que a terra era de Jeová, em certo sentido ela era santa, e o povo dele era santo. Portanto, ti-nha de se tomar cuidado para impedir qualquer espécie de aviltamento. Por exemplo, se o cadáver de um animal impuro, de um rato ou de um lagarto, caísse sobre uma semente úmida, esta era impura para uso, ao passo que, se a semente estava seca, ela era pura. Sem dúvida, isso se devia a que a umidade tende a propagar a impureza nas sementes. — Le 11:31, 37, 38.

Tampouco se permitia a mistura de sementes diferentes na semeadura, embora se pudessem lançar sementes de espécies diferentes, cada uma em lugares separados no mesmo campo. (Le 19:19; Is 28:25) Isto talvez fosse para lembrar aos israelitas sua separação e distinção como povo de Deus, sob o Reinado dele. Caso um israelita violasse esta lei, misturando duas espécies de semente, todo o produto do seu campo ou vinhedo tornava-se uma coisa "devotada". Passava assim a pertencer ao santuário. — De 22:9; veja Le 27:28; Núm 18:14.

Uso Ilustrativo. Ilustrando o cuidado que Jeová tinha com o restante que retornou de Babilônia e a bênção que lhe deu, o salmista escreveu: "Os que semeiam com lágrimas ceifarão com clamor jubilante. Aquele que sem falta sair, mesmo chorando, carregando uma bolsa cheia de semente, sem falta entrará com clamor jubilante, carregando seus feixes." (Sal 126:1, 5, 6) Os que retornaram de Babilônia sentiram-se muito felizes com a sua soltura, mas talvez chorassem ao lançar semente no solo desolado que não havia sido lavrado por 70 anos. Não obstante, Jeová os havia trazido de volta por causa do Seu nome, e os que passaram a semear e a reconstruir usufruíram os frutos dos seus labores. Por algum tempo, quando se interrompeu a construção do templo, Jeová reteve os frutos da terra, mas, por meio dos profetas Ageu e Zacarias, o povo foi novamente incentivado à atividade e recebeu de novo o favor de Deus. — Ag 1:6, 9-11; 2:15-19.

Jeová usa os processos da semeadura e do crescimento para ilustrar a eficácia certa da sua palavra. — Is 55:10, 11.

Diligência e generosidade. Salomão estabeleceu um princípio relacionado com a generosidade e com o trabalho diligente, ao escrever: "Quem vigiar o vento, não semeará; e quem olhar para as nuvens, não ceifará." Quem se refreia, esperando uma época em que tudo lhe pareça plena e perfeitamente favorável para fazer a obra que Deus lhe deu, ou que procura uma desculpa para evitar a obra, não receberá nada de Deus. Antes, Salomão recomenda diligência, pois, diz ele no versículo 5 , é Deus quem "faz todas as coisas" e o homem não entende todos os modos de atuar de Deus. Por conseguinte, ele aconselha: "Semeia de manhã a tua semente, e não descanse a tua mão até a noitinha; pois não sabes onde esta terá bom êxito, quer aqui quer ali, ou se ambas serão igualmente boas." — Ec 11:4-6.

O apóstolo Paulo parece ter tido a mesma ideia ao incentivar os cristãos em Corinto à generosidade relacionada com a administração de socorros aos irmãos em Jerusalém, que haviam sofrido dificuldades e haviam perdido muitos dos seus bens devido à perseguição movida a eles pelos judeus. Paulo disse: "Quem semear parcimoniosamente, ceifará também parcimoniosamente; e quem semear generosamente, ceifará também generosamente. . . . Ademais, Deus é capaz de fazer abundar para vós toda a sua benignidade imerecida, para que, embora tenhais sempre plena autossuficiência em tudo, tenhais bastante para toda boa obra. . . . Ora, quem supre abundantemente semente ao semeador e pão para comer vos fornecerá e multiplicará semente para semear e aumentará os produtos da vossa justiça." Paulo salienta então o bem que resulta em adição ao favor de Deus e à abundância em sentido material, a saber, que essa generosidade resulta em agradecimentos a Deus e na glorificação Dele, junto com o amor e as orações dos ajudados a favor dos que prestam a ajuda. Há também maior amor na congregação. — 2Co 9:6-14.

Pregação das boas novas. Jesus Cristo comparou a semeadura à pregação da palavra, das boas novas do Reino. Ele era o Semeador das verdades do Reino, e João, o Batizador, também havia trabalhado como semeador. Os discípulos de Jesus foram enviados para colher os campos semeados e que estavam brancos para a colheita. Por isso lhe disse: "Desde já o ceifeiro está recebendo salário e está ajuntando fruto para a vida eterna, para que o semeador e o ceifeiro se alegrem juntos. . . . Um é o semeador e outro o ceifador. Eu vos mandei ceifar aquilo em que não labutastes. Outros labutaram [na semeadura], e vós entrastes no proveito do seu labor [por fazer a colheita]." — Jo 4:35-38.

Novamente, Jesus, na ilustração do semeador, comparou a pregação à semeadura. Nesta parábola, a semente lançada é "a palavra do reino". Jesus salientou que as condições em que se lança a semente podem afetar a germinação e o crescimento da semente no coração dos homens. — Mt 13:1-9, 18-23; Lu 8:5-15.

O trigo e o joio. Em outra ilustração, Jesus comparou a si mesmo a um semeador de semente excelente, e a semente aos "filhos do reino". Outro semeador, um inimigo que lança joio no campo, é o Diabo. Com isso Jesus evidentemente predizia a apostasia que viria quando, nas congregações cristãs e entre elas, surgissem homens afirmando falsamente ser servos de Deus, tentando profanar a congregação e desviar os discípulos. — Mt 13:24-30, 36-43; compare isso com At 20:29; 2Co 11:12-15; 2Te 2:3-9; 1Ti 4:1; 2Ti 4:3, 4; 2Pe 2:1-3.

'Semear visando a carne.' O apóstolo Paulo, depois de enumerar os frutos do espírito e as obras da carne, e de admoestar cada um a provar quais são as suas próprias obras, disse: "Não vos deixeis desencaminhar: De Deus não se mofa. Pois, o que o homem semear, isso também ceifará; porque aquele que semeia visando a sua carne, ceifará da carne corrupção, mas aquele que semeia visando o espírito, ceifará do espírito vida eterna." — Gál 5:19-23; 6:4, 7, 8.

Um exemplo de semear visando a carne, com o que resulta disso, foi citado por Paulo em Romanos 1:24-27. Outros exemplos eram a pessoa incestuosa na congregação de Corinto, que praticava coisas carnais, impuras; também Himeneu e Alexandre, que promoviam ensino impuro e blasfêmia, e que foram entregues a Satanás "para a destruição da carne", isto é, para eliminar tais elementos carnais da congregação. — 1Co 5:1, 5; 1Ti 1:20; 2Ti 2:17, 18.

Instruir a congregação e cuidar dela. Quando Paulo escreveu aos da congregação em Corinto, ele comparou sua instrução e sua ajuda à congregação à semeadura, e explicou-lhes que, por fazer isso, ele tinha autoridade para receber deles coisas materiais para lhe ajudar a efetuar seu ministério. Mas não recorreu a isso, a fim de não criar impedimento às boas novas. — 1Co 9:11, 12.

Assim como o lavrador semeia em paz, assim as boas novas são semeadas em paz, não com altercações, lutas e tumultos, nem com o uso de força. E os homens que fazem a semeadura são homens pacíficos, não briguentos, beligerantes ou tumultuosos. Portanto, precisa haver condições pacíficas na congregação cristã para que a sua semeadura produza frutos da justiça. — Tg 3:18.

Ressurreição. Ao considerar a ressurreição espiritual, Paulo comparou o sepultamento do corpo físico a lançar uma semente, declarando: "Não obstante, alguém dirá: 'Como hão de ser levantados os mortos? Sim, com que sorte de corpo hão de vir?' Ó desarrazoado! Aquilo que semeias não é vivificado a menos que primeiro morra; e, quanto ao que semeias, semeias, não o corpo que se há de desenvolver, mas o mero grão, seja de trigo, seja de qualquer dos outros; mas Deus lhe dá um corpo assim como lhe agrada, e a cada uma das sementes o seu próprio corpo. . . . E há corpos celestes e corpos terrestres . . . Assim também é a ressurreição dos mortos. Semeia-se em corrupção, é levantado em incorrupção. . . . Semeia-se corpo físico, é levantado corpo espiritual. . . . Pois isto que é corruptível tem de revestir-se de incorrupção e isto que é mortal tem de revestir-se de imortalidade." — 1Co 15:35-53.

Os escolhidos por Deus para serem co-herdeiros de seu Filho, e para receberem a incorrupção e a imortalidade, têm de morrer e deixar o corpo de carne, a fim de obter um corpo celestial por meio da ressurreição. Isto é similar ao modo em que a semente plantada 'morre', se desintegra e é de forma e aparência inteiramente diferentes da planta resultante.

Quanto à consideração da semeadura mencionada em Isaías 28:24, com seu significado ilustrativo, veja ARAR (LAVRAR).

SEMEBER. Rei de Zeboim, derrotado por Quedorlaomer e seus aliados na baixada de Sidim. — Gên 14:1-11.

SEMEDE. Cabeça duma casa ancestral em Benjamim; filho ou descendente de Elpaal. — 1Cr 8:1, 12, 13.

SEMEI. Descendente de Davi e antepassado de Maria, mãe de Jesus. — Lu 3:26.

SEMENTE (DESCENDENTE). A palavra hebraica zé·ra' e a grega spér·ma, que significam literalmente "semente", ocorrem muitas vezes nas Escrituras, com os seguintes usos ou aplicações: (a) agrícola ou botânico, (b) fisiológico, e (c) figurativo para "descendente".

Agrícola, Botânico. A economia de Israel era primariamente agrícola, falando-se por isso muito sobre semear, plantar e colher, e frequentemente se menciona "semente", a primeira ocorrência estando no registro sobre o terceiro dia criativo da terra. Jeová ordenou: "Faça a terra brotar relva, vegetação que dê semente, árvores frutíferas que deem fruto segundo as suas espécies, cuja semente esteja nele, sobre a terra." (Gên 1:11, 12, 29) Ali, o Criador revelou seu propósito de revestir a terra de vegetação pela reprodução através de sementes, mantendo separadas as diversas espécies criadas, para que cada uma se reproduzisse "segundo a sua espécie" pela sua própria semente distinta.

Fisiológico. O termo hebraico zé·ra' é usado em sentido fisiológico em Levítico 15:16-18; 18:20, com referência à emissão de sêmen. Em Levítico 12:2, a forma causativa do verbo za·rá' (semear) em muitas traduções é vertida pela expressão "conceber" ou "conceber semente". Em Números 5:28, ocorre uma forma passiva de za·rá' junto com zé·ra' e é traduzida por "feita grávida por sêmen" (NM), "fecundada de sêmen" (Sábado Dinotos; Yg) e "conceberá semente" (Al; Tr).

Uso Figurado. Na maioria dos casos em que a palavra zé·ra' ocorre na Bíblia, ela é usada com referência a descendência ou prole. A descendência animal é chamada por este termo em Gênesis 7:3 (veja n). Os descendentes humanos de Noé são chamados assim em Gênesis 9:9 (n); os da mulher Agar, em Gênesis 16:10. Deus mandou que Abrão e seu "descendente [literalmente: semente]" natural fossem circuncidados em sinal do pacto que Deus fazia com eles. — Gên 17:7-11.

A palavra grega spér·ma é usada nas mesmas aplicações que a hebraica zé·ra'. (Veja Mt 13:24; 1Co 15:38; He 11:11; Jo 7:42, onde "descendente" e "descendência" é literalmente "semente".) Jesus Cristo usou a palavra aparentada spó·ros (coisa semeada) para simbolizar a palavra de Deus. — Lu 8:11.

Um Segredo Sagrado. Na ocasião em que Deus julgou Adão e Eva, ele proferiu uma profecia que deu esperança à prole deles, dizendo à serpente: "Porei inimizade entre ti e a mulher, e entre o teu descendente [lit.: semente] e o seu descendente [semente]. Ele te machucará a cabeça e tu lhe machucarás o calcanhar." (Gên 3:15) Desde o começo, a identidade da prometida 'semente' era um segredo sagrado de Deus.

Esta declaração profética revelou que haveria um libertador que destruiria aquele que realmente foi representado pela serpente, a saber, a grande serpente e inimigo de Deus, Satanás, o Diabo. (Re 12:9) Indicou também que o Diabo teria uma 'semente'. Levaria tempo para as duas sementes serem produzidas e para se desenvolver inimizade entre elas.

A semente da Serpente. Notamos que, quando a Bíblia fala de "semente" em sentido simbólico, não se refere a filhos ou descendentes literais, mas àqueles que seguem o modelo de seu "pai" simbólico, os que têm o espírito ou a disposição dele. Caim, primeiro filho de Adão e Eva, é um exemplo de um dos da descendência da Serpente. O apóstolo João escreveu de forma esclarecedora sobre este ponto: "Os filhos de Deus e os filhos do Diabo evidenciam-se pelo seguinte fato: Todo aquele que não está praticando a justiça não se origina de Deus, nem aquele que não ama seu irmão. Porque esta é a mensagem que ouvistes desde o princípio, que devemos ter amor uns pelos outros; não como Caim, que se originou do iníquo e que matou a seu irmão. E por que causa o matou? Porque as suas próprias obras eram iníquas, mas as de seu irmão eram justas." — 1Jo 3:10-12; compare isso com Jo 8:44.

De modo que a semente da Serpente, no decorrer dos séculos, eram aqueles que tinham o espírito do Diabo, que odiavam a Deus e combatiam o povo Dele, e incluía especialmente as pessoas religiosas que afirmavam servir a Deus, mas que na realidade eram falsas, hipócritas. Jesus identificou os líderes religiosos judeus dos seus dias como fazendo parte da semente da Serpente, dizendo-lhes: "Serpentes, descendência [gr.: gen·né·ma·ta, "gerados"] de víboras, como haveis de fugir do julgamento da Geena?" — Mt 23:33, Int.

Houve uma revelação gradual dos aspectos do segredo de Deus a respeito da prometida 'semente' da mulher. As questões a serem respondidas eram: Seria a semente celestial ou terrestre? Se fosse espiritual ou celestial, seguiria apesar disso um rumo terrestre? Seria a semente uma só ou constituiria muitas? Como destruiria a Serpente e libertaria a humanidade?

Conforme já se mostrou, a serpente a que Jeová dirigiu as palavras registradas em Gênesis 3:15 não era o animal rastejante. Obviamente, este era incapaz de entender uma questão tal como a envolvida aqui, um desafio à soberania de Jeová. Portanto, conforme desenvolvimentos posteriores revelaram, Deus falou a um indivíduo inteligente, a seu arqui-inimigo, Satanás, o Diabo. O livro de Jó esclarece-nos este assunto, visto que encontramos ali Satanás apresentando a Jeová Deus sua acusação contra a integridade de Jó para sustentar seu desafio à soberania de Deus. (Jó 1:6-12; 2:1-5) Portanto, o "pai" da semente da serpente não seria uma literal serpente animal, mas um "pai" angélico, espiritual, Satanás, o Diabo.

A espiritual 'semente da mulher'. Portanto, não importa como homens fiéis da antiguidade talvez encarassem esta questão, à luz das Escrituras Cristãs torna-se claro que a prometida 'semente da mulher' teria de ser mais do que humana, a fim de poder 'machucar a cabeça' deste inimigo espiritual, esta pessoa angélica, o Diabo. A 'semente' teria de ser uma poderosa pessoa espiritual. Como seria providenciada, e quem seria sua 'mãe', a "mulher"?

A próxima menção registrada da 'semente' prometida foi feita mais de 2.000 anos depois ao fiel Abraão. Abraão era da linhagem de Sem, e, numa profecia anterior, Noé chamara a Jeová de "Deus de Sem". (Gên 9:26) Isto indicava que Sem tinha o favor de Deus. No tempo de Abraão, predisse-se que o "descendente [lit.: semente]" da promessa viria por meio de Abraão. (Gên 15:5; 22:15-18) A bênção do sacerdote Melquisedeque sobre Abraão confirmou isso adicionalmente. (Gên 14:18-20) Ao passo que a declaração de Deus a Abraão revelava que Abraão teria descendência, esclarecia também que a linhagem ancestral da profeticamente prometida 'semente' de libertação deveras seguiria um rumo terrestre.

Predita uma só pessoa. Referindo-se à prole de Abraão e de outros, os termos hebraico e grego, usados no singular, usualmente se referem a essa prole em sentido coletivo. Parece haver um forte motivo pelo qual se usou tantas vezes o termo coletivo zé·ra', 'semente', em vez de a palavra estritamente plural ba·ním, "filhos" (singular: ben), com referência à descendência de Abraão. O apóstolo Paulo aponta para este fato ao explicar que, quando Deus falou das bênçãos que adviriam por meio da semente de Abraão, ele referiu-se primariamente a uma só pessoa, a saber, Cristo. Paulo disse: "Ora, as promessas foram feitas a Abraão e a seu descendente [lit.: semente]. Não diz: 'E a descendentes [lit.: sementes; gr.: spér·ma·sin]', como no caso de muitos, mas como no caso de um só: 'E a teu descendente [semente; gr.: spér·ma·ti]', que é Cristo." — Gál 3:16.

Alguns peritos têm objetado à declaração de Paulo a respeito do uso singular e plural de 'semente'. Salientam que, no hebraico, a palavra para "semente" (zé·ra'), quando usada para descendência, nunca muda de forma. Também, os verbos e adjetivos acompanhantes por si só não indicam a singularidade ou pluralidade intencionada com a palavra "semente". Embora seja assim, há outro fator que demonstra que a explicação de Paulo era tanto gramatical como doutrinalmente exata. Explicando este fator, a Cyclopædia (Ciclopédia) de M'Clintock e Strong (1894, Vol. IX, p. 506) declara: "Em relação com os pronomes, a construção é inteiramente diferente de ambos os precedentes [isto é, os verbos e os adjetivos empregados junto com a palavra "semente"]. Um pronome singular [empregado junto com zé·ra'] assinala um indivíduo, apenas um único, ou um dentre muitos; ao passo que o pronome plural representa todos os descendentes. Esta regra é seguida invariavelmente pela Sept[uaginta] . . . Pedro entendia esta construção, pois verificamos que ele infere uma semente singular de Gên. xxii, 17, 18, ao falar aos judeus naturais na cidade de Jerusalém, antes da conversão de Paulo (Atos iii, 26), assim como Davi dera o exemplo mil anos antes (Sal. lxxii, 17)."

Adicionalmente, esta obra de referência diz: "A distinção feita por Paulo não é entre uma semente e outra, mas entre esta uma semente e as muitas; e, se considerarmos que cita a mesma passagem que Pedro [já citada], seu argumento é razoavelmente apoiado pelo pronome 'os inimigos dele [e não deles]'. Semente, com o pronome no singular, é o equivalente exato de filho."

Para citar uma ilustração, a expressão "minha prole" poderia referir-se a um só filho ou a muitos. Mas, se depois desta expressão se usasse o pronome demonstrativo no singular para se referir à prole, seria evidente que se estaria falando de uma só pessoa.

A promessa feita a Abraão, de que todas as famílias da terra haviam de abençoar a si mesmas por meio da sua 'semente' não poderia ter incluído todos os descendentes de Abraão como sua 'semente', visto que os descendentes de seu filho Ismael e também dos seus filhos com Quetura não foram usados para abençoar a humanidade. A semente da bênção viria por meio de Isaque. "O que será chamado teu descendente [semente] será por intermédio de Isaque", disse Jeová. (Gên 21:12; He 11:18) Esta promessa foi subsequentemente especificada ainda mais, quando Jacó, dentre os dois filhos de Isaque, Jacó e Esaú, foi especialmente abençoado. (Gên 25:23, 31-34; 27:18-29, 37; 28:14) Além disso, Jacó limitou esta questão por mostrar que o ajuntamento de pessoas seria a Siló (que significa: "Aquele de Quem É; Aquele a Quem Pertence"), da tribo de Judá. (Gên 49:10) Daí, dentre todo o Judá, a vindoura semente foi limitada à linhagem de Davi. (2Sa 7:12-16) No primeiro século EC, esta especificação foi notada pelos judeus, que realmente aguardavam a vinda de uma só pessoa qual Messias ou Cristo, como libertador (Jo 1:25; 7:41, 42), embora pensassem também que eles, como descendência, ou semente, de Abraão, fossem o povo favorecido, e, como tal, filhos de Deus. — Jo 8:39-41.

Ampliação. Depois de o anjo de Jeová impedir que Abraão realmente sacrificasse seu filho Isaque, este anjo clamou a Abraão: " 'Juro deveras por mim mesmo', é a pronunciação de Jeová, 'que, pelo fato de que fizeste esta coisa e não me negaste teu filho, teu único, seguramente te abençoarei e seguramente multiplicarei o teu descendente [semente] como as estrelas dos céus e como os grãos de areia que há à beira do mar; e teu descendente [semente] tomará posse do portão dos seus inimigos. E todas as nações da terra hão de abençoar a si mesmas por meio de teu descendente [semente].' " — Gên 22:16-18.

Se esta promessa de Deus havia de cumprir-se numa semente espiritual, então isso indicaria que outros seriam acrescentados àquela uma semente primária. E o apóstolo Paulo explica que é assim. Ele argumenta que Abraão recebeu a herança por promessa, não por lei. A Lei foi apenas acrescentada para tornar manifestas as transgressões "até que chegasse o descendente", ou a semente. (Gál 3:19) Segue-se, portanto, que a promessa estava assegurada a toda a sua semente, "não somente ao que adere à Lei, mas também ao que adere à fé que Abraão teve". (Ro 4:16) As palavras de Jesus Cristo dirigidas aos que se lhe opunham: "Se sois filhos de Abraão, fazei as obras de Abraão", indicam que não são os descendentes pela carne, mas sim aqueles que têm a fé de Abraão que são considerados por Deus como semente de Abraão. (Jo 8:39) O apóstolo torna isso bem específico ao dizer: "Além disso, se pertenceis a Cristo, sois realmente descendente de Abraão, herdeiros com referência a uma promessa." — Gál 3:29; Ro 9:7, 8.

Portanto, a promessa de Deus: "Seguramente te abençoarei e seguramente multiplicarei o teu descendente como as estrelas dos céus e como os grãos de areia que há à beira do mar", tem um cumprimento espiritual e significa que outros, que "pertencem a Cristo", são acrescentados como parte da semente de Abraão. (Gên 22:17; Mr 9:41; 1Co 15:23) Deus não revelou o número deles, mas deixou-o indeterminado para o homem, assim como é o número das estrelas e dos grãos de areia. Só por volta de 96 EC, na Revelação (Apocalipse) dada ao apóstolo João, Ele revelou que os do Israel espiritual, os "selados" com o espírito de Deus, que é penhor da sua herança espiritual, são 144.000. — Ef 1:13, 14; Re 7:4-8; 2Co 1:22; 5:5.

Mostra-se estes 144.000 em pé no Monte Sião, junto ao Cordeiro. "Estes foram comprados dentre a humanidade como primícias para Deus e para o Cordeiro," (Re 14:1, 4) Jesus Cristo deu sua vida por eles, 'auxiliando a semente de Abraão' como seu grande Sumo Sacerdote. (He 2:14-18) Deus, o Pai, bondosamente dá a seu Filho esta congregação, esta "noiva". (Jo 10:27-29; 2Co 11:2; Ef 5:21-32; Re 19:7, 8; 21:2, 12) Eles se tornam reis e sacerdotes, e Jesus compartilha com eles a glória e o Reino que seu Pai lhe deu. (Lu 22:28-30; Re 20:4-6) Realmente, o segredo sagrado a respeito da Semente é apenas um aspecto do grande segredo sagrado do Reino de Deus por seu Messias. — Ef 1:9, 10; veja SEGREDO SAGRADO.

Paulo ilustra esta ação de Deus por falar sobre Abraão, sua esposa livre (Sara) e Isaque, o filho da promessa. Ele compara Sara à "Jerusalém de cima", "nossa mãe [isto é, a mãe dos cristãos gerados pelo espírito]". Isaque é igualado a estes cristãos quais descendentes ou filhos dessa "mãe". — Gál 4:22-31.

A chegada da 'semente'. Conforme se estabeleceu, Jesus é a 'semente' primária. Todavia, ele não era a 'semente da mulher' (isto é, da "Jerusalém de cima") por ocasião do seu nascimento humano. É verdade que ele era da semente natural de Abraão por meio da sua mãe Maria; era da tribo de Judá; e, de forma natural, tanto através de Maria como legalmente através de seu pai adotivo, José, era da linhagem de Davi. (Mt 1:1, 16; Lu 3:23, 31, 33, 34) De modo que Jesus estava habilitado segundo as promessas proféticas.

Mas, foi só quando Jesus foi gerado pelo espírito santo de Deus que ele se tornou a semente, ou o descendente, da mulher e a Semente que havia de abençoar toda a humanidade. Isto se deu por ocasião do seu batismo por João, no rio Jordão, em 29 EC. Jesus tinha então cerca de 30 anos de idade. O espírito santo, descendo sobre Jesus, manifestou-se a João na forma duma pomba, e o próprio Deus, nesta ocasião, reconheceu Jesus como seu Filho. — Mt 3:13-17; Lu 3:21-23; Jo 3:3.

O acréscimo da 'semente' associada, a congregação cristã, começou por ocasião do derramamento de espírito santo no dia de Pentecostes de 33 EC. Jesus havia subido ao céu, à presença de seu Pai, e havia enviado o espírito santo a estes seus primeiros seguidores, que incluíam os 12 apóstolos. (At 2:1-4, 32, 33) Ali, atuando como o Sumo Sacerdote à maneira de Melquisedeque, prestou grande 'auxílio' à semente secundária de Abraão. — He 2:16.

Inimizade entre as duas sementes. A grande Serpente, Satanás, o Diabo, tem produzido uma 'semente' que tem manifestado a mais cruel inimizade aos que têm servido a Deus com fé igual à de Abraão, conforme o registro bíblico atesta abundantemente. Satanás tem tentado bloquear ou impedir o desenvolvimento da semente da mulher. (Veja Mt 13:24-30.) No entanto, esta inimizade atingiu seu auge na perseguição da semente espiritual, em especial na demonstrada para com Jesus Cristo. (At 3:13-15) Paulo cita o drama profético para ilustrar isso, dizendo: "Assim como então aquele nascido na maneira da carne [Ismael] começou a perseguir o nascido na maneira do espírito [Isaque], assim também é agora." (Gál 4:29) E um relato posterior, que na realidade é uma profecia, descreve o estabelecimento do Reino no céu e o lançamento do Diabo do céu para a terra, continuando então a inimizade dele apenas pouco tempo mais. Conclui: "E o dragão ficou furioso com a mulher e foi travar guerra com os remanescentes da sua semente, que observam os mandamentos de Deus e têm a obra de dar testemunho de Jesus." (Re 12:7-13, 17) Esta guerra contra o restante da semente da mulher terminará quando 'Satanás for esmagado debaixo dos pés deles'. — Ro 16:20.

Abençoadas todas as famílias da Terra. Jesus Cristo, a Semente, já trouxe a pessoas sinceras grandes bênçãos por meio dos seus ensinos e pela orientação que tem dado à sua congregação desde Pentecostes. Mas, com o começo do seu Reinado

Milenar, seus "irmãos" espirituais, ressuscitados e participantes no seu Reinado, também serão subsacerdotes com ele. (Re 20:4-6) Na época em que "os mortos, os grandes e os pequenos", estiverem em pé diante do trono para ser julgados, aqueles que exercerem fé e obediência 'abençoarão a si mesmos', apossando-se da vida por meio da semente de Abraão. (Re 20:11-13; Gên 22:18) Isto significará para eles vida e felicidade eternas. — Jo 17:3; veja Re 21:1-4.

Ressurreição da 'semente'. O apóstolo Pedro, ao explicar a ressurreição da Semente, Jesus Cristo, escreve que este foi "morto na carne, mas vivificado no espírito". (1Pe 3:18) Paulo, seu coapóstolo, tratando do assunto da ressurreição dos associados com Cristo, recorre a uma ilustração agrícola. Ele argumenta: "Aquilo que semeias não é vivificado a menos que primeiro morra; e, quanto ao que semeias, semeias, não o corpo que se há de desenvolver, mas o mero grão, seja de trigo, seja de qualquer dos outros; mas Deus lhe dá um corpo assim como lhe agrada, e a cada uma das sementes o seu próprio corpo. . . . Assim também é a ressurreição dos mortos. Semeia-se em corrupção, é levantado em incorrupção. Semeia-se em desonra, é levantado em glória. . . . Semeia-se corpo físico, é levantado corpo espiritual." (1Co 15:36-44) Portanto, aqueles que compõem a 'semente da mulher', a 'semente de Abraão', morrem, deixando seus corpos terrenos de carne corruptível, e são ressuscitados com gloriosos corpos incorruptíveis.

Semente reprodutiva incorruptível. O apóstolo Pedro diz a respeito de seus irmãos espirituais que eles recebem "um novo nascimento para uma esperança viva por intermédio da ressurreição de Jesus Cristo dentre os mortos, para uma herança incorruptível, e imaculada, e imarcescível". Ele diz: "Ela está reservada nos céus para vós." Traz à atenção deles que não foi com coisas corruptíveis, tais como prata e ouro, que eles foram libertos, mas sim com o sangue de Cristo. Depois, ele diz: "Pois recebestes um novo nascimento, não por semente reprodutiva corruptível, mas por incorruptível, por intermédio da palavra do Deus vivente e permanecente." Aqui, a palavra "semente" é a palavra grega spo·rá, que denota semente já semeada, portanto, em condições de se reproduzir. — 1Pe 1:3, 4, 18, 19, 23.

Deste modo, Pedro lembra aos seus irmãos a sua relação como filhos, não com um pai humano que morre e que não pode transmitir-lhes nem a incorrupção, nem a vida eterna, mas com o "Deus vivente e permanecente". A semente incorruptível com que recebem este novo nascimento é o espírito santo de Deus, Sua força ativa, que opera em conjunto com a permanecente Palavra de Deus, a qual é ela mesma inspirada pelo espírito. Também o apóstolo João diz a respeito de tais gerados pelo espírito: "Todo aquele que nasceu de Deus não está praticando o pecado, porque a Sua semente reprodutiva permanece em tal, e ele não pode praticar o pecado, porque nasceu de Deus." — 1Jo 3:9.

Este espírito neles opera para gerar um novo nascimento deles como filhos de Deus. É uma força a favor da pureza, e produz os frutos do espírito, não as obras corruptas da carne. Aquele que tem em si mesmo esta semente reprodutiva, portanto, não faz das obras da carne uma prática. O apóstolo Paulo comenta este assunto: "Pois Deus nos chamou, não com uma concessão para a impureza, mas em conexão com a santificação. Assim, pois, quem mostra falta de consideração, não desconsidera o homem, mas a Deus, que pôs em vós o seu espírito santo." — 1Te 4:7, 8.

Todavia, aquele dos gerados pelo espírito, que constantemente resiste ao espírito ou o 'contrista', isto é, o 'entristece' ou 'fere', finalmente fará com que Deus retire seu espírito. (Ef 4:30, Int; compare isso com Is 63:10.) Alguém talvez até vá ao ponto de cometer blasfêmia contra o espírito, o que será calamitoso para ele. (Mt 12:31, 32; Lu 12:10) Por isso, Pedro e João salientam a necessidade de se manter a santidade, e o amor a Deus, de se amar os irmãos de coração e de demonstrar submissão à orientação do espírito de Deus, provando assim ser filho verdadeiro e leal de Deus. — 1Pe 1:14-16, 22; 1Jo 2:18, 19; 3:10, 14.

SEMER [possivelmente duma raiz que significa "guardar; vigiar"].

1. Descendente de Aser, talvez seu bisneto. Mencionam-se quatro filhos de Semer. (1Cr 7:30, 34) Semer é grafado Somer em 1 Crônicas 7:32.

2. Levita merarita, antepassado de Etã. — 1Cr 6:44-47.

3. Dono do morro de Samaria; possivelmente uma tribo, em vez de uma pessoa, porque "Samaria" significa "Pertencente ao Clã Semer". O Rei Onri, de Israel, comprou o monte por dois talentos de prata (US$ 13.212) e começou a governar ali por volta de 945 AEC. — 1Rs 16:23, 24.

SEMIDA. Filho de Gileade e bisneto de Manassés. Dos quatro filhos de Semida desenvolveu-se uma família tribal, os semidaítas, que foi contada no segundo censo feito no ermo e recebeu um território designado na Terra da Promessa. — Núm 26:2, 29-32; Jos 17:2; 1Cr 7:19.

SEMIDAÍTAS [De (Pertencentes a) Semida]. Família de Manassés fundada por Semida. — Núm 26:29, 32.

SEMINITE. Embora o sentido literal deste termo musical seja "a oitava", seu sentido exato é incerto. Pode referir-se a determinado registro ou modo musical, inferior, e se algum instrumento musical estava associado com o termo, provavelmente era um usado para tocar os baixos na escala musical.

Em 1 Crônicas 15:21 fala-se de harpas "afinadas segundo Seminite" ["possivelmente referindo-se à oitava nota ou a uma oitava inferior", NM n; "provavelmente a oitava baixa", Da n z]. Em consonância com isso, os cabeçalhos dos Salmos 6 e 12 (ambos de caráter sombrio) rezam: "Ao regente, (em instrumentos de cordas,) na oitava inferior [sheminíth]", o que talvez indique que estes cânticos eram acompanhados por música numa escala inferior e cantados concordemente. — Veja ALAMOTE.

SEMIRAMOTE.

1. Músico levita que acompanhou a Arca do Pacto da casa de Obede-Edom a Jerusalém e que depois foi posto para tocar diante da tenda dela. — 1Cr 15:17, 18, 20, 25; 16:1, 4, 5.

2. Um dos levitas que Jeosafá enviou para ensinar a Lei ao povo, em 934 AEC. — 2Cr 17:7-9.

SEMUEL [Nome de Deus]. O mesmo nome hebraico é também traduzido "Samuel".

1. Cabeça duma casa ancestral; filho ou descendente de Tola, filho de Issacar. — 1Cr 7:1, 2.

2. Representante da tribo de Simeão na delegação que repartiu a Terra da Promessa em quinhões tribais; filho de Amiúde. — Núm 34:17, 18, 20.

SENAÁ. Mais de 3.000 "filhos de Senaá" retornaram do exílio em Babilônia junto com Zorobabel, em 537 AEC. (Esd 2:1, 2, 35; Ne 7:38) Senaá talvez seja o Hassenaá, nome que tem o artigo definido hebraico ha(s). — Ne 3:3.

Muitos dos nomes nas listas de Esdras 2 e Neemias 7 pelo visto são lugares em vez de pessoas, e por isso alguns acham que Senaá seja um lugar um pouco ao N de Jericó, onde Eusébio e Jerônimo mencionam haver uma torre "Magdalsenna". (Onomasticon [Onomástico], 154, 16, 17) É provisoriamente identificado com Khirbet al Beiyudat (Horvat 'el-Beidat), a uns 11 km ao NNE de Jericó.

SENAQUERIBE [do acadiano, significando "Sin [o deus-lua] Restaurou Para Mim o Lugar de Irmãos"]. Filho de Sargão II; rei da Assíria. Herdou de seu pai um império de grande poder, mas foi obrigado a gastar a maior parte do seu reinado em subjugar revoltas, especialmente no que se refere à cidade de Babilônia.

Senaqueribe parece ter servido como governador ou general na região setentrional da Assíria durante o reinado do seu pai. Após a sua sucessão ao trono, esta região, pelo visto, causou-lhe poucos problemas, pois as suas dificuldades lhe advieram principalmente do S e do O. O caldeu Merodaque-Baladã (Is 39:1) abandonou seu refúgio em Elão, ao qual o pai de Senaqueribe, Sargão, o havia obrigado a ir, e proclamou-se então rei de Babilônia. Senaqueribe investiu contra ele e seus aliados elamitas, derrotando-os em Quis. Todavia, Merodaque-Baladã escapou, escondendo-se por mais três anos. Senaqueribe entrou em Babilônia e entronizou Belibus como vice-rei. Realizaram-se depois outras expedições punitivas para manter sob controle os povos nos países montanhosos em torno da Assíria.

Então, naquilo que Senaqueribe chama de sua "terceira campanha", ele avançou contra "Hatti", termo evidentemente aplicado naquele tempo à Fenícia e à Palestina. (Ancient Near Eastern Texts [Textos Antigos do Oriente Próximo], editado por J. Pritchard, 1974, p. 287) Esta região se encontrava num estado de rebelião geral contra o jugo assírio. Entre os que haviam rejeitado essa dominação estava o Rei Ezequias, de Judá (2Rs 18:7), embora não haja nenhuma evidência de que ele estivesse coligado com os outros reinos em revolta.

No 14.º ano de Ezequias (732 AEC), as forças de Senaqueribe avançaram para o oeste, capturando Sídon, Aczibe, Aco e outras cidades na costa fenícia, e então se dirigiram para o sul. Alistam-se reinos amedrontados, inclusive os de Moabe, Edom e Asdode, como enviando tributos para expressar submissão. A recalcitrante Ascalom foi tomada à força, junto com as cidades vizinhas de Jope e Bete-Dagom. Uma inscrição assíria acusa o povo e os nobres da cidade filisteia de Ecrom de terem entregue seu rei Padi a Ezequias, o qual, segundo Senaqueribe, "o manteve ilegalmente na prisão". (Ancient Near Eastern Texts, p. 287; compare isso com 2Rs 18:8.) Os habitantes de Ecrom são descritos como tendo solicitado a ajuda do Egito e da Etiópia para afastar ou repelir o ataque assírio.

O registro bíblico indica que mais ou menos nesta época Senaqueribe atacou Judá, sitiando e capturando muitas das suas cidades e aldeias fortificadas. Ezequias enviou então mensagem ao assírio em Laquis, oferecendo pagar o montante do tributo que Senaqueribe impusesse. (2Rs 18:13, 14) A captura de Laquis por Senaqueribe é apresentada num friso, que o retrata sentado num trono diante da cidade conquistada, aceitando os despojos que lhe eram trazidos dessa cidade enquanto alguns cativos eram torturados.

O relato bíblico não indica se o Rei Padi, se é que era cativo de Ezequias, foi então solto, porém mostra que Ezequias pagou o tributo exigido por Senaqueribe, de 300 talentos de prata (c. US$ 1.982.000) e 30 talentos de ouro (c. US$ 11.560.000). (2Rs 18:14-16) No entanto, Senaqueribe mandou então uma comissão de três oficiais para exigir do rei e do povo de Jerusalém a capitulação ante ele, e, por fim, sujeitar-se a serem levados ao exílio. A mensagem assíria depreciava especialmente a confiança de Ezequias em Jeová. Senaqueribe, através de seu porta-voz, jactou-se de que Jeová mostraria ser tão incapaz como os deuses das terras que já haviam caído diante do poderio assírio. — 2Rs 18:17-35.

A comissão assíria retornou a Senaqueribe, que na ocasião lutava contra Libna, visto que se ouvira "dizer a respeito de Tiraca, rei da Etiópia: 'Eis que ele saiu para lutar contra ti.'" (2Rs 19:8, 9) As inscrições de Senaqueribe falam duma batalha em Eltequé (c. 15 km ao NNO de Ecrom), na qual ele afirma ter derrotado um exército egípcio e as forças do "rei da Etiópia". Descreve então sua conquista de Ecrom e de ter restaurado no trono ali o liberto Padi. — Ancient Near Eastern Texts, pp. 287, 288.

Jeová Derrota o Exército de Senaqueribe. Quanto a Jerusalém, embora Senaqueribe enviasse cartas ameaçadoras a Ezequias, avisando-o de que não desistira da sua determinação de tomar a capital de Judá (Is 37:9-20), o registro mostra que os assírios nem mesmo chegaram a 'atirar flecha nela, nem levantar um aterro de sítio contra ela'. Jeová, de quem Senaqueribe havia escarnecido, enviou um anjo que, numa só noite, golpeou "cento e oitenta e cinco mil no acampamento dos assírios", mandando Senaqueribe de volta "com face envergonhada à sua própria terra". — Is 37:33-37; 2Cr 32:21.

As inscrições de Senaqueribe não mencionam o desastre sofrido por suas forças. Mas, conforme comenta o Professor Jack Finegan: "Em vista do tom geral de jactância que permeia as inscrições dos reis assírios, . . . dificilmente se esperaria que Senaqueribe registrasse tal derrota." (Light From the Ancient Past [Luz do Passado Remoto], 1959, p. 213) Mas vale a pena observar a versão apresentada por Senaqueribe no que é conhecido como o Prisma de Senaqueribe; um está preservado no Museu Britânico (o Prisma Taylor) e um no Instituto Oriental da Universidade de Chicago. Ele diz, em parte: "Quanto a Ezequias, o judeu, ele não se submeteu ao meu jugo, eu sitiei 46 de suas cidades fortes, fortificações muradas e inúmeras aldeias pequenas na sua vizinhança, e conquistei(-as) por meio de bem batidas rampas (de terra) e aríetes trazidos (assim) para perto (das muralhas) (junto com) o ataque de soldados de infantaria, (empregando) minas, brechas, bem como o trabalho de sapadores. Eu desalojei (delas) 200.150 pessoas, jovens e idosos, homens e mulheres, cavalos, mulos, jumentos, camelos, gado grande e miúdo sem conta, e considerei(-os como) presa. A ele mesmo [Ezequias] fiz prisioneiro em Jerusalém, sua residência real, como a um pássaro numa gaiola. . . . As suas cidades, que eu saqueei, tirei de seu país e dei-as a Mitinti, rei de Asdode, a Padi, rei de Ecrom, e a Sillibel, rei de Gaza. . . . O próprio Ezequias . . . enviou-me mais tarde, a Nínive, minha cidade senhorial, junto com 30 talentos de ouro, 800 talentos de prata, pedras preciosas, antimônio, grandes blocos de pedra vermelha, leitos (incrustados) de marfim, cadeiras-nimedu (incrustadas) de marfim, couros de elefante, ébano, buxos (e) todas as espécies de tesouros valiosos, suas (próprias) filhas, concubinas, músicos e músicas. A fim de entregar o tributo e prestar homenagem como escravo, ele enviou seu mensageiro (pessoal)." — Ancient Near Eastern Texts, p. 288.

Esta versão jactanciosa aumenta de 300 para 800 o número de talentos de prata enviados, e, sem dúvida, faz o mesmo com outros pormenores do tributo pago; mas, em outros respeitos, confirma notavelmente o registro bíblico e mostra que Senaqueribe não afirmou ter capturado Jerusalém. Deve-se notar, porém, que Senaqueribe apresenta a questão de Ezequias pagar tributo como ocorrido depois da ameaça assíria de um sítio contra Jerusalém, ao passo que o relato bíblico mostra que foi pago antes. Como provável motivo desta inversão, note a observação feita em Funk and Wagnalls New Standard Bible Dictionary (Novo Dicionário Bíblico Padrão de Funk e Wagnalls; 1936, p. 829): "O término desta campanha de S[enaqueribe] acha-se envolto em obscuridade. O que ele fez após a captura de Ecrom . . . ainda é um mistério. Em seus anais, S[enaqueribe] situa neste ponto a punição que infligiu a Ezequias, sua incursão contra o país de Judá, e sua distribuição do território e das cidades de Judá. Esta ordem dos eventos parece ser uma cortina que esconde algo que ele não deseja mencionar." O registro bíblico mostra que Senaqueribe apressou-se em voltar a Nínive, depois do desastre das suas tropas, divinamente provocado, e assim, o relato invertido de Senaqueribe convenientemente apresenta que Ezequias lhe pagou o tributo em Nínive mediante um mensageiro especial. Certamente é significativo que antigas inscrições e registros não mostram nenhuma campanha adicional de Senaqueribe na

Palestina, embora historiadores afirmem que seu reinado continuou por mais 20 anos.

Josefo, historiador judeu do primeiro século EC, afirma citar o babilônio Beroso (considerado ser do terceiro século AEC), que registraria o evento do seguinte modo: "Quando Senaqueirimos retornou a Jerusalém da sua guerra com o Egito, encontrou ali a força sob Rabsaqué em perigo duma praga, porque Deus infligira uma doença pestilenta ao seu exército, e na primeira noite do sítio, cento e oitenta e cinco mil homens haviam perecido junto com seus comandantes e oficiais." (Jewish Antiquities [Antiguidades Judaicas], X, 21 [i, 5]) Alguns comentadores tentam explicar o desastre por citarem um relato escrito por Heródoto (II, 141; Clássicos Jackson, Vol. XXIII, pp. 181, 182) no quinto século AEC, no qual ele afirma que uma "espantosa multidão de ratos do campo espalhou-se pelo acampamento [assírio] inimigo, pondo-se a roer os arneses, os arcos e as correias que serviam para manejar os escudos", impedindo-os assim de realizar uma invasão no Egito. Este relato obviamente não coincide com o registro bíblico, nem se harmoniza a descrição que Heródoto faz da campanha assíria com as inscrições assírias. Não obstante, os relatos de Beroso e de Heródoto refletem deveras o fato de que as forças de Senaquerибe sofreram uma repentina e calamitosa dificuldade nesta campanha.

Este, porém, não foi o fim das dificuldades de Senaqueribe, e depois do seu retorno à Assíria, ele teve de sufocar outra revolta em Babilônia, provocada por Merodaque-Baladã. Esta vez, Senaqueribe empossou seu próprio filho, Assurnadinsum, como rei em Babilônia. Seis anos mais tarde, Senaqueribe empreendeu uma campanha contra os elamitas, mas estes logo retaliaram por invadirem a Mesopotâmia. Capturaram Assurnadinsum e colocaram seu próprio rei no trono de Babilônia. Seguiram-se vários anos de luta pelo controle daquela região, até que o enfurecido Senaqueribe finalmente se vingou de Babilônia por arrasá-la, num ato sem paralelo, em vista da posição que Babilônia ocupara como "Cidade Santa" de toda a Mesopotâmia. Os anos restantes do reinado de Senaqueribe, pelo visto, transcorreram sem maiores incidentes.

Acha-se que a morte de Senaqueribe ocorreu uns 20 anos depois da sua campanha contra Jerusalém. Este dado se baseia em registros assírios e babilônicos, havendo dúvida sobre a fidedignidade deles. De qualquer modo, deve-se notar que o relato bíblico não declara que a morte de Senaqueribe ocorreu logo depois do seu retorno a Nínive. "Mais tarde entrou na casa de seu deus", Nisroque, e seus filhos, Adrameleque e Sarezer, "golpearam-no com a espada", fugindo para a terra de Ararate. (2Cr 32:21; Is 37:37, 38) Isto é confirmado por uma inscrição de seu filho e sucessor, Esar-Hadom. — Ancient Records of Assyria and Babylonia (Registros Antigos da Assíria e de Babilônia), de D. Luckenbill, 1927, Vol. II, pp. 200, 201; veja ESAR-HADOM.

Construções. Assim, o Império Assírio não teve muita expansão sob Senaqueribe. Todavia, ele executou um ambicioso projeto de construção em Nínive, a que devolvera sua posição como capital. O enorme palácio que erigiu ali era um conjunto de salões, pátios e aposentos pomposos, abrangendo uma área de 450 m de comprimento por 210 m de largura. Ele trouxe água de 48 km de distância, construindo uma passagem sobre o rio Gomel, conhecida como Aqueduto de Jerwan. Sua água contribuiu para a irrigação de jardins e parques, bem como para encher o fosso que rodeava a cidade, reforçando assim as defesas da cidade.

SENAZAR [do acadiano, significando "Sin [o deus-lua], Protege!"]. Quarto filho mencionado de Joaquim (Jeconias), nascido durante o seu exílio em Babilônia. — 1Cr 3:17, 18; veja SESBAZAR.

SENÉ. "Rochedo em forma de dente" que defrontava Geba, ao sul de outro rochedo chamado pelo nome de Bozez, ambos ficando entre as cidades de Micmás e de Geba e figurando no relato do ataque de Jonatã contra os filisteus. (1Sa 14:4, 5, 13) Não se pode agora atribuir nenhuma localização positiva a esses rochedos, mas considera-se em geral que faziam parte dos penhascos quase que verticais ao longo do uádi Suweinit (Nahal Mikhmas) que se estende entre Micmás e Geba. — Veja BOZEZ.

SENHOR. As palavras grega e hebraica traduzidas "senhor" (ou termos relacionados tais como "soberano senhor", "amo", "dono") são usadas com referência a Jeová Deus (Ez 3:11), a Jesus Cristo (Mt 7:21), a um dos anciãos observado por João em visão (Re 7:13, 14), a anjos (Gên 19:1, 2; Da 12:8), a homens (1Sa 25:24; At 16:16, 19, 30) e a deidades falsas (1Co 8:5). Frequentemente, a designação "senhor" denota alguém que tem a posse de outras pessoas ou coisas, ou autoridade e poder sobre elas. (Gên 24:9; 42:30; 45:8, 9; 1Rs 16:24; Lu 19:33; At 25:26; Ef 6:5) Este título era aplicado por Sara a seu marido (Gên 18:12), por filhos ao pai (Gên 31:35; Mt 21:28, 29) e por um irmão mais novo ao irmão mais velho (Gên 32:5, 6). Ocorre como título de respeito usado para com pessoas de destaque, autoridades públicas, profetas e reis. (Gên 23:6; 42:10; Núm 11:28; 2Sa 1:10; 2Rs

8:10-12; Mt 27:63) Quando usado ao se dirigir a estranhos, "senhor" servia de título de cortesia. — Jo 12:21; 20:15; At 16:30.

Jeová Deus. Jeová Deus é o "Senhor do céu e da terra", sendo o Soberano Universal por ele ser o Criador. (Mt 11:25; Re 4:11) Criaturas celestiais o chamam de "Senhor", conforme relata Revelação (Apocalipse) 11:15, que diz: "Houve vozes altas no céu, dizendo: 'O reino do mundo tornou-se o reino de nosso Senhor [Jeová] e do seu Cristo.'" Servos fiéis de Deus, na Terra, dirigiam-se a ele como "Soberano Senhor", e este título ocorre mais de 300 vezes nas Escrituras inspiradas. (Gên 15:2; Re 6:10) Ele é também apropriadamente descrito como "verdadeiro Senhor". (Is 1:24) É sob a sua direção que pessoas são ajuntadas, ou colhidas, para a vida. De modo que petições para haver mais trabalhadores para ajudar na colheita devem ser dirigidas a ele como o "Senhor da colheita". — Mt 9:37, 38; veja o apêndice na NM, pp. 1506-1508.

Jesus Cristo. Jesus Cristo, enquanto na Terra, referiu-se a si mesmo como o "Senhor do sábado". (Mt 12:8) Ele usou apropriadamente o sábado para fazer a obra que seu Pai celestial o mandou fazer. Esta obra incluía curar doentes. (Veja Mt 8:16, 17.) Jesus sabia que a Lei mosaica, com o seu requisito referente ao sábado, era "uma sombra das boas coisas vindouras". (He 10:1) Relacionado com essas "boas coisas vindouras", há um sábado do qual ele há de ser o Senhor. — Veja SÁBADO ("Senhor do Sábado").

Enquanto Jesus Cristo estava na Terra, outros, além dos seus discípulos, o chamavam de "Senhor". (Mt 8:2; Jo 4:11) Nestes casos, este termo era primariamente um título de respeito ou de cortesia. Todavia, Jesus mostrou aos seus apóstolos que chamá-lo de "Senhor" envolvia mais do que isso. Disse: "Vós me chamais de 'Instrutor' e 'Senhor', e falais corretamente, pois eu o sou." (Jo 13:13) Estes apóstolos, como seus discípulos, eram aprendizes ou pupilos. De modo que ele era seu Senhor ou Mestre.

Especialmente após a morte e a ressurreição de Jesus foi que seu título de Senhor assumiu grande significado. Por meio da sua morte sacrificial, ele comprou seus seguidores, tornando-se assim o Amo deles. (Jo 15:13, 14; 1Co 7:23; 2Pe 2:1; Ju 4; Re 5:9, 10) Era também seu Rei e Noivo a quem estavam sujeitos como seu Senhor. (At 17:7; Ef 5:22-27; compare isso com Jo 3:28, 29; 2Co 11:2; Re 21:9-14.) Quando Jeová recompensou seu Filho por este ter sido fiel a ponto de sofrer uma morte vergonhosa numa estaca, ele "o enalteceu a uma posição superior e lhe deu bondosamente o nome que está acima de todo outro nome, a fim de que, no nome de Jesus, se dobre todo joelho dos no céu, e dos na terra, e dos debaixo do chão, e toda língua reconheça abertamente que Jesus Cristo é Senhor, para a glória de Deus, o Pai". (Fil 2:9-11) Reconhecer a Jesus Cristo como Senhor significa mais do que simplesmente chamá-lo de "Senhor". Requer que a pessoa reconheça a posição de Jesus e adote um proceder de obediência. (Veja Jo 14:21.) Conforme o próprio Jesus disse: "Nem todo o que me disser: 'Senhor, Senhor', entrará no reino dos céus, senão aquele que fizer a vontade de meu Pai, que está nos céus." — Mt 7:21.

Jeová Deus concedeu também imortalidade ao seu Filho fiel. Portanto, embora muitos homens tenham governado como reis ou senhores, somente Jesus Cristo, o "Rei dos reis e Senhor dos senhores", tem imortalidade. — 1Ti 6:14-16; Re 19:16.

Visto que Jesus possui as chaves da morte e do Hades (Re 1:17, 18), está em condições de livrar a humanidade da sepultura comum (Jo 5:28, 29) e da morte herdada de Adão. (Ro 5:12, 18) Por isso, ele é também o 'Senhor sobre os mortos', inclusive do Rei Davi, um dos seus antepassados terrestres. — At 2:34-36; Ro 14:9.

Título de Respeito. Terem os cristãos apenas "um só Senhor", Jesus Cristo (Ef 4:5), não impede que eles apliquem o termo "senhor" a outros como título de respeito, cortesia ou autoridade. O apóstolo Pedro até mesmo citou Sara como bom exemplo para esposas cristãs, por causa da obediência dela a Abraão, "chamando-o de 'senhor'". (1Pe 3:1-6) Isto não era mera formalidade da parte de Sara. Era um reflexo sincero da sua submissão, porque ela referiu-se a ele assim "no íntimo". (Gên 18:12) Por outro lado, visto que todos os cristãos são irmãos, seria errado se chamassem um deles de "Líder" ou "Senhor", encarando-o como líder espiritual. — Mt 23:8-10; veja JEOVÁ; JESUS CRISTO; SENHORES DO EIXO.

O Grego "Ký́rios". Este termo grego é um adjetivo, indicando a posse de poder (ký·ros) ou autoridade, e é também usado como substantivo. Ocorre em cada livro das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, exceto em Tito e nas cartas de João. Este termo corresponde ao hebraico 'A·dhóhn. Jesus Cristo, como Filho e Servo criado por Deus, dirige-se corretamente ao Pai e Deus (Jo 20:17) por "Senhor" ('Adho·naí ou Ký·ri·os), Aquele que tem poder e autoridade superiores, sua Cabeça. (Mt 11:25; 1Co 11:3) Jesus, como o enaltecido à mão direita de seu Pai, é "Senhor dos senhores" com referência a todos, exceto seu Pai, Deus, o Todo-Poderoso. — Re 17:14; 19:15, 16; compare isso com 1Co 15:27, 28.

Seu uso em lugar do nome divino. Durante o segundo e o terceiro século da Era Comum, os escribas substituíram o nome divino, Jeová, pelas palavras Ký·ri·os (Senhor) e The·ós (Deus) nas cópias da tradução Septuaginta grega das Escrituras Hebraicas. Outras traduções, tais como a Vulgata latina, a Douay Version (baseada na Vulgata), e uma edição da versão Almeida, bem como numerosas traduções recentes (ALA, NE, AT, RS, NIV, TEV, NAB) adotaram uma prática similar. O nome divino foi substituído pelos termos "Deus" e "Senhor", em muitos casos todo em maiúsculas ou em grifo para indicar que substituem o Tetragrama, ou nome divino.

Afastando-se desta prática, a comissão de tradução da American Standard Version (Versão Padrão Americana) de 1901 declarou: "Os Revisores Americanos, após cuidadosa consideração, chegaram à convicção unânime de que uma superstição judaica, que considerava o Nome Divino sagrado demais para ser pronunciado, não mais devia predominar na versão inglesa ou em qualquer outra do Antigo Testamento, assim como felizmente não o faz em numerosas versões feitas por missionários hodiernos. . . . Este nome pessoal [Jeová], com a sua abundância de relações sagradas, foi agora restabelecido, no texto sagrado, no lugar que indubitavelmente pode reivindicar." — AS, prefácio, p. iv.

Desde então, diversas traduções (An, BC, BJ, BMD, JB, NC, bem como outras versões) vertem o Tetragrama como "Iahweh", "Yahweh", "Javé", ou outras formas similares.

Sob o verbete JEOVÁ (Nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs), também se apresenta evidência para mostrar que o nome divino, Jeová, foi usado nos escritos originais das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, de Mateus a Revelação. Nesta base, a Tradução do Novo Mundo, usada em toda esta obra, restabeleceu o nome divino na sua tradução das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, num total de 237 vezes. Outras traduções o restabeleceram de modo similar, em especial na tradução das Escrituras Gregas Cristãs para o hebraico.

Ao considerar "O Restabelecimento do Nome Divino", a Comissão da Tradução do Novo Mundo da Bíblia declara: "Para saber onde o nome divino fora substituído pelas palavras gregas Κύριος e Θεός, verificamos onde os inspirados escritores cristãos citaram versículos, passagens e expressões das Escrituras Hebraicas, e depois voltamos ao texto hebraico para ver se o nome divino aparecia ali. Assim determinamos a identidade a dar a Ký·ri·os e a The·ós, e a personalidade com que revesti-los." Em explicação adicional, a Comissão disse: "Para não ultrapassar os limites de tradutor para o campo de exegese, fomos muito cautelosos na tradução do nome divino nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, sempre cuidadosos de tomar as Escrituras Hebraicas como fundo. Procuramos concordância das versões hebraicas para confirmar nossa tradução." Tal concordância de versões hebraicas existe em todos os 237 lugares em que a Comissão da Tradução do Novo Mundo da Bíblia verteu o nome divino no corpo da sua tradução. — Apêndice da NM, pp. 1504-1506.

Os Hebraicos "Adhohn" e "Adhonai". O termo hebraico 'a·dhóhn ocorre 334 vezes nas Escrituras Hebraicas. Tem o sentido de posse ou chefia, e é usado referente a Deus e a homens. A forma plural, 'adho·ním, às vezes denota simplesmente o plural numérico e então é traduzido por "senhores" ou "amos". (Sal 136:3; Is 26:13) Em outros lugares, o plural denota excelência, ou majestade, quer de Deus, quer de homem (Sal 8:1; Gên 39:2), e, em tais casos, quaisquer pronomes ligados, ou adjetivos modificadores, estão no singular. (Sal 45:11; 147:5) Em alguns lugares, usam-se dois plurais lado a lado para diferenciar Jeová pelo plural de excelência dos numerosos outros senhores. — De 10:17; Sal 136:3; compare isso com 1Co 8:5, 6.

Os títulos 'A·dhóhn e 'Adho·ním são aplicados 25 vezes a Jeová nas Escrituras. Em nove lugares do texto massorético, 'A·dhóhn vem precedido pelo artigo definido ha, limitando assim a aplicação do título a Jeová. (Êx 23:17; 34:23; Is 1:24; 3:1; 10:16, 33; 19:4; Miq 4:13; Mal 3:1) Em todos os seis lugares em que 'A·dhóhn sem o artigo definido se refere a Jeová, descreve-o como o Senhor (Dono) da Terra e assim não é ambíguo. (Jos 3:11, 13; Sal 97:5; 114:7; Za 4:14; 6:5) Nos dez lugares em que 'Adho·ním é usado para Jeová, o contexto imediato torna certa a identificação. — De 10:17; Ne 8:10; 10:29; Sal 8:1, 9; 135:5; 136:3; 147:5; Is 51:22; Os 12:14.

O sufixo ai acrescentado à palavra hebraica 'a·dhóhn é uma forma diferente do plural de excelência. Quando 'Adho·nai ocorre sem um sufixo adicional em hebraico, é usado exclusivamente para Jeová e indica que ele é o Soberano Senhor. Segundo The International Standard Bible Encyclopedia (Enciclopédia Bíblica Padrão Internacional; 1986, Vol. 3, p. 157), "esta forma salienta o poder e a soberania de Yahweh como 'Senhor' ". Ser usada por homens ao se dirigirem a ele sugere reconhecimento submisso deste grande fato. — Gên 15:2, 8; De 3:24; Jos 7:7.

Evidentemente, logo cedo na Era Comum, o nome divino, YHWH (JHVH ou IHVH), passou a ser considerado pelos rabinos judeus como sagrado demais para ser pronunciado. Assim, substituíram-no por 'Adho·nai (às vezes por 'Elo·him) ao lerem as Escrituras em voz alta. Os soferins, ou escribas, foram ainda mais longe, substituindo o nome divino no texto escrito por 'Adho·nai 134 vezes (133 na Biblia Hebraica Stuttgartensia). Desde cerca do quinto ao nono século da nossa Era Comum, os massoretas copiaram o texto com muito cuidado. Anotaram na Massorá (suas notas sobre o texto) onde os soferins fizeram tais mudanças. Por isso, estas 134 mudanças são conhecidas. (Veja a lista no apêndice da NM, p. 1502.) Levando isso em conta, restam 306 lugares em que 'Adho·nai ocorria originalmente no texto.

O título 'Adho·nai é usado na maior parte pelos profetas, e com muito mais frequência por Ezequiel do que por quaisquer outros. Quase toda vez, ele o combina com o nome divino para formar 'Adho·nai Yehwih, "Soberano Senhor Jeová". Outro título combinado, que ocorre 16 vezes, é 'Adho·nai Yehwih tseva·'óhth, "Soberano Senhor, Jeová dos exércitos", e todas as ocorrências, menos duas (Sal 69:6; Am 9:5) estão em Isaías e Jeremias. Este título é usado para revelar que Jeová é aquele que tem o poder e a determinação não só de vingar seu povo oprimido, mas também de puni-lo pela infidelidade.

SENHORES DO EIXO. A palavra hebraica sera·nim parece ser um empréstimo do filisteu. (Jos 13:3) Tem as mesmas consoantes que a palavra hebraica para "eixos" em 1 Reis 7:30. Trata-se dum título aplicado aos cinco senhores que governavam as cidades filisteias de Gaza, Ascalom, Asdode, Ecrom e Gate, aparentemente por estarem numa coalizão ou aliança. Os filisteus, segundo Amós 9:7, vieram à costa de Canaã procedentes de Creta, perto do mar Egeu, de modo que alguns acham tratar-se de uma palavra egeia.

Os senhores do eixo dominavam a Filístia como governantes de cidades-estados individuais e como conselho de coiguais com respeito a assuntos de interesse mútuo. Aquis é chamado de rei de Gate. (1Sa 21:10; 27:2) Pelo visto, ele não era rei no sentido comum, mas era príncipe. De modo que o título de 'príncipe' (hebr.: sar) é às vezes aplicado a esses governantes. — 1Sa 18:30; 29:2-4.

Essas autoridades frequentemente cooperavam em alguma causa. Foram convocadas, e, por sua vez, consultaram seus sacerdotes e adivinhos para saber o que fazer com a capturada Arca do Pacto depois que a presença dela trouxe uma grande praga de hemorroidas, que afetou os próprios senhores do eixo. (1Sa 5:9–6:4) Colaboravam sempre que seus exércitos investiam contra Israel. (1Sa 7:7) No caso de Sansão, vemos sua ação unida para vencê-lo. (Jz 16:5) Todos se reuniram na casa do deus Dagom, em Gaza, para celebrar a captura de Sansão, ocasião em que os cinco senhores do eixo então em poder foram mortos. — Jz 16:21-30.

No entanto, as cidades-estados independentes chefiadas por eles nunca foram unificadas para constituir um só reino sujeito a um único governante. Em vez disso, as cinco cidades principais, com suas aldeias dependentes, funcionavam como uma espécie de confederação, um eixo. Ao tomarem decisões que afetavam a todos, os senhores do eixo faziam o que a maioria tivesse decidido. Isto se vê na sua decisão de rejeitar Davi e os homens dele do exército filisteu, embora Aquis, senhor do eixo, de Gate, com quem Davi havia morado como refugiado do Rei Saul, estivesse a favor de a força de Davi ser aceita para lutar com eles contra Saul. — 1Sa 29:2, 6, 7, 9.

Em toda a história de Israel, especialmente até serem subjugados por Davi, eles eram resolutos inimigos do povo de Jeová, e muitas vezes fizeram alianças com outras nações contra Israel, mantendo Israel frequentemente sob opressiva dominação. Davi lhes reduziu o poder, de modo que deixaram de ser uma grande ameaça. Depois do tempo de Davi, o termo "senhores do eixo" não mais é encontrado, mas o termo "rei" é aplicado aos governantes deles. — Je 25:20; Za 9:5; veja FILÍSTIA, FILISTEUS.

SENIR. Nome amorreu do monte Hermom. (De 3:9) Visto que 1 Crônicas 5:23 menciona "Senir" e "monte Hermom", o nome Senir talvez fosse também usado para se referir a uma parte da cordilheira do Hermom, ou Antilíbano. Senir era fonte de juníperos (Ez 27:5), e guarida de leões e de leopardos. (Cân 4:8) Uma inscrição assíria descreve Senir (Sa-ni-ru) como "um monte, defronte do Líbano". — Ancient Near Eastern Texts (Textos Antigos do Oriente Próximo), editado por J. Pritchard, 1974, p. 280, veja HERMOM.

SEOL. Sepultura comum da humanidade, o domínio da sepultura; não um lugar de sepultamento ou sepulcro específico (hebr.: qé·ver, Jz 16:31; qevu·ráh, Gên 35:20), nem um túmulo individual (hebr.: ga·dhísh, Jó 21:32).

Embora se tenham oferecido diversas derivações da palavra hebraica she'óhl, pelo visto, ela deriva do verbo hebraico sha·'ál, que significa "pedir; solicitar". Samuel Peake, em A Compendious Hebrew Lexicon (Léxico Compendioso do Hebraico), declara que é "o receptáculo comum ou região dos mortos; chamado assim por causa da insaciabili-dade da sepultura, a qual como que sempre pede ou quer mais". — Cambridge, 1811, p. 148.

A palavra hebraica she'óhl ocorre 65 vezes no texto massorético. Na versão Almeida, revista e corrigida, é traduzida 28 vezes por "inferno", 27 vezes por "sepultura", 5 vezes por "sepulcro", 2 vezes é deixada "Seol" e uma vez cada é vertida "terra", "mundo invisível" e "enterrado". A versão católica de Matos Soares verte a palavra 34 vezes por "inferno(s)", 11 vezes por "habitação dos mortos", 11 vezes por "sepulcro", 4 vezes por "sepultura", 2 vezes por "cheol" e uma vez cada por "abismo", "morte" e "perigos exiciais". Além disso, em Isaías 7:11, o texto hebraico originalmente rezava she'óhl, e foi traduzido "Hades" nas antigas versões gregas de Áquila, Símaco e Teodócio, e como "terra" na versão de Matos Soares. — Veja NM, n.

Não há nenhuma palavra portuguesa que transmita o sentido exato da palavra hebraica she'óhl. Comentando o uso da palavra "inferno" na tradução da Bíblia, Collier's Encyclopedia (Enciclopédia da Collier; 1986, Vol. 12, p. 28) diz: "Visto que Seol, nos tempos do Antigo Testamento, se referia simplesmente à habitação dos mortos e não sugeria distinções morais, a palavra 'inferno', conforme entendida atualmente, não é uma tradução feliz." Versões mais recentes transliteram a palavra como "Xeol", "Cheol" ou "Seol". — BJ, BMD, NM.

A respeito de Seol, a Encyclopædia Britannica (Enciclopédia Britânica; 1971, Vol. 11, p. 276) observou: "Seol estava localizado em alguma parte 'debaixo' da terra. . . . A condição dos mortos não era de dor nem de prazer. Nem a recompensa para os justos nem o castigo para os iníquos estavam relacionados com o Seol. Tanto os bons como os maus, tiranos e santos, reis e órfãos, israelitas e gentios — todos dormiam juntos sem estarem cônscios uns dos outros."

Ao passo que, em séculos posteriores, o ensino grego da imortalidade da alma humana se infiltrou no pensamento religioso judaico, o registro bíblico mostra que Seol se refere à sepultura comum da humanidade como lugar onde não existe estado consciente. (Ec 9:4-6, 10) Os que estão no Seol não louvam a Deus, nem o mencionam. (Sal 6:4, 5; Is 38:17-19) No entanto, não se pode dizer que simplesmente represente 'a condição de se estar separado de Deus', pois as Escrituras tornam tal ensino insustentável por mostrar que o Seol está "diante" dele, e que Deus, na realidade, está "lá". (Pr 15:11; Sal 139:7, 8; Am 9:1, 2) Por este motivo, Jó, ansiando ser liberto do sofrimento, orou para que pudesse ir ao Seol e mais tarde ser lembrado por Jeová, e ser chamado para sair do Seol. — Jó 14:12-15.

Em todas as Escrituras inspiradas, o Seol continuamente é associado com a morte, não com a vida. (1Sa 2:6; 2Sa 22:6; Sal 18:4, 5; 49:7-10, 14, 15; 88:2-6; 89:48; Is 28:15-18; compare também Sal 116:3, 7-10, com 2Co 4:13, 14.) Ele é chamado de "a terra de escuridão" (Jó 10:21) e de lugar de silêncio. (Sal 115:17) Pelo visto, Abel foi o primeiro a ir para o Seol, e desde então incontáveis milhões de mortos humanos se juntaram a ele no pó do solo.

No dia de Pentecostes de 33 EC, o apóstolo Pedro citou o Salmo 16:10 e o aplicou a Cristo Jesus. Lucas, citando as palavras de Pedro, usou a palavra grega hai·des, mostrando com isso que Seol e Hades se referem à mesma coisa, à sepultura comum da humanidade. (At 2:25-27, 29-32) Durante o Reinado Milenar de Jesus Cristo, o Seol, ou Hades, será esvaziado e destruído pela ressurreição de todos os que estiverem nele. — Re 20:13, 14; veja HADES; INFERNO; SEPULTURA, SEPULCRO.

Jonas e o Seol. No relato sobre Jonas, declara-se que "Jonas orou a Jeová, seu Deus, desde as entranhas do peixe e disse: 'Na minha aflição clamei a Jeová e ele passou a responder-me. Do ventre do Seol clamei por ajuda. Ouviste a minha voz.' " (Jon 2:1, 2) Portanto, Jonas comparou o interior do peixe ao Seol. Ele a bem dizer estava morto dentro do peixe, mas Jeová fez subir a vida dele da cova, ou do Seol, por preservá-lo vivo e fazer com que fosse vomitado. — Jon 2:6; compare isso com Sal 30:3.

Jesus comparou a estada de Jonas no ventre do peixe ao que aconteceria com ele mesmo, dizendo: "Porque, assim como Jonas esteve três dias e três noites no ventre do enorme peixe, assim estará também o Filho do homem três dias e três noites no coração da terra." (Mt 12:40) Embora Jesus não usasse ali a palavra "Seol" (Hades), o apóstolo Pedro usou a palavra "Hades" ao se referir à morte e à ressurreição de Jesus. — At 2:27.

Sobre a palavra "Seol", disseram Brynmor F. Price e Eugene A. Nida: "A palavra ocorre muitas vezes nos Salmos e no livro de Jó para se referir ao lugar ao qual vão todos os mortos. É representado como lugar escuro, em que não há atividade digna de menção. Não há distinções de moral ali, de modo que 'inferno' (KJV) não é uma tradução apropriada, visto que sugere um contraste com o 'céu' como morada dos justos após a morte. De certo modo, 'a sepultura', em sentido genérico, é um equivalente próximo, exceto que Seol é mais uma sepultura em massa, em que todos os mortos moram juntos. . . . O uso desta específica imagem retórica talvez fosse apropriado aqui [em Jonas 2:2], em vista do encarceramento de Jonas no interior do peixe." — A Translators Handbook on the Book of Jonah (Manual do Tradutor Para o Livro de Jonas), 1978, p. 37.

SEORIM. Cabeça da quarta das 24 turmas de serviço sacerdotal escolhidas por sortes durante o reinado de Davi. — 1Cr 24:5, 8.

SEPULTURA, SEPULCRO. Lugar de sepultamento. Embora hoje o termo "sepultura", ou "sepulcro", em geral seja entendido como se aplicando a uma escavação na terra como lugar para enterrar os mortos, um método comum de sepultamento entre os hebreus e outros povos orientais era usar uma caverna natural ou um sepulcro escavado em rocha, ou cripta mortuária. A palavra hebraica qé·ver é a palavra costumeira usada para indicar um lugar de sepultamento, uma sepultura ou um cemitério. (Gên 23:7-9; Je 8:1; 26:23) A palavra aparentada qevu·ráh similarmente pode referir-se tanto a uma cova na terra como a um túmulo escavado em rocha. — Gên 35:20; 1Sa 10:2.

Em grego, a palavra comum para sepultura ou sepulcro é tá·fos (Mt 28:1), e a forma verbal (thá·pto) significa "enterrar" ou "sepultar". (Mt 8:21, 22) A palavra mné·ma (Lu 23:53) refere-se a um túmulo e a palavra mne·meíon (Lu 23:55), a um túmulo memorial.

Visto que essas palavras hebraicas e gregas se referem a uma sepultura individual ou a um lugar de sepultamento, elas são frequentemente usadas no plural com referência a muitas de tais sepulturas. Portanto, diferem da palavra hebraica she'óhl e da sua equivalente grega hái·des, que se referem à sepultura comum da humanidade, ou o domínio da sepultura, e por isso sempre são usadas no singular. Por este motivo, muitas traduções modernas não seguiram o costume de algumas traduções em português, tais como a versão Almeida, revista e corrigida, nas quais she'óhl e hái·des são variadamente traduzidas pelas palavras "inferno", "sepultura", "habitação dos mortos", e outras, mas, em vez disso, simplesmente as transliteraram em português. — Veja HADES; SEOL.

No entanto, visto que a entrada no Seol é representada como ocorrendo pelo sepultamento numa cova individual ou num lugar de sepultamento, as palavras referentes a tais lugares de sepultamento são usadas como termos paralelos, embora não equivalentes, de Seol. — Jó 17:1, 13-16; 21:13, 32, 33; Sal 88:3-12.

Em Romanos 3:13, o apóstolo Paulo cita o Salmo 5:9, comparando a garganta de homens iníquos e enganosos a "um sepulcro aberto". Assim como o sepulcro aberto é para ser enchido com mortos e com corrupção, a garganta deles abre-se com conversa mortífera e corrupta. — Veja Mt 15:18-20.

Era costume caiar as sepulturas para que as pessoas não tocassem nelas acidentalmente e ficassem impuras. Os túmulos perto de Jerusalém eram caiados um mês antes da Páscoa, para impedir que alguém se tornasse impuro, neste período especial de adoração, por acidentalmente tocar numa sepultura. Jesus usou este costume como base para ilustrar como os escribas e os fariseus, que por fora pareciam justos, por dentro estavam "cheios de hipocrisia e do que é contra a lei". — Mt 23:27, 28.

Embora a sepultura seja comparada a uma cova, da qual o homem corretamente deseja ser liberto, Jó traz à atenção o desespero daquelas pessoas sofredoras que, por falta duma clara esperança ou entendimento dos propósitos do Criador, procuram a morte e "exultam por terem achado uma sepultura". (Jó 3:21, 22) Tal atitude contrasta nitidamente com aquela dos homens que devotaram sua vida ao serviço do Criador e que confiantemente aceitaram a promessa duma ressurreição. — Sal 16:9-11; At 24:15; Fil 1:21-26; 2Ti 4:6-8; He 11:17-19; veja ENTERRO, LUGARES DE SEPULTAMENTO.

SERA. Filha de Aser dentre "as almas da casa de Jacó, que vieram ao Egito". — Gên 46:7, 17, 27; Núm 26:46; 1Cr 7:30.

SERAFINS. Criaturas espirituais posicionadas em torno do trono de Jeová nos céus. (Is 6:2, 6) A palavra hebraica sera·fím é um substantivo no plural, derivado do verbo sa·ráf, que significa "queimar". (Le 4:12) De modo que o termo hebraico sera·fím significa literalmente "ardentes". Em outra parte, o substantivo ocorre no singular (hebr.: sa·ráf) ou no plural, e se refere a criaturas terrestres. Neste uso, tem o sentido variado de "venenoso", "ardente (que provoca inflamação)" e "cobra-ardente". — Núm 21:6 n, 8 n.

O profeta Isaías descreve para nós a sua visão, dizendo: "No ano em que morreu o Rei Uzias, eu, no entanto, cheguei a ver Jeová sentado num trono enaltecido e elevado, e as orlas da sua veste enchiam o templo. Acima dele havia serafins de pé. Cada um tinha seis asas. Com duas cobria sua face, e com duas cobria seus pés, e com duas voava. E este clamou para aquele e disse: 'Santo, santo, santo é Jeová dos exércitos. A plenitude de toda a terra é sua glória.' . . . E eu passei a dizer: 'Ai de mim! Pois, a bem dizer, fui silenciado, porque sou homem de lábios impuros e moro no meio de um povo de lábios impuros; pois os meus olhos viram o próprio Rei, Jeová dos exércitos!' Em vista disso voou para mim um dos serafins, e na sua mão havia uma brasa viva que ele tirara do altar com uma tenaz. E ele passou a tocar-me a boca e a dizer: 'Eis que isto tocou os teus lábios, e teu erro sumiu e o próprio pecado teu está expiado.' " — Is 6:1-7.

Não se fornece nenhuma descrição da Pessoa Divina. Todavia, diz-se que as orlas da sua majestosa veste enchiam o templo, não deixando lugar para alguém ficar ali de pé. Seu trono não pousava no chão, mas, além de ser "enaltecido", era "elevado". Estarem os serafins "de pé" talvez signifique que "pairavam" por usar um par de suas asas, assim como a nuvem 'ficava' ou pairava à entrada da tenda de Jeová no ermo. (De 31:15) O Professor Franz Delitzsch comenta a posição dos serafins: "Os serafins não estariam, deveras, sobre a cabeça Daquele que estava sentado no trono, mas adejavam sobre o manto que pertencia Àquele, manto este que enchia o salão." (Commentary on the Old Testament [Comentário sobre o Velho Testamento], 1973, Vol. VII, Parte 1, p. 191) A Vulgata latina, em vez de dizer "serafins estavam de pé acima dele", diz que estavam de pé acima "daquilo". — Is 6:1, 2.

De Alta Categoria. Essas poderosas criaturas espirituais são anjos, evidentemente de posição bem elevada no arranjo de Deus, visto que se mostra estarem à serviço junto ao trono de Deus. Os querubins observados na visão de Ezequiel correspondiam a batedores que acompanhavam o carro celestial de Deus. (Ez 10:9-13) Esta ideia de posições de categoria ou autoridade nos céus está em harmonia com Colossenses 1:16, que fala de coisas "nos céus e na terra, as coisas visíveis e as coisas invisíveis, quer sejam tronos, quer senhorios, quer governos, quer autoridades".

Sua Função e Seus Deveres. Não se menciona o número de serafins, mas clamavam um para o outro, o que evidentemente significa que havia alguns em cada lado do trono e que declaravam a santidade e a glória de Jeová num canto antifônico, um (ou um grupo) repetindo após o outro, ou respondendo ao outro com parte da declaração: "Santo, santo, santo é Jeová dos exércitos. A plenitude de toda a terra é sua glória." (Veja a leitura da Lei e a resposta do povo, em De 27:11-26.) Eles, com humildade e modéstia na presença do Supremo, cobriam a face com um dos seus três pares de asas, e por estarem num local santo, cobriam os pés com outro par, com o devido respeito pelo Rei celestial. — Is 6:2, 3.

O clamor dos serafins a respeito da santidade de Deus mostra que eles têm algo a ver com cuidar de que se declare a santidade dele e que Sua glória seja reconhecida em todas as partes do Universo, inclusive a Terra. Um dos serafins tocou os lábios de Isaías para tirar os pecados e os erros dele por meio duma brasa viva tirada do altar. Isto talvez indique que a obra deles de algum modo se relaciona com a eliminação do pecado dentre o povo de Deus, baseando-se esta purificação no sacrifício de Jesus Cristo sobre o altar de Deus. — Is 6:3, 6, 7.

Sua Figura Visionária. A descrição dos serafins como tendo pés, asas, e assim por diante, deve ser entendida como simbólica, sendo a sua semelhança com a figura de criaturas terrestres apenas representativa das habilidades deles ou das funções que desempenham, assim como muitas vezes Deus fala simbolicamente de si mesmo como tendo olhos, ouvidos e outras características humanas. Mostrando que nenhum homem sabe qual é a figura de Deus, o apóstolo João diz: "Amados, agora somos filhos de Deus, mas ainda não está manifesto o que havemos de ser. Sabemos que, quando ele for manifestado, seremos semelhantes a ele, porque o veremos assim como ele é." — 1Jo 3:2.

SERAÍAS [Jeová Contendeu (Perseverou)].

1. Filho de Quenaz da tribo de Judá, irmão do juiz Otniel e sobrinho de Calebe, o espia. Os descendentes de Seraías através de seu filho Joabe tornaram-se artífices. — 1Cr 4:13, 14.

2. Secretário na administração do Rei Davi. (2Sa 8:15, 17) A menos que tenha havido várias mudanças de pessoal neste cargo, ele em outros lugares é chamado de Seva (2Sa 20:25), Savsa (1Cr 18:16) e Sisa, cujos dois filhos mais tarde cuidavam de deveres similares sob Salomão. (1Rs 4:3) Os nomes da maioria das outras autoridades governamentais são iguais nas três listas davídicas.

3. Filho de Asiel da tribo de Simeão, cujos descendentes, contemporâneos de Ezequias, juntaram-se à força que golpeou os camitas e os meunins que ocuparam certa região e usaram as terras para pastos. — 1Cr 4:24, 35, 38-41.

4. Um dos três que o Rei Jeoiaquim, em fins de 624 AEC, mandou buscar Jeremias e Baruque por causa da profecia contra Jerusalém e Judá, que Baruque havia registrado conforme ditado por Jeremias. Seraías era filho de Azriel. — Je 36:9, 26.

5. Oficial intendente do Rei Zedequias; filho de Nerias e irmão de Baruque. (Je 32:12; 51:59) No quarto ano de Zedequias, 614 AEC, Seraías acompanhou Zedequias a Babilônia. Jeremias dera-lhe um rolo com denúncias proféticas a respeito de Babilônia, mandando que o lesse à beira do rio Eufrates, que então atasse uma pedra ao rolo e o lançasse no rio, ilustrando assim a queda permanente de Babilônia. (Je 51:59-64) Seraías provavelmente transmitiu aos exilados israelitas que já se encontravam ali algumas das ideias da profecia. É de interesse que os arqueólogos encontraram um selo com a inscrição "Pertencente a Seraías (ben) Nerias". — Israel Exploration Journal (Revista de Explorações de Israel), Jerusalém, 1978, Vol. 28, p. 56.

6. O sacerdote principal quando Babilônia destruiu Jerusalém em 607 AEC. Embora Seraías fosse morto às ordens de Nabucodonosor, seu filho Jeozadaque foi poupado e levado cativo a Babilônia. (2Rs 25:18-21; Je 52:24-27) Por meio de Jeozadaque, filho de Seraías, prosseguiu a linhagem sumo sacerdotal descendente de Arão; Jesua, filho de Jeozadaque, ocupou este cargo na época da soltura e do retorno dos judeus. (1Cr 6:14, 15; Esd 3:2) Seraías é também chamado de pai de Esdras, mas, em vista dos 139 anos de intervalo entre a morte de Seraías e o retorno de Esdras, houve provavelmente no intervalo pelo menos duas gerações não mencionadas, um tipo de omissão comum nas genealogias bíblicas. — Esd 7:1.

7. Um dos chefes militares que permaneceram em Judá depois da deportação geral para Babilônia; filho de Tanumete. Seraías e outros da sua categoria apoiaram a designação de Gedalias como governador, avisaram-no da ameaça de Ismael contra a sua vida e depois procuraram vingar a morte dele. No entanto, temendo os babilônios, Seraías e os outros chefes levaram os judeus remanescentes ao Egito. — 2Rs 25:23, 26; Je 40:8, 13-16; 41:11-18; 43:4-7.

8. Um dos que aparentemente eram líderes, alistado junto com Zorobabel como retornando do exílio em 537 AEC. (Esd 2:1, 2) Ele é chamado de Azarias na lista paralela em Neemias 7:7.

9. Sacerdote que retornou do exílio junto com Zorobabel. Na geração seguinte, Meraías representava a casa paterna dele. (Ne 12:1, 12) O Seraías incluído nos signatários do pacto nos dias de Esdras e Neemias talvez fosse também representante da mesma família ou outro sacerdote do mesmo nome. (Ne 10:1, 2, 8) Seraías, de novo possivelmente alguém desta casa paterna ou um sacerdote do mesmo nome, morou em Jerusalém depois da reconstrução das muralhas. — Ne 11:1, 10, 11.

SERAPILHEIRA. Veja SACO, SERAPILHEIRA.

SEREBIAS [possivelmente significando "Jah [Enviou] Calor Abrasador"].

1. Levita de destaque que retornou a Jerusalém junto com Zorobabel, em 537 AEC. — Ne 12:1, 8.

2. Levita descendente de Mali; "homem de discrição", convocado para se juntar a Esdras na sua viagem a Jerusalém, em 468 AEC. (Esd 8:17, 18) Provavelmente é o mesmo que o 'chefe dos sacerdotes' mencionado em Esdras 8:24, um daqueles a quem se confiou transportar para Jerusalém as coisas valiosas contribuídas para uso no templo. — Esd 8:25-30.

3. Levita que ajudou Esdras na leitura e na explicação da Lei ao povo reunido em Jerusalém após a reconstrução da muralha, em 455 AEC. (Ne 8:2, 7, 8) Mais tarde naquele mesmo mês, congregaram-se de novo, e Serebias participou em propor "um arranjo fidedigno", ratificado pela nação, prometendo fidelidade a Jeová. (Ne 9:1, 4, 5, 38) Este Serebias talvez fosse o mesmo levita que o N.º 2, atestando pessoalmente o pacto, ou talvez fosse o representante de alguma família com este nome, possivelmente descendente do N.º 1. — Ne 10:1, 9, 12; 12:24.

SEREDE. Primeiro filho mencionado de Zebulão, e fundador dos sereditas, família tribal dos zebulonitas. — Gên 46:14; Núm 26:26, 27.

SEREDITAS [De (Pertencentes a) Serede]. Família zebulonita fundada por Serede. — Núm 26:26.

SERES [Raiz]. Descendente de Manassés e filho de Maquir com sua esposa Maacá. — 1Cr 7:14, 16.

SERPENTE, COBRA [hebr.: na·hhásh, tan·nín, tsé·faʽ; tsif·ʽoh·ní; gr.: ó·fis]. Réptil alongado, escamoso e ápode. As serpentes se locomovem sobre o ventre ou a caixa torácica, e por causa da proximidade da sua cabeça ao chão, sua língua dardejante parece lamber o pó. (Gên 3:14) Há mais de 30 espécies de serpentes em Israel.

A palavra hebraica na·hhásh evidentemente é genérica, ou geral, termo aplicado a todas as serpentes ou criaturas serpentiformes e é frequentemente usado junto com outras palavras hebraicas que denotam determinada espécie de serpente. (Sal 58:4; 140:3; Pr 23:32) Assim, a tribo de Dã primeiro é comparada simplesmente a "uma serpente [na·hhásh]" e depois especificamente a "uma cobra-cornuda [shefi·fón]" deitada à beira da estrada, que ataca os inimigos de Israel. (Gên 49:17) Este termo hebraico corresponde ao grego ó·fis, que também é genérico. Embora muitas serpentes em Israel hoje não sejam do tipo venenoso, as referências bíblicas a cobras são principalmente com respeito às perigosas ou venenosas.

As palavras hebraicas tsé·faʽ e tsif·ʽoh·ní são entendidas pelos lexicógrafos como referindo-se a cobras venenosas, sendo que a pronúncia hebraica talvez represente o som sibilante feito por tais cobras quando algo se aproxima delas. Ambas talvez se refiram a alguma variedade de víbora, mas a identificação é incerta. A versão Almeida da Imprensa Bíblica Brasileira, a versão dos Missionários

Capuchinhos, edição da Difusora Bíblica, de Lisboa, e a versão Figueiredo vertem essas palavras incorretamente como se referindo ao mítico "basilisco", em Isaías 11:8; 14:29; 59:5; e a IBB ainda em Je 8:17.

No relato sobre a transformação do bastão de Moisés numa cobra (Êx 7:9-13) usa-se a palavra hebraica tan·nín, evidentemente referindo-se a uma "cobra grande", em vista do uso desta palavra em outros textos para descrever uma criatura monstruosa do mar. (Gên 1:21; Jó 7:12; Sal 74:13; 148:7; Is 27:1; 51:9) Outros textos em que o termo se aplica claramente a cobras venenosas são Deuteronômio 32:33 e Salmo 91:13, onde também se mencionam najas. Uma fonte na Jerusalém pós-exílica era conhecida como a "Fonte da Cobra Grande". — Ne 2:13.

Em vários textos mencionam-se as bem conhecidas características da serpente: seu movimento deslizante (Jó 26:13), sua mordedura e seu esconderijo em paredes e muros de pedra (Ec 10:8, 11; Am 5:19), também de ela ser cautelosa (Gên 3:1). Esta última característica foi usada por Jesus como exemplo ao admoestar seus discípulos sobre a conduta deles quando estivessem entre opositores lupinos. — Mt 10:16.

Essa 'cautela' é mencionada por um eminente zoólogo britânico, H. W. Parker, no seu livro Snakes: A Natural History (Cobras: Uma História Natural; 1977, p. 49): "Mesmo que já tenham atingido a última linha de defesa, o contra-ataque, nos seus estágios iniciais, pode ser mais simulado do que real; fazem-se ataques frequentes com aparente ferocidade, mas não chegam a atingir o objetivo, e às vezes nem mesmo se abre a boca. Tampouco é incomum, neste estágio, que a cobra se desenrole furtivamente para estar pronta para uma rápida retirada e fuga, se o inimigo recuar. Mas, quando finalmente prepara o ataque total, este segue o padrão usualmente empregado para pegar uma presa, embora com maior ferocidade; as espécies que normalmente morderiam e depois soltariam sua vítima, ou apenas a segurariam, mordem repetidas vezes ou sacodem seu molestador."

Uso Figurado. Em muitos textos, a serpente é usada em sentido figurado: as mentiras dos iníquos são comparadas à peçonha dela (Sal 58:3, 4), a língua afiada dos que maquinam o mal, à da serpente (Sal 140:3), e diz-se que o vinho tomado em excesso morde igual às serpentes (Pr 23:32). A isenção de violência e de dano no meio do povo restabelecido de Jeová é ilustrada com 'o alimento da serpente ser o pó'. — Is 65:25.

A figura simbólica da serpente, ou cobra, é também usada nas pronúncias de julgamento por Deus sobre certas nações, tais como a Filístia (Is 14:29) e a infiel Judá (Je 8:17), bem como o Egito, cuja voz é comparada à da serpente, sem dúvida referindo-se quer ao recuo sibilante em derrota, quer à fraqueza da sua voz nacional, por causa do desastre que sofre. (Je 46:22) Esta última referência provavelmente era também uma expressão destinada a expor a futilidade da prática dos faraós egípcios, de usar ureios, uma representação da serpente sagrada, na frente de seu toucado, como sinal de proteção pela deusa-serpente Uatchit. Em Miqueias 7:17 prediz-se que todas as nações que se opõem ao povo de Deus deveras "lamberão o pó como as serpentes". — Veja também Am 9:3.

Em Jeremias 51:34, a habitante de Sião compara o Rei Nabucodonosor a uma "cobra grande" que a tragou.

Satanás, o Diabo. Em Revelação (Apocalipse) 12:9 e 20:2, o principal opositor de Deus, Satanás, é chamado de "a serpente original", evidentemente por ele ter usado a serpente literal no Éden como seu meio de comunicação com a mulher. (Gên 3:1-15) Ele, como "a serpente original", é também em sentido espiritual o progenitor de outros opositores; daí a classificação de tais por Jesus como "serpentes, descendência de víboras". — Mt 23:33; veja Jo 8:44; 1Jo 3:12.

Na religião falsa. A serpente era um frequente símbolo nas religiões pagãs e era muitas vezes objeto de adoração. (FOTOS, Vol. 2, p. 530) Na Mesopotâmia, em Canaã e no Egito, a serpente era o símbolo da fertilidade e de deusas do sexo; duas serpentes entrelaçadas eram usadas para indicar fertilidade pela união sexual, e visto que a serpente repetidas vezes muda de pele, ela era usada como símbolo de vida contínua.

O Rei Ezequias tomou medidas para erradicar toda adoração da serpente dentre seus súditos, por destroçar a serpente de cobre que havia sido usada no tempo de Moisés, durante um ataque de cobras venenosas no ermo. — Núm 21:6-9; 2Rs 18:4; veja COBRA-ARDENTE; SERPENTE DE COBRE.

SERPENTE DE COBRE. Figura ou representação de cobre duma serpente, feita por Moisés durante a peregrinação de Israel no ermo. Perto da fronteira de Edom, o povo mostrou um espírito rebelde, queixando-se do milagrosamente provido maná e do suprimento de água. Por isso, Jeová os puniu por enviar entre eles serpentes venenosas, e muitos morreram de mordidas de serpentes. Depois que o povo mostrou arrependimento e Moisés intercedeu por eles, Jeová lhe mandou fazer uma figura em forma de serpente e colocá-la numa haste de sinal. Moisés obedeceu, e "acontecia que, quando alguma serpente mordia um homem e ele fitava os olhos na serpente de cobre, então ficava vivo". — Núm 21:4-9; 1Co 10:9.

As Escrituras não identificam o tipo de serpente venenosa que Jeová enviou entre o povo. A expressão hebraica para "serpentes venenosas" (han·nehha·shím has·sera·fím), em Números 21:6, pode significar "serpentes ardentes", talvez por causa da ardência ou do efeito inflamatório do seu veneno.

Os israelitas guardaram a serpente de cobre e mais tarde começaram impropriamente a adorá-la, fazendo fumaça sacrificial a ela. Por isso, como parte das suas reformas religiosas, o Rei Ezequias, de Judá (745-717 AEC), mandou esmiuçar a serpente de cobre de mais de 700 anos, porque o povo fizera dela um ídolo. Segundo o texto hebraico, o relato de 2 Reis 18:4 reza literalmente "ele (alguém) começou a chamá-la de Neustã". Algumas versões deixam a palavra "Neustã" sem tradução. (Al; ALA; BJ; CBC) No léxico de Koehler e Baumgartner, os significados sugeridos do termo hebraico nehhush·tán são "serpente de bronze" e "ídolo-serpente de bronze". (Hebräisches und Aramäisches Lexikon zum Alten Testament [Léxico Hebraico e Aramaico do Velho Testamento], Leiden, 1983, p. 653) A Tradução do Novo Mundo diz apropriadamente que a serpente de cobre "costumava ser chamada de ídolo-serpente de cobre".

Jesus Cristo esclareceu o significado profético do incidente com a serpente de cobre no ermo, quando disse a Nicodemos: "Ademais, nenhum homem ascendeu ao céu, senão aquele que desceu do céu, o Filho do homem. E assim como Moisés ergueu a serpente no ermo, assim tem de ser erguido o Filho do homem, para que todo o que nele crer tenha vida eterna." (Jo 3:13-15) O Filho de Deus, igual à serpente de cobre que Moisés pôs numa haste, no ermo, foi pregado ou fixado numa estaca, assim parecendo a muitos ser malfeitor e pecador, igual a uma serpente, na condição de alguém amaldiçoado. (De 21:22, 23; Gál 3:13; 1Pe 2:24) No ermo, quem tivesse sido mordido pelas serpentes venenosas enviadas por Jeová entre os israelitas evidentemente tinha de olhar com fé para a serpente de cobre. De modo similar, para se obter a vida eterna por meio de Cristo, é preciso exercer fé nele.

SERRA. Ferramenta para cortar, com lâmina dentada ou serrilhada, e com um ou dois cabos. As primitivas serras não cortavam em ambas as direções; algumas eram projetadas para serrar quando puxadas em direção ao usuário; outras, quando empurradas. As serras egípcias em geral eram de bronze e usualmente tinham dentes inclinados na direção do cabo. Tal serra cortava quando puxada em direção da pessoa que a usava. A lâmina era inserida no cabo ou então presa a ele por meio de linguetas. Serras de dois cabos com lâmina de ferro eram usadas entre os assírios. Os carpinteiros hebreus empregavam a serra para cortar madeira, e seus pedreiros usavam serras próprias para cortar pedra. — Is 10:15; 1Rs 7:9.

Davi fez os amonitas cativos trabalhar em tarefas tais como serrar pedra. (2Sa 12:29-31) As ferramentas deles incluíam "machados", ou, literalmente, "serras de pedra", segundo o texto massorético de 1 Crônicas 20:3. Em alguns casos, parece que se usavam serras de lâmina de cobre com dentes de pedra para cortar pedra. Mas, parece que às vezes se punha um abrasivo, tal como pó de esmeril, sob o fio de corte da lâmina de cobre ou de bronze, para facilitar o corte de pedra.

A perseguição movida a fiéis testemunhas pré-cristãs de Jeová era às vezes tão severa, que algumas foram mortas por serem 'serradas em pedaços'. (He 11:37, 38) Segundo a tradição, o iníquo Rei Manassés mandou matar Isaías desta maneira extremamente dolorosa, embora as Escrituras não o digam.

SERUGUE. Descendente de Sem, filho de Reú e bisavô de Abraão, portanto, antepassado de Jesus. Serugue viveu 230 anos (2207-1977 AEC) e teve vários filhos, tornando-se pai de Naor à idade de 30 anos. — Gên 11:10, 20-23; 1Cr 1:24-27; Lu 3:35.

SERVIÇO COMPULSÓRIO. A palavra hebraica para "serviço compulsório" é sé·vel, que tem que ver com uma carga literal ou figurativa, um fardo imposto ou um trabalho estafante. Pode aplicar-se à corveia, isto é, ao trabalho não pago ou só parcialmente compensado, imposto por uma autoridade a certas pessoas, tais como os moradores de determinada área.

O salmista, refletindo sobre a libertação de Israel da servidão egípcia, representou Jeová como dizendo: "Desviei seu ombro do próprio fardo [ou serviço compulsório]." (Sal 81:6; Êx 1:11) O Rei Salomão recrutou homens para trabalhos forçados, para diversos projetos de construção, e encarregou deles capatazes. (1Rs 5:13; 9:15, 23) Quando Salomão notou que o jovem Jeroboão era trabalhador árduo, "passou a encarregá-lo de todo o serviço compulsório da casa de José", isto é, sobre os homens recrutados das tribos de Efraim e de Manassés. — 1Rs 11:26-28.

Aparentada com a palavra hebraica sé·vel é sab·bál, que significa "carregador". Depois de fazer um censo dos homens que eram residentes forasteiros em Israel, Salomão os pôs a trabalhar, e 70.000 deles tornaram-se carregadores. (2Cr 2:2, 17, 18) Muitos anos mais tarde, o Rei Josias consertou o templo, e havia "carregadores" entre os que faziam o serviço. — 2Cr 34:12, 13.

A palavra hebraica tsa·vá', que frequentemente é relacionada com o serviço militar ou o serviço na guerra, significa também "trabalho compulsório", isto é, para sanar uma dívida ou culpa. Assim, devia-se dizer a Jerusalém que seu "serviço militar" tinha sido cumprido e que seu erro havia sido pago. (Is 40:1, 2 n) O afligido e sofrido Jó, quando sob prova, comparou a vida a serviço duro, fatigante, ou "trabalho compulsório", perguntando: "Não há trabalho compulsório para o homem mortal na terra, e não são os seus dias como os dias dum trabalhador contratado?" (Jó 7:1) Com sentimento similar, ele disse mais tarde a Deus: "Farás maior teu vexame comigo; trabalhos e mais trabalhos estão comigo", ou "um turno de trabalho compulsório após outro está comigo". (Jó 10:17 n) Evidentemente, Jó achava que Deus lhe aumentara a aflição por causar-lhe uma nova dificuldade após outra. Jó comparou também o tempo que os mortos passam no Seol a trabalho compulsório, um fardo imposto; todavia, ele expressou esperança na ressurreição. — Jó 14:14.

SERVIÇO SAGRADO. Ministério ou trabalho sagrado, diretamente relacionado com a adoração que a pessoa presta a Deus.

O termo hebraico 'a·vádh significa basicamente "servir" (Gên 14:4; 15:13; 29:15) ou "labutar" (Êx 34:21), e é também vertido por "lavrar", "cultivar". (Gên 4:12; De 28:39) Quando usada com referência a serviço prestado a Jeová ou a deidades falsas, 'a·vádh indica adoração, ou serviço sagrado. (Êx 10:26; De 11:16) De modo similar, o verbo grego la·treú·o denota prestar serviço. É usado com respeito a servir a Deus (Mt 4:10; Lu 1:74; 2:37; 4:8; At 7:7; Ro 1:9; Fil 3:3; 2Ti 1:3; He 9:14; 12:28; Re 7:15; 22:3), como se fazia no santuário ou no templo (He 8:5; 9:9; 10:2; 13:10), e também com relação à adoração falsa, prestar serviço a coisas criadas. (At 7:42; Ro 1:25) Nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs, o substantivo la·trei·a ocorre exclusivamente com referência a servir a Deus. (Jo 16:2; Ro 9:4; 12:1; He 9:1, 6) Difere da palavra grega di·a·ko·ní·a, que também significa "ministério, serviço", mas é usada referente a coisas comuns, corriqueiras, mundanas — coisas que não são sagradas.

O Único a quem corretamente se pode prestar adoração ou serviço sagrado é Jeová Deus. (Mt 4:10; Lu 4:8) Por causa da relação pactuada, especial, dos judeus com Jeová Deus, o privilégio de prestar serviço sagrado como filhos de Deus, gerados pelo espírito, e membros dum "sacerdócio real", devia ter sido deles. Mas a maioria saiu perdendo por deixar de exercer fé em Cristo Jesus. (Ro 9:3-5, 30-33; 1Pe 2:4-10) Muitos, iguais ao fariseu Saulo antes de se tornar cristão, imaginavam que estavam realmente prestando serviço sagrado a Deus por perseguirem os seguidores de Cristo. — Jo 16:2; At 26:9-11; Gál 1:13, 14.

SESÃ. Descendente de Judá através de Jerameel. Sesã não tinha filhos varões, e assim deu sua filha (provavelmente Alai) em casamento ao seu escravo Jara, para dar continuação à sua linhagem. — 1Cr 2:31, 34, 35.

SESAI. Irmão de Aimã e de Talmai. — Núm 13:22; Jos 15:14; Jz 1:10; veja AIMÃ N.º 1.

SESAQUE. Provavelmente nome simbólico de Babilônia. (Je 25:26; 51:41) Uma sugestão apresentada é que Sesaque significa "De Portões de Cobre" e isto se ajustaria a Babilônia. Outro ponto de vista é que "Sesaque" representava o SiskuKI de um antigo registro real, babilônico. Sisku ou Siska pode ter sido um distrito da antiga Babilônia. A tradição judaica, porém, sustenta que Sesaque é criptograma do nome hebraico Babel (ou: Babilônia), mediante um arranjo chamado athbash. Segundo este sistema criptográfico, o verdadeiro nome é disfarçado por se substituir a última letra do alfabeto hebraico (taw) pela primeira ('á·lef), e a penúltima letra (shin) pela segunda (behth), e assim por diante. Por conseguinte, em "Babel", cada behth (b) seria mudado para shin (sh), e o lá·medh (l), para kaf (kh), tornando-se assim She·shákh. O nome Sesaque pode também dar a entender humilhação, que Babilônia havia de sofrer. — Je 25:26 n; Soncino Books of the Bible (Livros da Bíblia, de Soncino), obra editada por A. Cohen, Londres, 1949.

SESBAZAR. O encarregado pelo Rei Ciro dos primeiros exilados a retornarem de Babilônia. Ao conduzir os judeus de volta, Sesbazar levou consigo os utensílios de ouro e de prata que Nabucodonosor saqueara do templo. Ao chegar a Jerusalém, lançou os alicerces do segundo templo. — Esd 1:7-11; 5:14-16.

As opiniões se dividem quanto a se Sesbazar era o próprio governador Zorobabel ou se era outra pessoa. Alguns sugerem que seja Senazar, filho do Rei Joaquim, mencionado em 1 Crônicas 3:18, em vista da semelhança entre os dois nomes, bem como do título de Sesbazar, "príncipe de Judá", que ocorre em algumas versões de Esdras 1:8. (Al, BJ, CBC) No entanto, esta teoria é bastante fraca, porque a semelhança entre os nomes não é tão grande, e Zorobabel, neto de Joaquim, tinha igual direito ao título de “príncipe [“maioral”, NM] de Judá” como descendente da primeira geração.

Alguns dos atuais peritos, na tentativa de identificar Sesbazar e Zorobabel como pessoas separadas, dizem que Ciro primeiro designou Sesbazar como governador, mas que depois Sesbazar foi sucedido por Zorobabel durante o reinado de Dario, e, por isso, atribui-se a construção do templo a Zorobabel.

Parece que o mais provável é que Sesbazar seja Zorobabel, e a maioria dos peritos e das obras de referência relacionam assim os nomes. Note estes pontos de comparação: de modo geral, o que se atribui a Sesbazar nas duas passagens em que ele é mencionado por nome, em outros lugares, na realidade, é creditado a Zorobabel. Ambos são chamados pelo título de “governador”. (Esd 1:11; 2:1, 2; 5:2, 14, 16; Ag 1:1, 14; 2:2, 21; Za 4:9) Zorobabel é reconhecido como líder dos exilados que retornaram; o nome “Sesbazar” nem é encontrado nesta lista. — Esd 2:2; 3:1, 2.

O nome Sesbazar parece ter sido um nome oficial ou babilônico dado a Zorobabel, assim como Daniel e outros receberam nomes oficiais da corte. (Da 1:7) “Sesbazar” é tipicamente mais caldeu do que “Zorobabel”. Em Esdras 5:14-16, cita-se uma carta oficial, e em Esdras, capítulo 1, acaba-se de citar o edito oficial de Ciro, talvez dando margem ao uso desse possível nome oficial nessas passagens.

SETAR. Um dos sete príncipes da Pérsia e da Média consultados pelo Rei Assuero quando a Rainha Vasti se negou a obedecer-lhe. — Est 1:13-15.

SETAR-BOZENAI. Oficial, talvez secretário, associado com Tatenai, o governador persa “de além do Rio”, durante o reinado de Dario I (Histaspes). (Esd 5:3, 6; 6:6, 13) Setar-Bozenai foi com Tatenai e outros a Jerusalém para apresentar sua objeção a que os judeus reconstruíssem o templo, obra que Artaxerxes tinha proscrito. Todavia, os judeus continuaram a trabalhar apesar das queixas, ao passo que se fazia um relatório a Dario. Tatenai e Setar-Bozenai, e seus colegas, escreveram ao rei, relatando as atividades em Jerusalém e declarando que os construtores do templo haviam citado uma ordem de autorização dada por Ciro, o rei. Pediram que o assunto fosse investigado. A resposta de Dario reconheceu o decreto imutável de Ciro e não somente ordenou a Setar-Bozenai e seus colegas a ‘manter-se afastados’ de Jerusalém, mas exigiu também, sob severas penas, que se desse aos judeus apoio material do tesouro real, para que pudessem continuar sua construção do templo e os serviços nele. Setar-Bozenai e seus associados fizeram conforme ordenados. — Esd 4:23–6:13.

SETE, I [Designado; Posto; Colocado]. Filho de Adão e Eva, nascido quando Adão tinha 130 anos de idade. Eva deu-lhe o nome de Sete, porque, conforme ela disse: “Deus designou outro descendente em lugar de Abel, visto que Caim o matou.” Sete talvez não fosse a terceira criança nascida a Adão e Eva. Segundo Gênesis 5:4, Adão teve ‘filhos e filhas’, algumas das quais talvez tivessem nascido antes de Sete. Sete é digno de nota, porque por meio dele, e não do assassino Caim, descenderam Noé e através dele a atual raça humana. Sete, à idade de 105 anos, tornou-se pai de Enos. Sete morreu à idade de 912 anos (3896-2984 AEC). — Gên 4:17, 25, 26; 5:3-8; 1Cr 1:1-4; Lu 3:38.

SETE, II. Veja NÚMERO, NUMERAL.

SETENTA SEMANAS. Período profético mencionado em Daniel 9:24-27, durante o qual Jerusalém seria reconstruída e o Messias apareceria, sendo então decepado; depois deste período, tanto a cidade como o lugar santo seriam desolados.

No primeiro ano de Dario, “filho de Assuero, da descendência [literalmente: semente] dos medos”, o profeta Daniel discerniu à base da profecia de Jeremias que estava próximo o tempo do livramento dos judeus de Babilônia e seu retorno a Jerusalém. Daniel depois buscou diligentemente a Jeová em oração, em harmonia com as palavras de Jeremias: “ ‘E certamente me chamareis, e vireis, e orareis a mim, e eu vou escutar-vos. E vós realmente me procurareis e me achareis, porque me buscareis de todo o vosso coração. E eu vou deixar-me achar por vós’, é a pronunciação de Jeová. . . . ‘E vou trazer-vos de volta ao lugar do qual vos exilei.’ ” — Je 29:10-14; Da 9:1-4.

Enquanto Daniel orava, Jeová mandou seu anjo Gabriel com uma profecia que quase todos os comentadores bíblicos aceitam como messiânica, embora haja muitas variações no seu entendimento dela. Gabriel disse:

“Setenta semanas foram determinadas sobre o teu povo e sobre a tua cidade santa, para acabar com a transgressão e encerrar o pecado, e para fazer expiação pelo erro, e para introduzir justiça por tempos indefinidos, e para apor um selo à visão e ao profeta, e para ungir o Santo dos Santos. E deves saber e ter a perspicácia de que desde a saída da palavra para se restaurar e reconstruir Jerusalém até o Messias, o Líder, haverá sete semanas, também sessenta e duas semanas. Ela tornará a ser e será realmente reconstruída, com praça pública e fosso, mas no aperto dos tempos. E depois das sessenta e duas semanas o Messias será decepado, sem ter nada para si mesmo. E a cidade e o lugar santo serão arruinados pelo povo de um líder que há de vir. E o fim disso será pela inundação. E até o fim haverá guerra; o que foi determinado são desolações. E ele terá de manter em vigor o pacto para com muitos por uma semana; e na metade da semana fará cessar o sacrifício e a oferenda. E sobre a asa de coisas repugnantes haverá um causando desolação; e até a exterminação derramar-se-á a coisa determinada também sobre aquele que jaz desolado." — Da 9:24-27.

Uma Profecia Messiânica. É bastante evidente que esta profecia é uma "preciosidade" em matéria de identificação do Messias. É da máxima importância determinar o começo das 70 semanas, bem como sua duração. Se tivessem sido semanas literais de sete dias cada uma, então ou a profecia não se cumpriu, o que seria impossível (Is 55:10, 11; He 6:18), ou o Messias veio mais de 24 séculos atrás, nos dias do Império Persa, e não foi identificado. Neste último caso, não se cumpriram ou não se satisfizeram as numerosas outras qualificações especificadas na Bíblia para identificar o Messias. De modo que é evidente que as 70 semanas eram simbólicas de um período muito mais longo. Por certo, os eventos descritos na profecia eram de natureza tal, que não podiam ter ocorrido em 70 semanas literais, ou em pouco mais de um ano e quatro meses. A maioria dos peritos bíblicos concorda que as "semanas" desta profecia são semanas de anos. Algumas traduções rezam "setenta semanas de anos" (So, AT, Mo, RS; notas em BJ, CBC, MC, PIB); uma nova tradução da Bíblia, Tanakh, publicada em inglês em 1985 pela Sociedade Publicadora Judaica, também inclui esta maneira de traduzir o texto numa nota. — Veja Da 9:24, n.

Quando é que começaram as "setenta semanas" proféticas?

Referente ao começo das 70 semanas, Neemias recebeu do Rei Artaxerxes, da Pérsia, no 20.º ano do seu governo, no mês de nisã, permissão para reconstruir a muralha e a cidade de Jerusalém. (Ne 2:1, 5, 7, 8) Nos seus cálculos referentes ao reinado de Artaxerxes, Neemias evidentemente usou um ano calendar que começava com o mês de tisri (setembro-outubro), assim como no atual ano calendar civil dos judeus, e terminava com o mês de elul (agosto-setembro) qual 12.º mês. Não se sabe se este era seu próprio cálculo ou era a maneira de calcular empregada na Pérsia para certos fins.

Alguns talvez objetem à declaração acima e indiquem Neemias 7:73, onde Neemias fala de Israel como estando ajuntado nas suas cidades no sétimo mês — baseando-se a ordem dos meses no ano de nisã a nisã. Mas, Neemias copiava ali "o livro do registro genealógico dos que tinham subido primeiro" com Zorobabel, em 537 AEC. (Ne 7:5) Novamente, Neemias descreve a celebração da Festividade das Barracas no seu tempo como ocorrido no sétimo mês. (Ne 8:9, 13-18) Isto era só apropriado, porque o relato diz que acharam o que Jeová ordenara "escrito na lei", e nesta lei, em Levítico 23:39-43, diz que a Festividade das Barracas devia ocorrer no "sétimo mês" (isto é, do calendário sagrado, que vai de nisã a nisã).

No entanto, como evidência que indica que Neemias talvez usasse o ano de outono a outono (setentrional) ao se referir a certos eventos, podemos comparar Neemias 1:1-3 com 2:1-8. Na primeira passagem ele fala de receber as más notícias sobre a condição de Jerusalém em quisleu (terceiro mês do calendário civil e nono no calendário sagrado) no 20.º ano de Artaxerxes. Na segunda, ele apresenta seu pedido ao rei, para que se lhe permita ir e reconstruir Jerusalém, e ele recebe a permissão no mês de nisã (sétimo do calendário civil e primeiro do sagrado), mas ainda no 20.º ano de Artaxerxes. De modo que Neemias obviamente não contava os anos do reinado de Artaxerxes à base do ano de nisã a nisã.

Para determinar a época do 20.º ano de Artaxerxes, remontamos ao fim do reinado do seu pai e predecessor, Xerxes, que morreu na última parte de 475 AEC. O ano de acessão de Artaxerxes começou assim em 475 AEC, e seu primeiro ano de reinado seria contado a partir de 474 AEC, conforme indicam outras evidências históricas. O 20.º ano do governo de Artaxerxes, portanto, seria o ano 455 AEC. — Veja PÉRSIA, PERSAS (Os Reinados de Xerxes e de Artaxerxes).

"A Saída da Palavra." A profecia diz que decorreriam 69 semanas de anos "desde a saída da palavra para se restaurar e reconstruir Jerusalém até o Messias, o Líder". (Da 9:25) A história secular, junto com a Bíblia, fornece evidência de que Jesus veio a João e foi batizado, tornando-se assim o Ungido, Messias, o Líder, em começos do outono (setentrional) do ano 29 EC. (Veja JESUS CRISTO [Tempo do Nascimento, Duração do Ministério].) Calculando para trás, a partir deste ponto básico na história, podemos determinar que as 69 semanas de anos começaram em 455 AEC. Naquele ano ocorreu a significativa “saída da palavra para se restaurar e reconstruir Jerusalém”.

Em nisã (março-abril) do 20.º ano do governo de Artaxerxes (455 AEC), Neemias solicitou ao rei: “Se teu servo parecer bom diante de ti, [peço] que me envies a Judá, à cidade das sepulturas de meus antepassados, para que eu a reconstrua.” (Ne 2:1, 5) O rei deu a permissão, e Neemias fez a longa viagem de Susã a Jerusalém. Por volta do dia quatro de ab (julho-agosto), depois de fazer uma inspeção noturna das muralhas, Neemias deu aos judeus a ordem: “Vinde e reconstruamos a muralha de Jerusalém, para que não continuemos mais a ser um vitupério.” (Ne 2:11-18) Portanto, “a saída da palavra” para reconstruir Jerusalém, conforme autorizado por Artaxerxes, foi posta em prática naquele mesmo ano por Neemias, em Jerusalém. Isto estabelece claramente o ano de 455 AEC como ano a partir do qual seriam contadas as 70 semanas.

Os reparos nas muralhas foram completados no dia 25 de elul (agosto-setembro), em apenas 52 dias. (Ne 6:15) Depois da reconstrução das muralhas, prosseguiram os reparos do restante de Jerusalém. Quanto às primeiras sete “semanas” (49 anos), Neemias, com a ajuda de Esdras, e, depois, de outros que talvez os tenham sucedido, trabalhou “no aperto dos tempos”, com dificuldades internas, dentre os próprios judeus, e externas, da parte dos samaritanos e de outros. (Da 9:25) O livro de Malaquias, escrito depois de 443 AEC, lamenta o péssimo estado em que o sacerdócio judaico tinha então caído. Pensa-se que o retorno de Neemias a Jerusalém depois duma visita a Artaxerxes (veja Ne 5:14; 13:6, 7) ocorreu depois disso. A Bíblia não revela exatamente por quanto tempo depois de 455 AEC ele mesmo prosseguiu nos seus esforços de reconstruir Jerusalém. Todavia, a obra foi evidentemente completada dentro de 49 anos (sete semanas de anos) ao ponto necessário, e Jerusalém e seu templo permaneceram, aguardando a vinda do Messias. — Veja MALAQUIAS, LIVRO DE (Tempo da Composição).

A Chegada do Messias Depois de ‘Sessenta e Nove Semanas’. Quanto às “sessenta e duas semanas” seguintes (Da 9:25), que fazem parte das 70 semanas e são mencionadas em segundo lugar na sequência, elas prosseguiriam depois da conclusão das “sete semanas”. Portanto, o tempo “desde a saída da palavra” para reconstruir Jerusalém até o “Messias, o Líder”, seria 7 mais 62 “semanas”, ou 69 “semanas” — 483 anos — desde o ano 455 AEC até 29 EC. Conforme já mencionado, no outono (setentrional) deste ano 29 EC, Jesus foi batizado em água, foi ungido com espírito santo e iniciou seu ministério como “Messias, o Líder”. — Lu 3:1, 2, 21, 22.

De modo que a profecia de Daniel, com séculos de antecedência, fixou o ano exato da chegada do Messias. Não há confirmação de que os judeus do primeiro século EC tenham feito cálculos à base da profecia de Daniel sobre o aparecimento do Messias. Mas a Bíblia relata: “Ora, visto que o povo estava em expectativa e todos raciocinavam nos seus corações a respeito de João: ‘Será este o Cristo?’” (Lu 3:15) Embora esperassem o Messias, evidentemente não podiam fixar o mês, a semana ou o dia exatos da sua chegada. Por isso se perguntavam se João era o Cristo, embora João evidentemente iniciasse seu ministério na primavera de 29 EC, uns seis meses antes de Jesus se apresentar para o batismo.

“Decepado” na metade da semana. Gabriel disse mais a Daniel: “Depois das sessenta e duas semanas o Messias será decepado, sem ter nada para si mesmo.” (Da 9:26) Foi algum tempo depois do fim das ‘sete mais sessenta e duas semanas’, realmente uns três anos e meio depois, que Cristo foi decepado na morte numa estaca de tortura, renunciando a tudo o que tinha, como resgate para a humanidade. (Is 53:8) A evidência indica que Jesus passou a primeira metade da “semana” ocupado no ministério. Em certa ocasião, provavelmente no outono de 32 EC, ele apresentou uma ilustração, aparentemente referindo-se à nação judaica como figueira (compare isso com Mt 17:15-20; 21:18, 19, 43) que não dera fruto por “três anos”. O vinhateiro disse ao dono do vinhedo: “Amo, deixa-a também este ano, até que eu cave em volta dela e lhe ponha estrume; e, se então produzir fruto no futuro, muito bem; mas, se não, hás de cortá-la.” (Lu 13:6-9) Talvez se referisse ali ao período de seu próprio ministério para com aquela refratária nação, ministério que até aquele momento já continuara por uns três anos e entraria no quarto ano.

Pacto em vigor “por uma semana”. Daniel 9:27 declara: “E ele terá de manter em vigor o pacto para com muitos por uma semana [ou sete anos]; e na metade da semana fará cessar o sacrifício e a oferenda.” O “pacto” não podia ser o pacto da Lei, porque o sacrifício de Cristo, três anos e meio depois do começo da 70.ª “semana”, resultou na remoção dela por Deus: ‘Ele a tirou do caminho por pregá-la na estaca de tortura.’ (Col 2:14) Também, “Cristo nos livrou da maldição da Lei por meio duma compra . . . O propósito foi que a bênção de Abraão, por meio de Jesus Cristo, fosse para as nações”. (Gál 3:13, 14) Deus, por meio de Cristo, deveras estendeu as bênçãos do pacto abraâmico aos descendentes naturais de Abraão, excluindo os gentios até que o evangelho fosse levado a eles pela pregação de Pedro ao italiano Cornélio. (At 3:25, 26; 10:1-48) Esta conversão de Cornélio e da sua família ocorreu depois da conversão de Saulo de Tarso, que em geral se pensa ter ocorrido por volta de 34 EC; depois disso, a congregação usufruiu um período de paz, sendo edificada. (At 9:1-16, 31) Portanto, parece que a introdução de Cornélio na congregação cristã ocorreu por volta do outono de 36 EC, que seria o fim da 70.ª "semana", 490 anos contados a partir de 455 AEC.

'Feitos cessar' os sacrifícios e as oferendas. A expressão 'fazer cessar', usada com referência ao sacrifício e à oferenda, significa literalmente "causar ou fazer sabadear, repousar, desistir do trabalho". "O sacrifício e a oferenda" que são 'feitos cessar', segundo Daniel 9:27, não podiam ser o sacrifício resgatador de Jesus, nem seriam logicamente quaisquer sacrifícios espirituais dos seguidores das suas pisadas. Isto tem de referir-se aos sacrifícios e às oferendas ofertados pelos judeus no templo em Jerusalém, segundo a Lei de Moisés.

A "metade da semana" ocorreria no meio de sete anos, ou depois de três anos e meio dentro daquela "semana" de anos. Visto que a 70.ª "semana" começou por volta do outono de 29 EC, por ocasião do batismo e da unção de Jesus para ser o Cristo, a metade daquela semana (três anos e meio) se estenderia até a primavera de 33 EC, ou a época da Páscoa (14 de nisã) daquele ano. Parece que este dia foi o 1.º de abril de 33 EC, segundo o calendário gregoriano. (Veja REFEIÇÃO NOTURNA DO SENHOR [Ocasião da Sua Instituição].) O apóstolo Paulo nos diz que Jesus 'veio para fazer a vontade de Deus', que era 'eliminar o primeiro [os sacrifícios e as oferendas segundo a Lei] para estabelecer o segundo'. Fez isso por oferecer seu próprio corpo em sacrifício. — He 10:1-10.

Embora os sacerdotes judeus continuassem a oferecer sacrifícios no templo em Jerusalém até a destruição deste em 70 EC, os sacrifícios pelo pecado deixaram de ter aceitação e validez perante Deus. Jesus disse a Jerusalém pouco antes da sua morte: "A vossa casa vos fica abandonada." (Mt 23:38) Cristo "ofereceu um só sacrifício pelos pecados, perpetuamente . . . Porque é por meio de uma só oferta sacrificial que ele aperfeiçoou perpetuamente os que estão sendo santificados". "Ora, onde há perdão [de pecados e de atos contra a lei], não há mais oferta pelo pecado." (He 10:12-14, 18) O apóstolo Paulo salienta que a profecia de Jeremias falou de um novo pacto, tornando assim obsoleto e antiquado o pacto anterior (o pacto da Lei), "prestes a desaparecer". — He 8:7-13.

Acabados a transgressão e o pecado. O decepamento de Jesus na morte, sua ressurreição e seu comparecimento no céu resultaram em se 'acabar com a transgressão e encerrar o pecado, bem como em fazer expiação pelo erro'. (Da 9:24) O pacto da Lei expusera os judeus como pecadores, condenara-os como tais e lhes trouxera a maldição como violadores do pacto. Mas, onde 'abundara' o pecado conforme exposto ou tornado evidente pela Lei mosaica, abundaram muito mais a misericórdia e o favor de Deus por meio do seu Messias. (Ro 5:20) Por meio do sacrifício do Messias, a transgressão e o pecado dos pecadores arrependidos podem ser cancelados, e sua penalidade suspensa.

Introduzida a justiça eterna. O valor da morte de Cristo na estaca forneceu aos crentes arrependidos uma reconciliação. Colocou-se sobre os seus pecados uma cobertura propiciatória, e abriu-se-lhes o caminho para serem "declarados justos" por Deus. Esta justiça será eterna e produzirá vida eterna para os declarados justos. — Ro 3:21-25.

Unção do Santo dos Santos. Jesus foi ungido com espírito santo por ocasião do batismo, o espírito santo descendo sobre ele na representação visível duma pomba. Mas a unção do "Santo dos Santos" refere-se a mais do que à unção do Messias, porque esta expressão não se refere a nenhuma pessoa. "O Santo dos Santos" ou "o Santíssimo" é a expressão usada para se referir ao santuário de Jeová Deus. (Êx 26:33, 34; 1Rs 6:16; 7:50) Portanto, a unção do "Santo dos Santos" mencionada no livro de Daniel tem de relacionar-se com a "tenda maior e mais perfeita, não feita por mãos", na qual Jesus Cristo, como o grande Sumo Sacerdote, entrou "com o seu próprio sangue". (Da 9:24; He 9:11, 12) Quando Jesus apresentou ao seu Pai o valor do seu sacrifício humano, o próprio céu tinha a aparência da realidade espiritual representada pelo Santíssimo do tabernáculo e do posterior templo. De modo que a moradia celestial de Deus deveras fora ungida, ou posta à parte, como o "Santo dos Santos" no grande arranjo do templo espiritual que veio à existência quando Jesus foi ungido com espírito santo, em 29 EC. — Mt 3:16; Lu 4:18-21; At 10:37, 38; He 9:24.

'Aposição dum selo à visão e ao profeta.' Todo esse trabalho realizado pelo Messias — seu sacrifício, sua ressurreição, seu comparecimento com o valor do seu sacrifício perante o Pai celestial e as outras coisas que ocorreram durante a 70.ª semana — 'apõe um selo à visão e ao profeta', mostrando que são verdadeiros e que procedem de Deus. Marca-os com o selo de apoio divino, como procedentes duma única fonte divina e não do homem errante. Sela a visão como restrita ao Messias, porque encontra seu cumprimento nele e na obra de Deus feita por meio dele. (Re 19:10) Sua interpretação é encontrada nele, e não podemos esperar seu cumprimento em outro. Nada mais desselará seu significado. — Da 9:24.

Desolações para a cidade e o lugar santo. Foi depois das 70 "semanas", mas em resultado direto da rejeição de Cristo pelos judeus durante a 70.ª "semana", que os eventos da última parte de Daniel 9:26 e 27 tiveram cumprimento. A história registra que Tito, filho do Imperador Vespasiano, de Roma, foi o comandante das forças romanas que vieram contra Jerusalém. Esses exércitos realmente entraram em Jerusalém, e no próprio templo, como uma inundação, e desolaram a cidade e seu templo. Estarem esses exércitos pagãos em pé no lugar santo tornou-os uma "coisa repugnante". (Mt 24:15) Fracassaram todos os esforços anteriores ao fim de Jerusalém para acalmar a situação, porque o decreto de Deus foi: "O que foi determinado são desolações", e "até a exterminação derramar-se-á a coisa determinada também sobre aquele que jaz desolado".

Conceito Judaico. O texto massorético, com seu sistema de sinais vocálicos, foi preparado na última metade do primeiro milênio EC. Evidentemente, por rejeitarem Jesus Cristo como o Messias, os massoretas pontuaram o texto hebraico de Daniel 9:25 com 'ath·náhh, ou "pausa", depois de "sete semanas", separando-as assim das "sessenta e duas semanas"; deste modo, as 62 semanas da profecia, a saber, 434 anos, parecem aplicar-se ao tempo da reconstrução da antiga Jerusalém. A tradução de Isaac Leeser, em inglês, reza: "Sabe, portanto, e compreende que desde a saída da palavra para restaurar e reconstruir Jerusalém até à unção do príncipe serão sete semanas: [a pausa é aqui representada por dois pontos] e durante sessenta e duas semanas ela será construída de novo com ruas e fossos (em volta dela), mesmo no aperto dos tempos." A tradução da Sociedade Publicadora Judaica da América reza de modo similar: "haverá sete semanas; e por sessenta e duas semanas, será construída de novo". Nestas duas versões, as palavras "durante" e "por", respectivamente, ocorrem na tradução em inglês, pelo visto, para apoiar a interpretação dos tradutores.

O Professor E. B. Pusey, numa nota sobre uma das suas preleções proferidas na Universidade de Oxford, observa sobre a pontuação massorética: "Os judeus colocam a pausa principal do versículo sob שִׁבְעָה [sete], intencionando separar os dois números, 7 e 62. Devem ter feito isso de modo desonesto, למען המינים (conforme diz Rashi [destacado rabino judeu dos séculos 11 e 12 EC] ao rejeitar as explicações literais que favoreciam os cristãos) 'por causa dos hereges', i.e., os cristãos. Pois a última oração subordinada, assim separada, só podia significar: 'e durante sessenta e duas semanas rua e muralha estarão sendo restauradas e construídas', i.e., que Jerusalém levaria 434 anos para ser reconstruída, o que não faz sentido." — Daniel the Prophet (Daniel, o Profeta), 1885, p. 190.

A respeito de Daniel 9:26 (Le), que reza em parte: "E depois das sessenta e duas semanas um ungido será decepado sem sucessor para o seguir", os comentadores judeus aplicam as 62 semanas ao período até a era dos macabeus, e o termo "ungido", ao Rei Agripa II, que viveu na época da destruição de Jerusalém, em 70 EC. Ou alguns dizem que esse era um sumo sacerdote, Onias, que foi deposto por Antíoco Epifânio, em 175 AEC. Sua aplicação da profecia a um desses homens a privaria de qualquer real significado ou importância, e a discrepância na datação faria com que as 62 semanas não fossem nenhuma profecia exata de tempo. — Veja Soncino Books of the Bible (Livros da Bíblia, de Soncino; comentário sobre Da 9:25, 26), obra editada por A. Cohen, Londres, 1951.

Na tentativa de justificar seu conceito, esses eruditos judeus dizem que as "sete semanas" não são 7 vezes 7, ou 49 anos, mas 70 anos; no entanto, eles contam as 62 semanas como 7 vezes 62 anos. Afirmam que estes se referem ao período do exílio babilônico. Fazem de Ciro ou de Zorobabel, ou do sumo sacerdote Jesua, o "ungido" deste versículo (Da 9:25), e o "ungido" de Daniel 9:26 outra pessoa.

Algumas traduções em português não seguem aqui a pontuação massorética. Ou têm uma vírgu-la depois da expressão "sete semanas", ou indicam pela fraseologia que as 62 semanas seguem as 7 como parte das 70, e não indicam que as 62 semanas se aplicam ao período da reconstrução de Jerusalém. (Veja Da 9:25 em Al, ALA, Fi, IBB, NM, So.) Uma nota editorial de James Strong em Commentary on the Holy Scriptures (Comentário sobre as Escrituras Sagradas; Da 9:25 n, p. 198), de Lange, diz: "A única justificativa para esta tradução, que separa os dois períodos de sete semanas e sessenta e duas semanas, designando o primeiro como o terminus ad quem do Príncipe Ungido, e o último como o tempo da reconstrução, está na pontuação massorética, que coloca Athnac [pausa] entre eles. . . . e a tradução em questão envolve uma construção forçada do segundo membro, não tendo preposição. Portanto, é melhor e mais simples aderir à Versão Autorizada [em inglês], que segue todas as traduções mais antigas." — Segundo a tradução em inglês, editada por P. Schaff, 1976.

Sobre o sentido da profecia, apresentaram-se diversos outros conceitos, alguns messiânicos e outros não messiânicos. Neste respeito, deve-se notar que a mais antiga tradução da Septuaginta disponível distorce gravemente o sentido do texto hebraico. Conforme explicado pelo Professor Pusey, em Daniel the Prophet (pp. 328, 329), o tradutor falsificou o declarado período de tempo, bem como acrescentou, alterou e transpôs palavras, a fim de fazer com que a profecia apoiasse a luta dos macabeus. Esta obviamente distorcida tradução foi substituída na maioria das atuais edições da Septuaginta pela feita por Teodócio, erudito judeu do segundo século EC, cuja versão se harmoniza com o texto hebraico.

Alguns tentam mudar a ordem dos períodos da profecia, ao passo que outros os fazem ser simultâneos ou então negam que realmente tenham um cumprimento quanto ao tempo. Mas aqueles que apresentam tais conceitos ficam irremediavelmente enredados, e suas tentativas de se livrarem disso resultam em absurdos ou em flagrante negação de que a profecia seja inspirada ou verdadeira. O já mencionado erudito E. B. Pusey observa especialmente a respeito dessas últimas ideias, que criam mais problemas do que resolvem: "Estes eram os problemas impossíveis a serem solucionados pela descrença; tinha de resolvê-los sozinha, o que, neste ponto, era mais fácil; porque para a descrença não há nada impossível de crer, exceto o que Deus revela." — P. 206.

SETUR [duma raiz que significa "esconder; ocultar"]. Maioral aserita designado junto com representantes das outras tribos para espiar a terra de Canaã; filho de Micael. — Núm 13:2, 3, 13.

SEVA.

1. [duma raiz que significa "igualar; aplainar"]. Pai de Macbena e de Gibeia (Gibeá). Mas, visto que estes também podem ser nomes de cidades, Seva talvez fosse o pai daqueles que se estabeleceram ali ou talvez fosse ele mesmo o fundador dessas cidades. Calebe (Quelubai), pai de Seva, encabeçava uma das três principais divisões dos descendentes de Judá através de Esrom. — 1Cr 2:9, 48-50.

2. Secretário de Davi. — 2Sa 20:25; veja SERAÍAS N.º 2.

SIA, SIÁ. Um dos netineus cujos descendentes retornaram do exílio babilônico junto com Zorobabel, em 537 AEC. — Esd 2:1, 2, 43, 44; Ne 7:47.

SIÃO. Originalmente, a fortaleza jebuseia que passou a ser chamada de "a Cidade de Davi". (1Rs 8:1; 1Cr 11:5) Davi, depois de capturar o monte Sião, estabeleceu ali sua residência real. (2Sa 5:6, 7, 9; veja DAVI, CIDADE DE.) Em alusão ao governo de Davi em Sião, como ungido de Deus, há as palavras de Jeová: "Eu é que empossei o meu rei em Sião, meu santo monte." (Sal 2:6) Sião tornou-se um monte especialmente santo para Jeová quando Davi mandou transferir para lá a Arca sagrada. (2Sa 6:17) Mais tarde, o nome "Sião" passou a abranger a área do templo no monte Moriá (onde a Arca foi levada durante o reinado de Salomão), e o termo, na realidade, aplicava-se a toda a cidade de Jerusalém. (Compare isso com Is 1:8; 8:18; veja MONTE DE REUNIÃO.) Visto que a Arca estava associada com a presença de Jeová (Êx 25:22; Le 16:2), e por Sião ser símbolo de realidades celestiais, Sião era chamado de lugar de morada de Deus (Sal 9:11; 74:2; 76:2; 78:68; 132:13, 14; 135:21) e o lugar de onde viriam ajuda, bênçãos e salvação. — Sal 14:7; 20:2; 50:2; 53:6; 134:3.

Por Sião, ou Jerusalém, ter sido infiel a ele, Jeová permitiu que os babilônios a desolassem. (La 2:1, 4, 6, 8, 10, 13) Mais tarde, em cumprimento de profecias, Jeová restabeleceu um restante do seu povo arrependido em Sião, ou Jerusalém. (Is 35:10; 51:3; 52:1-8; Je 50:4, 5, 28; 51:10, 24, 35) Isto tornou possível Jesus Cristo entrar em Jerusalém montado num jumentinho e apresentar-se a Sião como rei, cumprindo assim a profecia de Zacarias. (Za 9:9; Mt 21:5; Jo 12:15) Apenas um restante reagiu favoravelmente, ao passo que os líderes religiosos rejeitaram Jesus como rei e procuraram matá-lo. Isto indicava uma calamidade para a Jerusalém, ou Sião, terrestre, e que ela seria rejeitada por Deus. — Mt 21:33-46.

Visto que Jesus fora rejeitado na Jerusalém terrestre, não podia ser ali que Jeová lançaria seu Filho como "uma pedra provada, ângulo precioso de um alicerce seguro". (Is 28:16; Ro 9:32, 33; 1Pe 2:6) Antes, tinha de ser na Sião a respeito da qual se disse aos cristãos hebreus: "Mas, vós vos chegastes a um Monte Sião e a uma cidade do Deus vivente, a Jerusalém celestial, e a miríades de anjos, em assembleia geral, e à congregação dos primogênitos que foram alistados nos céus, e a Deus, o Juiz de todos, e às vidas espirituais dos justos que foram aperfeiçoados, e a Jesus, o mediador dum novo pacto." (He 12:22-24) Evidentemente, é neste Monte Sião celestial que o Cordeiro, Cristo Jesus, está de pé com os 144.000 que foram comprados da terra. — Re 14:1-3; veja JERUSALÉM; NOVA JERUSALÉM.

SIBA [Juramento; ou: Sete]. Poço escavado, ou escavado de novo, pelos servos de Isaque, em Berseba. (Gên 26:32, 33; compare isso com 26:18.) Eles relataram ter encontrado água ali, depois de se ter concluído um pacto de paz com Abimeleque, rei de Gerar; por isso, Isaque chamou o poço de "Siba" (referindo-se a um juramento, ou uma declaração juramentada, por sete coisas). (Gên 26:26-33) Abraão fizera um pacto similar com Abimeleque (quer este rei filisteu, quer outro com o mesmo nome ou título). Naquela ocasião, Abimeleque aceitou do patriarca sete cordeiras como evidência do direito de Abraão a um poço controversial, talvez o mesmo que Isaque depois chamou de "Siba". Por usar "Siba" (outra forma do nome Seba), Isaque parece também ter preservado o nome "Berseba", originalmente dado a este lugar por Abraão. — Gên 21:22-32; veja BERSEBA.

SIBECAI. Um dos poderosos de Davi, husatita. (1Cr 11:26, 29) Sibecai, em guerra com os filisteus em Gobe, matou Safe (Sipai), um dos gigantescos refains, subjugando assim os inimigos. (2Sa 21:18; 1Cr 20:4) Quando Davi organizou o serviço em rodízio mensal das forças da nação, Sibecai foi encarregado da oitava turma. (1Cr 27:1, 11) Ele parece ser chamado Mebunai em 2 Samuel 23:27.

SIBMA. Cidade ao L do Jordão, tomada por Israel do rei amorreu Síon e designada aos rubenitas, que a desejavam por causa dos pastos circundantes. Parece ter sido chamada também Sebão. (Núm 32:2-5, 37, 38; Jos 13:15, 19, 21) Sendo originalmente uma cidade dos moabitas (veja Núm 21:25, 26), voltou para eles numa época não revelada. Era famosa pelos seus vinhedos e pelos frutos de verão. (Is 16:8, 9, 13, 14; Je 48:32, 46, 47) A localização exata de Sibma (Sebão) é agora desconhecida, embora seja mencionada junto com Hésbon e Nebo (Núm 32:3), e o comentário de Jerônimo sobre Isaías 16:8 diz que ela se encontrava apenas a uns 500 passos de Hésbon. Todavia, alguns a identificam provisoriamente com Qurn el-Kibsh, uns 5 km ao OSO de Hésbon (a atual Hisban).

SIBOLETE. Veja XIBOLETE.

SIBRAIM. Lugar fronteiriço setentrional alistado na visão de Ezequiel a respeito da herança territorial de Israel. (Ez 47:15-17) Sua localização é desconhecida, embora alguns procurem situá-lo na região de Hums, ao S de Hamate, na Síria. Talvez se trate de Sefarvaim.

SICAR. Cidade de Samaria e sítio da fonte de Jacó. Ficava "perto do campo que Jacó dera a José, seu filho", na vizinhança de Siquém. (Jo 4:5, 6; compare isso com Jos 24:32.) O códice Sinaítico em siríaco tem "Siquém" em vez de "Sicar". No entanto, os melhores manuscritos gregos apoiam a grafia "Sicar". Certos primitivos escritores não bíblicos diferenciam Siquém de Sicar; outros não o fazem. Escavações recentes levaram alguns a identificar Sicar provisoriamente com a aldeia de ʽAskar, a 700 m ao NNE da fonte de Jacó e cerca de 1 km ao NE de Siquém.

SICÁRIOS. Veja FAQUISTAS.

SICLO. Unidade básica de peso, hebraica (1Sa 17:5, 7; Ez 4:10; Am 8:5), e de valor monetário. Com base na média de uns 45 pesos inscritos de siclo, o siclo pode ser avaliado em 11,4 g. Um siclo equivalia a 20 geras (Núm 3:47; 18:16), e há evidência de que 50 siclos equivaliam a uma mina. (Veja MINA.) Calculado em valores atuais, um siclo de prata valeria US$ 2,20, e um siclo de ouro, US$ 128,45.

O siclo muitas vezes é mencionado em relação com prata ou ouro. (1Cr 21:25; Ne 5:15) Antes de se usarem moedas, empregavam-se peças de prata (e, menos frequentemente, de ouro) como dinheiro, verificando-se o peso na hora da transação. (Gên 23:15, 16; Jos 7:21) Coisas relacionadas com o tabernáculo eram às vezes declaradas em termos de siclos "segundo o siclo do lugar santo". (Êx 30:13; Le 5:15; 27:2-7, 25) Isto talvez fosse para enfatizar que o peso devia ser preciso ou, talvez, que devia harmonizar-se com o peso padrão guardado no tabernáculo.

Em geral, pensa-se que as 'peças [moedas] de prata' frequentemente mencionadas nas Escrituras Hebraicas eram siclos de prata, a unidade monetária padrão. (Jz 16:5; 1Rs 10:29; Os 3:2) Isto é corroborado pela Septuaginta (em que a palavra grega para "peças de prata", em Gênesis 20:16, é a mesma que a palavra grega para "siclos" em Gênesis 23:15, 16), bem como pelos targuns. De acordo com Jeremias 32:9, o profeta pagou 'sete siclos e dez peças de prata' por um campo. Esta talvez fosse apenas uma expressão legalista para dizer 17 siclos de prata (Al, BJ, BV, CBC), ou, possivelmente, referia-se a sete siclos de ouro e dez siclos de prata.

Segundo Samuel 14:26 talvez indique que havia um siclo "real", diferente do siclo comum, ou a referência talvez seja ao peso padrão guardado no palácio real.

SICÔMORO [hebr.: shiq·máh]. Esta árvore mencionada nas Escrituras Hebraicas não tem nenhuma relação com o sicômoro norte-americano, que é um tipo de plátano (ou falso-plátano). Pelo que parece, trata-se do "sicômoro-figueira" de Lucas 19:4. Esta árvore (Ficus sycomorus) tem frutos semelhantes aos da figueira comum, mas sua folhagem é semelhante à da amoreira. Atinge a altura de 10 a 15 m, é resistente, e pode atingir várias centenas de anos de vida. Dessemelhante da figueira comum, o sicômoro (sicômoro-figueira) é uma sempre-verde. Ao passo que suas folhas em forma de coração são menores que as da figueira, a folhagem é densa e ampla, e a árvore oferece uma boa sombra. Por este motivo, frequentemente era plantada à beira das estradas. O tronco curto e robusto logo se ramifica com os ramos mais baixos perto do solo, e isto tornava a árvore conveniente à beira da estrada para um homem baixo, tal como Zaqueu, subir nela para ver Jesus. — Lu 19:2-4.

Os figos crescem em cachos abundantes, são menores do que os da figueira comum e são inferiores a eles. Atualmente, é costume dos cultivadores egípcios e cipriotas de sicômoros(-figueira) pungir os frutos prematuros com um prego ou outro instrumento pontiagudo, para tornar o fruto comestível. O risco ou furo nos figos verdoengos do sicômoro provoca um acentuado aumento na emanação do gás etileno, o que acelera consideravelmente (de três a oito vezes) o crescimento e o amadurecimento do fruto. Isto é importante, visto que de outro modo o fruto não se desenvolve plenamente e continua duro, ou é estragado por vespas parasíticas que penetram no fruto e habitam nele para reprodução. Isto lança alguma luz sobre a ocupação do profeta Amós, que descreve a si mesmo como "boeiro e riscador de figos de sicômoros". — Am 7:14.

Além de crescerem no vale do Jordão (Lu 19:1, 4) e em torno de Tecoa (Am 1:1; 7:14), os sicômoros eram especialmente abundantes nas terras baixas da Sefelá (1Rs 10:27; 2Cr 1:15; 9:27), e embora seu fruto não fosse da qualidade da figueira comum, o Rei Davi o achava de valor suficiente para colocar os pomares da Sefelá sob um administrador. (1Cr 27:28) Os sicômoros(-figueira) evidentemente eram abundantes no Egito na época das Dez Pragas, e continuam a prover ali alimento até hoje. (Sal 78:47) A madeira é um tanto macia e porosa, e bastante inferior à do cedro, mas é bem durável e era muito usada em construção. (Is 9:10) Encontraram-se em túmulos egípcios caixões de múmias, feitos de sicômoro, que ainda estão em boas condições depois de uns 3.000 anos.

SICÔMORO-FIGUEIRA [gr.: sy·ko·mo·ré·a]. Quando o baixo Zaqueu quis ver melhor a Cristo Jesus, ele "subiu num sicômoro-figueira". (Lu 19:4) O nome grego indica uma figueira (gr.: sy·ké) com folhas semelhantes às da amoreira (gr.: mo·ré·a). As duas árvores são da mesma família, e o sicômoro-figueira mencionado em Lucas 19:4 parece ser o mesmo que 'o sicômoro' (Ficus sycomorus) das Escrituras Hebraicas. — 1Rs 10:27; veja SICÔMORO.

SIDIM, BAIXADA DE. Vale vinculado nas Escrituras com o Mar Salgado (Morto). (Gên 14:3) Ali, nos dias de Abraão, os reis rebeldes de Sodoma, Gomorra, Admá, Zeboim e Zoar lutaram com o rei elamita Quedorlaomer e seus três aliados. Derrotados, os reis de Sodoma e de Gomorra fugiram, e algumas das suas tropas caíram nos "poços e mais poços de betume" que prevaleciam naquela área. — Gên 14:4, 8-10.

Alguns acreditam que a baixada de Sidim seja a parte do Mar Morto que se parece a uma baía, ao S da península de Lisan. Acham que antigamente era um vale fértil e que evidentemente afundou mais tarde, talvez por causa de atividade sísmica ou por mudanças topográficas resultantes da destruição de Sodoma, Gomorra e de todo o Distrito, causada por Deus. (Gên 19:24, 25) De tempos em tempos ainda sobe matéria betuminosa até a superfície das águas rasas ali. — Veja MAR SALGADO.

SÍDON, SIDÔNIOS. Sídon, primogênito de Canaã, foi o progenitor dos sidônios. A cidade portuária de Sídon recebeu o nome de seu antepassado, e durante muitos anos foi a principal cidade dos fenícios, conforme os gregos chamavam os sidônios. Hoje, a cidade é conhecida como Saida.

Uma colônia de sidônios também se estabeleceu a uns 35 km ao S de Sídon e eles chamaram o lugar de Tiro. Com o tempo, Tiro ultrapassou Sídon em muitos sentidos, mas ela nunca perdeu totalmente sua identidade como localidade sidônia. O rei de Tiro às vezes era chamado de "rei dos sidônios" (1Rs 16:31), e Tiro e Sídon são frequentemente mencionadas juntas nas profecias. (Je 25:22; 27:3; 47:4; Jl 3:4; Za 9:2) Entre essas duas cidades encontrava-se Sarefá, "que pertence a Sídon", e onde Elias foi alimentado por uma viúva durante uma prolongada fome. — 1Rs 17:9; Lu 4:25, 26.

Originalmente, Sídon era considerada o limite N das nações cananeias. (Gên 10:19) Depois que Josué venceu os reis de Canaã setentrional (que foram perseguidos em direção ao N até a "populosa Sídon"), aquela terra foi dividida entre as nove tribos e meia que ainda não haviam recebido seu quinhão. Naquele tempo, a terra sob o controle de Sídon ainda não fora tomada. (Jos 11:8; 13:2, 6, 7; Núm 32:33) Aser recebeu as planícies costeiras logo ao S de Sídon, e, conforme se profetizara, o território de Zebulão ficava com 'sua parte remota lá pelos lados de Sídon', isto é, na parte N da Terra da Promessa. (Jos 19:24, 28; Gên 49:13) Os aseritas, porém, em vez de expulsarem os sidônios do território que Deus lhes designara, contentaram-se em se estabelecer entre eles. (Jz 1:31, 32; 3:1, 3) No período dos juízes, a tribo de Dã anexou Laís, possivelmente uma colônia sidônia, e deu-lhe o novo nome de Dã. A conquista foi realizada com evidente facilidade, pois o povo ali era "sossegado e insuspeitoso", portanto, despreparado para o ataque. (Jz 18:7, 27-29) Sídon é também mencionada com relação ao censo feito nos dias de Davi. — 2Sa 24:6.

Sídon, cidade portuária favorecida por dois dos poucos portos na costa fenícia, tornou-se um grande centro de intercâmbio comercial, onde se encontravam as caravanas do interior e trocavam suas mercadorias pelos bens trazidos nos navios que singravam as rotas de navegação do Mediterrâneo. Entre os sidônios havia mercadores ricos, marinheiros peritos e remadores robustos. (Is 23:2; compare isso com Ez 27:8, 9.) Os sidônios eram também famosos pela sua fabricação artesanal de vidros, e pela tecelagem e tintura de tecidos. Eram também conhecidos pela sua habilidade como lenhadores e madeireiros. — 1Rs 5:6; 1Cr 22:4; Esd 3:7.

A Religião Sidônia e Suas Consequências. Em sentido religioso, os sidônios eram depravados; lascivas orgias sexuais relacionadas com a deusa Astorete eram uma parte destacada da sua adoração. Os israelitas, por permitirem que os sidônios permanecessem no meio deles, foram por fim enlaçados pela adoração de deuses falsos. (Jz 10:6, 7, 11-13) Algumas das esposas estrangeiras com quem Salomão se casou eram sidônias, e isto fez o rei ir atrás da repugnante deusa da fertilidade, Astorete. (1Rs 11:1, 4-6; 2Rs 23:13) Também o Rei Acabe fez o que era mau aos olhos de Jeová por se casar com Jezabel, filha dum rei sidônio. Jezabel, por sua vez, promoveu zelosamente a adoração falsa em Israel. — 1Rs 16:29-33; 18:18, 19.

Fez-se que os sidônios bebessem do furor de Jeová, primeiro por ouvirem as pronúncias de seus profetas e depois pela destruição às mãos dos babilônios e de outros. (Is 23:4, 12; Je 25:17, 22; 27:1-8; 47:4; Ez 28:20-24; 32:30; Jl 3:4-8; Za 9:1-4) A história secular relata que os impérios de Babilônia, Pérsia, Grécia e Roma dominaram sucessivamente Sídon.

A História de Sídon Durante o Primeiro Século EC. No entanto, apesar da maneira corrupta de adoração dos sidônios, não eram tão repreensíveis como o refratário Israel. Por isso, Jesus disse que no Dia do Juízo seria mais tolerável para o povo de Sídon do que para os judeus de Corazim e de Betsaida, que rejeitaram Jesus como o Messias. (Mt 11:20-22; Lu 10:13, 14) Algum tempo depois, quando Jesus percorria o distrito em torno de Sídon, uma mulher fenícia mostrou ter fé nele. (Mt 15:21-28; Mr 7:24-31) No entanto, as 'multidões' que Jesus curara anteriormente, entre os quais haviam alguns procedentes das redondezas de Tiro e de Sídon, sem dúvida eram na maioria judeus ou prosélitos. (Mr 3:7, 8; Lu 6:17) Paulo, na sua primeira viagem a Roma como prisioneiro, obteve permissão para visitar os irmãos em Sídon. — At 27:1, 3.

Por motivos não declarados pela História, Herodes Agripa I tinha "animosidade" contra os sidônios, supridos de alimentos pelo rei. Quando se fixou um dia para resolver a questão e os sidônios aplaudiram Herodes como falando com "a voz de um deus e não de homem", o anjo de Jeová o golpeou de modo que em pouco tempo foi comido de vermes. — At 12:20-23.

SIENE. Cidade aparentemente situada na extremidade meridional do antigo Egito. (Ez 29:10; 30:6) Esta cidade servia de mercado ou de entreposto comercial. É identificada com Assuã, na margem L do Nilo, perto da ilha Elefantina e a uns 690 km ao S do Cairo.

SIFI [duma raiz que significa "abundar"]. Simeonita cujo filho era um dos maiorais tribais que estenderam seus pastos durante o reinado de Ezequias. — 1Cr 4:24, 37-41.

SIFMITA [possivelmente: De (Pertencente a) Sefão]. Apelido de Zabdi, encarregado de Davi dos suprimentos de vinho. (1Cr 27:27) Pode indicar que Zabdi procedia quer de Sifmote (1Sa 30:28), quer de Sefão. — Núm 34:10, 11.

SIFMOTE. Cidade de Judá, à qual Davi enviou "um presente de bênção" dos despojos da sua vitória sobre os amalequitas. Enquanto eram fugitivos, ele e seus homens tinham livre acesso à cidade. (1Sa 30:26-31) Desconhece-se hoje sua localização. — Compare isso com 1Cr 27:27; veja SIFMITA.

SIFRÁ [Agradável; Refinada; Elegante]. A Septuaginta grega reza Sepfora, tanto em Êxodo 1:15 como em 2:21; o texto massorético, porém, reza respectivamente Sifrá e Zípora. A forma aramaica do nome é Safira.

Sifrá era uma das parteiras hebreias que, junto com Puá, recebeu de Faraó ordem para matar todos os meninos hebreus logo após o nascimento. No entanto, sendo mulher temente a Deus e respeitando a santidade da vida humana (Gên 9:6), preservou vivos os meninos e foi abençoada por Jeová com filhos. — Êx 1:15-21; veja PARTEIRA.

SIFTÃ [duma raiz que significa "julgar"]. Pai de Quemuel, maioral que representou Efraim quando a Terra da Promessa foi repartida entre as tribos de Israel. — Núm 34:17, 18, 24.

SILA. Nome dum lugar de outro modo desconhecido na antiga Jerusalém. O Rei Jeoás foi assassinado "junto à casa do Aterro, no caminho que desce a Sila". — 2Rs 12:20.

SILAS, SILVANO [do lat., significando "Floresta; Bosque"]. Membro destacado da congregação cristã em Jerusalém no primeiro século, profeta, e companheiro de Paulo na sua segunda viagem missionária. Parece ter sido cidadão romano. (At 15:22, 26, 27, 32, 40; 16:19, 25, 37, 38) É provável que o nome Silvano, encontrado nas cartas de Paulo e de Pedro, fosse a forma latinizada do nome grego Silas, usado por Lucas, em Atos.

A congregação em Jerusalém escolheu Silas para acompanhar Barnabé e Paulo de volta a Antioquia, na Síria, para levarem à congregação ali a decisão a respeito da circuncisão. — At 15:22, 30-32.

Não se sabe ao certo se Silas permaneceu na vizinhança de Antioquia ou se voltou a Jerusalém. Alguns manuscritos contêm Atos 15:34, que reza: "Mas pareceu bem a Silas permanecer ainda ali." No entanto, os manuscritos de maior destaque omitem este versículo. (Veja NM n) De qualquer modo, Silas estava em Antioquia quando teve início a segunda viagem missionária de Paulo. Partindo dali, ele e Paulo viajaram para o N e O através da Síria, depois pela Cilícia e por outras regiões da Ásia Menor. Timóteo juntou-se a eles em Listra e Lucas em Trôade.

Convidados para ir à Macedônia, num sonho dado a Paulo, eles primeiro ficaram em Filipos. Ali, na feira, Silas e Paulo foram espancados com varas por ordem dos magistrados civis, e foram presos em troncos, mas, durante a noite, enquanto oravam e entoavam cânticos, um terremoto soltou-lhes os laços e abriu as portas da prisão. O carcereiro ficou muito atemorizado, e, escutando Paulo e Silas, tornou-se cristão, cuidando das feridas que sofreram no espancamento. — At 15:41–16:40.

Seu ministério teve êxito em Tessalônica e em Bereia, onde Silas e Timóteo permaneceram temporariamente, ao passo que Paulo seguiu para Atenas e para Corinto. (At 17:1, 10, 14-16; 18:1) Quando Silas e Timóteo finalmente alcançaram Paulo em Corinto, continuaram a ajudá-lo. Enquanto ali, participaram com Paulo na escrita das duas cartas aos tessalonicenses. (1Te 1:1; 2Te 1:1) Silas não é mais mencionado na narrativa histórica das viagens de Paulo.

Alguns anos mais tarde, por volta de 62-64 EC, Pedro escreveu de Babilônia sua primeira carta, "por intermédio de Silvano", o que evidentemente significa que Silvano atuava como seu secretário. Ele foi ali descrito como "irmão fiel", e provavelmente era o Silvano associado anteriormente com Paulo. — 1Pe 5:12.

SILÉM [duma raiz que significa "fazer paz; compensar; restituir"]. Último mencionado dos quatro filhos de Naftali alistados entre "os nomes dos filhos de Israel que vieram ao Egito". (Gên 46:8, 24) Ele fundou a família tribal dos silemitas. (Núm 26:49, 50) Em 1 Crônicas 7:13, seu nome é grafado Salum no texto massorético, embora em sete manuscritos hebraicos seja Silém.

SILHIM. Cidade na parte meridional de Judá. (Jos 15:21, 32) Parece ser a Saruem alistada entre as cidades no território de Judá que pertenciam a Simeão. (Jos 19:1, 6) A lista em 1 Crônicas 4:31 parece chamar a mesma cidade de Saaraim. Tell el-Far'ah (Tel Sharuhen), a uns 35 km ao O de Berseba, é provisoriamente identificada com ela.

SILI. Pai de Azuba, que era a esposa de Asa e a mãe de Jeosafá. — 1Rs 22:41-43; 2Cr 20:31.

SILIM. Veja SILHIM.

SILO. Cidade situada no território de Efraim e "ao norte de Betel, para o leste da estrada principal que sobe de Betel a Siquém, e para o sul de Lebona". (Jz 21:19) A identificação geralmente aceita de Silo é Khirbet Seilun (Shillo), a uns 15 km a NNE de Betel. O lugar se enquadra na descrição bíblica. Ocupa uma colina, e, com exceção dum vale ao SO, é cercado por morros mais elevados.

Depois de se armar o tabernáculo em Silo (Jos 18:1), completou-se ali a repartição da terra entre os israelitas. (Jos 18:1–21:42) Após a divisão das terras, as tribos ao L do Jordão erigiram um altar junto a este rio. Encarando isso como ato de apostasia, as outras tribos se reuniram em Silo para lutar contra elas. Todavia, quando se explicou que o altar se destinava a ser um memorial de fidelidade a Jeová, mantiveram-se as relações pacíficas. — Jos 22:10-34.

Silo; sua condição desolada foi usada por Jeremias como vívido exemplo.

Numa época posterior, 12.000 valentes guerreiros israelitas empreenderam uma ação punitiva contra os habitantes de Jabes-Gileade por estes não terem participado na luta contra os benjamitas. Todavia, 400 virgens de Jabes-Gileade foram levadas a Silo e mais tarde entregues aos benjamitas. Os benjamitas foram também instruídos a obterem mais esposas dentre as filhas de Silo, levando-as à força quando as moças participassem em danças de roda por ocasião da festividade anual para Jeová, realizada em Silo. — Jz 21:8-23.

Na maior parte do período abrangido pelo livro de Juízes, se não durante todo ele, o tabernáculo permaneceu em Silo. (Jz 18:31; 1Sa 1:3, 9, 24; 2:14; 3:21; 1Rs 2:27) Pouco antes da morte do sumo sacerdote Eli, os israelitas, enquanto lutavam contra os filisteus, tiraram a Arca do tabernáculo e transferiram-na para o campo de batalha, confiantes em que a sua presença lhes daria a vitória. No entanto, Jeová permitiu que os filisteus capturassem a Arca. Visto que ela nunca mais foi devolvida a Silo, isto indicava que Jeová abandonara Silo, já que a Arca representava a Sua presença. (1Sa 4:2-11) O abandono de Silo é mencionado pelo salmista (Sal 78:60, 61; compare isso com 1Sa 4:21, 22) e é usado na profecia de Jeremias para ilustrar o que Jeová iria fazer com o templo em Jerusalém. — Je 7:12, 14; 26:6, 9.

No décimo século AEC, o profeta Aijá morava em Silo. (1Rs 12:15; 14:2, 4) Depois do assassinato de Gedalias, em 607 AEC, certos homens de Silo (quer da cidade, quer da região) foram a Jerusalém para oferecer sacrifícios. — Je 41:5.

SILÓ [Aquele de Quem É; Aquele a Quem Pertence]. Ao proferir uma bênção sobre Judá, o patriarca Jacó, pouco antes de morrer, disse: "O cetro não se afastará de Judá, nem o bastão de comandante de entre os seus pés, até que venha Siló; e a ele pertencerá a obediência dos povos." (Gên 49:10) A partir do governo de Davi, de Judá, o poder de comando (o bastão de comandante) e a soberania real (o cetro) eram da posse da tribo de Judá. Devia continuar assim até que viesse Siló, indicando que a linhagem real de Judá terminaria com Siló qual herdeiro permanente. De modo similar, antes da derrubada do reino de Judá, Jeová indicou ao último rei de Judá, Zedequias, que o governo seria dado àquele que tinha o direito legal a ele. (Ez 21:26, 27) Evidentemente, este seria Siló, visto que se entende que o nome significa "Aquele de Quem É; Aquele a Quem Pertence".

Nos séculos que se seguiram, Jesus Cristo é o único descendente de Davi a quem se prometeu o reinado. Antes do nascimento de Jesus, o anjo Gabriel disse a Maria: "Jeová Deus lhe dará o trono de Davi, seu pai, e ele reinará sobre a casa de Jacó para sempre, e não haverá fim do seu reino." (Lu 1:32, 33) Portanto, Siló tem de ser Jesus Cristo, "o Leão que é da tribo de Judá". — Re 5:5; compare isso com Is 11:10; Ro 15:12.

A respeito do antigo conceito judaico sobre Gênesis 49:10, um Commentary (Comentário) editado por F. C. Cook (p. 233) observa: "Toda a antiguidade judaica aplicava essa profecia ao Messias. Assim, o Targum de Onkelos reza 'até que venha o Messias, de quem é o reino'; o Targum de Jerusalém: 'até o tempo em que venha o rei Messias, de quem é o reino'. . . . Assim, o Talmude Babilônico ('Sanhedrim', cap. II. fol. 982): 'Qual é o nome do Messias? Seu nome é Siló, pois está escrito: Até que venha Siló.' "

SILOÉ, I [Remetente; Aquele Que Envia]. Parece que o nome Siloé era aplicado a um conduto ou canal em Jerusalém. Um antigo canal ia desde a boca da caverna da fonte de Giom, descendo o vale do Cédron e contornando a extremidade do morro SE, até um tanque na junção dos vales de Hinom e de Tiropeom. O gradiente do canal, de cerca de 4 ou 5 mm por metro, produzia um fluxo vagaroso e suave, aspecto que se enquadra na expressão "as águas de Siloé, que correm suavemente". A referência a estas "águas de Siloé", em Isaías 8:6, é figurativa e representa a fonte de verdadeira salvação e segurança.

SILOÉ, II [do hebr. que significa "Enviado"]. Reservatório de água em Jerusalém, onde Jesus Cristo mandou que um cego se lavasse, para recuperar a vista. (Jo 9:6, 7, 11; Foto, Vol. 2, p. 950) Recentes escavações revelaram um reservatório do primeiro século alimentado pela água da fonte de Giom, localizado a cerca de 100 m ao SE de Birket Silwan (também conhecido como reservatório de Siloé), onde os arqueólogos acreditam ser esse reservatório. Tem a forma de trapézio, com degraus em pelo menos três lados. Um lado possui 70 m de comprimento, mas o reservatório ainda não está totalmente escavado.

Para informações sobre a inscrição em Siloé, veja Ezequias; também Foto, Vol. 1, p. 960.

Nos dias do ministério terrestre de Jesus, evidentemente era de conhecimento comum que "a torre de Siloé" tinha caído, matando 18 pessoas. Sugeriu-se que esta torre estava situada no espigão de Ofel, mas a sua verdadeira localização em Jerusalém é desconhecida. — Lu 13:4.

SILONITA [De (Pertencente a) Silo].

1. Forma alternativa (usada no plural) do nome da família que descendeu de Selá, terceiro filho de Judá. — 1Cr 9:5; Gên 46:12; veja Selá, II N.º 2; Selanitas.

2. Habitante de Silo, cidade de bastante destaque na história de Israel. Este adjetivo pátrio é aplicado nas Escrituras apenas ao profeta Aijá, de Silo. — 1Rs 11:29; 12:15; 15:29; 2Cr 9:29; 10:15.

SILSA [Terceiro; Três Partes]. Maioral valente, poderoso, na tribo de Aser; filho ou descendente de Zofa. — 1Cr 7:36, 37, 40.

SILVANO. Veja Silas, Silvano.

SIM. Nome aplicado a um ermo e a uma cidade.

1. Região erma para a qual os israelitas, cerca de um mês depois do seu Êxodo do Egito, passaram depois de partir de Elim e do acampamento junto ao Mar Vermelho. Depois deste ermo, houve mais alguns lugares de acampamento, inclusive Dofca, Alus e Refidim, antes de chegarem ao Sinai. (Êx 16:1; 17:1; Núm 33:9-15) Foi no ermo de Sim que surgiram no acampamento resmungos e queixas pela falta de carne. Jeová fez ali um bando de codornizes "cobrir o acampamento", e foi ali que os israelitas comeram pela primeira vez o maná. Foi também neste ponto que se pôs em vigor a lei do sábado. — Êx 16:2-30.

Não há certeza da localização exata do ermo de Sim, embora obviamente ficasse ao longo da fronteira SO da península do Sinai. Os geógrafos geralmente favorecem o trecho arenoso conhecido como Debbet er-Ramleh, ao sopé do planalto do Sinai. Esta planície desértica fica também perto do lugar sugerido para Dofca.

2. Sim era uma das cidades do Egito que haviam de sentir a espada trazida sobre aquela terra pela mão do rei babilônio Nabucodonosor. (Ez 30:6, 10, 15, 16) É chamada de "baluarte do Egito". Algumas autoridades aceitam hoje a identificação com a Pelúsio encontrada na Vulgata latina. Pelúsio era uma antiga cidade-fortaleza situada numa posição-chave de defesa contra invasões desde o continente asiático. Aceita-se em geral que sua localização coincide com a atual Tell el Farame, um lugar a uns 32 km ao SE de Port Said, na costa do Mediterrâneo. Caravanas ou exércitos descendo pela costa filisteia encontravam assim esta fortaleza guardando a entrada do Egito. O rei assírio Assurbanipal refere-se a ela nos seus anais. Hoje, o lugar antigo é cercado por areias e brejos.

SIM [שׂ], CHIM [שׁ]. A 21.ª letra do alfabeto hebraico. Esta letra era usada para representar dois sons, e, em períodos posteriores, fazia-se a distinção pelo uso de um sinal diacrítico. Um ponto colocado sobre o "chifre" esquerdo [שׂ] dava-lhe a pronúncia de "s", ao passo que um ponto colocado sobre o "chifre" direito [שׁ] dava-lhe a pronúncia de "ch".

No hebraico, cada um dos oito versos do Salmo 119:161-168 começa com esta letra.

SIMÃO, I [duma raiz hebr. que significa "ouvir; escutar"].

1. Simão Iscariotes, pai do Judas que traiu Jesus. — Jo 6:71; 13:2, 26.

2. Outro nome do apóstolo Pedro. — Mr 3:16; veja Pedro.

3. Apóstolo de Jesus Cristo, diferenciado de Simão Pedro pelo termo "Cananita". (Mt 10:4; Mr 3:18) Embora seja possível que Simão antigamente pertencesse aos zelotes, um partido judaico oposto aos romanos, talvez fosse antes pelo seu zelo religioso que era chamado de "zeloso", ou "zelote". — Lu 6:15 n; At 1:13.

4. Meio-irmão mais novo de Jesus. (Mt 13:55; Mr 6:3) Embora antes da Festividade das Tendas, de 32 EC, ainda fosse descrente (Jo 7:2-8), pode ter-se tornado discípulo mais tarde. Os irmãos carnais de Jesus estavam no grupo de cerca de 120 discípulos em Jerusalém durante a época de Pentecostes de 33 EC, embora não se mencione Simão especificamente por nome como presente. — At 1:14, 15.

5. Fariseu em cuja casa Jesus jantou. Foi ali que uma mulher pecaminosa mostrou muita bondade e respeito, untando-lhe os pés com óleo perfumado. — Lu 7:36-50.

6. Morador de Betânia, chamado de "leproso" (talvez um dos curados por Jesus), em cuja casa Cristo e seus discípulos, bem como o ressuscitado Lázaro e as irmãs dele, Maria e Marta, tomaram uma refeição. Maria ungiu ali Jesus com dispendioso óleo perfumado. — Mt 26:6-13; Mr 14:3-9; Jo 12:2-8.

7. Nativo de Cirene e pai de Alexandre e Rufo. Enquanto vinha do campo, Simão foi obrigado a carregar a estaca de tortura de Jesus. — Mt 27:32; Mr 15:21; Lu 23:26; veja CIRENE, CIRENEU.

8. Mago na cidade de Samaria, que pasmava tanto a nação com suas artes mágicas, que o povo dizia a respeito dele: "Este homem é o Poder de Deus, que pode ser chamado Grande." Por causa do ministério de Filipe, Simão "se tornou crente" e foi batizado. Mais tarde, quando os crentes receberam o espírito santo em resultado da imposição das mãos neles pelos apóstolos Pedro e João, Simão demonstrou motivação errada, oferecendo dinheiro para obter a autoridade necessária a fim de que aqueles em quem pusesse as mãos recebessem espírito santo. Pedro censurou-o fortemente, dizendo a Simão que o coração dele não era reto à vista de Deus, e exortou-o a arrepender-se e a orar por perdão. Em resposta, Simão pediu que estes apóstolos fizessem súplica a Jeová a favor dele. — At 8:9-24.

9. Curtidor de Jope, em cuja casa junto ao mar o apóstolo Pedro se hospedou por muitos dias, em 36 EC. — At 9:43; 10:6, 17, 32.

SIMÃO, II. Pai de quatro filhos na tribo de Judá. — 1Cr 4:20.

SIMBÓLICOS, ANIMAIS. Veja ANIMAIS SIMBÓLICOS.

SIMEÁ [possivelmente uma forma abreviada de Semaías, que significa "Jeová Ouviu (Escutou)"].

1. Filho de Miclote, benjamita aparentado com os antepassados do Rei Saul; também chamado Simeã. — 1Cr 8:32; 9:35-39. Veja SIMEÃ.

2. Outro nome de Samá, irmão de Davi. — 1Sa 16:9; 2Sa 13:3, 32; veja SAMÁ N.º 2.

SIMEÃ. Filho de Miclote, o qual, conforme parece, morava em Jerusalém. Este benjamita era aparentado com os antepassados do Rei Saul. (1Cr 9:35-39) Ele é chamado de Simeá em 1 Crônicas 8:32.

SIMEÃO [Audição; duma raiz hebr. que significa "ouvir; escutar"].

1. Segundo dos 12 filhos de Jacó; chamado assim porque, conforme disse sua mãe Leia: "Jeová tem escutado, sendo que eu era odiada, e assim me deu também este." — Gên 29:32, 33; 35:23-26; 48:5; Êx 1:1-4; 1Cr 2:1, 2.

Quando seu pai Jacó acampava perto de Siquém, Simeão, junto com seu irmão mais moço, Levi, demonstraram uma ira vingativa desarrazoadamente dura e cruel. Arbitrariamente, sem o conhecimento e consentimento do pai, empreenderam vingar a honra da sua irmã mais nova, Diná, por matar os siquemitas, causando banimento a toda a família de Jacó. — Gên 34:1-31.

Mais tarde, Simeão se envolveu em transgressão quando ele e seus irmãos planejaram matar José. (Gên 37:12-28, 36) Não se declara se Simeão, como o segundo mais velho, foi ou não foi o instigador desta trama contra a vida de José. Anos mais tarde, quando José, como administrador de alimentos do Egito, testava seus irmãos, Simeão foi escolhido por José para ser preso e encarcerado até que os outros irmãos trouxessem Benjamim ao Egito. — Gên 42:14-24, 34-36; 43:15, 23.

Pouco antes de morrer, quando abençoou seus filhos, Jacó se lembrou com desaprovação da violência de Simeão e de Levi relacionada com os siquemitas, muitos anos antes, dizendo: "Instrumentos de violência são as suas armas de matança. Não entres no seu grupo íntimo, ó minha alma. Não te unas à sua congregação, ó minha disposição, porque na sua ira mataram homens e na sua arbitrariedade jarretaram touros. Maldita seja a sua ira, porque é cruel, e a sua fúria, porque age impiedosamente. Distribua-os eu por Jacó, mas espalhe-os eu em Israel." (Gên 49:5-7) Jacó eliminou assim qualquer esperança de Simeão de que talvez recebesse o direito da primogenitura perdido pelo seu irmão mais velho, Rubem. Simeão teve seis filhos varões, um deles com uma mulher cananeia. Conforme profetizado, o quinhão da tribo de Simeão não ficou junto de Levi, mas estas duas foram 'espalhadas'; até mesmo internamente, o quinhão de Simeão foi dividido em cidades encravadas no território de Judá. — Gên 46:10; Êx 6:15; 1Cr 4:24; Jos 19:1.

2. Tribo de Israel descendente das famílias dos seis filhos de Simeão: Jemuel, Jamim, Oade, Jaquim, Zoar e Saul. (Gên 46:10; Êx 6:15) Durante a peregrinação de Israel pelo ermo, Simeão acampava junto com Rubem e Gade ao S do tabernáculo, sendo a divisão de três tribos encabeçada por Rubem. Em marcha, mantinha-se este mesmo arranjo tribal, servindo Selumiel de maioral de Simeão, tanto do acampamento como do exército. — Núm 1:4, 6; 2:10-15; 10:18-20.

Redução da População da Tribo. Por ocasião do primeiro censo, feito um ano após o Êxodo do Egito, a tribo de Simeão tinha 59.300 varões vigorosos de 20 anos para cima, aptos para o serviço militar. (Núm 1:1-3, 22, 23) Todavia, uns 39 anos mais tarde, o segundo censo revelou que a tribo sofrera grandes perdas, havendo apenas 22.200 na mesma categoria. Isto importava num decréscimo de mais de 62 por cento, muito mais do que o sofrido por qualquer das outras tribos. — Núm 26:1, 2, 12-14.

Moisés não mencionou Simeão por nome na sua bênção de despedida de Israel. Isto não quer dizer que a tribo não fora abençoada, porque foi incluída no fim, na bênção geral. (De 33:6-24, 29) Simeão foi mencionado em primeiro lugar entre as tribos designadas para ficar em pé no monte Gerizim, relacionado com o proferimento de bênçãos. — De 27:11, 12.

O tamanho reduzido de Simeão sem dúvida foi tomado em consideração na designação dos respectivos territórios na Terra da Promessa; a tribo não recebeu um quinhão independente, indiviso, mas, em vez disso, recebeu cidades inteiramente encerradas dentro do território de Judá. Assim se cumpriu a profecia de Jacó no leito de morte, proferida mais de 200 anos antes. (Núm 34:16-20; Jos 19:1-9; compare isso com Gên 49:5-7.) Simeão participou com Judá em arrancar este território das mãos dos cananeus. (Jz 1:1-3, 17) Reservaram-se também para a tribo de Levi cidades encravadas na herança de Simeão. — Jos 21:4, 9, 10; 1Cr 6:64, 65.

Menção na Posterior História Bíblica. Os simeonitas são de vez em quando mencionados na história posterior de Israel — no tempo de Davi (1Cr 4:24-31; 12:23, 25; 27:16), nos dias de Asa (2Cr 15:8, 9) e no tempo de Josias (2Cr 34:1-3, 6, 7). Esta última referência, às reformas de Josias, mostra que, embora geograficamente Simeão se encontrasse no território de Judá, política e religiosamente havia lançado sua sorte com o reino setentrional. Parece que, nos dias de Ezequias, 500 simeonitas golpearam os remanescentes dos amalequitas e passaram a morar em seu lugar. — 1Cr 4:41-43.

Nos livros proféticos de Ezequiel e de Revelação (Apocalipse), o nome de Simeão ocorre ao lado de outros das tribos de Israel. A faixa de território designada a Simeão na demarcação da Terra da Promessa visionada por Ezequiel ficava entre as de Benjamim e de Issacar, ao S da "contribuição sagrada". Mas o portão designado a Simeão no lado S da cidade santa ficava junto aos que receberam o nome de Issacar e de Zebulão. (Ez 48:21-25, 28, 33) Na visão dos 144.000 selados, no capítulo 7 de Revelação, Simeão é a sétima tribo alistada. — Re 7:7.

3. Um dos oito filhos de Harim, que Esdras incentivou a despedirem suas esposas pagãs e os filhos. — Esd 10:10, 11, 31, 32, 44.

4. Homem idoso, justo e reverente, que entrou no templo no mesmo dia em que José e Maria trouxeram o menino Jesus. Fora divinamente revelado a Simeão que ele, antes da sua morte, veria o Cristo. Por isso, tomou o menino nos braços, bendisse a Jeová, e tendo sobre si espírito santo, declarou à mãe do menino: "Este é posto para a queda e para o novo levantamento de muitos em Israel." Simeão profetizou também que Maria sofreria grande aflição, como que traspassada por uma espada, por causa da morte agonizante deste seu filho. — Lu 2:22, 25-35.

5. Antepassado de Maria, mãe de Jesus. — Lu 3:30.

6. Forma do nome de Simão (Pedro) usada uma vez por Tiago, no conselho de Jerusalém. — At 15:14.

7. Um dos profetas e instrutores da congregação de Antioquia, na Síria, que impuseram as mãos em Barnabé e em Paulo depois que o espírito santo designara estes dois para a obra missionária. O apelido latino de Simeão era Níger. — At 13:1-3.

SIMEATE [duma raiz que significa "ouvir; escutar"]. Mulher amonita cujo filho foi um dos assassinos do Rei Jeoás, de Judá. — 2Rs 12:20, 21; 2Cr 24:25, 26.

SIMEATITAS. Família de escribas queneus que morava em Jabez. Desconhece-se sua relação com as genealogias de Judá. — 1Cr 2:55.

SIMEI [possivelmente uma forma abreviada de Semaías, que significa "Jeová Ouviu (Escutou)"].

1. Segundo filho mencionado de Gérson (Gersom); neto de Levi. (Êx 6:16, 17; Núm 3:17, 18; 1Cr 6:16, 17) Diversas famílias simeítas dos levitas descenderam dele. — Núm 3:21-26; 1Cr 23:7, 10, 11; Za 12:13.

2. Rubenita cujo descendente Beerá, maioral, foi levado ao exílio pelo rei assírio Tilgate-Pilneser (Tiglate-Pileser III). — 1Cr 5:1, 4-6.

3. Levita merarita. — 1Cr 6:29.

4. Levita gersonita; antepassado de Asafe. — 1Cr 6:39, 42.

5. Benjamita cujos nove filhos (ou descendentes) eram cabeças de casas de antepassados morando em Jerusalém. (1Cr 8:1, 19-21, 28) Ele parece ser chamado de Sema em 1 Crônicas 8:13, identificado ali como cabeça de família em Aijalom.

6. Simeonita, filho de Zacur; ele teve 16 filhos e 6 filhas. — 1Cr 4:24-27.

7. Um dos irmãos de Davi. — 2Sa 21:21; veja SAMÁ N.º 2.

8. Descendente de Gérson através de Ladã. Durante o reinado de Davi, três filhos (ou descendentes) de Simei eram cabeças de famílias levíticas. — 1Cr 23:8, 9.

9. Cabeça da décima turma de músicos levitas; filho de Jedutum. — 1Cr 25:1, 3, 17.

10. Encarregado dos vinhedos de Davi; ramatita. — 1Cr 27:27.

11. Apoiador leal do Rei Davi, que se negou a participar da conspiração de Adonias. (1Rs 1:8) Presumivelmente trata-se do Simei nomeado preposto de alimentos do Rei Salomão no território de Benjamim; filho de Ela. — 1Rs 4:7, 18.

12. Benjamita da aldeia de Baurim. Simei, filho de Gera, duma família da casa do Rei Saul, por anos nutria ressentimento contra Davi, depois da morte de Saul e da remoção do reinado da sua casa. Simei achou uma oportunidade de expressar sua há muito contida fúria quando Davi e seu grupo fugiram de Jerusalém por causa da rebelião de Absalão. Logo ao L do monte das Oliveiras, Simei andava ao lado deles, atirando neles pedras e poeira e amaldiçoando Davi. Abisai pediu a Davi permissão para matar Simei, mas Davi a negou, esperando que talvez Jeová transformasse a maldição de Simei numa bênção. — 2Sa 16:5-13.

Quando Davi retornou, com a situação invertida, Simei e um milhar de outros benjamitas foram os primeiros a se encontrar com Davi, curvando-se Simei diante dele e expressando arrependimento pelos seus pecados. Novamente, Abisai quis matá-lo, mas de novo Davi não o permitiu, esta vez jurando que não mataria Simei. (2Sa 19:15-23) Todavia, antes de morrer, Davi disse a Salomão que fizesse os "cabelos grisalhos [de Simei] descer com sangue ao Seol". — 1Rs 2:8, 9.

No começo do seu reinado, Salomão chamou Simei e ordenou-lhe que se mudasse para Jerusalém e que não saísse da cidade; se deixasse a cidade, seria morto. Simei concordou com estes termos, mas, três anos depois, saiu da cidade para recuperar dois dos seus escravos que haviam fugido para Gate. Ao saber desta violação, Salomão chamou Simei às contas pela violação do seu juramento a Jeová e ordenou que Benaia o executasse. — 1Rs 2:36-46.

13. Descendente levita de Hemã, que se santificou e ajudou a retirar os objetos imundos do templo, no começo do reinado de Ezequias. (2Cr 29:12, 14-16) Provavelmente trata-se do N.º 14.

14. O levita que era o segundo encarregado de armazenar as generosas contribuições e dízimos trazidos ao templo durante o reinado de Ezequias. (2Cr 31:11-13) Provavelmente trata-se do N.º 13.

15. Antepassado de Mordecai; da tribo de Benjamim. — Est 2:5.

16. Irmão do governador Zorobabel; descendente de Davi, da tribo de Judá. — 1Cr 3:19.

17. Um dos levitas que despediram suas esposas estrangeiras e os filhos quando repreendidos por Esdras por terem feito alianças matrimoniais com estrangeiras. — Esd 10:10, 11, 23, 44.

18, 19. Dois israelitas, respectivamente filhos de Hasum e de Binui, que também despediram suas esposas estrangeiras e os filhos. — Esd 10:33, 38, 44.

SIMEIA [possivelmente uma forma abreviada de Semaías, que significa "Jeová Ouviu (Escutou)"].

1. Levita merarita. — 1Cr 6:29, 30.

2. Antepassado de Asafe, músico do templo, da família levita de Gérson (Gersom). — 1Cr 6:1, 39, 43; Êx 6:16.

3. Terceiro filho de Jessé, portanto, um irmão mais velho de Davi. — 1Cr 2:13, 15; 20:7; veja SAMÁ N.º 2.

4. Filho que Bate-Seba deu à luz a Davi. (1Cr 3:5) Em outros lugares é chamado Samua. — 2Sa 5:14; 1Cr 14:4.

SIMEÍTAS [De (Pertencentes a) Simei]. Descendentes de Simei, filho de Gérson e neto de Levi. (Êx 6:16, 17) Quando se fez o primeiro censo no ermo, os simeítas e os libnitas ("as famílias dos gersonitas") tinham o total de 7.500 registrados. (Núm 3:20b-22) Os simeítas acampavam junto aos libnitas "atrás do tabernáculo", isto é, ao O. Sendo gersonitas, seus deveres levíticos incluíam o transporte, bem como a montagem e a manutenção do tabernáculo, e das suas coberturas, além dos cortinados do pátio, dos reposteiros (tanto da entrada do pátio como da tenda) e dos cordões de tenda. — Êx 26:1, 7, 14, 36; 27:9, 16; Núm 3:23-26.

Simei teve quatro filhos varões: Jaate, Zina, Jeús e Berias. Mas, visto que os últimos dois não tive-ram muitos filhos, juntaram-se numa só "casa paterna para uma classe oficial". Isto é mencionado no tempo de Davi, quando parece que os serviços designados aos simeítas no tabernáculo foram repartidos entre essas três famílias. (1Cr 23:6, 7, 10, 11) A profecia de Zacarias incluía especialmente a família dos simeítas entre os que lamentam amargamente "Aquele a quem traspassaram", profecia que se refere a Jesus. — Za 12:10-13; Jo 19:37.

SIMEONITAS [De (Pertencentes a) Simeão]. Os descendentes do segundo filho de Jacó, Simeão. Depois de cerca de 40 anos de peregrinação no ermo, a população masculina dos simeonitas de 20 anos para cima, qualificada para o serviço militar, somava apenas 22.200 homens, constituindo a menor das 12 tribos. Estavam distribuídos em cinco famílias principais: os nemuelitas, os jaminitas, os jaquinitas, os zeraítas e os saulitas. (Núm 25:14; 26:1, 2, 12-14; Jos 21:4; 1Cr 27:16) Caso tenha havido descendentes de um sexto filho, Oade, quando se fez este segundo censo, estes provavelmente eram muito poucos para serem alistados como família separada. — Gên 46:10; Êx 6:15.

SINABE [do acadiano, significando "Sin [o deus-lua] É Seu Pai"]. Rei de Admá; um dos cinco monarcas na região S do Mar Morto, cuja rebelião contra a vassalagem a Quedorlaomer não foi bem-sucedida. — Gên 14:1-10.

SINAGOGA. Na Septuaginta grega, as duas palavras ek·kle·sí·a, que significa "assembleia" ou "congregação", e sy·na·go·gé (ajuntamento) são usadas intercambiavelmente. A palavra "sinagoga", com o tempo, assumiu o sentido de lugar ou prédio em que se realizava a assembleia. Todavia, não perdeu completamente o sentido original, porque a Grande Sinagoga não era um prédio grande, mas uma assembleia de notáveis eruditos, creditados com a fixação do cânon das Escrituras Hebraicas para os judeus palestinos. Diz-se que ela teve início nos dias de Esdras ou de Neemias, e que continuou até o tempo do Grande Sinédrio, por volta do terceiro século AEC. Tiago usou a palavra no sentido duma reunião ou ajuntamento público cristão. — Tg 2:2.

Em Revelação (Apocalipse) 2:9; 3:9, "sinagoga" aplica-se a uma assembleia sob o domínio de Satanás. Lemos também sobre a "Sinagoga dos Libertos". — At 6:9; veja LIBERTO, HOMEM LIVRE.

Não se sabe exatamente quando as sinagogas foram instituídas, mas parece ter sido durante o exílio babilônico de 70 anos, quando não existia templo, ou pouco depois do retorno do exílio, depois de Esdras, o sacerdote, ter enfatizado tão fortemente a necessidade do conhecimento da Lei.

Nos dias do ministério terrestre de Jesus Cristo, toda cidade de certo tamanho, na Palestina, tinha sua própria sinagoga, e as cidades maiores tinham mais de uma. Jerusalém tinha muitas. Menciona-se nas Escrituras até mesmo o caso de uma sinagoga construída para os judeus por um oficial do exército romano. (Lu 7:2, 5, 9) Uma das melhores ruínas de sinagoga já descobertas foi escavada em Tell Hum (Kefar Nahum), provável lugar da antiga Cafarnaum. O prédio tinha originalmente dois pavimentos. Datas fornecidas pelos peritos para esta sinagoga variam desde o fim do segundo século EC até o começo do quinto século EC. O próprio edifício foi construído sobre o local duma sinagoga anterior, que remontava ao primeiro século EC. A sinagoga anterior, há pouco parcialmente escavada, tinha 24,2 m de comprimento e 18,5 m de largura.

Uma particularidade das antigas sinagogas era um repositório para rolos das Escrituras. Evidentemente, o costume mais antigo era guardar os rolos quer fora do edifício principal, quer numa sala separada, por motivos de segurança. Por fim, passaram a ser guardados numa arca ou caixa portátil, colocada em posição durante a adoração. Nas sinagogas posteriores, a arca tornou-se uma particularidade arquitetônica do próprio prédio, sendo embutida numa das paredes ou fixada nela. Ao lado da arca e confrontando a congregação havia assentos para os presidentes da sinagoga e para quaisquer convidados distintos. (Mt 23:6) A leitura da Lei era feita de cima duma plataforma elevada, tradicionalmente no centro da sinagoga. Em três lados dela havia assentos ou bancos para a assistência, possivelmente incluindo uma seção separada para as mulheres. Parece que o posicionamento do prédio era considerado importante, fazendo-se empenho para que os adoradores enfrentassem Jerusalém. — Veja Da 6:10.

Programa de Adoração. A sinagoga servia como lugar de instrução, não de sacrifícios. Sacrifícios eram oferecidos apenas no templo. Os ofícios na sinagoga parecem ter consistido em louvor, oração, recitação e leitura das Escrituras, bem como em explanações e exortações ou pregações. O oferecimento de louvor destacava os Salmos. As orações, embora até certo ponto tiradas das Escrituras, com o tempo tornaram-se longas e ritualísticas, e muitas vezes eram feitas por pretexto ou ostentação. — Mr 12:40; Lu 20:47.

Um elemento de adoração na sinagoga era a recitação da Shema, ou o que equivalia à confissão de fé judaica. Obteve seu nome da primeira palavra do texto inicial usado: "Escuta [*Shemá*ʽ], ó Israel: Jeová, nosso Deus, é um só Jeová." (De 6:4) A parte mais importante do ofício era a leitura da Tora, ou Pentateuco, feita às segundas-feiras, às quintas-feiras e todo sábado. Em muitas sinagogas, programava-se a leitura de toda a Lei no período de um ano; em outras, o programa levava três anos. Foi por causa da ênfase dada na leitura da Tora que o discípulo Tiago podia muito bem observar aos membros do corpo governante em Jerusalém: "Desde os tempos antigos, Moisés tem tido em cidade após cidade os que o pregam, porque ele está sendo lido em voz alta nas sinagogas, cada sábado." (At 15:21) A Míxena (Megillah 4:1, 2) também menciona a prática da leitura de trechos dos profetas, conhecidos como *haftarah*s, cada um com sua explanação. Quando Jesus entrou na sinagoga da sua cidade, Nazaré, entregaram-lhe um dos rolos que continha a haftarah a ser lida, após o que ele, como era costume, fez uma explanação dela. — Lu 4:17-21.

Após a leitura da Tora e das haftarahs, junto com sua exposição, vinha a pregação ou exortação. Lemos que Jesus ensinava e pregava nas sinagogas de toda a Galileia. Do mesmo modo, Lucas registra que foi "depois da leitura pública da Lei e dos Profetas" que Paulo e Barnabé foram convidados a falar, a pregar. — Mt 4:23; At 13:15, 16.

A Pregação de Paulo. Após o Pentecostes de 33 EC e o estabelecimento da congregação cristã, os apóstolos, especialmente Paulo, fizeram muita pregação nas sinagogas. Quando entrava numa cidade, Paulo costumava ir primeiro à sinagoga e pregar ali, dando aos judeus a primeira oportunidade de ouvir as boas novas do Reino, dirigindo-se depois aos gentios. Em alguns casos, passou considerável tempo na sinagoga, pregando durante vários sábados. Em Éfeso, ele ensinou na sinagoga por três meses, e depois de surgir oposição, retirou os discípulos crentes e usou o auditório da escola de Tirano por cerca de dois anos. — At 13:14; 17:1, 2, 10, 17; 18:4, 19; 19:8-10.

Paulo não usava as sinagogas judaicas como lugares de reunião da congregação cristã. Tampouco realizava reuniões dominicais, pois usava o sábado judaico, o sábado comum, para pregar aos judeus por estarem reunidos naquele dia.

Similaridades Cristãs. Para os primeiros cristãos judeus não era difícil realizar ordeiras e educativas reuniões de estudo bíblico, porque tinham o modelo básico das sinagogas, que lhes era conhecido. Encontramos muitas similaridades. Na sinagoga judaica, assim como também na congregação cristã, não havia em separado sacerdócio, nem clérigo que virtualmente só ele falava. Na sinagoga, a participação na leitura e na explanação estava franqueada a qualquer judeu devoto. Na congregação cristã, todos deviam fazer uma declaração pública, e estimular ao amor e a obras excelentes, mas de modo ordeiro. (He 10:23-25) Na sinagoga judaica, as mulheres não ensinavam, nem exerciam autoridade sobre os homens; tampouco faziam isso na assembleia cristã. O capítulo 14 de Primeira Coríntios fornece instruções para as reuniões da congregação cristã, e pode-se ver que eram bem similares ao procedimento na sinagoga. — 1Co 14:31-35; 1Ti 2:11, 12.

As sinagogas tinham presidentes e superintendentes, assim como as primitivas congregações cristãs. (Mr 5:22; Lu 13:14; At 20:28; Ro 12:8) As sinagogas tinham ajudantes ou assistentes, e assim também os cristãos na sua forma de adoração. Havia alguém chamado de enviado ou mensageiro da sinagoga. Embora não encontremos nenhum equivalente no registro histórico da primitiva congregação cristã, um nome similar, "anjo", ocorre nas mensagens que Jesus Cristo enviou às sete congregações da Ásia Menor. — Lu 4:20; 1Ti 3:8-10; Re 2:1, 8, 12, 18; 3:1, 7, 14.

Entre outros aspectos em que a sinagoga serviu de precursora para as assembleias cristãs estão os seguintes: as sinagogas locais reconheciam a autoridade do Sinédrio em Jerusalém, assim como as congregações cristãs reconheciam a autoridade do corpo governante em Jerusalém, conforme mostra claramente o capítulo 15 de Atos. Nem numa nem noutra se faziam coletas, e, no entanto, em ambas havia provisões para se darem contribuições para a assembleia e seus ministros, e para os pobres. — 2Co 9:1-5.

Ambas também serviam de tribunais. A sinagoga era o lugar em que se ouviam e resolviam casos menores envolvendo judeus; e, neste respeito, também o apóstolo Paulo argumenta que os cristãos deviam deixar que os maduros na congregação julgassem assuntos envolvendo cristãos, em vez de recorrer a tribunais do mundo para resolver tais diferenças. (1Co 6:1-3) Ao passo que no arranjo da sinagoga havia provisão para a administração de açoites, na congregação cristã tal punição se limitava a repreensões. Similar ao arranjo para os judeus na sinagoga, na congregação cristã, a medida mais severa que se podia adotar contra alguém que professava ser cristão era expulsá-lo, desassociá-lo ou excomungá-lo da congregação cristã. — 1Co 5:1-8, 11-13; veja CONGREGAÇÃO; EXPULSÃO.

Jesus predisse que seus seguidores seriam açoitados nas sinagogas (Mt 10:17; 23:34; Mr 13:9) e que seriam postos para fora, expulsos. (Jo 16:2) Alguns dos governantes dentre os judeus criam em Jesus, mas por medo de serem expulsos da congregação judaica, não o confessavam. (Jo 12:42) Certo homem a quem Jesus havia curado de cegueira congênita foi expulso pelos judeus por ter dado testemunho a favor de Jesus. — Jo 9:1, 34.

SINAI.

1. Monte na Arábia (Gál 4:25), pelo visto também chamado Horebe. (Compare isso com Êx 3:1, 12; 19:1, 2, 10, 11; veja HOREBE.) Os israelitas e uma vasta mistura de gente, junto com numerosos rebanhos e manadas, acamparam quase um ano na vizinhança do monte Sinai. (Êx 12:37, 38; 19:1; Núm 10:11, 12) Além de poder acomodar um acampamento tão grande, que ascendia talvez a uns três milhões de pessoas, a região em torno do monte Sinai também fornecia suficiente água, e pastos para os animais domésticos. Pelo menos uma torrente descia do monte. (De 9:21) Evidentemente havia ao pé do monte Sinai uma área bastante grande para os israelitas se reunirem e observarem os fenômenos no cume do monte. Na realidade, podiam retroceder e ficar à distância. Até mesmo do próprio acampamento se via o cume do monte Sinai. — Êx 19:17, 18; 20:18; 24:17; compare isso com De 5:30.

Identificação. A localização exata do monte Sinai, ou Horebe, é incerta. A tradição o relaciona com uma serra de granito vermelho de localização central na parte meridional da península do Sinai, entre os dois braços setentrionais do Mar Vermelho. Esta serra tem uns 3 km de NO a SE e tem dois picos, Ras Safsafa e Jebel Musa. A região em que se encontra esta serra é bem regada por diversos ribeirões. Defronte do pico setentrional (Ras Safsafa) fica a planície de er-Raha, com aproximadamente 3 km de extensão e cerca de 1 km de largura. — FOTO, Vol. 1, p. 540.

Baseado nas suas observações neste lugar, no século 19, A. P. Stanley escreve: "Que tal planície exista diante de um penhasco assim é uma coincidência tão notável com a narrativa sagrada, que apresenta um forte argumento interno, não apenas da sua identificação com o cenário, mas que o próprio cenário fora descrito por uma testemunha ocular." Comentando a descida de Moisés e de Josué do monte Sinai, ele declara: "Quem descesse de uma das bacias recônditas atrás de Ras Sa[f]safeh, através das ravinas oblíquas que o ladeiam ao norte e ao sul, ouviria os sons desde a planície atravessando o silêncio, mas não veria a própria planície até emergir do uádi El-Deir ou do uádi Leja; e ao fazer isso, estaria logo abaixo do escarpado penhasco do Sa[f]safeh." Stanley observa adicionalmente que lançar Moisés o pó do bezerro de ouro "na torrente que descia do monte" (De 9:21) também se ajusta a esta área, dizendo: "Isto seria perfeitamente possível no uádi Er-Raheh, no qual desemboca o riacho do uádi Leja, que desce, é verdade, do monte Sta. Catarina, mas ainda se encontra suficientemente perto do Gebel Mousa [Jebel Musa] para justificar a expressão 'descendo do monte'." — Sinai and Palestine (Sinai e Palestina), 1885, pp. 107-109.

O ponto de vista tradicional é que o monte Sinai pode ser identificado com o pico sulino mais elevado (Jebel Musa, que significa "Monte de Moisés"). Todavia, muitos peritos concordam com o ponto de vista de Stanley, de que o pico setentrional, Ras Safsafa, é o mais provável, por não haver nenhuma planície extensa diante do Jebel Musa.

Eventos. Perto do monte Sinai, ou Horebe, o anjo de Jeová apareceu a Moisés no espinheiro ardente e o comissionou a conduzir os israelitas escravizados para fora do Egito. (Êx 3:1-10; At 7:30) Provavelmente cerca de um ano depois, a nação liberta chegou ao monte Sinai. (Êx 19:2) Moisés subiu ali ao monte, evidentemente para receber mais instruções de Jeová, visto que já se lhe revelara junto ao espinheiro ardente que 'neste monte serviriam o verdadeiro Deus'. — Êx 3:12; 19:3.

Mandou-se então que Moisés dissesse ao povo que a sua estrita obediência à palavra e ao pacto de Jeová resultaria em se tornarem um reino de sacerdotes e uma nação santa. (Êx 19:5, 6) Os anciãos, como representantes da nação inteira, concordaram nisso. Jeová instruiu então Moisés que santificasse o povo, a fim de que pudessem encontrar-se com ele no terceiro dia depois disso. Fixaram-se limites em torno do monte, porque quem o tocasse, quer homem quer animal, morreria. — Êx 19:10-15.

Na manhã do terceiro dia, "começou a haver trovões e relâmpagos, e uma pesada nuvem sobre o monte e um som muito forte de buzina". O povo no acampamento tremia. Moisés levou-os então do acampamento até ao sopé do monte, para se encontrarem com o verdadeiro Deus. Todo o monte Sinai tremia e fumegava. (Êx 19:16-19; Sal 68:8) Ao convite de Deus, Moisés subiu novamente ao monte e foi mandado incutir no povo que não deviam tentar subir ao monte. Nem mesmo os "sacerdotes" (não os levitas, mas evidentemente os varões israelitas que, iguais aos patriarcas, serviam na qualidade de sacerdotes para a sua família, segundo direito e costume naturais) podiam ultrapassar os limites fixados. — Êx 19:20-24.

Depois de Moisés descer do monte Sinai, os israelitas ouviram as "Dez Palavras" do meio do fogo e da nuvem. (Êx 19:19–20:18; De 5:6-22) Jeová falou-lhes ali por meio dum representante angélico, conforme é esclarecido em Atos 7:38, Hebreus 2:2 e Gálatas 3:19. Amedrontado pelo espantoso espetáculo de relâmpagos e de fumaça, e pelo som da buzina e pelos trovões, o povo, por meio dos seus representantes, pediu que Deus não mais falasse com eles desta maneira, mas que o fizesse através de Moisés. Jeová mandou então que Moisés lhes dissesse que voltassem às suas tendas. Intencionava-se que o espetáculo no monte Sinai incutisse nos israelitas um salutar temor de Deus, para que continuassem a observar Seus mandamentos. (Êx 20:19, 20; De 5:23-30) Depois disso, talvez acompanhado por Arão (veja Êx 19:24), Moisés aproximou-se da densa nuvem escura no monte Sinai para ouvir ordens e decisões judiciais adicionais de Jeová. — Êx 20:21; 21:1.

Quando Moisés desceu do monte Sinai, ele relatou as palavras de Jeová ao povo, e este expressou de novo sua disposição de ser obediente. Depois ele assentou por escrito as palavras de Deus, e, cedo na manhã seguinte, construiu um altar e erigiu 12 colunas ao pé do monte. Ofereceram-se sacrifícios queimados e sacrifícios de participação em comum, e com o sangue das vítimas sacrificiais se inaugurou o pacto da Lei. — Êx 24:3-8; He 9:16-22.

Os israelitas, tendo entrado numa relação pactuada com Jeová, por meio de seus representantes, puderam chegar-se ao monte Sinai. Moisés, Arão, Nadabe, Abiú e 70 anciãos de Israel subiram até certa parte do monte e tiveram uma magnífica visão da glória de Deus. (Êx 24:9-11) Depois, Moisés, acompanhado por Josué, subiu ao monte, esta vez para receber ordens adicionais e as tábuas de pedra com as "Dez Palavras". Só no sétimo dia, porém, Moisés foi convidado a entrar na nuvem. Parece que Josué continuou a esperar por Moisés no monte, num ponto onde nem podia ver, nem ouvir o que acontecia no acampamento israelita. (Êx 24:12-18) Todavia, não se declara se Josué, igual a Moisés, não comeu nem bebeu durante todo o período de 40 dias. Quando Moisés e Josué, ao fim deste período, desceram do monte Sinai, puderam ouvir o canto festivo no acampamento israelita. Do sopé do monte Sinai, Moisés pôde ver o bezerro de ouro e as festividades. Imediatamente, lançou no chão as duas tábuas de pedra, destroçando-as ao pé do monte. — Êx 32:15-19; He 12:18-21.

Mais tarde, mandou-se que Moisés fizesse duas tábuas de pedra iguais àquelas que havia destroçado e que novamente subisse ao monte Sinai, a fim de se registrarem nelas as "Dez Palavras". (Êx 34:1-3; De 10:1-4) Moisés passou mais 40 dias no monte, sem comer nem beber. Para tornar isso possível, sem dúvida, ele recebeu ajuda divina. — Êx 34:28; parece tratar-se do mesmo período de 40 dias mencionado em De 9:18; compare isso com Êx 34:4, 5, 8; De 10:10.

Desde o tempo em que se erigiu o tabernáculo, ou a tenda de reunião, e ele passou a ser coberto pela nuvem, a comunicação divina não mais vinha diretamente desde o monte Sinai, mas da tenda de reunião armada na sua vizinhança. — Êx 40:34, 35; Le 1:1; 25:1; Núm 1:1; 9:1.

Séculos mais tarde, o profeta Elias viajou até Horebe, ou Sinai, "o monte do verdadeiro Deus". — 1Rs 19:8.

2. "Sinai" é também o nome do ermo adjacente ao monte do mesmo nome. (Le 7:38) Os exatos limites geográficos do ermo de Sinai não podem ser determinados à base do registro bíblico. Parece ter ficado perto de Refidim. (Êx 19:2; compare isso com Êx 17:1-6.) Foi ao ermo de Sinai que o sogro de Moisés, Jetro, trouxe a esposa de Moisés, Zípora, e seus dois filhos, Gersom e Eliézer, para ficarem com Moisés. (Êx 18:1-7) Entre outros eventos notáveis ocorridos no ermo de Sinai estavam: sucumbir Israel à adoração do bezerro durante a ausência de Moisés (Êx 32:1-8), a execução de 3.000 homens que sem dúvida tiveram muita participação na adoração do bezerro (Êx 32:26-28), a tangível expressão de arrependimento de Israel por se despojar de seus enfeites (Êx 33:6), a construção do tabernáculo e da sua mobília, e a confecção das vestes sacerdotais (Êx 36:8–39:43), a investidura do sacerdócio e o começo dos seus serviços no tabernáculo (Le 8:4–9:24; Núm 28:6), a execução de Nadabe e Abiú, filhos de Arão, por fogo da parte de Jeová, por terem oferecido fogo ilegítimo (Le 10:1-3), o primeiro registro dos varões israelitas para a guerra (Núm 1:1-3) e a primeira celebração da Páscoa fora do Egito (Núm 9:1-5).

SINAL. Objeto, ato, situação ou exibição incomum que serve de indicador de outra coisa, presente ou futura. O sinal (hebr.: 'ohth; gr.: se·mei·on) pode ser evidência de autenticidade ou de autoridade, um aviso de perigo ou um indicador do proceder sábio a adotar. — Veja MARCA.

Entre os muitos sinais que Jeová tem fornecido para a orientação humana, os primeiros mencionados como tais são os luzeiros celestes, o sol e a lua. (Gên 1:14) São indicadores de tempo, bem como sinais visíveis da existência de Deus e das suas qualidades. (Sal 19:1-4; Ro 1:19, 20) Evidentemente, tem sido por olharem para esses luzeiros, bem como para as estrelas, em busca de presságios, como pela astrologia, que as nações 'têm ficado aterrorizadas', conforme declara Jeremias 10:2.

Objetivos dos Sinais. Jeová deu sinais como garantia da veracidade e fidedignidade das suas palavras. (Je 44:29; 1Sa 2:31-34; 10:7, 9; 2Rs 20:8-11) Demonstraram o apoio que Deus deu a Moisés e a outros servos (Êx 3:11, 12; compare isso com Jz 6:17, 20-22), a um apóstolo (2Co 12:12) e à congregação cristã (1Co 14:22).

Sinais não eram essenciais para provar o apoio de Deus, como se vê no caso de João, o Batizador. (Jo 10:41; Mt 11:9-11) Um falso profeta também podia realizar sinais, mas ele podia ser identificado como falso pelos meios providos por Jeová. — De 13:1-5; 18:20-22; Is 44:25; Mr 13:22; 2Te 2:9; Re 13:13, 14; 19:20.

Certos sinais são advertências, lembretes e recordações. (Gên 9:12-14; 17:11; Ro 4:11) Os sábados e a Páscoa constituíam sinais de recordação para os judeus. (Êx 13:3-9; 31:13; Ez 20:12, 20) Um sinal de natureza literal ou simbólica podia servir de identificação. — Núm 2:2; Êx 12:13.

Exigido Sinal de Jesus. Jesus, durante o seu ministério, realizou numerosos sinais que ajudaram muitos a crer nele. (Jo 2:23) Mas esses sinais não produziram fé nos empedernidos. (Lu 2:34; Jo 11:47, 53; 12:37; compare isso com Núm 14:11, 22.) Em duas ocasiões, quando líderes religiosos pediram que Jesus lhes desse um sinal do céu, eles provavelmente queriam que realizasse, como prova de que era o Messias, o sinal predito em Daniel 7:13, 14, a saber, de o "filho de homem" aparecer nas nuvens dos céus para assumir o poder do Reino. Mas aquele não era o tempo de Deus para esta profecia se cumprir, e Cristo não realizaria uma demonstração ostentosa só para satisfazer a exigência egoísta deles. (Mt 12:38; 16:1) Antes, ele lhes disse que o único sinal que receberiam seria "o sinal de Jonas, o profeta". (Mt 12:39-41; 16:4) Depois de Jonas ter ficado cerca de três dias no ventre dum enorme peixe, ele fora e pregara a Nínive. Jonas tornara-se assim um "sinal" para a capital da Assíria. A geração de Jesus teve "o sinal de Jonas" quando Cristo passou partes de três dias na sepultura e foi ressuscitado, após o que seus discípulos proclamaram a evidência deste evento. Neste respeito, Cristo era um sinal para aquela geração, mas nem mesmo isso convenceu a maioria dos judeus. — Lu 11:30; 1Co 1:22.

Sinal da Presença de Cristo. Pouco antes da morte de Jesus, seus apóstolos perguntaram-lhe: "Qual será o sinal da tua presença e da terminação do sistema de coisas?" (Mt 24:3; Mr 13:4; Lu 21:7) Havia nítidas diferenças entre esta pergunta e o pedido dos líderes religiosos, de que desse um sinal. Estando ali presentes, podendo ver tanto a ele como as suas obras, esses líderes não o aceitaram como Messias e Rei-Designado. (Jo 19:15) Certa vez pediram um sinal "para tentá-lo" (Lu 11:16); também, alguns talvez fossem tomados de simples curiosidade a respeito dos sinais de Jesus, assim como Herodes. (Lu 23:8) Bem ao contrário, os discípulos que perguntaram sobre o sinal da presença de Cristo já o aceitavam como Messias e Rei. (Mt 16:16) Mas, Jesus dissera que o Reino 'não viria de modo impressionantemente observável'. (Lu 17:20) Por conseguinte (embora os apóstolos erroneamente acreditassem que o Reino seria estabelecido na terra; At 1:6), por ocasião da chegada do Reino eles não queriam ser como os líderes judeus — cegos para com a presença de Jesus. Portanto, eles não pediram que se realizasse ali mesmo um sinal milagroso, mas perguntaram qual seria o futuro sinal identificador.

Em resposta, Jesus descreveu um "sinal" composto, constituído por muitas evidências, inclusive guerras, terremotos, perseguição de cristãos e a pregação a respeito do Reino. (Mt 24:4-14, 32, 33) Estavam considerando a destruição de Jerusalém e seu templo quando os discípulos perguntaram a Jesus sobre o "sinal" (Lu 21:5-7), e a resposta dele forneceu profecias que se aplicavam a Jerusalém e à Judéia, cumpridas durante a vida deles. (Lu 21:20; Mt 24:15) Mas a sua resposta tratava também do estabelecimento do Reino de Deus e seus efeitos sobre toda a humanidade. — Lu 21:31, 35.

"O sinal do Filho do homem." Naquela mesma ocasião, Jesus disse aos seus discípulos: "Então aparecerá no céu o sinal do Filho do homem, e todas as tribos da terra se baterão então em lamento, e verão o Filho do homem vir nas nuvens do céu, com poder e grande glória." (Mt 24:30; Lu 21:27) Pouco antes deste comentário, ele lhes falara sobre o profeta Daniel. (Mt 24:15; Da 9:27; 11:31) E a expressão que Jesus usara ali torna evidente que ele se referia agora a Daniel 7:13, 14, onde a visão retratava "com as nuvens dos céus alguém semelhante a um filho de homem" obter acesso "ao Antigo de Dias" e receber um 'reino que não será arruinado'. Isto relacionava "o sinal do Filho do homem" com o tempo em que Jesus exerceria o poder do Reino. Jesus aplicou a expressão "Filho do homem" e a profecia de Daniel 7:13, 14, a si mesmo. — Mt 26:63, 64; Mr 14:61, 62.

Por volta de 96 EC, 26 anos depois da destruição de Jerusalém, João escreveu sobre coisas que ocorreriam no futuro, e ele observou em visão a Jesus Cristo vir "com as nuvens e todo olho o verá, e aqueles que o traspassaram". (Re 1:1, 7) Por isso, tanto essa declaração, sobre algo que havia de acontecer depois de 96 EC, como o que Cristo disse a respeito do "sinal do Filho do homem", referiam-se a Jesus como vindo nas nuvens e como visto por todos. (Veja NUVEM.) Deve-se, porém, notar que, embora o verbo grego ho·rá·o, "ver", usado em Mateus 24:30 e em Revelação (Apocalipse) 1:7 possa significar literalmente "ver um objeto, contemplar", pode também ser usado em sentido metafórico, de visão mental, de "discernir, perceber". — A Greek-English Lexicon (Léxico Grego-Inglês), de H. Liddell e R. Scott, revisado por H. Jones, 1968, p. 1245, col. 1.

Para comparar "milagres", "portentos" e "sinais", veja MILAGRES; PORTENTO.

SINAL DE AVISO. A palavra hebraica nes parece denotar uma haste ou estaca estacionária num lugar elevado; é usada tanto literal como figurativamente. Portanto, não denota um sinal para transmitir mensagens, tal como "um sinal de fumaça" (Jz 20:38, 40) ou "um sinal de fogo" (Je 6:1), para os quais se usam outras palavras hebraicas. Antes, tal haste podia servir de ponto de encontro onde se reuniriam pessoas ou exércitos. (Is 5:26; 13:2; 18:3; 30:17; 31:9; Je 4:6, 21; 50:2; 51:12, 27; compare isso com Sal 60:4 n.) Por exemplo, quando os israelitas, em certa ocasião, se queixaram do maná e da falta de água, Jeová os puniu por enviar serpentes venenosas entre eles. Depois de os israelitas mostrarem arrependimento, Jeová mandou que Moisés fizesse uma serpente e a colocasse numa haste de sinal (nes). "Moisés fez imediatamente uma serpente de cobre e a colocou numa haste de sinal; e acontecia que, quando alguma serpente mordia um homem e ele fitava os olhos na serpente de cobre, então ficava vivo." (Núm 21:5-9) Esta haste de sinal, evidentemente, ficava num lugar fixo e, sem dúvida, num ponto elevado, para ser visível aos israelitas mordidos por serpentes.

De modo similar, em 537 AEC, Jerusalém, cuja reconstrução fora predita, tornou-se um sinal de aviso que convidava os do restante judeu a deixar as terras às quais haviam sido dispersos e retornar à então desolada Jerusalém para reconstruir o templo. (Is 11:11, 12; compare isso com Is 49:22; 62:10, 11.) No entanto, esta profecia não se limitava a esta aplicação no sexto século. Isaías 11:10 reza: "E naquele dia terá de acontecer que haverá a raiz de Jessé posta de pé qual sinal de aviso para os povos." O apóstolo Paulo aplicou estas palavras a Cristo Jesus, aquele que governaria nações. (Ro 15:8, 12) Também, Jesus chamou a si mesmo de 'a raiz de Davi', filho de Jessé. (Re 22:16) Por conseguinte, o sinal de aviso é Cristo Jesus como Rei reinante, em pé no Monte Sião celestial. — Veja He 12:22; Re 14:1.

SINEAR. Nome original da região entre os rios Tigre e Eufrates, mais tarde chamada Babilônia. Foi ali que Ninrode assumiu o reinado sobre Babel, Ereque, Acade e Calné, e onde foi frustrada a construção da torre-templo de Babel. (Gên 10:9, 10; 11:2-8) Mais tarde, o rei de Sinear, Anrafel, foi um dos confederados que tomaram cativo a Ló, sobrinho de Abraão. (Gên 14:1, 9, 12) Nos dias de Josué, este território ainda era chamado pelo seu nome original. (Jos 7:21) É mencionado pelos profetas Isaías, Daniel e Zacarias. — Is 11:11; Da 1:2; Za 5:11; veja BABEL; BABILÔNIA N.º 2.

SINÉDRIO. Veja TRIBUNAL DE JUSTIÇA.

SINETA. Veja CAMPAINHA (SINETA).

SINETE. Veja ANEL, SELO.

SINEU. Ramo de descendentes de Canaã, e uma das 70 famílias pós-diluvianas. (Gên 10:15, 17; 1Cr 1:15) Diversos lugares libaneses de nome similar constam em vários escritos antigos, mas o lugar exato em que os sineus se fixaram permanece incerto.

SINIM, TERRA DE. País do qual, na época devida, conforme predito, os israelitas espalhados viriam para morar na sua pátria e para a restaurar. (Is 49:12) A referência ao N e ao O, no mesmo versículo, sugere que Sinim ficava ao S ou ao L da terra de Israel. Em vez de "Sinim", a Septuaginta grega reza "terra dos persas", que podia incluir Elão, chamada Si-nim no acadiano antigo. (Veja Is 11:11.) Os targuns e a Vulgata latina, por outro lado, rezam "[terra] ao sul". Certos peritos sugeriram a identificação com Siene (Ez 30:6), na extremidade meridional do Egito. Mas a localização de Sinim é incerta.

SINO. Veja CAMPAINHA (SINETA).

SINRATE [duma raiz que significa "guardar; vigiar"]. Cabeça duma família benjamita em Jerusalém; um dos nove filhos de Simei. — 1Cr 8:19-21, 28.

SINRI [duma raiz que significa "guardar; vigiar"].

1. Antepassado simeonita de um dos maiorais que expandiram o território da tribo nos dias de Ezequias. — 1Cr 4:24, 37-41.

2. Pai de Jediael, um dos poderosos de Davi, e provavelmente também de "Joa, seu irmão, o tizita". — 1Cr 11:26, 45.

3. Filho merarita de Hosa, incluído entre os porteiros levitas escolhidos por sortes para o posto ao O do santuário. Embora Sinri não fosse o primogênito de Hosa, seu pai o constituiu em cabeça da casa paterna. — 1Cr 26:10, 12, 13, 16.

4. Um dos levitas que ajudaram a eliminar os objetos imundos que Ezequias mandara tirar do templo; descendente de Elizafã. — 2Cr 29:12-16.

SINRITE. Mulher moabita cujo filho Jeozabade foi um dos assassinos do Rei Jeoás, de Judá. (2Cr 24:25, 26) O nome aparece no masculino em 2 Reis 12:21. — Veja SOMER N.º 2.

SINROM.

1. [Espinheiro]. Filho de Issacar. (Gên 46:13; 1Cr 7:1) Estava entre os "filhos de Israel que vieram ao Egito". Seus descendentes, os sinronitas, constituíam uma das famílias de Issacar. — Gên 46:8; Núm 26:23, 24.

2. [Duma raiz que significa "guardar; vigiar"]. Cidade cujo rei participou da confederação de cananeus setentrionais derrotados por Josué junto às águas de Merom. (Jos 11:1, 5, 8; 12:20; veja SINROM-MEROM.) Sinrom estava incluída no quinhão tribal de Zebulão. (Jos 19:10, 15) É identificada com Khirbet Sammuniyeh (Tel Shimron), a uns 8 km ao O de Nazaré.

SINROM-MEROM. Cidade, domínio dum rei derrotado por Josué. (Jos 12:7, 8, 20) Talvez seja o nome inteiro da cidade de Sinrom, ou possivelmente é uma referência a que o rei de Sinrom foi um dos derrotados junto às águas de Merom. (Jos 11:1, 5, 7, 8) Alguns manuscritos separam os nomes como se fossem duas cidades, Sinrom e Merom, mas em nenhuma outra parte se alude a mais um Merom.

SINRONITAS [De (Pertencentes a) Sinrom]. Descendentes de Sinrom, filho de Issacar. Por ocasião do segundo censo no ermo, os registrados desta família, junto com os das três outras famílias que constituíam esta tribo, ascenderam a 64.300. — Núm 26:23-25.

SINSAI [duma raiz que significa "sol"]. Escriba na administração de Reum, o principal funcionário do governo da província persa de "além do Rio", que incluía Jerusalém. Sinsai participou na escrita duma carta ao governante persa Artaxerxes, no empenho de fazer parar a obra de reconstrução dos judeus em Jerusalém. Artaxerxes mandou uma ordem de parar a obra, a qual foi reiniciada durante o reinado do seu sucessor, o Rei Dario Histaspes (Dario I da Pérsia). — Esd 4:8-24.

SÍNTIQUE [Afortunada (Bem-sucedida)]. Cristã de Filipos, elogiada por Paulo pela sua integridade, e que ele exortou a ser "da mesma mentalidade no Senhor" com uma irmã cristã chamada Evódia. (Fil 4:2, 3) Parece que o apóstolo deu este conselho porque havia algum desacordo entre as duas, conclusão que é apoiada por diversas traduções modernas. — BLH, BMD, CT, NTP.

SIOM [duma raiz que significa "desmoronar em ruínas"]. Cidade de Issacar. (Jos 19:17, 19) ʽAyun esh-Shaʽin, a pouca distância ao L de Nazaré, talvez preserve o nome de Siom e foi provisoriamente identificada com ela. Veja também SÍON, I; SÍON, II.

SÍON, I [Excelência]. Outro nome, talvez mais antigo, do monte Hermom. (De 4:48) Síon (não Sião), igual ao nome amorreu Senir, talvez indicasse determinada parte do monte Hermom. — Compare isso com De 3:9; 1Cr 5:23; Cân 4:8; veja HERMOM.

SÍON, II. Rei amorreu na época em que Israel se aproximava da Terra da Promessa. O reino de Síon estendia-se antigamente desde o vale da torrente do Jaboque, onde fazia fronteira com o domínio do Rei Ogue, para baixo pelo menos até o vale da torrente do Árnon, e desde o rio Jordão para o L em direção ao deserto. Sua capital era Hésbon, ao L da extremidade N do Mar Morto. (Núm 21:23, 24; Jos 12:2, 3) Síon se apoderara da terra de Moabe ao N do Árnon, e evidentemente dominava Midiã, porque os maiorais de Midiã são chamados de "caudilhos de Síon". (Núm 21:26-30; Jos 13:21) Quando Israel enviou mensageiros, pedindo a permissão de Síon para atravessar seu reino na estrada real e prometendo furtar nada dos amorreus, Síon negou a permissão e ajuntou seu exército para barrar Israel. Em Jaaz ele foi derrotado e morto. — Núm 21:21-24; De 1:3, 4; 2:24-35; 3:2, 6.

A importância da vitória de Israel sobre Síon pode ser vista em ela ser mencionada muitas vezes na história de Israel, junto com a derrota dos egípcios no Mar Vermelho. Moisés, Jefté, um salmista e os levitas pós-exílicos às vezes a usavam como exemplo encorajador das vitórias de Jeová a favor do seu povo fiel. (Núm 21:34; De 31:4; Jz 11:19-22; Ne 9:5, 22; Sal 135:9-12; 136:18, 19) Os relatos sobre ela induziram Raabe e os gibeonitas a fazer paz com Israel. (Jos 2:10; 9:9, 10) A terra de Síon foi dividida entre as tribos de Rubem e de Gade. — Núm 21:25, 31, 32; De 29:7, 8; Jos 13:8-10, 15-28.

SIOR [do egípcio, significando "Lagoa de Hórus"]. Evidentemente era o braço mais oriental do rio Nilo, na região do Delta. Sior, nas suas quatro ocorrências no texto hebraico, sempre é associado com o Egito. (Jos 13:3, "braço do Nilo"; 1Cr 13:5, "rio"; Is 23:3; Je 2:18) Embora alguns comentadores prefiram igualá-lo com "o vale da torrente do Egito" (Núm 34:5), usualmente identificado com o uádi el-ʽArish, ao SO de Gaza, Jeremias 2:18 e Isaías 23:3 parecem relacioná-lo mais de perto com o Egito e o Nilo, do que se daria com este último vale de torrente, ou uádi. Especialmente o texto de Isaías, com sua referência à "semente de Sior", parece aplicar-se mais a um rio perene (na·hár) do que a um sazonal (ná·hhal). Por estes motivos, o Sior, pelo menos nestes dois textos, é mais vezes identificado com o braço mais oriental do Nilo (depois de este se dividir em diversos braços ao chegar à região do Delta). Esta localização permitiria ser mencionado como estando "defronte [isto é, ao L ou para o L] do Egito", como em Josué 13:3.

Este último texto, porém, faz parte da descrição da terra que ainda havia de ser conquistada pelos israelitas depois das campanhas iniciais sob Josué, estendendo-se ao N "até a entrada de Hamate". (Jos 13:1-6) Os que argumentam a favor da identificação com o uádi el-ʽArish salientam que, em outro lugar, as fronteiras da herança de Israel são dadas como desde "o vale da torrente do Egito" para cima "até a entrada de Hamate". (Núm 34:2, 5, 7, 8) Em Josué 13:3, algumas traduções (BLH, NM), porém, consideram a referência ao Sior ("braço do Nilo", NM) como parte duma expressão parentética, que fornece uma nota histórica sobre até que ponto ao SO se estendera a terra dos cananeus em certa época. Nesta base, em vez de descrever o território a ser conquistado, o texto talvez simplesmente mostre que os cananeus antigamente residiam até onde se encontrava a fronteira mais oriental do Egito propriamente dito.

De modo similar, nota-se uma correspondência entre a referência a Davi congregar o povo de Israel desde Sior ("o rio do Egito", NM) até Hamate (quando se empenhou em levar a Arca do Pacto a Jerusalém) e a congregar o povo nos dias de Salomão, "desde a entrada de Hamate para baixo até o vale da torrente do Egito". (1Cr 13:5; 1Rs 8:65) A explicação disso talvez seja que, no último caso (no tempo de Salomão), o relato forneça as fronteiras práticas da moradia dos israelitas. A região entre o uádi el-ʽArish e o braço oriental do Nilo é um território basicamente desértico e de cerrado, de modo que este uádi, ou vale de torrente, apropriadamente marcava o limite do território próprio para ser habitado por israelitas, ao passo que no primeiro caso (o de Davi), a descrição talvez se refira a toda a região de atividades dos israelitas, região realmente dominada por Davi, que de fato se estendia até à fronteira do Egito.

Mesmo já antes de Davi, o Rei Saul perseguira os amalequitas até Sur, "que está defronte do Egito" (1Sa 15:7), e o domínio que Salomão recebeu de Davi é declarado como atingindo "o termo do Egito". (1Rs 4:21) Portanto, embora o território realmente repartido entre as tribos israelitas não se estendesse além do "vale da torrente do Egito", não parece que isto argumente contra a identificação de Sior com um "braço do Nilo", em Josué 13:3, e com "o rio do Egito", em 1 Crônicas 13:5.

A palavra "Sior" não ocorre em Gênesis 15:18, onde Jeová prometeu a Abraão a terra "desde o rio do Egito até o grande rio, o rio Eufrates". Portanto, aqui também surge a pergunta sobre se "o rio [forma de na·hár] do Egito" se refere a alguma parte do Nilo ou ao "vale da torrente [ná·hhal] do Egito" (o uádi el-ʽArish). A resposta dependeria de se Jeová ali descreveu a área realmente distribuída como herança tribal ou se referia a toda a região dominada pelo reino israelita na sua maior extensão. No primeiro caso, este texto provavelmente se aplica ao uádi el-ʽArish; no segundo, ao Sior. — Veja EGITO, VALE DA TORRENTE DO.

SIOR-LIBNATE. Eusébio e Jerônimo acreditavam que Sior-Libnate originalmente era o nome de dois lugares, Sior e Labanate. Todavia, trata-se evidentemente dum rio na fronteira de Aser. (Jos 19:24-26) Alguns geógrafos relacionam Sior-Libnate com o Nahr ez-Zerqa (Nahal Tanninim), que desemboca no mar Mediterrâneo a uns 10 km ao S de Dor.

SIPAI. Nome equivalente a Safe, homem dos nascidos dentre os refains. Foi golpeado por Sibecai. — 1Cr 20:4; 2Sa 21:18.

SIQUÉM [Ombro; Lombada [de Terra]].

1. Filho de Hamor, maioral heveu. (Gên 33:19; Jos 24:32) Depois de Jacó se estabelecer perto da cidade de Siquém (veja N.º 4), sua filha Diná começou a associar-se com as moças daquela cidade. O homem Siquém, descrito como "o mais honrado de toda a casa de seu pai", viu Diná e "deitou-se com ela e a violentou". Daí se enamorou de Diná e quis casar-se com ela. Mas os filhos de Jacó ficaram enfurecidos com o ocorrido, e, "com engano", disseram que podiam fazer arranjos matrimoniais apenas com homens circuncisos. Isto era satisfatório para Siquém e seu pai, Hamor, e eles convenceram os siquemitas a ser circuncidados. Todavia, antes de os varões de Siquém poderem recuperar-se da circuncisão, Simeão e Levi, filhos de Jacó, atacaram a cidade, matando Hamor, Siquém e todos os outros homens. — Gên 34:1-31.

2. Filho de Gileade, da tribo de Manassés. Siquém tornou-se cabeça de família dos siquemitas, que não devem ser confundidos com os habitantes cananeus de Siquém. — Núm 26:28, 30, 31; Jos 17:2.

3. Filho de Semida, da tribo de Manassés. — 1Cr 7:19.

4. Cidade antiga relacionada com Nablus, ou, mais precisamente, com a vizinha Tell Balata. (Sal 60:6; 108:7; FOTO, Vol. 1, p. 530) Situada na extremidade L do vale estreito entre o monte Gerizim e o monte Ebal, Tell Balata fica a uns 48 km ao N de Jerusalém. Acha-se ali disponível um bom suprimento de água, e logo ao L do lugar há uma planície fértil. Antigamente, Siquém dominava as estradas E-O e N-S que atravessavam a Palestina central. (Veja Jz 21:19.) Faltando-lhe a vantagem militar de ter sido construída num monte, a segurança da cidade dependia das suas fortificações. — Jz 9:35.

Quando Abrão (Abraão) entrou pela primeira vez na Terra da Promessa, ele viajou até "o lugar de Siquém" e acampou perto das árvores grandes de Moré, onde mais tarde construiu um altar. (Gên 12:6-9) Quase dois séculos depois, Jacó, ao retornar de Padã-Arã, armou o acampamento diante de Siquém e comprou ali algumas terras. Em represália à violação da sua irmã Diná por Siquém, filho de Hamor, filhos de Jacó — Simeão e Levi — mataram os homens dessa cidade. (Gên 33:18–34:31) Seguindo a orientação de Deus, Jacó partiu de Siquém, mas, antes disso, tomou todos os deuses estrangeiros e as arrecadas possuídos pelos da sua casa e os enterrou sob a árvore grande perto de Siquém. (Gên 35:1-4) Mais tarde, os filhos de Jacó pastaram seus rebanhos perto da cidade, podendo fazer isso com segurança, sem dúvida porque o "terror de Deus", que impediu que os povos vizinhos perseguissem Jacó, ainda tinha algum efeito sobre eles. — Gên 35:5; 37:12-17.

Quando os descendentes de Jacó, os israelitas, entraram na Terra da Promessa, depois da permanência de mais de dois séculos no Egito, eles enterraram os ossos de José "em Siquém, no pedaço de campo que Jacó havia adquirido dos filhos de Hamor". (Jos 24:32) Todavia Estêvão, na sua defesa perante os judeus, disse que José foi sepultado "no túmulo que Abraão havia comprado . . . dos filhos de Emor [Hamor], em Siquém". (At 7:16) A declaração de Estêvão talvez fosse elíptica. Preenchendo-se a elipse, a declaração de Estêvão poderia rezar: 'Jacó desceu ao Egito. E ele faleceu; e assim também os nossos antepassados, e foram transferidos para Siquém e colocados no túmulo que Abraão havia comprado por certo preço, com dinheiro de prata, [e no comprado] dos filhos de Hamor, em Siquém.' (At 7:15, 16) Existe também a possibilidade de que, visto Jacó ser neto de Abraão, a compra fosse atribuída a Abraão por ser cabeça patriarcal. Isto significaria o uso do nome do antepassado como aplicado e usado para os descendentes, do mesmo modo que os nomes Israel (Jacó) e outros foram mais tarde usados. — Veja Os 11:1, 3, 12; Mt 2:15-18.

Entre os quinhões tribais na Terra da Promessa, Siquém parece ter ficado no território de Manassés, situada a uns 3 km ao NO da cidade fronteiriça de Micmetate. (Jos 17:7) Visto que Siquém é descrita como situada "na região montanhosa de Efraim", talvez fosse uma cidade efraimita encravada no território manassita. (Jos 16:9; 1Cr 6:67) A cidade, junto com outras cidades efraimitas, foi depois designada aos levitas e recebeu condição sagrada como cidade de refúgio. (Jos 21:20, 21) Josué, pouco antes de morrer, reuniu todas as tribos de Israel em Siquém, incentivando-as a servir a Jeová. — Jos 24:1-29.

Embora os israelitas tivessem pactuado em Siquém sustentar a adoração verdadeira, os habitantes dessa cidade começaram a adorar Baal-Berite. (Jz 8:33; 9:4) Apoiaram também os esforços de Abimeleque (filho do juiz Gideão e da sua concubina siquemita) de se tornar rei. Mas, com o tempo, revoltaram-se contra o Rei Abimeleque. Ao esmagar a revolta, Abimeleque destruiu a cidade e semeou-a com sal, o que talvez fosse simbólico de desejar a desolação duradoura dela. — Jz 8:31-33; 9:1-49; compare isso com Sal 107:33, 34; veja ABIMELEQUE N.º 4; BAAL-BERITE.

Siquém foi mais tarde reconstruída. Que ela se tornou uma cidade importante é sugerido por Roboão ser empossado rei ali. (1Rs 12:1) Depois da divisão do reino, Jeroboão, primeiro rei do reino setentrional, mandou fazer construções em Siquém e evidentemente governou dali por algum tempo. (1Rs 12:25) Séculos mais tarde, em 607 AEC, após a destruição de Jerusalém pelos babilônios, homens de Siquém vieram a Jerusalém para adorar ali. — Je 41:5.

SIQUEMITAS [De (Pertencentes a) Siquém]. Os descendentes de Manassés através de Siquém. — Núm 26:29, 31.

SIQUEROM. Lugar na fronteira de Judá. (Jos 15:1, 11) Alguns o identificam provisoriamente com Tell el-Ful, a uns 5 km ao NO de Ecrom (Khirbet el-Muqanna' [Tel Miqne]), com a qual é mencionado no relato de Josué.

SIRÁ, CISTERNA DE. Abner encontrava-se junto à cisterna de Sirá, quando os mensageiros de Joabe o fizeram voltar a Hébron, onde depois foi assassinado. (2Sa 3:26, 27) Sirá talvez corresponda a 'Ain Sarah, uma fonte ou poço a uns 2,5 km ao NO de Hébron. Josefo afirma que Sirá, que ele chama de Besera, ficava a uns 4 km de Hébron. — Jewish Antiquities (Antiguidades Judaicas), VII, 34 (i, 5).

SIRACUSA. Cidade com um excelente porto, na costa SE da ilha de Sicília, hoje (em italiano) chamada Siracusa. Segundo Tucídides, no oitavo século AEC estabeleceu-se em Siracusa uma colônia grega.

O apóstolo Paulo ficou em Siracusa três dias, perto do fim da sua viagem a Roma, por volta de 59 EC. A parada ali talvez fosse necessária para o navio aguardar um vento favorável para a navegação. (At 28:12) De Siracusa, o navio de Paulo seguiu "costeando" e chegou a Régio, na ponta meridional da Itália. Desconhece-se o sentido exato desta expressão. É possível que o navio seguisse uma rota um tanto curva, longe da costa, para encontrar vento suficiente para encher suas velas. Ou talvez, "seguindo a costa", dirigiu-se a Régio. — At 28:13, CBC.

SÍRIA. Região limitada ao L pela Mesopotâmia, ao O pelas montanhas do Líbano, ao N pelos montes Tauro, e ao S pela Palestina e pelo deserto Arábico. A região é chamada Arã nas Escrituras Hebraicas. Estes limites são apenas gerais, visto que a influência e o domínio da Síria, nesta região, eram bastante flutuantes e instáveis na maior parte do tempo.

Nos Tempos Patriarcais. Nos tempos patriarcais, nossos únicos registros bíblicos sobre os sírios tratam de eventos em torno de Harã, envolvendo a vida da família de Rebeca, seu pai Betuel e seu irmão Labão, ambos descritos como sírios, ou, literalmente, arameus. (Gên 25:20; 28:5; 31:20, 24) Jacó foi descrito como "sírio em vias de perecer", por ter morado 20 anos na região em torno de Harã. Ali casou-se com duas filhas de Labão, e gerou filhos e filhas; sofreu também aflição no serviço de Labão. Outrossim, a mãe de Jacó era síria. — De 26:5; Gên 31:40-42; Os 12:12.

Período dos Juízes. Durante o período dos juízes, quando os israelitas se desviaram da adoração de Jeová, o rei sírio Cusã-Risataim subjugou-os por um período de oito anos. (Jz 3:7-10) Em outra ocasião, a influência da Síria mostrou-se bastante forte para fazer Israel adorar os deuses dela junto com outras deidades pagãs. — Jz 10:6.

Período dos Reis de Israel e de Judá. A partir do surgimento da monarquia em Israel, a Síria começou a ser militarmente agressiva, e em toda a história do reino setentrional, houve hostilidades entre os dois. O primeiro rei de Israel, Saul, travou guerra com os reis sírios de Zobá. (1Sa 14:47) Davi, ao se tornar rei, infligiu pesadas perdas ao exército do rei sírio Hadadezer. Ao mesmo tempo, tomou muito ouro, prata e cobre, que foram santificados para Jeová. Davi estabeleceu também guarnições em Damasco e compeliu os sírios a pagar tributo. (2Sa 8:3-12; 1Cr 18:3-8) Posteriormente, mais de 30.000 mercenários sírios, contratados pelos amonitas, em vez de lutarem, fugiram diante dos israelitas. No entanto, quando se trouxeram reforços sírios, seguiu-se uma batalha com Israel e os sírios sofreram grandes perdas, induzindo-os a pedir paz. — 2Sa 10:6-19; 1Cr 19:6-19.

Depois disso, certo rebelde sírio, chamado Rezom, que fugira de Hadadezer, fez-se rei de Damasco e tornou-se opositor de Israel em todos os dias de Salomão. (1Rs 11:23-25) Com estes acontecimentos, Damasco tornou-se a mais destacada cidade da Síria e foi por muito tempo reconhecida como "a cabeça da Síria", à qual se dirigiram as pronúncias de Jeová contra aquela nação. — Is 7:8; 17:1-3; Am 1:5.

Depois da divisão do reino de Israel. A história bíblica sobre os sírios depois da morte de Salomão e da divisão do reino fala principalmente dos êxitos e dos reveses nas suas relações com os israelitas, tanto do reino setentrional como do meridional. Eventos específicos são mencionados como ocorrendo durante os reinados de Asa (1Rs 15:18-20; 2Cr 16:2-4, 7), Acabe (1Rs 20:1-34; 22:3, 4, 29-35; 2Cr 18:10, 28-34), Jeorão, de Israel (2Rs 6:24–7:16; 8:28, 29; 9:14b, 15; 2Cr 22:5, 6), Jeoás, de Judá (2Rs 12:17, 18; 2Cr 24:23, 24), Jeoacaz (2Rs 13:3-7, 22), Jeoás, de Israel (2Rs 13:14-19, 24, 25), Jotão (2Rs 15:37, 38), Acaz (2Rs 16:5-9; 2Cr 28:5; Is 7:1-8; 9:12) e Jeoiaquim (2Rs 24:2). Era bem incomum, digno de menção especial, quando houve 'três anos sem guerra entre a Síria e Israel'. — 1Rs 22:1.

Eliseu, profeta de Jeová, teve certos contatos com os sírios; por exemplo, curou de lepra o chefe do exército sírio, Naamã (2Rs 5:1-20), e revelou a Hazael que ele seria rei da Síria em lugar de seu amo Ben-Hadade II. (2Rs 8:7-15) Em outra ocasião, quando um destacamento de sírios cercou Dotã para capturar Eliseu, o profeta primeiro pediu que Deus os ferisse com uma forma de cegueira, e então os conduziu a Samaria, onde a visão deles foi restabelecida; daí fez com que fossem alimentados e mandados para casa. (2Rs 6:8-23) Para obter mais detalhes sobre estas experiências dos sírios com o profeta, veja o artigo ELISEU.

Os sírios eram semitas, intimamente aparentados e associados com os israelitas. No entanto, no oitavo século AEC, já havia uma diferença suficientemente grande entre suas línguas, que o judeu comum não entendia aramaico. (2Rs 18:26-28; Is 36:11, 12; veja ARAMAICO [A Língua].) Também em sentido religioso, havia vastas diferenças entre os sírios politeístas e os judeus, e foi só quando estes últimos apostataram que a adoração dos deuses sírios foi permitida na terra de Israel. — Jz 10:6; 2Rs 16:10-16; 2Cr 28:22, 23.

No Primeiro Século EC. A Síria dos tempos apostólicos era a província romana que Pompeu anexou ao império em 64 AEC. Esta província abrangia grande parte do antigo território da Síria. O governador da Síria supervisionava também toda a Palestina. Na época do nascimento de Jesus, a Síria era regida pelo governador Quirino, legado do Imperador Augusto, que residia na capital da província e a terceira maior cidade do Império Romano, Antioquia, junto ao rio Orontes. (Lu 2:1, 2) Jesus restringiu seu ministério só à Palestina, mas os relatos sobre os seus maravilhosos milagres espalharam-se "por toda a Síria". — Mt 4:24.

Quando os cristãos em Jerusalém foram espalhados por causa da perseguição que se seguiu ao apedrejamento de Estêvão, alguns deles levaram as boas novas à capital da Síria, Antioquia. Primeiro foram os judeus ali que ouviram a mensagem, e depois os de outras nacionalidades. Tanto Barnabé como Paulo tiveram muito que ver com a edificação da congregação de Antioquia. Foi primeiro nesta cidade síria que "os discípulos, por providência divina, foram chamados cristãos". — At 11:19-26; Gál 1:21.

Por volta do ano 46 EC, quando houve uma grande fome durante o reinado do Imperador Cláudio, os cristãos em Antioquia e arredores mandaram, por meio de Barnabé e Paulo, uma subministração de socorros aos irmãos em Jerusalém. (At 11:27-30) A carta referente à circuncisão, enviada pelos apóstolos e anciãos em Jerusalém, foi dirigida especialmente às congregações em Antioquia, na Síria, e na Cilícia (região vizinha). (At 15:23) Durante os anos em que Paulo viajou extensamente como missionário, ele usava a Antioquia da Síria como base. — At 15:40, 41; 18:18; 20:3; 21:3; Gál 2:11.

SÍRION. Antigo nome sidônio do monte Hermom, chamado Senir pelos amorreus. (De 3:9) O nome Sírion ocorre em textos ugaríticos encontrados em Ras Xamra, na costa da Síria setentrional, corroborando assim a exatidão da Bíblia. Assim como Senir, Sírion talvez também designe uma parte específica do monte Hermom. (Veja 1Cr 5:23.) No Salmo 29:6, Sírion e Líbano são mencionados juntos. Por isso, sugeriu-se que Sírion talvez se refira à cordilheira do Antilíbano. — Veja HERMOM.

SIRO-FENÍCIA. Apelido dado em Marcos 7:26 a uma mulher não israelita, procedente das regiões de Tiro e de Sídon. Por ser uma combinação de "síria" e "fenícia", a expressão "siro-fenícia" provavelmente teve origem na situação de que a Fenícia fazia parte da província romana da Síria. A mulher siro-fenícia é também chamada de kha·na·nai·a (literalmente: cananeia; traduzido "fenícia" na NM), porque os primitivos habitantes da Fenícia descendiam de Canaã, e, com o tempo, "Canaã" passou a referir-se primariamente à Fenícia. (Mt 15:22 n) Ser ela chamada de "grega" provavelmente significa que era de ascendência grega. — Mr 7:26.

Não muito depois da Páscoa de 32 EC, esta mulher siro-fenícia chegou-se a Jesus Cristo, repetidas vezes pedindo que ele expulsasse um demônio da filha dela. No começo, Jesus recusou, dizendo: "Não é direito tirar o pão dos filhos e lançá-lo aos cachorrinhos." Para os judeus, os cachorros eram animais impuros. Mas, ao comparar os não judeus a "cachorrinhos", que podiam ser mantidos em casa, e não aos cães selvagens das ruas, Jesus abrandou a comparação. No entanto, o que Jesus disse parece ter servido para testar a mulher. Humildemente, ela admitiu: "Sim, Senhor; mas, realmente, os cachorrinhos comem as migalhas que caem da mesa dos seus amos." As palavras dela refletiam muita fé, e, por isso, sua filha foi curada. — Mt 15:21-28; Mr 7:24-30.

SIRTE [duma raiz que significa "arrastar"]. Nome grego de dois golfos situados dentro duma larga reentrância na costa N da África. O golfo ocidental (entre Túnis e Trípoli) era chamado de Sirte Menor (agora o golfo de Gabes). Um pouco ao L encontrava-se Sirte Maior, o atual golfo de Sidra. Os antigos marujos temiam ambos os golfos por causa dos seus traiçoeiros bancos de areia, que mudavam constantemente com as marés. A respeito das embarcações que ficavam presas nos bancos de areia, Estrabão, geógrafo do primeiro século EC, relatou: "É raro um barco escapar ileso." — Geography (Geografia), 17, III, 20.

Quando o apóstolo Paulo foi levado preso a Roma, o navio em que viajava foi apanhado por um vento tempestuoso do nordeste ao S de Creta. A tripulação, por isso, temia que o navio encalhasse em "Sirte", evidentemente referindo-se às areias movediças ou aos bancos de areia no golfo de Sidra. — At 27:14-17.

SISA. Pai de Eliorefe e Aijá, secretários de Salomão. — 1Rs 4:3; veja SERAÍAS N.º 2.

SISAQUE. Rei egípcio que nos registros egípcios é conhecido como Xexonque (I). Atribui-se em geral a Sisaque, considerado o fundador da "dinastia líbia", um governo de cerca de 21 anos. Seu filho Osorkon I sucedeu-o no trono.

Quando Jeroboão fugiu para o Egito, a fim de escapar da ira do Rei Salomão, Sisaque governava ali. (1Rs 11:40) Alguns anos depois, no quinto ano (993 AEC) de Roboão, sucessor de Salomão, Sisaque invadiu Judá com uma poderosa força de carros e cavaleiros. Capturou cidades fortificadas em Judá e depois chegou a Jerusalém. Mas Jeová não lhe permitiu arruinar Jerusalém, porque Roboão e os príncipes de Judá humilharam-se ao receberem uma mensagem do profeta Semaías. Sisaque, no entanto, despojou a cidade de seus tesouros. — 2Cr 12:1-12.

Existe evidência arqueológica a respeito da invasão da região da Palestina por Sisaque. Um fragmento de estela encontrado em Megido menciona Xexonque (Sisaque), possivelmente indicando que a estela foi erigida ali para comemorar a vitória dele. (Ancient Near Eastern Texts [Textos Antigos do Oriente Próximo], editado por J. Pritchard, 1974, pp. 263, 264.) Também, um relevo na parede dum templo em Karnak (a parte N da antiga cidade egípcia de Tebas) alista numerosas cidades e aldeias conquistadas por Sisaque. (FOTO, Vol. 1, p. 952; Supplements to Vetus Testamentum [Suplementos ao Velho Testamento], Leiden, 1957, Vol. IV, pp. 59, 60) Um considerável número de lugares que podem ser identificados com locais bíblicos ficavam no território do reino das dez tribos. Isto parece indicar que o objetivo da campanha de Sisaque não era ajudar o reino das dez tribos, mas obter controle sobre as importantes rotas comerciais, e com isso estender o poder e a influência do Egito.

SÍSERA.

1. Chefe de exército sob o rei cananeu Jabim. Sísera, que morava em Harosete, em vez de na cidade de Jabim, Hazor, destaca-se mais neste relato do que o Rei Jabim. Algum tempo depois de o juiz Eúde ter derrubado o domínio moabita, Sísera e Jabim passaram a oprimir Israel por 20 anos. — Jz 4:1-3; 1Sa 12:9.

Ao saber que Débora e Baraque tinham reunido os israelitas para lutar contra ele, Sísera ajuntou suas forças, inclusive seus 900 carros com foices de ferro, e confrontou Israel no vale da torrente do Quisom. Mas Jeová lutou contra Sísera e lançou todo o seu exército em confusão, o que resultou na derrota total deles. — Jz 4:7, 12-16, 23; 5:20, 21; Sal 83:9.

Seus carros atolaram (veja Jz 5:21), e Sísera fugiu a pé, chegando à tenda de Jael, esposa de Héber, o queneu, que estava em paz com Jabim. Ela o convidou a entrar. Exausto pela batalha e pela fuga, o fatigado Sísera, confiando na segurança da tenda de Jael, decidiu repousar. Jael deu a Sísera leite para beber, e ele pediu que ela ficasse de guarda. Depois de ele ter caído em profundo sono, ela furtivamente se aproximou dele e lhe martelou uma estaca de tenda nas têmporas, cravando-a no chão. Quando Baraque chegou, Jael lhe apresentou o inimigo tombado. (Jz 4:9, 17-22; 5:25-27) A mãe de Sísera e sua família esperaram em vão que ele retornasse com grandes despojos. — Jz 5:28-30.

2. Antepassado duma família de netineus que retornaram a Jerusalém junto com Zorobabel, em 537 AEC. (Esd 2:1, 2, 43, 53; Ne 7:55) Havia cativos de guerra incluídos entre os netineus, e embora alguns talvez tivessem sido tomados na ocasião em que Sísera (N.º 1) foi derrotado e talvez se tornassem servos no templo, não há nenhum motivo para se concluir que os netineus que retornaram de Babilônia fossem descendentes do Sísera do tempo de Baraque.

SISMAI. Descendente de Judá através de Jerameel e Sesã; filho de Eleasá e pai de Salum. (1Cr 2:3-5, 25, 34, 40) Sismai possivelmente viveu durante o período dos juízes.

SISTEMAS DE COISAS. A frase "sistema de coisas" expressa o sentido do termo grego ai·ón em mais de 30 das suas ocorrências nas Escrituras Gregas Cristãs.

Sobre o sentido de ai·ón, R. C. Trench declara: "Semelhante a [kó·smos, mundo], [ai·ón] tem um sentido primário e físico, e, então, sobreposto a este, um secundário e ético. No seu [sentido] primário, significa tempo, curto ou longo, duma duração ininterrupta; . . . mas, essencialmente, o tempo como condição sob a qual todas as coisas criadas existem, e a medida da existência delas . . . Assim, significando tempo, vem presentemente a significar tudo o que existe no mundo sob condições de tempo; . . . e, então, mais eticamente, o rumo e a corrente dos assuntos deste mundo." Em apoio deste último sentido, ele cita o erudito alemão C. L. W. Grimm como fornecendo a definição: "A totalidade do que se manifesta exteriormente no decurso do tempo." — Synonyms of the New Testament (Sinônimos do Novo Testamento), Londres, 1961, pp. 202, 203.

O sentido básico de ai·ón, portanto, é o de "idade", "era" ou "período de existência", e nas Escrituras muitas vezes denota um longo período (At 3:21; 15:18), inclusive um período sem fim, isto é, para sempre, eternidade. (Mr 3:29; 11:14; He 13:8) Quanto a estes sentidos, veja IDADE, ERA. Aqui, porém, consideraremos o sentido do termo tratado na última parte da definição citada no parágrafo precedente.

Como ajuda para entender este sentido, podemos recordar certos usos dos termos "idade", "era" e "época" em português. Falamos de idade, era ou época no sentido de um período da história, caracterizado por determinados desenvolvimentos ou acontecimentos, ou distinguido por alguma figura de destaque, ou por um aspecto ou particularidade típicos. Falamos da "Era dos Descobrimentos", referindo-nos ao tempo de Colombo, de Magalhães, de Cook e de outros descobridores marítimos, ou da "Era Feudal", da "Idade Média", da "Era Vitoriana", ou, mais recentemente, da "Era Espacial". Em cada caso, o que se destaca não é tanto o período de tempo em si, mas o aspecto ou as particularidades distintivas ou características desse período. Essas particularidades fornecem os fatores determinantes ou linhas de demarcação, que definem o começo, a duração e o fim do período. Sem eles, o período seria apenas tempo, não uma época, era ou idade específica.

Neste respeito, o Greek-English Lexicon (Léxico Grego-Inglês) de Liddell e Scott alista como uma das definições de ai·ón: "espaço de tempo claramente definido ou demarcado, época, era". (Revisado por H. Jones, Oxford, 1968, p. 45) E o Vine's Expository Dictionary of Old and New Testament Words (Dicionário Expositivo de Palavras do Velho e do Novo Testamento, de Vine), 1981, Vol. 1, p. 41) diz: "uma idade, era . . . significa um período de duração indefinida, ou um tempo encarado com relação ao que ocorre no período".

Por este motivo, quando as particularidades distintivas dum período, em vez de o próprio tempo, são a ideia mais destacada em determinado texto, ai·ón pode apropriadamente ser traduzida por "sistema de coisas" ou "situação". Que é aconselhável fazer isso é ilustrado em Gálatas 1:4, onde o apóstolo escreve: "Ele se entregou pelos nossos pecados, a fim de nos livrar do atual iníquo sistema de coisas [forma de ai·ón], segundo a vontade de nosso Deus e Pai." Algumas traduções vertem aqui ai·ón por "era" (CT, LEB) ou "século" (Al, BV, IBB, MC, So), mas é evidente que o sacrifício resgatador de Cristo não serviu para libertar os cristãos duma era, dum século ou dum espaço de tempo em si, porque continuaram a viver na mesma era como os demais da humanidade. Todavia, foram libertos da situação ou do sistema de coisas existente durante tal período e que o caracterizava. — Veja Tit 2:11-14.

O apóstolo escreveu aos cristãos em Roma: "Cessai de ser modelados segundo este sistema de coisas, mas sede transformados por reformardes a vossa mente." (Ro 12:2) Não era o período em si que determinava a moda, o padrão ou o modelo para as pessoas daquele tempo, mas eram as normas, as práticas, as maneiras, os costumes, os modos, os conceitos, os estilos e outras características que marcavam tal período de tempo. Em Efésios 2:1, 2, o apóstolo diz que aqueles a quem escreve tinham estado 'mortos nas suas falhas e pecados, nos quais andaram outrora segundo o sistema de coisas ["conforme a índole", BJ; "segundo o curso", Al] deste mundo'. Comentando este texto, The Expositor's Greek Testament (O Testamento Grego do Expositor; Vol. III, p. 283) mostra que o tempo não é o fator único ou primário aqui expresso por ai·ón. Em apoio de se traduzir ai·ón por "curso" diz: "Essa palavra transmite as três ideias de teor, desenvolvimento e duração limitada. O curso deste mundo mau é em si mesmo mau, e viver de acordo com ele é viver em transgressão e em pecados." — Editado por W. Nicoll, 1967.

Eras, Situações, Sistemas de Coisas. Diversos sistemas de coisas ou situações prevalecentes têm existido ou irão existir. Os produzidos por Deus mediante seu Filho, obviamente, são sistemas de coisas justos.

Por exemplo, por meio do pacto da Lei, Deus introduziu o que se poderia chamar de Época Israelita ou Judaica. Todavia, novamente, o que distinguia este período da História (no que se refere aos tratos de Deus com a humanidade) era a situação e as particularidades características produzidas pelo pacto da Lei. Estas particularidades incluíam um sacerdócio; um sistema de sacrifícios e regulamentos alimentares, bem como a adoração no tabernáculo e no templo, com festividades e sábados, que todos constituíam tipos e sombras proféticos; e também um sistema nacional, que passou a envolver um rei humano. Todavia, quando Deus predisse um novo pacto (Je 31:31-34), o antigo pacto, em certo sentido, ficou obsoleto, embora Deus permitisse ainda sua continuação por um período de séculos. (He 8:13) Daí, em 33 EC, Deus pôs fim ao pacto da Lei por, a bem dizer, pregá-lo na estaca de tortura de seu Filho. — Col 2:13-17.

Evidentemente, é por este motivo que Hebreus 9:26 diz de Cristo que ele "se manifestou uma vez para sempre, na terminação dos sistemas de coisas, para remover o pecado por intermédio do sacrifício de si mesmo". Não obstante, as particularidades distintivas daquela era ou época só chegaram ao fim completo em 70 EC, quando Jerusalém e seu templo foram destruídos, e o povo judeu foi espalhado. Esta calamidade — embora a última fortaleza judaica (em Massada) só caísse diante dos romanos três anos mais tarde, ou seja, em 73 EC — acabou permanentemente com o sacerdócio, os sacrifícios e a adoração no templo dos judeus, prescritos pela Lei; acabou também com o arranjo nacional judaico conforme estabelecido por Deus. Sem dúvida, foi por isso que o apóstolo, muitos anos depois da morte de Cristo, mas antes da devastação de Jerusalém pelos romanos, podia relatar certas coisas da história passada dos israelitas e dizer: "Ora, estas coisas lhes aconteciam como exemplos e foram escritas como aviso para nós, para quem já chegaram os fins dos sistemas de coisas." — 1Co 10:11; compare isso com Mt 24:3; 1Pe 4:7.

Jesus Cristo, por meio do seu sacrifício resgatador e do novo pacto que este validou, foi usado por Deus para introduzir um diferente sistema de coisas, que primariamente envolvia a congregação de cristãos ungidos. (He 8:7-13) Isso assinalou a abertura duma nova época, caracterizada pelas realidades prefiguradas pelo pacto da Lei. Introduziu um ministério de reconciliação, operações intensificadas do espírito santo de Deus, a adoração por meio dum templo espiritual com sacrifícios espirituais (1Pe 2:5), em vez de um templo e sacrifícios animais literais; e introduziu revelações do propósito de Deus, bem como uma relação com Deus, que significa um novo modo de vida para os que estão no novo pacto. Todas estas são particularidades que caracterizam o sistema de coisas introduzido por Cristo.

Era ou Sistema de Coisas Injusto. Quando Paulo escreveu a Timóteo sobre aqueles que eram "ricos no atual sistema de coisas", sem dúvida ele não se referia ao sistema de coisas, ou época, judaico, porque Timóteo, no seu ministério, não lidava apenas com cristãos judeus, mas também com muitos cristãos gentios, e não era provável que a riqueza de quaisquer desses cristãos gentios estivesse ligada com o sistema de coisas judaico. (1Ti 6:17) De modo similar, quando Paulo se referiu a Demas como alguém que o havia abandonado "porque amava o atual sistema de coisas", evidentemente ele não queria dizer que Demas amava o sistema de coisas judaico, mas, antes, que amava a situação prevalecente no mundo em geral e o modo mundano de vida. — 2Ti 4:10; compare isso com Mt 13:22.

O ai·ón, ou sistema de coisas, mundano estivera em existência mesmo antes da introdução do pacto da Lei. Continuou contemporâneo com o ai·ón daquele pacto, e durou além do fim do ai·ón, ou situação, introduzido pelo pacto da Lei. O ai·ón mundano evidentemente começou algum tempo após o Dilúvio, quando se desenvolveu um modo injusto de vida, caracterizado pelo pecado e pela rebelião contra Deus e Sua vontade. Por isso, Paulo podia também falar do "deus deste sistema de coisas" como cegando a mente dos incrédulos, uma evidente referência a Satanás, o Diabo. (2Co 4:4; compare isso com Jo 12:31.) Foram primariamente o domínio e a influência de Satanás que moldaram o ai·ón mundano e lhe deram suas particularidades e espírito distintivos. (Veja Ef 2:1, 2.) Comentando Romanos 12:2, The Expositor's Greek Testament (Vol. II, p. 688) diz: "Até mesmo o aparente ou superficial conformismo com um sistema controlado por tal espírito, quanto mais a real acomodação a seus modos de agir, seria fatal para a vida cristã." Esse ai·ón mundano havia de continuar por muito tempo depois dos dias do apóstolo.

Por exemplo, em Mateus 13:37-43, explicando uma parábola, Jesus disse que "o campo é o mundo [kó·smos]; . . . A colheita é a terminação dum sistema de coisas [uma forma de ai·ón] . . . Portanto, assim como o joio é reunido e queimado no fogo, assim será na terminação do sistema de coisas". Algumas traduções, tais como a versão Almeida, edição revista e corrigida, usam "mundo" para traduzir tanto kó·smos como ai·ón nestes versículos. No entanto, torna-se claro que o lavrador da ilustração não queimou o "campo", representando o "mundo", mas apenas o "joio". Portanto, o que acaba ou 'termina' não é o "mundo" (kó·smos), mas o "sistema de coisas" (ai·ón). A tradução de George Campbell verte estes trechos: "O campo é o mundo . . . a colheita é a terminação desta situação . . . assim será na terminação desta situação." — The Four Gospels (Os Quatro Evangelhos), Londres, 1834.

Jesus mostrou que o trigo representava os verdadeiros cristãos ungidos, discípulos genuínos, ao passo que o joio representava cristãos de imitação. Assim, a terminação do sistema de coisas, aqui representada pela época da colheita, neste caso não se referia à terminação do sistema de coisas judaico, nem à terminação da "situação" em que o "trigo" e o "joio" cresciam juntos sem perturbação, mas tem de referir-se ao fim do mesmo sistema de coisas mais tarde mencionado pelo apóstolo, isto é, o "atual sistema de coisas" marcado pela dominação satânica. (1Ti 6:17) O mesmo se dá com a ilustração adicional dada por Jesus a respeito da rede de arrasto e a separação dos peixes, retratando que "assim será na terminação do sistema de coisas: os anjos sairão e separarão os iníquos dos justos". (Mt 13:47-50) Foi sem dúvida nessas expressões de Jesus que os discípulos pensaram quando algum tempo depois fizeram a pergunta sobre 'o sinal da sua presença e da terminação do sistema de coisas'. (Mt 24:3) A promessa de Jesus, de estar com os discípulos na sua obra de fazer discípulos até a terminação do sistema de coisas, também tem de referir-se à terminação da situação resultante da dominação de Satanás. — Mt 28:19, 20.

Outros exemplos de textos em que ai·ón se refere a esse sistema iníquo de coisas incluem Lucas 16:8; 1 Coríntios 1:20; 2:6, 8; 3:18; Efésios 1:21.

O Vindouro Sistema de Coisas. Em Mateus 12:32 cita-se Jesus como dizendo que todo aquele que falar contra o espírito santo não será perdoado "nem neste sistema de coisas, nem no que há de vir". Isto poderia ser interpretado como referindo-se ao sistema de coisas judaico e ao então futuro sistema de coisas que Cristo introduziria por meio do novo pacto. Todavia, a evidência indica que ele se referiu em vez disso ao atual iníquo sistema de coisas e a um sistema de coisas que teria início na terminação daquele iníquo sistema de coisas. Referiu-se à mesma situação futura ao prometer que aqueles que abandonassem lar e família pela causa do Reino de Deus 'receberiam muitas vezes mais neste período de tempo [forma de kai·rós, significando "tempo designado"], e no vindouro sistema de coisas [forma de ai·ón] a vida eterna'. (Lu 18:29, 30) Este vindouro sistema de coisas assinalaria também o período em que pessoas teriam uma ressurreição com a oportunidade de serem contadas como filhos de Deus. (Lu 20:34, 35) Em Efésios 2:7 usa-se a forma plural de ai·ón ao se referir aos "vindouros sistemas de coisas", em que os cristãos ungidos hão de ter a extremamente rica demonstração da benignidade imerecida de Deus para com eles "em união com Cristo Jesus". (Veja Ef 1:18-23; He 6:4, 5.) Isto indica que haverá sistemas de coisas, ou situações, dentro do geral "vindouro sistema de coisas", assim como o sistema de coisas sob o pacto da Lei abrangia sistemas inter-relacionados, contemporâneos, conforme já se mostrou.

Deus 'Põe em Ordem' os "Sistemas de Coisas". Hebreus 11:3 declara: "Pela fé percebemos que os sistemas de coisas [plural de ai·ón] foram postos em ordem pela palavra de Deus, de modo que aquilo que se observa veio a existir das coisas que não aparecem." Muitos acham que o texto de Hebreus 1:2 seja paralelo no seu uso do plural de ai·ón; diz que Jeová falou por meio do seu Filho, Jesus Cristo, "a quem designou herdeiro de todas as coisas e por meio de quem fez os sistemas de coisas". O sentido específico da palavra grega ai·ón, nestes dois versículos, tem sido entendido de diversos modos.

Um modo de entendê-lo é considerar o termo grego como se referindo às particularidades distintivas ou características dum período de tempo. No capítulo 11 de Hebreus, o escritor inspirado considera como, pela fé, "os antigos receberam testemunho". (v 2) Daí, nas suas palavras seguintes, ele apresenta exemplos de homens fiéis na era antediluviana, na época patriarcal e no período da relação pactuada de Israel com Deus. Durante todos esses períodos distintos, e por meio dos acontecimentos causados, formados e realizados neles, Deus realizou seu propósito de eliminar a rebelião e de prover um meio para a reconciliação com si mesmo de humanos merecedores por meio de sucessivos "sistemas de coisas". De modo que esses homens da antiguidade tinham de ter e deveras tinham fé em que o Deus invisível realmente orientava os assuntos de maneira ordeira. Acreditavam que ele era o Produtor invisível dos diversos sistemas de coisas e que o objetivo que procuravam alcançar, "o cumprimento da promessa", era uma absoluta certeza no tempo devido de Deus. Em fé, aguardavam o adicional cumprimento do propósito de Deus, que incluía o sistema de coisas produzido pelo novo pacto baseado no sacrifício de Jesus. — He 11:39, 40; 12:1, 18-28.

Outra maneira de entender o uso de ai·ón em Hebreus 1:2 e 11:3 é o de que é um equivalente do termo grego kó·smos, no sentido de mundo ou universo, da totalidade das coisas criadas, incluindo o Sol, a Lua, as estrelas e a própria Terra. Este conceito evidentemente é apoiado pela declaração de Hebreus 11:3, de que "aquilo que se observa veio a existir das coisas que não aparecem". Este versículo também poderia ser tomado como referência ao relato da criação em Gênesis, que logicamente precederia às referências de Paulo a Abel (v. 4), Enoque (vv. 5, 6) e Noé (v. 7). De modo que Paulo talvez ampliasse sua definição de fé por referir-se à existência do Universo, que consiste em Sol, Lua e estrelas, como evidência clara de que há um Criador. — Veja Ro 1:20.

Nas Escrituras Hebraicas. O termo hebraico hhé·ledh é similar em sentido a ai·ón, referindo-se em alguns textos à 'duração da vida' (Jó 11:17; Sal 39:5; 89:47), mas, em outros casos, às particularidades do período de tempo parecem ser a coisa principal indicada, permitindo a tradução "sistema de coisas". (Sal 17:13, 14; 49:1) Algumas traduções usam a palavra "mundo" para verter este termo nestes últimos textos, mas tal tradução de certo modo vai além do sentido subentendido, a saber, o de tempo continuado.

SISTRO. A palavra hebraica mena·ʽan·ʽím (sistros) ocorre apenas uma vez nas Escrituras e parece derivar duma raiz que significa "chocalhar", isto é, mover para a frente e para trás. (2Sa 6:5) Visto que o sistro é caracteristicamente tocado desta maneira, sendo como que um chocalho musical, muitos lexicógrafos e historiadores de música são a favor desta tradução, adotada também por diversos tradutores da Bíblia. — BMD; BV; CBC; MC; NM; PIB; So.

O sistro consistia geralmente numa pequena armação oval de metal presa a um cabo. O instrumento completo variava de uns 20 a 46 cm de comprimento, segundo se vê nos espécimes antigos existentes, bem como em representações em monumentos egípcios e outros. A armação segurava frouxamente pequeno número de hastes horizontais que, ao serem chacoalhadas, produziam sons agudos, ressonantes. As hastes horizontais talvez fossem de comprimentos diferentes, para produzir uma variedade de sons. Outro tipo de sistro vinha equipado com anéis nas hastes, e estes anéis retiniam quando agitados. Embora sua única ocorrência bíblica seja na descrição duma grande celebração, fontes tradicionais judaicas declaram que o sistro era também tocado em ocasiões tristes.

SITIM [Acácias].

1. Lugar nas planícies desérticas de Moabe, até o qual o acampamento dos israelitas se estendia desde Bete-Jesimote. (Núm 25:1; 33:49; Jos 2:1) Evidentemente, "Sitim" era uma forma abreviada do nome Abel-Sitim (Curso de Água das Acácias). Alguns o têm identificado com Tell el-Kefrein, uma colina baixa a uns 8 km ao NE de Bete-Jesimote (Tell el-ʽAzeimeh, perto do canto NE do Mar Morto). Todavia, prefere-se Tell el-Hammam, um lugar maior ocupando uma posição estratégica e que fica a 2,5 km ao L de Tell el-Kefrein.

Jeová, por meio do seu profeta Miqueias, lembrou aos israelitas o que fizera a favor deles: "Ó meu povo, por favor, lembra-te do que Balaque, rei de Moabe, aconselhou e o que Balaão, filho de Beor, lhe respondeu. Procedia de Sitim, até Gilgal, com o fim de que se conhecessem os atos justos de Jeová." (Miq 6:5) Enquanto Israel estava acampado nas planícies de Moabe, que incluíam Sitim, Jeová frustrou a tentativa de Balaque, de fazer Balaão amaldiçoar os israelitas; bloqueou os esforços moabitas de arruinar Seu povo. Habilitou Israel a derrotar os midianitas, que, junto com os moabitas, haviam tomado parte em fazer com que muitos israelitas se envolvessem em imoralidade e idolatria. Jeová levara Israel através do Jordão por meio dum milagre, e em Gilgal 'rolou de cima deles o vitupério do Egito'. — Núm 22:4–25:8; 31:3-11, 48-50; Jos 3:1, 14-17; 5:9.

2. Caso seja o nome de determinado vale de torrente, "o vale da torrente das Acácias" (Sitim) talvez seja o curso inferior do vale da torrente do Cédron. — Jl 3:18.

SÍTIO, ATERRO DE. Veja ESCARPA.

SITNA [Acusação]. Poço escavado pelos servos de Isaque na vizinhança de Gerar e de Reobote. Foi chamado de Sitna por causa da disputa sobre ele com os pastores de Gerar. (Gên 26:19-22) Talvez ficasse em algum lugar no uádi Ruheibe (Nahal Shunera), a uns 30 km ao SO de Berseba. Mas, desconhece-se a localização exata de Sitna.

SITRAI [Oficial]. Nativo de Sarom, encarregado das manadas de Davi que pastavam ali. — 1Cr 27:29.

SITRI [[Jeová] É Meu Esconderijo; [Jeová] É o Lugar de Me Ocultar]. Levita que morava no Egito durante a escravidão dos israelitas; filho de Uziel e primo de Moisés. — Êx 6:18, 20, 22.

SIVÃ. Nome pós-exílico do terceiro mês lunar judaico do calendário sagrado, mas do nono mês do calendário secular. (Est 8:9; 1Cr 27:5; 2Cr 31:7) Corresponde a parte de maio e parte de junho. Não há certeza do significado do nome.

Sivã ocorre no fim da primavera do hemisfério setentrional, quando ali se aproxima o calor intenso do verão. Era a época da colheita do trigo e também o início da estação seca, que continuaria até por volta de meados de outubro, ou o mês lunar de bul. (Êx 34:22; Pr 26:1) Sem dúvida, foi o mês em que o profeta Samuel orou a Jeová e em que ocorreu um temporal fora de época, causando grande temor entre o povo. (1Sa 12:16-19) Os "figos temporãos" que surgiam nas árvores perto do fim dos meses invernais já estavam então plenamente maduros. (Is 28:4; Je 24:2) Na região costeira do Mediterrâneo, também era a época da maçã. — Cân 2:3; compare isso com Jl 1:10-12.

A Festividade das Semanas, ou Pentecostes, era celebrada no dia seis de sivã, acompanhada da oferta das primícias da colheita do trigo, no 50.º dia depois da oferta das primícias da colheita da cevada. (Êx 34:22; Le 23:15-21) Foi no dia seis de sivã do ano 33 EC que se derramou o espírito santo sobre o grupo de cerca de 120 discípulos reunidos numa sala de sobrado em Jerusalém. Foi das multidões reunidas na cidade para a festividade que procediam as 3.000 pessoas batizadas naquele dia. — At 1:15; 2:1-42.

Foi no mês de sivã que o Rei Asa celebrou uma grande festividade depois da sua reforma na erradicação da religião falsa em Judá, em Jerusalém e em outras regiões. (2Cr 15:8-10) Os velozes correios enviados pelo Rei Assuero, para entregar a mensagem que concedia aos judeus o direito de se defender no dia 13 de adar, foram enviados quase nove meses antes, no dia 23 de sivã, aos 127 distritos jurisdicionais do Império Persa, que se estendia desde a Índia até a Etiópia. — Est 8:9-14.

SIZA. Pai rubenita de Adina, guerreiro de Davi. — 1Cr 11:26, 42.

SÔ. Rei egípcio contemporâneo de Oseias, último rei do reino de dez tribos de Israel. Quando Oseias conspirou com Sô contra Salmaneser V e deixou de pagar tributo à Assíria, Oseias foi encarcerado. (2Rs 17:3, 4) Há muita incerteza nas tentativas de identificar Sô com secularmente conhecidos governantes egípcios desse período geral (tais como Osorkon IV ou Chabaca), especialmente em vista da incerteza a respeito da cronologia egípcia. — Veja CRONOLOGIA.

SOA. Povo ou região mencionada junto com Pecode e Coa como fornecendo forças militares que Jeová traria contra a infiel Jerusalém. — Ez 23:4, 22, 23.

SOÃO [Ônix]. Levita merarita envolvido na reorganização dos serviços levíticos por Davi; filho de Jaazias. — 1Cr 24:27, 31.

SOBABE [duma raiz que significa "retornar; trazer de volta"].

1. Filho de Calebe, irmão de Jerameel; da tribo de Judá. — 1Cr 2:9, 18.

2. Filho de Davi e Bate-Seba. — 2Sa 5:14; 1Cr 3:5; 14:4.

SOBAI. Fundador levita duma família de porteiros do templo. Alguns dos seus descendentes retornaram do exílio babilônico junto com Zorobabel. — Esd 2:1, 2, 40, 42; Ne 7:45.

SOBAL.

1. Xeque horeu, filho de Seir, e ele mesmo pai de cinco filhos. — Gên 36:20, 23, 29; 1Cr 1:38, 40.

2. Filho de Hur, descendente de Calebe, da tribo de Judá. Atribuem-se diversos descendentes a Sobal, inclusive os habitantes de Quiriate-Jearim e de outras cidades. — 1Cr 2:50, 52, 53; 4:1, 2.

SOBAQUE. Chefe do exército do rei sírio Hadadezer. Ao comandar um exército de sírios contratados pelos amonitas para lutar contra Davi, Sobaque perdeu a batalha e a vida, junto com 40.700 dos seus homens. (2Sa 10:15-19) Seu nome é grafado Sofaque em 1 Crônicas 19:16, 18.

SOBEQUE. Israelita ou cabeça de família representada na atestação do "arranjo fidedigno" apresentado durante a governadoria de Neemias. — Ne 9:38; 10:1, 14, 24.

SOBERANIA. Supremacia em governo ou poder; domínio ou governo dum senhor, rei, imperador, ou semelhante; o poder que, em última análise, determina o governo dum Estado.

Nas Escrituras Hebraicas, a palavra 'Adho·naí ocorre frequentemente, e a expressão 'Adho·naí Yehwíh, 285 vezes. 'Adho·naí é o plural de 'ad·hóhn, que significa "senhor; amo". A forma plural, 'adho·ním, pode ser aplicada a homens no simples plural, tal como "senhores" ou "amos". Mas o termo 'Adho·naí sem um sufixo adicional sempre é usado nas Escrituras com referência a Deus, usando-se o plural para indicar excelência ou majestade. Os tradutores mais frequentemente o vertem por "Senhor". Quando ocorre junto com o nome de Deus ('Adho·naí Yeh·wíh), por exemplo, como no Salmo 73:28, a expressão é vertida "Senhor Deus" (BV); "Senhor Deus" (Al, IBB, So [72:28]); "SENHOR Deus" (ALA); "Senhor Jeová" (VB, Yg); e "Soberano Senhor Jeová" (NM). Nos Salmos 47:9; 138:5; 150:2, a tradução de Moffatt, em inglês, usa a palavra "soberano", mas não para traduzir 'Adho·naí.

A palavra grega de·spó·tes refere-se a alguém que possui autoridade suprema, ou posse absoluta e poder sem limite. (Vine's Expository Dictionary of Old and New Testament Words [Dicionário Expositivo de Palavras do Velho e do Novo Testamento, de Vine], 1981, Vol. 3, pp. 18, 46) É traduzida "senhor", "amo", "dono", e quando usada para se dirigir a Deus é vertida em Lucas 2:29 "Senhor" (Al, ALA, BV, CBC, e outras), e "Soberano Senhor" (BJ, BMD, NM); em Atos 4:24 e em Revelação (Apocalipse) 6:10, "Soberano Senhor" (ALA, NM), e no último texto, "Soberano" (TEB). Neste último texto, as versões Knox, The New English Bible, Moffatt e Revised Standard Version rezam "Soberano Senhor"; a tradução de Young e a Kingdom Interlinear, "amo".

Assim, embora os textos hebraico e grego não tenham uma palavra qualificadora, separada, para "soberano", o sentido está contido nas palavras 'Adho·naí e de·spó·tes quando usadas nas Escrituras como aplicadas a Jeová Deus, indicando esta qualificação a excelência do seu domínio como senhor.

A Soberania de Jeová. Jeová Deus é o Soberano do Universo ("soberano do mundo", Sal 47:9, Mo) por ele ser o Criador, por sua Divindade e sua supremacia como Todo-Poderoso. (Gên 17:1; Êx 6:3; Re 16:14) Ele é o Dono de tudo e a Fonte de toda autoridade e poder, o Governante Supremo em governo. (Sal 24:1; Is 40:21-23; Re 4:11; 11:15) O salmista cantou a respeito dele: "Jeová é que estabeleceu firmemente seu trono nos próprios céus; e seu próprio reinado tem mantido domínio sobre tudo." (Sal 103:19; 145:13) Os discípulos de Jesus oraram, dirigindo-se a Deus: "Soberano Senhor, tu és Aquele que fez o céu e a terra." (At 4:24, NM; ALA) Para a nação de Israel, o próprio Deus constituía todos os três ramos de governo, o judicativo, o legislativo e o executivo. O profeta Isaías disse: "Jeová é o nosso Juiz, Jeová é o nosso Legislador, Jeová é o nosso Rei; ele mesmo nos salvará." (Is 33:22) Moisés, em Deuteronômio 10:17, fornece uma notável descrição de Deus como Soberano.

Jeová, na sua posição soberana, tem o direito e a autoridade de delegar responsabilidades de governo. Davi foi constituído rei de Israel, e as Escrituras falam do 'reino de Davi' como se fosse o reino dele. Mas, Davi reconheceu que Jeová era o grande Governante Soberano, dizendo: "Tuas, ó Jeová, são a grandeza, e a potência, e a beleza, e a excelência, e a dignidade; pois teu é tudo nos céus e na terra. Teu é o reino, ó Jeová, que te ergues como cabeça sobre todos." — 1Cr 29:11.

Governantes Terrestres. Os governantes das nações da Terra exercem seu domínio limitado pela tolerância ou permissão do Soberano Senhor Jeová. Que os governos políticos não recebem sua autoridade de Deus, isto é, que não atuam em razão de uma concessão de autoridade ou poder por parte dele, é demonstrado em Revelação 13:1, 2, onde se diz que a fera de sete cabeças e dez chifres recebe "seu poder e seu trono, e grande autoridade" do Dragão, Satanás, o Diabo. — Re 12:9; veja ANIMAIS SIMBÓLICOS.

Assim, embora Deus tenha permitido o surgimento e o desaparecimento de diversos governos de homens, um dos mais poderosos reis deles, depois de ter visto por experiência própria a demonstração da realidade da soberania de Jeová, sentiu-se induzido a dizer: "Seu domínio é um domínio por tempo indefinido e seu reino é para geração após geração. E todos os habitantes da terra são considerados como simplesmente nada, e ele age segundo a sua própria vontade entre o exército dos céus e os habitantes da terra. E não há quem lhe possa deter a mão ou quem lhe possa dizer: 'Que estás fazendo?'" — Da 4:34, 35.

Por conseguinte, enquanto for da vontade de Deus permitir que governos humanos exerçam domínio, aplica-se a injunção do apóstolo Paulo: "Toda alma esteja sujeita às autoridades superiores, pois não há autoridade exceto por Deus; as autoridades existentes acham-se colocadas por Deus nas suas posições relativas." O apóstolo passa então a salientar que, quando tais governos agem para punir alguém que faz o que é mau, a 'autoridade superior' ou o governante (embora não seja adorador fiel de Deus) atua indiretamente como ministro de Deus nesta qualidade específica, expressando furor para com o que pratica o que é mau. — Ro 13:1-6.

Quanto a tais autoridades terem sido "colocadas por Deus nas suas posições relativas", as Escrituras indicam que isto não significa que Deus constituiu esses governos ou que ele os apoia. Antes, ele os tem manobrado para servir o seu bom propósito com relação à Sua vontade referente aos Seus servos na Terra. Moisés disse: "Quando o Altíssimo deu às nações uma herança, quando separou uns dos outros os filhos de Adão, passou a fixar o termo dos povos com respeito ao número dos filhos de Israel." — De 32:8.

O Filho de Deus Como Rei. Depois da derrubada do último rei a sentar-se no "trono de Jeová", em Jerusalém (1Cr 29:23), o profeta Daniel recebeu uma visão que descrevia a futura designação do próprio Filho de Deus como Rei. A posição de Jeová destaca-se claramente quando ele, como o Antigo de Dias, concede o domínio ao seu Filho. O relato declara: "Continuei observando nas visões da noite e eis que aconteceu que chegou com as nuvens dos céus alguém semelhante a um filho de homem; e ele obteve acesso ao Antigo de Dias, e fizeram-no chegar perto perante Este. E foi-lhe dado domínio, e dignidade, e um reino, para que todos os povos, grupos nacionais e línguas o servissem. Seu domínio é um domínio de duração indefinida, que não passará, e seu reino é um que não será arruinado." (Da 7:13, 14) A comparação deste texto com Mateus 26:63, 64, não deixa dúvida de que o "filho de homem" da visão de Daniel é Jesus Cristo. Ele obtém acesso à presença de Jeová e recebe domínio. — Veja Sal 2:8, 9; Mt 28:18.

Desafiada a Soberania de Jeová. A iniquidade tem existido por quase todos os anos em que o homem está na Terra, segundo a cronologia bíblica. Toda a humanidade tem morrido, e os pecados e as transgressões contra Deus se têm multiplicado. (Ro 5:12, 15, 16) Visto que a Bíblia indica que Deus deu ao homem um começo perfeito, surgiram as perguntas: Como se iniciou o pecado, a imperfeição e a iniquidade? E por que permitiu o Deus Todo-Poderoso essas coisas durante séculos? As respostas estão num desafio lançado contra a soberania de Deus, suscitando uma questão predominante que envolve a humanidade.

O que Deus deseja dos que o servem. Jeová Deus, por palavras e atos, no decorrer dos séculos, tem provado que ele é Deus de amor e de benignidade imerecida, exercendo perfeita justiça e julgamento, e concedendo misericórdia aos que procuram servi-lo. (Êx 34:6, 7; Sal 89:14; veja JUSTIÇA; MISERICÓRDIA.) Tem expressado benignidade até mesmo para com os ingratos e iníquos. (Mt 5:45; Lu 6:35; Ro 5:8) Deleita-se em sua soberania ser administrada com amor. — Je 9:24.

Por conseguinte, o tipo de pessoas que ele deseja no seu Universo são aquelas que o servem por amor a ele e às suas excelentes qualidades. Têm de amar primeiro a Deus e, segundo, seu próximo. (Mt 22:37-39) Têm de amar a soberania de Jeová; têm de desejá-la e preferi-la a qualquer outra. (Sal 84:10) Têm de ser pessoas que, mesmo que lhes fosse possível tornar-se independentes, preferem a Soberania Dele, porque sabem que Seu governo é muitíssimo mais sábio, mais justo e melhor do que qualquer outro. (Is 55:8-11; Je 10:23; Ro 7:18) Tais pessoas servem a Deus não meramente por terem medo da Sua onipotência, nem por motivos egoístas, mas por amor à Sua justiça, julgamento e sabedoria, e por terem conhecimento da grandiosidade e benevolência de Jeová. (Sal 97:10; 119:104, 128, 163) Exclamam assim como o apóstolo Paulo: "Ó profundidade das riquezas, e da sabedoria, e do conhecimento de Deus! Quão inescrutáveis são os seus julgamentos e além de pesquisa são os seus caminhos! Pois, 'quem veio a conhecer a mente de Jeová ou quem se tornou o seu conselheiro'? Ou: 'Quem primeiro lhe deu, de modo que se lhe tenha de pagar de volta?' Porque todas as coisas são dele, e por ele, e para ele. Glória a ele para sempre. Amém." — Ro 11:33-36.

Tais pessoas chegam a conhecer a Deus, e conhecê-lo realmente significa amá-lo e apegar-se à Sua soberania. O apóstolo João escreve: "Todo aquele que permanece em união com ele não pratica o pecado; ninguém que pratica o pecado o tem visto, nem o chegou a conhecer." E: "Quem não amar, não chegou a conhecer a Deus, porque Deus é amor." (1Jo 3:6; 4:8) Jesus conhecia o Pai melhor do que qualquer outro. Ele disse: "Todas as coisas me foram entregues por meu Pai, e ninguém conhece plenamente o Filho, exceto o Pai, tampouco há quem conheça plenamente o Pai, exceto o Filho e todo aquele a quem o Filho estiver disposto a revelá-lo." — Mt 11:27.

Deixaram de cultivar amor e apreço. Por conseguinte, quando se lançou o desafio contra a soberania de Jeová, foi lançado por alguém que, embora usufruísse os benefícios da soberania de Deus, não apreciava e não desenvolvia o conhecimento de Deus para assim aprofundar seu amor a Ele. Tratava-se de uma criatura espiritual de Deus, um anjo. Quando o casal humano, Adão e Eva, foi colocado na Terra, esta criatura viu uma oportunidade para empreender um ataque contra a soberania de Deus. Primeiro, faria uma tentativa (que se mostrou bem-sucedida) para desviar Eva, depois Adão, da sujeição à soberania de Deus. Esperava estabelecer uma soberania rival.

Quanto a Eva, a pessoa a quem primeiro se dirigiu, ela certamente não tinha apreço pelo seu Criador e Deus, e não tinha aproveitado a oportunidade de conhecê-lo. Escutou a voz de alguém inferior, ostensivamente a serpente, na realidade, porém, o anjo rebelde. A Bíblia não indica nenhuma surpresa da parte dela de ouvir a serpente falar. Diz que a serpente era "o mais cauteloso de todos os animais selváticos do campo, que Jeová Deus havia feito". (Gên 3:1) Não se declara se a serpente comeu do fruto proibido da "árvore do conhecimento do que é bom e do que é mau" e depois parecia ter-se tornado sábia, capaz de falar. O anjo rebelde, usando a serpente para falar à mulher, ofereceu (como ela supunha) a oportunidade de se tornar independente, de 'ser como Deus, sabendo o que é bom e o que é mau', e conseguiu convencê-la de que ela não morreria. — Gên 2:17; 3:4, 5; 2Co 11:3.

Adão, que tampouco mostrou apreço e amor por seu Criador e Provisor, quando confrontado com rebelião na sua família, e que não mostrou nenhuma lealdade para defender seu Deus, quando posto à prova, sucumbiu à persuasão de Eva. Ele evidentemente perdeu a fé em Deus e na capacidade Dele de fornecer todas as boas coisas ao Seu servo leal. (Veja o que Jeová disse a Davi depois de este pecar com Bate-Seba, em 2Sa 12:7-9.) Adão parece também ter-se ressentido de Jeová, conforme indica sua resposta quando interrogado sobre o seu ato errado: "A mulher que me deste para estar comigo, ela me deu do fruto da árvore e por isso comi." (Gên 3:12) Ele não acreditou na mentira da Serpente de que ele não morreria, como Eva acreditara, mas tanto Adão como Eva deliberadamente adotaram o proceder de autodeterminação, de rebelião contra Deus. — 1Ti 2:14.

Adão não podia dizer: "Estou sendo provado por Deus." Antes, passou a vigorar o princípio: "Cada um é provado por ser provocado e engodado pelo seu próprio desejo. Então o desejo, tendo-se tornado fértil, dá à luz o pecado; o pecado, por sua vez, tendo sido consumado, produz a morte." (Tg 1:13-15) Assim, os três rebeldes — o anjo, Adão e Eva — usaram o livre-arbítrio de que Deus os dotara, passando da condição sem pecado para um proceder de pecado deliberado. — Veja PECADO; PERFEIÇÃO.

O ponto em questão. O que foi questionado ali? Quem foi vituperado e difamado por este desafio do anjo que mais tarde foi chamado de Satanás, o Diabo, desafio que Adão apoiou com seu ato rebelde? Foi o fato da supremacia de Jeová, a existência da sua soberania? Estava em perigo a soberania de Deus? Não, porque Jeová tem suprema autoridade e poder, e ninguém no céu ou na Terra pode tirar-lhe isso. (Ro 9:19) Portanto, o que foi desafiado deve ter sido a justeza, o merecimento e a justiça da soberania de Deus — se a soberania dele era, ou não era, exercida de modo digno, justo e nos melhores interesses dos seus súditos. Um indício disso é a maneira de se falar a Eva: "É realmente assim que Deus disse, que não deveis comer de toda árvore do jardim?" A serpente insinuava assim que isso era inacreditável — que Deus era indevidamente restritivo, negando ao casal humano algo a que tinha pleno direito. — Gên 3:1.

O que era a "árvore do conhecimento do que é bom e do que é mau"?

Adão e Eva expressaram sua rebelião por tomarem do fruto da "árvore do conhecimento do que é bom e do que é mau". O Criador, como Soberano Universal, agia inteiramente no seu direito de estabelecer a lei a respeito da árvore, porque Adão, sendo pessoa criada, não soberano, tinha limitações e precisava reconhecer isso. Para haver universal paz e harmonia, cabia a todas as criaturas racionais reconhecer e apoiar a soberania do Criador. Adão demonstraria seu reconhecimento disso por se refrear de comer do fruto daquela árvore. Como prospectivo pai dos que encheriam a Terra, tinha de mostrar-se obediente e leal, mesmo na mínima coisa. O princípio envolvido era: "Quem é fiel no mínimo, é também fiel no muito, e quem é injusto no mínimo, é também injusto no muito." (Lu 16:10) Adão tinha a capacidade para tal obediência perfeita. Como é evidente, não havia nada de intrinsecamente ruim no próprio fruto da árvore. (A coisa proibida não eram as relações sexuais, porque Deus mandara o casal 'encher a terra'. [Gên 1:28] Era o fruto duma árvore mesmo, conforme a Bíblia diz.) O que a árvore representava é bem expresso numa nota ao pé da página sobre Gênesis 2:17 em A Bíblia de Jerusalém (1987):

"Este conhecimento é um privilégio que Deus se reserva e que o homem usurpa pelo pecado (3:5, 22). Não se trata, pois, nem da onisciência, que o homem decaído não possui, nem do discernimento moral, que o homem inocente já tinha e que Deus não pode recusar à sua criatura racional. É a faculdade de decidir por si mesmo o que é bem e o que é mal, e de agir consequentemente: reivindicação de autonomia moral pela qual o homem nega seu estado de criatura (cf. Is 5,20). O primeiro pecado foi um ataque à soberania de Deus, um pecado de orgulho."

Os servos de Deus acusados de egoísmo. Uma expressão adicional da questão é encontrada na declaração de Satanás a Deus sobre o seu servo fiel, Jó. Satanás disse: "Acaso é por nada que Jó teme a Deus? Não puseste tu mesmo uma sebe em volta dele, e em volta da sua casa, e em volta de tudo o que ele tem? Abençoaste o trabalho das suas mãos, e o próprio gado dele se tem espalhado pela terra. Mas, ao invés disso, estende tua mão, por favor, e toca em tudo o que ele tem, e vê se não te amaldiçoará na tua própria face." Mais uma vez acusou: "Pele por pele, e tudo o que o homem tem dará pela sua alma." (Jó 1:9-11; 2:4) Satanás acusou assim Jó de não estar no coração em harmonia com Deus, de servir obedientemente a Deus apenas por motivos egoístas, para ganhar algo. Satanás caluniou assim a Deus com respeito à Sua soberania, e os servos de Deus, quanto à integridade para com esta soberania. Na realidade, ele disse que não podia ser colocado na Terra ninguém que mantivesse sua integridade à soberania de Jeová se ele, Satanás, pudesse pô-lo à prova.

Jeová permitiu que se resolvesse esta questão. Todavia, não por não ter certeza da justiça da Sua própria soberania. Não precisava provar nada a si mesmo. Foi por amor às suas criaturas inteligentes que ele concedeu tempo para se testar esse assunto. Permitiu que os homens fossem submetidos à prova por Satanás, perante todo o Universo. E deu às suas criaturas o privilégio de provar que o Diabo é mentiroso, e de remover a calúnia não só do nome de Deus, mas também do nome delas mesmas. Satanás, na sua atitude egotista, ficou 'entregue a um estado mental reprovado'. Ao abordar Eva, evidentemente ele contradizia o seu próprio raciocínio. (Ro 1:28) Pois acusava a Deus de exercer de modo desonesto, injusto, a sua soberania e, ao mesmo tempo, ele evidentemente contava com a justeza de Deus: parece ter pensado que Deus se consideraria obrigado a deixá-lo viver, se ele provasse veraz a sua acusação de que as criaturas de Deus eram infiéis.
